By the refusal of the wise to share their oil, we are taught that the works of the righteous will not be sufficient to profit the wicked and slothful. Our fellow-creatures are the instruments in selling this oil to us. We may be said to buy it of them, when we deny ourselves to help the poor, when we forgive those who have injured us, and when we pray for those who hate us and use us despitefully.

Besides the other lessons which this parable may teach us, we learn that the Son of Man will come to judgment unexpectedly, that He will judge men according to their works, that this life is the time for making the necessary preparation for His coming, and that His sentence will be final and irrevocable. The conclusion which He Himself draws from this parable, is that we are to watch for His coming as uncertain, and to make active preparations for it.

When He had finished the parable of the Ten Virgins, in which He taught them the necessity of watching for His coming as uncertain, He delivered the parable of the Talents. His object in this was to show them how strict would be the reckoning which, at the Day of Judgment, He would require from those who did not improve the gifts which He entrusted to them in this life, and how great would be the reward which He would give to those who made the right use of His gifts.

Jesus delivered two parables with the same object—the parable of the Talents, which is recorded by S. Matthew, and the parable of the Pounds, recorded by S. Luke (xix. 12, &c.). Though their general teaching is much the same, it has been held³ that they are not merely two different reports of one and the same parable: for, beside other differences, they were delivered at different times and in different places, and to different audiences. The parable of the Pounds is recorded as if it were delivered to the multitude generally; that of the Talents to His disciples—it may be, to four only of His disciples—Peter, James, John, and Andrew. The parable of the Pounds is recorded as if it were delivered in His last journey to Jerusalem, after He had left Jericho and was approaching the city, but before He entered it in triumph on Palm Sunday. The parable of the Talents is recorded as if it were delivered on Mount Olivet, on the Tuesday after Palm Sunday, and only three days before His Crucifixion. In spite of these differences, some think that the two Evangelists are referring to the same delivery of one and the same parable.⁴

14. ¶ For the kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods.

Vulg. sicut enim homo peregre proficiscens.

15. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey.

16. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents.

V. A.⁵, and gained other: V. omits talents.

Vulg. et lucratus est alia quinque.

17. And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two.

S.V. omit And: S.V. omit he also.

Vulg. Similiter et qui duo acceperat, lucratus est alia duo.

18. But he that had received one went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money.

A. one talent: S.V. digged the earth.

Vulg. Qui autem unum acceperat, aliens fodit in terram, et abscondit pecuniam domini sui.

19. After a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them.

¹ Origen, in Matt. xxv. 1; vol. iii. p. 1699.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxv. 1; vol. vii. p. 183.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxv. p. 415.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxv. 1; vol. i. p. 339.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxv. 1; vol. viii. p. 454.

² Origen, in Matt. xxv. 1; vol. iii. p. 1700.

S. Hilary Piet., in Matt. xxv. 1; vol. i. p. 1060.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxv. p. 415.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxv. 1; vol. i. p. 341.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxv. 1; vol. viii. p. 455.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxviii.; vol. ii. p. 418.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxv. 30; vol. ii. p. 965.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxvi. p. 416.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxv. 14; vol. viii. p. 458.

⁴ S. Jerome, in Matt. xxv. 18; vol. vii. p. 187.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xix. 18; vol. ii. p. 1793.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxv. 14; vol. i. p. 343.

20. And so he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents: behold, I have gained beside them five talents more.

A. But he that : S. received the five, came: S.V. omit beside them.
Vulg. Et accedens qui quinque talenta acceperat... ecce alia quinque superlucratus sum.

21. His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

22. He also that had received two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents beside them.

A. the two came and said: S. omits Lord: S.V. omit beside them.
Vulg. Accedens autem et qui duo talenta acceperat, et ait: Domine, duo talenta tradidisti mihi, ecce alia duo lucratus sum.

23. His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

24. Then he which had received the one talent came and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed:

Vulg. Domine, scio quia homo durus es, metis ubi non seminasti, et congregas ubi non sparisti.

25. And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine.

26. His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strawed:

27. Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury.

28. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents.

29. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

Vulg. et autem qui non habet, et quod videtur habere, auferetur ab eo.

30. And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

The Man of the parable travelling into a far country is Jesus Himself. By His journey into a far country and His return after a long time, we are to understand His Ascension into heaven, and His coming again to judge mankind.

His own servants, like the Ten Virgins in the former parable, are citizens of the kingdom of heaven—believers in Him. The talents which He gives may be either the gifts of grace, capacities for faith, hope, love, &c.; or they may be the endowments of nature, such as strength of body, acuteness of mind; or they may be external advantages, worldly goods, station in life, &c. All these He apportions to each man severally, in the way of trust and trial. These are not given at random, but to “each man according to his several ability,” according to some law unknown to men, but known to God. He proportions His gifts, as He sees they are able to improve them. If they do not improve what He dispenses to them, it is not from want of power, but of will, from their own culpable negligence. Though the gifts be altogether His, He rewards His servants in proportion as they improve these gifts.

The man who receives only one talent is represented as making no use of it, not because he is the only one who acts thus, or who is liable to act thus, but, by showing them how great will be the punishment of him who neglects one talent, to lead them to conclude that the punishment of him who neglects many talents will be great in proportion.¹

The accusation which the wicked and slothful servant makes against the justice of his Master, and the answer which it produces, show that at the Day of Judgment no excuse will stand, on the ground of impossibility of complying with His demands, or of hardness or unfairness in the conditions compared with the amount of the improvement expected.

The one talent is given to the man who has improved the five: for the man who has improved the five talents will also improve the one. In like manner we may infer that the man who has wasted the one talent would probably also have wasted the five. His conduct would have been different, because the circumstances under which he acted would have been different, but the principle on which he acted would have been much the same.

In the two preceding parables Christians only are introduced. In the first they are represented as Virgins, beings that are spotless and pure, washed in the waters of Baptism; and in the second as His own servants. In the following description of the Day of Judgment, not Christians only, but all the nations of the world, are gathered before the Son of Man for judgment.

31. ¶ When the Son of Man shall come in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him, then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory:

S.V. omit holy.
Vulg. et omnes angeli cum eo.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxvii. p. 417.
Maldonatus, in Matt. xxv. 18; vol. i. p. 346.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxv. 18; vol. viii. p. 469.

32. And before Him shall be gathered all nations: and He shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats:

33. And He shall set the sheep on His right hand, but the goats on the left.

S.A. on the right hand: S. on His left.

Vulg. Et statuet oves quidem a dextris suis, hœdos autem a sinistris.

34. Then shall the King say unto them on His right hand, Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world:

Vulg. Tunc dicet Rex his qui a dextris ejus erunt.

35. For I was an hungred, and ye gave Me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me in:

36. Naked, and ye clothed Me: I was sick, and ye visited Me: I was in prison, and ye came unto Me.

37. Then shall the righteous answer Him, saying, Lord, when saw we Thee an hungred, and fed Thee? or thirsty, and gave Thee drink?

Vulg. quando te vidimus esurientem, et pavimus te: sitientem, et dedimus tibi potum?

38. When saw we Thee a stranger, and took Thee in? or naked, and clothed Thee?

Vulg. Quando autem te vidimus hospitem, et collegimus te: aut nudum, et cooperuimus te?

39. Or when saw we Thee sick, or in prison, and came unto Thee?

* Eternal.—"The word aiônios (eternal) is used no less than seventy-one times in the New Testament. In forty-four of these cases, twenty-three of which occur in the writings of S. John, it is an epithet of ωή (life); in nine other places it is applied to the 'redemption,' 'salvation,' 'glory,' 'abode,' 'inheritance,' or 'consolation' reserved for the blessed; in seven to the 'fire,' 'judgment,' 'punishment,' or 'destruction' of the impenitent: in one passage it is used of God the Father, and in another of God the Holy Ghost. In two places only is it even fairly arguable that it may (not must) have a figurative or indefinite meaning, short of the full sense of everlasting, but both are denuded of all but a merely rhetorical force by so explaining it. The first occurs in the Epistle to S. Philemon, whom S. Paul exhorts to receive back his runaway slave Onesimus, 'to keep for ever (ὡς αἰώνιος αὐτὸν ἀπέχες), no more as a slave, but a brother beloved in the Lord.' Here it is hardly possible to doubt that Bretschneider and Huther are right in referring the word to the new bond of eternal union now established between master and servant by the conversion of Onesimus to the Christian faith. In the other case, the well-known passage in S. Jude about the cities of the plain, there is still less pretext for reasonable doubt.

"There is in short nothing anywhere in the language of the New Testament to suggest that aiônios ever means less than everlasting. Those who would affix to it a more limited sense have brought this interpretation from elsewhere to the sacred text; they have not found it there. And they are compelled, on their own hypothesis, to draw an arbitrary distinction between the use of the word as applied to the future destiny of the righteous and of the 40. And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me.

V*, unto one of these least, ye.

Vulg. Quamdiu fecistis uni ex his fratribus meis minimis, mihi fecistis.

41. Then shall He say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from Me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels:

Vulg. Tunc dicet et his qui a sinistris erunt: Discedite a me maledicti in ignem æternum, qui paratus est diabolo et angelis ejus.

42. For I was an hungred, and ye gave Me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me no drink:

V*, and I am thirsty.

43. I was a stranger, and ye took Me not in: naked, and ye clothed Me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited Me not.

44. Then shall they also answer Him, saying, Lord, when saw we Thee an hungred, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto Thee?

S*, omits also: S.V.A. omitt Him.

Vulg. Tunc respondebunt ei et ipsi.

45. Then shall He answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me.

46. And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal.^a lost. Even in Plato (Tim. 37, κατὰ τὸ παράδειγμα τῆς αἰωνίας φύσεως) the word is used in the same sense; but it does not often occur in classical Greek. And if its meaning is not so definitely fixed in the Septuagint, so neither had the idea of the eternal world been then so prominently put forward. It was the special office of the Gospel, as S. Paul tells us, 'to reveal life and incorruption,' that is, immortal life, with a distinctness and fullness of Divine sanction previously unknown. And hence terms which had before been used in a looser or lower sense, or scarcely used at all, such as χαρίς, τίσις, ἀγάπη, πνεῦμα, σωτηρία, ωή, and others that might be mentioned—of which aiônios is one—received a new force, and passed, as the recognized symbols of great spiritual truths, into the intellectual currency of Christendom."—H. N. OXENHAM, 'On Catholic Eschatology,' pp. 113–118.

Vulg. Et ibunt hi in supplicium æternum: justi autem in vitam æternam.

"It is plain that if the word 'eternal' does not include the notion of everlasting duration in one limb of an antithetical sentence, neither can it include it in the other. If we may eviscerate the word of all idea of everlasting duration, when applied to the 'fire' or 'punishment' reserved for the wicked, then neither does it convey any Scriptural warrant for the everlasting 'life' of the just.

^a And if the treasures of Thy wrath could waste,
Thy lovers must their promised heaven forego.

^b Christian Year, 2nd Sunday in Lent.

We cannot take as much or as little of a revealed doctrine as we please, and draw a line at the point where, in Neander's language, it becomes 'uncomfortable.'—Ibid. p. 103.

Here are assembled together all the angels of heaven and all the nations of earth, and the King and Judge over them is the Son of Man, who is represented as Judge of all mankind, because, though He was God, He became Man, and endured the Cross, despising the shame.

He divides all mankind into two kinds, the righteous and the wicked. These two characters, which are as well defined as those of the sheep and the goats, are not, like the sheep and the goats, the result of natural formation, but the effect, the outcome, of their own actions.

So closely is the Son of Man united to mankind, whom He calls His brethren, that the one ground of reward which is here alleged, is love to the Son of Man ; as the one ground of punishment is want of this love to Him. This love, and this want of love, is not represented as shown to Him personally, but as shown to Him in His brethren, mankind. Six different ways are specified in which this love was in the one case shown, and in the other not. These probably include under them all the various forms in which man can show love to his fellow-man.

The reply of the righteous, and the reply of the wicked, is each characteristic ; the one disclaiming, and the other claiming, what does not appear to belong to them. The righteous are declared blessed of His Father, and the wicked are called cursed. The wicked are sent to eternal punishment (κόλασιν αἰώνιον), prepared for the devil and his angels, and the righteous are called to eternal life (ζωὴν αἰώνιον), prepared for such from the foundation of the world. No change, no cessation, is held out to the former, any more than to the latter.¹

With the description of the Day of Judgment ends the record of our Saviour's teaching on the Tuesday before His Crucifixion, the full account of which teaching extends from chapter xxi. 18 to the end of chapter xxv.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxvii. p. 422.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xv. 41 ; vol. viii. p. 465.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES TO CHAPTER XXVI.

The Passover in Egypt, and the Passover in succeeding ages.

—“The great and mysterious Sacrament of the Passover is so copiously related, and the history of it given in Exod. xii., that it is needless to speak anything of it, as to its story. But the celebration of the Passover in after-times, especially in the times of our Saviour, when traditions were come to their height, did so far differ in various circumstances from that that was ordained in Egypt, and had so various rites put upon it by their traditions above that, that the discovery of the manner of it in those times deserveth some copious discourse and scrutiny from their own traditions and antiquities that put those circumstances upon it. It will therefore not be amiss to trace these particulars step by step, out of such writings and writers as speak purposely and largely of this matter; and that the rather, because the New Testament in several places and passages doth refer to some of the circumstances which we call additional.

“First, therefore, we will begin with the difference between the Passover in Egypt and the Passover in succeeding ages, which Tosaphita on the Treatise Pesachin, per. 8, holdeth out thus.

“The Passover in Egypt, the taking of it up, was on the tenth day, and the killing of it was on the fourteenth, and they were not guilty for it of cutting off [i.e., on the penalty of death]. The Passover in succeeding generations they are liable concerning it to cutting off.

“Of the Passover in Egypt it is said, ‘Let him and his neighbour next to him take a lamb,’ but it is not so said of the Passover in succeeding generations. ‘But I say,’ saith R. Simeon, ‘it is so said of the Passover in future times. And that because a man should not leave his neighbour whose house is near unto him to keep his Passover with his companion; for it is said, “Better is a neighbour that is near than a brother that is far off.”’ The Passover in Egypt was not charged with sprinkling the blood and fat upon the altar; but it is otherwise with the Passover in after-times. Of the Passover in Egypt it is said, ‘Ye shall put of the blood upon the two posts, and the upper door post;’ but it is not so with the Passovers afterward.

“At the Passover in Egypt it is said, ‘None of you shall go out of the door of his house till morning:’ but it was not so in after-generations.

“The Passover in Egypt was slain by every one in his own house, but the Passovers afterward all Israel slew them in one place.

“Where they eat the Passover in Egypt, there also they were to lodge; but in after-times they might eat it in one place and lodge in another.

“Yet was the Passover in Egypt and succeeding Passovers all one: whosoever had servants that were not circumcised, and maidens that were not baptized, they restrained them from eating the Passover. ‘But I say,’ saith Rabbi Eliezer the son of Jacob, ‘the Scripture speaks only of the Passover in Egypt.’

“In these things the Passover in Egypt and in succeeding times was alike.

“The Passover in Egypt was in three houses, so also was it with future Passovers [i.e., that several families might join together in one society to the eating of one lamb].

“The Passover in Egypt was of the flock, a male without blemish, of the first year. After Passovers were so likewise.

“Of the Passover in Egypt it is said, ‘Ye shall not leave ought thereof till morning.’ The like was it also with after Passovers.

“Rabbi Josi the Galilean saith, ‘I say that leaven in Egypt was forbidden but for one day.’

“The Passover in Egypt required a song, so did the Passovers in after-times require a song.

“Thus is the Jewish differencing and paralleling the first Passover and those succeeding.”—LIGHTFOOT on the manner of the Celebration of their Passover, vol. i. p. 952.

Their searching out for leaven.—“The next care they were to have in reference to the Passover, was to refrain from the eating and use of leaven at Passover time, and that, at the time when the Passover was slain, it should not be found within their houses. The Law on this point was exceeding strict. ‘In the first month on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even. Seven days there shall be no leaven found in your houses: for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he be a stranger or born in the land' (Exod. xii. 18, 19, and xiii. 7; and so in Levit. xxiii. 6; Numb. xxviii. 17).

" . . . The Jews, to meet with this command that was so exceeding strict, and to make sure to provide for its observance soon enough, 'did on the fourteenth day, while yet there was some light, make search for leaven by the light of a candle' (Talmud in Pesachin i.). Thus is the tradition, in which, by the light of the fourteenth day, their glossaries tell us that we must understand 'the thirteenth day at even, when it began to be duskish and candle-lighting' (R. Sol. and Gloss R. Alphas. in Pesach. i.). . . .

"When the Passover day itself was now come (which the New Testament commonly called the first day of unleavened bread, from their custom newly mentioned, but the Jewish writers do ordinarily call it the Passover eve), some part of the people made it a holiday by ceasing from bodily labour all the day long, and others made it but half holiday, by leaving work at noon. The Talmud (Pesachin iv.) relates that in Galilee they left work all the day long, from morning till night; but in Judæa they wrought till noon, and then gave over. Which may seem somewhat strange that those further off were so observant of the Passover, and those nearer hand were so much less. But the reason is this, because in Galilee those that were at home that day had nothing else to do towards the Passover, but only to meditate upon it, and rest from labour in honour of it; but those in Judæa, it may be they travelled all forenoon to get up to Jerusalem, or had some work to do toward the forwarding of the Passover, or to dispatch, that they might follow their Passover work the better. . . .

"But, whatsoever they did in this case, cease from their labour in the forenoon or cease not, one work they must not fail to do, and that was to cast out and put away leaven out of their houses this day (as they had searched for it the night before), and that it might not be seen nor found amongst them. The Law indeed concerning this work doth pitch upon the fifteenth day for the doing of it, as if it were soon enough to do it on the fourteenth day at even (Exod. xii. 18; 19), but the Jews do not impertinently observe that the expelling of leaven was by the Law to be before the time wherein the eating of it was forbidden. For whereas it is said, 'On the first day ye shall put leaven out of your houses,' their tradition taught them that by the first day is meant the fourteenth day. And a proof for this there was from what is written in the Law: 'Thou shalt not kill the blood of My sacrifice with leaven' (Exod. xxiii. 18), that is, 'Thou shalt not kill the Passover whilst leaven is yet remaining:' now the killing of the Passover was on the fourteenth day in the afternoon.

"On this fourteenth day, therefore, for a good part of the forenoon, they might eat leaven or leavened bread, and might give it to any bird or beast, or might sell it to a stranger. . . .

"Twelve o'clock or thereabouts, therefore, being come, it had been a strange sight to have seen every one of them either firing, or drowning, or scattering their leaven into the wind. For any of these ways served for the expelling of it, and this command and practice reached over all the country, and you might have seen them do it with this valediction, 'All the leaven that is within my possession, which I have seen or which I have not seen, which I have cast out or which I have not cast out, be it null, be it as the dust of the earth' (Seder Haggadah Shel, Pesach. i.)."—Ibid., p. 953.

Time of killing the Passover.—"It was the command, both for the Passover and for the daily evening sacrifice, that they should be slain and offered between the two evenings (Exod. xii. 6 and xxix. 39). . . . The general and common received opinion was, that the two evenings were these, the first from that time of the day that the sun began to decline from his vertical or noon-tide point toward the west, and the other from his going down and out of sight. And according to this construction did they go in killing and offering up their evening sacrifice, taking up an hour for that business just in the middle of the afternoon (counting at equinox time); namely, from half an hour past two to half an hour past three, and so there were two hours and an half from the sun's beginning to decline to the time they killed, and two hours and an half from the time they offered it up till the sun went down.

"Now occasional sacrifices did sometimes cause an alteration of the time of the daily, for that being to be offered the first, as being the fixed and appointed service of the day, that the others might have room to be offered up in due time, that removed out of its place, to somewhat earlier in the day, sometimes an hour, and sometimes two, as in the traditions alleged, and especially this was for the sake of the Passover, when lambs were exceeding many. The common time, therefore, to begin to kill the Passover was, from about half an hour past two o'clock, and little more, and so continued all afternoon: and if the Passover lighted on the eve of the Sabbath, that is, on the day preceding the Sabbath, they began an hour sooner, that they might the better dispatch their business by the time that the Sabbath began."—Ibid., p. 955.

The Paschal Societies.—"Before the Paschal lamb was slain they first agreed and concluded upon the company that should eat him: 'For they might not slay the Passover but for persons numbered before' (Maim. in Korban, Pesach. ii.), or a number agreed on before for his eating. And this caution was not unwarrantably taken up from that command (in Exod. xii. 4): 'Every man according to his eating: ye shall make your count for the lamb.' So that while the lamb was yet alive it was to be certainly concluded who, and how many, would join together for his eating, and he might not be slain but for societies so agreed and numbered. If any of the society, after the number was agreed on, saw occasion to withdraw from that company and go to another, he must do it before the lamb was slain, for after he might not. These societies were called every one of them Συναγίς or φάρτια, and the number of the persons in them was not certain, but sometimes more, sometimes less, according to their proportionableness of eating, because of the command, 'Every one according to his eating.' Were there among the company those that were sickly and aged, and little eaters, then they might take the more into the company; but if they were healthy and lively, and like to eat more freely, then was the number less. He that was to eat the least, was to eat as much of him as came to the quantity of an olive; and if he could not eat so much, they counted not him in the number. And they might number so many in a society, as if there were the quantity of an olive for every one to eat, it was enough.

"Although women were not directly bound to appear three times a year before the Lord, as the males were, yet were they bound to some particular services that attended the three appearances, and so that brought them in, but especially to the Passover; for to the observation of that they were obliged by those express words of the commandment, 'The whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it.' And men and women were bound to this command alike' (Maim. ut supra). Now, in forming up these societies that were severally to eat the lambs, they suffered not any companies to consist of servants and women only, nor of servants and children only, lest there should be some lightness among them, and not that gravity that became so great a solemnity; nor to consist of old or sickly persons only, lest they should leave any of them, and so transgress the command, 'Ye shall leave nothing of him till the morning;' nor to consist of proselytes only, or of children only, because they were unlikely to speak of those memorable things that were to be spoken of at the Passover. But a society might be only of women, or only of servants, but ordinarily they were of whole families, one or more united, husbands, wives, children, servants, all together. Our Saviour's society was Himself and the Twelve (Matt. xxvi. 20; Luke xxii. 14)." —Ibid., p. 956.

The killing of the Passover.—"The Passovers were slain in three companies. And the ground of this practice and tradition they make to be those words of the institution, 'The whole Assembly of the Congregation of Israel shall kill it.' Where, because there are three words—assembly, congregation, and Israel—applied to the killing of the Passover, they divided the killing of it into three companies according to that number.

"There were not to be less than thirty men in every company, yet found they out a shift to make fifty men, if there were no more, to make thirty men three times over, for the three companies; and their way was this. Thirty of the fifty went into the Court (for there only might the Passover be killed); and when they had killed their lambs, ten of them went out, and ten of those that stood without came in and killed theirs, and then ten others went out, and the other ten that stood without came in and killed theirs, and so there were thirty in the Court continually while the lambs were killing.

"But this was only a provision for a pinch; namely, if such an exigent should occur as that there should be but fifty lambs presented, or at least but fifty persons present (for ordinarily every one of the numbered Paschal societies that have been spoken of sent their lamb by one of their company only, and under fifty there was no Passover killing), but commonly every one of these three companies we are speaking of were as many as ever the Court could hold.

"The first company came in till the Court was filled, and then the doors were locked, and they fell to killing the lambs, and while they were about this work the Levites sang, and the trumpets sounded. 'It is a tradition,' saith the Jerusalem Talmud (in Pesach. v.). The daily sacrifice, which hath a drink offering, they blew the trumpets at the time of the drink offering; but at the Passover, which hath no drink offering, they blew the trumpets at the killing of it. Which the Gloss upon the Babylon Talmud (in Succah. 54) doth utter more punctually, 'At the killing of the Passover there were seven-and-twenty soundings with the trumpets, for the Passover was killed in three companies, one after another.'

"Now the song that was sung at this time while they were killing the Passovers, was called the Hallel; so saith the Gloss in the same place. Every company said over the Hallel three times. For their Paschals were many, and they were bound to the saying over of the Hallel at the slaying of them. And Maimonides more largely: 'All the time that they were killing and offering, the Levites said over the Hallel. If they had finished the Hallel, and the company had not yet done, they said it over again. And if they had finished saying it over again, and the company had not yet done neither, they set to it a third time.

"The Jews do make exceeding frequent mention in their writings of the Hallel or the Hymn, for so we may translate it from Matthew xxvi. 30. And they distinguish it into the common or lesser Hallel, and the greater. The lesser Hallel they also call the Egyptian Hallel, because it was sung more especially in remembrance of their delivery out of Egypt. And it was the cxiii. cxiv. cxv. cxvi. cxvii. and cxviii. Psalms.

"This saying over of the Hallel is acknowledged by the Jews to be an institution of the scribes, and the reason of their picking out of these Psalms for that purpose was because of their beginning or ending with Hallelujah, and partly because they contain not only so high and eminent memorials of God's goodness and deliverance unto Israel. . . . The Hallel, say they (Talmud in Pesach. cxviii.) recordeth five things,—the coming out of Egypt, the dividing of the sea, the giving of the Law, the resurrection of the dead, and the lot of Messias.

"This Hallel was said over eighteen days in the year and one night; namely, at the killing of the Passover, at the Feast of Pentecost, on the eight days of the Feast of Tabernacles, and on the eight days of the Feast of Dedication, and on the Passover night.

"So that (now to return where we were again) the first company being come into the Court, and having filled it, and the doors locked upon them, and they falling to kill the Passovers, this Hallel or these Psalms were begun to be sung, the people answering as hath been related. . . .

"The first company being thus dispatched, went out of the Court with their slain and flayed Passovers, and they stood in the mountain of the House. And now there comes in the second company, as many as the Court would hold; and while they are killing, sprinkling the blood, and burning the fat, the Hallel is begun again, and sung even as it was before; and when that company had done they went out, and the third came in, and they did as the others before, till all was finished.

"They did not only slay the Passovers, whilst they stood thus in the Court, but the blood was also sprinkled by the priests, they standing in rows from the slaughter place to the altar, conveying the blood from hand to hand, and so they crowded not, nor troubled one another, which they would have done had they run singly from every slain lamb to bring the blood to the altar. The blood brought thither in such handing rows was poured at the foundation of the altar. . . .

"If the Passover killing did fall upon the Sabbath, yet did they not abate of any of this work; no, not of washing the Court. For they had a traditional warrant which bare them out; which was, that there was no prohibition concerning resting in the Sanctuary; and that which was prohibited elsewhere and obliged others, about resting from work upon the Sabbath, did not oblige the priests in the Temple, and to this our Saviour speaketh (Matt. xii. 5), 'On the Sabbath days the priests in the Temple profane the Sabbath, and are blameless.' Now, although they killed and flayed and opened the Passovers on the Sabbath, yet did they not carry them home to their lodgings at Jerusalem till the Sabbath was out. But when the first company had dispatched in the Court, they went and stood in the mountain of the House; and the second being dispatched went and stood in the Chel, and the third continued in the Court till the Sabbath ended. And when it was done, they went away with their lambs to their several companies. And the reason of this was, because the killing and offering of the Passover was, by the express commandment of the Law, bound to its time, which they might not transgress, but must do it, though it were on the Sabbath, but the taking of the lamb home was not so bound but that it might very well be delayed till the Sabbath was ended."—Ibid., p. 957.

The manner of eating the Passover.—"On the evening of the Passover a man may not eat, from near the Minchah till it be dark' (Talmud in Pesach x.). In which they inform us of two things: first, that they went not about the Passover meal till it was night; and the reason of this custom is apparently grounded in the Law, because that commanded, 'They shall eat the flesh in that night.' (Exod. xii.) And accordingly are these words of the Evangelists in the relation of our Saviour's Passover to be understood, 'When the even was come, He sat down with the twelve.' Secondly, that they fasted some space before. Near the time of the Minchah (say the Glossaries upon that tradition) meaneth a little before the evening sacrifice; and from that time they might eat nothing, that they might eat the unleavened bread, which was commanded, with appetite, for the honour of the command.

"They eat not the Passover but sitting. No, not the poorest in Israel might eat it till he was sat down (Talmud in Pesach. x.). . . . So it is said Jesus sat down with the twelve. Now this sitting at their Passover eating was not after the manner of our sitting at the table, nor after the manner of their ordinary sitting at other times, but a special posture by itself. . . .

"Their sitting at meat was commonly upon beds or couches made for that purpose, with the table before them. Now at other meals they either sat as we do with their bodies erect, or, when they would enlarge themselves to more freedom of feasting and refreshing, they sat upon the beds and leaned upon the table on their left elbow, and this or the other posture they used indifferently at other times as they were disposed. But on the Passover night they thought they were obliged to use this leaning posture, and you may take their reason for it in some of their own words: 'They used this leaning posture as free men do, in memorial of their freedom.' (R. Sol. in Pesach. x.) And R. Levi said, 'Because it is the manner of servants to eat standing, therefore now they eat sitting and leaning, to show that they were got out of servitude into freedom.' (Talmud Jerus. in Gemer.) And again, 'In every generation a man is bound to behave himself at the Passover as if he himself had been delivered out of the bondage of Egypt. Therefore at meat that night a man is bound to eat, and to drink, and to sit in a posture of freedom.' (Mishneh.)

"Upon this principle and conceit of freedom, they used this manner of discubency at their meat frequently at other times, but indispensably this night, so far different from the posture enjoined and practised at the first Passover in Egypt, when they eat it with their loins girded, their shoes on their feet, their staves in their hands, and in haste. (Exod. xii. 11.) And as the thought of their freedom disposed them to this leaning, reposed, secure composure of their elbow upon the table, and their head leaning on the hand, so to emblem out the matter the more highly, they laid their legs under them, sitting upon them, and their feet lying out behind, as (Luke vii. 38) removing and acquitting their legs and feet as far as possible from the least show of standing to attend, or readiness to go upon anyone's employment, which might carry the least colour of servitude or contrariety to their freedom with it. Now, according to this manner of sitting and leaning, are we to construe that passage of the Evangelist about the beloved disciple's 'leaning in the bosom of Jesus' (John xiii. 23) and 'on the breast of Jesus' (John xiii. 28, and xxi. 20), for so the words are clearly differenced—ἀνακείμενος ἐν κόλπῳ and ἐμπροσθεν, or ἀνατεκνῶν ἐπὶ τὸ στήθος, which some translations not having observed, or at least not expressed, they have intricated the reader in such gross conceptions about this matter, as that some have thought and some have pictured John reposing himself or lolling on the breast of Jesus, contrary to all reason and decency. Whereas the manner of their sitting together was only thus, Jesus leaning upon the table on His left elbow, and so turning His face and breast away from the table on one side; John sat in the same posture next before Him, with his back towards Jesus' breast or bosom: not so near as that John's back and Jesus' breast did join together and touch one another; but at such a distance as that there was space for Jesus to use His right hand upon the table to reach His meat at His pleasure, and so for all the rest as they sat in the like manner. For it is but a strange fancy that some have satisfied themselves withal about this matter, conceiving either that they lay along upon the beds before the table, one tumbling upon the breast or before the breast of another; or if they sat leaning on the table, that they sat so close as that one's back joined to another's bosom, which did utterly deprive them of the use of their hands to feed themselves. But their sitting was so, as that indeed they sat the back of one to the breast of another, but with such distance between, that the right hand of every one of them had liberty to come and go betwixt himself and his fellow to reach his meat as he had occasion. In such a manner and distance did the beloved disciple lean before our Saviour, and yet is said very properly to lean in His bosom, because he leaned before His breast, so as that whensoever Christ put up His arm he was in a manner within His embrace. But when Peter beckoned to him to inquire who it was that should be the traitor, then ἀνέκρουεν ἐπὶ τὸ στήθος (John xxi. 20), he leaned back so far as that his back or shoulders rested upon Jesus' breast, and he lay in a sitting posture to whisper with Him."

Having showed with great minuteness, and by many quotations from the Talmudic writers, what was the order in which they took the four cups of wine, the leavened bread, the bitter herbs, the flesh of the Hagigah or peace-offerings, and the flesh of the lamb, and also the occasions on which they washed their hands and when they sang the Hallel, Lightfoot thus concludes: "To take up the whole rubric of this Sacramental supper in a short sum, they sat them down in a leaning posture, began with a cup of wine, over which they hallowed the day; washed their hands; the table is furnished, they first eat some sallet, have a second cup of wine filled, over which is the rehearsal of the Haggadah and of Psalms cxlii. cxiv., and then the wine drunk off. They wash their hands again, unleavened bread is broken and blessed, and some of it eaten with bitter herbs dipt in the thick sauce; then eat they the flesh of the peace-offerings, and then the flesh of the lamb: after which they wash; have a third cup of wine filled, or the cup of blessing, over which they first say grace after meat, and then give thanks for the wine, and so drink it off. And lastly, they have a fourth cup of wine filled, over which they say the Hallel out, and a prayer or two after it, and so they have done.

"Thus was the rubric and ritual of this great solemn supper, with which the reader comparing the action of our Saviour at His last Passover, he will easily perceive that the mention of the first thing He did is coincident with the third cup, or the cup of blessing, which He biddeth them to divide among themselves. And then He taketh some of the unleavened bread again, and blesseth and breaketh, and giveth to be eaten for His Body, from henceforth, in that sense that the flesh of the Paschal lamb, which they had newly eaten, had been His Body hitherto. And that which was commonly called the cup of the Hallel, He taketh and ordaineth for the cup of the New Testament in His Blood, and after it they sung the Hymn or Hallel out, and so He went out into the Mount of Olives."—Ibid., pp. 959—967.

The First Day in the Passover Week.—"The next day after the Passover was eaten was holy, and no servile work to be done in it, but it was accounted and kept as a Sabbath, and so it is called (Levit. xxiii. 6, 7, 15). On this day all the males were to appear in the Court of the Temple, and to bring with them a burnt offering for their appearance, and a double peace-offering, one for the solemnity and another for the joy of the times. . . .

"The peace-offerings for the solemnity of the time were called the Hagigah, and they were to be of some beast, bullock or sheep. Hereupon in 2 Chron. xxx. 24, and xxxv. 7, 8, there is mention of bullocks and oxen for the Passover; and in Deut. xvi. 2 there is speech of sacrificing the Passover of the herd: which cannot be understood of the Passover that was to be eaten on the fourteenth day at even, for that was punctually and determinately appointed to be of lambs or kids (Exod. xii. 5), but it is to be construed of these peace-offerings which were for the solemnity of the time. And this is that which the Evangelist John called the Passover, when he saith, 'The Jews went not into Pilate's judgment hall, lest they should be defiled, but that they might eat the Passover' (John xviii. 28). For they had eaten the Paschal lamb the night before.

"The time for the offering of these they accounted the first day of the festival to be most proper, and they strove to dispatch upon it, that they might return home the sooner; but if these sacrifices were offered in any day of the festival, it served the turn.

"On this first day of the feast, when these great matters were to be in hand, namely, their appearing in the Court and offering there their sacrifices of solemnity and rejoicing at the last Passover of our Saviour, they showed themselves otherwise employed, for on this day they crucified the Lord of Life."—Ibid., p. 968.

The Second Day in the Passover Week.—"The first and last days of the solemn festival weeks were called holy days, or good days, and the observation of them differed little in strictness from the observation of the Sabbath. (See Levit. xxiii. 7, 8, &c.)

"On this day that we have in hand, namely, the second day of the Passover week, whatsoever else of extraordinary offering was on it, there never failed to be the offering and waving of the firstfruit sheaf before the Lord. The law for this is given in Levit. xxiii. 10, 11 : 'When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf of the firstfruits of your harvest unto the priest : and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you : on the morrow after the Sabbath the priest shall wave it.' Where by the word Sabbath is to be understood, not the Sabbath day in the proper sense, but the first day in the Passover week, of which we have spoken, which was so solemn an holy day. And so the Chaldee Paraphrast and several other Jews do well interpret it."—Ibid., p. 969.

CHAPTER XXVI.

[1. The rulers conspire against Christ. 6. The woman anointeth His head. 14. Judas selleth Him. 17. Christ eateth the Passover: 25. instituteth His Holy Supper: 36. prayeth in the garden: 47. and being betrayed with a kiss, 57. is carried to Caiaphas, 69. and denied of Peter.]

[Vulg. Consultant principes sacerdotum de occidendo Iesu: qui unguento pretioso a muliere perfunditur, murmurantibus discipulis: venditur a Iuda: de cuius proditiōne discipulis in cena loquitur, in qua panem in corpus suum, et vinum in sanguinem consecrata tradit discipulis: prodicit omnes scandalizandos, trinamque Petri negationem: et post trinam orationem capitur a Iudais; quorum uni Petrus abscidit auriculam: discipulis fugientibus, coram Caiapha a falsis testibus accusatus, mortisque reus iudicatus, conspuitur ac ceditur, et ter a Petro negatur.]

WHEN Jesus had finished His predictions respecting the destruction of Jerusalem and the Day of Judgment, He begins to foretell His own Crucifixion.* He does this to prepare His disciples for it, and to strengthen their belief in Him, that, when these things should come to pass, they might remember that He had foretold them, and that He had not been taken by surprise.

THE RULERS CONSPIRE AGAINST JESUS.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 1-5.

S. MARK xiv. 1, 2.

S. LUKE xxii. 1, 2.

1 And it came to pass, when Jesus had finished all these sayings, He said unto His disciples,

2 Ye know that after two days is the feast of the Passover, and the Son of Man is betrayed to be crucified.

3 Then assembled together the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high priest, who was called Caiaphas,

4 and consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty, and kill Him.

5 But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar among the people.

1

After two days was the feast of the Passover, and of unleavened bread:

1

Now the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover.

2

And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill Him;

2

and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take Him by craft, and put Him to death.
But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people.

for they feared the people.

1. And it came to pass, when Jesus had finished all these sayings, He said unto His disciples,

2. Ye know that after two days is the feast of the Passover, and the Son of Man is betrayed to be crucified.

Vulg. Scitis quia post bīdium pascha fiet, et Filius hominis tradetur ut crucifigatur.

3. Then assembled together the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people,^a unto the palace of the high priest, who was called Caiaphas,

S.V.A. omit and the scribes: V* omit of the people.

Vulg. Tunc congregati sunt principes sacerdotum, et seniores populi, in atrium principis sacerdotum, qui dicebatur Caiaphas.

^a The chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people.—“This imports that the great Council consisted of these three sorts of men—the chief priests of the seed of Aaron, the scribes of the tribe of Levi, and the elders of the people, mere laymen. These were all deeply and extraordinarily versed and learned in the Law, but the practice of this their learning had some differ-

4. And consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty, and kill Him.

V*. omits and kill Him.

Vulg. Et consilium fecerunt ut Iesum dolo tenerent et occiderent.

5. But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar among the people.

Vulg. Non in die festo.

The two days that remained before the Passover were Wednesday and Thursday. The Wednesday, on which day the Jews were consulting how best to put Him to death, Jesus seems to have spent at Bethany. The Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday He had spent at Jerusalem, chiefly in the Temple, and had returned to Bethany each evening. On the Wednesday He remained at Bethany the whole day.¹

The determination at which the Council of the Jews arrived was to put Jesus to death, but not during the Feast (μὴ ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ), lest there should be an uproar of the people. During the seven days of the Feast Jerusalem would be filled, crowded with strangers from all parts. The crowds would be immense. Of these some would remember the miracles of healing which Jesus had wrought on themselves or their friends; some would remember His teaching, and many had some undefined belief in Him as a prophet. From one motive or another, the people might rise in His favour, and resist the attempt of the rulers against His life. If they waited a few days, until the Feast was concluded, the crowds would disperse, the strangers would return to their own homes, and they might then accomplish His death with less risk of resistance from the people. The same reason which existed against their attempt on His life on the first and great day of the Feast, namely, the fear of resistance from the people, would probably hold good during the whole seven days. They therefore came to the resolution to make no attempt upon the life of Jesus during the Feast of the Passover. What was it, then, that so suddenly altered their determination? For they apprehended Him on the very first day of the Feast, and only a few hours after they had eaten the Paschal lamb, and tried, condemned, and crucified Him before the end of the same day. It was doubtless the unexpected offer of Judas to assist them, and to enable them to capture Him when He was alone, when there would be no danger of any interference from the people.

That one of the Twelve should be the cause of this was almost beyond belief, and S. Matthew goes on to explain how this came about: how the feeling of avarice, hitherto latent in the bosom of Judas, or at least so far kept down that he did no overt act under its influence, became so much more overmastering than before, and to show what was the occasion which had so suddenly ripened this feeling within him. It was the anointing of Jesus with precious ointment which developed this feeling of avarice in Judas.

S. Matthew has just stated that the chief priests and elders of the people were assembled together to consult how they might take Jesus by subtilty, and then, in order to show what it was that decided Judas Iscariot to go to them and offer to betray Jesus unto them, the Evangelist goes on to relate in the following eight verses (6-13) how they made Jesus a supper at Bethany, and how Mary anointed Jesus with precious ointment, which might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and how the loss of this sum excited in Judas a feeling of indignation. Without this explanation the action of Judas is almost unaccountable. He probably showed this feeling of avarice for the first time at this supper: for before the anointing at Bethany not one word had been dropped by any of the Evangelists that might lead us to suspect that Judas was fond of money. Some suppose that the supper at which this anointing was made took place four days before this, and that S. Matthew had omitted to record it in its proper place, and relates it now to explain what led Judas to act as he did; that for four days Judas had been brooding over the waste of the ointment, as he called it, which might have been sold for three hundred pence, which three hundred pence would have gone into the bag which he carried, and that it was the loss of this which determined him to his desperate deed. Others, and apparently with greater probability, hold that this supper at Bethany took place only two days before the Passover; that is, on the evening of Tuesday, and that S. Matthew records it in its proper chronological order (see chapter xxi. p. 335).

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. exxviii. p. 427.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 2; vol. i. p. 333.

[Cornelius

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 2; vol. viii. p. 471.

Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 363.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 596.

ence, as the civil, common and canon. The elders judged the people and matters of debate and controversy, but instructed not the people by way of preaching or ministry. The chief priests judged and instructed, but it was more by resolving questions and doubts that were proposed to them, as our Saviour asked them, questions (Luke ii. 46; Hag. ii. 11; Mal. ii. 7), than by common preaching of homilies or sermons. The scribes were they that were the preachers or lecturers, and taught the people from the pulpit, as well as determined upon doubts and debates. And to this triple division of the great and sacerdotal doctors of the Jews, S. Paul seemeth to allude in 1 Cor. i. 20, 'Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the questionist or disputer of this world?' By the first meaning the elders of the people, and by the last, the chief priests."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' Matt. ii. 4; vol. i. p. 420.

JESUS ANOINTED BY MARY THE SISTER OF LAZARUS.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 6-13.

- 6 Now when Jesus was in Bethany, in the house
of Simon the leper,
- 7 there came unto Him
a woman
having an alabaster box of very precious ointment, and poured it on His head,

as He sat at meat.
- 8 But when His disciples saw it,
they had indignation, saying, To what purpose is this waste?
- 9 For this ointment might have been sold for much,
and given to the poor.
- 10 When Jesus understood it,
He said unto them,
Why trouble ye the woman?
for she hath wrought
a good work upon Me.
- 11 For ye have the poor
always with you;

ut Me ye have not always.
- 12 For in that she hath poured this ointment on My Body,

she did it for My burial.
Verily I say unto you,
Whosoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world,
there shall also this,
that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her.

S. MARK xiv. 3-9.

- 3 And being in Bethany
in the house
of Simon the leper,
as He sat at meat,
there came a woman
having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious;
and she brake the box,
and poured it on His head.
-
- 4 And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made?
For it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence,
and have been given to the poor.
And they murmured against her.
- 5
- 6 And Jesus said,
Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on Me.
- 7 For ye have the poor
with you always,
and whensoever ye will ye may do them good:
but Me ye have not always.
She hath done what she could;

she is come aforehand to anoint
My Body to the burying.
Verily I say unto you,
Whosoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her.
- 8
- 9

S. JOHN xii. 2-8.

- 2 There they made Him a supper;
and Martha served:
but Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with Him.
3 Then took Mary a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly,

and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped His feet with her hair: and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment.
4 Then saith one of His disciples,
Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, which should betray Him,

5 Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence,
and given to the poor?
- 6 This he said, not that he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein.
- 7 Then
said Jesus,
Let her alone:

against the day of My burying hath she kept this.
8 For the poor always ye have with you;

but Me ye have not always.
8. But when His disciples saw it, they had

6. ¶ Now when Jesus was in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper,

7. There came unto Him a woman having an alabaster box of very precious ointment, and poured it on His head, as He sat at meat.

8. But when His disciples saw it, they had indignation, saying, To what purpose is this waste?

S. the disciples.
Vulg. Valentes autem discipuli; indignati sunt, dicentes: Ut quid perditio hæc?

9. For this ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor.

S. V. A. For this might.
Vulg. Petit enim istud venditari multo, et dari pauperibus.

10. When Jesus understood it, He said unto them, Why trouble ye the woman? for she hath wrought a good work upon Me.

Vulg. Sciens autem Jesus, ait illis: Quid molesti estis h. ic mulieri? opus enim bonum operata est in me.

11. For ye have the poor always with you; but Me ye have not always.

12. For in that she hath poured this ointment on My Body, she did it for My burial.

13. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her.

In spite of several variations which exist between S. John's account of the anointing at Bethany and that given by S. Matthew and S. Mark, there has been a very general opinion that the three Evangelists are relating the same event. S. John's account appears to differ in several particulars from S. Matthew's and S. Mark's, but whatever S. John relates differently, or in addition to S. Matthew and S. Mark, is consistent with the truth of what they say, and with the supposition that all the three Evangelists are referring to the same supper and the same anointing.

It has been held that the expression "Simon the leper" need not mean, that Simon, if he were now living, was a leper. Some have supposed that he was once a leper and had been cleansed of his leprosy by Jesus; or that "the leper" may be one of those names which cling to individuals and to families long after the meaning of the term has any particular application to those who bear it.¹

Two questions naturally arise in connection with the anointing of Jesus at Bethany. 1. Was Simon the leper, in whose house Jesus is here anointed, the same person as Simon the Pharisee, in whose house He had once before been anointed, as recorded by S. Luke (vii. 36, &c.)? 2. Was Mary, the sister of Lazarus and of Martha, who anointed Jesus in the house of Simon the leper a few days before His Death, the same person as "the woman which was a sinner," who had anointed Him some time before in the house of Simon the Pharisee?

I. It is impossible to prove that Simon, whom S. Luke calls "the Pharisee," is the same person as Simon whom S. Matthew and S. Mark call "the leper," but there is nothing very improbable in the supposition. Opinions have been about equally divided on this point. To the objection that Simon the Pharisee appears to have lived in Galilee, and Simon the leper in Judæa, it is urged that there is a wide interval of time between the anointing of Jesus in Galilee and that in Judæa, and that Simon may have in the meantime removed from Galilee and settled in Judæa, and, setting a high value on the instruction and benefit which he had received from Jesus, he would naturally be anxious to entertain Him again in his house.

II. That Mary, the sister of Lazarus, who anointed Jesus with precious ointment a few days before His Death, in the house of Simon the leper, as recorded by S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. John, was the same person who once before anointed Jesus in the house of Simon the Pharisee, as recorded by S. Luke, is an opinion which has prevailed very widely in the Church, though not universally.² In the Western Church the ecclesiastical office for S. Mary Magdalene is constructed on this supposition.

In answer to the objection that the woman who anointed Jesus in the house of Simon the Pharisee was a notorious sinner, and that Mary the sister of Lazarus was a devout and holy woman, even gifted with a certain degree of prophetic vision, it is urged that the first anointing took place early in our Saviour's ministry, when she was just awakening to the enormity of her sins, and the latter when, through her deep penitence and obedience to Christ's instruction, she had become a saint.

See also commentary on S. John xii. 1-9.

¹ S. Jerome, in Matt. xvi. 6; vol. vii. p. 191.

V. Bede, in Matt. xvi. 6; vol. iii. p. 119.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cix. p. 306.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xvi. 6; vol. i. p. 368.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvi. 6, 7; vol. viii. p. 471.

² The following are among the individual writers who held this:—

S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 79; vol. iii. p. 1135.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxxiii. 1; vol. ii. p. 1239.

V. Bede, in Luc. vii. 1; vol. iii. p. 423.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xvi. 6; vol. i. p. 366.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlviii. p. 378.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. vii. 36; vol. viii. p. 723.

Grotius, in Luc. vii. 37: Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 1286.

Bengel, in Luc. vii. 37, p. 221.

JUDAS ISCARIOT COVENANTS TO BETRAY JESUS.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 14-16.

- 14 Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot,

went unto the chief priests,

and said unto them,
What will ye give me,
and I will deliver Him unto you?

And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver.
- 16 And from that time
he sought opportunity to betray Him.

S. MARK xiv. 10, 11.

- 10 And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve,
went unto the chief priests,

to betray Him unto them.
- 11 And when they heard it,
they were glad,
and promised to give him money.
- And
he sought how he might conveniently betray Him.

S. LUKE xxii. 3-6.

- 3 Then entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve.
And he went his way, and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray Him unto them.
- 5 And they were glad, and cov-nanted
to give him money.
- 6 And he promised,
and sought opportunity to betray Him unto them in the absence of the multitude.

14. ¶ Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests,

15. And said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver Him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver.

Vulg. Et ait illis: Quid vultis mihi dare, et ego vobis eum tradam?

16. And from that time he sought opportunity to betray Him.

While Jesus was spending the Wednesday* with His disciples on the Mount of Olives or at Bethany, probably preparing to offer Himself as the Sacrifice for sin, Judas was at Jerusalem, bargaining with the chief priests for the sum which he should receive for delivering Jesus up to them at some convenient opportunity, when He was so far apart from the people that they could offer no resistance to His apprehension. We read of him eagerly asking the chief priests, "What will ye give me, and I will deliver Him unto you?" He was bent on making up as much as possible of the three hundred pence which had slipped through his grasp by the "waste of the ointment." By the thirty pieces of silver, which they had agreed to give him, he should recover a considerable part of the price of the precious ointment. Some think a fifth, and others a tenth part of it.¹

Such is the deceitfulness of sin that Judas believed that he could deliver Him up to the officers and soldiers without either Jesus Himself or the rest of the Twelve knowing who had done it. So blinded was he by his avarice, that he forgot all he had learnt of the power of Jesus during three years of the closest intercourse with Him. His absence from Bethany at such a season as this would excite no uneasiness in the rest of the Twelve: for Judas carried the money, and made all the necessary arrangements for their living. As yet they had seen no reason to suspect his honesty. They would probably think, as they did on another occasion (John xiii. 29), that Judas had gone to Jerusalem to provide what was necessary either for themselves to keep the Passover, or to enable some of the poor to keep it.

See also the Commentary on S. John xiii. 21-30.

Between the time of the First or Egyptian Passover and the time of our Saviour many changes, or rather many additions, had been introduced into the mode of celebrating the Passover, which were neither ordered nor observed in the Egyptian Passover. These were not intended as contradictions, but rather a more punctilious carrying out of the spirit of the original injunctions. It is therefore of the utmost importance, for the right understanding of the Gospel narrative, to ascertain what were the various usages with respect to the celebration of the Passover in the time of our Saviour.

¹ S. Ambrose, de Spiritu Sancto, iii. 17; vol. iii. p. 807.

[Jansenius,

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. exxviii. p. 430.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 15; vol. viii. p. 474.

* Wednesday and Friday were from the earliest times appointed by the Church to be weekly fasts, the former to commemorate the Betrayal of Jesus and the latter His Passion: τετράδα δὲ καὶ παρασκευὴν προέταξεν ἡμῖν ἡσυχαστῆναι· τὴν μὲν διὰ τὴν παρασκευὴν, τὴν δὲ διὰ τὸ πάθος. "[Our Lord] commanded us to fast on the fourth day and also on the Preparation-day; the former on account of His Betrayal, and the latter on account of His Passion." (Apost. Const. lib. v. 13. See also Bingham's Antiq. xxi. 3.)

It is in fact by these that we must interpret the account of the Passover given in the Gospels, rather than by the words of the original institution : for, whether the mode of keeping the Passover in our Saviour's time was in every particular in strict keeping with the letter of the Mosaic ordinance or not, our Lord's disciples would be sure to comply with the customs, and the Evangelists would use the phraseology common in their own day. In fact, they would know no other.

That which we should expect as probable, we find to have been actually the case. All the expressions used by the Evangelists, either with respect to the arrangements of the Paschal Supper, of the whole Feast of the Passover, or of the Feast of unleavened bread, are in harmony with what we know from other sources was the Paschal Ritual of that day. Explained by the contemporary writers, the Ritual expressions used by S. Matthew, S. Mark, or S. Luke, which appear to be inconsistent with others used by S. John, can be easily reconciled.

It is clear from Philo,¹ and from the contemporary historian Josephus,² who was himself a priest, and also from the Talmud, that in the time of our Saviour it was the custom to kill the lamb for the Passover on 14th Nisan, in the Temple Court, after the daily Evening Sacrifice, sometime between noon and the evening, and to eat it after sunset of the same day ; that is, after the commencement of 15th Nisan. It is also clear that, in order the more punctiliously to observe the Mosaic command to eat nothing leavened for seven days, commencing with the supper at which the Paschal lamb was eaten on 15th Nisan, the Jews of our Saviour's time were accustomed to make a diligent search for leaven in their houses on the evening which was the commencement of 14th Nisan, and to eat nothing leavened after the noon of 14th Nisan. Thus, instead of calling the 15th Nisan, commencing with the eating of the Paschal lamb, the first day of unleavened bread, they called the 14th Nisan, or the day on which the lamb was killed, by this name. In accordance with this, the Evangelists describe our Saviour as sending two disciples on the first day of unleavened bread, which this year was Thursday April 6, in order to prepare for the killing of the Passover lamb, and as sitting down to eat it the same evening, which was reckoned as 15th Nisan. All this is in perfect agreement with the usage and with the language common at that time.

PETER AND JOHN ARE SENT TO PREPARE THE PASSOVER.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 17-19.

17 Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread

the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto Him,
Where wilt Thou that we prepare for Thee to eat the Passover?

18 And He said,
Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him,

The Master saith,
My time is at hand ;
I will keep the Passover at thy house with My disciples.

S. MARK xiv. 12-16.

12 And the first day of unleavened bread,
when they killed the Passover,

His disciples
said unto Him,
Where wilt Thou that we go and prepare that Thou mayest eat the Passover?

13 And He sendeth forth two of His disciples,
and saith unto them,
Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water :

follow him.

14 And whosoever he shall go in, say ye to the goodman of the house,
The Master saith,

S. LUKE xxii. 7-13.

7 Then came the day
of unleavened bread,
when
the Passover must be killed.
8 And He sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us
the Passover, that we may eat.

9 And they
said unto Him,
Where wilt Thou that we prepare?

10 And He said unto them,

Behold, when ye are entered into the city,
there shall a man meet you,
bearing a pitcher of water ;
follow him
into the house where he entereth in.

11 And ye shall say unto the goodman of the house,
The Master saith unto thee,

¹ Philo Jud. De Septen. c. 18 ; vol. v. p. 39.

² Josephus, Bell. Jud. vi. 6, 3.
Whiston's Trans. B. J. vi. 6, 3 : p. 750.

S. MATTHEW xxvi.

S. MARK xiv.

S. LUKE xxii.

	Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the Passover with My disciples ?		Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the Passover with My disciples ?
15	And he will shew you a large upper room furnished and prepared :	12	And he shall shew you a large upper room furnished :
	there make ready for us.		there make ready.
16	And His disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as He had said unto them :	13	And they went, and found as He had said unto them :
19	And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them ; and they made ready the Passover.		and they made ready the Passover.

17. ¶ Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread^a the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto Him, Where wilt Thou that we prepare^b for Thee to eat the Passover ?

S.V. venit unto Him.
Vulg. Prima autem die azymorum accesserunt discipuli ad Iesum, dicentes : Ubi vis parare tibi comedere Pascha ?

18. And He said, Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith, My time is at hand ; I will keep the Passover at thy house with My disciples.

Vulg. At Iesus dixit : Ite in civitatem.

19. And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them ; and they made ready the Passover.^c

Vulg. Et fecerunt discipuli sicut constituit illis Iesus, et paraverunt Pascha.

^a Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread.—“ In the Mosaic ordinance special importance was laid on the injunction that during the seven days no leavened bread was to be found in their houses. The Pharisees however, in their spirit of over-scrupulosity, laid down that on the previous morning, 14th Nisan, search should be made through the houses for anything leavened, that it might be carried away. This was ordained in the same scrupulous spirit in which they reduced the forty stripes commanded by the Law for certain offences, to ‘forty stripes save one,’ thus rendering it more certain that even if with all their caution a single blow was left uncounted, the letter of the Law, permitting no more than forty stripes, would not be broken. Josephus, who, following the Mosaic ordinance, usually reckons no more than seven days to the feast, yet in a single passage expressly indicates a change in the religious observance of the Jews as having already taken place in his day, remarking of the ἑορτὴ τῶν ἀζύμων (Antiq. ii. 15, 1), that it lasted eight days (ἑφ’ ἡμέρας ὀκτώ), i.e. from the morning of the 14th to the evening of the 21st of Nisan. This too is evidenced by the express statement of the Talmud (Pesachim i. 1-5), that search for leaven in the houses must be made in the night preceding the 14th of Nisan, in order that it might be put away by mid-day, and nothing leavened eaten afterwards. Testimony to the same effect is borne by the Synoptical Evangelists when they say that Jesus set out for Jerusalem on ‘the first day of unleavened bread’ for the purpose of eating the legal Passover, according to the Law, on the evening of that day, for it is evident from these passages that the day before the Passover was made ready was reckoned as belonging to the feast of unleavened bread.”

—WIESELER, ‘Chronological Synopsis,’ p. 318.
“The first day of unleavened bread’ is here the 14th of Nisan; on which day, at or before noon, the Jews were accustomed to cease from labour and put away all leaven out of their houses (Lightfoot, Opp. i. p. 728, &c., Hor. Heb. in Marc. xiv. 12). On that day towards sunset the Paschal lamb was killed; and was eaten the same evening, after the 15th of Nisan had begun: at which time, strictly, the festival of unleavened bread commenced and continued seven days. In popular usage, however, the fourteenth day, being thus a day of preparation, was spoken of as belonging to the festival; and therefore is here called the first day. That such a usage was common, appears also from Josephus; who, having in one place expressly fixed the commencement of the festival of unleavened bread on the 15th of Nisan (πέμπτη δὲ καὶ δεκάτῃ διαδέχεται τὴν τοῦ Πάσχα ἡ τῶν ἀζύμων ἑορτή, Antiq. iii. 10, 5), speaks nevertheless in another passage of the fourteenth as the day of that festival, καὶ τῆς τῶν ἀζύμων ἐκστάσης ἡμέρας τεσσαρεσκαίδεκάτῃ Σανθικοῦ μηνός (κατὰ δὲ ἡμῶν Νισάν), B. J. v. 3, 1: comp. Antiq. xi. 4, 8. In this way, further, the same historian could say literally, that the festival was celebrated for eight days: ἑορτὴν ἀγομεν ἐφ’ ἡμέρας ὀκτώ, τὴν τῶν ἀζύμων λεγομένην, Joseph. Ant. ii. 15, 1.”—ROBINSON, ‘Harmony of the Four Gospels,’ p. 211.

^b Where wilt Thou that we prepare.—“For anywhere they might: since the houses at Jerusalem were not to be hired, as we have noted elsewhere; but during the time of the feast they were of common right (Bab. Joma, fol. xii. 1).”—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxvi. 17; vol. ii. p. 255.

^c They made ready the Passover.—“Peter and John were sent for this purpose, Luke xxii. 8, and perhaps they moved the question, ‘Where wilt Thou,’ &c. They only knew that Judas was about another business, while the rest supposed he was preparing necessities for the Passover.

“This, Peter and John were to do (after having spoken with the landlord, whom our Saviour pointed out to them by a sign), to prepare and fit the room.

“I. A lamb was to be bought, approved, and fit for the Passover.

“II. This lamb was to be brought by them into the Court where the altar was: ‘The Passover was to be killed only in the Court, where the other sacrifices were slain; and it was to be killed on the fourteenth day, after noon, after the daily sacrifice, after the offering of the incense,’ &c. (Maimon. in Korban, Pesach. i.).

“The manner of bringing the Passover into the Court, and of killing it, you have in Pesachim v. 5, 6, in these words: ‘The Passover is killed in three companies, according as it is said, And

S. Mark says that Jesus sent forth two of His disciples to prepare for them the Passover. S. Luke gives the names of the two, who were Peter and John. S. Matthew says they were to go to such a man (πρὸς τὸν δέσποτα), meaning one pointed out to them by some sign, which he does not mention. S. Mark and S. Luke state what the sign was. They should meet a man bearing a pitcher of water, and were to follow him into the house. The man bearing the pitcher of water was probably only a servant, and not the master of the house. An early tradition identifies this master of the house with John whose surname was Mark, the companion of Paul and Barnabas.¹

Whoever was the owner of the house, it is pretty plain that he was a disciple of Jesus. We gather this from the words which Jesus commissioned the two disciples to repeat to him, "The Master saith, My time is at hand; I will keep the Passover at thy house with My disciples." For the term Master was generally used to express their relation to Jesus, to indicate that they were His disciples or followers.²

From this time this large Upper Room was the place of meeting for the infant Church. It was here that they re-assembled after their flight on His Crucifixion; it was here that He appeared to them after His Resurrection. They were assembled here when they elected Matthias into the place of Judas, and when the Holy Spirit descended upon them. It was probably here too that the Church was assembled when they made prayer without ceasing unto God for Peter, who was kept in prison (Acts xii.). If it were quite certain that this and the Upper Room were the same, the tradition which makes John Mark this master of the house would be sufficiently confirmed: for he or his mother is evidently the owner of this house (Acts xii. 12).

JESUS SITS DOWN WITH THE TWELVE TO THE PASCHAL SUPPER.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 20.

20 Now when the even was come,
He sat down
with the twelve.

S. MARK xiv. 17.

And in the evening
He cometh
with the twelve.

S. LUKE xxii. 14-16.

14 And when the hour was come,
He sat down,
and the twelve Apostles
with Him.

15 And He said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer:

16 For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.

20. Now when the even was come,^a He sat down with the twelve.

S.A. with the twelve disciples.

Vulg. Vespere autem facto, discumbebat cum duodecim discipulis suis.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 18; vol. viii. p. 476.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxix. p. 435. Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 18; vol. i. p. 375.

all the Assembly of the Congregation of Israel shall kill the Passover,—Assembly, Congregation, and Israel. The first company enter, and fill the whole Court; they lock the doors of the Court; the trumpets sound; the priests stand in order, having golden and silver vials in their hands: one row silver, and the other gold; and they are not intermingled. The vials had no brims, lest the blood should stay upon them, and be congealed or thickened. An Israelite kills it, and a priest receives the blood, and gives it to him that stands next, and he to the next, who, taking the vial that was full, gives him an empty one. The priest who stands next to the altar sprinkles the blood at one sprinkling against the bottom of the altar; that company goes out, and the second comes in, &c. Let them tell me now, who suppose that Christ eat His Passover one day sooner than the Jews did theirs, how these things could be performed by Him or His disciples in the Temple, since it was looked upon as a heinous offence among the people not to kill or eat the Passover in the due time. They commonly carried the lambs into the Court upon their shoulders: this is called its carrying, in Pesachim vi. 1, where the Gloss, 'the carrying of it upon a man's shoulder, to bring it into the Court, as into a public place.'

"III. It was to be presented in the Court, under the name of the Paschal lamb, and to be killed for the company mentioned. . . .

"IV. The blood being sprinkled at the foot of the altar, the lamb flayed, his belly cut up, the fat taken out and thrown into the fire upon the altar, the body is carried back to the place, where they sup; the flesh is roasted, and the skin given to the landlord.

"V. Other things were also provided: bread, according to God's appointment, wine, some usual meats, and the same called Charoseth, of which commentators speak everywhere."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxvi. 19; vol. ii. p. 255.

"Now when the even was come, &c.—"There is some diversity in the Evangelists in relating this story. Matthew and Mark have laid the taxation and discovery of the traitor before the administration of the Lord's Supper, but Luke after.

"And there is the like variety in their relating the time of these words of Christ, 'I will no more drink of the fruit of the vine,' &c. For Luke hath brought them in as spoken before the Sacrament, but the other two after. In both which, first the main intent of the relation is to be looked after, and then may we better state the time. The intent in the former is to show Judas at the table, and at the table all the time both of the Paschal and the Lord's Supper, those

S. John (xiii.) has also described at considerable length a supper of which Jesus partook with His disciples shortly before His Crucifixion. Though the two accounts—namely, that by S. John, and that by the other three Evangelists—differ widely, there can be no reasonable doubt that the four Evangelists are recording the various events that took place during one and the same supper, the Paschal Supper on the evening of Thursday, the evening commencing 15th Nisan. These two accounts differ, because their descriptions are given from different points of view. S. John, for instance, brings into great prominence certain things which the other three Evangelists omit altogether, such as the washing of the feet of His twelve disciples, and the discovery to S. John of the traitor by the giving of a sop, both of which the other three Evangelists omit; while S. John makes no mention of the Institution of the Eucharist, which all the other three record with more or less of detail.

In S. John's account of this supper certain expressions occur which have raised doubts in the minds of some as to whether he can be describing the Paschal Supper on the evening of Thursday, the evening commencing 15th Nisan, and whether the variations between himself and the other three Evangelists can be explained as the description of what occurred at the same supper, only given from different points of view.

1. The words in the first verse, "Now before the Feast of the Passover" (πρὸ δὲ τῆς ἑορτῆς τοῦ πάσχα), have been interpreted so as to fix the date of this supper, and as showing that it took place one day at least before the Passover. It has been well pointed out that the two notes of time in the first verse, "before the Feast of the Passover" and "to the end," are in contrast to each other, and are employed to indicate the duration of His love to them, and not to fix the date of the supper.* These two expressions are the Evangelist's introduction to the act of love and humiliation which Jesus showed to His disciples the last evening that He spent with them, and which he is now about to record. By these words he may mean to imply that this act of Jesus was of a piece with all His former conduct to them, and that it sprang from the same principle, love to them.

2. It has been urged that the supper in S. John xiii. was not the Paschal Supper, because, as the morning which followed it was holy and all work was forbidden, it would not be possible, between the eating of the Paschal lamb in the evening commencing 15th Nisan and the following morning, to make purchases. It has therefore been concluded that this was a supper on the evening commencing 14th Nisan, and that the things which they "had need of against the Feast" were the lamb, the unleavened bread, the wine, bitter herbs, &c. But the words of Moses, with respect to the first and seventh days, "No manner of work shall be done in them save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you," would include the permission to purchase the necessary food, especially as a great part of the multitude would symbols of love and communion, yet he such a wretch as to communicate in both, and yet a traitor. The two, Matthew and Mark, would show that he was at the table, and so the mention of that they bring in upon Christ's first sitting down and beginning to eat. And Luke makes the story full, and shows that he was at the table all the time, both at Passover and Sacrament; and the words of Christ upon the delivering of the cup, 'But behold the hand of him that betrays Me,' &c., cannot possibly be mitigated from such a construction. As to the latter, the meaning of Christ in the words 'I will no more drink of the fruit of the vine,' &c., is, that the kingdom of God was now so near, that this was the last meat and drink, or the last meal, that He was to have, before that came; 'the kingdom of God' meaning His Resurrection and forward, when God by Him had conquered death, Satan, and hell. And whereas He saith, 'Till I drink it new with you in the kingdom of God,' He did so, eating and drinking with them after His Resurrection. This therefore being the aim of His speech, it was reasonable to say so any time of the meal, 'This is the last meal I must eat with you till I be risen again from the dead,' and hereupon the Evangelists have left the time of His uttering of it at that indifferency that they have done. And indeed these two passages had such reference one to another, that the one might bring on the other, and both of them might very well be spoken by Christ twice."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. lxxxiii. vol. i. p. 261.

* Now before the Feast of the Passover.—"It is granted that the last supper here recorded (John xiii. 1, 2) is identical with the Paschal supper of the Synoptists. The only question is, whether the notes of time in John indicate the Paschal supper on the evening of the 14th, or an ordinary meal on that of the 13th of Nisan. This entirely depends on the meaning and construction of John xiii. 1. The first step in our investigation must be to refute the erroneous view that πρὸ can express the day immediately preceding the Feast of the Passover. This, both in classical Greek, and also in the New Testament, must have been expressed by πρὸ μίας τῆς ἑορτῆς τοῦ πάσχα = 'one day before the Passover.' On the contrary, the words can mean nothing but (as πρὸ τοῦ πάσχα, John xi. 55) that something happened before the Passover. They do not contain a syllable to indicate how long before: whether hours, days, or years, can only be determined by the context. A further question arises, whether πρὸ τῆς ἑορτῆς τοῦ πάσχα is to be regarded as fixing the date of the δείπνον, v. 2. This question is all important; for if it be answered in the affirmative, the supper mentioned by John cannot have been a Paschal supper, but must be placed before the Passover. The construction which would connect v. 2 by καὶ with the principal clause of v. 1, εἰς τέλος ἀγάπησεν αὐτοὺς, allows the possibility of this reference, but only under one condition, viz. if πρὸ τῆς ἑορτῆς τοῦ πάσχα either did not refer at all, or not exclusively, to the participial clause εἰδὼς ὁ ἀγαπήσας, but to the principal clause. This, however, is not the case. It is evident that these words point to εἰς τέλος; 'having loved His own before the feast of the Passover,' finds its correlative in 'He loved them unto the end.' It is impossible to understand these two notes of time in any other than this antithetical relation. Consequently, the former refers entirely to the participial clause formed by ἀγαπήσας, which is still more closely defined by the clause with εἰδὼς; the meaning being, that our Lord's 'love to the end' includes the whole of His love before the Passover, which began with the time contrasted with the time before the feast, i.e. the commencement of the feast. After these preliminary remarks, the passage appears to me perfectly clear, and I would translate it as follows, 'Jesus, having loved His own, which were to remain in the world, before the feast of the Passover, knowing that His hour was come that He should go to His Father, He loved them (from that time, i.e. from the feast of the Passover onwards) to the end.'—WIESELE'S 'Chronolog. Synopsis,' p. 346. See also Robinson, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek,' p. 217; McClellan, 'New Testament,' p. 483.

arrive only on the early part of the same day. What the disciples supposed that Judas was commissioned to do was to purchase for them the necessary Chagigah sacrifices, which had to be offered in the morning, and to enable some of the poor to do the same.*

3. Another objection that has been raised to the supper described by S. John xiii. being the Paschal Supper is, because first Judas and then Jesus with the rest of His disciples left the room where they had eaten the Passover, before morning; whereas the words of Moses expressly forbade this, "None of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning" (Exod. xii. 22). In the Introductory Note to this chapter it has been shown that in the time of our Saviour the prohibition not to go out until the morning, as well as the command to sprinkle the door-posts with blood, was looked upon as applying only to the Passover in Egypt. Neither was it thought necessary to lodge in the place where they ate the Paschal lamb.

4. It has also been objected that the Jews went not into Pilate's house lest they should be defiled, "but that they might eat the Passover;" that is, as has been interpreted, that they might eat the Paschal lamb. But to this explanation there are several fatal objections. First, the disqualification arising from entering the house of a heathen lasted only until the evening. It was still early morning (πρωία), and the defilement now contracted would not prevent their partaking of the Paschal lamb in the evening, had that been their intention. Secondly, to interpret the Passover (πάσχα) here of the Paschal lamb would be contrary to S. John's use of the word. Besides this passage, he uses the word Passover nine times, but in no instance does he mean the Paschal lamb, as do the other three Evangelists. He invariably means by the word Passover (πάσχα) the Feast of the Passover. The expression "but that they might eat the Passover" (ἀλλ' ἵνα φάγωσι τὸ πάσχα) doubtless means that they might continue to keep the Passover Feast, and offer the Chagigah sacrifices,¹ which must be offered in the course of a few hours."

See also Commentary on S. John xviii. 28.

5. The preparation day (παρασκευή) was the usual designation of Friday,² as being the day on which everything that was necessary was prepared for the Sabbath. All the three Evangelists represent, without any possibility of mistake, that it was on the Friday that Jesus was crucified. But because S. John does not call it by the simple term παρασκευή, "the preparation day," but παρασκευή τοῦ πάσχα, "the preparation day of the Passover," some have argued that he does not mean the Friday, but the Thursday, as being the preparation day for the whole festival of the Passover. It has been shown that there was no preparation day for the whole festival of the Passover, and that the only meaning of the expression "the preparation day of the Passover" was the Friday in the Passover week, as being the preparation for the Sabbath which fell in that week.³

These are the principal objections that have been raised against the supper which S. John describes ch. xiii. being the same supper which the other three Evangelists describe, and against that being the Paschal Supper on the evening of Thursday commencing 15th Nisan.

From missing the precise meaning of these various expressions, the two following errors have arisen with respect to the observance of the Paschal Supper on this occasion.

1. The Greek commentators generally,⁴ whose opinion is set forth most fully by Euthymius, hold that Jesus ate the Paschal lamb with His disciples a day sooner than the day prescribed by the Law of Moses; that is, that Jesus and His disciples ate the Paschal lamb on the evening commencing 14th Nisan, rather than on the evening commencing 15th Nisan; in order that He, the true Paschal Lamb, might be offered up on the Cross the day on which the typical lamb was usually offered. They suppose that Jesus celebrated the Passover a day before the Feast of unleavened bread began, and that He therefore used leavened bread. Hence arose the custom in the churches of the East to use leavened bread in the celebration of the Eucharist.

2. Some among the Latin commentators hold that Jesus and His disciples ate the Paschal lamb on the evening com-

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 17; vol. viii. p. 476.

Lightfoot, see Introductory Note, p. 406.

Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 349.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, p. 218.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 487.

² Constitut. Apost. v. 15.

S. Athanasius, Hist. Arian. ad Monach. 81; vol. i. p. 793.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 17; vol. viii. p. 476.

Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 310.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, p. 219.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 485.

⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xviii. 28; Homil. lxxxiii.

Theophylact, in Joan. xviii. 28; vol. i. p. 741.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxvi. 20; vol. ii. p. 1001.

* John xiii. 30.—"The supposition of the disciples that our Lord had bidden Judas Iscariot to make the necessary purchases for the feast during the course of the night, is only intelligible on the idea that the next day, as was the case with the 15th of Nisan, was, from the morning onwards, one of so much sanctity through its sacrifices and convocations, that such purchases which it might be necessary to attend to during the day, though allowed by the Law, would have caused an interruption to the celebration of the feast, which would have been painful to a pious Israelite. Besides, the idea of almsgiving (xiii. 30) was specially suitable for this festal night, since on the following day every Israelite was, if possible, to eat the Chagigah with the utmost festivity attainable."—Wiesmencing 15th Nisan, as commanded by the Law of Moses, and that the Jews put off eating their Paschal lamb until the following evening. Two reasons have been assigned why they might put off this. The first is, that they were so intent on compassing the apprehension of Jesus. The other—first suggested by Rupertus, the learned Abbot of the Benedictine monastery at Duyts in the twelfth century, and which has since been advocated by several commentators¹ of considerable authority—is that they did this in compliance with their traditions, which allowed them, when two festivals on which no work was permitted fell on two consecutive days, to put the former festival off for a day. But the most trustworthy commentators maintain² that neither of these suppositions is necessary; for that a consistent explanation of all these various passages shows that both Jesus and His disciples and the Jews all ate the Paschal lamb on the evening of Thursday, the evening commencing the 15th Nisan, the evening on which Jesus was apprehended in the Garden of Gethsemane.

LER'S 'Chronolog. Synopsis,' p. 348.

¹ But that they might eat the Passover.—"It is well known that the whole period of the feast, especially in S. John's Gospel, was also called after the one conspicuous day, 'the Passover.' And so, too, the legal sacrifices and food proper to the whole feast received the same name. Φαγεῖν τὸ πάσχα, in this sense, is therefore synonymous with the celebration of the Paschal season, by a participation in the particular food (τὰ ἄζυμα) and meals appointed by the Law. In like manner, we read (2 Chron. xxx. 22) of the Passover, 'they did eat the feast' [A.V. 'throughout the feast,' seven days], where it deserves notice that this 'eating' is specially referred to eating the Chagigah."—Ibid., p. 349.

At the very time that the twelve disciples sat down with Jesus to the Paschal Supper Judas had already agreed with the chief priests to betray Him unto them at the first convenient opportunity, and had also agreed on the sum which he was to receive for this. Because Judas was so unworthy, many have concluded that Jesus could not, and did not, permit him to participate in the Eucharistic feast. But, besides the unworthiness of Judas, and our Saviour's knowledge of it, there is nothing to lead to this conclusion in the narrative itself. All the intimations go to show that Judas partook of the Paschal lamb with Jesus and the eleven other Apostles; that Jesus then washed the feet of the twelve Apostles, as a preparation for their partaking of the Eucharist; and that He did not produce by that act the same effect on the heart of Judas as on the other Apostles; but that nevertheless He permitted Judas to be present and to participate in the Eucharist. 1. S. Matthew and S. Luke say that Jesus sat down to the Paschal Supper with the twelve Apostles. That Judas was one of the twelve who sat down with Jesus there can be no question. S. Matthew is express on this point (verses 20–25). 2. S. Mark, when recording the Institution of the Eucharist, says (xiv. 23), “and they all drank of it.” 3. S. Luke represents Jesus as saying immediately after the Institution, “But behold the hand of him that betrayeth Me is with Me on the table” (xxii. 21). 4. When Jesus washed the feet of the Twelve as a preparation for their participation in the Eucharist, as related by S. John xiii., he clearly intimates that Judas was present when He said, “Ye are clean, but not all,” &c.; and a little later on, during the same Supper, He discovers to S. John who the traitor was by a sop.

That Jesus permitted Judas to participate in the Eucharist is almost beyond question, and this was the belief of the early Church.³ Why He did so, knowing the state of his heart, and after He had Himself declared that he was not clean, is not so plain. Some have supposed that it was to give to men a perfect example of charity; to teach men to act with perfect long-suffering to others, whatever treachery they may show in return; to strive as much as possible to restrain men from the commission of sin, but, where that is impossible, on no account to divulge it to others.

JESUS FORETELLS HIS BETRAYAL.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 21–25.

21 And as they did eat,

He said,
Verily I say unto you,
that one of you

shall betray Me.
22 And they were exceeding sorrowful, and began every one of them

S. MARK xiv. 18–21.

18 And as they sat and did eat,

Jesus said,
Verily I say unto you,
One of you which eateth with Me shall betray Me.
19 And they began to be sorrowful,
and

S. LUKE xxii. 21–23.

21 But, behold,
the hand of him that betrayeth Me is with Me on the table.

S. JOHN xiii. 21–30.

21 When Jesus had thus said,
He was troubled in spirit,
and testified,
and said,
Verily, verily, I say unto you,
that one of you
shall betray Me.

¹ Rupertus, in Matt. xxvi. 2.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxviii. p. 426.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 2; vol. i. p. 362.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 17; vol. viii. p. 476.

³ Eusebius Emisenus, Orat. de prodit. Jude, p. 12.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxxi., vol. ii. p. 472.

S. Cyril Hierosol. Catechesis, xiii. 6, p. 780.

Theodoret, in Epist. ii. ad Corin. xi. 24; vol. iii. p. 119.

S. Augustine, in Joan. tract. lxii.; vol. iii. p. 1802.

S. Leo, Sermo vii. de Passione Domini; vol. i. p. 333.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxvi. 24; vol. iii. p. 112.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quæst. 81, art. 2; vol. iv. p. 812.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxx. p. 437.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 20; vol. i. p. 378.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 40; vol. viii. p. 477.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxxxiii. vol. i. p. 260.

Bengel, in Matt. xxvi. 26, p. 140.

Bishop of Lincoln, John xiii. 30, Greek Testament.

Dean Alford, Matt. xxvi. 27, Greek Testament.

S. MATTHEW xvi.

to say unto Him,

Lord, is it I ?

23 And He answered and said,

He
that dippeth his hand with Me in the dish,
the same shall betray Me.

24 The Son of Man

goeth
as it is written of Him :
but woe unto that man
by whom the Son of Man
is betrayed !
it had been good for that man if he had not been born.

S. MARK xiv.

to say unto Him

one by one,

Is it I ?

and another said,

Is it I ?

20 And He answered and said

unto them,

It is one of the twelve, that dippeth
with Me in the dish.

21

The Son of Man

indeed goeth,

as it is written of Him :

but woe to that man

by whom the Son of Man

is betrayed !

good were it for that man

if he had never been born.

S. LUKE xii.

22 And truly the Son of Man

goeth,

as it was determined :

but woe unto that man

by whom He is betrayed !

23

And they began to inquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing.

S. JOHN xiii.

22 Then the disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom

He spake.

23 Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of His disciples, whom Jesus loved.

24 Simon Peter therefore beckoned to him, that he should ask who it should be of whom He spake.

25 He then lying on Jesus' breast saith unto Him, Lord, who is it ?

26 Jesus answered, He it is, to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it. And when He had dipped the sop, He gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon.

27 And after the sop Satan entered into him. Then said Jesus unto him, That thou doest, do quickly.

28 Now no man at the table knew for what intent He spake this unto him.

29 For some of them thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him, Buy those things that we have need of against the feast ; or, that he should give something to the poor.

30 He then having received the sop went immediately out : and it was night.

25 Then Judas, which betrayed
Him, answered and said, Master, is it I ? He said unto him, Thou hast said.

21. And as they did eat, He said, Verily
I say unto you, that one of you shall betray Me.

S. He saith.

Vulg. Et edentibus illis dixit: Amen dico vobis, quia unus vestrum me traditurus est.

22. And they were exceeding sorrowful, and began every one of them to say unto Him, Lord, is it I ?

S.V. omit of them.

Vulg. Et contristati valde, cœperunt singuli dicere: Numquid ego sum Domine ?

23. And He answered and said, He that dippeth his hand with Me in the dish, the same shall betray Me.

24. The Son of Man goeth as it is written of Him : but woe unto that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed ! it had been good for that man if he had not been born.

Vulg. Vñ autem homini illi, per quem Filius hominis tradetur: bonum erat ei, si natus non fuisset homo ille.

25. Then Judas, which betrayed Him, answered and said, Master, is it I ? He said unto him, Thou hast said.

S. Jesus saith unto him.
Vulg. Respondens autem Judas, qui tradidit eum, dixit: Numquid ego sum Rabbi? At illi: Tu dixisti.

All the four Evangelists record, with more or less of fullness, our Saviour's prediction, during this supper, of His betrayal by one of the Twelve. S. Matthew and S. Mark place their account of it before the Institution of the Eucharist, and S. Luke after. Two explanations have been given of this variation.* Jesus may have spoken of this more than once during the evening, and S. Matthew and S. Mark may have recorded one of these occasions, and S. Luke the other; or they may not have intended their accounts to be understood as related in the exact order in which they were uttered. In this case it would be more probable that S. Luke's account is in the order of events: for, not to multiply reasons, S. Matthew frequently disregards the chronological order for other considerations.

It would seem that, after the Institution of the Eucharist, the disciples were exceeding sorrowful at the words that Jesus had said, that one of the Twelve should betray Him, and began to ask, "Is it I?" that in reply He said, it was one of the Twelve that dipped with Him in the dish. As, according to the Eastern mode of eating, several would dip with Him in the dish, this answer appeared too indefinite and vague for the eager Peter, who motioned to John to ask Jesus direct who it was; that Jesus then gave a sop to Judas, not to indicate to the rest of the Twelve who the traitor was, but only to John; that Judas, having received the sop,¹ and conscious of his guilt, asked the same question as the others, "Master, is it I?"

It is clear that the other disciples asked the question, "Is it I?" in a spirit of conscious innocence, fearful only of involuntary betrayal, but that Judas asked it with all the hardness of impenitent guilt.² Even yet Jesus does not openly convict him as the traitor. Two explanations have been given of the words, "Thou hast said" (οὐ εἶπας). One³ is, that a speaker uses this expression when he wishes to give an equivocal answer, so as to avoid replying either yes or no to the question that has been asked him. The other⁴ is, that by these words the speaker expresses his assent, or gives an affirmative answer to the question. If the latter be the sense in which Jesus used these words, it is probable that He uttered them to Judas alone, and in a lower tone of voice, just as He had secretly given the sign of the sop to John.

See the Commentary on S. John xiii.

The ritual of the First or Egyptian Passover was necessarily extremely simple. The ritual observed in our Saviour's days was much more elaborate. Besides the eating of the Paschal lamb with bitter herbs and unleavened bread, four cups of wine were partaken of by each person present. The following is an outline of the order observed in the Paschal Supper. First a cup of wine was brought, and then the Master of the house, or one selected by the company for that purpose, gave thanks to God, in the name of the rest, for the wine and also for the day. They then washed their hands. After taking some sallet, they filled the second cup of wine and repeated the Psalms cxiii. cxiv., and then drank the wine. They then washed their hands again, ate some of the unleavened bread with the bitter herbs, and last of all, the flesh of the Paschal lamb. After this, they washed again, and filled the third cup, which was called the cup of blessing. They then said grace after meat, and gave thanks for the wine, and then drank it off. Lastly, they filled the fourth cup of wine, and repeated the rest of the Hallel, Psalms cxv. cxvi. cxvii. cxviii., with some prayers, and thus concluded.

S. Luke is the only one of the three Evangelists that shows in what part in the ritual of the Paschal Supper it was that Jesus instituted the Eucharist. S. Matthew and S. Mark merely say, "as they were eating" (ἐσθίουσιν αὐτῶν). But from S. Luke we gather that it was after the eating of the lamb, and after the drinking of the third cup of wine (see Introductory Note, p. 406), and that the cup which our Saviour consecrated to be His blood was the fourth cup, or the cup of the Hallel.

As Master of the feast, it was the office of Jesus to give thanks in the name of the rest; and after taking the third cup of wine, which was emphatically called the cup of blessing, He drank of it, and then gave it to His disciples and said, "Take this, and divide it among yourselves: for I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God shall come." It is probable that Jesus spake this⁵ not of the cup which He consecrated to be His

¹ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 25; vol. i. p. 381.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 25; vol. viii. p. 479.
Rabbinus, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, p. 142.

² Origen, in Matt. xxvi. 25; vol. iii. p. 1733.

³ Origen, in Matt. xxvii. 11; vol. iii. p. 1769.

Thyphylact, in Luc. xiii. 3; vol. i. p. 482.

S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 1; vol. iii. p. 1158.

⁴ S. Cyril Alex. in Matt. xxvi. 67; vol. v. p. 460.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxiii. p. 469.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 25; vol. i. p. 381.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 25; vol. viii. p. 479.

⁵ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 29; vol. i. p. 406.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 29; vol. viii. p. 486.

Blood, but of the cup which He gave to His disciples before. By these words He intimated that His Death was at hand, and that He would not again eat and drink bread and wine with them as before until after His Resurrection. S. Matthew and S. Mark place these words after He had instituted the Eucharist. But they do not join the Institution of the Eucharist on to the Paschal Supper, as S. Luke does, nor do they show by any expressions in what part of the Passover service they mean the Institution of the Eucharist itself, or the utterance of these words, to come. Probably all that S. Matthew and S. Mark mean is that Jesus uttered these words, "I will not henceforth," &c., sometime during the Paschal Supper. There is not the same appearance in

S. Matthew and S. Mark's Gospel that they intended their account to be a narration in the order of events, as there is in S. Luke's.

Between the third cup of wine,¹ or the cup of blessing, which S. Luke mentions, and the Institution of the Eucharist, there was probably a considerable interval of time, sufficient to allow the washing of the feet of the twelve disciples, which S. John relates with so much circumstantiality. The washing of the hands occurred several times during the Paschal Supper; but the washing of the feet was a new and unusual act, and was intended as a preparation for the Eucharist.

JESUS INSTITUTES THE EUCHARIST.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 26-29.

S. MARK xiv. 22-25.

S. LUKE xxii. 17-20.

1 COR. xi. 23-26.

26 And as they were eating,
 Jesus took bread,
 and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said,
 Take, eat;
 This is My Body.

27 And He took the cup,
 and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying,
 Drink ye all of it;
 for This is My Blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many
 for the remission of sins.

22 And as they did eat,
 Jesus took bread,
 and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said,
 Take, eat:
 This is My Body.

23 And He took the cup, and when He had given thanks, He gave it to them: and they all drank of it.

24 And He said unto them,
 This is My Blood of the New Testament,
 which is shed for many.

17 And He took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves:

18 For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.

19 And He took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying,
 This is My Body which is given for you:
 This do in remembrance of Me.

20 Likewise also the cup after supper,

saying,

This cup is the New Testament in My Blood, which is shed for you.

23 The Lord Jesus the same night in which He was betrayed took bread:
 and when He had given thanks, He brake it, and said,
 Take, eat:
 This is My Body, which is broken for you:
 This do in remembrance of Me.

25 After the same manner also He took the cup, when He had supped,

saying,

This cup is the New Testament in My Blood:

This do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of Me.
 26 For as often as ye eat this

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxx. p. 437.
 Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 2; vol. viii. p. 1067.
 Archbp. Newcome, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 340.

Greswell, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 320.
 Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, p. 142.
 Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, pp. 141-144.

S. MATTHEW xxvi.

S. MARK xiv.

S. LUKE xxii.

1 COR. xi.

bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's Death till He come.

29 But I say unto you,
I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day
when I drink it new with you in My Father's kingdom.

25 Verily I say unto you,
I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day
that I drink it new in the kingdom of God.

26. ¶ And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; THIS IS MY BODY.

Margin, many Greek copies have "gave thanks."
A. the bread, and gave thanks and brake it.
Vulg. Cenantes autem eis, accepit Iesus panem, et benedixit ac fregit, et deditque discipulis suis, et ait: Accipite, et comedite: Hoc est Corpus Meum.

27. And He took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of It;

28. FOR THIS IS MY BLOOD OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, WHICH IS SHED FOR MANY FOR THE REMISSION OF SINS.

S.V. omit new.
Vulg. Hic est enim sanguis meus novi testamenti, qui pro multis effundetur in remissionem peccatorum.

29. But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in My Father's kingdom.

Most of the points touched on in this history of the Insti-

¹ Justin Martyr, Apologia, i. p. 96.

S. Cyril Hierosol. Catechesis Mystagog. iv. 2, p. 1098.
iv. 9, p. 1104.
v. 7, p. 1116.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxxii.; vol. ii. p. 468.

S. Gregory Nyssen, Oratio Catechet. 37; vol. ii. p. 96.

S. Cyril. Alex. in Joan. lib. x. 2 (cap. xv. 1); vol. vii. p. 341.

S. Hilary, de Trinitate, viii. 14; vol. ii. p. 247.

S. Ambrose, de Sacramentis, iv. 4 and iv. 5; vol. iii. pp. 441
and 443.

S. Augustine, in Joan. vi. 32-71, tract. xxv.—xxvii.; vol. iii.
pp. 1602-1621. [S. Leo,

* This is My Body.—"Such was the efficacy of our Lord's original benediction; such continues to be the force of the same words, when pronounced by Him through the mouth of His ministers. For they are creative words, like those which called the world into existence; they effect that which they declare."— R. I. WILBERFORCE, 'On the Holy Eucharist,' p. 120.

The following shows that the same ancient writers will sometimes speak of the Consecration as taking place on the Invocation of the Holy Spirit, and at others on saying the words of Institution; it also gives a probable reason why they do this.

"So completely does each Person in the ever-blessed Trinity cooperate in that which either performs, that we cannot exclude the Holy Ghost from that action which is performed by the Son tution of the Eucharist fall under one of the following heads, so far as they can be separated:—The Sacrament, The Sacrifice, The Commission given to the Apostles.

I. The Sacrament, or the consecration of the bread and wine to be the Body and Blood of Jesus, God and Man, is expressed thus: "Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; This is My Body," and "He took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for This is My Blood."

Five distinct actions of Jesus are carefully recorded, "He took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; This is My Body," &c. What was bread when He took it was no longer mere bread but His Body, when He said, "Take, eat; This is My Body."
What was wine when He took the cup was no longer mere wine but His Blood when He said, "Drink ye all of it; for This is My Blood." The change from bread to His Body and from wine to His Blood was supernatural, and could only be wrought by His power as God; which was probably exerted through His words of blessing, or through the words of Institution,* "This is My Body," "This is My Blood."¹

S. Leo, de jejunio Septimi mensis, Sermo vi. 3; vol. i. p. 452.

Liturgy of S. Mark, p. 26; Neale's ed. 1859.

Translation, p. 23.

of S. James, p. 73; Neale's ed. 1859.

Translation, p. 59.

of S. Clement, p. 104; Neale's ed. 1859.

Translation, p. 86.

of S. Chrysostom, p. 137; Neale's ed. 1859.

Translation, p. 116.

See also the Formulæ of Institution, as they occur in every extant Liturgy, in Neale's Translation of the Liturgies, pp. 175-224, S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 78; vol. iv. p. 759.

through the medium of His priests, nor yet the Son from that which is effected by the Holy Ghost who proceeds from Him. So that it would be rash perhaps to define at what moment the act of consecration is effected, while yet it is reverent to treat it as effected, when the first essential portion of it is performed. Again, it may be said that since our Lord's presence in this holy ordinance is not of a natural or carnal character, the continual agency of the Spirit is no doubt required to perpetuate that operation, on which Christ's presence is dependent. As we daily ask God, therefore, to send down His 'mercy and truth,' without meaning that similar prayers may not have been already heard, so we may invoke the power of the Spirit for the maintenance of that presence which is already bestowed. So that the Invocation of the Holy Ghost may

It was not bread in general that was His Body, but that which He had taken in His hand and which He had blessed, or over which He had given thanks to the Father and which He probably broke into thirteen pieces,¹ giving to each Apostle one piece, and reserving one for Himself. It was not wine in general which was His Blood, but the wine in the cup which He had taken, over which He gave thanks, and of which He probably drank first Himself, and which He then passed round to each of the twelve Apostles.

The necessity and the blessing of partaking of His Body and Blood Jesus had already explained to His disciples, as recorded by S. John vi. 53-58: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, and drink His Blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth My Flesh, and drinketh My Blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For My Flesh is meat indeed, and My Blood is drink indeed. He that eateth My Flesh, and drinketh My Blood, dwelleth in Me, and I in him. As the living Father hath sent Me, and I live by the Father: so he that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me. This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever."

The question naturally arises, Did Judas take and eat the Body of Jesus and drink His Blood, and did he derive thereby the blessings here stated? There is every reason to believe that Judas did eat the Body of Jesus, and did drink His Blood, but did not derive thereby the benefits mentioned in these verses, and which the other Apostles derived. The bread and wine were consecrated into the Body and Blood of Jesus by His divine power, and this did not depend on the heart of Judas. But These did not act physically but morally;^a that is, not irrespectively of the heart of the recipient. Even in common food, the character of the food be designed to imply, that the continuance of our Lord's presence is a supernatural action momentarily renewed.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 27; vol. viii. p. 482.

"That which is clear, however, is, that the use of these two separate conditions in the consecration of the Holy Eucharist is founded upon a reference to the intervention of the Second as well as of the Third Person in the Blessed Trinity, in this mysterious work; and that the work is attributed to their joint operation. Each is supposed to act according to His peculiar function in the great economy of man's redemption: the Holy Ghost as having been the agent in the work of the Incarnation; the Son as having Himself become Incarnate. The same authorities, therefore, who refer the consecration to the Holy Ghost, consider it to be effected by our Lord's words of Institution. S. Chrysostom (in Matt. Homil. lxxxi.; vol. ii. p. 468, Oxon: in 2 Epist. ad Tim. cap. i. Homil. ii. sec. 4), whose Liturgy so plainly expresses the one, speaks as distinctly in his Homilies respecting the other. S. Augustin (Sermo cccxvii.; vol. v. p. 1099, Migne. De Trinitate, iii. sec. 10; vol. ix. p. 874) attributes it with equal distinctness to the one and to the other. And for this diversity the ancient writers found a parallel in that great work on which it was dependent: for the Incarnation itself is attributed in Holy Scripture to the one of these Divine Persons as directly as to the other (S. Cyril, in Joan. lib. iv. 3; vol. vi. p. 585, Migne). God the Son 'made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant.' Thus did 'wisdom build itself a house' out of the materials of man's nature. And yet the angel declared 'the Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee.' 'When,' says S. Fulgentius (ad Monimum, ii. 10; Migne's Patrol. vol. lxx. p. 188), 'can the Holy Church more fitly entreat the advent of the Holy Ghost, than when she invokes it to consecrate the sacrifice of Christ's Body, seeing she knows that it was from the Holy Ghost that her Head Himself received His Incarnate nature.' For thus it is revealed to us as part of the mystery of the ever-blessed Trinity, that by reason of the coineherence of the Divine Three, no function can be discharged by one Person in the glorious Godhead, in which each does not take part according to His appointed order and law. And hence results no confusion nor interference in their merciful offices; neither can succession have place in essences which perpetually co-operate; nor can the conditions of time restrict the operations of the Eternal."—R. I. WILBERFORCE, 'On the Holy Eucharist,' p. 342.

The following shows how the early Church believed Christ to be present in Baptism, and how in the Holy Eucharist:—

"The validity of Baptism does not depend upon the consecration of the elements, or the character of the administrator. These considerations affect the decency, but not the reality, of the ordinance: for though Christ is allowed to be present in Baptism by spiritual power, yet His presence is to be sought in the ordinance at large, and not in the elements. So that the symbol employed is never spoken of as gaining, in itself, any relation to the sacred object of which it is fitted to remind men. The washing of water is the means whereby the baptized partake in that purification which was effected by Christ's Blood; but the water is never spoken of as changed into blood, either in Scripture or ancient authors. On the contrary, the whole element of water is described as consecrated to the mystical washing away of sin.

"In the Holy Eucharist, the elements, and not the ordinance at large, are the medium of the gift. And the reason is, that our Lord is not present in this ordinance by spiritual power only, but He has consecrated His Body to be the peculiar medium of a supernatural effect. It has been set forth as an antithesis, or contrast, to that of the old Adam; and, as a consequence of the Incarnation, He bestows it as a renewing principle in the Holy Eucharist. So that in Baptism He is present only by power and grace; but in the Holy Eucharist He is present likewise by His Body and Blood. There is not only, therefore, that presence of Godhead which attends upon His gifts, but also that presence of His Flesh and Blood which is bestowed through the consecrated elements. Thus S. Cyril (adv. Nest. iv. 5; vol. ix. p. 193, Migne), 'For as the Body of the Word is life-giving, since He has made it His own by a real union, which is beyond thought and expression, so we who are partakers of His sacred Flesh and Blood are by all means endued with life; since the Word abides in us in the way of Deity by the Holy Ghost, and in the way of Humanity by His sacred Flesh and precious Blood, &c.'—R. I. WILBERFORCE, 'On the Holy Eucharist,' p. 104.

"It is not meant that this sacrament is a physical, but only a moral instrument in man's salvation. By a physical instrument is meant one which acts of itself, by means of those qualities which are inherent in it; by a moral instrument, one which derives its efficacy from the perpetual intervention of its employer's will. When a chemist would precipitate a salt through the admixture of an acid, the acid employed is a physical instrument; it acts by virtue of those properties which belong to it, in a manner irrespectively of his will. But the hand by which he pours it into the mixture is a moral agent: its action is not for a moment independent of his causing will. Now, when it is said that certain inward gifts are bestowed through a sacrament, it is not meant that they are so physically associated with its outward form as to follow from it in the way of natural consequence: the inward does not depend on the condition of the recipient, though the effect which it produces may.

Jesus had washed the feet of Judas with the same love as the rest, and with the same object, to render them clean, but not with the same effect: for He Himself declared that they were clean in consequence of His having washed their feet, and that Judas was not. In like manner there is every reason to believe that He gave to Judas His Body to eat, and His Blood to drink equally with the rest, but not with the same effect.

II. From the language which Jesus used, we learn that in the Institution of the Eucharist He offered up a Sacrifice to make atonement for man's sin, as well as instituted a Sacrament to render him partaker of life eternal.

S. Luke (xxii. 19) represents Jesus as saying, "This is My Body which is given for you" (τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν διδόμενον); and S. Paul (1 Cor. xi. 24), "This is My Body, which is broken for you" (τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν κλάμενον).

S. Matthew (xxvi. 28) represents Jesus as saying, "This is My Blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins" (τὸ τῆς καινῆς διαθήκης, τὸ περὶ πολλῶν ἐκχυνόμενον εἰς ἄφεσιν ἁμαρτιῶν); S. Mark xiv. 24, "This is My Blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many" (τὸ περὶ πολλῶν ἐκχυνόμενον); and S. Luke xxii. 20, "This cup is the New Testament in My Blood, which is shed for you" (τοῦτο τὸ ποτήριον, ἡ καινὴ διαθήκη ἐν τῷ αἵματι μου, τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἐκχυνόμενον).

In all these expressions,¹ slightly varied as they are in other respects, the present tense is invariably preserved: τὸ διδόμενον, τὸ κλάμενον, τὸ ἐκχυνόμενον. It is never implied by the use of the future tense that the action here referred to was not to take place now in the Eucharist, but a little later on the Cross. The language of S. Luke is even still more explicit on this point: for he represents Jesus as saying that the cup which He had just blessed and had consecrated to be His Blood was shed for them, τοῦτο τὸ ποτήριον . . . τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἐκχυνόμενον. His words, strictly interpreted, imply that His Blood was shed for them in the Eucharist, not on the Cross.

In this Sacrifice Jesus is Himself the Priest, He is Himself the Victim, who makes atonement for the sin of man: for He offers up His own Body and His own Blood for many for the remission of sins. Not only does Jesus offer a sacrifice in the Eucharist, but He offers The Sacrifice of the New Covenant—the one, only, prevailing, and effectual Sacrifice for the sins of man that was ever offered; and which fulfils and supersedes all the sacrifices of the Old Covenant. With the ancients, when two contending parties entered into a covenant, they ratified it with sacrifices. When Jesus entered into the New Covenant with man, He ratified it with His own Blood. Here, too, is completed the typical sacrifice of Melchisedec:² for here is the true Priest and the true Sacrifice. Melchisedec of old offered mere bread and wine, but Jesus, the true Melchisedec, offered up His own Body and His own Blood.

It may be said, What relation does the Sacrifice of His Body and Blood by Jesus in the Eucharist bear to His Sacrifice on the Cross? These are not two distinct Sacrifices, but different portions or different stages, or even different descriptions, so to speak, of the one Sacrifice of His Death. In the Eucharist, Jesus offers up Himself, His own Body and His own Blood; on the Cross, we see fulfilled the part which it was necessary that man should take in the Sacrifice of His Death. The nailing to the Cross might be called by unbelievers compulsory, the act of His enemies; but none could call the Sacrifice of Himself to God the Father in the gifts are dependent altogether upon the ordaining will of Almighty God, who appoints a certain external form as the means whereby He bestows His gifts. So that a sacrament is a moral instrument, which derives its efficacy from the perpetual intervention of the Being by whom it has been appointed."—R. I. WILBERFORCE, 'On the Holy Eucharist,' p. 21.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxi. p. 465.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 28; vol. i. p. 390.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 28; vol. viii. p. 483.

"It is not meant that sacraments are less certain in their effects than physical agents; nor yet that their reality depends upon those circumstances in their receivers which are essential to their utility. But they are called moral instruments, because they derive their validity from the immediate appointment of Him, who acts in common according to that law which He has imposed upon the material creation; because they belong to the order of grace, and not to the order of nature.

"It is as a moral, and not a physical instrument then, that the outward form in the Holy Eucharist is the means of conveying the inward gift. And here a further distinction between Baptism and the Holy Eucharist is suggested by the transient nature of the one, as compared with the continuous nature of the other. Since Baptism exists only in the act of its administration, it is this act alone which can be the means through which it conveys an inward gift. And therefore there is no such consecration as invests the material employed with any permanent efficacy. It is otherwise in the Holy Eucharist, where the outward part is consecrated to be the instrument through which there is a continuous ministration of the inward blessing. In the last case, therefore, our Lord's words indicated that This, which He held in His hands, was the fixed medium of conveying the hidden gift. So that in one case the medium is an act, in the other an element: the act of baptizing is the moral instrument in one instance, the consecrated element in the other."—Ibid., p. 24.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxi. p. 456.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 28; vol. viii. p. 483.

"Though all who receive the one [the bread and the wine] receive the other [the Body and the Blood of Christ], yet no benefit follows from this reception, except there be living faith in the receiver. For it is one thing to receive Christ's Body and Blood sacramentally, and another that the soul should be brought into relation to Christ. The first depends on the consecration of the elements; the second requires in addition the spiritual life of the receiver. Our Lord speaks in general terms of the value of the Holy Eucharist (John vi.), just as in the third chapter of S. John He uses general terms respecting the blessings of Baptism, but without intending that its benefits are gained, unless the ordinance is improved as well as partaken. He speaks of the importance of the gift, without entering upon the further consideration how it is employed."—Ibid., p. 222.

Eucharist compulsory. The nailing to the Cross was but a carrying out by man of the Saviour's entire, voluntary surrender and sacrifice of Himself in the Eucharist.

In the sacrifices of the Old Covenant, and in the sacrifices of the heathen, little regard was paid to the will of the victim; the offering him up by the owner was considered sufficient. But in the Sacrifice of the New Covenant, in that Sacrifice which was to give efficacy to all former sacrifices, so far as they were propitiatory, the will of the Victim, the voluntary offering up of Himself, was everything, so to speak: the rest was man's act, a deed of violence, the offspring of man's wickedness.

III. After Jesus had taken bread, and had blessed it, and had broken it, and given it to His twelve disciples, saying, "Take, eat; This is My Body, which is given for you," He said unto them, "This do ye in remembrance of Me." Again, after He had taken the cup, and had given thanks over it, and had given it to them, saying, "This is My Blood," He said to them, "This do ye in remembrance of Me." Two explanations have been given of these words, "This do ye in remembrance of Me" (τοῦτο ποιεῖτε εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν).

First, they are explained as a command to the Apostles to do as they had seen Jesus do, in all things in the Institution of the Eucharist, with a promise that His power would be with them to render their acts as effectual as His own. As He had taken bread and had consecrated it to be His Body, and had first offered it up to God and had then given it to them to partake of, so they were to do. As He had taken the cup and had consecrated it to be His Blood, and had first offered it to God and had then given it to them to drink, so they were to act. All this they were to do after the pattern which He had given them, and so to commemorate His Death.¹

The second explanation, which is really contained under the first, is to explain the word "Do ye," ποιεῖτε, in the sacrificial sense in which it is constantly used in the Septuagint, and with which the Twelve would be familiar: for their principal means of learning the Old Testament was through the Septuagint Translation. It has been shown² that there are not less than seventy passages in which the verb ποιεῖν is used in the Septuagint Translation in this sacrificial sense. Besides the Septuagint, the word ποιεῖν was frequently used by the early writers in the sense of "to offer a sacrifice."³

The probability that ποιεῖν is here used in a sacrificial sense is increased by its close connection with ἀνάμνησις.

As in the case of ποιεῖν, so also of ἀνάμνησις, their meaning must depend very much on the sense in which they are used in the Septuagint. The kindred word μνημόσυνον is very frequently found in the Septuagint, sometimes in a sacrificial sense, and sometimes not. But ἀνάμνησις occurs only five times in the Septuagint,—once in Leviticus (xxiv. 7), once in Numbers (x. 10), in the titles of Psalms xxxvii. and lxi., and once in the Apocryphal Book of Wisdom (xvi. 6). From the use of the word in Levit. xxiv. 7 and Numb. x. 10, and from the way in which its cognate verb ἀναμνήσκω is used Numb. x. 9, it is highly probable that ἀνάμνησις was a strictly sacrificial word, at least quite as much so as μνημόσυνον. In Leviticus xxiv. 7 the Lord said unto Moses with respect to the shewbread, "And thou shalt put pure frankincense upon each row, that it may be on the bread for a memorial (Septuagint, εἰς ἀνάμνησιν), even an offering made by fire unto the Lord." In Numbers x. 10, the Lord, giving directions to Moses respecting the use of the two silver trumpets, said, "Ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt offerings, and over the sacrifices of your peace offerings; that they may be to you for a memorial before your God" (Septuagint, καὶ ἔσται ὑμῖν ἀνάμνησις ἑναντί τῷ θεῷ ὑμῶν). In both these instances the Hebrew word is rendered "memorial" by the English Translators and ἀνάμνησις by the Septuagint. In the preceding verse we see to whom, and for whom, they were to be a memorial: "And if ye go to war in your land against the enemy that oppresseth you, then ye shall blow an alarm with the trumpets; and ye shall be remembered before the Lord your God (ἀναμνησθήσεσθε ἑναντί κυρίου), and ye shall be saved from your enemies." (Numb. x. 9.)

Conformity with the usage of the Old Testament translators would have required the translators of S. Luke's Gospel and of the Epistle to the Corinthians, to have rendered our Saviour's words, τοῦτο ποιεῖτε εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν, "Do This (or, Offer This) for My Memorial," or "for the Memorial of Me," instead of "Do This in remembrance of Me." He uttered these words first after He had given them His Body, and repeated them after He had given them His Blood. After each He said, "Offer This for My Memorial," which may thus be paraphrased, "Offer This that It may be to you My Memorial before God;" or, "Offer This that It may be to you a Memorial before Me," as in Numb. x. 10 (καὶ ἔσται ὑμῖν ἀνάμνησις ἑναντί τῷ θεῷ ὑμῶν).⁴

In estimating the force of the commands in the Institution of the Eucharist it is of the utmost importance to bear in

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxi. p. 456.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvi. 26; vol. viii. p. 482.

² The late Bishop Hamilton's Charge, 1867, p. 167.

³ See Dr. G. Hickes, on the Christian Priesthood, vol. ii. p. 64.

* Do this in remembrance of Me.—"But this Commemoration is to be made to God His Father, and is not a bare remembrance or putting ourselves in mind only (as is commonly supposed), but a putting of God in mind: for every sacrifice is directed unto God, and the oblation therein, whatsoever it be, hath Him for its object, and not man. If therefore the Eucharist be sacramentum Christi commemorativum, a commemorative Sacrifice of Christ, as ours grant, then must the Commemoration therein be made unto God. And if Christ therein be offered oblatio, that is, as the Object of the Commemoration there made (as that learned Bishop speaks); if the Commemoration of Him be an Oblation of Him, to whom is this Oblation, that is, Commemoration, made but unto God? . . . To Him, therefore, and not unto ourselves, is that 'Ανάμνησις or Commemoration to be made which Christ commendeth to His Church, when He said, 'Do this εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν, for My Commemoration, or in remembrance of Me.'" — JOSEPH MEDE, book ii. ch. 9, p. 376, ed. 1672.

mind to whom these commands were delivered. They were not given to the multitude, or to the disciples generally, but to His Apostles, whom He now appoints to consecrate His Body and His Blood, and to offer His Memorial.

That this was the interpretation of our Saviour's words in the Institution of the Eucharist, which was received by the Church from the first, both as regards the Sacrament, the Sacrifice, and the Commission given to the Apostles, is evident from the direct statements of individual Fathers,* from the Liturgies which embodied the form of the Church's worship from the time of the Apostles, from those usages which were coeval with Christianity, from the importance which from the first was attached to the act of Consecration, and from the belief that the Consecration itself could not be effected except by those to whom a specific commission had been transmitted.

According to the ritual of the Passover the singing of the remaining Psalms of the Hallel, cxv. cxvi. cxvii. cxviii.,

* Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 30; vol. viii. p. 487.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxxxvi. vol. i. p. 262.

* Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxvii. p. 539. [Archbp.

This is My Body.—In the following extracts the author shows that this interpretation was universally received in the Early Church, so much so that some of their chief arguments in favour of the truth and reality of the Incarnation were drawn from it.

"The leading principles of the Early Church were its worship of the God-man, its belief in His real presence in the Holy Eucharist, in the powers of the priesthood, and in the efficacy of consecration. These, and similar facts, were built up into that intellectual system of doctrines which we call the Creeds. The work was one which it cost nearly five centuries to complete, and its last act was to guard against those two opposing heresies of Nestorius and Eutyches, by which our Lord's Incarnation was directly attacked. Hence it became necessary for the defenders of the faith to direct their special attention to this doctrine; to show the relation which our Lord's manhood bore to His divine nature, and that He had vouchsafed to make it the very instrument of that great work which He is pleased to effect in the Holy Eucharist. This was the line of argument adopted by S. Cyril; and, in consequence, he was led to dwell upon the relation between the Holy Eucharist and the doctrine of the Incarnation, more fully than any other Father. The best answer to the Nestorians, who denied that our Lord's Body was the Body of God, was the admitted fact, that it was the principle of life, as bestowed in the Holy Eucharist. And S. Cyril's arguments on this subject were so completely built upon the practice of the four preceding centuries, and were so heartily adopted by the Church in her most numerous Councils, that to reject them would be to take up arms against all Catholic antiquity."—R. I. WILBERFORCE, 'On the Holy Eucharist,' p. 106.

"To connect the doctrine of the Holy Eucharist with the fact of the Incarnation, was the universal practice of the ancient Church. We see it as early as S. Ignatius and Justin Martyr, in the age which directly followed the Apostles. S. Ignatius (Ad Smyrnaeos, vii.; page 104, Hefele) complains that the Docetæ 'kept aloof from the Holy Eucharist, because they would not confess the Eucharist to be the Flesh of our Saviour Jesus Christ, which suffered for our sins.' Justin Martyr (Apolog. i., sect. 98; page 96, Thirlby) founds the belief that the food which we receive in the Holy Eucharist is 'not common bread and common drink,' but 'the Flesh and Blood of the Incarnate Jesus,' on the fact that He 'has taken Flesh and Blood for our salvation.' To pass to a later but a high authority, S. Cyril (Hardwin, i. 1289: see also Cyril, op. vol. ix. p. 312, would follow the drinking of the fourth cup of wine. As Jesus used the fourth cup of wine, or the cup of the Hallel, for the consecration of His Blood, the singing of the hymn or Psalms would probably follow immediately after. S. John alone says that Judas left the room before the rest; but as this Evangelist does not relate the Institution of the Eucharist, we have no information whether Judas departed before the singing of the Psalms or after. After his departure Jesus delivered to the remaining eleven disciples the discourse and the prayer to the Father which S. John alone records, chapters xiv. xv. xvi. xvii.; and then Jesus and the eleven disciples leave the room together for the Mount of Olives.¹ On the way He again foretells that the rest would desert Him, while Peter would even deny Him. Others think that His instruction to His disciples and His prayer to the Father, as recorded by S. John, was delivered before they sang the hymn or Psalms.²

Archbp. Newcome, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 363.

Greswell, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 334.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, p. 150.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, p. 149.

Migne) says in the celebrated letter which introduced his anathemas, and which was sanctioned by the Council of Ephesus, 'We approach the Holy Eucharist and are sanctified, by becoming partakers of the sacred Flesh and the precious Blood of Christ, our common Saviour. Now we do this, not as though we received common flesh: God forbid. Nor yet as though that which we received belonged to a man who was sanctified, and who came in contact with the Word by oneness of excellence, or who received the Word as a divine indweller. But we receive it as truly life-giving, and as pertaining properly to the Word Himself. For as God He was naturally the principle of life; and since He has become one with His own Flesh, He has rendered it also life-giving.'—Ibid., p. 324.

"Respecting the Holy Eucharist, there existed no symptom of disagreement for eight centuries and a half. No doubt the received doctrine had been earlier disputed, but it was not by dissentients within the Church, but by external opponents. The Gnostics (S. Ignatius, ad Smyrn. vii.; page 104, Hefele), who denied that the Holy Eucharist was the Flesh of our Lord, cut themselves off in the second century from the Church; and the Messalian heretics (Theodoret, Hist. Eccl. iv. 10; vol. iii. p. 478), who denied that this sacred food was either beneficial or injurious, were cut off from it by its public sentence in the fourth. These external assaults throw greater light upon the unanimity which prevailed within. So that Paschasius is the first author who has ever been alleged to have introduced any doctrine which did not meet with universal approval; and the statements of earlier writers were admitted at the time to express the collective judgment of the whole community. Now those who look to the first Christians merely as witnesses, must allow that they were so far competent judges of the system which was delivered to them, that they could not all have been mistaken respecting its characteristic features. And those who take a higher view of the Church's judgment, and admit it to possess 'authority in controversies of faith,' cannot dispute its decision upon a point on which there was no dissension. For the eight centuries and a half which precede Paschasius, are those also which precede Photius; they are the period when the East and West were yet undivided, and when the Church could appeal with the fullest confidence to the promise of a supernatural guidance."—Ibid., p. 3.

CHRIST FORETELLS THAT PETER WOULD DENY HIM.

S. MATTHEW xvi. 30-35.

S. MARK xiv. 26-31.

S. LUKE xxii. 39, 31-34.

S. JOHN xiii. 36-38.

30 And when they had sung
an hymn,
they went out

into the Mount of Olives.

31 Then saith Jesus unto them,
All ye shall be offended
because of Me this night :

for it is written,
"I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad."

32 But after I am risen again,
I will go before you
into Galilee.

33 Peter answered
and said unto Him,
Though all men
shall be offended
because of Thee, yet will I never be offended.

34 Jesus said unto him,

Verily I say unto thee,
That this night,

before the cock crow,
thou shalt deny Me thrice.

35 Peter said unto Him,

Though I should die with Thee,
yet will I not deny Thee.

Likewise also said
all the disciples.

26 And when they had sung
an hymn,
they went out

into the Mount of Olives.

27 And Jesus saith unto them,
All ye shall be offended
because of Me this night :

for it is written,
"I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered."

28 But after that I am risen,
I will go before you
into Galilee.

29 But Peter
said unto Him,
Although all shall be offended, yet will I not I.

30 And Jesus saith unto him,

Verily I say unto thee,
That this day,
even in this night,

before the cock crow twice,
thou shalt deny Me thrice.

31 But he spake
the more vehemently,
If I should die with Thee,
I will not deny Thee in any wise.

Likewise also said
they all.

39 And

He came out,
and went, as He was wont,
to the Mount of Olives ;
and His disciples also followed Him.

31 And the Lord said, Simon,
Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat :

32 But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not : and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren.

33 And he said unto Him, Lord,
I am ready to go with Thee, both into prison, and to death.

34 And He said,

I tell thee, Peter,
the cock shall not crow
this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest Me.

36 Simon Peter said unto Him,
Lord, whither goest Thou? Jesus answered him, Whither I go, thou canst not follow Me now ; but thou shalt follow Me afterwards.

37 Peter said unto Him, Lord, why cannot I follow Thee now?
I will lay down my life for Thy sake.

38 Jesus answered him,
Wilt thou lay down thy life for My sake?

Verily, verily, I say unto thee,
The cock shall not crow,

till thou hast denied Me thrice.

30. And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the Mount of Olives.

Margin, Psalm.

31. Then saith Jesus unto them, All ye shall be offended because of Me this night : for it is written,

"I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad."

32. But after I am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee.

33. Peter answered and said unto Him, Though all men shall be offended because of Thee, yet will I never be offended.

S.V.A. unto Him, if (S^c. omits It) all: S.V.A. because of Thee, I will never.
Vulg. Respondens autem Petrus, ait illi: Et si omnes scandalizati fuerint in te, ego nunquam scandalizabor.

34. Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this night, before the cock crow,^a thou shalt deny Me thrice.

35. Peter said unto Him, Though I should die with Thee, yet will I not deny Thee. Likewise also said all the disciples.

To encourage them under their trial Jesus again foretells His Resurrection. He also implies that, though they should all fail under their trial, it would only be for a time, and not from want of love to Him, but through fear for their lives. In the words of Zechariah (xiii. 7) He describes His own Death and their desertion of Him; that He will rise again, and as their Shepherd will go before them to lead them (προδξω) into Galilee; and that they, in spite of their temporary desertion of Him, will as His sheep again follow Him. Peter, trusting too much to his own feeling of entire devotion to Jesus, and believing that His words were dictated rather by fear for him than by certain knowledge, scorns the very idea of ever deserting Him. But Jesus teaches him that as his presumption is greater than that of the other disciples, so his fall should be in like proportion; that the rest should desert Him, but that Peter should deny that he knew Him, and that this should take place that very night, even before the morning cock-crowing.

Cocks were forbidden to be kept in Jerusalem by the Jewish traditional law; but whether this prohibition was strictly observed by the Jews themselves or not, it would not prevent the Roman soldiers from keeping them: for the passion for keeping cocks for fighting was very strong both among the Greeks and the Romans.

Cocks are in the habit of crowing twice—at midnight and again at early dawn. When only one time is referred to, the second or morning crowing is always meant. S. Matthew and S. Mark represent Jesus as foretelling the same events, Peter's three denials of Him, by different expressions. S. Mark's expression is the more minute and accurate: he says that Peter should deny Jesus thrice before the cock crow twice; that is, at midnight and again in the morning. S. Matthew says that Peter should deny Jesus thrice before the cock crow; that is, in the early morning.¹

Gardens were not allowed in Jerusalem itself on account of the stench that might arise from any decayed vegetable matter, or from the manure. Josephus² incidentally mentions that it was the common practice to plant gardens with trenches up to the very walls of the city. At the foot of the Mount of Olives, on the side towards the city, there lay a garden, the nature of which is indicated by its name, Gethsemane, or oil presses. As its name denotes, this garden was planted with Olives, and for the sake of the oil which the olive yields. To reach this Jesus and His disciples now cross the brook Cedron.

See also S. John, chapter xviii. 1-3.

THE AGONY IN GETHSEMANE.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 36-39.

S. MARK xiv. 32-36.

S. LUKE xxii. 40-44.

S. JOHN xviii. 1.

36 Then cometh Jesus with them

32 And they came

1 He went forth with His disciples over the brook Cedron, unto a place called Gethsemane, to a place which was named Gethsemane:

where was a garden, into the which He entered, and His disciples.

40 And when He was at the place,

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxiii. p. 481.

Maldenatus, in Matt. xxvi. 34; vol. i. p. 412.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 34; vol. viii. p. 489.

² Josephus, Bell. Jud. v. 2, 2.

Whiston's Trans., Wars, v. 2, 2, p. 710.

^a Before the cock crow.—“You may wonder that a dunghill cock should be found at Jerusalem, when it is forbid by the canons that any cocks should be kept there. ‘They do not keep cocks at Jerusalem upon account of the holy things. Nor do the priests keep them throughout all the land of Israel.’ The Gloss gives the reason: ‘Even Israelites are forbid to keep cocks at Jerusalem, because of the holy things: for Israelites have eaten there peace-offerings and thank-offerings: but now it is the custom of dung-hill cocks to turn over dunghills, where perhaps they might find creeping things, that might pollute those holy things that are to be eaten.’ (Bava Kama vii.) By what means and under what pretence the canon was dispensed with, we do not dispute. ‘Tis certain there were cocks at Jerusalem, as well as at other places. And memorable is the story of a cock which was stoned by the sentence of the Council (Jerus. Erubhin, xxvi. 1), for having killed a little child.’—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxvi. 34; vol. ii. p. 262.

S. MATTHEW xxvi.

and saith
unto the disciples,

Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder.

37 And He took with Him
Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy.

38 Then saith He unto them,
My soul is exceeding sorrowful,
even unto death:
tarry ye here,
and watch with Me.

39 And He went a little farther, and fell on His face,

and prayed,
saying,

O My Father,
if it be possible,
let this cup pass
from Me:
nevertheless not as I will,
but as Thou wilt.

S. MARK xiv.

and He saith
to His disciples,

Sit ye here, while I shall pray.

33 And He taketh with Him
Peter and James and John,
and began to be sore amazed,
and to be very heavy;

34 and saith unto them,
My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death:
tarry ye here,
and watch,

35 And He went forward
a little,

and fell on the ground,
and prayed
that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from Him.

36 And He said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto Thee;

take away this cup
from Me:

nevertheless not what I will,
but what Thou wilt.

S. LUKE xxii.

He said
unto them,
Pray that ye enter not into temptation.

41 And He was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down,

42 and prayed,
saying,

Father,
if Thou be willing,
remove this cup
from Me:
nevertheless not My will,
but Thine, be done.

43 And there appeared an angel unto Him from heaven, strengthening Him.

44 And being in an agony He prayed more earnestly: and His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.

36. ¶ Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place^a called Gethsemane,^b and saith unto the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder.

S.V.A. Gethsemani: S.A. unto His disciples: S. omits here.
Vulg. Hunc venit Iesus eum itis in villam quæ dicitur Gethsemani, et dixit discipulis suis: Sedete hic donec vadam illuc et orem.

37. And He took with Him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy.

38. Then saith He unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with Me.

Vulg. sustinete hic, et vigilate mecum.

39. And He went a little farther, and fell on His face, and prayed, saying, O My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me:^c nevertheless not as I will, but as Thou wilt.

^a A place called Gethsemane.—“The Greek is not γέσπος but γέσπεον, not a place but ‘a parcel of ground’ (as it is rendered in John iv. 5), an enclosure, a field or garden, and thus corresponds more closely to κήπος, by which S. John describes the same locality, though without mentioning the name (xviii. 1).”—CANON LIGHT-FOOT, ‘On the Revision of the New Test.’, p. 144.

^b Gethsemane.—“The place of olive-presses at the foot of Mount Olivet. In John, it is a garden beyond Kidron. ‘They do not make gardens or paradises in Jerusalem because of the stench’ (Bava Kama vii.) The Gloss, ‘because of the stench that ariseth from the weeds which are thrown out: besides, it is the custom to dig gardens, and thence comes a stench.’ Upon this account, there were no gardens in the city, some few gardens of roses excepted, which had been so from the days of the prophets, but all were without the walls, especially at the foot of Olivet.”—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxvi. 36; vol. ii. p. 262.

^c O My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me.—“To what intent was His prayer, which plainly testifieth so great willingness to avoid death? Will, whether it be in God or man, belongeth to the essence and nature of both. The nature therefore of God being one, there are not in God divers wills although God-head be in divers persons, because the power of willing is a natural not a personal propriety. Contrariwise, the Person of our Saviour Christ being but one, there are in Him two wills, because two natures, the nature of God and the nature of man, which both do imply this faculty and power. So that in Christ there is a divine

To fathom the Agony in the garden¹ is beyond the power of man, but we may gather somewhat of its nature from the various expressions which the Evangelists make use of in describing it. S. John does not record the Agony in the garden, but the other three Evangelists relate it, and they all bear testimony that Jesus went to the garden voluntarily, without any external compulsion; that when there He evinced the utmost dread and horror that human nature was capable of, with the most perfect resignation to the will of God. Leaving the other disciples, He takes with Him the same three who had already been witnesses of His Transfiguration, and withdraws to a more retired part of the garden. S. Matthew says that He began to be sorrowful and very heavy (Ἀνείσθα καὶ ἀδμονεύει); and S. Mark, to be sore amazed and to be very heavy (ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι καὶ ἀδμονεύει). They both record His saying that His soul "is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death," and also His prayer that, if it were possible, the cup might be removed from Him, but that the will of the Father, and not His, should be done. S. Luke also adds that there appeared an angel unto Him from heaven, strengthening Him.

Thus for the first time we see Jesus shrinking from the appointed cup, shrinking from it and yet willingly accepting it, and we naturally ask, how was this? what caused this excessive sorrow and heaviness and dread in the soul of Jesus? Several explanations have been given of it. Some have supposed that this was the natural shrinking of human nature from the Death of shame and suffering which He saw and there is a human will, otherwise He were not both God and man. Hereupon the Church hath of old condemned Monothelites as heretics, for holding that Christ had but one will. The works and operations of our Saviour's human will were all subject to the will of God, and framed according to His law, 'I desired to do Thy will, O God, and Thy law is within Mine heart.'

¹ See S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quæst. 46; vol. iv. pp. 415-435.

"Now as man's will so the will of Christ hath two several kinds of operation, the one natural or necessary, whereby it desireth simply whatsoever is good in itself, and shunneth as generally all things which hurt; the other deliberate, when we therefore embrace things as good, because the eye of understanding judgeth them good to that end which we simply desire. Thus in itself we desire health, physic only for health's sake. And in this sort special reason oftentimes causeth the will by choice to prefer one good thing before another, to leave one for another's sake, to forego manner for the attainment of higher desires, which our Saviour likewise did.

"These different inclinations of the will considered, the reason is easy how in Christ there might grow desires seeming but being not indeed opposite, either the one of them unto the other, or either of them to the will of God. For let the manner of His speech be weighed, 'My soul is now troubled, and what should I say? Father, save Me out of this hour. But yet for this very cause am I come into this hour.' His purpose herein was most effectually to propose to the view of the whole world two contrary objects, the like whereunto in force and efficacy were never presented in that manner to any but only to the soul of Christ. There was presented before His eyes in that fearful hour on the one side God's heavy indignation and wrath towards mankind as yet unrepented, death as yet in full strength, hell as yet never mastered by any that came within the confines and bounds thereof, somewhat also peradventure more than is either possible or needful for the wit of man to find out, finally Himself flesh and blood left alone to enter into conflict with all these; on the other side, a world to be saved by one, a pacification of wrath through the dignity of that sacrifice which should be offered, a conquest over death through the power of that Deity which would not suffer the tabernacle thereof to see corruption, and an utter disappointment of all the forces of infernal powers, through the purity of that soul which they should have in their hands and not be able to touch. Let no man marvel that in this case the soul of Christ was much troubled. For what could such apprehensions breed but (as their nature is) inexplicable passions of mind, desires abhorring what they embrace, and embracing what they abhor? In which agony how should the tongue go about to express what the soul endured? When the griefs of Job were exceeding great, his words accordingly to open them were many; howbeit, still unto his seeming they were undiscovered: 'Though my talk (saith Job) be this day in bitterness, yet my plague is greater than my groaning' (xxiii. 2). But here to what purpose should words serve, when nature hath more to declare than groans and strong cries, more than streams of bloody sweats, more than His doubled and tripled prayers can express, who thrice putting forth His hand to receive that cup, besides which there was no other cause of His coming into the world. He thrice putteth it back again, and as often even with tears of blood craveth, 'If it be possible, O Father: or if not, even what Thine own good pleasure is,' for whose sake the passion that hath in it a bitter and a bloody conflict even with wrath and death and hell is most welcome.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxvii. p. 541.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. .xxvi. 37; vol. viii. p. 490.

"Whereas therefore we find in God a will resolved that Christ shall suffer; and in the human will of Christ two actual desires, the one avoiding, and the other accepting death; is that desire which first declared itself by prayer against that wherewith He concludeth prayer, or either of them against His mind to whom prayer in this case seeketh? We may judge of these diversities in the will, by the like in the understanding. For as the intellectual part doth not cross itself by conceiving man to be just and unjust when it meaneth not the same man, nor by imagining the same man learned and unlearned, if learned in one skill, and in another kind of learning unskilful, because the parts of every true opposition do always both concern the same subject, and have reference to the same thing, with otherwise they are but in show opposite and not in truth: so the will about one and the same thing may in contrary respects have contrary inclinations, and that without contrariety. The minister of justice may, for public example to others, virtuously will the execution of that party, whose pardon another for consanguinity's sake as virtuously may desire. Consider death in itself, and nature teacheth Christ to shun it; consider death as a mean to procure the salvation of the world, and mercy worketh in Christ all willingness of mind towards it. Therefore in these two desires there can be no repugnant opposition. Again, compare them with the will of God, and if any opposition be, it must be only between His appointment of Christ's death, and the former desire which wisheth deliverance from death. But neither is this desire opposite to the will of God. The will of God was that Christ should suffer the pains of death. Not so His will, as if the torment of innocence did in itself please and delight God, but such was His will in regard of the end whereunto it was necessary that Christ should suffer. The death of Christ in itself therefore God willeth not, which to the end we might thereby obtain life He both alloweth and appointeth. In like manner the Son of Man endureth willingly to that purpose those grievous pains, which simply not to have shunned had been against nature, and by consequent against God."—HOOKER, Eccles. Polit. v. xlviii. 9; vol. ii. p. 206.

close at hand. Others have supposed that it was the heinous nature of sin that so overwhelmed Him; that His sorrow arose not so much from the effect of their sins as causing suffering to Himself as from their commission as an offence against God; and that the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world, had, in some way unknown to us and beyond our capacities, to bear the full weight, the natural effect, of sin on the soul. Others have supposed that this great sorrow and dread was the effect of a personal conflict with Satan.

Though this sorrow in the soul of Jesus, even unto death, may be a mystery too deep for us to search into, two reflections may help us to understand somewhat of its cause.

First, Satan was now permitted to use his whole power against Jesus. This was the hour for the power of darkness (S. Luke xxii. 53). In the end of the Temptation in the wilderness, the devil departed from Jesus for a season (S. Luke iv. 13); now is the time when the devil returns (S. John xiv. 30) and uses his utmost power and violence against Him. In the Temptation in the wilderness Satan had tempted Jesus by suggesting rebellious thoughts and unlawful modes of action; now he tempts Him by filling His soul with sorrow and dejection and despair, almost unto death.

Secondly, Satan is a being of supernatural power; and though Jesus is so too, and as God and Man was more than a match for Satan, yet it may be that it was part of the economy of Salvation that Jesus in His conflict with Satan should conquer him as Man,—that, both in the Agony in the garden and in the Temptation in the wilderness, Jesus should overcome Satan, not by His Divine power, but by the power which he possessed as Man, and by such external spiritual aid as will be vouchsafed to every man. The only means for gaining the victory over Satan which Jesus is represented as using in the conflict in Gethsemane is prayer to the Father. The intensity of the struggle is evidenced by the words, “being in an agony He prayed more earnestly (ἐκτενέστερον προσεύχεται): and His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground” (S. Luke xxii. 44). So in the Temptation in the wilderness Jesus overcame Satan after He had used the means by which other men are enabled to overcome him. It was after His Baptism, after the Holy Spirit in the form of a Dove had descended upon Him, after He had been in retirement, fasting and praying for forty days.

Once before the cause of mankind had been at stake, in the garden of Eden. Then the conflict was between man and Satan, and man’s cause was lost. Now again, in Gethsemane, man’s cause is being fought, and the enemy is again supernatural and brings his utmost power to the conflict; and it may be that it was God’s will that the victory should be won by Man, not by His Divine power, but by the power which belongs to human nature, together with such external spiritual aid as every son of Adam may receive in temptation through prayer to God.

An angel from heaven appeared to Jesus (ἄγγελος δὲ αὐτῷ) strengthening Him.* The appearance of the angel was a pledge that an angel from heaven will be sent to every man

* An angel from heaven strengthening Him.—I. In His temptations in the wilderness there was no angel by Him, for S. Matthew saith (iv. 11): ‘Then the devil leaveth Him, and behold angels came and ministered unto Him;’ that is, not till the devil had first left Him. But in the midst of this trial, there was an angel strengthening Him; and why so? By reason of His agony, you will say, and that very truly. But whence arose this agony, and of what kind was it? It was occasioned (you will say) from a sense of Divine indignation and wrath. This dare not I say, or imagine, that God was angry, or conceived any indignation against Him at all. And if the anguish and agony of His mind was the result of the Divine wrath pressing in upon Him, I do not see what kind of comfort an angel could minister against the wrath of God. It is rather an argument God was not angry with Him, when He sent an angel to comfort Him.

“II. It is not to be doubted but that Christ was now wrestling with a furious, enraged devil; yea, a devil loosed from his chain, and permitted without any check or restraint from Divine Providence to exert all his force and rage against Him. Which was permitted by God, not from any displeasure against His Son, but that even human nature might, by this her combatant, get a conquest over this insulting enemy. For it had been a small thing to have vanquished the devil by mere Divine power.

“III. However therefore it is not here related in express terms, yet could I easily persuade myself that the devil might at this time appear to our Saviour in some visible shape. When he tempted Him in the wilderness, he put on the disguise of some good angel, or rather some kind of resemblance of the Holy Ghost. But in this last temptation he puts on himself, and appears in his own colours, viz. in some direful formidable figure, on purpose to terrify our Lord. And from hence it was that ἡγόρατο ἐκθαμβήσθαι καὶ ἀδυναμεῖν, ‘He began to be sore amazed and to be very heavy;’ Mark xiv. 33, and here γινεσθαι ἐν ἀγωνίᾳ, ‘to be in an agony.’ Nor do I rashly, and without any ground suppose this, but upon these reasons:

“1. Whereas that old dragon assaulted the first Adam in a garden in a visible shape, it is not absurd to imagine he did so now to the second Adam in a garden, in a visible shape.

“2. This our Evangelist tells us concerning His temptation in the wilderness, that ‘when the devil had ended all the temptation he departed from Him ἄχρι καιρῶ, for a season’ (Matt. iv. 13). Here he takes the season to return (John xiv. 30), and I see no reason why he should not at this time, as well as in the wilderness, assume some visible shape. Then indeed he addressed himself in a charming and grateful shape to have enticed and deceived Him; but now, in a frightful and horrid one, to have amazed and terrified Him. He had already experienced how vain a thing it was to go about to cheat and allure Him: what remained, therefore, but to shake His mind (if possible) with fright and terror?

“3. For when he had no greater invention in his whole storehouse, by which he could distress and shake the minds of mortals, than the horrid apparition of himself, none will conceive he would neglect this engine, that, if it could be, through His eye he might disturb His soul. That therefore which the Jews feign or dream about Solomon, that he saw the angel of death, that is, the devil, gnashing his teeth, and that a disciple of Rabbi did so too (Jerusal. Kilaim xxxii. 2), I suppose acted in good earnest here; namely, that Christ saw the devil, that old dragon, gaping at Him, with all horror he could put on. And in this sense would I understand that of the messenger of Satan buffeting the Apostle (2 Cor. xii.), viz., that the devil did appear visibly to him in some frightful shape to afflict and terrify him. And perhaps that vehement desire he had to sift the disciples (S. Luke xxii. 31) respects this same thing, namely, that he might be permitted to assault them with such kind of affrightments.”—LIGHTFOOT on Luke xxii. 43; vol. ii. p. 474.

to strengthen him in his prayer against the temptation of Satan, though he will not be seen. So in His Baptism the Holy Spirit was seen to rest upon Jesus. This the Church from the first has understood as a pledge that the Holy Spirit will be present, though not seen, at the baptism of all His sincere followers.

The fruits of His sorrow, the effects of His conflict with Satan in Gethsemane, was to bruise his head, as had been foretold from the first (Genesis iii. 15). Satan's power to tempt was henceforth diminished; it was maimed, but not destroyed. Never again would he have the power to assail man as he had afflicted Jesus.

In the midst of His Agony and prayer to the Father Jesus comes to His disciples, either to seek from them that sympathy which human nature craves in distress, or to impart to them some share in His strength against temptation.

JESUS COMETH TO HIS DISCIPLES.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 40-46.

S. MARK xiv. 37-42.

S. LUKE xxii. 45, 46.

(The first time.)

40 And He cometh
unto the disciples,
and findeth them asleep,

and saith unto Peter,

What, could ye not watch with Me one hour?
41 Watch and pray,
that ye enter not into temptation:
the spirit indeed is willing,
but the flesh is weak.
42 He went away again
the second time,
and prayed,

saying,
O My Father, if this cup
may not pass away from Me, except I drink it,
Thy will be done.

37 And He cometh,
and findeth them sleeping,

and saith unto Peter,
Simon, sleepest thou?
couldst not thou watch
one hour?
38 Watch ye and pray,
lest ye enter into temptation.
The spirit truly is ready,
but the flesh is weak.
39 And again He went away,

and prayed,
and spake the same words.

45 And when He rose up from prayer, and was come
to His disciples,
He found them sleeping
for sorrow,
46 and said unto them,
Why sleep ye?

rise and pray,
lest ye enter into temptation.

(The second time.)

43 And He came and found them asleep again:
for their eyes were heavy.
44 And He left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, saying the same words.

40 And when He returned,
He found them asleep again,
(for their eyes were heavy,) neither wist they what to answer Him.

(The third time.)

45 Then cometh He
to His disciples,
and saith unto them,
Sleep on now, and take your rest:

behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.
46 Rise, let us be going:
behold, he is at hand that doth betray Me.

41 And He cometh
the third time,

and saith unto them,
Sleep on now, and take your rest:
it is enough,
the hour is come;
behold, the Son of Man is betrayed
into the hands of sinners.
42 Rise up, let us go;
lo, he that betrayeth Me is at hand.

40. And He cometh unto the disciples, and findeth them asleep, and saith unto Peter, What, could ye not watch with Me one hour?

41. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.

42. He went away again the second time, and prayed, saying, O My Father, if this cup may not pass away from Me, except I drink it, Thy will be done.

V. omits saying: S.V.A. omits cup: S.V. omits from Me.
Vulg. Iterum secundo abiit, et oravit, dicens: Pater mi, si non potest hic calix transire nisi lobum illum, fiat voluntas tua.

Both S. Matthew and S. Mark represent Jesus on His return to His three disciples addressing Peter, and S. Mark records His rebuke as if it were addressed to Peter only, while S. Matthew extends it to all the three. As first and the most prominent in his protestations of devotion to Jesus, and yet as failing equally with the rest through bodily weariness, it was not unnatural that Peter should receive a special rebuke. But the rebuke which Jesus administers to them is so full of love, that it is an apology for them rather than a rebuke, and forms the ground of watchfulness for the future rather than of regret for the past. He acknowledges that their intention was to have watched with Him, and that their failure arose from the weakness of the body, and not from any want of will; and He prescribes two remedies to be used against all temptations,—namely, watchfulness and prayer.

It has been observed¹ that there is a difference between “to be tempted” and “to enter into temptation” (εἰσέρχασθαι εἰς πειρασμόν), and that the latter expression implies a giving rise to the temptation, or a certain amount of concurrence with the temptation, which may eventually end in yielding to it. A man may be tempted by the disposition of Providence: he may enter into temptation through his own previous want of care.

43. And He came and found them asleep again for their eyes were heavy.

S.V. And He came again and found them asleep.
Vulg. Et venit iterum, et invenit eos dormientes.

44. And He left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, saying the same words.

A. omits the third time: S. the same words again.
Vulg. Et relicto illis, iterum abiit, et oravit tertio, eundem sermonem dicens.

¹ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 41; vol. i. p. 419.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 41; vol. viii. p. 494.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cxxvii. p. 545.

³ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 38; vol. i. p. 415.

⁴ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxvii. p. 544.

⁵ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 44; vol. i. p. 420. [Cornelius

* His sweat was as it were great drops of blood.—“Diodorus Siculus, speaking of a country where Alexander the Great had to do with Porus, hath this passage (lib. xvii. p. 560). ‘There are serpents there οἱ διὰ τῶν δηνυμάτων ὀφείσι θανάτου ἀπειργάζοντο. Τῶν δὲ πλῆθεινα τῶνοι δεινὸν συνέχον καὶ ὅντις ἰδρώτος αἱματωδοῦς κατείχε, which by their bites would occasion most bitter

45. Then cometh He to His disciples, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

S.V.A. to the disciples: V. for behold the hour.
Vulg. Tunc venit ad discipulos suos, et dicit illis: Dormite jam, et requiescite: ecce appropinquavit hora, et Filius hominis tradetur in manus peccatorum.

46. Rise, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray Me.

Vulg. Surgite, eamus: ecce appropinquavit qui Me tradet.

S. Matthew and S. Mark relate that Jesus came to the disciples Peter, James, and John, three separate times; and that on each occasion He found them asleep, and that, after the first and second time, He returned to renew His prayer to the Father, saying the same words. St. Luke condenses his account of the three visits into one.

S. Luke's words, “His sweat was as it were great drops of blood * falling down to the ground,” are descriptive of a real fact, and are not to be understood as used in a hyperbolic sense and so explained away as an exaggeration of language. The Evangelist intends to record that such was the intensity of His feelings in the Agony that blood flowed from Him to the ground in the place of sweat.²

Some have supposed that the angel appeared to Jesus to comfort Him in each of His three prayers. The most probable opinion is, that the angel comforted Him in His last prayer only,³ and that this was in answer to His persevering prayer and Agony, and that after He had received this external comfort Jesus laid aside His sorrow and resumed His former cheerfulness of demeanour, and returned to the disciples to prepare them for the coming of the traitor with his band of men and officers. He bids them sleep on and take their rest.

Some⁴ think that Jesus uttered the words “Sleep on now, and take your rest,” as if to imply that they had missed the time of watching, and that it now mattered little what they did; others⁵ that He advised them to sleep on and take the rest which the natural weakness of the body rendered necessary as a preparation for the scene which is soon to follow.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 45; vol. viii. p. 495.

⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxxiii.; vol. ii. p. 475.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxvi. 45; vol. i. p. 150.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxvi. 45; vol. ii. p. 1049.

⁵ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 4; vol. iii. p. 1165.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxvi. 45; vol. iii. p. 116.

deaths: they are horrible pains, that afflict any that are struck by them, and an issue of sweat like blood seizeth them.’ I would ascribe this bloody sweat of our Saviour to the bite of that old Serpent, rather than to the apprehension of Divine wrath.”—LIGHT-FOOT on Luke xlii. 44; vol. ii. p. 475.

THE BETRAYAL.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 47-50.S. MARK xiv. 43-46.S. LUKE xxiii. 47, 48.S. JOHN xviii. 2-9.

2 And Judas also, which betrayed Him, knew the place: for Jesus oftentimes resorted thither with His disciples.

3 Judas then, having received a band of men and officers from the chief priests and Pharisees, cometh thither with lanterns and torches and weapons.

47 And while He yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people.

48 Now he that betrayed Him gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is He: hold Him fast.

49 And forthwith he came to Jesus,

and said,
Hail, Master;
and kissed Him.
50 And Jesus said unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come?

43 And immediately, while He yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and the scribes and the elders.

44 And he that betrayed Him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is He; take Him, and lead Him away safely.
45 And as soon as he was come, he goeth straightway to Him,

and saith,
Master, Master;
and kissed Him.

47 And while He yet spake, behold a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jesus to kiss Him.

48 But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss?

4 Jesus therefore, knowing all things that should come upon Him, went forth, and said unto them, Whom seek ye?

5 They answered Him, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am He. And Judas also, which betrayed Him, stood with them.

6 As soon then as He had said unto them, I am He, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

7 Then asked He them again, Whom seek ye? And they said, Jesus of Nazareth.

8 Jesus answered, I have told you that I am He: if therefore ye seek Me, let these go their way:

9 That the saying might be fulfilled, which He spake, Of them which Thou gavest Me have I lost none.

Then came they, and laid hands on Jesus, and took Him.

46 And they laid their hands on Him, and took Him.

47. ¶ And while He yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people.

Vulg. missi a principibus sacerdotum et senioribus populi.

48. Now he that betrayed Him gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is He; hold Him fast.

49. And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, Master; and kissed Him.^a

50. And Jesus said unto him, Friend,^b wherefore art thou come?^c Then came they, and laid hands on Jesus, and took Him.

S. But He said unto him.

Vulg. Dixitque illi Jesus: Amice, ad quid venisti?

S. John relates that Judas had received through the chief priests a band consisting of their own servants and of Roman soldiers and officers. He had left Jesus and His disciples in the Upper Room, and it is not improbable that he went there first, and, not finding Him, then went to the garden of Gethsemane, as the next most likely place. S. John gives the reason why Judas expected to find Him in the garden: "For Jesus oftentimes resorted thither with His disciples."

It would appear that the money, the thirty pieces of silver, had not been already paid to Judas, but had been promised to him only on the condition that he should succeed in delivering Jesus into their hands, and that he was exceedingly anxious to secure this. The sign by which he had undertaken to point out Jesus to the soldiers, who may not have seen Him before, or who might not recognize Him in the darkness and among the number of the disciples, was a kiss, the usual greeting by which they were accustomed to salute their Master on their return to Him after some absence. S. John has recorded a different part of this transaction from the other three Evangelists, but their accounts are perfectly consistent with each other. The only difficulty is, which occurred first?

The following has been accepted as a probable arrangement of the various accounts.¹ Judas advancing a little ahead of the band which he had brought with him, in order that he might not appear to belong to them, comes forward to kiss Jesus, who receives the kiss with the words, "Friend, wherefore art thou come?" and as Luke adds, "Judas, betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss?" Judas, knowing that he was discovered, steps back to the men again. Jesus then advances to the band and asks, Whom seek they? On His reply, "I am He," they are struck by some superhuman awe and terror, and fall to the ground. Though in the very presence of Him whom they sought, they are unable to execute their commission until they have received His express permission so to do. When the soldiers begin to lay their hands on Him, some of His disciples ask, "Lord, shall we smite with the sword?" while Peter, with the eager energy which was always characteristic of him, strikes without waiting for His answer.

It is not easy to see what is the exact drift of the words which Judas spake to the men whom he brought with him, "hold Him fast," or "take Him, and lead Him away safely" (κρατήσατε αὐτόν, καὶ ἀπαγάγετε ἀσφαλώς). It may be that his avarice had so far blinded his eyes that he forgot the power of Jesus, and thought that now that he had pointed Him out to the soldiers, nothing more was required to accomplish His capture; or these words may have been intended as a caution to them, to warn them to beware and use their utmost skill and care, otherwise He would even yet elude the grasp of His enemies, as He had already done on several former occasions.

Though Jesus did not resist their attempt to take Him, He showed that He had the power to do so. He showed this in several ways: First, in so restraining their power that, though they had come for the very purpose of apprehending Him, they were powerless to lay hands on Him until He had willingly offered Himself to them, and had twice declared that He was Jesus of Nazareth, whom they sought;² secondly, in filling them with such terror by His presence, that at His

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 5; vol. iii. p. 1166.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxviii. p. 548.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xvi. 59; vol. i. p. 423.

[Cornelius

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvi. 50; vol. viii. p. 497.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xviii. 4-6.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xviii. 4-6; vol. vii. p. 581.

^a Whomsoever I shall kiss, . . . and kissed Him.—"Would it not be possible to find some rendering which, without any shock to good taste, would yet distinguish between φιλεῖν and καταφιλεῖν in such passages as Matt. xxvi. 48, 49, ὃν ἐν φίλῳ αὐτὸς ἐστίν . . . καὶ καταφίλησεν αὐτόν, and Luke vii. 45, 46, φίλημά μοι οὐκ ἔδωκας, αὕτη δὲ . . . οὐ διέλειπεν καταφιλοῦσα τοὺς πόδας μου, so as to bring out the extravagance of the treachery in the one case and the depth of the devotion in the other, implied in the strong compound καταφιλεῖν?"—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of N. T.', p. 69.

^b Friend.—The rendering of 'friend,' addressed by our Lord to Judas, is not to our mind altogether satisfactory. We much prefer the first sense of the word, companion or follower (ἑταίρε). This term occurs four times, and only in S. Matthew, where 'fellow' suits every case. In S. Matt. xi. 16, the majority of translators, with the Authorized Version, render it 'fellows.' Ammonius, in his Synonyms, expressly tells us that ἑταῖρος, in the Hellenistic Greek, by no means signifies a friend (οὐ πάντως φίλος), but a fellow. In Homer the word meant a fellow-slave, as well as a companion in arms. Its feminine form sank to the lowest level in marking females of the most degraded type, and the masculine (like our own 'fellow,' as if a form of fellow) appears to have become considerably degraded in later Greek, used as it was as a term of reproach and contempt.—The Church Quarterly Review, April 1876, p. 131.

^c Friend, wherefore art thou come? (ἑταίρε, εἰς ὃ πάρεσι).—The substitution of an interrogative for a relative is not warranted by New Testament usage, though here our translators are supported by many modern commentators; and the expression must be treated as an aposiopesis, Friend, do that for which thou art come. It may be compared with John xii. 27, ὁ ποτεῖς, ποιήσω τάχιστα.—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of N. T.', p. 128.

very words they fell to the ground, struck with fear for which no cause could be assigned.¹ He showed this, thirdly, in securing the escape of His eleven disciples;² and fourthly, in healing the ear of Malchus. By all these acts Jesus showed that He had the power to escape from His enemies, had He so willed it. Yet such was the hardness of their hearts that these exhibitions of superhuman power failed to convince them that Jesus was more than a mere man.

PETER CUTS OFF MALCHUS'S EAR.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 51-54.

S. MARK xiv. 47.

S. LUKE xxii. 49-51.

S. JOHN xviii. 10, 11.

51 And, behold, one of them which were with Jesus stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest's, and smote off his ear.

47 And one of them that stood by drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high priest, and cut off his ear.

49 When they which were about Him saw what would follow, they said unto Him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword?

50 And one of them — smote the servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear.

10 Then Simon Peter having a sword drew it, and smote the high priest's servant, and cut off his right ear.

The servant's name was Malchus.

52 Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.

51 And Jesus answered and said, Suffer ye thus far. And He touched his ear, and healed him.

11 Then said Jesus unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the sheath:

the cup which My Father hath given Me, shall I not drink it?

53 Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to My Father, and He shall presently give Me more than twelve legions of angels?

54 But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?

51. And, behold, one of them which were with Jesus stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest's, and smote off his ear.

V. which were with Him.
Vulg. Et ecce unus ex his qui erant cum Iesu.

52. Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.

53. Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to My Father, and He shall presently give Me more than twelve legions of angels?^a

S. V. omit now: S*. and He shall presently give Me here.
Vulg. An putas, quia non possum rogare Patrem meum, et exhibebit mihi modo plus quam duodecim legiones angelorum?

54. But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?

The cutting off the ear of Malchus, with its attendant circumstances, is a good example of the variations which the Evangelists show in their relation of the same event. All the four relate the cutting off the ear. S. Luke alone says that some of them asked permission to smite with the sword, which permission one of them anticipated. Three of the Evangelists, S. Matthew, S. Mark and S. Luke, merely state that he was a servant of the high priest; S. John alone says that his name was Malchus. Two, S. Matthew and S. Mark, say that he cut off his ear; and two, S. Luke and S. John, add that it was his right ear. Of the four S. Luke alone relates that Jesus touched his ear and healed it. S. Mark

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. tract. cxii. 3; vol. iii. p. 1931.
S. Leo Magnus, Sermo i. de Passione Domini; vol. i. p. 315.

² S. Augustine, in Joan. tract. cxii. 4; vol. iii. p. 1931.

^a Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to My Father, &c.—See note on Matt. xx. 23, p. 328.

and S. Luke omit the command of Jesus to Peter to put up his sword, with His reasons for this. Of the four reasons which Jesus gives, S. Matthew records three and S. John one.

These differences or variations in the relation of the same event, judged according to the usual rules of evidence, would be so far from detracting from the substantial truth of the narrative that they would rather establish it. Why they omit this and relate that, it may be sometimes impossible to see. Why, for instance, should the first three Evangelists omit the names of Peter who cut off the ear, and of Malchus whose ear was cut off? The reasons of prudence and of regard for his personal safety which might prevent them from publishing the name of Peter at that comparatively early period would have no force in the case of Malchus.

Peter's act could not be justified as necessary for their defence, and it was against the properly constituted authorities, though acting harshly, and, it may be, beyond their legal powers. Peter's act was one of rashness, done on the impulse of the moment, and calculated to produce bloodshed rather than to save life. As such Jesus first condemns it, as coming under the old law of bloodshed, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed" (Gen. ix. 6). To this law Jesus hereby gives His sanction and republishes

it. It would appear that by His words, "For all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword," He meant to state the punishment which, according to the Law, they deserved, not that which they should always actually receive.¹ He then removes Peter's act from under the jurisdiction of this law by restoring the ear to its former condition. He next shows that his act was superfluous: for, instead of being defended by a few feeble men, He had only to say the word and He would be defended by more than twelve legions of angels. This, reckoning the legion at 6,000, would give 72,000 angels for His defence; a limited number probably used for an unlimited. He then reminds them that His apprehension and Death are necessary for the fulfilment of the Scriptures which foretell these; and, lastly, that it would be unbecoming in Him, God and Man, to refuse the portion of suffering appointed by His Father.

Different opinions have been held as to what was the kind of sword with which Peter cut off the ear of Malchus. Some² have thought that it was the knife which they had lately used in the eating of the Paschal lamb; others³ that it was a military sword.

From His disciples Jesus turns to the multitude who came to apprehend Him.

JESUS REBUKES THOSE WHO APPREHEND HIM.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 55, 56.

S. MARK xiv. 48-52.

S. LUKE xxii. 52, 53.

55 In that same hour
said Jesus
to the multitudes,

48 And Jesus answered and said
unto them,

52 Then
Jesus said
unto the chief priests,
and captains of the Temple,
and the elders,
which were come to Him,
Be ye come out,
as against a thief,
with swords and staves?

Are ye come out
as against a thief
with swords and staves
for to take Me?

Are ye come out,
as against a thief,
with swords and with staves to take Me?

I sat daily with you teaching in the Temple, and ye laid no hold on Me.

49 I was daily with you in the Temple teaching, and ye took Me not:

53 When I was daily with you in the Temple, ye stretched forth
no hands against Me:
but this is your hour,
and the power of darkness.

56 But all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled.
Then all the disciples
forsook Him, and fled.

50 But the scriptures must be fulfilled.
And they all
forsook Him, and fled.

51 And there followed Him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body; and the young men laid hold on him:

52 And he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked.

¹ Theophylact, in Matt. xxvi. 52; vol. i. p. 151.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxvii. p. 550.
Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 52; vol. i. p. 424.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 52; vol. viii. p. 500.
² S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxxiv. vol. ii. p. 484.
Theophylact, in Matt. xxvi. 51; vol. i. p. 151.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxvii. p. 550.

³ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xviii. 10; vol. vii. p. 589.
Tertullian, de Idololatria, 19; vol. i. p. 691.
S. Augustine, contra Faustum, xxii. 70; vol. viii. p. 445.
S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvi. 52; vol. vii. p. 200.
Franciscus Lucas, in Matt. xxvi. 51; vol. i. p. 481.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 51; vol. viii. p. 499.

55. In that same hour said Jesus to the multitudes, Are ye come out as against a thief with swords and staves for to take Me? I sat daily with you teaching in the Temple, and ye laid no hold on Me.

S.V. omit with you.

Vulg. quotidie apud vos sedebam docens in Templo.

56. But all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the disciples forsook Him, and fled.

V. all His disciples.

Vulg. Tunc discipuli omnes, relicto eo, fugerunt.

Turning to the multitudes, Jesus points out the outrageous way in which they had acted. He taught them daily in the Temple, and they seek to take Him by night, and with swords and staves, as if He were a thief. He then adds that this was permitted them; that unusual licence was now given to them, and to the powers of darkness, in order that they might fulfil the Scriptures, and so carry out the will of God. S. Matthew does not, like S. Mark, represent Jesus as saying that they did this in order to fulfil the Scriptures, but he records them as his own words, using a form of expression which he had used at least nine other times in his Gospel.

It was now, after He had spoken these words to them, and not before, that they lay hands on Him and lead Him away. This is clearly the order, as we learn from S. Luke. S. Matthew, with his usual brevity of expression, and with his habit of relating things together which must have occurred at some little interval, has anticipated this (verse 50).

"Then all the disciples forsook Him, and fled," and to show that their fear of being taken, if they remained, was not groundless, S. Mark goes on to relate the case of a young man who had followed them, clothed only with an outer garment of linen,* and on whom the soldiers laid hands, and who, to save himself from capture, left the linen garment and fled.

Many conjectures have been hazarded as to who this young man was. Some² have held that it was James the Less; others³ that it was S. John the Evangelist, and others that it was the Evangelist S. Mark himself, but no clue whatever is given to lead to his name. Two explanations have been offered of the scantiness and peculiarity of his clothing. Some think that he had been roused from his bed by the noise of the passers-by, and followed them, having in his haste thrown on an outer garment only, the Talith or Sindon; others that he was one of the religious rigorists that were not uncommon at that time, who, by a system of hard diet and spare clothing, sought to subdue the passions of the body. Nothing is said either of his motives, whether he followed from attachment to Jesus, or out of mere curiosity to see what was going on.

That the young man here mentioned could not be either S. John or any other of the Apostles⁴ has been almost conclusively shown by two considerations:—1. Because the term "young man" (νεανίας) could not be applied to any one of the Apostles: for S. John, the youngest of the Apostles, must have been at this time at least thirty years of age. This is rendered certain both from his age at the time of his death, and also from the great improbability there is that our Saviour would have sent him to preach the Gospel of the kingdom of heaven if he had been under thirty: for this would have been contrary to the custom and to the whole feeling of the Jewish nation, as is shown by the Law, which did not allow the Levites to enter on their office before they were thirty (Numb. iv. 3). 2. S. Mark distinctly implies that, when all the Apostles forsook Him and fled, a young man followed Him, apparently not one of their company.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 55; vol. viii. p. 502.

² S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, lxxviii. 13; vol. ii. p. 720.

Theophylact, in Marc. xiv. 51; vol. i. p. 253.

³ S. Ambrose, in Psalm xxxvi. 25; vol. i. p. 993.

S. Gregory Magnus, Moral xiv. 49 (alias 23); vol. i. p. 1068.

V. Bede, in Marc. xiv. 51; vol. iii. p. 279.

⁴ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxvii. p. 552.

* Having a linen cloth cast about his naked body (περιβεβλημένος σινδωνα ἐπὶ γυμνοῦ).—"It is well rendered by the Vulgar, amictus sindone, 'clothed in sindon,' or fine linen. For to that the words have respect, not that he had some linen loosely and by chance cast about him; but that the garment, wherewith he always went clothed, was of sindon, that is, of linen."

Lightfoot then shows by quotations from the Talmud that the sindon was the talith or cloak, to which were fastened the fringes mentioned in Numb. xv. 38, and that it was especially worn in time of prayer, and concludes: "I suppose that this young man, out of religion or superstition rather, more than ordinary, had put on his sindon and nothing but that upon his naked body, neglecting his inner garment, and indeed neglecting his body. For there were some among the Jews that did so macerate their bodies, and afflict them with hunger and cold even above the severe rule of other sects . . . The thing taken in the sense which we propound, speaks the furious madness of this most wicked rout so much the more, inasmuch as they spared not a man, and he a young man, bearing most evident marks of a more severe religion." —LIGHTFOOT on Marc. xiv. 51; vol. ii. p. 354.

JESUS IS LED TO ANNAS AND THEN TO CAIAPHAS THE HIGH PRIEST.

S. MATTHEW xvi. 57, 58.

S. MARK xiv. 53, 54.

S. LUKE xii. 54, 55.

S. JOHN xviii. 12-16.

57 And they
that had laid hold on Jesus
led Him away
to Caiaphas the high priest, where the scribes and the elders were assembled.
58 But Peter followed Him afar off unto the high priest's palace, and went in,

and sat with the servants,
to see the end.

53 And they led Jesus away to the high priest :
and with him
were assembled
all the chief priests and the elders and the scribes.
54 And Peter followed Him
afar off,

even into the palace of the high priest :

and he sat with the servants,
and warmed himself at the fire.

54 Then took they
Him,
and led Him, and brought Him into the high priest's house.

And Peter followed afar off.

55 And when they had kind.ed
a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together,
Peter sat down among them.

12 Then the band and the captain and officers of the Jews took Jesus, and bound Him,

13 And led Him away to Annas first : for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas, which was the high priest that same year.

14 Now Caiaphas was he, which gave counsel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man should die for the people.

15 And Simon Peter followed Jesus, and so did another disciple :

that disciple was known unto the high priest, and went in with Jesus into the palace of the high priest.

16 But Peter stood at the door without. Then went out that other disciple, which was known unto the high priest, and spake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

57. ¶ And they that had laid hold on Jesus led Him away to Caiaphas the high priest, where the scribes and the elders were assembled.^a

Vulg. At illi tenentes Iesum, duxerunt ad Caiapham principem sacerdotum, ubi scribae et sculores conveniant.

58. But Peter followed Him afar off unto the high priest's palace, and went in, and sat with the servants, to see the end.

The three Evangelists relate that they led Jesus from Gethsemane to the house or palace of Caiaphas the high priest. S. John says that first of all they led Him to Annas, who was father-in-law to Caiaphas, and then to Caiaphas. It has hence been concluded that the residence of Annas lay near

^a Where the scribes and the elders were assembled.—“ Besides the ill account that these men could give of this night's Passover (no sooner eaten, but their hands in blood), and besides the horrid offence they committed against the Lord and against His Christ in this fact that they were upon, they doubly transgressed against their own canons, namely, in arraiguing and condemning a person upon a holiday, for such a day was now come in ; and in arraiguing and judging a person by night, both of which were directly forbidden by their law (Tal. in Jom. tobb. per. 5, halac. 2).”—

LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the New Testament,’ sect. lxxvi. vol. i. p. 263.

“ They might begin no judgments in the night, nor received they any witness in the night, but the judgments were to be in the day only (Maimon. in Sanhedr. per. vi.). Yet were they in the examination and judgment of our Saviour all night long.”—LIGHTFOOT on the Rites of the First Day of the Passover Week, vol. i. p. 968.

that of Caiaphas, or on the way to it, or, as some have thought, within the same great building. As Annas was neither the high priest nor the president of the Sanhedrin, it has been conjectured that he was one of the foremost of the chief priests who had endeavoured to compass the Death of Jesus. It has also been supposed that it was at his house that Judas had bargained for and received the promised thirty pieces of silver, on producing Jesus bound before Annas.¹

The three Evangelists simply relate that Peter followed Jesus at a distance into the palace of the high priest. S. John also goes on to narrate how Peter gained access into the court of the palace through the influence of the other disciple with the high priest. Who the other disciple (ὁ ἄλλος μαθητής) was appears uncertain. But a very general opinion² has prevailed in the Church from early times that the other disciple was the Evangelist S. John himself. Others³ have produced weighty arguments to show that this was not either S. John or any other of the Apostles, but probably one of those secret disciples of Jesus who were in a higher station of life, such as were Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus.

When the disciples fled, Peter still followed at a distance, influenced partly by love to his Master and partly by a desire to see the end. As a prominent disciple of Jesus, and as the one who, but a few hours before, had cut off the ear of the high priest's servant, Peter would be well known to the band which had apprehended Jesus. He had therefore reason to fear detection, and to follow at a distance, and to stand at the door without.

It has been supposed that this was the official residence of the high priest, and that both Annas the late high priest, and Caiaphas the present high priest, may have resided here, or at least may have both been present on this occasion. None of the Evangelists call it the palace of Caiaphas or the palace of Annas, but the "high priest's palace." The house was probably quadrangular, with an entrance from the street and a courtyard in the centre; a form of house very common in Eastern countries, and well suited to keep out the strong rays of the sun.*

The difference between the social position of the high priest, and that of any of the Apostles, must have been very great; and though many conjectures have been formed, no clue has been given to lead us to the right explanation of the way in which "the other disciple" was known unto the high priest. An early writer, evidently pointing to S. John, says that the other disciple was known to the high priest from some dealings with him as a fisherman.⁴

Only a few hours before this, the chief priests, elders, and all the Council were engaged in the most solemn religious act of their nation, the celebration of the Passover. Instead of separating to their own homes, as was their usual custom, they had assembled at the house of Caiaphas the high priest. But it was not by accident that they had met here, but by some previous arrangement with Judas. He had engaged to bring Jesus a Prisoner to them, and they intended to examine Him, and to get up an accusation against Him sufficiently strong to induce Pilate to condemn Him to Death. They were aware that a vague charge of blasphemy would not be sufficient for this: for it was the boast of the Romans that no one was condemned by them guiltless or unheard. To begin even a fair and honest examination at this late hour of the night was contrary to their traditionary law, and in this case their object was to condemn a Man whom they knew to be innocent; and they were prepared to be most unscrupulous as to the means which they used to accomplish His Death.

The President of the Sanhedrin or Council at this time was Rabban Gamaliel, son of that Simeon who had taken Christ in his arms (Luke ii. 25, &c.).⁵ This was the Gamaliel under whom Paul was brought up (Acts xxii. 3), and who after this counselled the Jews to act fairly towards the Apostles (Acts v. 34). Two of the members of the Council were Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea, who would probably absent themselves from this assembly, or, if present,

¹ S. Cyril. Alex. in Joan. xviii. 12-14; vol. vii. p. 593.

² S. Chrysostom. in Matt. Homil. lxxiv.; vol. ii. p. 487.

³ Theophylact. in Matt. xvi. 58; vol. i. p. 152.

⁴ Euthymius, in Matt. xvi. 58; vol. i. p. 1065.

⁵ S. Jerome, Epist. cxxvii. (alias 16), ad Principium; vol. i. p. 1090.

* The high priest's palace.—"An Oriental house is usually built around a quadrangular interior court, into which there is a passage (sometimes arched) through the front part of the house, closed next the street by a heavy folding gate, with a smaller wicket for single persons, kept by a porter. In the text, the interior court, often paved or flagged, and open to the sky, is the αὐλή, where the attendants made a fire; and the passage beneath the front of the house, from the street to this court, is the προαύλιον or πύλων, in Matt. xvi. 71, Mark xiv. 68. The place where Jesus stood before the high priest may have been an open room or place of audience on the ground-floor, in the rear or on one side of the court; such rooms, open in front, being customary. It was close upon the court; for Jesus heard all that was going on around the fire, and turned and looked upon Peter (Luke xxii. 61).

"Peter's first denial took place at the fire in the middle of the court, on his being questioned by the female porter. Peter then,

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxviii. p. 555.

³ Maldonatus, in Matt. xvi. 69; vol. i. p. 432.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvi. 58; vol. viii. p. 503.

⁵ Nonnus, on S. John xviii. 15, p. 165.

⁶ Lightfoot on the Temple, ch. xxii. vol. i. p. 2009.

according to Matthew and Mark, retreats into the passage leading to the street (πύλων, προαύλιον), where he is again questioned, and makes his second denial. Luke and John do not specify the place. The Evangelists differ in their statements here, as to the person who now questioned him. Mark says the same maid, ἡ παιδίσκη, saw him again (πάλιν), and began to question him, v. 69; Matthew has ἄλλη, another maid, v. 71; Luke writes ἕτερος, another person, or another man, ἄνθρωπος, v. 58; while John uses the indefinite form εἷς, they said. As, according to Matthew (v. 71) and Mark (v. 69), there were several persons present, Peter may have been interrogated by several. The third denial took place about an hour after, probably near the fire, or at least within the court, where our Lord and Peter could see each other (Luke xxii. 61). Here Matthew and Mark speak of several interrogators; Luke has ἄλλος τις, and John specifies the servant of the high priest."—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,' p. 225.

would not consent unto His Death. This first meeting, held either in Caiaphas's lodgings in the Temple or in his house in the city, was probably only preparatory for the more formal assembly which took place early in the morning (xxvii. 1) in their own Council chamber.

For the reasons for thinking that the examination recorded by S. John (xviii. 19-23) was made by Caiaphas and not by Annas, and that it was the first part of the examination related by S. Matthew (xxvi. 59, &c.) and by S. Mark (xiv. 55, &c.), see Commentary on S. John xviii.

JESUS EXAMINED BY THE SANHEDRIN.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 59-68.

S. MARK xiv. 55-65.

S. LUKE xxii. 63-65.

S. JOHN xviii. 19-24.

19 The high priest then asked Jesus of His disciples, and of His doctrine.

20 Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the Temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing.

21 Why askest thou Me? ask them which heard Me, what I have said unto them; behold, they know what I said.

22 And when He had thus spoken, one of the officers which stood by struck Jesus with the palm of his hand, saying, Answerest Thou the high priest so?

23 Jesus answered him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but if well, why smitest thou Me?

24 Now Annas had sent Him bound unto Caiaphas the high priest.

- | | |
|---|--|
| 59 Now the chief priests,
and elders,
and all the Council, sought false witness against Jesus,
to put Him to death;
60 but found none:
yea, though many false witnesses came,

yet found they none.

At the last came two false witnesses,

61 and said,
This fellow said,
I am able to destroy the Temple of God, and to build it

in three days. | 35 And the chief priests

and all the Council sought for witness against Jesus
to put Him to death;
and found none.
36 For many bare false witness against Him,
but their witness agreed not together.
37 And there arose certain,
and bare false witness against Him,
saying,
38 We heard Him say,
I will destroy this Temple

that is made with hands, and within three days
I will build another made without hands.
39 But neither so did their witness agree together.
40 And the high priest stood up in the midst,
and asked Jesus, saying,
Answerest Thou nothing?
what is it which
these witness against Thee? |
| 62 And the high priest arose,
and said unto Him,
Answerest Thou nothing?
what is it which
these witness against Thee? | |

S. MATTHEW xxvi.

S. MARK xiv.

S. LUKE xxii.

S. JOHN xviii.

63 But Jesus
held His peace.

And the high priest answered
and said unto Him,
I adjure Thee by the living God, that Thou tell us whether Thou be the Christ,
the Son of God.

64 Jesus saith unto him,
Thou hast said ;
nevertheless I say unto you,
Hereafter

shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

65 Then the high priest
rent his clothes, saying,
He hath spoken blasphemy ;
what further need have we of witnesses ?
behold, now ye have heard
His blasphemy.

66 What think ye ?
They answered and said,
He is guilty of death.

67 Then did they spit in His face, and buffeted Him ;

and others smote Him with the palms of their hands,

68 saying,
Prophecy unto us,
Thou Christ,
Who is he that smote Thee ?

61 But He held His peace,
and answered nothing.
Again the high priest
asked Him,
and said unto Him,

Art Thou
the Christ,
the Son of the Blessed ?

62 And Jesus said,
I am :
and

ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power,
and coming in the clouds of heaven.

63 Then the high priest
rent his clothes, and saith,

What need we any further witnesses ?
64 Ye have heard the blasphemy :
what think ye ?

And they all condemned Him to be guilty of death.

65 And some began to spit on Him,
and to cover His face,
and to buffet Him,

and to say unto Him,
Prophecy :

and the servants did strike Him with the palms of their hands.

63 And the men that held Jesus mocked Him, and smote Him.

64 And when they had blindfolded Him,
they struck Him on the face,

and asked Him, saying,
Prophecy,
who is it that smote Thee ?

65 And many other things blasphemously spake they against Him.

59. Now the chief priests, and elders, and all the Council, sought false witness against Jesus,
to put Him to death ;

S.V. omit and elders.

Vulg. Principes autem sacerdotum, et omne concilium, querebant.

60. But found none : yea, though many false witnesses came, yet found they none. At the last came two false witnesses,

S.V. But found none, though many false witnesses came. At the :

S.V. omit false witnesses after came two : A*, omite false,

Vulg. Et non invenerunt, cum multi falsi testes accessissent. Novissime autem venerunt duo falsi testes.

destroy the Temple of God, and to build it in three days.

With the object of founding a capital charge against Jesus which they might lay before Pilate, Caiaphas questions Him as to the nature of His teaching, and He properly refers him to those who heard it. On this, He is struck by one of the officers that stood by, as recorded by S. John. Failing in this, the chief priests and all the Council then endeavour to find false witness against Jesus, so as to put Him to death.
Many false witnesses come forward, but their testimony is not such as will convict Him of the crime either of having done any injury to any man, or of any intention to do injury.
As a specimen of the kind of false witness which was offered,

61. And said, This fellow said, I am able to

S. Matthew and S. Mark select that of two men, and it may be that S. Matthew relates the words of one of these two witnesses, and S. Mark those of the other.

Their testimony related to words which Jesus had uttered three years before this. His words, as correctly recorded by S. John (ii. 19), were, "Destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up," and this He spake of the Temple of His Body, and of the Resurrection of His Body. His words as reported by one of these witnesses are, "I am able to destroy the Temple of God, and to build it in three days" (S. Matthew); and according to the other witness they are, "I will destroy this Temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands" (S. Mark). And these words are reported as spoken of the Temple at Jerusalem. These two men are called false witnesses,¹ inasmuch as they did not faithfully report His words and they entirely misrepresent His meaning. But this was not the fault which the Council found with their words. Their objection to them was that the witnesses did not agree together, and that His words, as reported by them, could not be made the ground of a capital charge against Him.

62. And the high priest arose, and said unto Him, Answerest Thou nothing? what is it which these witness against Thee?

Vulg. Nihil respondes ad ea, quæ isti adversum te testificantur?

63. But Jesus held His peace. And the high priest answered and said unto Him, I adjure Thee by the living God, that Thou tell us whether Thou be the Christ, the Son of God.^a S*. omits Answerest Thou—and said unto Him.

Ss.V. omits answered and.

Vulg. Jesus autem tacuit. Et princeps sacerdotum ait illi.

64. Jesus saith unto him, Thou hast said:^b nevertheless I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

Vulg. Amodo videbitis Filium hominis sedentem a dextris virtutis Dei.

It was the business of the high priest to examine into all matters relating to heresy: but the whole conduct of Caiaphas on this occasion was unworthy the office which he filled. He first artfully endeavours to elicit something from the lips of Jesus Himself that would lead to His condemnation. When he is foiled in this, he endeavours to gain the same end by means of false testimony; and when these are too glaringly false and groundless, he is roused into a transport of indignation at the calm silence which Jesus maintains during this shameful abuse of his office, and appeals to Him in the name of God, and by the authority committed to him as His high priest, to answer this plain question, Was He Jesus the Christ, the Son of God? Caiaphas knew that a direct answer to this question either way might be made the ground to demand His Death. If He declared that He was the Christ, the Son of God, He could be put to death as a blasphemer. If He confessed that He was not the Christ, the Son of God, He could be put to death as a false teacher who had made Himself equal with God.

An uncertainty exists as to the exact force of the expression, "Thou hast said" (ὁὐ εἶπας). Some suppose that this implies an answer in the affirmative, and that Jesus, out of reverence for the name of God and for the office of the high priest, by these words answers that it is as Caiaphas says, that He, Jesus, is the Christ, the Son of God; and moreover that, though He now stands before their tribunal, they shall all hereafter stand before His, and be compelled to acknowledge His Person and His authority, and that He expresses this in the words of the prophet Daniel to show that He is the Son of Man spoken of by this prophet (vii. 13). Others hold that the expression "Thou hast said" (ὁὐ εἶπας) implies neither an affirmative nor a negative answer, but is

¹ Origen, in Matt. xxvi. 61; vol. iii. p. 1755.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxix.; vol. ii. p. 487.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxvi. 51; vol. i. p. 152. [Euthymius,

Euthymius, in Matt. xxvi. 60; vol. ii. p. 1069.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvi. 61; vol. vii. p. 201.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxvi. 61; vol. iii. p. 118.

* Son of God—Son of Man.—"It is observable in both the questionings of Him upon this point, both in the night and in the morning, how convertible terms the Son of God and the Son of Man are made. In the night they question Him, 'Art Thou the Son of God?' He answers, 'Ye shall see the Son of Man' (Matt. xxvi. 63, 64). And in the morning again He saith, 'Ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power' and they reply, 'Art Thou then the Son of God?' (Luke xii. 69, 70)."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. lxxvi. vol. i. p. 264.

^b Thou hast said (ὁὐ εἶπας).—"This is not an affirmation, nor, of course, a negation; it only means, 'No answer,' a refusal to plead while He stood before His judges. In the same way, therefore, when Judas asked Him, 'Master, is it I?' and the Lord answered, 'Thou hast said,' it did not mean, nor was it intended to mean, nor was it understood as meaning, an affirmative answer. So, then, when the Lord said, 'Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with Me shall betray Me' (Mark), His purpose must have been to let the disciples know indeed, but more especially hereafter to remember, that He had distinctly foretold the startling fact that one of themselves would prove a traitor: they were not yet, however, to know who it would be; and when, in reply to a question, He again said that it would be one who was now dipping his hand with Him in the dish, which they all did alike, He was merely repeating His original statement in different words, with the same purpose. Consistently with this determination not to indicate the person meant, His answer to the traitor himself left them equally in doubt. Peter now put up John to ask privately who it would be; was it likely that the Lord would now abandon His design? The Psōmion is now given as the sign by which to know the person intended; but this Psōmion, no doubt, others, probably all, received in common with Judas. And so all the eleven alike actually remained in ignorance who the traitor should be (John xiii. 19)."—The Gospels from the Rabbinical point of view, by REV. G. W. FLETCHER, p. 83; see also p. 70, &c.

equivalent to a refusal to give any direct answer to the question at all. (See verse 25, p. 420.)

Many¹ have held that, in rending his garment, Caiaphas acted contrary to God's express command (Levit. xxi. 10), "And he that is the high priest among his brethren, upon whose head the anointing oil was poured, and that is consecrated to put on the garments, shall not uncover his head, nor rend his clothes;" and that this rending of his garment, like the rending of the Veil of the Temple, was prophetic: that in doing this he unconsciously showed that the office of the high priest hereby ceased, that the unrighteous condemnation of Jesus was the last official act of the high priest recognized by God.

Caiaphas² certainly sinned in this that, though the rending of the garment was used as a sign of sorrow, it was in his case an indication of joy that they had succeeded in drawing the confession from Jesus that He was the Christ, the Son of God, and that they should be able to condemn Him to death, and without the necessity for any further witnesses. The rending of his garment was intended to compel their acquiescence in his judgment, and to preclude any further discussion of the subject.

65. Then the high priest rent his clothes,^a saying, He hath spoken blasphemy;^b what further need have we of witnesses? behold, now ye have heard His blasphemy.

^a saying, Behold, He hath spoken: S. the blasphemy.
^b Vulg. dicens: Blasphemavit: quid adhuc egemus testibus? ecce nunc audistis blasphemiam.

66. What think ye? They answered and said, He is guilty of death.

¹ Origen, in Matt. xxvi. 65; vol. iii. p. 1759.
Theophylact, in Matt. xxvi. 65; vol. i. p. 153.
Euthymius, in Matt. xxvi. 65; vol. ii. p. 1073.
S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvi. 65; vol. vii. p. 202.
S. Leo Magnus, Sermo de Passione Domini, vi. 2; vol. i. p. 329.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 65; vol. viii. p. 506.

^a Then the high priest rent his clothes.—"His confession and words they account blasphemy; and that they might have the surer impression of so construing them, Caiaphas rent his garments, and by that action would, as it were, force them to agree with him that it was so, when his garments had paid so dear, for the confirming of it. Their custom and reason of rending their clothes upon the hearing of blasphemy is handled in Jerus. in Sanhedr. xxv. 1, and in Maim. in Avodah Zarah ii., where these two canons being observed, 'Every one that hears God's name blasphemed, is bound to rend his garments,' and 'The judges hearing blasphemy must stand upon their feet, and must rend their clothes and may not sew them up again.' It will cause us to observe something in it, that the high priest only rent his clothes, and not the rest of the bench with him. Which though they did not, yet they vote with him that it was blasphemy, and therefore He was guilty of death; which, had it been executed, must have been by stoning (Sanhedr. per. 7, halak. 4)."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. lxxvii. vol. i. p. 263.

^b He hath spoken blasphemy.—"The blasphemy did not consist either in the assumption of the title Son of Man, or in the claim to be Messiah, or even excepting indirectly in that which by the terms of Daniel's prophecy was involved in Messiahship; namely, the commission to judge the world. It was the further claim to

67. Then did they spit in His face, and buffeted Him; and others smote Him with the palms of their hands, Margin, rods.

Vulg. alii autem palmas in faciem ejus dederunt.

68. Saying, Prophecy unto us, Thou Christ, Who is he that smote Thee?

It is plain from S. Mark that this treatment of Jesus was not confined to the servants; that some of the Council who condemned Him to death so far forgot their character as to spit on Him, and to cover His face and then strike Him with their fists, and to say unto Him, "Prophecy unto us, who is it that smote Thee?"

The God-Man paid for the pleasure which men receive from sin by Himself suffering the punishment of sin. He atoned for the dishonour which men offer to God by suffering every species of dishonour and every form of reproach. He destroyed death and procured life for men by Himself suffering Death. All this is deep mystery, but it is clear from the Scriptures.

Five different ways are here specified in which they showed their contempt for the Redeemer of mankind, and other blasphemies are mentioned as left unrecorded. Lamentable as was the conduct of these Jews, when we take into account the ignorance and misbelief from which it proceeded, it will not appear more reprehensible than the conduct of Christians who believe that Jesus was the Son of God, and who still heap on Him similar contumely by showing similar contempt for His commands.

Some³ have supposed that what S. Matthew relates from verse 59 to 68 and S. Mark from verse 55 to 65 did not take place in the preliminary examination of Jesus held by ² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxviii. p. 558.

³ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 7; vol. iii. p. 1174.
Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 67; vol. i. p. 432.
—xxvii. 1; vol. i. p. 438.
Archbp. Newcome, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 376.
Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, p. 154, &c.

be the Son of God, not in any moral or theocratic, but in the natural sense, at which the high priest and his coadjutors professed to be so deeply shocked. The Jews felt, as our Lord intended, that the Son of Man in Daniel's prophecy could not but be Divine; they knew what He meant by appropriating such words as applicable to Himself. Just as one body of Jews had endeavoured to destroy Jesus when He called God His Father in such sense as to claim Divinity; and another when He contrasted His Eternal Being with the feeble life of Abraham in a distant past; and another when He termed Himself Son of God, and associated Himself with His Father as being dynamically and so substantially One: just as they murmured at His pretension to have come down from heaven, and detected blasphemy in His authoritative remission of sins; so when, before His judges, He admitted that He claimed to be the Son of God, all further discussion was at an end. The high priest exclaimed, 'Ye have heard His blasphemy;' and they all condemned Him to be guilty of death. And a very accomplished Jew of our own day, M. Salvador, has shown that this question of our Lord's Divinity was the real point at issue in that momentous trial. He maintains that a Jew had no logical alternative to belief in the Godhead of Jesus Christ except the imperative duty of putting Him to death."—CANON LIDDON'S Bampton Lectures, iv. p. 191.

Caiaphas and some of the Council during the night, but in the full and more formal meeting of the Sanhedrin held in the morning, and that this is S. Matthew and S. Mark's account of the same examination as that recorded by S. Luke (xxii. 66-71). Others¹ have held, and apparently with greater probability, that S. Matthew (verses 59-68) and S. Mark (55-65) are recording the first examination of Jesus, that held during the night in the palace of the high priest, and S. Luke (xxii. 66-71) that in the meeting of the Sanhedrin held in the morning.

S. Luke does not record the examination of Jesus before Caiaphas and the members of the Sanhedrin at this sitting, though he relates the way in which they behaved to Him at the end of it. It was during this first examination of Jesus in the palace of the high priest that Peter three times denied that he knew Him, as recorded by the four Evangelists.

PETER DENIES JESUS.

S. MATTHEW xxvi. 69-75.

S. MARK xiv. 66-72.

S. LUKE xxii. 56-62.

S. JOHN xviii. 17, 18, 25-27.

(The first time.)

69 Now Peter sat without in the palace:
and a damsel came unto him,

66 And as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids
of the high priest:

56 But a certain maid

67 and when she saw Peter warming himself,
she looked upon him,

beheld him
as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him,

17 Then saith the damsel that kept the door unto Peter, saying, Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee.

and said, And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth.

and said, This man was also with Him.

Art not thou also one of this Man's disciples?

70 But he denied before them all,
saying,

I know not what thou sayest.

68 But He denied,

saying,

I know not,
neither understand I what thou sayest.
And he went out into the porch;
and the cock crew.

57 And he denied Him,

saying,
Woman,
I know Him not.

He saith,

I am not.

(The second time.)

71 And when he was gone out into the porch,

58 And after a little while another maid saw him,

and said
unto them that were there,
This fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth.

69 And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by,
This is one of them.

another saw him,
and said,

Thou art also of them.

25 And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself.

They said therefore unto him, Art not thou also one of His disciples?

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxi. p. 564.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 66; vol. viii. p. 507.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxxxvi. vol. i. p. 264.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, p. 155.

Greswell, Harmony of the Four Gospels, pp. 350-356.

Stroud, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. clxxvii.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 604.

S. MATTHEW xxvi.	S. MARK xiv.	S. LUKE xxii.	S. JOHN xviii.
72 And again he denied with an oath, I do not know the Man.	70 And he denied it again.	And Peter said, Man, I am not.	He denied it, and said, I am not.
(The third time.)
73 And after a while came unto him they that stood by, and said to Peter, Surely thou also art one of them ; for thy speech bewrayeth thee.	And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them : for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto .	59 And about the space of one hour after another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with Him : for he is a Galilean.	26 One of the servants of the high priest, being his kinsman whose ear Peter cut off, saith, Did not I see thee in the garden with Him ?
74 Then began he to curse and to swear, saying , I know not the Man. And immediately the cock crew.	71 But he began to curse and to swear, saying , I know not this Man of whom ye speak. 72 And the second time the cock crew.	60 And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew. 61 And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how He had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny Me thrice. And Peter went out, and wept bitterly.	27 Peter then denied again : and immediately the cock crew.
75 And Peter remembered the word of Jesus, which said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny Me thrice. And he went out, and wept bitterly.	And Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny Me thrice. And when he thought thereon, he wept.	62 And Peter went out, and wept bitterly.

69. ¶ Now Peter sat without in the palace : and a damsel came unto him, saying, Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee.

70. But he denied before them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest.

A. before them all.
Vulg. At ille n. gavit coram omnibus.

S. Matthew says that Peter "sat without in the palace;" that is, he was in the courtyard of the palace, which he had entered by the door which the damsel kept, but he was not in the Council chamber where Jesus was being examined. The Council chamber was probably raised a little above the level of the courtyard, as S. Mark says that Peter was "beneath in the palace." This would enable Jesus to see

Peter, when He turned and looked upon him after the second crowing of the cock, and by this look recalled him to the recollection of what He had before said unto him, which the first crowing had failed to do.

S. Mark alone records that, after Peter's first denial of Jesus, the cock crew.

71. And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid saw him, and said unto them that were there, This fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth.

Vulg. exiitque autem illo januam.

72. And again he denied with an oath, I do not know the Man.

Vulg. quia non novi hominem.

It is plain from S. Luke and S. John that, when this second maid made the charge against Peter, those that were standing by joined in with her, and pressed the charge against him. Hence the necessity for a more vehement form of denial, and he denied it with an oath.

73. And after a while came unto him they that stood by, and said to Peter, Surely thou also art one of them; for thy speech bewrayeth thee.

Vulg. nam et loquela tua manifestum te facit.

74. Then began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the Man. And immediately the cock crew.*

Vulg. Tunc caput detestari et jurare, quia non novisset hominem.

75. And Peter remembered the word of Jesus, which said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny Me thrice. And he went out, and wept bitterly.

S.V. omittit unto Him.

Vulg. Et recordatus est Petrus verbi Iesu, quod dixerat.

Three of the Evangelists relate that there was some little interval of time between Peter's second and third denial of Jesus. S. Luke alone specifies the length of it, "about the space of one hour."

All the Evangelists imply that the third charge against Peter was more persistent and confident than either the first or the second, and that his denial of it was also more vehement and fierce. S. John alone adds that this was caused partly by the addition of a most important testimony, that of a kinsman of the man whose ear Peter had cut off.

All the four Evangelists relate that, after Peter's third denial, the cock crew. S. Mark alone relates that this was the second time it had crowed, as he alone had represented Jesus as saying that before the cock crowed twice Peter should deny him thrice.

The first crowing of the cock seems to have escaped Peter's attention, and probably the second would also, but for the look which Jesus directed towards him, which had the effect of arousing his conscience and filling him with sorrow for his sin.

Thus, in their relation of the three denials of Peter, as well as in many other matters, the Evangelists differ considerably; but their accounts are not inconsistent with each other. No one of them professes to give the whole that took place. One gives one portion, and each of the others gives another. Probably these are independent relations, and they have the appearance of not being written in concert, nor intended to fit in with each other, and thus to make one perfect and exhaustive whole. Doubtless other things occurred which none of them relate. The Evangelists agree so far as to leave on the mind of the impartial reader the conviction that, if we knew the whole circumstances of the case, their accounts would be in perfect agreement.

By his temptation and fall Peter furnished a warning to men in all future ages—(1) Against confidence in their own strength to resist temptation; (2) Against rashness in putting themselves in the way of temptation, and mixing unnecessarily with the enemies of Jesus; (3) As one of the future chief pastors of the Church, he would learn a lesson from his own fall, to have compassion on those who are overcome by the temptation of Satan.

All Peter's three denials of Jesus, as well as the preliminary examination of Jesus, took place in the palace of the high priest; that is, of Caiaphas. From not sufficiently attending to this, some authors have been led into the mistake that the Evangelists intend to record more than three denials of Jesus by Peter: three in the house of Caiaphas, and one or more in the house of Annas.¹

The difficulty of reconciling with each other all the expressions used by the four Evangelists in their relation of Peter's denial of our Saviour, on the supposition that these were three in number, has been freely acknowledged by commentators from the days of S. Augustine.² But, in spite of this, the common opinion of the Church, as evidenced by a succession of writers and commentators,³ has been that the

¹ See Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxix. p. 560.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 70; vol. viii. p. 510.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 6; vol. iii. p. 1168.

³ Origen, in Matt. xxvi. 69; vol. iii. p. 1762.

S. Cyril Hierosol. Catech. xiv. 23, p. 856.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxxv. ; vol. ii. p. 495.

Nonnus Panopolitanus, in Joan. xviii. 27, p. 168.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xviii. 24; vol. vii. p. 608.

S. Gregory Nazianz., Oratio (xxxix. 18), in Sancta Lumina; vol. i. p. 357.

Theophylact, in Marc. xiv. 30; vol. i. p. 250.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxvi. 74; vol. ii. p. 1079. [S. Hilary,

S. Hilary, in Matt. xxvi. ; vol. i. p. 1071.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xx. 57; vol. ii. p. 1823, &c.

S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 2; vol. iii. pp. 1161.

— in Joan. tract. cxiii. 6; vol. iii. p. 1935.

S. Jerome, Epist. (ad Oceanum), lxxii. 4; vol. i. p. 692.

V. Bede, in Joan. xviii. 25; vol. iii. p. 900.

Rupertus, in Joan. xviii. ; vol. iii. p. 774.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 71; vol. i. p. 434.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 70; vol. viii. p. 510.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxxvi. vol. i. p. 264.

Grotius, in Joan. xviii. 26: Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 1828.

* Immediately the cock crew.—"Mark relates that the cock crowed twice, v. 68, 72; the others speak only of his crowing once. This accords also with their respective accounts of our Lord's prophecy. The cock often crows irregularly about midnight or not long after; and again always and regularly about the third hour or daybreak. When therefore the cock-crowing is spoken of alone, this last is always meant. Hence the name ἀλεκτοροφωνία, cock-crowing, for the third watch of the night, which ended at the third hour after midnight (Mark xiii. 25). Mark therefore here relates more definitely; the others more generally."—ROBINSON, "Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek," p. 226.

"Cock-crowing (ἀλεκτοροφωνία) was the third of the four three-hour watches into which the Jews at that time, following the Roman custom, divided the night, i.e. the period between sunset

Evangelists relate that Peter denied our Saviour three several times, as Jesus had also foretold that Peter would deny Him "thrice" or three times. This seems to have been the explanation universally received, until Dionysius the Carthusian in the fifteenth century attempted to reconcile the differences in the Evangelists by supposing there were six denials, and Cardinal Cajetan in the sixteenth century that there were seven.¹ But these writers exercised such little influence that three continued to be the received number of Peter's denials among commentators. Recently a commentator² has shown considerable vigour and industry in again advocating the explanation which implies that the occasions of denial of Jesus by Peter, as well as the utterances of denial, as related by the Evangelists, were each six in number, and that, out of these six, three are selected by each of the four Evangelists for relation, but not the same three by all the four Evangelists; and that when Jesus foretold to Peter that he would deny Him "thrice," He used a definite number for an indefinite, and did not mean neither more nor less than three times, but many times. Difficult as it may be to explain with perfect satisfaction all the variations in the relations of the Evangelists on the supposition that Peter's denials of Jesus were three in number, the explanation that there were six presents to my mind still greater difficulties.

A thoughtful reader will be surprised to find how many details there are in this chapter in which the faithfulness and accuracy of the Evangelists are confirmed when tested by contemporary writers, such as Philo, Josephus, and the Talmudists.

¹ See Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 70; vol. viii. p. 510.

and sunrise. Consequently, putting out of view the variable nature of the hours by which the ancients reckoned, it corresponded to the period from midnight to three in the morning. At any rate the trial concluded at the time of the πρωία, or the fourth watch of the night, i.e. at the time of the vernal equinox, between 3 and 6 o'clock A.M. of our reckoning. Luke tells us (xxii. 66) that Jesus, 'as soon as it was day' (ὡς ἐγένετο ἡμέρα), was led to the council of the Sanhedrim.'—WIESELER, 'Chronolog. Synopsis,' p. 371.

² McClellan, New Testament, p. 494.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

THE SANHEDRIN.

The room where they sat.—"The building Gazith (so called) because it was made of stone neatly wrought, as the word is used 1 Kings v. 16) appeareth by the author of Juchasin to have been built by Simeon ben Shetah, who was the vice-president of the Sanhedrin when Judah ben Tabbai was Nasi in the sixth generation from Ezra, even in the time of Hyrcanus Jannæus the Asmonæan. It was half of it holy and half of it common; that is, half of it stood within the Court and half of it within the Chel, and it had a door into either place. And in the half of it that stood within the Chel did the great Council or Sanhedrin sit, of seventy-one judges. Now a special reason why they sat on that side of the house which was in the Chel was, because it was not lawful for any man-whosoever to sit within the verge of the Court unless it were the king. In the other part of this building which stood within the Court, the priests used to cast lots daily for the distribution of the service amongst them."—LIGHTFOOT on the Temple, vol. i. p. 1105.

"Gazith, the room where this great Court sat, was in the Court of the Temple near unto the altar, or, as themselves express it, near to the divine presence, which, they supposed, dwelt upon the altar, and looked on them how they acted in judgment."—LIGHTFOOT, Sermon on S. John xviii. 31; vol. ii. p. 1111.

"The Council removed from the chamber Gazith to the sheds; from the sheds into Jerusalem; from Jerusalem to Jafne; from Jafne to Osha; from Osha to Shepharaama; from Shepharaama to Bethshaarim; from Bethshaarim to Tzippor; from Tzippor to Tiberias." (Bab Rosh-Nashanah, fol. xxxi. 1.) We conjecture that the great bench was driven from its seat, the chamber Gazith, half a year, or thereabout, before the Death of Christ; but whether they sat then in the sheds (a place in the Court of the Gentiles) or in the city when they debated about the Death of Christ, does not clearly appear, since no authors make mention how long it sat either here or there. Those things that are mentioned in Matt. xxvii. 4-6, seem to argue that they sat in the Temple; these in ch. xxvi. 3, that they sat in the city. Perhaps in both places, for it was not unusual with them to return thither as occasion served, from whence they came, only to the chamber Gazith they never went back."—Ibid. on Matt. xxvii. 3; vol. ii. p. 249.

The Judges.—"The number of the judges in this high Court was seventy and one, answering to Moses and the seventy elders chosen by him when God in the wilderness did first ordain this great judicatory (Numb. xi.). They were to be indifferently chosen of priests, Levites, and Israelites (the New Testament often expresseth the distinction by chief priests, scribes, and elders); but if priests and Levites fitly qualified were not to be found, if all the Council were men of other tribes, it was good and lawful.

"Their qualifications must be that they must be religious and learned both in arts and languages; must have some skill in physic, arithmetic, astronomy, astrology; yea, to know what belonged to magic, sorcery, and idolatry, that so they might know to judge of them. They were to be without maim or blemish of body, men of years, but not extreme old, because commonly such are of too much severity, and they must be fathers of children, that they might be acquainted with tenderness and compassion.

"Their manner of sitting was thus. The eminentest among them for worth and wisdom they appointed to be the chief in the Council, and him they called the Nasi or President, and him they took to represent Moses. Then the next eminent they chose to be his second, and him they called Abb beth Din, the Father of the Council, or Vice-President. He sat upon the right hand of the Nasi (compare the phrase of sitting on the right hand of power, Matt. xxvi. 64), and then the whole Sanhedrin sat on the one hand and on the other in a semicircle. On the right hand before them, and on the left, there were two clerks of the Council; one registered the acquitting votes and testimonies, and the other the casting (compare Matt. xxv. 33)."—Ibid. on the Temple, ch. xxii.; vol. i. p. 1106.

"The high priest is of a more worthy degree and order than the President of the Council; that in Acts xxiii. 4 hath a peculiar emphasis—τὸν Ἀρχιερέα τοῦ Θεοῦ, God's high priest,—and hints to us the opinion that nation had of the high priest, namely, that he was God's officer; whereas the President of the Council was only an officer of the people, and chosen by men. The charge of the high priest was to take care about holy things; the charge of the President was to take care about the traditions, for he was the keeper and repository of traditions."—Ibid. on Acts ix. 2; vol. ii. p. 681.

"The proper and constant time of their sitting was from the end of the morning service to the beginning of the evening service, and so their sitting and the divine service did not clash one with another. Yet sometime did occasions that came before them prolong their session even until night, and then they might determine the matter that they had been debating on by day. But they might not begin a new business by night. They violated their own custom and tradition in judging of Christ by night.

"It was in their power and cognizance to judge all persons and all matters (yet inferior matters they meddled not withal, but referred them to inferior Courts), inasmuch that they judged a whole tribe, a prophet, the high priest, nay, the king himself if there were occasion." . . .

Their punishments.—"Of capital penalties, in which kind of matters they especially judged, they had four sorts, stoning, burning, slaying with the sword, and strangling. . . .

"Whom they stoned they stoned naked. First one of the witnesses threw him or pushed him that he might dash his loins against a stone: if that killed him, there was no more ado; if it did not, the other witness took a great stone and dashed it on his breast as he lay on his back: if that killed him, there was an end; if not, all the people flung stones at him. This helps us to understand what is meant by the witnesses laying down their garments at Saul's feet, at the stoning of Stephen (Acts vii. 58); namely, because they were to be employed first in his stoning, and they laid by their upper garments that they might not trouble them. And this illustrates that passage of our Saviour which indeed alludes to this manner of stoning, 'Whosoever shall fall upon this stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it shall grind him to powder' (Matt. xxi. 44); for he that was stoned was first flung upon a stone, and then a stone was dashed upon him. . . .

"This great Sanhedrin in Gazith was the foundation of the traditional law and pillar of instruction (compare the phrase 1 Tim. iii. 15), and from them decrees and judgments went out for all Israel. And whosoever believed Moses and his law was bound to rest upon them for matters of the law. Thus Maimony in Mamrim, i. Therefore in all doubts about judicial matters the ultimate recourse was hither, as to a determiner not to be doubted of or varied from. The manner was thus: Had a man occasion to inquire about any such matter, he went first to the judicatory that was in his own city: if they could resolve it, well and good; if they could not, one of them went to the next Sanhedrin: if that could not resolve it, he went to the Sanhedrin of the three and twenty in the Gate of the Mountain of the House; if that could not, he went to the other Sanhedrin of three and twenty in the Gate of Nicanor; and if that could not, he went to this in the room Gazith, and there he received a positive determination, which for him being a judge to transgress against, it brought him under the notion of a rebellious elder, and in danger of trying for his life."—LIGHTFOOT on the Temple, ch. xxii. vol. i. p. 1106, &c.

The Presidents.—Lightfoot then goes on to give a short history of the eleven Presidents that presided over the Sanhedrin from their return out of the Babylonian Captivity to the destruction of the Temple and city of Jerusalem, and of the five that presided after that time until the Sanhedrin itself came to an end. "Of these the ninth was Rabban Simeon, Hillel's son. This man was first dignified with the title Rabban. He is supposed to be the Simeon mentioned Luke ii. that took Christ in his arms; and for that it is conceived that he is not of so frequent and honourable mention among the Jewish writers as others of the same rank with him are, they not well relishing his confession of Christ, whom they deny. He began his Presidentship about the thirteenth year of our Saviour's age, if the date and account of Hillel's rule mentioned before be current, and how long he sat President no one mentions, but some assert that his rule was not long. The author of Juchasin relateth that he is never mentioned in the Mishneh or in the code of the Jews' traditions. It may be his embracing Christianity made him cool towards their traditions, so that there is none to father on him as there are on the other doctors. It is like he was a secret professor of Christ, as Nicodemus was, and kept both his place and profession. 10. Rabban Gamaliel, Simeon's son. This was he under whom Paul was brought up (Acts xxii. 3, and see Acts v. 34). He was President of the Council when Christ was arraigned, and lived two and twenty years after."—Ibid.; vol. i. p. 1109.

CHAPTER XXVII.

[1. Christ is delivered bound to Pilate. 3. Judas hangeth himself. 19. Pilate, admonished of his wife, 21. washeth his hands: 23. and loatheth Barabbas. 29. Christ is crowned with thorns. 31. crucified. 40. reviled. 50. die, and is buried: 66. His sepulchre is sealed, and watched.]

[Vulg. Judas, relatus argenteis, laqueo se suspendit: Iesus coram Pilato accusatus, non respondit. nec autem Pilatus dedit ipsam pro eum: proditor tamen Barabbas: Pilatus locis manibus Iesum flagellatum tradit crucifigendum: qui a militibus multipliciter illatus, ducitur ad crucifigendum: et postea cum potestas, inter latrones crucifigitur, divites ipsius testamenti: et a variis multis putantur in ipsam blasphemias: subornantur testes: et clamans Iesus Eli, ac theoe potestas, cum clamore expirat, ac signa varia fiunt: corpus Iesu a Joseph sepelitur, custoditur a militibus.]

HAVING determined in the preliminary meeting on the course which they should pursue with respect to Jesus, to dispense with the testimony of witnesses, and to proceed against Him on His own confession, the Sanhedrin now hold a fuller and more formal sitting in their own Council chamber. S. Luke¹ alone records the particulars of this examination. S. Matthew and S. Mark content themselves with giving the results; namely, that Jesus is condemned, that He is bound and led to Pilate the governor.

JESUS IS AGAIN EXAMINED BY THE COUNCIL, CONDEMNED, AND LED TO PILATE.

S. MATTHEW xxvii. 1, 2.

1 When the morning was come,
all the chief priests
and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus
to put Him to death:

S. MARK iv. 1.

1 And straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and scribes and the whole Council,

S. LUKE xxii. 66-71, and xxiii. 1.

66 And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people
and the chief priests and the scribes came together,
and led Him
into their Council, saying,
67 Art Thou the Christ? tell us. And He said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe:
68 And if I also ask you, ye will not answer Me, nor let Me go.
69 Hereafter shall the Son of Man sit on the right hand of the power of God.
70 Then said they all, Art Thou then the Son of God? And He said unto them, Ye say that I am.

S. JOHN xviii. 28.

71 And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard of His own mouth.

2 and when they had bound Him,

and bound Jesus, xxiii. 1 And

28 Then

they led Him away;
and delivered Him
to Pontius Pilate
the governor.

and carried Him away,
and delivered Him
to Pilate.

the whole multitude of them arose, and led Him
unto Pilate.

led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment:
and it was early.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxi. p. 564.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. i; vol. viii. p. 515.
Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxxxvi. vol. i.
p. 264.

Greswell, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 356.
Dean Alford, in Luc. xxii. 66, Greek Testament.
Stroud, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. clxxxvii.
McClellan, New Testament, p. 604.

1. When the morning was come,^a all the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put Him to death :

Vulg. Mane autem facto.

2. And when they had bound Him, they led Him away, and delivered Him to Pontius Pilate the governor.

S.V. omit Him after delivered: S.V. omit Pontius.
Vulg. et tradiderunt Pontio Pilato prasidi.

From S. Luke's relation of this examination it is clear that the expression "the Son of Man," appropriated by Jesus to Himself, was understood by the Jews as synonymous with "the Son of God;" for when Jesus declared that hereafter they should see Him, the Son of Man, coming in the clouds of heaven, they understood Him, and asked if they rightly understood Him, as claiming to be the Son of God. Because He said that He was the Son of Man, they concluded that He claimed to be the Son of God, and He allowed the correctness of their conclusion.

Two of the Evangelists record the repentance and subsequent conduct of Judas: S. Matthew here, and S. Luke in the Acts of the Apostles, i. 18, 19.

Immediately after he had related that Jesus was condemned by the Council, and was bound and led to Pilate the governor, S. Matthew goes on to relate that Judas repented of his deed and brought again the money to the chief priests. He seems by the expression "then Judas seeing" (τότε ἰδὼν Ἰούδας) purposely to connect the relation of these two events together. Judas may have been present at the trial as a spectator, or, it may be, that it was the sight of Jesus as he was led bound to Pilate that first intimated to him that He was condemned and given over to the Romans for death, and that this sight caused him to relent. Judas's object had been to get money, and not, like the chief priests, to accomplish the death of Jesus. Perhaps he had scarcely realized to himself the consequences of his deed, or he may have thought that Jesus, by His divine power, would deliver Himself out of the hands of His enemies, as on former occasions.¹

JUDAS REPENTS AND HANGS HIMSELF.

S. MATTHEW xxvii. 3-10.

Acts i. 18, 19.

3 Then Judas, which had betrayed Him, when he saw that He was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders,

4 Saying, I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that.

5 And he cast down the pieces of silver in the Temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself.

6 And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood.

7 And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in.

8 Wherefore that field was called,

The field of blood, unto this day.

9 Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of Him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value;

10 And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me.

18 —and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out.

18 Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity;

19 And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood.

¹ Theophylact, in Matt. xxvii. 3; vol. i. p. 154.

^a When the morning was come.—"Let us trace a little the proceedings of this Council.

"1. They spend the night in judging on a capital cause; which is expressly forbid by their own canon. 'They handle capital causes in the day-time, and finish them by day' (Sanhedr. iv. 1). Money matters indeed that were begun by day, might be ended in the night, which is asserted in that place; but capital causes were only to be handled by day. But here in sitting upon the life and

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 3; vol. i. p. 439.

3. ¶ Then Judas, which had betrayed Him, when he saw that He was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders,

4. Saying, I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that.

V4. betrayed just blood.

5. And he cast down the pieces of silver in the Temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself.

death of our Saviour, there is need of night and darkness. This judgment is begun in the night, and carried on all the night through in a manner.

"II. This night was the evening of a feast-day; namely, of the first day of the Paschal week, at which time they were also forced to sit in judgment. 'They do not judge on a feast-day' (Moed Katon v. 2).

"III. 'When it was morning.' This was the time of saying their phylacteries; namely, from the first daylight to the third hour (Berak. i. 2). But where was these men's religion to-day? Did you say your phylacteries this morning, my good Fathers of the Council, before you came to sit on the bench? Another business that you had in hand (effectually to destroy Jesus) either robbed you of your prayers, or robbed your prayers of charity.

"IV. Now appears the first feast-day of the Passover, when they used to present themselves in the Temple, and offer their gifts (Exod. xxiii. 15). But when and how was this performed by them to-day? They take heed of going into the judgment (or Pretors') hall, lest they should be defiled, but that they might eat the Chagiga or Passover, but you will scarce find what time they allowed to-day for that purpose; nor indeed was it lawful for them to eat anything on that day; it being provided by a canon, 'That when the Council shall have adjudged anyone to die, let them not taste anything that day' (Sanhedr. lxiii. 1).

"Cases of money are heard in the day-time, and may be determined in the night. Capital causes are tried in the day, and finished in the day. Judgment in cases of money is passed the same day, whether it be for fining or acquitting. Judgment in capital causes is passed the same day, if it be for acquitting; but if it be for condemning, it is passed the day after' (Sanhedr. lxiii. 4).

"You see in the history of the Gospel—I. The trial concerning our Saviour's life, dispatched at one and the same sitting. 2. And that too on a feast-day."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxvii. 1; vol. ii. p. 263.

"The purchase of the potter's field."—"It has been alleged by some recent expositors that S. Luke's statement in the Acts of the Apostles, 'Now this man purchased' (οὗτος μὲν οὖν ἐκτήσατο) is at variance with Matt. xxvii. 6-8, where it is said that the chief priests purchased the field with thirty pieces of silver; and that S. Luke could not have been acquainted with S. Matthew's Gospel, or he would not have inserted this statement. But the fact is, that S. Luke's assertion is in harmony with S. Matthew's, and is supplementary to it.

"The Holy Spirit in Scripture is wont to trace human actions to their first causes; and to treat the principal agents as accountable for the whole transaction, though done, as Scripture itself records, by the instrumentality of others.

"This is what might be expected in divine history; and there is a solemn moral lesson in it.

"Thus in this book the Jews are four times said to have crucified Jesus (Acts ii. 23 and 36, and iv. 10, and v. 30), though they could not put anyone to death (John xiii. 31); but they are said to have crucified Him, because they used the instrumentality of Pilate for

6. And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood.

7. And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field,* to bury strangers in.

8. Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood, unto this day.

Vulg. Propter hoc vocatus est ager ille, Haceldama, hoc est, ager sanguinis, usque in hodie nomen dicitur.

9. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet,^b saying, that purpose. Thus Pilate is said to have scourged Jesus (John xix. 1), and Joseph to have hewn a tomb (Matt. xxvii. 60), and Christ to have baptized disciples (John iv. 1), though they only caused these things to be done. Thus also (vii. 9) the Patriarchs are said to have sold Joseph into Egypt, though they had no intention that he should go there. Thus the Jews are even said to have laid Christ in the tomb (xiii. 29), though this was only a consequence, in which they took no part, of His death, which was not inflicted by them, but by a heathen power, at their instance. . . .

"It was called 'field of blood' for a double reason,—

As bought with the price of blood, Matt. xxvii. 8.

As sprinkled with the blood of him who took that price."

—BISHOP OF LINCOLN, Acts i. 18, Greek Testament.

On this subject see also McTear, 'New Testament,' p. 593.

"That which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet."—"How much this place hath troubled interpreters let the famous Beza, instead of many others, declare: 'This knot hath hampered all the most ancient interpreters; in that the testimony here is taken out of Zachary, and not from Jeremy; so that it seems plainly to have been ἀναθήματα μνησικόν, a filling of memory, as Augustine supposes in his third book, 'de Consensu Evangelistarum,' chapter vii.; as also Eusebius in the xx. book, ἀποδείξεις, of Demonstration. But if any had rather impute this error to the transcribers, or (as I rather suppose) to the unskillfulness of some person who put in the name of Jeremy, when the Evangelist hath writ only, as he often doth in other places, εἰς τοῦ προφήτου, "by the prophet." Yet we must confess that this error hath long since crept into the holy Scriptures, as Jerome expressly affirms,' &c.

"But (with the leave of so great men) I do not only deny that so much as one letter is spurious, or crept in without the knowledge of the Evangelist, but I do confidently assert that Matthew writ Jeremy, as we read it, and that it was very readily understood and received by his countrymen. We will transcribe the following monument of antiquity out of the Talmudists, and then let the reader judge:—"A tradition of the Rabbins (Baba Bathra xiv. 2): This is the order of the prophets, the Book of Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Esay, and the twelve.' And a little after, 'But since Isaiah was before both Jeremiah and Ezekiel, he ought to have been set before them. But since the Book of Kings ends with destruction and all Jeremy is about destruction; and since Ezekiel begins with destruction and ends with comfort, and all Isaiah is about comfort, they joined destruction with destruction, and comfort with comfort; that is, they placed those books together which treat of destruction, and those together which treat of comfort.'

"You have of this tradition quoted by David Kimchius in his preface to Jeremy. Whence it is plain that Jeremy of old had the first place among the prophets; and hereby he comes to be mentioned after all the rest, Matt. xvi. 14. Because he stood first in the volume of the prophets, therefore he is first named. When therefore Matthew produceth a text of Zacharias under the name of Jeremy, he only cites the words of the volume of the prophets under his name, who stood first in the volume of the prophets.

"And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of Him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value;

Margin, whom they bought of the children of Israel.
S. And that was fulfilled which S. And I took.

Vulg. Et acceperunt triginta argenteos pretium appetiti, quem appetiverunt a filiis Israel.

IO.

And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me."

S. and I gave.

Vulg. et dederunt eos.

The object of Judas in bringing back the thirty pieces was to repudiate the bargain that he had made with the chief priests, and in the hope that, by restoring the money, he should induce the Jews to set Jesus at liberty.

Strictly speaking, the expression "in the Temple" (ἐν τῷ ναῷ) means that part of the sacred enclosure which it was not lawful for Judas to enter, and which could be entered only by the priests. The words that Judas "cast down the pieces of silver in the Temple" may therefore imply that, in his desperation, he followed the priests even into the holy place where they offered sacrifices, and there flung down the money at their feet. The place in which the Council held their sitting and in which they had condemned Jesus—whether in the more sacred place, the moor Gazith, or in the less sacred Tabernacle—would be included within the general term "the Temple" (ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ), but they could scarcely come under the expression "the Temple proper" (ἐν τῷ ναῷ).

Considerable difficulty exists with respect to the prophecy which S. Matthew says was fulfilled by Judas returning the thirty pieces of silver, and by the subsequent application of them by the Jews: for the prophecy to which S. Matthew appears to allude is found in Zechariah and not in Jeremiah, and the prophecy as given by Zechariah does not contain any reference to the object for which the thirty pieces of silver was given to the potter. Zechariah's words are, "And I said unto them, If ye think good, give me my price; and if not, forbear. So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. And the Lord said unto me, Cast it unto the potter: a goodly price that I was prized at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord" (xi. 12, 13).

Several explanations have been given of this difficulty. The most common opinion among the early writers was¹ that the prophecy here alluded to was to be found in Zechariah and not in Jeremiah, and that S. Matthew originally wrote "by the prophet" merely, and that Jeremiah was afterwards inserted by some careless copyist. In support of this it was alleged that MSS. were extant which contained "by the prophet," without the addition of either Jeremiah or Zechariah. Others² thought that for some unaccountable reason the Evangelist himself wrote Jeremiah. It has also been suggested³ that S. Matthew wrote it originally as we have it, "by the prophet Jeremiah," and that he used the name Jeremiah as the representative of the prophets, and that the Evangelist is quoting a text from the volume of the prophets under the name that stood first in that volume. Though Zechariah did not go on to state the object for which he gave the thirty pieces of silver to the potter, S. Matthew might fairly add it, knowing by the Holy Spirit that the object of this was the purchase of the potter's field, and that this had been unconsciously fulfilled by the Jews. It has also been pointed out⁴ that S. Matthew's expression, "spoken by Jeremy the prophet," would not be inconsistent with this being a traditional prophecy of Jeremiah, spoken by him, but not recorded among his prophecies.

When he had related the miserable end of Judas, S. Matthew returns to his account of Jesus, who, as he had said, was led bound to Pilate. He omits several particulars which S. John supplies; such as that the chief priests objected to enter Pilate's residence, or the judgment hall (πραιτώριον),⁵

¹ Origen, in Matt. xxvii. 9; vol. iii. p. 1769.

Eusebius, Demonstr. Evangel. x. in Zechariah; vol. iv. p. 746.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvii. 9; vol. vii. p. 205.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxi. p. 567.

Maltonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 9; vol. i. p. 443. [Cornelius

Cornelius a Lapide, in Zechariah xi. 13; vol. vii. p. 757.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 7; vol. iii. p. 1175.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxvii. 9; vol. iii. p. 120.

³ Lightfoot, in Matt. xxvii. 9; vol. ii. p. 264.

⁴ McClellan, New Testament, p. 606.

Of which sort is that also of our Saviour (Luke xxiv. 44): "All things must be fulfilled which are written of Me in the Law and the Prophets, and the Psalms." In the Psalms, that is, in the book of Hagiographa, in which the Psalms were placed first.—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxvii. 9; vol. ii. p. 265.

* The judgment hall (πραιτώριον).—"It is most probable that the Prætorium was a portion of the Castle of Antonia, which was situated at the north-west extremity of the Temple mount, and was occupied by Roman troops, and also included the παρεμβολή to which Paul was carried when taken prisoner, overlooking the Temple and all that went on there (Acts xxi. 37, xxiii. 10). Our view of the site of the Prætorium may be confirmed by the following considerations. It is evidently in an open place in front of this prætorium—for John says expressly, ἤγαγεν ἔξω (i.e. out of the prætorium) τὸν Ἰησοῦ καὶ ἐκάθισεν, xix. 13—that we must look for the λιθόστρωτον, 'called in Hebrew Gabbatha;' and the fact is that Josephus does really mention a λιθόστρωτον just between the Castle of Antonia and the western angle of the inner Temple (Bell. Jud. vi. 1, 8, and 3, 2). Nay, the very rock on which the castle was built was covered both for ornament and protection, from its foundation upwards, with smooth slabs of stone (πλατὴ κεκάλυπτο λείαις λίθων, Bell. Jud. v. 5, 8). We now see the reason why the place was called in the Hebrew גַּבְבַּתָּא, גַּבְבָּתָּא, from the Hebrew בֵּן (the back). For it was the back, the surface of the Temple mount. It was here, within sight of the Temple and the crowd of Jews who were speedily about to keep the feast in the Temple, that Pilate after long delay ascended the judgment-seat, βῆμα, to pronounce sentence of death on Jesus, whom he himself considered guiltless."—WILSELLER, 'Chronolog. Synopsis,' p. 372.

on the ground that to enter the house of a heathen would render them unclean, for that day at least, and would disqualify them from continuing to keep the Passover, and from offering the Chagigah or the festival offerings of bullocks, which it was customary to offer that very morning—that is, on the morning which succeeded the evening on which they had eaten the Paschal lamb: that Pilate, from respect to their scruples, came out to them and asked them what accusation they brought against Jesus: that, regarding Him as a common malefactor, he gave them the option of deciding the case themselves, which the Jews refused, alleging that they had not the power to put any man to death, and thus intimating to Pilate that they had resolved on the death of Jesus, and that they meant to make him the instrument in carrying this into execution. All this is omitted by S. Matthew and the other two Evangelists, and is related only by S. John.

JESUS BEFORE PILATE.

S. MATTHEW xvii. 11-14.

S. MARK xv. 2-5.

S. LUKE xxiii. 2, 3.

S. JOHN xviii. 28-38.

28 — And they themselves went not into the judgment hall, lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the Passover.

29 Pilate then went out unto them, and said, What accusation bring ye against this Man?

30 They answered and said unto him, If He were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered Him up unto thee.

31 Then said Pilate unto them, Take ye Him, and judge Him according to your law. The Jews therefore said unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death:

32 That the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled, which He spake, signifying what death He should die.

2 And they began to accuse Him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Caesar, saying that He Himself is Christ a King.

11 And Jesus stood before the governor:

and the governor asked Him, saying,

2 And Pilate asked Him,

Art Thou the King of the Jews?

Art Thou the King of the Jews?

3 And Pilate asked Him, saying,

Art Thou the King of the Jews?

33 Then Pilate entered into the judgment hall again, and called Jesus,

and said unto Him,

Art Thou the King of the Jews? 34 Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of Me?

35 Pilate answered, Am I a Jew? Thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered Thee unto me: what hast Thou done?

36 Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world: if My kingdom were of this world, then would My servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is My kingdom not from hence.

37 Pilate therefore said unto Him,

Art Thou a King then?

Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a King.

And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest.

And He answering said unto him, Thou sayest it.

And He answered him and said, Thou sayest it.

S. MATTHEW xxvii.

S. MARK xv.

S. LUKE xxiii.

S. JOHN xviii.

To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth
My voice.

38 Pilate saith unto Him, What is truth? And when he had said this, he went out again unto the Jews, and saith unto them, I find in Him no fault at all.

12 And when He was accused of the chief priests and elders,
He answered nothing.

13 Then said Pilate unto Him,

Hearst Thou not how many things
they witness against Thee?

14 And He answered him to never a word;
insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly.

3 And the chief priests accused Him of many things:
but He answered nothing.

4 And Pilate asked Him again, saying, Answerest Thou nothing?
behold,

how many things
they witness against Thee.

5 But Jesus yet answered nothing;
so that Pilate
 marvelled.

11. And Jesus stood before the governor: and the governor asked Him, saying, Art Thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest.

S.V. omit unto him.
Vulg. Dicit illi Iesus.

12. And when He was accused of the chief priests and elders, He answered nothing.

13. Then said Pilate unto Him, Hearst Thou not how many things they witness against Thee?

Vulg. Tunc dicit illi Pilatus: Non audis quanta adversum te dicunt testimonia?

14. And He answered him to never a word;
insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly.

In the council which they had just held the Sanhedrin had come to the conclusion that Jesus was guilty of death on the score of blasphemy, because that He, as they said, being a Man, made Himself God. But they were aware that this would not be held a sufficient cause of death by Pilate.
When they therefore bring Jesus before Pilate, they prefer against Him three totally different charges; namely, three crimes against the State. 1. That He had perverted (διαστρέφοντα) the nation, or that by His teaching He had rendered the nation disaffected to its rulers. 2. That He had refused to pay tribute. 3. That He had set Himself up as a rival to Cæsar, claiming Himself to be the King of the Jews. Pilate examines Jesus only on the last of these three charges, probably as including in it the other two. The fullest account of this examination is furnished by S. John.
In reply to his question whether He were a King, Jesus, perhaps by way of reminding Pilate that he is bound to examine narrowly into the matter himself, and not to trust to the representation of the Jews, inquires whether he asked this of himself or because others said it of Him; that is, whether Pilate, in his office as Cæsar's representative, and consequently as the guardian of his rights, had discovered any ground for such an accusation against Him, or whether he was merely repeating the accusation of His enemies.

Jesus then acknowledges that He is a King, but explains the nature of His kingdom so much to Pilate's satisfaction that he comes out from the Prætorium, bringing Jesus with him, and confesses to the Jews that he finds no fault in Him.
Upon this the chief priests and other members of the Council overwhelm Jesus with accusations, to none of which He replies, until His silence excites the surprise of Pilate.

See also Commentary on S. John xviii. 33, &c.

S. Luke relates that when the Jews were accusing Jesus Pilate gathered from an expression which they made use of that He was a Galilaean, and therefore belonged to Herod's jurisdiction. Herod Antipas himself was now at Jerusalem, and Pilate, glad to be rid of this case, and anxious to make up for former slights towards Herod, seizes upon this as an opportunity for making peace with him, and sends Jesus to Herod. S. Luke alone records this, along with Herod's examination of Him (xxiii. 4-12). Herod Antipas, the murderer of John the Baptist, had for a long time been anxious to see Jesus and to gratify his curiosity with respect to His power. Though he is represented by the Jews as having threatened the death of Jesus (S. Luke xiii. 32), yet when now he has Him in his power, he only abuses Him and mocks Him, and arrays Him in a robe intended to throw ridicule upon Him, and then sends Him back to Pilate.

After Herod had sent Jesus back, Pilate makes one more attempt to rescue Him out of the hands of the Jews.

PILATE SENDS JESUS TO HEROD, AND SEEKS TO RELEASE HIM.

S. MATTHEW xxvii. 15-25.

S. MARK xv. 6-14.

S. LUKE xxiii. 4-23.

S. JOHN xviii. 39, 40.

4 Then saith Pilate to the chief priests and to the people, I find no fault in this Man.

5 And they were the more fierce, saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place.

6 When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the Man were a Galilaean.

7 And as soon as he knew that He belonged unto Herod's jurisdiction, he sent Him to Herod, who himself also was at Jerusalem at that time.

8 And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: for he was desirous to see Him of a long season, because he had heard many things of Him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by Him.

9 Then he questioned with Him in many words; but He answered him nothing.

10 And the chief priests and scribes stood and vehemently accused Him.

11 And Herod with his men of war set Him at nought, and mocked Him, and arrayed Him in a gorgeous robe, and sent Him again to Pilate.

12 And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together: for before they were at enmity between themselves.

13 And Pilate, when he had called together the chief priests and the rulers and the people,

14 Said unto them, Ye have brought this Man unto me, as one that perverteth the people: and, behold, I, having examined Him before you, have found no fault in this Man touching those things whereof ye accuse Him:

15 No, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him; and, lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto Him.

16 I will therefore chastise Him, and release Him.

17 (For of necessity he must release one unto them at the feast.)

39 But ye have a custom, that I should release unto you one at the Passover:

15 Now at that feast the governor was wont to release unto the people a prisoner, whom they would.
16 And they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas.

6 Now at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired.
7 And there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection.

S. MATTHEW xxvii.

S. MARK xv.

S. LUKE xxiii.

S. JOHN xviii.

8 And the multitude crying aloud began to desire him to do as he had ever done unto them.

17 Therefore when they were gathered together,
Pilate said
unto them,
Whom will ye that
I release unto you?
Barabbas, or Jesus
which is called Christ?

18 For he knew that for envy
they had delivered Him.

19 When he was set down on the judgment seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that Just Man:
for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of Him.

20 But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas,

and destroy Jesus.

21 The governor answered and said
unto them,
Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you?
They said, Barabbas.

22 Pilate saith unto them,
What shall I do then with Jesus
which is called Christ?

They all say unto him,
Let Him be crucified.

23 And the governor said,

Why, what evil
hath He done?

But they cried out the more,
saying,

Let Him be crucified.

24 When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this Just Person: see ye to it.

25 Then answered all the people, and said, His blood be on us, and on our children.

9 But Pilate answered them, saying,
Will ye that
I release unto you

the King of the Jews?

10 For he knew that the chief priests had delivered Him for envy.

11 But the chief priests
moved the people, that he should rather release
Barabbas
unto them.

12 And Pilate
answered and said again
unto them,

What will ye then that I shall do unto Him whom ye call

the King of the Jews?

13 And they cried out again,
Crucify Him.

14 Then Pilate said
unto them,

Why, what evil
hath He done?

And they cried out
the more exceedingly,

Crucify Him.

18 And they cried out
all at once, saying,
Away with this Man, and release unto us
Barabbas:

19 (who for a certain sedition made in the city, and for murder, was cast into prison.)

20 Pilate therefore, willing to release Jesus, spake again to them.

21 But they cried, saying,
Crucify Him,
crucify Him.

22 And he said
unto them
the third time,
Why, what evil
hath He done?

I have found no cause of death in Him: I will therefore chastise Him, and let Him go.

23 And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that He might be crucified.
And the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed.

will ye therefore that
I release unto you

the King of the Jews?

40 Then cried they all again, saying,
Not this Man,
but Barabbas.

Now Barabbas was a robber.

15. Now at that feast^a the governor was wont to release unto the people a prisoner, whom they would.

^{S.} they asked.
^{Vulg.} Per diem autem solennem consueverat præses populo dimittere unum vincitum.

16. And they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas.

^{Vulg.} Habebat autem tunc vincitum insignem.

17. Therefore when they were gathered together, Pilate said unto them, Whom will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, or Jesus which is called Christ?

18. For he knew that for envy they had delivered Him.

It is plain that Pilate in his trial of Jesus shows a feeling of justice and even of kindness towards Him.¹ He shows this in at least four different ways:—1. When the members of the Sanhedrin bring Jesus first to Pilate and declare that they had examined Him and found Him guilty of death, though this was the great Council of the Jewish nation and an acknowledged legal tribunal, he declines to confirm their sentence, or even to receive their evidence, without a personal examination of Jesus. 2. After he had examined Jesus, he honestly declares Him innocent of the crimes charged against Him, though he knew this was the very way to exasperate the Jews against his government. 3. He not only pleads for the acquittal of Jesus as innocent in his opinion after due examination, but he also brings forward the testimony of Herod in His favour, as shown by his declining to punish Him. 4. Last of all Pilate makes a proposal which could not have failed to release Jesus if His enemies had not been devoid of all shame. Year by year the governor had been in the habit of granting to the multitude the pardon of one criminal at the Passover, and Pilate now proposes to extend this act of grace either to Jesus or to Barabbas, as they should decide. He never supposed that Jesus, whose life had been spent in acts of mercy and beneficence among the Jews, could for a moment be compared with Barabbas, a notorious robber, guilty also of sedition and murder. Even the envy of the chief priests, bitter as it was, he thought, could not cause them to hesitate in such a choice as this.

Besides Pilate's testimony to the innocency of Jesus, Pilate's wife also bore testimony that He was a Just Man. Pilate's conviction was gained by his examination of Jesus, his wife's through the influence of a dream divinely imparted to her.² It is said that her name was Claudia Procula, and that the effect of this dream upon her was such as to convince her that Jesus was the Messiah, the Son of God, and that she afterwards became a Christian.³ Some have supposed that the Claudia mentioned by S. Paul in his Second Epistle to Timothy (iv. 21) was the wife of Pilate, and that she had remained at Rome when her husband was sent into banishment, as a punishment for the many atrocities he had committed on the Jews.

S. Matthew alone records the message of Pilate's wife.

19. ¶ When he was set down on the judgment seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that Just Man: for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of Him.

20. But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus.

21. The governor answered and said unto them, Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you? They said, Barabbas.

22. Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let Him be crucified.

^{S.V.A.} omit unto him.

^{Vulg.} Deum omnes: Crucifigatur.

23. And the governor said, Why, what evil hath He done? But they cried out the more, saying, Let Him be crucified.

^{S.V.} And he said.

^{Vulg.} At illis præses: Quid enim mali fecit?

Unable to convince the people of their injustice in desiring

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 8; vol. iii. p. 1179.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xli. p. 572.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 17; vol. i. p. 448.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 15; vol. viii. p. 520.

² Origen, in Matt. xxvii. 19; vol. iii. p. 1773.

Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxvi.; vol. ii. p. 506.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxvii. 19; vol. i. p. 156.

^a Now at that feast (κατὰ δὲ ἑορτήν).—The Syriac reads

בכל עתה, and so the Arab. كل عيد, 'every feast.' Beza, singulis festis, 'at each of the feasts,' which pleases me not at all. For it is plainly said by Pilate himself, 'That I should release unto you one at the Passover' (John xviii. 39). And the releasing of a prisoner suits not so well to the other feasts, as to the Passover. Because the Passover carries with it the memory of the release of the people out of Egypt; but other feasts had other respects. κατὰ τὴν ἑορτήν I would render by way of paraphrase, according to Euthymius, in Matt. xxvii. 19; vol. ii. p. 1099.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xxiii. 11; vol. ii. p. 1829.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlii. p. 576.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 19; vol. i. p. 450.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 19; vol. viii. p. 521.

³ Fl. L. Dexter, Chronicon, A.D. 34; Migne's Patrol. vol. xxxi. p. 69.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 19; vol. viii. p. 521.

the nature and quality of the feast, which was a monument of release.—LIGHTFOOT on Mark xv. 6; vol. ii. p. 356.

"κατὰ ἑορτήν, which means simply 'at festival time,' should not be translated 'at the feast' (Luke xxiii. 17), still less 'at that feast' (Matt. xxvii. 15; Mark xv. 6), because these renderings seem to limit the custom to the feast of the Passover—a limitation which is not implied in the original expression, and certainly is not required by the parallel passage in S. John xviii. 39."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'On Revision of N. T.,' p. 115.

the release of the guilty Barabbas and the crucifixion of the innocent Jesus, and too weak to act on his own sense of what was right in him as the judge and acquit Jesus, Pilate resorts to an expedient to satisfy his own scruples, and to throw on the Jews the blame of his decision, which he publicly avows to be unrighteous.

S. Matthew alone records the washing of Pilate's hands, &c. (verses 24, 25).

24. ¶ When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this Just Person: see ye to it.

V. emittit Just: S*. but you will see.

Vulg. Innocens ego sum a sanguine justis hujus: vos videritis.

25. Then answered all the people, and said, His blood be on us, and on our children.

In washing his hands Pilate used a form prescribed by the Jewish law (Deut. xxi. 6), but prescribed for the really innocent and not for the guilty, like himself; for, in his capacity as judge, Pilate sinned as much as the Jews did as accusers. In weakly yielding to their demands and threats, he was as guilty of the Blood of Jesus as the Jews were in unjustly demanding His crucifixion. Pilate condemned Jesus to death against his better judgment, and he showed throughout the whole trial such a strong desire to acquit Him, that he is described by a writer of the second century "as a Christian at heart."¹ He sinned apparently unwillingly, but the root of his sin lay in preferring worldly policy to strict justice.

So severe and unparalleled were the sufferings which these very men and their children of the first generation endured, that a very general belief prevailed at the time that they were paying the penalty of putting this righteous Man to death. Within forty years from this time the Jewish nation saw the destruction of the Temple, the dearest object of their love and glory, the sacking and total destruction of Jerusalem, the death of thousands of their countrymen by crucifixion and other execrable tortures, by famine and by the sword, and the dispersion of the remnant into every land on the face of the earth.

There is some little difficulty with respect to the scourging of Jesus mentioned by the four Evangelists. It was the custom of the Romans first to scourge those whom they had condemned to be crucified. S. Luke (xxiii. 22) and S. John (xix. 1-5) both seem to imply that Pilate's object in scourging Jesus was rather in the hope that it might serve as a substitute for His Crucifixion, and not as preparatory to it. S. Matthew (xxvii. 26) and S. Mark (xv. 15) speak of it as taking place, without making mention of any such motive. Some have hence concluded that Jesus was twice scourged: first, to excite the pity of the Jews, which is referred to by S. Luke and S. John; and afterwards, just before His Crucifixion, according to the usual practice, which is related by S. Matthew and S. Mark. But the most probable explanation² is, that only one scourging is alluded to, and that S. Matthew and S. Mark refer to it as being the usual custom before crucifixion, while S. Luke and S. John give Pilate's additional object and hope in it—namely, that when they had seen Jesus thus mangled and reduced to such a pitiable state, their hearts might relent, and they might refrain from wreaking further vengeance on Him.

JESUS IS SCOURGED, DELIVERED TO THE PEOPLE, AND MOCKED.

S. MATTHEW xvii. 26-30.

S. MARK xv. 15-19.

S. LUKE xxiii. 24, 25.

S. JOHN xix. 1-16.

15 And so Pilate,
willing to content the people,

24 And Pilate
gave sentence that it should be as they required.

26 Then released he Barabbas unto them:

released
Barabbas unto them,

25 And he released unto them him that for sedition and murder
was cast into prison,
whom they had desired;
but he delivered Jesus and when he had scourged Jesus, and delivered Jesus, to their will.

1 Then Pilate therefore took Jesus,
and scourged Him.

he delivered Him
to be crucified.
27 Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the common hall, and gathered unto Him
the whole band of soldiers.

when he had scourged Him,
to be crucified.

16 And the soldiers

led Him away
into the hall, called Prætorium; and they call together
the whole band.

¹ Tertullian, Apolog. xxi. vol. i. p. 407.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 9; vol. iii. p. 1181.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlii. p. 577.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 23; vol. i. p. 451.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 26; vol. vii. p. 524.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 159.

S. MATTHEW xxvii.

28 And they stripped Him, and put on Him a scarlet robe (χλαμύδα κοκκίνην).
29 And when they had platted a crown of thorns,
they put it upon His head, and a reed in His right hand:
and they bowed the knee before Him, and mocked Him, saying,
Hail, King of the Jews!
30 And they spit upon Him,
and took the reed,
and smote Him on the head.

S. MARK xv.

17 And they clothed Him with purple (πορφύραν),
and platted a crown of thorns,
and put it about His head,

18 and began to salute Him,
Hail, King of the Jews!
19 And they smote Him
on the head with a reed,
and did spit upon Him,
and bowing their knees worshipped Him.

S. LUKE xxiii.

S. JOHN xix.

2 And the soldiers
platted a crown of thorns,
and put it on His head,
and they put on Him a purple robe (μάτιον πορφυρεόν),

3 and said,
Hail, King of the Jews!
and they smote Him
with their hands.

4 Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith unto them, Behold, I bring Him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in Him.

5 Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the Man!

6 When the chief priests therefore and officers saw Him, they cried out, saying, Crucify Him, crucify Him. Pilate saith unto them, Take ye Him, and crucify Him: for I find no fault in Him.

7 The Jews answered him,
We have a law, and by our law
He ought to die, because He made Himself the Son of God.

8 When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid;

9 And went again into the judgment hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art Thou? But Jesus gave him no answer.

10 Then saith Pilate unto Him,
Speakest Thou not unto me?
knowest Thou not that I have power to crucify Thee, and have power to release Thee?

11 Jesus answered, Thou could-est have no power at all against Me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered Me unto thee hath the greater sin.

12 And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release Him: but the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this Man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar.

13 When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth, and sat down in the judgment seat in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha.

14 And it was the preparation of the Passover, and about the

S. MATTHEW xxvii.

S. MARK xv.

S. LUKE xliii.

S. JOHN xix.

26. ¶ Then released he Barabbas unto them: and when he had scourged Jesus, he delivered Him to be crucified.*

Vulg. Iesum autem flagellatum tradidit eis ut crucifigeretur.

27. Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the common hall, and gathered unto Him the whole band of soldiers.

Vulg. congregaverunt ad eum universam cohortem.

28. And they stripped Him, and put on Him a scarlet robe.^b

V.S.². And they clothed Him.

29. ¶ And when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon His head, and a reed in His right hand: and they bowed the knee before Him, and mocked Him, saying, Hail, King of the Jews!

30. And they spit upon Him, and took the reed, and smote Him on the head.

The Evangelists here enumerate nine different ways in which the soldiers mocked and maltreated Jesus:—(1) They assemble the whole band (σείρα), the whole cohort, or the tenth part of the legion stationed in the Castle of Antonia. (2) These men, with their rude hands and ruder jests, strip Him of His clothes, even of His inner vest, which was without seam, woven throughout. (3) In derision of His claim to be a king, they put on Him a robe, which S. Matthew terms scarlet (κόκκινον), and S. Mark and S. John purple (πορφύραν), meaning thereby not two robes of different colours, as some have thought, but one and the same robe, which could be indifferently described as scarlet or purple.¹ S. Matthew mentions not only the colour but the nature of this garment. It was the chlamys (χλαμύς) or robe worn by emperors, kings, and soldiers. (4) In the same spirit of derisive scorn and mockery, they plait a crown of thorns and put it on His head, intending by the material which they choose to inflict pain and to express their scorn and contempt for Him. (5) And they put a reed in His right hand. (6) They bow the knee to Him, to express still further their derision at His claim to be their king. (7) Having clothed Him like a king, they treat Him like a slave, and spit in His face, (8) and strike Him with their hands, and (9) smite Him on the head with a reed, thus driving the long-pointed thorns of the crown more deeply into His head.

The soldiers were unconscious that by these many acts of wanton cruelty and scorn they were fulfilling in a most remarkable manner the prophecy of Isaiah (liii.). Even the very meekness and silence in which the Son of Man bore all these cruelties and mockeries the prophet had minutely foretold.

S. John alone relates that after all this Pilate still sought to soften the hearts of the Jews and to release Jesus; and that when he stated that he found no fault in Him, and therefore, according to the Roman law, that he could not crucify Him, not being guilty of crime, they still persisted in their clamour for His Crucifixion, and declared that, if not guilty of death according to the Roman law, He was according to the Jewish law, because He had made Himself the Son of God—that Pilate, conjecturing,² from some words which the Jews had used, that Jesus might be descended from one of

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 9; vol. iii. p. 1181. Euthymius, in Matt. xxvii. 27; vol. ii. p. 1105. Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlii. p. 578. Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 28; vol. viii. p. 526.

* When he had scourged Jesus, he delivered Him to be crucified.—Josephus bears witness that it was a Roman custom to scourge before crucifying. De Bell. Jud. ii. xiv. 9: "They also caught many of the quiet people, and brought them before Florus, whom he first chastised with stripes, and then crucified."—"Florus ventured to do what no one had done before; that is, to have men of the equestrian order whipped, and nailed to the cross before his tribunal."—WHISTON'S Transl. p. 627.

^b And put on Him a scarlet robe.—"Τὸ χλαμύς κόκκινον of

² S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xix. 9; vol. vii. p. 640.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlii. p. 580.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 30; vol. viii. p. 529.

Matt. xxvii. 28, and the ἱμάτιον πορφύρεον of John xix. 2, are put for the paludamentum or military cloak worn by officers: see Adams' Rom. Antiq. p. 371; Smith's Dict. of Antiq., art. Paludamentum. The terms κόκκινον, coccus-dyed, crimson, and πορφύρεον, purple, seem to be nearly synonymous: just as in English purple-red and crimson are often interchanged. So Horace, Sat. ii. 6, 102, 'rubro cocco tincta vestis,' which in v. 106 is 'vestis purpurea.'—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek,' p. 226.

the heathen gods, and having a dread of some supernatural punishment if he should condemn Him to death, questions Jesus as to His origin, and that, having heard His statement, Pilate strove more than ever to release Him—that the Jews, perceiving this, cried out that, if he let this Man go, he was not Cæsar's friend, and that Pilate, afraid of being considered disaffected to Cæsar and his government, at once determined to sacrifice Jesus to their wishes, innocent though he believed Him to be.

JESUS IS LED TO BE CRUCIFIED.

S. MATTHEW xxvii. 31-34.

31 And after that they had mocked Him, they took the robe off from Him, and put His own raiment on Him, and led Him away to crucify Him.
32 And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled to bear His cross.

S. MARK xv. 20-23.

20 And when they had mocked Him, they took off the purple from Him, and put His own clothes on Him, and led Him out to crucify Him.
21 And they compel one Simon a Cyrenian, who passed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear His cross.

S. LUKE xxiii. 26-33.

26 And as they led Him away, they laid hold upon one Simon, a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus.
27 And there followed Him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented Him.
28 But Jesus turning unto them said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children.
29 For, behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck.
30 Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us.
31 For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?

32 And there were also two other, malefactors, led with Him to be put to death.
33 And when they were come to the place, which is called Calvary—

S. JOHN xix. 16, 17.

16 And they took Jesus, and led Him away.
17 And He bearing His cross

33 And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to say, a place of a skull, they gave Him vinegar to drink mingled with gall: and when He had tasted thereof, He would not drink.

22 And they bring Him unto the place called Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, The place of a skull.
23 And they gave Him to drink wine mingled with myrrh: but He received it not.

went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha.

31. And after that they had mocked Him, they took the robe off from Him, and put His own raiment on Him, and led Him away to crucify Him.

32. And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled to bear His cross.

33. And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to say, a place of a skull,

S. unto the place Golgotha.

Vulg. Et venerunt in locum qui dicitur Golgotha, quod est Calvarie locus.

34. ¶ They gave Him vinegar to drink^a mingled with gall: and when He had tasted thereof, He would not drink.

S. V. wine to drink.

Vulg. Et dederunt ei vinum bibere cum felle mistum.

Was ever sight like this? God Incarnate condemned to death by man, and led, like a common criminal, to the place of crucifixion. According to the custom of the country, a public crier^b would go before Him and proclaim the crimes with which He was charged. The cross which He had to carry, as Isaac had prefigured (Gen. xxii. 6),¹ a piece of wood some fifteen feet long, with a transverse piece, probably eight feet, and both strong enough to bear the weight of a man, must soon have overpowered His already exhausted frame. For the Agony in the garden, the various horrors of that fearful night, the walking about from place to place, from one judge to another, the scourging, the buffeting of the soldiers, the blows on His face and on His head, crowned as it was with thorns,—all these, not to speak of the sorrow at His heart, had well-nigh worn out the strength of human nature. When to this we add the carrying of His cross, with one of its ends dragging on the ground, every fall of it ripping up the wounds with which His Body had been covered by the lash of the scourge, no wonder that they feared lest He should scarcely survive to reach the place of crucifixion, or at least within such time as they could spare, and were glad to light upon a chance passer-by to relieve Him of His cross.

The strength of human nature, even of His human nature, unbroken as it was by sinful indulgence, could no longer sustain the weight of suffering which Jesus had endured in Soul and Body since the preceding evening. When He had left the Upper Room with His disciples, He crossed over the brook Cedron to the Garden of Gethsemane. Here followed His prayer and Agony. After a time, He was bound by the soldiers and conducted to the house of Annas; afterwards to that of Caiaphas; next to the Council room; then to Pilate; from him to Herod; and then back again to Pilate. In each of these places He had endured from the soldiers and servants every species of indignity and suffering that malice and cruelty could devise. In order to excite the compassion of the Jews, and so to procure His release, Pilate scourges Him, and then exhibits Him to the people as one who had suffered all that human nature could endure short of taking His life. In one form of suffering or another the whole night had been passed; and now in the morning, probably between nine and twelve, He is led out of the city towards Calvary, bearing His own cross.

Such was His condition when Simon of Cyrene,² a city in the north of Africa, accepted the office of carrying the cross ¹ Tertullian, adv. Judeos, x.; vol. ii. p. 626.

^a They gave Him vinegar to drink.—“To those that were to be executed they gave a grain of myrrh infused in wine to drink, that their understanding might be disturbed (In Bab. Sanhedr. xliii. 1); that is, that they might lose their senses. As it is said, ‘Give strong drink to them that are ready to die, and wine to those that are of a sorrowful heart,’ &c. And the tradition is, that some women of quality in Jerusalem allowed this freely of their own cost, &c.

“But it makes a scruple that in Matthew it is ὄξος μετὰ χολῆς, ‘vinegar with gall;’ in Mark, ἐσσυμμιγμένον ὀλῶν, ‘wine mingled with myrrh.’ If wine, why is it called vinegar? If wine mingled with myrrh, why gall? Ans. The words of Mark seem to relate to the custom of the nation; those of Matthew to the thing as it was really acted. I understand Mark thus, They gave Him, according to the custom of the nation, that cup which used to be given to those that were led to execution; but (as Matthew has it) not the usual mixture, namely, wine and frankincense or myrrh; but for the greater mockery, and out of more bitter rancour, vinegar and gall. So that we may suppose this cup not to have been prepared by those honourable women, compassionate those that were to die, but on purpose by the scribes and other persecutors of Christ, studying to heap upon Him all kind of ignominy and vexation. In this cup they afterwards dipped a sponge, as may be supposed. See verse 48.”—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxvii. 34; vol. ii. p. 267.

“Vinegar was the common drink of the Roman soldiers; and hence those to whom the custody of crucified persons was committed, had it always ready by them. ‘He commanded that no soldier should drink wine in their expedition, but that every one should content himself with vinegar’ (Elian. Spartian. in Pescen. Nigr.). ‘The provision this man (viz. Mithreus) made in the Commonwealth was such, that there never was any greater frontier city which had not vinegar, bread-corn, and bacon, and barley, and chaff, laid out for a whole year’ (Capitolin. in Gordiano tertio).

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 32; vol. viii. p. 530.

“Hence it may become less difficult to reconcile the Evangelists among themselves, speaking of wine given Him mixt with myrrh, and of vinegar too: viz., a twofold cup, one before He was nailed to the cross, i.e. of wine mingled with myrrh; the other of vinegar, while He hung there. The first given by the Jews, according to their custom; the second by the soldiers, in abuse and mockery. But if you will grant a third cup, then all difficulty vanisheth indeed. Let the first be wine mingled with myrrh, the second vinegar mingled with gall, the third mere vinegar, which the soldiers gave to malefactors, if they had desired drink, being that which they drank themselves. Hence the σκεῦος ὄξους μεσόν, the vessel filled with vinegar, was always in readiness, that the soldiers might drink, when they had a mind, and persons also upon the cross, if they stood in need of it.”—Ibid. on Luke xxiii. 36; vol. ii. p. 477.

“The offering of this rejected stupefying potion of the condemned before the nailing must be distinguished both from the repeated mock presentation of the vinegar after the nailing (Luke xxiii. 36) and from the accepted offering in response to the cry of thirst after the darkness (John xix. 28–30). N.B. The generic term ‘wine’ (ὀλῶν, vinum) includes all kinds of vinegar, and even beer (Hdt. ii. 77). Similarly ‘gall’ (χολῆς, fel) includes bitters of wormwood, poppy-juice, &c. (Deut. xxiii. 33; Prov. v. 4). The potion was mingled with gall or poppy-juice (Matt. xxvii. 34), and ‘flavoured with myrrh’ (Mark x. 23).”—MCCLELLAN, ‘New Testament,’ p. 609.

^b A Crier.—“A crier went before him that was to be executed, which proclaimed, ‘N. the son of N. is going to execution because he hath committed such a fact, and N. and N. are witnesses against him: if there be any that can clear him, let them speak.’ (Talm. Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 43, 1.)”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the New Testament,’ sect. lxxvi. vol. i. p. 267.

for Jesus, being compelled by the soldiers. But it is not improbable that some feeling of compassion for the Sufferer entered into his mind: for it is generally believed that a short time after this Simon became a Christian, a bearer of the Cross in its true sense. This is almost implied in S. Luke's reference to him, as the father of two men as well known in the Church as Alexander and Rufus were (Rom. xvi. 13). Some¹ of the early writers supposed that Simon was a Gentile, and that in him was prefigured the conversion of the Gentiles to the faith of Christ.

S. Luke alone relates that, as they were on their way to the place of crucifixion, and after Simon had relieved Him of the cross, Jesus turned to the women who followed Him, wailing and lamenting Him, and bade them weep not for Him, but for themselves and their children. He then goes on to foretell the appalling calamities which should soon overtake them, and which came to pass within forty years from this time. To show the extreme severity of the miseries that should befall them, He says, there shall be a certain degree of proportion between His punishment and deserts, and the punishment and deserts of the Jewish nation; that if He, "a green tree," bringing forth the fruit of righteousness abundantly, met with such a return, what ought to be, and what would be, the punishment of the Jewish nation, "a dry tree," which had lost all power of producing fruit, and fit only for the fire?²

A singular tradition³ is mentioned by several of the early writers, namely, that the place of crucifixion was called Golgotha or Calvary as having been the burial-place of Adam. But there can be little doubt that it was called Calvary, that is, "skull place," because it was the place where public criminals were put to death,⁴ and was outside the walls of Jerusalem. S. Paul (Heb. xiii. 11, &c.) alludes to the situation of Calvary as being outside the city, and implies that this was not an accidental arrangement, so to speak, of the Jews, but was especially ordered by God, and had its counterpart in the Christian dispensation: for he founds an argument on this, to show that the Death of Jesus being outside the city was not confined to the nation of the Jews, but extended to the Gentiles as well.⁵

It was the common custom to give to those whom they were intending to crucify wine mingled with myrrh, partly to allay their thirst and give them strength to go through their sufferings, and partly to stupefy their senses, that their feeling of pain might be somewhat dulled. Such a cup they offer to Jesus, which S. Matthew describes as vinegar mingled with gall (ὄξος μετὰ χολῆς μεμιγμένον); S. Mark, as wine mingled with myrrh (ἱσχυρυσμένον οἶνον). Many explanations have been given of the apparent discrepancy in these two accounts. It has been suggested that, as the soldiers acted without any order or authority, each doing that which seemed to him the greatest insult, they might offer Jesus both these cups,—one with vinegar mingled with gall, and another with wine mingled with myrrh. Or S. Mark may have mentioned the cup, wine mingled with myrrh, which was usually given to criminals before their execution, and which appears to have been provided at the expense of some benevolent ladies at Jerusalem; and S. Matthew, that which the soldiers in their wantonness and cruelty did actually offer to Jesus, namely, vinegar, which was their common drink, mingled with gall. Or both gall and myrrh may have been mingled in this cup. Nor is there such great difference between wine and vinegar as to cause any difficulty. Both the Evangelists may even be describing the same identical mixture. What S. Mark calls wine, S. Matthew may describe as vinegar from its sourness; and what S. Mark calls myrrh, S. Matthew may describe as gall from its excessive bitterness. Whatever the cup contained, Jesus refused it when He had tasted it, and thus He retained the power to feel to the utmost all the pain and suffering of death by crucifixion.⁶

This,⁷ which S. Matthew (xxvii. 34) and S. Mark (xv. 23) say they offered Him to drink now, was not the same as that which S. Luke (xxiii. 36) says they offered Him afterwards, nor the same as that mentioned by S. Matthew (xxvii. 48), S. Mark (xv. 36), and S. John (xix. 29). Thus they fulfilled the prophecy of the Psalmist (lxi. 21), "They gave Me also gall for My meat: and in My thirst they gave Me vinegar to drink."

¹ S. Hilary, in Matt. xxvii. 32; vol. i. p. 1073.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xxiii. 26; vol. ii. p. 1830.

S. Leo Magnus, Sermo de Passione Domini, viii. 5; vol. i. p. 340.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxvii. 32; vol. iii. p. 123.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 585.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 586.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 32; vol. i. p. 454.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 32; vol. viii. p. 531.

³ Origen, in Matt. xxvii. 32; vol. iii. p. 1777.

S. Epiphanius, Hæres. xli. 5; vol. i. p. 844.

S. Basil, in Isaiah v. 1; vol. ii. p. 347 (inter dubia).

S. Chrysostom, Homil. lxxix. in Joan. xix. 17.

⁴ S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvii. 33; vol. vii. p. 209.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxvii. 33; vol. iii. p. 123.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 587.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 3; vol. i. p. 455.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 33; vol. viii. p. 531.

⁵ S. Leo Magnus, Sermo de Passione Domini, viii. 5; vol. i. p. 340.

⁶ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 11; vol. iii. p. 1182.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvii. 34; vol. vii. p. 210.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 588.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 34; vol. i. p. 455.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 34; vol. viii. p. 532.

⁷ Jansenius, Maldonatus, and Cornelius a Lapide, ut supra.
Greswell, Harmony of the Four Gospels, pp. 372, 379, 380, and 381.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. 162 and 163.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, pp. 162-164.

THE CRUCIFIXION.

S. MATTHEW xxvii. 35-38.

S. MARK xv. 24-28.

S. LUKE xxiii. 33, 34, 38.

S. JOHN xix. 18-24.

33 There they crucified Him, and the malefactors,
one on the right hand,
and the other on the left.

34 Then said Jesus,
Father, forgive them;
for they know not what they do.

18 Where they crucified Him, and two other with Him,
on either side one,
and Jesus in the midst.

35 And they crucified Him, and parted
His garments,

24 And when they had crucified Him, they parted
His garments,

And they parted
His raiment,

23 Then the soldiers,
when they had crucified Jesus, took
His garments,
and made four parts,
to every soldier a part;
and also His coat: now the coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout.

casting lots:

that it might be fulfilled which was spoken
by the prophet,

"They parted My garments
among them,
and upon My vesture
did they cast lots."

casting lots upon them, what every man should take.

and cast lots.

24 They said therefore among themselves,
Let us not rend it,
but cast lots for it,
whose it shall be:
that the scripture
might be fulfilled,
which saith,

"They parted My raiment
among them,
and for My vesture
they did cast lots."
These things therefore the soldiers did.

25 And it was the third hour, and they crucified Him.

36 And sitting down they watched Him there;
37 and set up over His head
His accusation
written,

26 And the superscription of His accusation was written over,

38 And a superscription also was written over Him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew,
THIS IS

19 And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross.
And the writing was,

THIS IS JESUS

THE KING OF THE JEWS.

THE KING OF THE JEWS.

THE KING OF THE JEWS.

JESUS OF NAZARETH
THE KING OF THE JEWS.
20 This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jesus was crucified was high to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin.

21 Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not,
The King of the Jews; but that
He said, I am King of the Jews.

22 Pilate answered, What I have written I have written.

38 Then were there two thieves crucified
with Him,
one on the right hand,
and another on the left.

27 And with Him they crucify two thieves;

the one on His right hand, and the other on His left.

28 And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And He was numbered with the transgressors.

35. And they crucified Him, and parted His garments, casting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet,

"They parted My garments among them, and upon My vesture did they cast lots."^a

S. V. A. omit that it might be—did they cast lots.

Vulg. Ut impleretur quod dictum est per prophetam dicentem: Diviserunt sibi vestimenta mea, et super vestem meam miserunt sortem.

36. And sitting down they watched Him there;

37. And set up over His head His accusation written, THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

38. Then were there two thieves^b crucified with Him, one on the right hand, and another on the left.

Vulg. Tunc crucifixi sunt cum eo duo latrones: unus a dextris, et unus a sinistris.

None of the Evangelists relate at any length the way in which they crucified Jesus, describing it in one word, "they crucified Him;" that is, according to the usual way. We learn, after the Resurrection, that they drove nails into His hands and feet (S. Luke xxiv. 40, and S. John xx. 25), which had been already foretold by the Psalmist (xxii. 16). They crucified two robbers at the same time, in order to connect Him, in the eyes of the multitude, with them and their deeds, and they place Him in the middle, as the leader of them, the first and foremost of them. Such would be the object of the chief priests in placing Jesus between two thieves, while the object of Pilate would be to furnish a cloke for his iniquitous judgment.¹

S. Luke alone relates that before the soldiers parted His garments, Jesus prayed aloud to the Father to forgive those who were crucifying Him, on the ground that they did not know they were crucifying their God, otherwise they would not have done it. Their ignorance that Jesus was God is urged as a plea to diminish their guilt in crucifying Him.

After His prayer, the four soldiers who were appointed to carry out the Crucifixion, and to watch Him after it, parted His garments among them. S. John relates this with the greatest circumstantiality, particularly mentioning the disposal of His coat (τὸν χιτῶνα) or vesture (τὸν ἱματισμόν).

There were four soldiers and a centurion, and the soldiers divided His outer garments (ἱμάτια) into four parts, and cast lots for His inner close-fitting vesture (χιτῶν or ἱματισμός). A commentator² writing in the twelfth century mentions a tradition which he says was handed down from the "Fathers," and which some later writers³ have thought not improbable, that this vesture was the work of the Blessed Virgin herself. As has been observed, it had that of cost and beauty about it which made even the rude soldiers unwilling to read it or divide it into pieces, and so to destroy it.

From the record or copies which the four Evangelists give of the title that was set over Jesus, we may almost gather what they understood by accuracy of relation. The one important point in this title is His accusation, the treason that He was charged with, that He claimed to be the King of the Jews. This all the four give without the slightest variation. But in the rest—namely, in the description of Him—they differ. S. Mark gives, "The King of the Jews;" S. Luke, "This is the King of the Jews;" S. Matthew, "This is Jesus the King of the Jews;" and S. John, "This is Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews." But this is just the diversity that proves their testimony to be independent and trustworthy.

This title was written in three languages—in Hebrew,⁴ Greek, and Latin: in Hebrew, because it was the language

¹ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 21; vol. i. p. 459.

² Euthymius, in Matt. xxvii. 35; vol. ii. p. 1117.

^a Verse 35.—"Lachmann, Tregelles, Tischendorf omit that it might be fulfilled—did cast lots."—SCRIVENER, Greek Test. 1877.

^b Two thieves (δύο ἄσποτοι).—The following passages from Josephus will show that the ἄσποτοι of Palestine were more what we understand by the modern brigands or banditti, than thieves. "In Sepphoris also, a city of Galilee, there was one Judas, the son of that arch-robber (ἀρχιλοστής) Hezekias, who formerly overran the country, and had been subdued by King Herod." (De Bell. ii. 4, 1.) "In Perea also, Simon . . . also went about with a company of robbers (Ἀσποῶν) that he had gotten together, and burnt down the royal palace that was at Jericho, and many other costly edifices besides, and procured himself very easily spoils by rapine, as snatching them out of the fire" (ii. 4, 2). "This Felix took Eleazar the arch-robber (ἀρχιλοστήν), and many that were with him, alive, when they had ravaged the country for twenty years together, and sent them to Rome; but as to the number of the robbers (Ἀσποῶν) whom he caused to be crucified, and of whom those who were caught among them, and those he brought to punishment, they were a multitude not to be enumerated" (De Bell. ii. 13, 2). "When the country was purged of these, there sprang up another sort of robbers (Ἀσποῶν) in Jerusalem, which were called Sicarii, who slew men in the day-time, and in the midst of the city: this they did chiefly at the festivals, when they mingled themselves among the multitude, and concealed daggers under their garments, with which they stabbed those that were their enemies; and when any fell down dead, the murderers became a part of those that had indignation against them: by which means they appeared persons of such reputation, that they could by no means be discovered" (De Bell. ii. 13, 3).

³ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 35; vol. i. p. 457.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 35; vol. viii. p. 537.

⁴ Hebrew.—"The great crisis of the language occurs at the time of the captivity in Babylon. There, as a spoken tongue, it became deeply tinged with the Aramaic. The biblical Hebrew, abiding in the imperishable writings of the prophets, continued to be the study of the learned; it was heard on the lips of the priest, in the services of religion, and was the vehicle of written instruction; but, as the medium of common conversation, it was extensively affected, and in the case of multitudes superseded, by the idiom of the nation among whom Providence had cast their lot. So an Aramaized Hebrew, or a Hebraized Aramaean, continued to be spoken by such of them as re-settled in Palestine under Ezra and of the people of the land, and called Hebrew not because it was the language in which the Old Testament was written, but because it was that which they spoke when they returned from the Captivity in Chaldaea, and which they continued to speak afterwards; in Greek, because it was the language of many of the Jews, especially of those who had resided in foreign lands; in Latin, because it was the language of the Romans. Thus all who saw this title would be able to read it. S. John alone relates that the chief priests of the Jews remonstrated with Pilate on the title, as setting forth that Jesus was, rather than that He pretended to be, the King of the Jews, and that he declined to alter it.

The day of the week on which Jesus was crucified is fixed by all the Evangelists. This was called indiscriminately "the day of the preparation," "the preparation," and "the Jews' preparation day." S. Matthew speaks of it once, and calls it "the day of the preparation" (xxvii. 62); S. Mark once, and calls it "the preparation" (xv. 42); S. Luke once, and calls it "the preparation" (xxiii. 54); and S. John three times, and calls it "the preparation of the Passover" (xix. 14), "the preparation" (xix. 31), and "the Jews' preparation day" (xix. 42). S. Mark describes "the preparation" as "the day before the Sabbath," and S. Matthew and S. Luke speak of the Sabbath as the day after the preparation. Because S. John calls it "the preparation of the Passover," some have inferred that, besides a preparation day for the weekly Sabbath, there was also a preparation day for the whole Feast of the Passover. But as S. John twice speaks of "the preparation day" in close connection with the Sabbath, and as there is no trace, either in the Old Testament or in the contemporary writers, Philo and Josephus, or in the Talmudists, of any preparation day for the Passover, it has been fairly concluded that by the words "the preparation of the Passover," S. John meant the preparation day for the Sabbath which fell in the Passover week; that is, the Friday or day before the Sabbath in the Passover week.

Three of the Evangelists—S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke—state that there was darkness over the land from the sixth hour to the ninth. S. John does not mention the darkness. The only apparent discrepancy in the accounts of the Crucifixion is in that given by S. Mark and S. John. S. Mark (xv. 25) says, "It was the third hour, and they crucified Him," while S. John (xix. 14) says it was "about Nehemiah; while the yet greater number who preferred the uninterrupted establishment of their families in Babylonia, fell entirely into the use of Aramaic."—J. W. ETHERIDGE on Hebrew Literature, p. 4.

* And it was the third hour, and they crucified Him.—"It was the preparation of the Passover," saith John, "and about the sixth hour," when Pilate delivered Christ to be crucified. "And it was the third hour," saith Mark, "and they crucified Him." . . . One supposes that copiers were deceived in their transcription, and would have the computation of John corrected into ἡν δὲ ἄρα δέκα ὥρην, "and it was about the third hour." Too boldly, and indeed without any reason; for it is neither credible, nor indeed possible, that those things which went before our Saviour's Crucifixion should be done, to use the words of the Talmudists, in the three first hours of the day. The harmony therefore of the Evangelists is to be fetched elsewhere.

"Let us repeat that out of Maimonides. The great Sanhedrin sat from morning daily sacrifice until the afternoon daily sacrifice. But now when the morning daily sacrifice was at the third hour, the Sanhedrin sat not before that hour. Take heed therefore thou, that wouldest have the words of John, 'And it was about the sixth hour,' to be changed into 'And it was about the third hour,' lest thou become guilty of a great solecism. For Pilate could not deliver Christ to be crucified about the third hour, when the Sanhedrin sat not before the third hour, and Christ was not yet delivered to Pilate.

"But you will say, The words of Mark do obscure these things much more: for if the Sanhedrin that delivered up Christ met not together before the third hour, one can no way say that they crucified Him the third hour.

"We do here propose two things for the explanation of this matter. Let the first be taken from the day itself, and from the hour itself. That day was the preparation of the Passover, a day of high solemnity, and when it behoved the priests and the other Fathers of the Sanhedrin to be present at the third hour in the Temple, and to offer their Chagigahs, that were preparative to the whole seven days' festivity; but they employed themselves in another thing, namely this. You may observe that he saith not, It was the third hour, when; but 'it was the third hour, and they crucified Him.' That is, when the third hour now was, and was passed, yet they omitted not to prosecute His Crucifixion, when indeed, according to the manner of the feast and the obligation of religion, they ought to have been employed otherwise. I indeed should rather sit down satisfied with this interpretation, than to accuse the holy text as depraved, or to deprave it more with my amendment.

"Secondly. There is another sense also not to be despised, if our judgment is anything, which we fetch from a custom usual in the Sanhedrin, but from which they now swerved. They are treating concerning a guilty person condemned to hanging, with whom they deal in this process, 'They tarry until sunset approach, and then they finish his judgment, and put him to death' (Sanhedr. xlv. 2). Note that they finish not his judgment until sunset draw near. If you ask the reason, a more general one may be given, which respected all persons condemned to die; and a more special one, which respected him which was to be hanged.

"I. There was that which is called by the Talmudists, 'The affliction of judgment.' By which phrase they understood not judgment that is not just, but when he that is condemned, after judgment past, is not presently put to death. 'If you finish his judgment on the Sabbath (mark that) and put him to death on the first day of the week, you afflict his judgment' (Sanhedr. xxxv. 1). Where the gloss is, 'As long as his judgment is not finished, it is not the affliction of judgment, because he expects every hour to be absolved. But when judgment is ended, he expects death,' &c. Therefore they delayed but little between the finishing of judgment and execution.

"II. As to those that were to be hanged, 'They delayed the finishing his judgment, and they hanged him not in the morning, lest they might grow slack about his burial, and might fall into forgetfulness, and might sin against the Law (Deut. xxi. 23), but near sunset, that they might presently bury him.' So the gloss, 'They put him to death not sooner for this reason, they finished not his judgment sooner for the reason above said.'

"And now let us resume the words of Mark, 'And it was the third hour, and they crucified Him.' The Sanhedrin used not to finish the judgment of hanging, until they were now ready to rise up and depart from the Council and bench, after the Mincha, the day now inclining toward sunset: but these men finished the judgment of Jesus, and hastened Him to the cross, when they first came into the Court at the third hour, at the time of the daily sacrifice; which was very unusual, and different from the custom"—LIGHTFOOT on Mark xv. 25; vol. ii. p. 357.

the sixth hour: and he (Pilate) saith unto the Jews, Behold your King!" and then delivered Him unto them to be crucified. Many explanations have been given. S. Augustine¹ examined the question at great length, and on several different occasions, but he is evidently not satisfied with the solutions of the difficulty which he has to offer. One of these is, that S. Mark (xv. 25) might say, "It was the third hour, and they crucified Him," because the people, so far as lay in their power, crucified Him at that hour by demanding that He should be crucified, but that this was not carried into execution until the sixth hour; in other words, that the people crucified Him by their tongues at the third hour, and the soldiers by their hands at the sixth hour.

Some² have suggested that in S. Mark's words, "It was the third hour, and they crucified Him," a full stop should be placed after the first part, "it was the third hour," as connected with what had gone before, and not with the words "and they crucified Him."

Some³ have also held that by a mistake in the MSS. an interchange has been unintentionally made in the numeral letters; that some copyist of S. John's Gospel has written the digamma Ϝ, which stands for six, instead of the Γ, which stands for three. But this receives no countenance from the best MSS.

Another⁴ explanation is, that as the night was divided by the ancients into four equal parts or watches, so the day was also divided into four equal parts or stations. Of these, the first continued from daybreak to the third hour, and was called morning; the second continued from the third hour to the sixth, the whole period between which was called the third hour; the third continued from the sixth hour to the ninth, the whole time between which was called the sixth hour; while the fourth continued from the ninth hour to sunset and was called evening. According to this notation, it is argued that S. Mark's expression, "the third hour," would include any time between nine and twelve o'clock, and S. John's "about the sixth hour" would indicate a short time before the period from twelve to three o'clock began.

The explanation⁵ which appears the most probable is that S. Mark and S. John are not stating the time at which the Crucifixion took place from the same point of view: that S. Mark is stating the beginning, the acts that were preparatory to and led up to the Crucifixion, and S. John the actual Crucifixion itself.

S. John does not say it was the sixth hour when Pilate brought Jesus forth and delivered Him up to the Jews to be crucified, but "about (ὥστε) the sixth hour." This general statement of time may therefore be received with the limitations which the other Evangelists introduce into the narrative. S. Matthew and S. Mark say, that from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land until the ninth hour, and S. Luke from about the sixth hour. S. John does not refer to the darkness. From his use of the term about it is plain that he is not intending an exact definition of the time in which these events took place. All that he may have meant to say, and all that his words really imply, is that Jesus was delivered up to the Jews to be crucified about the sixth hour; that is, before the darkness came over the earth.

S. Mark's language may fairly be interpreted more strictly, because he does not himself, by the use of the word about (ὥστε), introduce any latitude into his statement of the time. The Crucifixion might begin at the third hour. But, in the strict and literal use of words, Jesus would not be crucified either at the third or at the sixth hour: for the Crucifixion was a work of considerable time, probably of several hours. A part of it might be at the third hour, and a part of it at the sixth hour, for the whole Crucifixion would extend over considerably more time than could be marked by the striking of a clock. The Crucifixion was not one act, but a series of acts. The period from nine o'clock to twelve would probably not be at all too long for the whole series of injustice, mockeries, and cruelties, which we gather up into the one word, "The Crucifixion."

An explanation⁶ has also been offered which appears not to have been noticed by any writer before the eighteenth century. It was then suggested that S. John is here using a different notation from that used by the rest of the Evangelists, and that he reckons the hours from midnight and midday like ourselves, and that, as this method of reckoning the hours of the day was in common use in Asia Minor, S. John naturally adopted it when writing his Gospel there. But no clear proof has been shown that it was at any time the custom in Asia Minor to compute the hours from midnight or midday; while, as it appears to me, the following considerations are sufficient to show that the custom in Asia Minor, at the time when S. John wrote his Gospel and afterwards, was to reckon the hours not from midnight but from sunrise.

1. Phlegon, the heathen historian, who was a contemporary of the Evangelist S. John and a native of Tralles in Asia Minor, not far from Ephesus, has related the occurrence of a darkness which took place at midday along with some other unusual phenomena. There is some difference of opinion as to the nature of the darkness to which he refers, and as to the year or the time of the year when it happened, but none as to the time of the day. Origen, Eusebius, and other Fathers understood Phlegon as referring to the supernatural darkness which happened at the Crucifixion. Later commentators have been led by modern scientific investigation to believe that he is recording an ordinary eclipse of the

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 13; vol. iii. p. 1183.

—, in Joan. xix. 17, tract. cxvii.; vol. iii. p. 1944.

—, in Psalm lxxiii. (alias 64), v. 3; vol. iv. p. 763.

² Euthymius, in Marc. xv. 25; vol. iii. p. 179.

³ Theophylact, in Joan. xix. 14; vol. i. p. 748.

⁴ Dean Jackson, on the Creed, Bk. viii. ch. 33; vol. viii. p. 167.

⁵ Janseuius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxli. p. 582.

⁶ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xix. 14; vol. viii. p. 1144.

See Lardner's Answers to Dr. Ward, vol. x. p. 278.

Townson, J., Discourses on the Four Gospels, pp. 220-239.

Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 373.

Bishop of Lincoln, Greek Testament, John xix. 14.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 737.

sun, which took place during the same year, but a few months later; which eclipse was total in a large portion of ancient Babylonia and Chaldea and of Western Persia, nearly total at Nicea, and the time of the greatest darkness about 11 A.M. Phlegon records the occurrence of such a darkness; and whether he is understood as referring to the darkness at the Crucifixion, or to that of the eclipse some months later, he is understood by all without exception as referring to noonday. But Phlegon, as reported by Eusebius,¹ describes the time of this darkness by the very same word that S. John uses here, "at the sixth hour of the day" (καὶ νῦν ὥρα ἕκτη τῆς ἡμέρας ἐγένετο). To refer to noon Phlegon must have reckoned the sixth hour of the day from sunrise.

2. We learn from Origen, who was born at Alexandria about A.D. 185, that the method of computing the hours of the day in use at Alexandria in his time was from sunrise. We gather this from his comment² on S. John's account of the healing of the centurion's servant (John iv. 50). We learn also from S. Cyril³ that the custom of calculating the hours of the day from sunrise was still in use in Alexandria in the fourth century.

3. S. Chrysostom was born at Antioch about A.D. 347, and afterwards became Archbishop of Constantinople, and must therefore have been well acquainted with the mode of calculating the hours of the day in Asia Minor, and we learn from him that this was from sunrise. We have comments by him⁴ on two different passages of S. John (i. 39, iv. 6), the only passages of S. John which bear on this subject, and on neither does he give any alternative explanation, as if there was then in Asia Minor, or ever had been, any method of calculating the hours of the day except from sunrise.

But is it at all probable that the method of computing the hours of the day in common use at Ephesus at the end of the first century would be different from that at Tralles at the same time, and different from that in use in Alexandria at the end of the second century, and from that in use at Antioch and Constantinople in the middle of the fourth century?

THE JEWS MOCK HIM.

S. MATTHEW xxvii. 39-44.	S. MARK xv. 29-32.	S. LUKE xxiii. 35-37, 39-43.	S. JOHN xix. 25-27.
39 And they that passed by reviled Him, wagging their heads, and saying, 40 Thou that destroyest the Temple, and buildest it in three days, save Thyself. If Thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross. 41 Likewise also the chief priests mocking Him, with the scribes and elders, said, 42 He saved others; Himself He cannot save. If He be the King of Israel, let Him now come down from the cross, and we will believe Him. 43 He trusted in God; let Him deliver Him now, if He will have Him: for He said, I am the Son of God.	29 And they that passed by railed on Him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, Thou that destroyest the Temple, and buildest it in three days, 30 save Thyself, and come down from the cross. 31 Likewise also the chief priests mocking said among themselves with the scribes, He saved others; Himself He cannot save. 32 Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe.	35 And the people stood beholding. And the rulers also with them derided Him, saying, He saved others; let Him save Himself, if He be Christ, the chosen of God. 36 And the soldiers also mocked Him, coming to Him, and offering Him vinegar,

¹ Eusebius Pamphil., Chronicon, lib. ii.; vol. i. p. 535.
² Origen, in Joan. tomus xiii. 60; vol. iv. p. 520.
³ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. i. 39; vol. vi. p. 217.
⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 39; Homil. xviii.
_____, in Joan. iv. 6; Homil. xxxi.

S. MATTHEW xxvii.

S. MARK xv.

S. LUKE xxiii.

S. JOHN xix.

44 The thieves also,

And they

which were crucified with Him, cast the same in His teeth.that were crucified with Him reviled Him.37 And saying, If Thou be the King of the Jews, save Thyself.

39 And one of the malefactors which were hanged

railed on Him, saying,
If Thou be Christ,
save Thyself and us.40 But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?41 And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this Man hath done nothing amiss.42 And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when Thou comest into Thy kingdom.43 And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with Me in paradise.25 Now there stood by the cross of Jesus His mother, and His mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene.26 When Jesus therefore saw His mother, and the disciple standing by, whom He loved, He saith unto His mother, Woman, behold thy son!27 Then saith He to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home.39. ¶ And they that passed by reviled Him, wagging their heads,40. And saying, Thou that destroyest the Temple, and buildest it in three days, save Thyself. If Thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross.

S.A. Save Thyself, if Thou be the Son of God, and come down.

Vulg. Et dicentes: Vah qui destruis Templum Dei, et in triduo illud reedificas: salva temetipsum: si Filius Dei es, descende de cruce.41. Likewise also the chief priests mocking Him, with the scribes and elders, said,

S.A. omit also: S. with the elders and scribes.

Vulg. Similiter et principes sacerdotum illud-ntes cum scribis et senioribus dicebant.42. He saved others; Himself He cannot save. If He be the King of Israel, let Him now come down from the cross, and we will believe.
Him.

S.V. save. He is the King.

Vulg. Alios salvos fecit: seipsum non potest salvare: si rex Israel est, descendat nunc de cruce, et credimus ei.

43. He trusted in God; let Him deliver Him now, if He will have Him: for He said, I am the Son of God.

A. omits now: S.V. let Him now, if He will, deliver Him.

Vulg. liberet nunc, si vult eum.

44. The thieves also, which were crucified with Him, cast the same in His teeth.Vulg. Idipsum autem et latrones, qui crucifixi erant eum eo, impropere-bant ei.The people imply no doubt as to the reality of His former miracles, but they reproach Him with having boasted that He would do more than He could perform. If He could rebuild the Temple in three days, He could certainly save Himself and come down from the cross. The chief priests go further than this in their scorn. They call in question the truth and reality of the miracles which He was said to have performed. If He could save others, He could save Himself. But He cannot save Himself, therefore He cannot have saved others. His miracles of healing and of raising the dead must have been a mere trick, or wrought by the power of Beelzebub. Such is the course of their reasoning.

To see how true are their words, that if He would come down from the cross, they would believe in Him, we have only to reflect how they were influenced by a miracle which He wrought, as great and as unusual as coming down from the cross would be. It was but a few weeks since Jesus had raised Lazarus from the grave. The evidence for this miracle was so overwhelming—for Lazarus had been buried four days, and he was now alive—that only two consequences were possible. They must either be convinced of the truth of the miracle, or driven into a course of desperate, unprincipled opposition. Men honest and sincere, and open to conviction, would have chosen the former, but the chief priests chose the latter, "From that day forth they took counsel together for to put Him to death" (John xi. 53).

By the reproaches which they heaped on Jesus they were unconsciously doing all that lay in their power to increase the evidence that He was the Messiah, the Son of God. They were fulfilling to the letter the prophecy of the Psalmist as to the way in which the Jewish nation would receive the Son of God when He did appear. The words of the Psalmist differ but little from the narrative of the Evangelist, "I am a worm, and no man: a reproach of men, and despised of the people. All they that see Me laugh Me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying, He trusted on the Lord that He would deliver Him; let Him deliver Him, seeing He delighted in Him" (xxii. 6-8).

S. Matthew and S. Mark say that "the robbers," or "they that were crucified with Him," railed on Him, while S. Luke says that "one of the malefactors" railed on Him. Two explanations of this have been offered. Some, chiefly the Greek commentators, think that at first both the robbers railed at Jesus, and that one of them, seeing His sufferings and the patience with which He bore them, and the darkness that came on, was suddenly converted to a belief in Him as the Son of God. Others² think, and this interpretation seems most consonant with the context, that S. Matthew and S. Mark do not mean to say that both the robbers railed at Jesus, but that they use the plural number to indicate men of that class or condition, just as S. Luke says (verse 36) the soldiers offered Him vinegar, meaning most probably one of them. A little before they had related that the soldiers mocked and reviled Him, and now that the chance passers-by and the chief priests reviled Him; and they go on to say, that even those who were crucified with Him, men of the condition and rank of robbers, railed at Him, which would be true if even one of them did so. If this be the right explanation, S. Luke's expression would appear much the more simple.

It has been shown³ that the term "thieves" is a very unfortunate translation of the Greek word λῃσται, which is applied to these two men by S. Matthew (xxvii. 38) and S. Mark (xv. 27), and that they probably belonged to the robber-band which was led by Barabbas. We know from contemporary history, that many of the bands of Palestine had their origin in fair resistance to aggression, either on their own rights or on those of their country. Though these men might degenerate afterwards in their aim and habits from their first beginning, there would still be room left in their hearts for the exercise of many noble qualities, which would at once have been extinguished by a daily course of petty thieving. In one of these robbers there needed but the presence of the Righteous to draw from him a corresponding desire.

S. Luke (xxiii. 39-43) alone relates that one of the robbers repented the other, and prayed to Jesus to remember him when He came into His kingdom, and that Jesus promised that he should that day be with Him in Paradise. The conversion⁴ of this robber would appear to have been caused not by the supernatural power which Jesus exerted at the Crucifixion, in the darkness and in the other convulsions of nature, but by His own behaviour, by His forbearance towards His enemies, and especially by the love which He showed for them. This acting on a mind already prepared to receive instruction, aided by the special grace of God,⁵ produced in this robber a conviction that Jesus, though hanging on the cross as a malefactor, was in reality God, and a corresponding desire to enter into His kingdom. The name of the penitent robber is said to have been Dismas.⁶ It is not impossible but that this robber may have heard of "the kingdom of God" through the preaching of John the Baptist, or of Jesus Himself. In reply, Jesus promises that he should that day be with Him "in Paradise;"⁷ that is, in a state of

¹ Origen, in Matt. xxvii. 44; vol. iii. p. 1781.

² S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxxvii.; vol. ii. p. 519.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxvii. 44; vol. i. p. 159.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxvii. 44; vol. ii. p. 1129.

³ S. Hilary Pict. in Matt. xxvii. 44; vol. i. p. 1074.

⁴ S. Ambrose, in Luc. xxiii. 39; vol. ii. p. 1834.

⁵ S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvii. 44; vol. vii. p. 211.

⁶ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 16; vol. iii. p. 1191.

[S. Leo Magnus,

S. Leo Magnus, Sermo de Passione Domini, ii. 1; vol. i. p. 317.

⁷ S. Gregory Magnus, Moral. xxvii. 21; vol. ii. p. 423.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 594.

⁸ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 44; vol. i. p. 461.

⁹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 44; vol. viii. p. 540.

¹⁰ Archbp. Trench, Synonyms of the N. T., p. 153, ed. 1865.

¹¹ S. Leo Magnus, Sermo de Passione Domini, ii. 1; vol. i. p. 317.

¹² S. Cyril Hierosol. Catechesis, xiii. 31; p. 809.

¹³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xxiii. 43; vol. viii. p. 853.

* In Paradise (ἐν τῇ παραδείσῳ).—"You must believe that our Saviour spake according to the common notion and apprehension of the nation; and our surest way to understand it, is to take the sense in which they understood it. In their writings they commonly speak of the garden of Eden, which speaks but the same thing with Paradise; and that what they mean by it was the place and state of the blessed, may appear by these two things.

"I. That they constantly oppose it to hell or Gehennah. Instances out of their writings might be given numerous. Their explication of those words of Solomon may suffice, Eccles. vii. 14, 'God hath set the one against the other;' that is, say they, the blessedness, or in the place where the souls of the blessed await the Resurrection.¹ This is the second of the sayings which Jesus uttered while on the cross.

It was in all probability after this, that Jesus turned to His mother, who was standing by the disciple whom He loved, and saith unto her, "Woman, behold thy son," and then to the disciple, "Behold thy mother," which is related by S. John (xix. 26, 27) alone, and which is the third of His sayings while on the cross.

Among the crowd assembled to witness the Crucifixion of Jesus, the Virgin Mary was probably the only one who at all realized anything like the real nature of the Mystery that was being transacted. She had long been used to keep the various parts of the Mystery of Redemption and ponder them in her heart as they gradually unfolded themselves before her. She above all women had found favour with God, and she had been chosen as the instrument for working out man's salvation. Great had been her personal holiness, and wonderful had been the privilege with which she had been blessed. Now, as she stood before the cross, a sword was to pierce through her heart. She had a trial to bear, such as had never fallen to the lot of woman before. She had to behold Her Son and her God crucified before her eyes, and by the very men whose salvation He was thereby purchasing.

The actions of our Saviour, so far as we understand them, are so full of deep significance that it is impossible for man to fix any limits to them, and to say that they mean this or that and no more. It would be presumptuous to say, that when Jesus gave to His mother a son in S. John, and to S. John a mother in the Blessed Virgin, that He meant no more than that the disciple was henceforth to provide a home for His mother. It is probable that this action is also part of the Great Mystery. In the fulness of His meaning, He might refer partly to the hour of which He had spoken at the marriage in Cana (S. John ii. 4), and that He now acknowledges her claims on Him for the supply of the necessities of this life, as a mother from her Son. Jesus commits His mother, the most exalted of women, to the care of the most saintly of men, to S. John, the beloved disciple. This is the meaning which lies on the surface. What more His words may mean it is impossible for man, unless aided by the Holy Spirit, to discover. The only glimpse which we have of the Blessed Virgin after the Resurrection is not in the retired home of the individual Apostle, but in the midst of the assembled Church (Acts i. 14).

The fact that Jesus did not commit His mother to the care of Joseph, her husband, and therefore her natural guardian, has generally been considered a proof that Joseph was not now living.² No mention is made of his death in the New Testament.

THE CRUCIFIXION CONTINUED.

S. MATTHEW xxvii. 45-50.

S. MARK iv. 33-37.

S. LUKE xxiii. 44-46.

S. JOHN xix. 28-30.

45	Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour.	33	And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour.
46	And about the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, ELI, ELI, LAMA	34	And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, ELOI, ELOI, LAMA

44 And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the earth
until the ninth hour.
45 And the sun was darkened, and the Veil of the Temple was rent in the midst.

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. tract. cxi.; vol. iii. p. 1927.

de Genes. ad literam, xii. 34; vol. iii. p. 483.
[Maldonatus,

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 43; vol. i. p. 464.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xxiii. 43; vol. viii. p. 853.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xix. 25; vol. viii. p. 1147.

garden of Eden and Gehennah, i.e. Paradise and Hell. Now as hell in their construction was the place of the wicked and damned in torment, so Paradise on the contrary in their construction was the place of the righteous and blessed in glory. And

"II. This appears in their writings more plain, in that they tell us that Abraham, when he died, went to Paradise; Moses, when he died, went to Paradise. Which elsewhere they express after this manner, 'That Abraham and Moses, and all righteous men, when they die, are laid up under the very throne of God.' To which that seems to allude Rev. vi. where mention is made of the holy 'souls under the Altar.' For the Altar they accounted the seat of the Divine Presence. The thief very well understood the meaning, for he was no stranger to the phrase in the nation, and he knew his petition of being remembered by Christ in His kingdom was sufficiently granted, when Christ secured him, 'To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise.'"—LIGHTFOOT, Sermon on Luke xxiii. 42, 43; vol. ii. p. 1273.

See Dr. Pusey's note on Tertullian's Apology, ch. xlvii. p. 119, Library of the Fathers, as to the meaning which the Fathers assigned to "Paradise" and its equivalent terms. He thus concludes his examination, "In the main, then, all this harmonizes together: that they are at rest; with the Lord; in His keeping; seeing Him (though we know not the place which Scripture designates as 'Paradise,' or 'Abraham's bosom,' or 'the Altar'), yet not seeing God as they shall see Him after the Resurrection, nor having as yet their full reward."

S. MATTHEW xxvii.

SABACHTHANI?
that is to say,
My God, My God,
why
hast Thou forsaken Me?
47 Some of them
that stood there,
when they heard that, said,
This Man
calleth for Elias.

48 And straightway one of them 36 ran, and took a sponge, and filled it
with vinegar,
and put it on a reed,
and gave Him
to drink.
49 The rest said,
Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save Him.

50 Jesus,
when He had cried again
with a loud voice,

yielded up
the ghost.

S. MARK xv.

SABACHTHANI? which is, being interpreted,
My God, My God,
why
hast Thou forsaken Me?
35 And some of them that stood by,
when they heard it, said,
Behold, He calleth Elias.

And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar,
and put it on a reed,
and gave Him
to drink,
saying,
Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take Him down.

37 And Jesus
cried
with a loud voice, and gave up

the ghost.

S. LUKE xxiii.

S. JOHN xix.

28 After this, Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst.

29 Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar:
and they filled a sponge

with vinegar,
and put it upon hyssop,
and put it to His mouth.

30 When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar,
He said,
It is finished:

46 And when Jesus had cried
with a loud voice,
He said,
Father, into Thy hands
I commend My spirit:
and having said thus,

He gave up the ghost.

and
He bowed His head, and gave up
the ghost.

45. Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour.

S*. omits over all the land.
Vulg. A sexta autem hora tenebræ factæ sunt super universam terram usque ad horam nonam.

46. And about the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, ELI, ELI, LAMA SABACHTHANI? that is to say, My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?

S. V. Eli, Eli; S. V. lema: A. lima.
Vulg. Eli, Eli, lama, sabachthani?

47. Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, This Man calleth for Elias.^a

^a This Man calleth for Elias (ἡλὸν φωνεῖ αὐτός).—“That Christ here used the Syriac dialect is plain from the word sabac- thani; but the word Eli, Eli, is not so properly Syriac; and hence arose the error and misconstruction of the standers-by. In Syriac He should have said, ܡܪܝ, ܡܪܝ, Mari, Mari; but Eli was strange to a Syrian ear. This deceived the standers-by, who, having heard more than enough of the apparitions of Elias from the Jewish

48. And straightway one of them ran, and took a sponge, and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave Him to drink.

S. omits of them.
Vulg. Et continuo currens unus ex eis.

49. The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save Him.

S. V. after to save Him, and but another took a spear and pierced His side, and there came out water and blood.
Vulg. Ceteri vero dicebant: Sine videamus an veniat Elias liberans eum.
Jesus autem.

50. ¶ Jesus, when He had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost.^b fables, and being deceived by the double meaning of the word, supposed that Christ was tainted with the same folly and mistake, and called out to Elias for help; which it was no strange thing for that deluded people to expect.”—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxvii. 49;

vol. ii. p. 268.

^b Yielded up the ghost.—“That it was Himself that of His own accord gave up the ghost, and so laid down His life, appears

There is a difference of opinion among the early writers as to the meaning of the Evangelist's words, ἐπὶ πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν. Some¹ think that they intend to imply that darkness was over the whole land of Judæa only; others² that it was over the whole Eastern hemisphere.

As already stated, Phlegon, the freedman of the Emperor Adrian, records a darkness which occurred at noonday, though there is a doubt whether he is not referring to a later time. His words are reported by Eusebius.³ Tertullian,⁴ who died about A.D. 240, in his Apology for the Christians, appeals to their own archives as recording the fact of the darkness which occurred at the Crucifixion. Origen,⁵ who died about A.D. 253, in his controversy with the Epicurean philosopher

Celsus, as well as in other parts of his works, refers to Phlegon as reporting the supernatural darkness which happened at the Crucifixion. But modern scientific investigation has shown that there is some reason to believe that the darkness which Phlegon witnessed was that produced by an ordinary eclipse of the sun, and not the supernatural darkness which happened at the Crucifixion.*

To explain away the supernatural character of this darkness, whether it was over the land of Judæa only, or over the whole Eastern hemisphere, as an eclipse of the sun, taking place in the regular course of nature, is out of the question.⁶ It took place in the middle of the day, and lasted for three hours, and on the 14th day of the month, when

¹ Origen, in Matt. xxvii. 45; vol. iii. p. 1783.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 45; vol. i. p. 469.

² S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxxviii.; vol. ii. p. 523.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxvii. 45; vol. i. p. 159.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxvii. 45; vol. ii. p. 1129.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 598.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 45; vol. viii. p. 541.

³ Eusebius Pamphil., Chronicon; vol. i. p. 535.

⁴ Tertullian, Apolog. 21; vol. i. p. 401.

—adv. Judeos, x.; vol. ii. p. 630.

⁵ Origen, contra Celsum, ii. 33; vol. i. p. 853.

—in Matt. xxvii. 45; vol. iii. p. 1782.

⁶ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 598.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 45; vol. i. p. 468.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 45; vol. viii. p. 541.

from the strong cry He uttered even at His last gasp, 'Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani,' for this plainly shows that He had sense and strength even to the last.' (In support of this he quotes Chrysost. in Matt. Homil. lxxxviii.; vol. ii. p. 526, Oxon. Tertull., Apolog. 21; vol. i. p. 401, Migne. Ambrose, de Incarnatione, ch. v. sec. 39; vol. iii. p. 828. Augustine, de Trin. iv. sec. 16; vol. vii. p. 541.) —BISHOP BEVERIDGE on the Thirty-nine Articles, Art. II. p. 104.

He yielded up the ghost by dissolving the union between His soul and body, though both His soul and body still remained united to His sacred Deity.' (In support of this he quotes Gregory Nyssen: see Contr. Eunom. ii.; vol. ii. p. 548, Migne.)—Ibid. on Art. II. p. 104. See also Hooker, vol. ii. p. 227. Pearson on the Creed, Art. IV., vol. i. p. 256; vol. ii. p. 181.

'It was a point in controversy with the extreme Monophysites, that is, the Eutychians, whether our Lord's body was naturally subject to death, the Catholics maintaining the affirmative, as Athanasius here. Eutyches asserted that our Lord had not a human nature, by which he meant among other things that His manhood was not subject to the laws of a body, but, so far as He submitted to them, did so by an act of will in each particular case; and this, lest it should seem that He was moved by the πάθος against His will, ἀκούσιως; and consequently that His manhood was not subject to death. But the Catholics maintained that He had voluntarily placed Himself under those laws, and died naturally (vide Athan. contr. Apoll. i. 17), and that after the Resurrection His body became incorruptible, not according to nature, but by grace (vide Leont. de Sect. x. p. 550; Anast. Hody, c. 23). To express their doctrine of the θερραφύς of our Lord's manhood, the Eutychians made use of the Catholic expression 'ut voluit' (vide Athan. l. c.; Eutyches, ap. Leon. Ep. 21)."—DR. J. H. NEWMAN on S. Athanasius, Library of the Fathers; vol. viii. p. 243.

'This might be taken as an illustration of the 'ut voluit' supra. And so the expressions in the Evangelists, 'Into Thy hands I commend My Spirit,' 'He bowed the head,' 'He gave up the ghost,' are taken to imply that His death was His free act (vide Ambrose in loc. Luc.; Hieron. in loc. Matt.; also Athan. Serm. Mag. de Fid. 4). It is Catholic doctrine that our Lord, as man, submitted to death of His free will, and not as obeying an express command of the Father. 'Who,' says S. Chrysostom on John x. 18, 'has not power to lay down his own life? for anyone who will may kill himself. But He says not this, but how? "I have power to lay it down in such sense that no one can do it against My will. . . . I alone have the disposal of My life," which is not true of us.' And still more appositely Theophylact, 'It was open to Him not to suffer, not to die: for without sin, He was not subject to death.

. . . If then He had not been willing, He had not been crucified' (in Heb. xii. 2). 'Since this punishment is contained in the death of the body, that the soul, because it has deserted God with its will, deserts the body against its will . . . the soul of the Mediator proved, how utterly clear of the punishment of sin was its coming to the death of the flesh, in that it did not desert it unwillingly, but because it willed, and when it willed, and as it willed. . . . And this did they specially admire, who were present, says the Gospel, that after that work, in which He set forth a figure of our sin, He forthwith gave up the ghost. For crucified men were commonly tortured by a lingering death . . . But He was a wonder (miraculo fuit), because He was found dead.' (August. de Trin. iv. 16).—Ibid. p. 481.

* There was darkness.—Some writers, to aid them in ascertaining the year of Christ's death, have attempted to make use of the statement of the Evangelists (Matt. xxvii. 45; Mark xv. 33; Luke xxiii. 44), that the sun was darkened during the last three hours of our Lord's death-struggle, i.e. from 12 o'clock to 3 P.M. This attempt was first made by the Fathers. With Eusebius at their head, they appealed to a passage in the writings of Phlegon of Tralles, an historian of the second century, who mentions a very considerable eclipse of the sun, in the course of the 202nd Olympiad, occurring at the sixth hour of the day, and accompanied in Bithynia with an earthquake. Now, since this eclipse was visible in Palestine, and several of its features—e.g. the earthquake, the hour of the day, and on the whole, the date—agreed with the miraculous darkness described by the Evangelists, it was natural enough to identify the two. But they overlooked the fact that Phlegon was speaking of an astronomical darkening of the sun, an ἐκλείψις, while nothing of the kind can have been intended by the σκοτίαση of ἡλίου or the σκότος of the Evangelists. An ordinary eclipse can only happen at the time of new moon, never at the full moon, when the Jewish Passover was celebrated. There is much more reason, according to the calculations of Wurm, with whom Ideler agrees, to identify the darkness mentioned by Phlegon with the great eclipse of the sun on November 24th, 29 A.D., visible in Western Asia. Phlegon therefore must have written the first year of the 202nd Olympiad = July, 29 A.D.—July, 30 A.D.; and those ancient writers who first identified the eclipse mentioned by him, of which neither the month nor the day of the month was mentioned, with the darkness at our Lord's death, probably placed this event quite correctly in A.D. 30."—WIESELER, 'Chronological Synopsis,' p. 353.

On this subject see also McClellan, 'New Testament,' p. 701.

the moon was full, when an eclipse of the sun, in the ordinary sense, is impossible. The darkness, like the Crucifixion itself, was supernatural.

The words¹ which the Psalmist puts into the mouth of Jesus are "Eli, Eli, lama azabthani;" the words which the Evangelists relate that He uttered were "Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani." The difference between azabthani and subachthani is, that these are two forms of the same words which were in use at different times, azabthani being the form in use before the Captivity, and subachthani after it. The former was the Hebrew of the Old Testament, and the latter the Chaldee or Syriac, as used by the natives of Palestine in the time of our Saviour.

What these words express it is impossible for man to say. But that they do not indicate anything which in any way implies any withdrawal or diminution of the Hypostatic Union, is certain.² It is also probable that they express the overwhelming sorrow of the human soul at that which He had to endure. The subject affords matter for awe and reverence, rather than for critical discussion. Whatever it was that caused the severity of His sufferings, whether the contemplation of the sin of the world, which He was now expiating, or the withdrawal of all consolation and support to His human soul in the hour of need, it was in accordance with the words of the prophet: for Psalm xxii. contains the words which Jesus here repeats and applies to Himself, and by which He identifies Himself with the Person speaking in the Psalm. But the Jews saw none of this. This was the fourth of His sayings on the cross.

It may have been the Roman soldiers,³ or it may have been the Jews, who said that He called Elijah: if the soldiers, they would say this from ignorance, from misunderstanding the meaning of the words "Eli, Eli," and would suppose that He called for Elijah, in accordance with the common belief that Elijah would appear again on the earth to comfort and relieve those who were in distress; if the Jews said that He called for Elijah, they would say this in derision.

S. Matthew and S. Mark, as well as S. John, all relate that one of the bystanders filled a sponge full of vinegar, and gave it to Jesus to drink; but S. John alone relates that the cause of this was, that Jesus had cried, "I thirst." The length and intensity of His sufferings had caused His bodily thirst; but Jesus gave expression to this feeling, not, as the bystanders thought, seeking for such relief as they could give, but, as S. John says, that He might fulfil the Scriptures. He thus made another application of the well-known Psalm (xxii.) to Himself. This was His fifth saying on the cross.

S. John says, that after Jesus had committed His mother to His beloved disciple, without stating how long after, He cried "I thirst." But this must have been nearly three hours after: for Jesus committed His mother to the care of the beloved disciple at the beginning of the Crucifixion, before the darkness came on, and He cried "I thirst" almost at the end. The Psalmist, speaking in the Person of Jesus, had said hundreds of years before, "They gave Me also gall for My meat; and in My thirst they gave Me vinegar to drink" (Ps. lxxix. 21).

The thirst of His Body would be produced by want of food, by loss of blood from the scourging and from the Crucifixion, and from exhaustion and excess of pain produced by hanging so long on the cross. Great was the thirst which He endured in the Body from the Crucifixion; but how great must have been His thirst for the salvation of souls which led to the Crucifixion!

It was customary among the Romans to give wine to persons suffering excruciating torture, to give them strength to go through the punishment. Either in derision of Jesus, or with a view to increase His suffering, or from some other motive, the soldiers gave Jesus vinegar instead of wine. S. John says that they placed a sponge filled with vinegar on hyssop (ὑσσώπῳ); S. Matthew and S. Mark say that they put it on a reed (καλάρῳ). Considerable difference of opinion exists as to which is the hyssop of Scripture. Clusius,⁴ the Dutch botanist, says that the common hyssop was a low bushy plant; but that the cultivated or garden hyssop of Palestine had a stalk a foot and a half high. Some⁵ think that one Evangelist, describing this with reference to its stalk, might call it a reed, and another, referring to its head, might speak of it as hyssop; others,⁶ that the reed and the hyssop were two different things bound together,—the hyssop with its cup-shaped head to hold the sponge, and the reed to raise it to His lips. This may have been the reed which they put into His right hand as a mock emblem of His kingly dignity, and with which they smote Him on the head.

S. John alone records that Jesus cried, "It is finished" (τετέλεσται), which is His sixth saying on the cross. The work appointed for Him to do is finished; the sufferings ordained for the Incarnate God to endure, the types and shadows of the Law, the prophecies of the Old Testament respecting the Passion, are all finished. It only remains for

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 599.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 46; vol. i. p. 471.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 46; vol. viii. p. 542.

³ S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvii. 46; vol. vii. p. 212.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxxviii.; vol. ii. p. 525.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxvii. 46; vol. i. p. 159.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxvii. 46; vol. ii. p. 1131.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 599.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 46; vol. i. p. 472.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 46; vol. viii. p. 542.

⁵ S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvii. 47; vol. vii. p. 212.

⁶ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 48; vol. viii. p. 544.

⁷ Theophylact, in Joan. xix. 29; vol. i. p. 754.

Euthymius, in Joan. xix. 29; vol. iv. p. 615.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 600.

⁸ S. Augustine, in Joan. xix. 29, tract. cxix.; vol. iii. p. 1952.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 48; vol. i. p. 474.

His Human Soul to depart from His Body. Few words which have been uttered with reference to the history of man, contain in them such a depth of meaning as this, "It is finished." Then "He bowed the head and gave up the ghost," as His own voluntary act, at the time of the evening sacrifice.

The three Evangelists relate that just before He gave up the ghost, Jesus cried with a loud voice, but S. Luke alone records His words, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My Spirit." This is His seventh and last saying on the cross.

Some¹ suppose that He did this through the natural vigour of His bodily powers, which were unbroken by all that He had gone through; others,² that though His bodily frame was enfeebled by suffering, and His strength well-nigh exhausted by all that He had endured in body and mind, to show that He laid down His life of Himself, He by His last words declared this, and declared it with such a token of His power and will as proved it.

The Crucifixion, though the act of man, was the completion of His Sacrifice of Himself for the sin of the world.

This Sacrifice was begun when He instituted the Eucharist, and completed when He cried, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My Spirit," and gave up the ghost.

In no part of the Scripture narrative do we find the necessity for the accounts furnished by all the four Evangelists more than in the history of the time during which Jesus hung on the cross. During this time He uttered seven different sayings, but none of the Evangelists relates the whole of these. S. Matthew and S. Mark each gives only one, and the same one (iv.), which is recorded by neither of the other two; S. Luke gives three (i. ii. vii.), recorded by none of the others; and S. John gives three (iii. v. vi.), which are recorded by none of the others. Thus, if we had only S. Matthew's and S. Mark's Gospels, we should have but one of His sayings on the cross; if we had only S. Luke's or S. John's Gospel, we should have but three of these sayings.

The following table will show the sayings on the cross in the order in which they were spoken, and how recorded by the Evangelists.

S. MATTHEW xxvii.

S. MARK xv.

S. LUKE xxiii.

S. JOHN xix.

I. Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do.—v. 34.

II. Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise.—v. 43.

III. Woman, behold thy son . . . behold thy mother.—v. 26.

V. I thirst.—v. 28.

VI. It is finished.—v. 30.

VII. Father, into Thy hands I commend My Spirit.—v. 46.

IV. Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? IV. Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani?—v. 34.

THE VEIL OF THE TEMPLE RENT, &c.

S. MATTHEW xxvii. 51-56.

S. MARK xv. 38-41.

S. LUKE xxiii. 45, 47-49.

S. JOHN xix. 31-37.

51 And, behold, 38 the Veil of the Temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom;

And the Veil of the Temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom.

[45 ——— and the Veil of the Temple was rent in the midst.]

and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent;

52 And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose,

53 And came out of the graves after His resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many.

54 Now when the centurion,

39 And when the centurion, which stood over against Him,

47 Now when the centurion

¹ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 47, art. 1; vol. iv. p. 436.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 50; vol. viii. p. 545.

S. MATTHEW xxvii.

S. MARK xv.

S. LUKE xxiii.

S. JOHN xix.

and they that were with him, watching Jesus,
 saw
 the earthquake, and those things that were done,
 they feared greatly,
 saying,
 Truly this was the Son of God.

saw
 that He so cried out,
 and gave up the ghost,
 he said,
 Truly this Man was the Son of God.

saw
 what was done,
 he glorified God,
 saying,
 Certainly this was a righteous Man.
 48 And all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things which were done, smote their breasts, and returned.

31 The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath-day, (for that sabbath-day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

32 Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified
 with Him.

33 But when they came to Jesus, and saw that He was dead already, they brake not His legs:

34 But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came thereout blood and water.

35 And he that saw it bare record, and his record is true:
 and he knoweth that he saith true, that ye might believe.

36 For these things were done, that the scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of Him shall not be broken.

37 And again another scripture saith, They shall look on Him whom they pierced.

55 And many women were there beholding afar off, which followed Jesus
 from Galilee,
 ministering unto Him:

40 There were also women
 looking on afar off:

49 And all His acquaintance, and the women

that followed Him
 from Galilee,

stood afar off,
 beholding these things.

56 among which was
 Mary Magdalene,
 and Mary the mother
 of James and Josés,
 and the mother of Zebedee's children.

among whom was
 Mary Magdalene,
 and Mary the mother
 of James the less and of Josés,
 and Salomé;

41 (Who also, when He was in Galilee, followed Him, and ministered unto Him;) and many other women which came up with Him unto Jerusalem.

51. And, behold, the Veil of the Temple was rent in twain^a from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent;

52. And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose,

^a S. omits and the graves were opened.

Vulg. Et eximonia aperta sunt: et multa corpora sanctorum, qui dormierant, surrexerunt.

53. And came out of the graves after His resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many.

S. V. omits and went.

Vulg. Et exiit de monumentis post resurrectionem ejus, venerunt in sanctam civitatem, et apparuerunt multis.

S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke, all record the rending of the Veil of the Temple, but not all in the same order. S. Luke, in his relation of it, joins it on to some other miracles, which had taken place before Jesus gave up the ghost, but he does not by any words indicate that this had also happened before. But S. Matthew, by the terms, "And behold (καὶ ἰδοὺ)," fixes the rending of the Veil as taking place in the order of his narration; that is, immediately after, or at the very time when, Jesus gave up the ghost.¹

There was a Veil before the Holy place, into which the priests went daily, but it was not this Veil, as some² have thought, which was rent. There was also a Veil before the Holy of Holies, which is described (Exod. xxvi. 31-33) as dividing "between the Holy place and the most Holy," into which the high priest alone went, and only once a year, on the day of atonement. It was this Veil³ that was rent, and the rending of which the Evangelists class with the quaking of the earth, the rending of the rocks, and the opening of the graves of the saints, as equally proving the Divine power of the crucified Jesus. They may do this either because it was as unlikely to happen in the usual course of things as any of these, and required an equal exertion of supernatural power; or because it was equally prophetic of God's future dealings with man.

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 19; vol. iii. p. 1192.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 602.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 51; vol. i. p. 477.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 51; vol. viii. p. 546.

² Origen, in Matt. xxvii. 51; vol. iii. p. 1790.

[S. Jerome,

S. Jerome, Epist. ad Hedibiam, cxx. (alias 150), 8; vol. i. p. 992.

³ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xix. 30; vol. vii. p. 669.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxvii. 51; vol. ii. p. 1135.

S. Leo Magnus, Sermo de Passione Domini, x. 5; vol. i. p. 548.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 51; vol. viii. p. 546.

* The Veil of the Temple was rent in twain (τὸ καταπέτασμα τοῦ ναοῦ ἐσχίσθη εἰς δύο).—Let us hear what the fathers of the traditions say concerning this catapetasma, or veil (Middoth, cap. iv. hal. 5): "The wall of the Pronaoon was five cubits, the Pronaoon itself eleven. The wall of the Temple was six, the Temple forty. The Tapaῖs is one cubit, and the entrance twenty." What Tapaῖs means, Maimonides will tell you (In Beth habbeckirah iv.): "In the first Temple there was a wall one cubit thick, separating the Holy from the Holy of Holies; but when they built the second Temple, it was doubted whether the thickness of that wall should be accounted to belong to the measure of the Holy, or to the measure of the Holy of Holies; wherefore they made the Holy of Holies twenty cubits complete, and the Holy forty cubits complete, and they left a void cubit between the Holy and the Holy of Holies, but they did not build any wall there in the second Temple; only they made two hangings, one contiguous to the Holy of Holies, and the other to the Holy; between which there was a void cubit, according to the thickness of the wall that was in the first Temple; in which there was but one catapetasma, or veil only." The High Priest (Joma, cap. v. hal. 1) (on the day of atonement) goes forward in the Temple till he comes to the two hangings that divide the Holy from the Holy of Holies, between which there was a cubit.

"While therefore their minds were troubled about this affair, not knowing whether they should hang the veil at the Temple, or at the inmost recess of it, and whether the void space between of a cubit thick should belong to this or that; they called the place itself by the Greek word Tapaῖs, that is, trouble (as Aruch plainly affirms), and they hung up two veils, that they might be sure to offend neither against this part nor that.

"You will wonder therefore that Matthew doth not say καταπέτασμα, 'veils,' in the plural; or perhaps you will think that only one of these two veils was rent, not both. But it was enough for the Evangelists Matthew and Mark, who speak of this miracle, to have showed that that fence between, which hindered seeing into the Holy of Holies and going into it, was cleft and broken. This is it they mean, not being solicitous in explaining particulars, but contented to have declared the thing itself. Perhaps the priest who offered the incense that evening was in the Temple at the very moment when this miracle happened; and when he went out amazed to the people, and should tell them, 'The Veil of the Temple is rent,' it would easily be understood of a passage broken into the Holy of Holies, by some astonishing and miraculous rending of the hangings.

"When the High Priest went into the inmost recess of the Temple on the day of atonement, he went in by the south side of the outward hanging, and the north side of the inner (Joma, ut supra). But now both are rent in the very middle, and that from the top to the bottom."—LIGHTFOOT on Matt. xxvii. 51; vol. ii. p. 268.

"These two veils were renewed every year, the old ones taken away, and new ones put in their room. It was woven of four colours—blue, purple, scarlet, and fine white linen yarn; every one of these threads twisted six double, and woven upon hair for the warp, of seventy-two hairs twisted into every thread. These two veils rent at our Saviour's death from the top to the bottom, and gave demonstration of the laying open and common of those ceremonious things which had hitherto been reserved in such recluseness and singularity. The Evangelist indeed called it by the name of one veil, so also doth Josephus, when he saith διεσχίσθη δ' ὁ βύλος καταπέτασμα (De Bell. v. 5, 4). It was parted by a veil. For (1) though they were two, yet hung they up to be but as one partition. (2) Had they known where the proper place of one veil had been, there had been but one in this second Temple, and no more."—Ibid. on the Temple, ch. xv. sect. 2; vol. i. p. 1085.

"There were thirteen veils in all about the Temple; namely, seven for the seven gates of the court, one at the gate of the porch, one at the gate of the Temple, and two betwixt the Holy and the most Holy place, and two just over them in the room above (Maimon. in Kele Mikdash, p. vii.). And there was an overseer of the veils, that took care for the supply and the right ordering of them; and if they were defiled by any common uncleanness, they were taken down and washed and hung up in the Chel to dry. And when new veils were made, they were hung up on the gallery in the Court of the Women, that they might be viewed by all the people to see that they were right (Shekalim v.)."—Ibid. ch. xiv. sect. 2; vol. i. p. 1080.

Among other things, the rending of the Veil foretold that the sacrifices offered by the priests under the Law were henceforward to cease. The Sacrifice of the Son of God, which the sacrifices under the Law prefigured, and from which they derived whatever efficacy they possessed, was now completed. The sacrifices which the priests under the Law offered were rendered unnecessary by the Sacrifice which Jesus had offered; and they were henceforward to be replaced by the Memorial which He had instituted of Himself and of His Sacrifice, which was to be offered not by Jews only, but by Jews and Gentiles until His coming again. The Psalmist had long before foretold this (Ps. xl. 6-8), and his words are thus applied by S. Paul (Heb. x. 5-10).

The Apostle also dwells on the rending of the Veil of the Temple from another point of view. He reasons that the Holy of Holies is a type of heaven, and the Veil a type of the Flesh of Christ; and that as the Holy of Holies was opened by the rending of the Veil, so heaven is opened to man by the rending of His Flesh on the cross (Heb. x. 19, 20).

The present appearance of the rocks, and of the ground generally, around Jerusalem, as testified by many modern travellers, quite bears out the conclusion that there has been an immense convulsion of nature some time in this neighbourhood. Phlegon, as reported by Eusebius,¹ records that the city of Nicæa in Bithynia suffered greatly from earthquakes probably about this time. Other writers also refer to earthquakes and disturbances of the course of nature at this time.²

Though the graves were opened at the Crucifixion, S. Matthew intimates that the saints did not arise until after His Resurrection.³ Their resurrection was the fruit of His Resurrection, and was to be a proof and confirmation of His Resurrection, as well as of His power to raise the dead. This was not the case with one or two, but many (πολλά) bodies of the saints arose and appeared unto many. Some⁴ have supposed that the resurrection of these saints resembled that of those who had preceded them, and that, like Lazarus, they would after a time return to their graves again. Others,⁵ and with greater probability, have concluded that their resurrection, as the fruits of Christ's Resurrection, would rather resemble His, and that, united to a glorified body, after they had borne witness of His Resurrection, they would join the triumphal throng of angels that attended His Ascension into heaven.

54. Now when the centurion, and they that were with him, watching Jesus, saw the earthquake, and those things that were done, they feared greatly, saying, Truly this was the Son of God.

The effect which these supernatural signs at His Crucifixion produced was different on different beholders. Some strike upon their breasts in awe and terror, and perhaps with regret, at what had taken place that day. On others, such as the centurion and his companions, the effect is greater, depending on the previous preparation of the heart to receive conviction; and they go on to believe that Jesus, the Crucified Jesus whom they are guarding, is the Son of God. S. Mark mentions the manner of His giving up the ghost, namely, after He had committed Himself to God with a great cry, as especially influencing the centurion.

S. Matthew represents the centurion as saying, "Of a truth This was the Son of God," and S. Mark, "Of a truth This Man was the Son of God," and S. Luke, "Of a truth This was a righteous Man." Two explanations⁶ of the apparent discrepancy between S. Luke and the other two Evangelists have been suggested. The first is, that the centurion may have made use of both these expressions, and that S. Matthew and S. Mark record one of them, and S. Luke the other—that by the one the centurion expressed his conviction that Jesus was guiltless of the crimes laid to His charge, and by the other his belief that He was more than a mere Man, that He was the Son of God, not in the sense in which men may be called the sons of God, by imitation, but the Son of God by nature, and that he was led to this belief by the fearful miracles which he had just witnessed. The second explanation is, that the centurion may not have realized the truth that Jesus was the Son of God in any superhuman sense, but that He was the Son of God inasmuch as He was an exceedingly righteous Man, and that S. Luke has given the meaning of the centurion's exclamation, but not his exact words. The former⁷ of these explanations is considered by far the most probable. The name of this centurion is said to have been Caius Oppius, a Spaniard.⁸

¹ Eusebius Pamphil., Chronicon, in A.D. 33; vol. i. p. 535.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 51; vol. viii. p. 547.

³ Origen, in Matt. xxvii. 53; vol. iii. p. 1792.

⁴ S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvii. 53; vol. vii. p. 213.

⁵ V. Bede, in Matt. xxvii. 53; vol. iii. p. 125.

⁶ S. Augustine, Epist. ad Erodium, clxiv. (alias 99), 3; vol. ii. p. 712.

⁷ Theophylact, in Matt. xxvii. 53; vol. i. p. 161.

⁸ Euthymius, in Matt. xxvii. 53; vol. ii. p. 1137.

⁹ S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 53, art. 3; vol. iv. p. 492.

¹⁰ Eusebius Pamphil., Demonstrat. Evangel. iv. 12; vol. iv. p. 283.

¹¹ S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lxxv. 8; vol. ii. p. 513.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvii. 53; vol. vii. p. 213.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxvii. 53; vol. iii. p. 126.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 603.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 52; vol. i. p. 479.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 52; vol. viii. p. 548.

⁶ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 20; vol. iii. p. 1193.

⁷ S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvii. 54; vol. vii. p. 214.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxvii. 54; vol. i. p. 161.

V. Bede, in Matt. xxvii. 54; vol. iii. p. 126.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliii. p. 603.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 54; vol. i. p. 480.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 54; vol. viii. p. 549.

⁸ Fl. L. Dexter, Chronicon, A.D. 34; Migne's Patrol. vol. xxi. p. 73.

S. John (xix. 31-37) alone records the breaking of the legs of the two malefactors, and the piercing of the side of Jesus with a spear.

The Jews give, as the reason for their desire to hasten the death of Jesus and the malefactors, their fear of polluting the approaching Sabbath by allowing their bodies to remain on the cross contrary to the Law of Moses (Deut. xxi. 21, 22). It was now past three o'clock, and at sunset the Sabbath would commence; and that Sabbath "was an high day." It was hallowed on two counts: first, because it was the first day of unleavened bread, a holy convocation to the Lord (Exod. xii. 16); and secondly, because it was the seventh day, the usual Sabbath. This was the reason which they allege. But mixed with this there may have been some fear, some misgiving as to the enormity of the deed which they had just accomplished. Fearful supernatural events had taken place during the last three hours. From the sixth to the ninth hour, from twelve o'clock until three, darkness had been spread over the whole earth, the sun was darkened, and "the Veil of the Temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent," &c. All this may have awakened their conscience, and caused them to see how their conduct was condemned; or they may have feared lest the people should think so—lest the people, at all times fickle in their attachment, should turn against them as the authors of the deed which had called forth such signal marks of displeasure from God.¹

The legs of the malefactors would be broken by blows from some heavy instrument, either of wood or iron. This, causing excess of pain and loss of blood, would have the effect of hastening their end. The Death of Jesus before the other two who were crucified with Him was the natural effect of the sufferings which He had endured in Soul and Body, of the exhaustion of all the powers of nature. This was pre-ordained to fulfil the types and prophecies respecting Him in the Old Testament dispensation, and to prevent this very breaking of His legs, and so the imperfection and disfigurement of His Body after the Resurrection.²

The piercing of His side with a spear might not be from wanton cruelty on the part of the soldier, but in the proper fulfilment of his duty, to convince himself that Jesus was dead, and to prove to others that, though they had not broken His legs, they had taken sufficient precaution to ascertain that He was dead before they removed His Body from the cross.³

The flow of blood and water from His side, after life had departed, was contrary to the laws of nature, which would have obtained in the case of an ordinary dead body. From known experiments we are driven to believe, either that this was a result natural to our Saviour's Body and to His only, or else that it was miraculously produced.

The Church, from the very earliest times,⁴ has looked upon this flowing of blood and water from the side of Jesus as containing in it a great fulness of meaning; as indicating the means through which man's salvation is wrought—water and blood, and that through the Incarnation, flowing from the Body of the Son of God. In early times, too, writers⁵ gave this as one reason, among others, why they always celebrated the Eucharist with the mixed chalice of wine and water—as a memorial of the water and blood which flowed from the pierced side of Jesus—and as a symbol that our salvation is through the Word made flesh, and through His Death on the cross. Few subjects afforded greater scope for instruction and illustration among the early Fathers of the Church than this piercing of the side of Jesus.

Tradition⁶ records that the spear entered the right side of Jesus, and extended to the left through the heart, with the purpose of destroying the last remains of life, if He had not already laid down His life. This made the fifth wound in His Body—two in the hands, and two in the feet, and one in the side.

The person who bears witness to the truth of the fact that water and blood flowed from the pierced side of Jesus is the Evangelist S. John himself; and on no subject does he give a more deliberate and a more distinct testimony than he does to the truth of this, as being an event of the most supernatural kind. He records the testimony of an eye-witness, and of an eye-witness who has no doubt of the truth of what he says.

The first passage to which S. John (ver. 36) refers is not expressed in the same way as it is given here. There it is part of the command which God gave to the children of Israel respecting the way in which they were to eat the Paschal lamb: "In one house shall it be eaten: thou shalt not carry forth ought of the flesh abroad out of the house: neither shall ye break a bone thereof" (Exod. xii. 46).

According to the usage of Scripture, the application of the same language to the Paschal lamb and to Jesus would so far identify them together as to make the one a type or prophetic figure of the other. As the blood of the Paschal

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xix. 31; vol. viii. p. 1149.

² Lactantius, iv. 26.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xix. 33; vol. viii. p. 1149.

⁴ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlv. p. 605.

⁵ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xix. 34; vol. viii. p. 1150.

⁶ S. Cyril Hierosol. Catechesis, iii. 10, p. 440.

—xiii. 21, p. 797.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xix. 34, Homil. lxxxv.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xix. 34; vol. vii. p. 677.

Theophylact, in Joan. xix. 34; vol. i. p. 796.

Tertullian, de Baptismo, ix. and xvi.; vol. i. pp. 1210 and 1217.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xliii. 49; vol. ii. p. 1838.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xix. 34, tract. cxx. 2; vol. iii. p. 1953.

Rufinus, in Symbol. Apostol. p. 361.

⁵ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xix. 34; Homil. lxxxv.

S. Theophylact, in Joan. xix. 34; vol. i. p. 755.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xix. 34, tract. cxx.; vol. iii. p. 1953.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 74, art. 6; vol. iv. p. 712.

—Catena, in Joan. xix. 34; vol. iii. p. 380.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xix. 34; vol. viii. p. 1151.

⁶ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xix. 34; vol. viii. p. 1150.

lamb sprinkled on the door-posts preserved the children of Israel from the destroying angel and from the death of the body, so the Blood of Jesus poured out upon the cross preserves the true Israel from the death of the soul.

In the second passage to which S. John refers as fulfilled in Jesus and in the piercing of His side, the prophet Zechariah, who is speaking in the person of Jesus, says, "They shall look upon Me whom they have pierced" (Zech. xii. 10). This was fulfilled when the centurion, probably the very man who with his spear had pierced His side, "glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous Man," and when "all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things which were done, smote their breasts and returned" (S. Luke xxiii. 47, 48). But probably the fulfilment which the Evangelist meant will be at the Day of Judgment. To this he again alludes in his Book of the Revelation: "Behold, He cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him" (i. 7). Not only as nations and kindreds shall they look upon Him, but also as individuals; not only he who pierced Him with the spear, but also they who have pierced Him by their sins.

55. And many women were there beholding afar off, which followed Jesus from Galilee, ministering unto Him:

S. were also there.

Vulg. Erant autem ibi mulieres multe a longe, quæ secute erant Iesum a Galilæa, ministrantes ei.

56. Among which was Mary Magdalene,* and Mary the mother of James and Joses, and the mother of Zebedee's children.

S. Among whom was Mary the mother of James and the Mary of Joseph and the Mary of the sons of Zebedee. Joses, S. Joseph.

Vulg. Inter quas erat Maria Magdalene, et Maria Jacobi, et Joseph mater, et mater filiorum Zebedee.

* Among which was Mary Magdalene.—Now that Mary Magdalen was the sister of Lazarus let these two arguments be weighed, not to insist upon more. The first is this, If Mary Magdalen were not Mary the sister of Lazarus, then Mary the sister of Lazarus gave no attendance at Christ's Death, nor had anything to do about His Burial, or at least is not mentioned as an agent at either, which is a thing so incredible to conceive, that it needs not much discourse to set forth the incredibility of it. There is mention of Mary Magdalen, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome (Mark xv. 40), and Joanna (Luke xiv. 10), but not a word of Mary the sister of Lazarus. She had [twice?] anointed Christ in the compass of that very week, she had ever been as near and as zealous a woman disciple as any that followed Him, and her residence was at Bethany, hard by Jerusalem; and what is now become of her in these two great occasions of attending upon Christ's Death and embalming? Had she left Christ, and neglected her attendance on Him, at this time above all others? or have the Evangelists, whilst they mention the other that attended, left her out? It is so unreasonable to believe either of these, that even necessity enforceth us to conclude, that when they name Mary Magdalen, they mean Mary the sister of Lazarus. And secondly take this argument of Baronius, which hath more weight in it than at first sight it doth seem to have, who, in his Annals ad annum Christi 32, goes about to prove this thing that we assert, and he shows how it also was the opinion of the Fathers, and those in former times. His words are these, 'We say upon the testimony of John the Evangelist, nay of Christ Himself, that it plainly appears, that Mary the sister of Lazarus and Mary Magdalen was but one and the same person. For when in Bethany the same sister of Lazarus anointed the feet of Jesus, and Judas did thereupon take offence, Jesus Himself, checking the boldness of the furious disciple, said, "Let her alone, that she may keep it against the day of My Burial." Now that she that brought the ointment to the sepulchre for the anointing of the Body of Jesus was Mary Magdalen, is affirmed by Mark, and that she with Mary the mother of James and Salome did that office. When, therefore, neither in him nor in any other of the Evangelists there is mention of Mary the sister of Lazarus, who was foretold by our Saviour that she should do that office, it may easily be known that both these Maries were but one and the same.' . . .

"It is to be objected, indeed, that Mary was called Magdalen, from the place Magdala, of which there is mention Matt. xv. 29, and in Tal. Jerus. in Maazaroth, fol. 50, col. 3, on this passage, 'R. Jochanan in the name of R. Simeon ben Jochai. He had two enclosures, one in Magdala, the other in Tiberias,' &c. And in Beraeth, fol. 13, col. 1, there is mention of one R. Juda of Magdala. Now Magdala being in Galilee, as some say it, or over against Galilee beyond Jordan, as others, it was so very far distant from Bethany, that Mary the sister of Lazarus, whose town was Bethany, could not possibly be called Magdalen from Magdala. To which we may first give Baronius his answer, who also mentioneth this objection. That though she was of Bethany by original, and the native seat of her father's house, yet might she also be of Magdala by marriage, or some occasional residence otherwise.

"And in the second place, we may adduce what the Talmudists speak of one Mary Magdalen, or Megaddala—for the word is of doubtful pointing—whom they character for a notorious strumpet in those times that Jesus of Nazareth lived. Alphez in Gittin. fol. 605, 'Some man finds a fly in his cup, and takes her out and will not drink, and this was the temper of Papus the son of Judah, who locked the door upon his wife whenever he went out.' The glossaries R. Solomon and Nissim upon this passage comment thus,

'Papus the son of Judah was husband לַמְּרִים מִגְּדָלָה to Mary Magdala, and whenever he went forth he locked the door upon his wife, lest she should speak with any man, which was a usage unfitting, and hereupon there arose discord between them, and she played the whore against him.' Now they construe the latter word מִגְּדָלָה as signifying one that bridled or plaited her hair, which ἐμπλεκῆσαι τριχῶν Peter blames in women (1 Pet. iii. 3). Tal. Babyl. Venet. in Sanhedr. per. 7, is speaking of one that enticed to idolatry, and how he was brought to the Sanhedrin and stoned: 'And this, say they, they did to Ben Saida in Lydda, and hanged him in the Passover eve. Ben Saida was the Son of Pandira.' They call our Saviour blasphemously by this name Ben Saida. And a little after, 'His mother was Saida, His mother was Mary Magdalen, Mary the plaiter of women's hair.' Vid. etiam Schab. fol. 104, and in Chagigah, fol. 4: 'The angel of death said to his messenger, Go fetch me Mary the broider of women's hair. He went and fetched Mary Magdala, or Mary the broider of hair for young men.' Now whether the word מִגְּדָלָה be read Magdala, or Magdla, a participle in hiphal, which is most proper, and so warranted by Aruch in נָרַל and Kelim, per. 15, or Megaddela in piel, either of them in a Greek dress, especially the former, come so near the sound of the word in hand, that we may very well construe Mary Magdalen, in this Talmudic construction, for a woman of common infamy, and that hath this nickname of Magdala from her lascivious dress and carriage. Observe Luke's expression, Μαρία ἡ ἀκατασβέστη Μαγδαλῆνη, 'Mary which was called Magdalen,' which manner of phrase is rarely used when persons are named after their country.—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Test.,' sect. xxiv. vol. i. p. 227.

The teaching of Jesus readily enlisted the sympathies of women. It brought out all their best feelings in deeds of active benevolence. In time of peace they followed Jesus and ministered unto Him and His disciples of their substance, and in time of persecution and danger they were still present. Their condition as women, and their unselfish, fearless love, enabled them to approach Him, when even His disciples shrunk from Him. They followed Him to the place of Calvary, and stood there to behold the last act of that Mystery. The Evangelists relate that many women were there. The names of four besides His mother are recorded, to their everlasting honour,—Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James and Joseph and wife of Alpheus or Cleophas, and Salome, and Joanna.

S. Matthew (xxvii. 55, 56), S. Mark (xv. 40), and S. Luke (xxiii. 49) say that the women stood "afar off" (ἀπὸ μακρόθεν) beholding these things, and S. John that they stood "by the cross" (παρὰ τῷ σταυρῷ) of Jesus. It has been pointed out that all the four Evangelists may be describing the same position, but S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke from one point of view, and S. John from another, so that their apparent opposite descriptions are each consistent with the truth of the other.

The question naturally arises, where was Mary the sister of Lazarus? She was one of a family which Jesus is expressly said to have loved (John xi. 5), and which He frequently visited; she had received from Him the greatest possible benefit in the raising of her brother Lazarus to life, and within the last few days she had anointed Him with precious ointment, which He had received with such favour as to declare that, wherever His Gospel should be preached in the whole world, that which she had done should be told for a memorial of her. Where, then, was Mary? Was she not present at the Crucifixion? or, being present, is she not named among those who are mentioned as there? Many of the most eminent among the Fathers held that Mary of Bethany and Mary Magdalene were the same. As a rule this was the general opinion of the whole Western Church, and the Church of Rome has founded her office for Mary Magdalene's day on this interpretation. But there have always been some, especially in the Eastern Church, that have held that Mary the sister of Lazarus was not the same as Mary Magdalene, and in modern times this opinion has rather gained ground. But to believe that Mary the sister of Lazarus was not present at the Crucifixion is impossible; and it is difficult to believe that, being present, she is not named among those women who are recorded to their honour as being there. But if Mary the sister of Lazarus be not the same as Mary Magdalene, she is not mentioned by any of the Evangelists as being present either at His Crucifixion, or His Burial, or His Resurrection.

JESUS IS TAKEN DOWN FROM THE CROSS.

S. MATTHEW xxvii. 57-59.

57 When the even was come,

there came a rich man of Arimathæa,
named Joseph,

who also himself
was Jesus' disciple:

58 he went to Pilate, and begged
the Body of Jesus.

S. MARK xv. 42-46.

42 And now
when the even was come,
because it was the preparation,
that is,
the day before the Sabbath,

43 Joseph
of Arimathæa,
an honourable counsellor, which also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate,

and craved
the Body of Jesus.

44 And Pilate marvelled if He were already dead: and calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether He had been any while dead.

45 And when he knew it

S. LUKE xxiii. 50-53.

50 And, behold,
there was a man named Joseph,

a counsellor;
and he was a good man, and a just:

51 (The same had not consented to the counsel and deed of them:) he was
of Arimathæa,
a city of the Jews:
who also himself
waited for the kingdom of God.

52 This man went unto Pilate,
and begged
the Body of Jesus.

S. JOHN xix. 38-40.

38 And after this

Joseph

of Arimathæa,

being a disciple of Jesus,
but secretly for fear of the Jews, besought
Pilate that he might take away
the Body of Jesus:

S. MATTHEW xxvii.

Then Pilate
commanded the Body to be delivered.

S. MARK xv.

of the centurion,
he gave the Body to Joseph.

S. LUKE xxiii.

S. JOHN xix.

and Pilate
gave him leave.

He came therefore, and took
the Body of Jesus.
39 And there came also Nicodemus, which at the first came to Jesus by night, and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an hundred pound weight.

59 And when Joseph had taken the Body,
he wrapped It
in a clean linen cloth,

46 And he bought fine linen,
and took Him down, and wrapped Him in the linen,—

53 And he took It down, and wrapped It in linen,—

40 Then took they
the Body of Jesus,
and wound It in linen clothes
with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury.

57. When the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathæa, named Joseph,^a who also himself was Jesus' disciple:

58. He went to Pilate, and begged the Body of Jesus. Then Pilate commanded the Body to be delivered.

S.V. commanded It to be delivered.
Vulg. Tunc Pilatus jussit reddi corpus.

59. And when Joseph had taken the Body, he wrapped It in a clean linen cloth,^b

Arimathæa was early identified with Ramah, the birth-place of Samuel. This is mentioned seven times at least in the Old Testament, and in the Septuagint it is rendered Armathaim or Armathaim Sepha. Its exact position has not yet been ascertained.

Joseph, though a native of Arimathæa, seems to have been now living at Jerusalem. It is plain from the Evangelists that Joseph was a member of the Sanhedrin, and that he either absented himself from the assembly at which it was determined to put Jesus to death, or that he had voted against it.

Isaiah (xi. 10) had already foretold that His rest should be glorious; and the Evangelists go on to relate how this came to pass,—how Joseph, “an honourable counsellor” and “a rich man,” went in boldly unto Pilate and begged to be allowed to bury the Body of Jesus, not as a criminal, but as a man of distinction or as a prophet would be buried.

It was customary to bury those who had died by public execution in the common burial-ground for malefactors. When, to avoid the disgrace which this would bring upon the family, the friends of the deceased made application to have him buried otherwise, it was often granted. When Joseph of Arimathæa made such a request, he was a man not

^a Joseph of Arimathæa.—“In all the New Testament we meet but with these men by name, of all the Sanhedrin—Annas and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, Gamaliel, Nicodemus, and Joseph of Arimathæa. And how many of these were not priests? Gamaliel indeed was of the tribe of Judah, and of the progeny of David, being grandchild of Hillel. But as for all the rest, some of them were undoubtedly of the priesthood, and the others more probably so too, than of any other tribe. Of Annas and Caiaphas there is no question. And if John (Acts iv. 6) be the eminentest John that was then among them, it means Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, who was now vice-president of the Council, and he was a priest, as Juchasin tells us. And if Nicodemus be the same with the eminentest Nicodemus of those times, of whom Avoth R. Nathan, per. 6, and Talm. bab. in Cetaboth, fol. 66, make mention, as we have no cause to think otherwise, then was he by their plain description a priest likewise. And so was Joseph of Arimathæa, if his style and title, Βουλευτής (Mark xv. 43), be to be understood according to the common speech of the nation, as there can be no reason why it should not be so understood. And as for Alexander, of whom is least evidence, it is not worth spending so much time upon as to discuss, since these already mentioned may be witness enough.”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the New Test.’ vol. i. p. 282. See also on Mark xv. 43; vol. ii. p. 358.

^b He wrapped It in a clean linen cloth.—“Mar Zutraha saith that out of the linen in which they wrapt up books, when it grew old, they make shrouds for the dead of the precept, for this is to their disgrace. The gloss adds, ‘That they do it of the linen wherein they fold up the book of the Law.’ He who had suffered death by the sentence of the Sanhedrin or magistrate, they were wont to call him ‘the dead of the precept,’ because he was executed according to the precept. And such an one to them was our Jesus. Now as to one that was condemned to death by the magistrate, they had an opinion, that by how much the more disgracefully they dealt with him, by so much the greater atonement was made for him. Hence that expression, ‘they did not openly bewail him, that that very setting him at nought (no man lamenting him) might redound to his atonement.’ And from thence perhaps, if the women at Jerusalem had bewailed any other person, as they bewailed our Saviour, that other person might have said, Ye daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, lest ye cut short my atonement. But Christ speaks to them upon a far different account. And under this notion they wrapped one that had been so executed in some ragged, torn, old, dirty winding-sheets, that this disgrace being thrown upon him, might augment his expiation. But this good Arimathean behaves himself otherwise with Jesus, as having conceived quite another opinion concerning Him.”—LIGHTFOOT on Luke xxiii. 53; vol. ii. p. 478.

to be refused, whether from regard to his position or his character as a rich man and an honourable counsellor. In this case¹ there was an additional reason why Pilate should grant his request. Though he had condemned Jesus to death, Pilate did not himself believe that He had done anything worthy of death.

S. Mark alone records Pilate's surprise that Jesus was so soon dead, even before the malefactors. He had some lingering conviction that Jesus was more than human, and he may have thought that He would show this in the tenacity with which He prolonged His life.² He was ignorant of the supernatural character of the whole event, and of the voluntary surrender of His spirit.

All the four Evangelists relate how, contrary to the usual practice in such cases, as appears from the Talmud, and as expressive of his conviction of the innocence of the crimes charged against Him, Joseph wrapped the Body of Jesus in linen,—“clean linen,” according to S. Matthew; and “fine linen,” according to S. Mark. S. John alone relates that in this pious office he was joined by Nicodemus, another secret disciple, also a rich man and a counsellor.

S. John is the only one of the four Evangelists who mentions Nicodemus. He alone relates that Nicodemus first came to Jesus by night to receive instruction from Him (iii.), that he afterwards defended Him against the Pharisees in the Council, and that now he brought the necessary spices and assisted Joseph in the pious office of wrapping the Body of Jesus in linen clothes with the spices, and laying It in the tomb. From the expression which S. John uses, it would appear that Nicodemus paid more than one visit to Jesus, though that alone is recorded, “Nicodemus, which at the first came to Jesus by night.”

Some commentators have thought that they brought a hundred pound weight of myrrh and aloes as a proof of their liberality and affection for Jesus, and of their determination that there should be no deficiency, not that all this was required. The quantity appears large, though it may not have been too much for the manner in which the Jews buried, and when they wished to pay the highest possible honour. The Jews derived their burial customs from the Egyptians, who were well known to have been lavish in the use of spices in embalming their dead.

JESUS IS LAID IN THE TOMB.

S. MATTHEW xxvii. 60, 61.

S. MARK xv. 46, 47.

S. LUKE xxiii. 53–56.

S. JOHN xix. 41, 42.

60 and laid It in his own new tomb, which he had hewn
out in the rock :

46 —and laid Him
in a sepulchre which was hewn out of a rock,

53 —and laid It in a sepulchre that was hewn
in stone, wherein never man
before was laid.

41 Now in the place where He was crucified there was a garden;
and in the garden a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid.

42 There laid they Jesus therefore and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre,

and departed.

and rolled a stone unto the door of the sepulchre.

54 And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on.

because of the Jews'
preparation day ;
for the sepulchre was nigh at hand.

61 And there was
Mary Magdalene,
and the other Mary,

47 And Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of Jesus

55 And the women also,

sitting over against the sepulchre.

beheld where He
was laid.

which came with Him
from Galilee, followed after,

and beheld the sepulchre,
and how His Body
was laid.

56 And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments : and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 58 : vol. viii. p. 552

² Euthymius, in Matt. xxvii. 58 : vol. ii. p. 1145.

60. And laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock: and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre,^a and departed.

61. And there was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre.

Vulg. Erat autem ibi Maria Magdalene, et altera Maria, sedentes contra sepulchrum.

It was past three o'clock before Jesus yielded up His Spirit. At sunset would begin the Sabbath, on which no burial could take place. Whatever arrangements respecting the burial of Jesus had to be made must be before the Sabbath began, or left undone until it was over. Some time would have elapsed while Joseph had gone to Pilate to beg the Body of Jesus, and while Pilate made the inquiries as to whether Jesus was already dead, which he thought it necessary to make. There was, therefore, no time to remove His Body to a more distant burial-place. In the place where He was crucified there was a garden, and in the garden a new sepulchre wherein was man never yet laid. There therefore, by reason of the Jews' preparation day, because the sepulchre was nigh at hand, they laid Jesus.

The Body of Jesus was laid in a garden and in a new tomb. But it was laid there not from choice, but from convenience. It was not chosen because it was a rich man's tomb, or because it was a new tomb, or because it was in a garden, but because the time was short and this tomb was conveniently near.

The Evangelists relate that the Body of Jesus was laid in a sepulchre which had never been used before. S. Matthew calls it a "new sepulchre;" S. Luke, "a sepulchre wherein never man before was laid;" and S. John, "a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid." They are careful to record this, to prevent the possibility of anyone saying that it was some other, and not Jesus, who had risen again. S.

^a He rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre.— "From the multiplicity of ancient tombs still existing in and about Jerusalem, we are enabled to sketch their ordinary features with great accuracy. 'A doorway in the perpendicular face of the rock,' says Robinson, 'usually small and without ornament, leads to one or more chambers excavated from the rock, and commonly upon the same level with the door. In order to obtain a perpendicular face for the doorway, a advantage was sometimes taken of a former quarry, or an angle was cut in the rock with a tomb in each face, or a square niche or area was hewn out of the rock, and then tombs excavated in all three sides' (Rob. i. 352). 'The Jewish sepulchre,' says Barclay, 'was a small room excavated in the solid rock, and provided with several receptacles for the dead. They were occasionally provided with an ante-room, and were susceptible of unlimited enlargement by adding room to room in the rear, or at the sides, or below. . . . The position of the door in reference to the room was very irregular, the workmen having evidently paid more regard to the grain and flaws of the rock than to the symmetry of the room' (Barclay, 181). The door, usually square, was too low to admit a person standing (Schultz, 97), and was about three feet, more or less, each way. After passing the door was a small sepulchral chamber (sometimes, but not commonly, preceded by an ante-room), and this chamber was not itself the receptacle for the dead, but gave access to the loculi or niches in which they were deposited. There were two very different modes of arranging these loculi. In one they branched off perpendicularly from the sides of Mark, S. Luke, and S. John also fix the day of the week, using the common ecclesiastical term, "the preparation day," or the day before the Sabbath, the Friday in the Passover week.

Mary Magdalen and Mary the mother of Joses are mentioned by name as having followed them to the sepulchre, and as sitting watching over against it. Salome may have gone into the city. S. Luke adds that in the interval, before the Sabbath began, they prepared spices and ointments, and she may have gone upon this very errand.

S. Matthew alone records the following vv. 62—66.

62. ¶ Now the next day, that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, Vulg. Altera autem die, quæ est post Parasceven.

63. Saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while He was yet alive, After three days I will rise again.

64. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest His disciples come by night,^b and steal Him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first.

S.V.A. omit by night.

Vulg. ne forte veniant discipuli ejus, et furentur eum.

65. Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch: go your way, make it as sure as ye can.

Vulg. Ait illis Pilatus: Habetis custodiam, ite custodite sicut scitis.

66. So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch.

Vulg. munierunt sepulchrum, signantes lapidem, cum custodiis.

the chamber. In the other case the loculi were shallow and hewn out of the sides of the sepulchre, on each side one, and were parallel to the sides, while opposite to the door was a smaller niche, as if for the body of a child or for a lamp. The circumstances which would regulate the adoption of the one or the other mode are obvious. The former admitted of the larger number of loculi, and was accommodated to a family, while the latter form of tomb could receive only two or three. The difference of expense would thus be considerable, and, according to Schultz (98), the former plan was that commonly in use amongst the poorer, and the latter amongst the wealthier, class.

"The entrances to the sepulchral chambers were closed by stone doors, which sometimes swung on stone hinges, and were sometimes detached so as to be taken off or fastened on as occasion required. But about the time of our Lord's Crucifixion there prevailed another and very singular mode of securing the door, viz. by a thick circular stone, like a heavy millstone, which moved along a groove cut laterally in front of the sepulchre; and which, when the tomb was to be closed, was rolled sideways to the mouth of the sepulchre, and, when admission was wanted, was rolled back. Fortunately, in the Tombs of Helena, or, as they are now called, the Tombs of the Kings, we have a remarkably well-preserved specimen of this machinery."—LEWIS, 'Siege of Jerusalem,' pp. 393, 394.

^b Verse 64.—"Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, omit by night."

SCHWEIGER, N. T. 1877.

The reverence and attention which the disciples of Jesus had paid to His Body, and their asking permission to bury It in Joseph's sepulchre, may have aroused the fears of the Jews, and brought to their recollection the words of Jesus, that on the third day He would rise again. Their pretence for a guard was lest His disciples should steal Him away, but their fear evidently was, lest He should rise again. His disciples, as they knew, had all fled in terror at the first approach of the soldiers. But little did they know of the nature of His resurrection. By placing a guard and sealing the stone, they supposed that they could either prevent Jesus from rising from the dead, or at least that they could prevent Him from coming out of the sepulchre, and thus might capture Him and put Him to death again.

By the term error¹ (πλάνη) they designate not any action of their own as being a mistake, but the teaching of Jesus as false, a fraud and deception. The first error according to them was that Jesus was the Son of God; the last error would be that He was risen from the dead. This last error would be worse than the first, because it would be used to prove the truth of the first, and to confirm the belief of the people in it. There must therefore be no want of care in their arrangements, so as in any way to give ground for the pretence of this error.

It has been already stated that the Birth of Jesus Christ could not have been later than 750 A.U.C., because Herod the Great died at the Passover of 750 A.U.C.; that as the events in our Saviour's life which are related by the Evangelists to have occurred before the death of Herod, namely, His presentation in the Temple and the flight into Egypt, do not require more than a few months for their completion, it is highly probable that He was born at the end of 749 A.U.C. on, or not far from, 25th December, the day which the Church from time immemorial has celebrated as the day of His Birth.

At the time of His Baptism Jesus was about thirty years of age. If to this we add three years and a few months, the duration of His ministry, His Crucifixion will fall at the Passover 30 A.D. This date, determined by other considerations, has received a remarkable confirmation by modern scientific investigation. There can be no question that Jesus was crucified on Nisan 15, on a Friday, and when the moon was full. Recent astronomical investigation, made for the years A.D. 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, the only years in which this could have taken place, has shown that the full moon fell on Nisan 15, and on a Friday, only in 30 A.D., and in 33 A.D.; and that as 33 A.D. is rejected from other considerations, 30 A.D. alone remains as the year of our Saviour's Crucifixion,—Friday, April 7th, 30 A.D.²

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxliv. p. 610.
 Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 64; vol. i. p. 486.
 Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvii. 64; vol. viii. p. 554.

² See Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 354.
 McClellan, New Testament, p. 493.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER XXVIII.

The Last Passover Week.

Day of the Month.		Day of the Week.		THE EVANGELISTS' ACCOUNT.
Nisan.	April.
ix.	1st	The Sabbath	Saturday	Six days before the Passover, Jesus arrives at Bethany.
x.	2nd	First day of the week	Palm Sunday ..	Jesus entered Jerusalem in triumph, riding on an ass; went to the Temple, healed the sick, and in the evening returned to Bethany.
xi.	3rd	Second day of the week	Monday	On His return from Bethany to Jerusalem Jesus curses the barren fig-tree, enters the Temple, and drives out the sellers and buyers, &c.
xii.	4th	Tuesday	On His return from Bethany to Jerusalem the disciples remark on the withering of the fig-tree. When He had entered the Temple, the high priests, &c., inquire by what authority He did the things which He had done. The Herodians tempt Him with the question about paying tribute to Cæsar, the Sadducees about the Resurrection, and the Pharisees about the apparent contradiction in the Psalms with respect to the Messiah. Sitting over against the treasury, He commends the widow who cast in two mites. Quits the Temple for ever, and foretells to His disciples the destruction of the city and of the Temple. In the evening, which was the second day before the Passover, He foretells His own death after two days. They make Him a supper at Bethany. Mary the sister of Lazarus anoints Him with precious ointment for His burial. Judas is indignant at the waste of the ointment.
xiii.	5th	Wednesday ..	Jesus remains at Bethany in retirement with His disciples. Judas agrees with the chief priests, &c., to betray Jesus unto them for thirty pieces of silver.
xiv.	6th	First day of unleavened bread (so called in our Saviour's time)	Thursday	Jesus sends two disciples to prepare the Passover for them. In the evening He eats the Paschal lamb with the Twelve, washes their feet, institutes the Eucharist, foretells that one of them shall betray Him. He goes to Gethsemane; His Agony; His apprehension and examination.
xv.	7th	The preparation day ..	Good Friday ..	He is examined before the high priest, before the Council, and declared guilty of death; led to Pilate, to Herod Antipas, and again to Pilate; scourged, mocked, and crucified. In the evening before sunset He is buried.
xvi.	8th	The Sabbath	Saturday	Fulfills the Sabbath in the grave.
xvii.	9th	First day of the week ..	Easter Sunday	He rises again, and appears to Mary Magdalene and other women, and to His disciples.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

[1. Christ's Resurrection is declared by an angel to the women. 9. He Himself appeareth unto them. 11. The high priests give the soldiers money to say that He was stolen out of His sepulchre. 16. Christ appeareth to His disciples, 19. and sendeth them to baptize and teach all nations.]

[Vulg. Facto terra motu, exterritisque custodibus, angelus mulieribus narrat Christi Resurrectionem: qui ipsis apparens jubet (sicut et angelus jusserat) ut discipulis nuntiarent, quod hominem in Galilæa visuri sint: milites sepulchri custodes, pecunia corrupti, dicunt corpus Christi furto sublatum: discipuli videntes in Galilæa Dominum, jubentur ire ad docendas et baptizandas omnes gentes.]

OF the women who were present at our Saviour's Crucifixion or Burial, and who are related afterwards to have come to His sepulchre, some are described as "women which came with Him from Galilee and ministered unto Him" (Mark xv. 40, 41; Luke xxiii. 55); others are mentioned by name, as Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of James the less and of Joses, and Salome, and Joanna (Mark xvi. 1; Luke xxiv. 10). From several indications in the narrative of the Evangelists, it has been conjectured¹ that the former of these two groups of women had their residence during this Passover week in the city of Jerusalem itself, and that the latter had their abode at the village of Bethany. The probability of this supposition is very much increased if, as many believe, Mary Magdalene is the same as Mary of Bethany, the sister of Lazarus: for we know for certain that her abode was at Bethany.

It is probable that the eleven Apostles were also now dwelling at Bethany or in the neighbourhood of it, as well as the women here mentioned: for the Evangelists expressly relate that, on the evenings of the earlier part of this week, Jesus had left Jerusalem and had retired with His Apostles to Bethany. When His disciples deserted Him and fled from fear of being taken by the soldiers or by the servants of the chief priests, they were in the Garden of Gethsemane, outside the city, and not far from Bethany. When then they seek concealment from their enemies the Roman soldiers or the Jews, it is more likely that they would seek this at Bethany or in the neighbourhood of it, a place well known to them and where they would be among friends, than in Jerusalem, to which they were comparative strangers, and where they would be in the very midst of their enemies.

It has also been pointed out² that the fact that these two groups of women had their abode in different places, one in the city of Jerusalem and the other at Bethany, may help to account for the apparent discrepancy in the Evangelists with respect to the purchase of the spices, &c., as well as to explain some other portions of their narrative. S. Luke (xxiii. 55), when speaking of the women who followed Jesus from Galilee, without indicating any by name, says that they prepared spices and ointments before the commencement of the Sabbath. S. Mark (xvi. 1), speaking of those women who, as there is reason to think, had their abode at Bethany—namely, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome—says that they bought the spices when the Sabbath was past. After sunset on Thursday Jesus had sat down with the Twelve to eat the Paschal lamb, and before sunset on Friday He had been apprehended, tried by the Jewish Sanhedrin and by Pilate the Roman Governor, crucified and buried. The suddenness of the whole transaction may have caused these two parties of women to make their purchases of spices at different times, when they could. Some regard these two parties as acting together in their purchase of spices, and that, owing to the shortness of the time between the Burial of Jesus and the commencement of the Sabbath, they were not able to purchase all they required at one time.³

Late on the Sabbath, "as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week," Mary Magdalene and the other Mary belonging to the Bethany party appear to have been drawn towards the sepulchre, probably without any object beyond loving contemplation⁴ (θεωρησαι), and after that on their return to have purchased spices and then to have set out again for the sepulchre for the purpose of anointing the Body of Jesus.

It was probably between the first visit of these women to see the sepulchre late on the Sabbath and their visit early in the morning to anoint His Body that the Resurrection took place.

¹ Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxxviii. vol. i. p. 269.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 523.

² McClellan, New Testament, p. 532.

³ Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 382.

⁴ McClellan, New Testament, p. 512.

LATE ON THE SABBATH, AND EARLY ON THE MORNING OF THE RESURRECTION.

S. MATTHEW xxviii. 1-7.

S. MARK xvi. 1-7.

S. LUKE xxiv. 1-8.

S. JOHN xx. 1.

1 In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene
and the other Mary
to see the sepulchre.

2 And, behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

3 His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow:

4 And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men.

1 And when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint Him.

2 And very early in the morning the first day of the week,
they came unto the sepulchre
at the rising of the sun.

1 Now upon the first day of the week,
very early in the morning,
they came
unto the sepulchre,

bringing the spices
which they had prepared,
and certain others with them.

1 The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early,
when it was yet dark,
unto the sepulchre,

3 And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?

4 And when they looked,
they saw that the stone was rolled away:
for it was very great.

5 And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment;
and they were affrighted.

5 And the angel answered and said unto the women,
Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus,
which was crucified.

6 He is not here:
for He is risen,
as He said.

Come, see the place where the Lord lay.

7 And go quickly, and tell His disciples

6 And He saith unto them,
Be not affrighted:
Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth,
which was crucified:
He is risen;
He is not here:

behold the place where they laid Him.

7 But go your way,
tell His disciples
and Peter

that He is risen from the dead;
and, behold,
He goeth before you
into Galilee;
there shall ye see Him:

lo, I have told you.

that
He goeth before you
into Galilee:
there shall ye see Him,
as He said unto you.

3 And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord
Jesus.

S. MATTHEW xxviii.

S. MARK xvi.

S. LUKE xxiv.

S. JOHN xx.

4 And it came to pass, as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold, two men stood by them in shining garments:

5 And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead?

6 He is not here, but is risen: remember how He spake unto you when He was yet in Galilee,

7 Saying, The Son of Man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.

8 And they remembered His words,

1. In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre.

Vulg. Vespere autem Sabbati, quæ lucescit in prima Sabb-ti, venit Maria Magdalene, et altera Maria, videre sepulchrum.

2. And, behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

Margin. There had been a great earthquake.

S.V. omit from the door.

Vulg. et accedens revolvit lapidem.

3. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow:

4. And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men.

5. And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

S.V. omit to the women.

Vulg. Respondens autem angelus dixit mulieribus.

6. He is not here: for He is risen, as He said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay.

S.V. where He lay.

Vulg. Venite, et videte locum ubi positus erat Dominus.

7. And go quickly, and tell His disciples that He is risen from the dead; and, behold, He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see Him: lo, I have told you.

Vulg. ecce prædixi vobis.

On their visit late on the Sabbath it may have been too dark for the women to perceive the guard at the sepulchre, or they may not have approached near enough. From their conversation on their way to anoint His Body, it would appear that they were ignorant of the change that had been made in the arrangements with respect to the sepulchre, and which had been made on the Sabbath; namely, that the stone had been sealed, and a guard placed before it.¹

Some commentators, both ancient and modern, Greek as well as Latin, do not distinguish between the visit of the women to the sepulchre for the purpose of affectionate contemplation and that with the object of anointing His Body. They regard these as one and the same visit; and yet maintain that there is no real discrepancy between the several accounts of it given by the Evangelists. S. Mark (xvi. 2) says, "Very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun;" S. Luke (xxiv. 1), "Upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre;" S. John (xx. 1), "The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre;" and S. Matthew (xxviii. 1), "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre." All these varying expressions they hold are intended to denote the same time, and to indicate one and the same visit to the sepulchre of Jesus.²

The object of these women in going to the sepulchre was to show their deep love and reverential affection for Jesus, in the way that was customary among the Jews. When alive they had shown their love for Him by following Him in His journeys and ministering unto Him of their substance. At His Crucifixion they attended Him to the cross, and stood by until he yielded up His Spirit. When taken down from

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxviii. 1; vol. viii. p. 557.

² S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. xx. 1; vol. vii. p. 684.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxviii. 1; vol. i. p. 163.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxviii. 1; vol. ii. p. 1155.

S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 24; vol. iii. p. 1195.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlv. p. 612.

Mabillonius, in Matt. xxviii. 1; vol. i. p. 488.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxviii. 1; vol. viii. p. 556.

the cross, they followed Him to the sepulchre, and beheld how He was laid. During the Sabbath they rest according to the commandment. But when the Sabbath was past, that is, after sunset, they prepare with the spices that they had bought to go and anoint Him; and as soon as there was light enough, they go to the sepulchre for that purpose. They had no thought of His Resurrection, and their one subject of doubt and perplexity was, who should roll away the stone from the door of the sepulchre, for it was very great.

S. Mark mentions Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, while S. John mentions only Mary Magdalene, probably as being the leader of the Bethany party, if not of all the women. She is evidently conspicuous among them by her zeal and ardour.

The same women had come to anoint Him as were before mentioned beholding Him on the cross, with the exception of the Blessed Virgin. She is not now with them. She went not with them to anoint His Body, for she probably alone of all the party knew that He would not be there, that He would have risen.¹ Doubtless in retirement she pondered on the completion of the Mystery. We may reverently assume that this was in some way vouchsafed to her by some personal communication, and not only through the report of the women and the disciples. Some² have believed that Jesus had first of all appeared to His Mother privately, though this is nowhere recorded in Scripture. But this would not be contrary to analogy, if I would rather be in perfect keeping with the way in which the Mystery of the Incarnation had been revealed to mankind.

But Jesus had already risen. Neither the stone, nor its seal, nor the guards, had been any hindrance to Him. In spite of them He had risen, and had left the sepulchre before the stone was rolled away.³

To prepare the way for the women there was a great earthquake, and an angel had rolled away the stone, and had inspired the guards with such terror that they became as dead men. This may have happened before the arrival of the women. The guards were so overcome with fear that they were unable to offer any hindrance to the women, or to attempt any fraud by introducing another body into the sepulchre, and pretend that it was that of Jesus. The angel, when he had rolled away the stone, sat upon it, probably to prevent its being rolled back again.

In order to understand the words of the Evangelists, it is necessary to bear in mind what was the form of the sepulchre.

This was a sort of square or oblong room. The entrance was to a floor on which the bier was first placed. On the right hand and on the left was an open space, a cave or hollowed place, the floor of which was lower than the floor on which the bier was placed, preparatory to its being let down into one of these caves.

S. Matthew says that an angel of the Lord rolled away the stone and sat upon it, and he then describes the effect which his appearance had on the guards. The angel may have appeared sitting on the stone only to the guards: for S. Mark says that he appeared to the women after they had entered (εἰσελθούσαι) into the sepulchre, or this may have been a different angel from the one that rolled away the stone and terrified the guards: for it is evident that more than one angel was present.

S. Matthew and S. Mark each mentions only one angel who appeared to the women, while S. Luke says they saw two. There are two ways of reconciling this apparent discrepancy. It may be that S. Matthew and S. Mark speak of one angel only, though two were present, because only one addressed them, and because it is not unusual with these two Evangelists to curtail their account as much as possible, and often to sacrifice clearness to conciseness. But many⁴ think that the three Evangelists are not referring to the same time, but that what S. Luke relates took place a little later than that which S. Matthew and S. Mark relate. According to this explanation, when the women first entered the sepulchre they saw on the right side of the floor on which they themselves were standing an angel, who addressed them and delivered to them a message, and invited them to see the place where the Lord lay, as S. Matthew and S. Mark relate. They then turn to the hollowed receptacle on the right, where the Body of Jesus had been laid, and bend down (κλινουσάν τὸ πρόσωπον εἰς τὴν γῆν) to look for It. When they are much perplexed at not finding His Body where It had been laid, though the angel had already declared that He was not there, but had risen, they behold two more angels, who ask them why they seek the living among the dead, and who then repeat the same message, or nearly the same, as the first angel had given them, and go on to recall to their recollection the words which Jesus had spoken unto them Himself. Though the women believe not the first angel that He was risen, when His own words are brought to their recollection by the two angels they believe.

The appearance of the angel caused fear to the soldiers and was intended to cause fear, but not to the women. The

¹ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxviii. 1; vol. i. p. 493.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxviii. 1; vol. viii. p. 557.

³ S. Ambrose, de Virginitate, cap. iii.; vol. iii. p. 270.

⁴ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxviii. 9; vol. i. p. 508.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxviii. 1; vol. viii. p. 558.

⁵ S. Gregory Nyssen, in Christi Resurrect., orat. ii.; vol. iii. p. 629.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxxix.; vol. ii. p. 539.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxviii. 2; vol. i. p. 163.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxviii. 2; vol. ii. p. 1139.

S. Jerome, Epist. ad Hedibiam, cxx. (alias 150), 6; vol. i. p. 991.

S. Leo Magnus, Epist. ad Monachos Palestinos, cxxiv. (alias 83), 6; vol. i. p. 1066.

⁶ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 24; vol. iii. p. 1200.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlv. p. 617.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxviii. 7; vol. viii. p. 563.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxxxvii.; vol. i. p. 270.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 533.

angel himself warns the women not to let his appearance have this effect on them: he says, "Fear not ye" (μη φοβεισθε υμεις), and lays an emphasis on the word "ye:"¹ for their object was different. The women came in love and reverential devotion to seek Jesus and to anoint Him with precious spices; but the object of the soldiers was to guard the sepulchre, and, as they thought, to prevent the fulfilment of His words, to prevent His rising again.

After they had heard from the angels that Jesus was risen, they depart from the sepulchre, and run to tell their words to His disciples. S. Mark (xvi. 7) alone relates that they were especially charged to tell this to Peter. The reasons² generally assigned for the message being especially sent to Peter are his eminence among the disciples and his surpassing love for Jesus. Some authors have also given another reason for this—namely, Peter's late denial of Jesus. They think that this message being sent to Peter by name was to be a pledge to him from Jesus that his denial of Him was forgiven.

After they had heard from the angels that Jesus was risen, the women depart from the sepulchre, and run to tell their words to His disciples.

THE WOMEN GO TO TELL THE DISCIPLES.

S. MATTHEW xxviii. 8.

8 And they departed quickly from the sepulchre
with fear and great joy;

and did run
to bring His disciples word.

S. MARK xvi. 8.

8 And they went out quickly, and fled
from the sepulchre;
for they trembled and were amazed:
neither said they any thing to any man:
for they were afraid.

S. LUKE xxiv. 9-12.

9 And returned
from the sepulchre,

and told all these things
unto the eleven,
and to all the rest.

S. JOHN xx. 2-10.

2 Then she runneth, and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple,
whom Jesus loved,
and saith unto them,
They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid Him.

10 It was Mary Magdalene, and Joanna, and Mary the mother of James,
and other women
that were with them, which told these things unto the Apostles.

11 And their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not.

12 Then arose Peter, and ran unto the sepulchre;

and stooping down,
he beheld the linen clothes
laid by themselves,

3 Peter therefore went forth, and that other disciple,
and came to the sepulchre.

4 So they ran both together:
and the other disciple did outrun
Peter, and came first to the sepulchre.

5 And he stooping down, and looking in, saw the linen clothes lying; yet went he not in.

6 Then cometh Simon Peter following him,
and went into the sepulchre, and seeth the linen clothes lie,

7 And the napkin, that was about His head, not lying with

¹ S. Cyril Hierosol., Catechesis, xiv. 13, p. 841.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lxxxix.; vol. ii. p. 539.

Theophylact, in Matt. xxviii. 5; vol. i. p. 164.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxviii. 5; vol. ii. p. 1163.

² S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxi. 4; vol. ii. p. 1171.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxviii. 7; vol. ii. p. 1167.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cxlv. p. 616.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxviii. 7; vol. i. p. 505.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxviii. 7; vol. viii. p. 562.

S. MATTHEW xxviii.

S. MARK xvi.

S. LUKE xxiv.

S. JOHN xx.

the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself.

8 Then went in also that other disciple, which came first to the sepulchre, and he saw, and believed.

9 For as yet they knew not the scripture, that He must rise again from the dead.

10 Then the disciples went away again unto their own home.

and departed,

wondering in himself at that which was come to pass.

8. And they departed quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy; and did run to bring His disciples word.

S. Matthew and S. Mark simply say that the women left the sepulchre in a state of great fear and joy, and ran to tell the angels' words, that Jesus had risen, to His disciples. But S. Luke gives several additional particulars. He mentions the names of the women, and says that the disciples, when they heard the report of the women, did not believe it, and that Peter ran to the sepulchre to see for himself. S. John adds further particulars still. He says that it was Mary Magdalene who informed Peter and himself, leaving us to infer that it was the other women who informed the other disciples; that he, the disciple whom Jesus loved, ran along with Peter, and that when he had inspected the sepulchre and the careful disposition of the grave clothes, he was convinced of the truth of the women's report, that Jesus had risen.

As the younger and more active of the two, S. John reaches the sepulchre first, but does not enter it until his companion had come up, perhaps from a feeling of modesty, and out of deference to S. Peter as his senior in age, and superior in position among the Apostles; or it may be that he was seized with a sudden feeling of fearful reverence towards the Dead.¹

The positions of the several pieces of linen with which His Body was wrapped S. John relates more minutely than the other Evangelists, for he alone is recording here what he saw with his own eyes. He had noted them carefully, as they were the first things to strike his attention. They were to him so many indications of His Resurrection.² They first prepared S. John to believe that Jesus might have risen. This belief—first produced by the sight of the sepulchre—was afterwards confirmed by other evidence which could not be gainsaid.

One thing that drew S. John's special attention to the linen, lying, as it was, wrapped in two separate places in the sepulchre, was the knowledge that when a dead body was wrapped in linen with spices, myrrh and aloes, the linen had a tendency to adhere to the body. The myrrh was of a gummy, glutinous nature, and would make it extremely difficult to remove the linen from the body. S. John himself—and he alone of the four Evangelists—had related that they wound the Body of Jesus in linen clothes with the spices (xix. 40). Had anyone wished to remove the Body of Jesus from the sepulchre, to stay to unwrap the clothes was only adding to the risk of detection. But this had been the work of one who was deliberate and careful in doing what he had done. There were no marks of hurry, no signs of haste from fear of discovery.

Some³ of the early writers thought that the Evangelist meant to say here that in consequence of what he saw in the sepulchre he believed the words which Mary Magdalene had said unto him; namely, that they had removed the Body of Jesus from the sepulchre; others,⁴ that what he believed was that Jesus had risen from the dead, and that both Peter and John believed this. But it is far more in accordance with the meaning of the context that this refers only to John, and that what he believed was that Jesus had risen from the dead.⁵ For the first time the truth flashed upon his mind, that this was what Jesus Himself had taught them. As yet, up to this time, he had not known, he had not understood the Scripture, that He must rise again from the dead. He had heard the words before, but without giving them any particular meaning, or at least any literal meaning, only such as was figurative. But now the appearance of the sepulchre, with its linen so carefully wrapped up and laid in different places, brought to his recollection the words of Jesus Himself, and forced on his mind the fact of the Resurrection. It was the Scripture, that he must rise again from the dead, which

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 5; vol. viii. p. 1154.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xx. 7; Homil. lxxxv.

Euthymius, in Joan. xx. 7; vol. iv. p. 627.

³ S. Augustine, in Joan. xx. 10, tract. cxxi.; vol. iii. p. 1955.

Theophylact, in Joan. xx. 10; vol. i. p. 760.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlv. p. 619.

⁴ S. Gregory Nyssen, in Christi Resurrect. orat. ii.; vol. iii. p. 637.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xx. 10; Homil. lxxxvi.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xx. 9; vol. vii. p. 684.

Euthymius, in Joan. xx. 9; vol. iv. p. 629.

⁵ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 8; vol. viii. p. 1154.

produced in S. John the conviction that Jesus had risen again; but it was what he saw in the sepulchre that brought the Scripture to his recollection, and prepared him to receive this conviction.

S. Peter had the same evidence, but he did not as yet believe that Jesus was risen from the dead. Perhaps there was in his very nature a backwardness to receive a new truth except on the fullest proofs. It is true that he had formerly been the first to confess that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the Living God (Matt. xvi. 16); that in a moment of impetuous zeal he had attempted to defend his Master at the risk of his own life (John xviii. 10). But the gentle, loving temperament of the youthful S. John may have made him more able to receive the great Mysteries of the Incarnation.

The two disciples depart unto their own home; John believing that Jesus had risen, and Peter wondering, at a loss how to account for appearances. Mary remains rooted to the spot by love to her Lord, and by grief because they had removed, as she thought, His Body, and she knew not where they had laid Him.

It is probable that as soon as the women had reported to the disciples the words of the angels, that Jesus had risen, they hastened back to the sepulchre as quickly as possible. Frustrated in the object for which they had first gone there, to anoint His Body, and perplexed by the words of the angels that He was risen, the nature of which they scarcely understood, they linger on the spot, uncertain what to do. Mary Magdalene's great love for Jesus was shown by her excessive grief at the loss of the opportunity of showing her love to Him by anointing His Body. To her it was that Jesus first appeared.

When the women were about to follow the example of S. Peter and S. John and return home, Mary seems to have gone to take one more look at the place where they had laid Him, and then it was that Jesus appeared to her.

JESUS APPEARS TO MARY MAGDALENE.

S. MARK xvi. 9.

9 Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week,

He appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom He had cast seven devils.

S. JOHN xx. 11-17.

11 But Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping: and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the sepulchre,

12 And seeth two angels in white sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the Body of Jesus had lain.

13 And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him.

14 And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus.

15 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? She, supposing Him to be the gardener, saith unto Him, Sir, if thou have borne Him hence, tell me where thou hast laid Him, and I will take Him away.

16 Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself, and saith unto Him, Rabboni; which is to say, Master.

17 Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to My Father: but go to My brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto My Father, and your Father; and to My God, and your God.

S. Matthew and S. Luke omit this appearance of Jesus altogether; S. Mark (xvi. 9) refers to it, but does not describe it; while S. John (xx. 11-17) records it with very great circumstantiality. S. Mark contents himself with reminding us that this is the Mary Magdalene out of whom Jesus had cast seven devils. In a few expressive words he contrasts her former condition with her present, her former state of misery with the honour to which she is now exalted: for it is to her that Jesus first appears after His Resurrection.

What S. John had seen in the sepulchre had prepared him for a belief in the Resurrection of Jesus. What Mary saw was doubtless intended to prepare her for the appearance of Jesus Himself. The angels; their clothing, in white; their posture, sitting; the very place where they sat, one at the head and the other at the feet,—are all signs of His Resurrection.

Jesus approached Mary from behind, and some¹ suppose that the reason why she turned herself was because she saw the angels suddenly assume an attitude of reverential adoration, as if to some one behind her; or she may have turned because she heard the sound of advancing footsteps.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xx. 14: Homil. lxxvii. Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlv. p. 620.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 14; vol. vii. p. 1155.

It may be that Jesus appeared first to Mary Magdalene in consequence of the excessive love which she bore towards Him, but that her eyes were holden so that she could not at first recognize Him, as the effect of her disbelief in the words of the angel, which said that He was alive, as well as a gentle rebuke for it.¹ In His question, "Why weepst thou?" Jesus intimates that there is need of faith, not of tears. There is no need to weep for Him who is risen, and who is declared by the angels to be risen. He appeared to her in such a form that she took Him for the gardener, just as He appeared to the two disciples going to Emmaus a little later on the same day, in such a form that they supposed that He was a stranger (Luke xxiv. 13).

Mary would seem to have turned from Jesus towards the angels again,² as if seeking from them some explanation of the circumstances, when she heard the sound of her own name uttered by the voice of Jesus, and with all the sweetness and graciousness with which He had been accustomed to address her. Like the Shunammite woman of old (2 Kings iv. 27), she fell on her knees and most probably³ caught hold of the feet of Jesus, and began to indulge in her feelings of ecstatic delight, in this act of worship towards Him, and calling Him Rabboni, a term intended to convey the highest honour and most enduring love.

The meaning of the words which Jesus addressed to Mary, μή μου ἄπτον, rendered "Touch Me not," is not easy to see, especially in connection with the reason assigned for them, "For I am not yet ascended unto My Father." Several explanations have been offered. (1) Some⁴ think that Mary was forbidden to touch Jesus because He had not, in her heart, ascended unto His Father,—that is, because she did not as yet believe that Jesus was the Son of God, One with the Father, and equal to the Father; (2) others,⁵ that she was forbidden to touch His glorified Body until after the descent of the Holy Spirit; (3) others, that she was forbidden to touch His Body because He wished her to regard Him with more reverential awe and devotion than she did before His Resurrection, when He was daily with them; (4) others because He wished gradually to wean them from the consolation of His Bodily Presence, and to lead them to trust more to His unseen Presence among them.

In all these interpretations it is implied that Mary Magdalene was deficient either in faith towards Jesus as the Son of God, or in love and reverential devotion towards Him. But to all human eyes she would not appear to have been more deficient in these qualities than the Apostles, or than the rest of the women to whom He appeared, but rather less so. But Jesus almost immediately granted this privilege to a number of women, which number probably included Mary Magdalene herself: for they held Him by the feet (ἐκράτησαν αὐτοῦ τοὺς πόδας) and worshipped Him (Matt. xxviii. 9). The very same day in the evening Jesus Himself invited His assembled disciples to "handle" Him (ψηλαφήσατέ με, Luke xxiv. 39). A week after this He invited Thomas to thrust his hand into His side (John xx. 27). All this took place before Jesus had ascended unto the Father. Evidently then some other explanation must be sought for. The fact that He had not ascended unto the Father could scarcely be given as a reason why Mary Magdalene should not touch Him, since it did not prevent others from touching Him.

(5) The explanation⁶ which seems to harmonize most with the context generally, and especially with the reason assigned why she should not touch Him, is the following. The words μή μου ἄπτον are imperfectly rendered "Touch Me not." The literal meaning of these words is much more nearly represented by the English, "Cling to Me not," or "Cease to cling to Me." In this sense γούναυ ἄπτεσθαι is not at all uncommon in classic Greek.

When therefore Jesus said to Mary Magdalene, μή μου ἄπτον, He did not forbid her to touch Him: for it is even probable⁷ that she had already touched Him before He spake. But He bade her not to remain clinging to Him, but to hasten and carry the news of His Resurrection to His disciples,—that as He had not ascended unto His Father, other opportunities would be afforded her of showing her love and devotion to Him by clinging to His feet. According to this interpretation, the words "I have not ascended unto My Father" are given as a reason why she should show her love by embracing and clinging to Him hereafter, before He ascended unto His Father, but not now. Her present duty was to carry the news of His Resurrection to His disciples.

It has been observed⁸ that Jesus does not say, I ascend unto our Father, or unto our God, but "unto My Father, and your Father; and to My God, and your God." He thus draws a marked distinction between God as His Father and as their Father. God is His Father by nature; He is their Father by adoption and grace. In the words "My Father

¹ S. Ambrose, de Virginitate, cap. iv.; vol. iii. p. 270.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 16; vol. viii. p. 1156.

³ S. Augustine, in Joan. xx. 17, tract. cxxi.; vol. iii. p. 1957.

⁴ S. Jerome, Epist. ad Hedibiam, cxx. (alias 150), 5; vol. i. p. 990.

⁵ S. Leo Magnus, Sermo de Ascensione Domini, ii. 4; vol. i. p. 399.

⁶ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xx. 17; vol. vii. p. 693.

⁷ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xx. 17; Homil. lxxxvi.

⁸ Theophylact, in Joan. xx. 17; vol. i. p. 762.

Euthymius, in Joan. xx. 17; vol. iv. p. 633.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlv. p. 620.

⁶ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxviii. 9; vol. i. p. 511.

Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, vol. iii. p. 35.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 17; vol. viii. p. 1157.

Lardner, vol. x. p. 375.

⁷ Maldonatus, in Matt. xxviii. 9; vol. i. p. 509.

G. D. Kypke, Observations Sacre in Evangelist., vol. i. p. 411.

⁸ S. Augustine, in Joan. xx. 17, tract. cxxi.; vol. iii. p. 1957.

S. Hilary Pict., de Trinitate, xi. 14; vol. ii. p. 408.

S. Ambrose, de Virginitate, cap. iv.; vol. iii. p. 271.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlv. p. 621.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 17; vol. viii. p. 1158.

and your Father, My God and your God," He may also intend to remind them of His twofold nature, and may thus speak of God as His Father with reference to His Divine nature, and as His God with reference to His human nature. Surprised and almost perplexed at His Resurrection, an event which they had so little expected, it may have been necessary to teach and remind them in every possible form that He was "perfect God and perfect Man." He may also have said this to them and have called them His brethren, to remove from them the feeling of fear and of shame at their desertion of Him, and to remind them that though He had risen again, He was the same loving Master to them that He was before His Crucifixion.

It is probable that Mary Magdalene, soon after Jesus had appeared to her, hastened to join the rest of her company, and told them how Jesus had appeared to her, and that they then set off together to go and tell this to the disciples, and that on the way Jesus met them, or, as some commentators have held, on their way back to the sepulchre.¹ This would be His second appearance to Mary Magdalene, and His first to the other women.

This is the more general opinion among the early commentators,² though some³ have spoken of our Saviour's appearance to Mary Magdalene and to the other women as if they had taken place at the same time, and not as if He had first appeared to Mary Magdalene alone, and then to Mary Magdalene in company with the other women. In support of this view it has been attempted⁴ to explain S. Mark's words (xvi. 9), "He appeared first to Mary Magdalene," as not meaning first absolutely, but first in relation to the Apostles,—that He appeared to her before He appeared to any of the Apostles.

JESUS APPEARS TO MARY MAGDALENE IN COMPANY WITH OTHER WOMEN.

S. MATTHEW xxviii. 9-15.

S. MARK xvi. 10, 11.

S. JOHN xx. 18.

9 And as they went to tell
His disciples,

10 And she went and told them that had been with Him, as they mourned and wept.

18 Mary Magdalene came and told the disciples

behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail.
And they came
and held Him by the feet,
and worshipped Him.

10 Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell My brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see Me.

that she had seen the Lord, and that He had spoken
these things unto her.

11 And they, when they had heard that He was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not.

11 Now when they were going, behold, some of the watch came into the city, and shewed unto the chief priests all the things that were done.

12 And when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel, they gave large money unto the soldiers,

13 Saying, Say ye, His disciples came by night, and stole Him away while we slept.

14 And if this come to the governor's ears, we will persuade him, and secure you.

15 So they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day.

¹ McClellan, New Testament, p. 515.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 24; vol. iii. p. 1202.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xxviii. 9; vol. vii. p. 217.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. xlv. p. 619.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxviii. 8; vol. viii. p. 66.

³ Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, vol. ii. p. 238.

⁴ S. Athanasius, contr. Apollinarium, i. 6; vol. ii. p. 1101.

⁵ Malden, in Matt. xxviii. 9; vol. i. p. 508.

Richardson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, in Gen. p. 132.

9. ¶ And as they went to tell His disciples,^a behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held Him by the feet, and worshipped Him.

S.V. omit as they went to tell His disciples.

Vulg. Et ecce Iesus occurrit illis, dicens : Ave.

10. Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid : go tell My brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see Me.

S.V. go tell the brethren.

Vulg. Nolite timere ; ite, nuntiate fratribus meis ut eant in Galileam, ibi me videbunt.

S. Matthew alone describes this appearance of Jesus ; and of the several appearances which Jesus made to His disciples on the day of His Resurrection, and in fact of all that He made in Judæa, this is the only one which S. Matthew records.

In His appearance to Mary Magdalene Jesus had not permitted her to stay and worship Him, but He allows the women now to hold Him by the feet and worship Him. He may have sent her to go and prepare the others for His appearance.

S. Matthew alone contains the following (verses 11-15).

11. ¶ Now when they were going, behold, some of the watch came into the city, and shewed unto the chief priests all the things that were done.

12. And when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel, they gave large money unto the soldiers,

S.V. with the elders, they took counsel and took large money and gave it unto.

Vulg. Et congregati cum senioribus, consilio accepto, pecuniam copiosam dederunt militibus.

13. Saying, Say ye, His disciples came by night, and stole Him away while we slept.

14. And if this come to the governor's ears, we will persuade him, and secure you.

S.V. omit him.

Vulg. Et si hoc auditum fuerit a preside, nos suadebimus ei, et securos vos faciemus.

15. So they took the money, and did as they were taught : and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day.^b

Vulg. At illi, accepta pecunia, fecerunt sicut erant edocti. Et divulgatum est verbum istud, &c.

S. Matthew alone had related that guards were set before the sepulchre, and so he alone mentions that the guards were terrified at the earthquake and at the appearance of the angel who rolled away the stone and sat upon it ; and that, when the women had left the sepulchre, they went into the city and told all these things unto the chief priests. The women leave the sepulchre twice : the first time to go and tell the disciples the words of the angels, that Jesus had risen ; the second time, to tell them that He had appeared to Mary Magdalene and to themselves. S. Matthew mentions only one of these, the latter. But it is probable that the guards went to the chief priests after the women had left the first time, and that they were not present when Peter and John came to the sepulchre, or when Jesus appeared to Mary Magdalene. They tell the chief priests "all the things that were done," all that they had heard and seen : that there was a great earthquake, and that an angel rolled away the stone from the door of the sepulchre and sat upon it ; and that he had told the women that Jesus had risen, and that they should see Him in Galilee.

The chief priests had agreed with Judas for money to sell the life of Jesus, and they now bribe the guards with money to conceal His Resurrection. Their madness¹ blinded them to the improbability and absurdity of the story which they were inventing. For a Roman soldier to sleep while on guard was considered a crime to be expiated only by death ; and for a whole guard to fall asleep, and to sleep while a stone of such a size, and which they had been set to watch, was being rolled away, was an impossibility. But if the soldiers were asleep, how could they see the disciples roll away the stone and steal the Body of Jesus ? If they did not see this, how could they bear witness to it ?

Whether the story of the bribing of the soldiers to say that the disciples of Jesus stole away His Body while they slept ever did reach Pilate is not recorded. But some² of the early writers thought that Pilate believed in the truth of the Resurrection, or at least that he believed in its marvellous character so far as to transmit an account of it to the Emperor Tiberius Cæsar, and such an account as induced him to refer the matter to the consideration of the Senate, who, without examining the merits of the case, decreed that Jesus had forfeited all claim to be regarded as a god, because He had not first referred His claim to the Roman Senate.

Five different appearances of Jesus on the day of His Resurrection are recorded : the first to Mary Magdalene at the sepulchre ; the second to Mary Magdalene in company with other women, though some commentators have regarded these two appearances as one ; the third to S. Peter ; the fourth to the two disciples on their way to Emmaus ; the fifth to the Apostles, when they were assembled together in the evening, Thomas being absent.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xc. ; vol. ii. p. 546.

² Tertullian, Apologia, cap. v. ; vol. i. p. 290.

Eusebius Pamphil., Hist. Ecclesiast. ii. 2 ; vol. ii. p. 140.

^a Verse 9.—Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles omit, 'as they went to tell His disciples.'—SCRIVENER, N. T., 1877.

^b And this saying is commonly reported, &c.—S. Matthew informs us, that this story concerning the disciples was commonly reported among the Jews at the time of his writing his Gospel.

Justin Martyr has added (and his evidence in this instance can hardly, I think, be doubted) that the Jews sent persons into every country to spread this story.—DR. BURTON, 'Lectures on Eccles. Hist.,' p. 27.

JESUS APPEARS TO SIMON PETER.

S. LUKE xiv. 33, 34.

1 COR. xv. 5.

33 ———and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them,

34 saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.

5 And that He was seen of Cephas.

The third appearance of Jesus on the day of His Resurrection which is recorded was to S. Peter. This is stated by S. Luke (xxiv. 34) and also by S. Paul (1 Cor. xv. 5), but this appearance is nowhere described at length. After the women Jesus appeared first to Peter,¹ before He appeared to the two disciples going to Emmaus, or to the Apostles assembled together in the evening. This may have been on account of his fall and his repentance, and on account of his eminence among the Apostles.

Later on the same day Jesus appeared to two disciples going to Emmaus "in another form" (ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ), as S. Mark (xvi. 12) says; that is, not in a form in which He could be mistaken for the gardener, as He had been when appearing to Mary Magdalene, which appearance S. Mark had just before related. S. Matthew and S. John omit this appearance altogether; S. Mark refers to it; and S. Luke (xxiv. 13-35) describes it at great length.

JESUS APPEARS TO THE TWO DISCIPLES GOING TO EMMAUS.

S. MARK xvi. 12, 13.

S. LUKE xxiv. 13-35.

12 After that He appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked,
and went into the country.

13 And, behold,
two of them
went that same day
to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs.
14 And they talked together of all these things which had happened.
15 And it came to pass, that, while they communed together and reasoned, Jesus Himself drew near, and went with them.

13 And they went and told it unto the residue:

neither believed they them.

33 And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem,
and found the eleven gathered together,
and them that were with them,
34 Saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.
35 And they told what things were done in the way, and how He was known of them in breaking of bread.

See Commentary on S. Luke xxiv. 13-35.

JESUS APPEARS TO THE APOSTLES, THOMAS BEING ABSENT.

1 COR. xv. 5.

S. MARK xvi. 14-18.

S. LUKE xxiv. 36-49.

S. JOHN xx. 19-23.

— then

14 Afterward

36 And as they thus spoke,

19 Then
the same day at evening, being the first day of the week,
when the doors were shut
where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews,

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 25; vol. iii. p. 1205.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlvi. p. 628.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xiv. 34; vol. viii. p. 860.

1 COR. xv.

of the twelve,

S. MARK xvi.

He appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat,

and upbraided them with their unbelief
and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen Him

after He was risen.

S. LUKE xxiv.

Jesus Himself
stood in the midst of them,
and saith unto them,
Peace be unto you.
37 But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit.

38 And He said unto them,
Why are ye troubled?
and why do thoughts
arise in your hearts?

39 Behold My hands and My feet,
that it is I Myself:
handle Me, and see:
for a spirit
hath not flesh and bones, as ye see Me have.

— 40 And when He had thus spoken,
He shewed them
His hands and His feet.

41 And while they yet believed not for joy, and wondered,
He said unto them,
Have ye here any meat?

42 And they gave Him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honeycomb.

43 And He took it, and did eat before them.

44 And He said unto them,
These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning
Me.

45 Then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures.

46 And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day:

47 And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His Name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

48 And ye are witnesses of these things.

49 And, behold,
I send the promise of My Father
upon you:
but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem,
until ye be endued with power from on high.

S. JOHN xx.

came Jesus
and stood in the midst,
and saith unto them,
Peace be unto you.

20 And when He had so said,
He shewed unto them
His hands and His side.
Then
were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord.

21 Then
said Jesus to them again,
Peace be unto you:
as My Father hath sent Me,
even so send I you.

15 And He said unto them,
Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature.

16 He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.

17 And these signs shall follow them that believe: In My Name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues;

18 They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly

1 COR. xv.

S. MARK xvi.

S. LUKE xiv.

S. JOHN xx.

thing, it shall not hurt them;
they shall lay hands on the sick,
and they shall recover.

22 And when He had said this,
He breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost:

23 Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them;
and whose soever sins ye retain,
they are retained.

In the evening of the same day Jesus appeared to the Apostles as they sat at meat, Thomas being absent. This appearance is recorded by S. Luke (xxiv. 36, &c.) and by S. John (xx. 19-23). Some¹ think that this appearance is also related by S. Mark (xvi. 14, &c.); others² that S. Mark is here recording the appearance which Jesus made to His Apostles a week later, when Thomas was present with them. S. Augustine³ examines this question with great care. He considers the several points in the matter: whether, for instance, the context of S. Mark does not require his account to be understood of the appearance which Jesus made to His Apostles on the day of His Resurrection, immediately after the return of the two disciples from Emmaus; whether the term "the eleven" (τοῖς ἑνδεκά) could be applied as a designation of the Apostles, without regard to the exact number of them, or whether this word is not of itself a sufficient proof that S. Mark is describing the appearance which Jesus made to His Apostles a week later when Thomas was present; and lastly, whether the term ὑστερον which S. Mark (xvi. 14) uses, and which S. Augustine renders "novissime," as also the Vulgate, does not necessarily refer to a still later appearance. After considerable hesitation S. Augustine seems to think that S. Mark is here referring to an appearance of Jesus later than that, when Thomas was present a week after the Resurrection, perhaps even to His last appearance before His Ascension into heaven.

Many of the ancient⁴ commentators drew attention to the fact that the Evangelist was careful to mention the closed doors, both here and in the next appearance of Jesus, when Thomas was with them, in order to indicate the different nature of His Presence among them from what it was formerly. Before His Crucifixion He had gone in and out among them, as they themselves had done, except on one or two special occasions, when He had displayed His Divine power. Then His Body was apparently subject to the same laws as their own.⁵ It is also probable that in His intercourse with them His Resurrection Body was subject to the same laws as all bodies will be after the Resurrection. Material objects were no hindrance to His Presence. The doors were shut, but He came and stood in the midst. He saith unto them, "Peace be unto you," probably to allay all fear of His anger at their conduct during His trial; and to quiet all the alarm which they naturally felt at His unexpected Presence, and at the unusual mode of His Presence among them. He communicates to them all the blessings conveyed in the word "Peace."

S. Luke says that, besides showing them His hands and His side, He bade them "handle" Him (ψηλαφήσατέ με), and that He condescended to prove to them, by an argument as perfect as a syllogism, that He is not a spirit, but their risen Lord; and to show that there could not possibly be any illusion in the matter, He asked them for meat, and took a piece of a broiled fish and of an honeycomb, and did eat it before them.

The word here translated "as" (καθώς), in our Saviour's commission to His Apostles, must imply partly an equality

¹ Euthymius, in Marc. xvi. 14; vol. iii. p. 187.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlvii. p. 629.

Cornelius a Lapide, Chronotaxis Gestorum Christi, vol. viii.

p. 19. Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxxxix. vol. i. p. 270.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, p. 173.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 172.

² Maldonatus, in Marc. xvi. 14; vol. i. p. 621.

Greswell, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 402.

³ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 25; vol. iii. pp. 1209 and 1214.

⁴ Christ's Body.—"His body was different in fact from ours, as regards corruptibility, as would appear from Acts ii. 31, xiii. 35. It had a life-giving virtue peculiar to itself, Matt. vii. 23; John ix. 6. After the Resurrection it had transcendent qualities; came ⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xx. 19; Homil. lxxxvi.

S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lxiv. 64; vol. i. p. 1181.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xx. 19; vol. vii. p. 704.

Theophylact, in Joan. xx. 19; vol. i. p. 763.

Euthymius, in Joan. xx. 19; vol. iv. p. 637.

S. Hilary Pict., de Trinitate, iii. 20; vol. ii. p. 87.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xxiv. 36-45; vol. ii. p. 1849.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xx. 19, tract. cxxi.; vol. iii. p. 1958.

S. Jerome, Epist. ad Eustochium (Epitaph. Paulæ), cviii. (alias 27) 23; vol. i. p. 901.

S. Leo Magnus, Sermo de Resurrectione Domini, l. 3; vol. i. p. 388.

and vanished; entered a closed room; ascended on high, and appeared to S. Paul on his conversion, while it was in heaven."—Dr. J. H. NEWMAN, Theological Tracts, p. 312.

and partly a likeness or similarity.¹ The power and authority of the sender were equal. As the Father had sent Him, so He the Son sent them. The power and authority of those who were sent must be similar. He had descended from the Father to form a kingdom on earth, and He was now about to return to the Father; and He gives them a commission to regulate and to govern this kingdom, to be the channels of His favour to the citizens of this kingdom. He sends them, too, with the same object as He Himself had been sent, the salvation of man. Though Himself ascended to the Father, He would refuse to His kingdom no blessing which He had conferred on them during His ministry on earth. In fact it was still His ministry, but carried on through them as His agents; He it was who conferred all the blessings, all the graces in His kingdom; the Apostles were to be the channels through whom He should communicate these to the various individuals and nations. He then goes on to impart to them grace to carry on this ministry, and to inform them in what it should consist.

The things pertaining to the kingdom of God (Acts i, 3) was the great subject of our Saviour's instruction to the Apostles, during His forty days' intercourse with them after the Resurrection. The kingdom of God would continue for all time; the Apostles would remain to guide and direct its affairs but a small portion of that time. There must be a succession of men to take their place. His own words point out how this was to be done, "As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." This is the Church's warrant for her doctrine of Apostolical Succession. As the Father had sent Him and had given Him authority to send them, so He sent them with authority to send others. To none but the Apostles did Jesus ever say, "As My Father sent Me, even so send I you." The way, too, in which He sent them, was to be the way in which they were to send others. He breathed on them, and thus showed that the gift which He imparted to them was not an innate power, but one which He delegated to them, and by external means; and one which He, through their means, would delegate to others also.

By this act² of breathing on them, Jesus conveys to His Apostles power to forgive sins and power to retain sins. No form of words could more clearly express this. Before His Crucifixion He had given them power to cast out devils and to heal all manner of sickness, and they had found by experience that His words were not a dead letter, but an actual conveyance to them of a supernatural power. That power chiefly concerned the bodies of men; this their souls. He now assigns them an office in His kingdom different from any which He had before given them; namely, that of forgiving sins. He had given them by a formal ceremonial act the Holy Spirit, to enable them to convey His pardon to the penitent sinner. Jesus had promised to send the Holy Spirit upon the Church after His Ascension. He now before His Ascension imparts the Holy Spirit to a particular order of men, and for a special purpose, to qualify them for the office to which He now appoints them, to convey to His disciples His forgiveness, even while in this life, for the sins which they may commit.

To explain the words of Jesus as merely conferring on the Apostles a power of great or even of extraordinary discernment, is but trifling with His words, an evasion not an explanation of His meaning. He here gives them a commission not to discern the state of a man's heart, and then to declare what is the case already, but to convey a gift which will affect the future condition of his heart. When the Apostles said, "I absolve thee," the effect produced would no more depend on their discernment than when they said, "I baptize thee." In each case the effect produced would depend on the repentance and faith of the penitent, and on the gift which God through His minister vouchsafed to bestow. What that gift is He here declares.

During the last evening which Jesus had spent with His disciples, He had said unto them, "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit" (S. John xiii. 10); that is, he that hath been washed in the waters of baptism does not again require a thorough purification of his nature, but only a cleansing from the stains which he daily contracts in his walk through this world. Jesus here confers on His Apostles the qualification necessary for this cleansing.

Whatever Jesus gives here He gives to all who were present equally. No one is singled out from the rest.

Besides the appearances which Jesus made to the women and to His disciples on the day of His Resurrection, He is recorded to have appeared to His disciples five different times before He ascended into heaven. The first of these was to His assembled Apostles when Thomas was with them, eight days after His Resurrection; the second to seven of His Apostles, as they were fishing on the sea of Galilee; the third to above five hundred of His followers, on a mountain in Galilee; the fourth to James; and the fifth to the Apostles and other disciples on Mount Olivet, when He ascended into heaven.

The first appearance which Jesus made after the day of His Resurrection was to His Apostles, when they were assembled together, and Thomas with them. This is related by S. John (xx. 26-29), and, as some think, by S. Mark (xvi. 14-18).

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xx. 21; Homil. lxxxvi. S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xx. 21; vol. vii. p. 708. Theophylact, in Joan. xx. 21; vol. i. p. 763. Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlii. p. 631. Maldonatus, in Joan. xx. 21; vol. ii. p. 913. Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 21; vol. viii. p. 1160.
² S. Chrysostom, de Sacerdotio, iii. 5.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xx. 23; vol. vii. p. 721. S. Ambrose, de Pœnitentia, l. 2; vol. iii. p. 468. S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxvi. 4; vol. ii. p. 1199. Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlii. p. 632. Maldonatus, in Joan. xx. 23; vol. ii. p. 916. Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 23; vol. viii. p. 1162.

JESUS APPEARS TO THE APOSTLES, THOMAS BEING WITH THEM.

S. JOHN xx. 24-29.

24 But Thomas, one of the Twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

25 The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe.

26 And after eight days again His disciples were within, and Thomas with them: Then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you.

27 Then saith He to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold My hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into My side: and be not faithless, but believing.

28 And Thomas answered and said unto Him, My Lord and my God.

29 Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen Me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

The absence of Thomas when Jesus first appeared to His assembled disciples has been variously accounted for. On the night of the Passion all the disciples forsook Him and fled. During the Sabbath they would probably rest in their several places of concealment. On the first day of the week they had returned one by one, it may be, from their places of refuge, and had assembled together in the Upper Room, where they had spent the last evening with Jesus. Some¹ suppose that Thomas had not returned until now; others,² that he had returned on the evening of the Resurrection, and had again left the house before Jesus appeared to them.

S. Luke rather seems to imply (xxiv. 33) that, when the two disciples returned from Emmaus to relate how Jesus had appeared to them, Thomas was there, unless he use the words "the eleven" as synonymous with "the Apostles." But however this may be, it is plain that differences of opinion strongly expressed arose among the disciples respecting the Resurrection of Jesus. They had regarded the report which the women had brought as to the state of the sepulchre as idle tales (ἄγρος)—mere foolish talk, nonsense—and they believed them not. Some have supposed that, when Thomas heard the account which the two disciples who had just returned from Emmaus gave as to the way in which Jesus had appeared unto them, he left the apartment in indignation at their credulity. This quite tallies with his conduct and his words afterwards. He refuses to credit the report of the other ten disciples that Jesus had appeared to them. He cares not for their testimony, circumstantial and positive as it is, and declares that he will believe nothing short of his own sight and his own touch. His unbelief amounted almost to unreasoning obstinacy. Nor is this lessened by time and reflection. At the end of eight days he is still of the same opinion. From his words it is plain that Thomas thought that the other disciples had been deceived, and that an apparition or phantom representing Jesus had appeared to them, and that Jesus Himself had not appeared truly, and in His Body, as they saw Him on the Cross.³

Different opinions have been held as to whether Thomas did put his finger into the print of the nails and thrust his hand into His side, or not. Some⁴ have thought that he did not, but the more general opinion in ancient times was that he did.⁵ Nor is the Evangelist's language such as to imply that Thomas believed on less evidence than he demanded.

Our Saviour's words to Thomas proved to him that He knew the secret thoughts of the heart. The root of his unbelief in the Resurrection of Jesus was the want of a sufficiently strong belief that He was God. The words of Jesus, His appearance, and probably Thomas's own act, all convince him that there is no deception of the senses, that He whom he beheld before him was the risen Jesus, God and Man—his Lord and his God.

The incredulity of Thomas was one more proof to the Church of the truth of the Resurrection, but it was not a blessing to himself. Jesus implies that Thomas was blessed in believing on such evidence as was afforded him, but that they who believed on less evidence were more blessed. This may include the Apostle, or it may refer entirely to those who should afterwards believe on the testimony of the Apostles and Evangelists.

Thomas did not believe that Jesus could have risen from the dead, because he had not sufficiently realized to himself

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xx. 24, Homil. lxxxvii.

Theophylact, in Joan. xx. 24; vol. i. p. 764.

Euthymius, in Joan. xx. 24; vol. iv. p. 641.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 25; vol. iii. p. 1208.

V. Bede, in Luc. xxiv. 36; vol. iii. p. 628.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 24; vol. viii. p. 1163.

³ Origen, contr. Celsum, ii. 61; vol. i. p. 893.

S. Augustine, contr. Faustum, xvi. 35; vol. viii. p. 349.

⁴ Euthymius, in Joan. xx. 28; vol. iv. p. 645.

⁵ S. Gregory Nazian., Oratio xl. in Sanctum Baptisma, 38; vol. ii. p. 413.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xx. 27; vol. vii. p. 738.

Theophylact, in Joan. xx. 27; vol. i. p. 765.

Tertullian, de Anima, cap. xvii.; vol. ii. p. 677.

S. Hilary Pict., de Trinitate, iii. 20; vol. ii. p. 87.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xx. 27, tract. cxxi.; vol. iii. p. 1958.

S. Ambrose, in Psal. xliii. 5; vol. i. p. 1096.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxi. 7; vol. ii. p. 1201.

V. Bede, in Joan. xx. 27; vol. iii. p. 921.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xx. 27; vol. ii. p. 920.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 27; vol. viii. p. 1164.

that He was God as well as Man. But when he is convinced by proofs that satisfy even his critical, incredulous mind,—that Jesus, who now stood before them, was the same Man whose disciple he had been for the last three years, whom he had known to be crucified, dead, and buried,—he goes on also to believe that He was God, and to confess that He was God.

Thomas's doubts, or rather disbelief, in the truth of Christ's Resurrection, was a blessing to the Church for all time, inasmuch as it caused him to take nothing for granted, but to investigate every step in the proof of it. He did not, for instance, believe that Jesus was God, and therefore that He was sure to rise again; but he believed, on proofs that could not be gainsaid, that He had risen from the dead, and therefore that His own claim to be God was true. The early Church¹ interpreted the words of Thomas, "My Lord and my God," ὁ Κύριός μου καὶ ὁ Θεός μου, not as an exclamation of surprise, but as a confession that he was satisfied that Jesus, the Son of Mary, had risen from the dead, and that He was God, One with the Father and equal to the Father. This is the explanation of these words which was received in the fifth General Council, that of Constantinople (Act III., Canon II), in opposition to the interpretation of Theodore, bishop of Mopsuestia. One of the early commentators² on S. John—a man endowed with a most acute, subtle understanding, speaking Greek from his childhood, and skilled in all the niceties of the language—pointed out that the use of the article δ before Κύριος, and also before Θεός, would preclude any other meaning.

JESUS APPEARS TO THE DISCIPLES AT THE SEA OF TIBERIAS.

S. JOHN xxi.

From Judea the disciples remove to Galilee, as Jesus had commanded them; and He appears first to seven of the Apostles on the shore of the sea of Tiberias, where they were fishing. This is related by S. John alone, but with great minuteness and circumstantiality. That this appearance in Galilee took place before that on the mountain is gathered from S. John's words, "This is now the third time that Jesus shewed Himself to His disciples, after that He was risen from the dead" (ver. 14). This appears probable whether with some³ we understand the word τρίτον as enumerating the different days on which Jesus had appeared, or with others⁴ we explain it of the number of times which He had appeared to His assembled disciples.

See Commentary on S. John xxi. 1–23.

After this He appears to the Apostles and disciples on a mountain in Galilee, where, according to S. Paul, above five hundred of the brethren were present. This appearance is recorded by S. Matthew (xxviii. 16–20) and by S. Paul (1 Cor. xv. 6).

JESUS APPEARS TO HIS DISCIPLES ON A MOUNTAIN IN GALILEE.

S. MATTHEW xxviii. 16–20.

1 COR. xv. 6.

- 16 Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where
Jesus had appointed them.
17 And when they saw Him,
they worshipped Him:
but some doubted.

- 6 After that,
He was seen
of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep.

18 And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth.

¹ S. Athanasius, Orat. ii. 23, contr. Arianos; vol. ii. p. 197.

S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. xx. 28; vol. vii. p. 733.

Thesaurus, Assertio xxiii.; vol. viii. p. 564.

S. Cyprian, Testimon. ii. 6, p. 702.

S. Hilary Pict., de Trinitate, vii. 12; vol. ii. p. 209.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xx. 28, tract. cxii.; vol. iii. p. 1958.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxvi.; vol. ii. p. 1201.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlvii. p. 633.

Makdonatus, in Joan. xx. 28; vol. ii. p. 920.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 28; vol. viii. p. 1163.

² S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. xx. 28; vol. vii. p. 733.

³ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 25; vol. iii. p. 1214.

⁴ Euthymius, in Joan. xxi. 14; vol. iv. p. 657.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cxlviii. p. 636.

Makdonatus, in Matt. xxviii. 16; vol. i. p. 515.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xxi. 14; vol. viii. p. 1171.

S. MATTHEW xxviii.

1 COR. xv.

19 Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

20 Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

16. ¶ Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them.

Vulg. Undecim autem discipuli abierunt in Galilaam, etc.

17. And when they saw Him, they worshipped Him: but some doubted.

S.V. omit Him.

Vulg. Et videntes eum adoraverunt.

18. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto Me^a in heaven and in earth.

S.V. omits unto them.

Vulg. Et accedens Iesus locutus est eis.

19. ¶ Go ye therefore, and teach all nations,^b baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

Margin, make disciples or Christians.

S.V. omit therefore.

Vulg. Euntes ergo docete omnes gentes.

20. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you:^c and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

S.V. A^a. omit Amen.

Vulg. omits Amen.

S. Matthew relates that the angels (ver. 7) commanded the women to go and tell His disciples that Jesus would go before them into Galilee, and there should they see Him; and that [as they went to tell His disciples] Jesus Himself met them, and that He also commanded them to tell His disciples to go into Galilee and there should they see Him (ver. 10). This is in all probability the appearance to which they refer, and which S. Matthew selects to relate on this account. He mentions only the Apostles, perhaps as being the most prominent; but S. Paul (1 Cor. xv. 6), speaking most probably of the same appearance, says there were above five hundred brethren present.

S. Matthew says that "some doubted." This would be the fourth time that Jesus had appeared to the Apostles, or at least to the greater part of them. Some commentators¹ have

¹ Theophylact, in Matt. xxviii. 17; vol. i. p. 166.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlix. p. 642.

^a All power is given unto Me.—"It was when our Lord's humanity had received the prerogative by gift which belonged to His Godhead by nature, that He sent His Apostles to baptize in His Name: 'All power is given unto Me in heaven and earth. Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' And in like manner S. Peter tells us that 'Baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God), by the resurrection of Jesus Christ, who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God' (1 Pet. iii. 21)."^b—R. I. WILBERFORCE, 'On Holy Baptism,' p. 39.

^c Go ye therefore, and teach (αὐτοδιδάσκειν) all nations.—"Discipling was not of persons already taught, but to that end that they should be taught; and if the disciples understood this word in Christ's command after any other sense, it was different from the sense of the word which the nation had ever used and only used. For in their schools a person was made a scholar or disciple when he gave in himself to such a master to be taught and trained up by him. And in the discipling of proselytes to the Jews' religion, it was of the very like tenour. That sense therefore that many put upon these words, viz. that none are to be baptized but those that are thoroughly taught, is such a one as the Apostles and all the Jewish nation had never known or heard of before."^c—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. xcii.; vol. i. p. 272.

^d Christ's commission to His Apostles.—"Our Saviour after His resurrection from the dead gave His Apostles their commission, saying, 'All power is given Me in heaven and in earth. Go Maldonatus, in Matt. xxviii. 17; vol. i. p. 516.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxviii. 17; vol. viii. p. 566.

therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you' (Matt. xxviii. 18, &c.). In sum, 'As My Father sent Me, so send I you' (John xx. 21). Whereunto S. John doth add farther, that having thus spoken He breathed on them and said, 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost' (ver. 22). By which words He must of likelihood understand some gift of the Spirit which was presently at that time bestowed upon them, as both the speech of actual delivery in saying, 'Receive,' and the visible sign thereof, his breathing, did show. Absurd it were to imagine our Saviour did both to the ear and also to the very eye express a real donation, and they at that time receive nothing.

"It resteth then that we search what especial grace they did at that time receive. Touching miraculous power of the Spirit, most apparent it is that as then they received it not, but the promise thereof was to be shortly after performed. The words of S. Luke concerning that power are therefore set down with signification of the time to come: 'Behold, I will send the promise of My Father upon you, but tarry you in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high' (Luke xxiv. 49). Wherefore undoubtedly it was some other effect of the Spirit, the Holy Ghost in some other kind, which our Saviour did then bestow. What other likelier than that which Himself doth mention, as it should seem of purpose to take away all ambiguous constructions, and to declare that the Holy Ghost which He then gave was a holy and a ghostly authority, authority over the souls of men, authority therefore supposed that these words, "but some doubted," do not apply to the Apostles, but to some of the other disciples present; or, that if these words refer to the Apostles, it was descriptive of them at an earlier time, when, for instance, Thomas doubted; that those who now worshipped Him in Galilee had before doubted when in Jerusalem.

Which was the mountain in Galilee is not stated. It may have been that on which Jesus delivered His sermon, or it may have been that on which He was transfigured before them, whether that be Tabor or some other. It is not unlikely that these five hundred were present by appointment; that the time and place were fixed beforehand, as well as the district.

It is probable that Jesus delivered His commission to His Apostles at more than one of His appearances, and with degrees of fulness varying according to circumstances. We find it, for instance, when He first appeared to the Apostles in the evening of the Resurrection, as recorded by S. Mark and S. Luke, and again in His appearance to them on the mountain in Galilee and in His appearance before His Ascension into heaven. This may have been done to imprint it more fully on their minds.

Jesus gives the Apostles a command, and He intimates that He, by His continued Presence with them, will give them power to fulfil His command. But before He does this He states what is His authority, His capability of fulfilling His promise to His Apostles. He sends them to make disciples of all nations, and to baptize them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, because all power was given to Him in heaven and earth. Because He, God and Man, had endured death and all the weakness incident to human nature, all the degradation that was possible to man, all power in heaven and earth was given to Him; and, because all power in heaven and earth was given to Him, He gives them this command.

Often had intimations been given of the doctrine of the Trinity in Unity, Three Persons in One God, but never before had it been so fully revealed to man as now; and this was henceforth prescribed as the teaching for all who would be His disciples. Hitherto the Jews and their proselytes had been carefully instructed in the knowledge of one God. From this time all who would become members of God's Church must be instructed in the knowledge and baptized in the belief of One God and Three Persons,—God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost.

From these words,¹ as from a rich armoury, the early champions of the Faith were accustomed to draw their arguments in defence of the doctrine of the Trinity in Unity and Unity in Trinity, against the various forms of heresy which appeared in their day.

To ensure a correct expression of faith, the Church has adopted these very words of Jesus as its formula for the Sacrament of Baptism, "in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The Persons are Three, but the Name, and all that is contained in the Name, is One. The Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all One: the Glory equal: the Majesty co-eternal. Such as the Father is, such is the Son; and such is the Holy Ghost. The Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God. And yet they are not three Gods, but one God.

When Jesus was present with His disciples before His Crucifixion, they frequently wielded supernatural power: they healed the sick, and cast out devils by their word. Such supernatural power they were not now to lose because Jesus was about to ascend to the Father. Such power was not to be withdrawn from them, but it was to be regulated, and in future it was to be exercised, not at their individual will, but through the Sacraments which He had ordained in the Church for that purpose; and it was to be exerted not so much over the bodies of men as over their souls. No fear need arise in their minds that they should no longer be able to dispense such supernatural gifts, now that He was about to leave them. He would still be with them, though unseen. He would always be with them, to the end of the world.² He would be present with them in such a way that the power exercised should be His, but the ministration of that power should be theirs. They should be merely ministers of His power. The Mystery, the giving of the inward grace with the outward act, should be His, but they should be stewards of His Mystery. Their preaching was no longer to be confined to Israel, but to be extended to all nations, or as S. Mark expresses it, "to every creature."

After His appearance on the mountain in Galilee, Jesus appeared to James. This is recorded by S. Paul alone.

¹ See the following instances:—

S. Athanasius, Orat. ii. contr. Arianos; vol. ii. pp. 237 and 240.

— Epist. i. ad Serapion; vol. ii. p. 596.

— Epist. ii. ad Serapion; vol. ii. p. 617.

— Epist. iii. ad Serapion; vol. ii. p. 633.

— Epist. iv. ad Serapion; vol. ii. p. 644.

a part whereof consisteth in power to remit and retain sins? 'Receive the Holy Ghost: whose sins soever ye remit they are remitted; whose sins ye retain they are retained' (John xx. 23). Whereas therefore the other Evangelists had set down that Christ did before His suffering promise to give His Apostles the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and being risen from the dead promise

S. Basil, Epist. cxx. (alias 64); vol. iv. p. 772.

S. Hilary Pict., de Trinitate, ii. 5; vol. ii. p. 53.

S. Ambrose, de Spiritu Sancto, i. cap. xiii. (alias xiv.); vol. iii. p. 735.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlix. p. 645.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xviii. 20; vol. i. p. 520.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xviii. 20; vol. viii. p. 567.

moreover at that time a miraculous power of the Holy Ghost, S. John addeth that He also invested them, even then, with the power of the Holy Ghost for castigation and relaxation of sin, wherein was fully accomplished that which the promise of the Keys did import."—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.' v. 77, 6; vol. ii. p. 460.

SEEN OF JAMES.

1 COR. xv. 7.

After that He was seen of James.*

After Jesus had appeared in Galilee to seven of His disciples on the shore of the sea of Tiberias, and to above five hundred of them on the mountain, and to S. James,

He commands them to return to Jerusalem. Forty days after His Resurrection He leads them out as far on Mount Olivet as where it began to be called Bethany, somewhere about the same place where He had begun His triumphal entry into Jerusalem riding on an ass; and while He blessed them He was parted from them and carried up into heaven. This is recorded by S. Mark, and by S. Luke in his Gospel and also in the Acts of the Apostles. S. Matthew and S. John do not relate His Ascension.

THE ASCENSION.

S. MARK xvi. 19, 20.

19 So then after the Lord had spoken unto them,

He was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God.

S. LUKE xxiv. 50-53.

50 And He led them out as far as to Bethany, and

He lifted up His hands, and blessed them.
51 And it came to pass, while He blessed them, He was parted from them, and carried up into heaven.

52 And they worshipped Him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy:

53 And were continually in the Temple, praising and blessing God. Amen.

20 And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen.

ACTS OF THE APOSTLES, i. 9-12.

9 And when He had spoken these things, while they beheld, He was taken up;

and a cloud received Him out of their sight.

10 And while they looked stedfastly toward heaven as He went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel;

11 Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven.

12 Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the Mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a sabbath day's journey.

* After that He was seen of James.—“Which James this was, Paul is silent of, as all the Evangelists are, of any such particular appearance. It is most like he means James the less, of whom he speaks oft elsewhere, and so doth the story of the Acts of the Apostles, as one of the specialer note in the time of Paul's preaching among the Gentiles. We read oft in the Gospels, of Peter and James and John, three disciples of singular eminency in regard of the privacy that Christ vouchsafed to them at some special times, more than to the other Apostles, and in that He badged them with a peculiar mark of changing their names, and did not so by any of the other. But that James was the son of Zebedee. Now when he was martyred (Acts xii.), you find that James the son of Alphaeus, called James the less, came to be ranked in the like dignity with Peter and John, and was minister of the circumcision, in special manner with them (Gal. ii. 9); they to the Jews scattered abroad, and he residentiary in Judæa. (See Acts xv. 13, and xxi. 18; Gal. ii. 13.) If we question how he of all the rest of the Apostles came in, to make up that triumvirate, when the other James was gone, we cannot tell where so pregnantly to give an answer as from hence; in that Christ vouchsafed thus particularly to appear to him, which was not only an argument, but might carry the virtue of a command, to bring him into that rank, office, and employment, when the other James had run his course.”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the New Testament,’ sect. xcii.; vol. i. p. 273.

Thus the Second Person in the Godhead—who was born of the Virgin Mary; who was baptized by John in the river Jordan; who for three years had gone round about Judea and Galilee, teaching and healing the people; who was crucified, dead, and buried; who had risen from the grave and had appeared to His disciples, and had shown them the marks of the nails in His hands and feet, and of the spear in His side; and who had eaten with them on more than one occasion—was now carried up into heaven. As God He had been in heaven before; as God and Man He now for the first time ascended into heaven.

If men were to ascend into heaven, it was necessary that the God-Man should first ascend thither: for man could only ascend into heaven as the fruits of His Ascension. Elijah, by being removed from the sight of men and carried up in the direction of heaven (ὡς εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, Septuag.), had prefigured the Ascension of Jesus. But before Him no man had ever ascended into heaven in the same sense. His disciples could not ascend into heaven until Jesus by His Ascension had prepared the way for them. Until He, the Head of the Church, in His glorified human Body, had ascended into heaven, none of His members could ascend thither.

To show how great is the mystery of the human body ascending into heaven at all, the Psalmist represents the angels as expressing the utmost surprise, admiration, and exultation at the Ascension of Jesus, the God-Man, in His risen Body. In Psalm xxiv. (7-10), two choirs of angels are represented as answering each other:

First Choir of Angels.—Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in.

Second Choir.—Who is the King of Glory?

First Choir.—It is the Lord strong and mighty; even the Lord mighty in battle. Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in.

¹ S. Athanasius, Orat. cont. Arian. i. 61; vol. ii. p. 140.

S. Basil, de Spiritu Sanct. cap. vi. 15; vol. iv. p. 89.

* He was received up into heaven.—"Ascension into heaven is a plain local translation of Christ according to His manhood from the lower to the higher parts of the world. Session at the right hand of God is the actual exercise of that regency and dominion wherein the manhood of Christ is joined and matched with the Deity of the Son of God. Not that His manhood was before without the possession of the same power, but because the full use thereof was suspended till that humility which had been before as a veil to hide and conceal majesty were laid aside. After His rising again from the dead, then did God set Him at His right hand in heavenly places, far above all principality and power, and might and domination, and every name that is named not in this world only but also in that which is to come, and hath put all things under His feet, and hath appointed Him over all the Head to the Church, which is His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. The sceptre of which spiritual regiment over us in this present world is at the length to be yielded up into the hands of the Father which gave it (Augustine, de Trin. i. 16; vol. viii. p. 830, Migne); that is to say, the use and exercise thereof shall

Second Choir.—Who is the King of Glory?

First Choir.—Even the Lord of Hosts; He is the King of Glory.

Before He had ascended in His glorified Body into heaven, Jesus had shown Himself the Lord strong and mighty, even the Lord mighty in battle. Through His own Death He had triumphed over him that had the power of death; that is, the devil (Heb. ii. 14).

By His own Ascension He had prepared a place for His disciples among the many mansions of His Father's house. Afterwards He also prepared them for the place, by sending down the Holy Spirit to sanctify them, and to fit them to dwell with Him.

S. Mark, in recording the Ascension of Jesus, describes it in almost the very same words as the Psalmist had used to foretell it, and probably to show the fulfilment of that prophecy. The Psalmist, speaking in prophetic language, represents the Father as saying to the Son, "Sit Thou on My right hand until I make Thine enemies My footstool" (cx. 1). S. Mark says, "So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, He was received up into heaven,* and sat on the right hand of God."

The words "He sat down" and "on the right hand" are forms of expression used to describe the actions and qualities of men. When used of God, they must be understood in a sense in which they can be applicable to Him. Hence it has been generally concluded that the words "He sat down," applied to God the Son, indicate not so much a posture of the body as that which such a posture would imply among men. As to sit denotes cessation from labour, the inspired writers may by these words imply that His Suffering, His Agony for the salvation of man is finished, and that man's redemption is completed. S. Paul (1 Cor. xv. 25) also seems to use the words "to sit down" as synonymous with "to reign" and "to judge."

Several¹ of the great writers on the Incarnation have

S. Jerome, in Ephes. i. 20; vol. vii. p. 460.

S. Augustine, de Fide et Symb. cap. vii.; vol. vi. p. 188.

cease, there being no longer on earth any militant Church to govern."—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.' v. 55, 8; vol. ii. p. 244.

² On the right hand.—"By the right hand of God we must not understand it as if God had any right or left hand, as the words signify among us; for God is a Spirit, having no body or parts, nor by consequence any right or left hand; but by Christ's sitting at the right hand of God we are to understand (with the Fathers) that glory, happiness, and honour which was conferred upon Christ when ascended up to heaven. Though it was in the human nature that He ascended, yet that nature was there exalted above all other creatures whatsoever; and therefore may well be said to sit at the right hand of God; that being the place which amongst us, who have right and left hands, is accounted the highest." [In proof of this he quotes amongst others S. Basil, de Spiritu Sancto, vi.; vol. iv. p. 89, Migne. S. Chrysostom in Epist. ad Hebr., Homil. ii.; p. 25, Migne.]—EP. BEVERIDGE, on Article iv. p. 159.

See also BP. Pearson, 'On the Creed,' Art. vi.; vol. i. p. 326; vol. ii. p. 237.

pointed out that the words "on the right hand of the Father" are used not to indicate a local position of the Son with respect to the Father, but an equality of power, majesty, and glory with Him; and to express in the language of men that Jesus Christ, the Son of Mary, was by His Ascension into heaven exalted to an equality with the Father in power, majesty, and glory. As has been said,¹ His human nature rendered it possible to apply to the God-Man the words "He sat down," and His Divine nature the words "on the right hand of the Father."

The proof that Jesus was not dead, but had risen again, was that He continued to work the same miracles after His Crucifixion as He had done before it. Before His Crucifixion He wrought miraculous cures partly by His word and by laying His hands on the sick, and partly by entrusting a similar power to His disciples. After His Resurrection and Ascension into heaven He continued to exercise the same supernatural power, but entirely through His disciples, who preached His Resurrection and Ascension, and appealed to the miracles which they wrought in His name as a proof that He was risen again, and had ascended into the heavens, and had committed this power to them.

The following summary gives our Saviour's appearances, and the Evangelists who relate them.

On the day of the Resurrection.

- I. To Mary Magdalene at the sepulchre.
- II. To Mary Magdalene and other women.
- III. To S. Peter.
- IV. To the two disciples going to Emmaus.
- V. To the Apostles assembled together in the evening, Thomas being absent.

After the day of the Resurrection.

- VI. To the Apostles assembled together, and Thomas with them.
- VII. To seven of the Apostles on the shore of the sea of Tiberias.
- VIII. To above five hundred brethren on a mountain in Galilee.
- IX. To S. James.
- X. To the Apostles, when Jesus leads them on Mount Olivet as far as to Bethany, and is parted from them and carried up to heaven.

S. Matthew records	II.			VIII.
S. Mark	" I.	IV. V.
S. Luke	" "	III. IV. V.		X.
S. John	" I.	V. VI. VII.
S. Paul	" "	III. V.	VIII. IX. X.

¹ Maldenatus, in Marc. xvi. 19; vol. i. p. 629.

S. MARK.

In the New Testament history we have a Mark whose surname was John, and who was the son of Mary of Jerusalem, to whose house Peter came after he had been miraculously delivered from prison (Acts xii. 12). At first he accompanied Paul and Barnabas in their journeys to preach the Gospel (Acts xii. 25). After he had become the occasion of the memorable difference and separation between Paul and Barnabas, John Mark accompanied Barnabas, whose cousin he was (Acts xv. 37-39; Colos. iv. 10). Some¹ have supposed that John Mark was the same person as the Mark whom Peter speaks of as "Marcus my son" (1 Peter v. 13), and who was evidently his companion, and also that he was the same as the Evangelist Mark. Others² maintain that John Mark, the kinsman of Barnabas, was not the same as the Mark whom Peter speaks of, and that it was the latter who was Mark the Evangelist.*

The notices of the Evangelist Mark by early Christian writers are not very easy to reconcile with each other. It was unanimously held³ that he was the same as the Mark mentioned by Peter (1 Peter v. 13). Some⁴ have conjectured that he was one of the seventy or seventy-two disciples whom Jesus is related to have sent to preach the Gospel.⁵ Others⁶ have thought this improbable on the ground that Peter's words, "Marcus my son," rather imply that he had been converted to Christianity by him. It is also said that he was sent by Peter into Egypt to preach the Gospel, and that having founded a church at Alexandria, the capital of Egypt, he became its first bishop, and died there, after he had ruled the Church for some years.

It was the general belief of the early Church⁶ that S. Mark was the companion and the interpreter of Peter, and that the Gospel which he wrote was either at Peter's dictation, or that it received his approval; and that his Gospel was written at Rome, though one writer⁷ says it was written in Egypt. Some⁸ have concluded that as S. Mark wrote his Gospel at Rome, he wrote it for the inhabitants of that country, and therefore in Latin. But a much more common opinion⁹ is that, though written at Rome, it was written in Greek, for the Church of Alexandria, which he had lately founded.

The year when S. Mark's Gospel was written cannot be accurately fixed, though it may with some degree of approximation to certainty. From the universal consent of the early Christian Church we conclude that S. Mark's Gospel was written after that of S. Matthew; and from the Gospel itself that it was written before the siege of Jerusalem, A.D. 70, to which the Evangelist most probably alludes (xiii. 14, &c.). From writers of the fourth century¹⁰ we are led to believe that it was written between the year A.D. 42 and A.D. 63: for in the former year he is said to have gone into Egypt to preach the Gospel, and in the latter to have died. The date assigned

¹ Theophylact, in Marc. præfat. : vol. i. p. 173.

Euthymius, in Marc. præfat. : vol. iii. p. 9.

Maldonatus, in Marc. præfat. : vol. i. p. 525.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. præfat. : vol. viii. p. 572.

³ Origen, in Matt. tomus i. : vol. iii. p. 829.

⁴ Eusebius (quoting earlier authors), Hist. Ecclesiast. ii. 15; vol. ii. p. 171.

⁵ S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, li. 6; vol. i. p. 900.

⁶ Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. præfat. : vol. viii. p. 572.

⁷ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iii. 1, p. 845.

⁸ Origen, in Matt. tomus i. : vol. iii. p. 829.

⁹ Eusebius, Hist. Ecclesiast. ii. 15; vol. ii. p. 172.

¹⁰ ——— vii. 14; vol. ii. p. 552.

S. Athanasius, Synopsis, 76; vol. iv. 443 (author dubia).

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. lviii. : vol. ii. p. 166.

S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, li. 6; vol. i. p. 900.

Tertullian, adv. Marcion, iv. 5; vol. ii. p. 367.

S. Jerome, de Viris illust., cap. 8; vol. ii. p. 621.

⁷ S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Prolog. vol. i. p. 6.

⁸ S. Gregory Nazian. Carmin. Theolog. i. 1, 12; vol. iii. p. 471.

——— i. 1, 21; vol. iii. p. 491.

⁹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. i. 2; vol. iii. p. 1044.

Maldonatus, in Matt. præfat. vol. i. p. 7.

¹⁰ Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. præfat. : vol. viii. p. 573.

Eusebius, Chronic. : vol. i. pp. 539, 543.

——— Hist. Eccles. ii. 24; vol. ii. p. 205.

S. Jerome, de Viris illust., cap. 8; vol. ii. p. 624.

* John Mark.—"Though the question will perhaps never be decided, I cannot help agreeing with those persons who think that John who was surnamed Mark was not Mark the Evangelist."—Dr. BURTON, Lectures on Eccles. Hist. p. 109.

Mark the Evangelist.—"Epiphanius (Hæresis, li. 6; vol. i. p. 900, Migne) is the earliest and almost the only ancient writer who says that Mark the Evangelist was one of the seventy disciples. Papias, who wrote early in the second century, says expressly that he was not (apud Euseb. Hist. Eccles. iii. 39; vol. ii. p. 300, Migne), and he is followed by Tertullian, Theodoret, Augustin, &c.—Ibid. p. 221.

to this Gospel by commentators of the eighth and twelfth centuries,¹ and which they probably received by the tradition of the Church from much earlier times, corresponds with this: for they state that S. Mark wrote his Gospel in the reign of Claudius Cæsar, or in the tenth year, or soon after the tenth year, of the Ascension, which would be about A.D. 43.

Some modern writers, on the supposition that only one Mark is mentioned in the New Testament history, and that Mark did not write his Gospel before the reference to him in Colos. iv. 10, assign a later date to his Gospel; namely, between A.D. 63 and A.D. 70.

¹ V. Bede, in 1 Peter v. 13 ; vol. iv. p. 68.
Theophylact, in Marc. præfat. ; vol. i. p. 173.

Euthymius, in Marc. præfat. ; vol. iii. p. 9.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

The Sabbath.—"The eve of the Sabbath, or the day before, was called the day of the preparation for the Sabbath (Luke xxiii. 54); and from the time of the evening sacrifice and forward they began to fit themselves for the Sabbath, and to cease from their works, so as not to go to the barber, not to sit in judgment, &c., nay, not to eat thenceforward till the Sabbath came in. Nay, thenceforward they would not set things on working which being set awork would complete their business of themselves, unless it would be completed before the Sabbath came. (See Tal. in Sab. per. 1.)

"They washed their face and hands and feet in warm water, to make them neat against they met the Sabbath, and the ancient wise men used to gather their scholars together and to say, 'Come, let us go meet King Sabbath.' (Maimon. in Sab. per. 36.)

"Towards sun-setting, when the Sabbath was now approaching, they lighted up their Sabbath candle. 'Men and women were bound to have a candle lighted up in their houses on the Sabbath, though they were never so poor, nay, though they were forced to go a-begging for oil for this purpose: and the lighting up of this candle was a part of making the Sabbath a delight: and women were especially commanded to look to this business,' &c. (Ibid.)

"They accounted it a matter of special import and command to hallow the Sabbath with some words, because it is said, 'Remember the Sabbath day to hallow it;' and accordingly they used a twofold action to this purpose, namely, a solemn form of words in the way of hallowing it at its coming in, and this they called Kiddush, and another solemn form of words in way of parting with it at its going forth, and this they called Habdala.

"The solemnity accompanying the hallowing of it at its coming in was thus. They spread and furnished the table with provision, and had the Sabbath candle burning by; and the master of the house took a cup of wine, and first rehearsed that portion of Scripture in Gen. ii. 1-3, and then blessed over the wine, and then pronounced the hallowing blessing of the Sabbath, and so drank off the wine, and the rest of the company drank after him, and so they washed their hands and fell to eat . . .

"They used to eat three meals on the Sabbath, and thought they were bound to it in honour of the day, the first of which was this that they ate at the very entrance of it over night. Yea, the poor that lived of alms were to eat three meals that day; and those that were of ability were to get choice provision, and always better, at the least not the same that they used on the week-days.

"The morning being come, and up, they went to morning prayer in the Synagogue, and when they had done there they went home and ate their second meal; and when they had done that, they went to some Beth Midrash, or Divinity Lecture, and there spent the time till the afternoon was well come on, and then went home and ate their meal, and so continued eating and drinking till the Sabbath went out.

"At the going out of the Sabbath, which was about sun-setting, the master of the family again gave thanks over a cup of wine; then over his candle (for he set up a parting candle too), and then over some spices which they used for the refreshing or reviving of any person that should faint for sorrow to part with the Sabbath (this is the reason they give themselves), and then he pronounced the separation blessing, by way of separating between the Sabbath that was now going out, and the working day that was coming in. And so he and the company drank off a cup of wine and fell to their victuals again."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Test.,' sect. xx., vol. i. p. 218.

COMMENTARY ON S. MARK'S GOSPEL.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO S. MARK.

S.V. After Mark: A. The Gospel after or according to Mark.

Vulg. Sanctum Iesu Christi Evangelium secundum Marcum.

CHAPTER I.

[1. The office of John the Baptist. 9. Jesus is baptized, 12. tempted, 14. He preacheth: 16. calleth Peter, Andrew, James and John: 23. healeth one that had a devil, 29. Peter's mother in law, 32. many diseased persons, 41. and cleanseth the leper.]

[Vulg. Ioannes in austeritate vitæ prædicat, ac baptizat aqua: Christus vero Spiritu sancto: qui a Ioanne baptizatus, cum bestis agens in deserto, post sexaginta dierum a Satana tentatur; et Ioanne tradito, prædicare incipit in Galilæa: vocatisque Simone et Andrea, Iacobo et Ioanne Zebedæi, accedit Capharnaum, et reliqua Galilæa loca, ibique prædicans curat sacrum Simonis, et leprosum, quem mittit ad sacerdotes, plurimosque demoniacos ac male habentes cum magna omnium admiratione.]

For verses 1-6 see S. Matthew, ch. iii., page 89.

1. The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God;

S*. omits the Son of God.

2. As it is written in the prophets,

"Behold, I send My messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way before Thee.

3. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight."

S.V. in Esaias the prophet: S. I will send: S.V. omit before Thee. Vulg. Sicut scriptum est in Isaia propheta.

4. John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.

Margin, unto.

S*. And John: S.V. John the Baptist was in the wilderness: V. preaching instead of and preach.

Vulg. Fuit Ioannes in deserto baptizans, et prædicans baptismum penitentiae.

5. And there went out unto him all the land of Judæa, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins.

S*. and they of Jerusalem were all baptized.

Vulg. Et egrediebatur ad eum omnis Iudæa regio, et Ierosolymitarum universi, et baptizabantur ab illo in Iordanis flumine, confitentes peccata sua.

6. And John was clothed with camel's hair, and with a girdle of skin about his loins; and he did eat locusts and wild honey;

For verses 7 and 8 see S. Matthew, ch. iii., page 94.

7. And preached, saying, There cometh one mightier than I^a after me, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.

8. I indeed have baptized you with water; but He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost.

S.V. omit indeed: S*. omits you after shall baptize.

Vulg. Ego baptizavi vos aqua, ille vero baptizabit vos Spiritu sancto.

For verses 9-11 see S. Matthew, ch. iii., page 96.

9. And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.

V. omits and before it came to pass: S.V. in Jordan of John.

Vulg. Et factum est: in diebus illis venit Iesus a Nazareth Galilæe: et baptizatus est a Ioanne in Iordane.

10. And straightway coming up out of the water, He saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending upon Him:

Margin, cloven or rent.

S. descending and remaining on Him.

Vulg. Spiritum tanquam columbam descendentem, et manentem in ipso.

11. And there came a voice from heaven,

^a There cometh one mightier than I (ἑρχεται δὲ ἰσχυρότερός μου ὁ κύριός μου).—We prefer to render it, There is coming after me, the Mightier than I. With which we may compare Isaiah xl. 10, ὁ θεός ὡς ἄνθρωπος κύριος μετὰ ἰσχύος ἔρχεται.—^c The Church Quarterly Review, April 1876, p. 145.

saying, Thou art My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

S*. a voice (omits came): S.V. in thee I am well pleased.
Vulg. Et vox facta est de caelis: Tu es Filius meus dilectus, in te complaui.

For verses 12 and 13 see S. Matthew, ch. iv., page 103.

12. And immediately the Spirit driveth Him into the wilderness.

Vulg. Et statim Spiritus expulit eum in desertum.

13. And He was there in the wilderness forty days, tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts; and the angels ministered unto Him.

S.V.A. omit there: A. and angels.
Vulg. Et erat in deserto quadraginta diebus et quadraginta noctibus: et tentabatur a Satana.

For verses 14 and 15 see S. Matthew, ch. iv., page 103.

14. Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God,

V. And after: S.V. the gospel of God.
Vulg. Postquam autem traditus esset Ioannes.

15. And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.

S*. omits and saying: S.V.A. omit only and.
Vulg. Et dicens: Quoniam impletum est tempus.

For verses 16-20 see S. Matthew, ch. iv., page 111.

16. Now as He walked by the sea of Galilee, He saw Simon and Andrew his brother casting a net into the sea; for they were fishers.

S.V. And as He passed along by the sea: S.V. and Andrew the brother of Simon: S.V. casting nets here and there into the sea: A. casting a net here and there into the sea.

Vulg. Et praeteriens secus mare Galilee, vidit Simonem, et Andream fratrem ejus, mittentes retia in mare (erant enim piscatores).

17. And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after Me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.

18. And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed Him.

S.V. the nets.
Vulg. Et protinus relictis retibus, secuti sunt eum.

19. And when He had gone a little farther thence, He saw James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the ship mending their nets.

S*. omits a little: V. omits thence.
Vulg. Et progressus inde paululum.

20. And straightway He called them: and they left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after Him.

THE HEALING OF A DEMONIAK IN THE SYNAGOGUE.

S. MARK i. 21-28.

S. LUKE iv. 31-37.

- 21 And they went into Capernaum; and straightway on the sabbath day He entered into the synagogue, and taught.
- 22 And they were astonished at His doctrine: for He taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes.
- 23 And there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit; and he cried out,
- 24 saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with Thee, Thou Jesus of Nazareth? art Thou come to destroy us? I know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God.
- 25 And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.
- 26 And when the unclean spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.
- 27 And they were all amazed, inasmuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth He even the unclean spirits, and they do obey Him.

- 31 — and taught them on the sabbath days.
- 32 And they were astonished at His doctrine: for His word was with power.
- 33 And in the synagogue there was a man, which had a spirit of an unclean devil, and cried out with a loud voice, saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with Thee, Thou Jesus of Nazareth? art Thou come to destroy us? I know Thee who Thou art; the Holy One of God.
- 35 And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil had thrown him in the midst, he came out of him, and hurt him not.
- 36 And they were all amazed, and spake among themselves, saying, What a word is this! for with authority and power He commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out.

S. MARK i.

S. LUKE iv.

28 And immediately His fame spread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.

37 And the fame of Him went out into every place of the country round about.

21. And they went into Capernaum; and straightway on the sabbath day He entered into the synagogue, and taught.

S.V. Capernaum: S. on the sabbath day He taught in the synagogue.
Vulg. Et ingreditur Capernaum: et statim sabbatis ingressus in synagogam, docuit eos.

22. And they were astonished at His doctrine: for He taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes.

23. And there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit; and he cried out,

S.V. And straightway there was.
Vulg. Et erat in synagoga eorum.

24. Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with Thee, Thou Jesus of Nazareth? art Thou come to destroy us? I know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God.

S.V. omit Let us alone: S. we know Thee.
Vulg. Dicens: Quid nobis et tibi, Iesu Nazarene? venisti perdere nos? scio qui sis, Sanctus Dei.

25. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.

S.V. A* omit saying.
Vulg. Et committens est ei Iesus, dicens: Obmutesce, et exi de homine.

26. And when the unclean spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.

27. And they were all amazed, insomuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth He even the unclean spirits, and they do obey Him.

S. omits among themselves: S.V. What is this? A new doctrine with authority? He commandeth even the unclean spirits.
Vulg. Et mirati sunt omnes, ita ut conquirerent inter se dicentes: Quidnam est hoc? quoniam destituta hac nova? quia in potestate etiam spiritibus immundis imperat, et obediunt ei.

28. And immediately His fame spread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.

S.V. immediately: S.V. spread abroad everywhere throughout.
S*. Judea instead of Galilee.
Vulg. Et processit rumor ejus statim in omnem regionem Galilee.

It would appear from S. Mark and S. Luke that what most excited the attention of the Jews as Jesus taught in the synagogue at Capernaum was the difference in His manner of teaching from that of the scribes. The scribes were interpreters of the Law, and their words were merely explanatory of the Law. Jesus was the Lawgiver Himself, and He spake with the authority of the Lawgiver, and with the power to enforce that authority. The instance which they give as showing this was His commanding an unclean spirit which had taken possession of a man, to hold his peace and come out of him.

What was the nature and the extent of the knowledge which this and other evil spirits possessed as to the character of Jesus, and whence it was derived, is an interesting question. S. Augustine¹ discusses this subject at some length, and comes to the conclusion that the knowledge of evil angels was inferior, in kind and degree, to that possessed by good angels; that their knowledge as to the character of Jesus was, like that of men, gathered from passing events, but was greater than men's, because their faculties to discern were keener.

Jesus refuses to receive testimony from this evil spirit. Several reasons for this have been suggested, such as that He would not receive testimony or praise from a being so impure; that He acted thus in order not to give any countenance to the blasphemy of the Jews that He was in league with the devils, and thus throw an additional stumbling-block in their way in believing on Him; that the time for publicly acknowledging Him as the Son of God, the Holy One of God, was not yet come.

The expression rendered in the A.V. "Let us alone" (ἐα), has been variously understood. Some² commentators suppose that it is an interjection implying pain or suffering; others,³ and Greek commentators too, treat it as a verb in the imperative mood, as we have done. Either the presence of Jesus was in itself a source of misery to this evil spirit, or his misery may have arisen from a dread that his power to inflict evil on others was at an end. From some source or other his pain was acute. He calls either the limiting his power to inflict suffering on others, or the positive punishment which he feared from Jesus, by the name of destruction, "Art Thou come to destroy (ἀνολέσαι) us?"

Jesus permits the unclean spirit, before leaving the man, to tear him (σπαράσσειν), and throw him in the midst (βίβναι εἰς τὸ μέσον); that is, to throw his limbs into violent convulsions and contortions, and to utter a shriek, but, as S. Luke states, without doing him any bodily harm.⁴ It has been supposed that Jesus permitted this that they might have no doubt that the man was really possessed, to give

¹ S. Augustine, de Civitate, ix. 21; vol. vii. p. 273.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxvi. p. 192.

³ Euthymius, in Marc. i. 23; vol. ii. p. 27.

⁴ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iv. 2, vol. iii. p. 1217.

them a proof of the malice and power of the evil spirit, as well as a proof of His still greater power in casting out such a malignant spirit.¹

All the cases of exorcism which the Jews had hitherto heard of had been accomplished by calling on the name of God, but Jesus cast out the devils in His own name, by His own power and authority. This was to them a new doctrine, sufficient to excite their utmost attention, and to extend His fame throughout all the surrounding region of Galilee.

For verses 29-34 see S. Matthew, ch. viii., page 159.

29. And forthwith, when they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John.

V. when He was come out of the synagogue, He entered.

Vulg. Et protinus egressus de synagoga, venerunt in domum Simonis et Andreæ, cum Iacobo et Ioanne.

30. But Simon's wife's mother lay sick of a fever, and anon they tell Him of her.

31. And He came and took her by the hand, and lifted her up; and immediately the fever left her, and she ministered unto them.

S.V. omit immediately.

Vulg. et continuo dimisit eam febris.

32. And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto Him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils.

33. And all the city was gathered together at the door.

34. And He healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils; and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew Him.

Margiz. to say that they knew Him.

S.V. omits of divers diseases; S.V. because they knew that He was Christ.

Vulg. Et curavit multos, qui vexabantur variis languoribus, et demonia multa eiecit, sed non siniebat ea loqui, quoniam sciebant eum.

JESUS WITH HIS DISCIPLES GOES FROM CAPERNAUM THROUGHOUT GALILEE.

S. MARK i. 35-39.

S. LUKE iv. 42-44.

- 35 And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, He went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed.
- 36 And Simon and they that were with him followed after Him.
- 37 And when they had found Him, they said unto Him, All men seek for Thee.
- 38 And He said unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth.
- 39 And He preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee, and cast out devils.

- 42 And when it was day, He departed and went into a desert place:
- and the people sought Him, and came unto Him, and stayed Him, that He should not depart from them.
- 43 And He said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also: for therefore am I sent.
- 44 And He preached in the synagogues of Galilee.

35. And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, He went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed.

V. omits and departed.

Vulg. Et diluculo valde surgens, egressus abiit in desertum locum.

36. And Simon and they that were with him followed after Him.

37. And when they had found Him, they said unto Him, All men seek for Thee.

S.V. And they found Him, and say.

Vulg. Et cum invenissent eum, dixerunt ei.

38. And He said unto them, Let us go into the next towns,^a that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth.

S.V. Let us go elsewhere into the next towns.

Vulg. Eamus in proximos vicos, et civitates.

39. And He preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee, and cast out devils.

S.V. And He came to preach: S.V. And He came preaching.

Vulg. Et erat predicans in synagogis eorum, et in omni Galilæa, et demonia eiecit.

¹ Theophylact, in Marc. i. 26; vol. i. p. 178.

^a Towns (κατωπόλεις).—"By κατωπόλεις are to be understood here towns where there were synagogues, which nevertheless were not either fortified or towns of trade; among us English called Church-towns."—LIGHTFOOT on Mark i. 38; vol. ii. p. 334.

Euthymius, in Marc. i. 26; vol. iii. p. 27.

In the short account here given by S. Mark and S. Luke there are at least five or six variations, but all these are slight and such that each is consistent with the truth of that to which it seems opposed. S. Mark says that Jesus went into a desert place "a great while before day" (πρὸ ἔννεμον ἡμέραν), and S. Luke, "when it was day." This difference of expression most probably arises from the two Evangelists describing the same time from different points of view, S. Mark regarding it as the end of the night, and S. Luke as the beginning of the morning.¹ S. Mark states that Jesus prayed in the desert place, of which S. Luke says nothing. S. Mark says that Simon and they that were with him—that is, the rest of the Apostles—followed Jesus and told Him that all the men [of Capernaum] were seeking Him. S. Luke is silent about Simon and the other Apostles, and simply says that the people [of Capernaum] sought Him. In reporting the answer of Jesus, S. Mark only records that He said He must preach to other towns also. S. Luke adds that He stated what He must preach, viz. the kingdom of God. According to S. Mark He said, "He came," and according to S. Luke, "He was sent," for this purpose. These are with Jesus synonymous expressions, and each of them is elsewhere used to express His Incarnation. S. Luke merely says that He preached in their synagogues, while S. Mark gives an important addition to this, that He also cast out devils. Thus in every particular of this account there are variations between the Evangelists, or one gives something additional to what the other has said, in the time in which Jesus went into the desert place, in His occupation while there, in the people who followed Him, in His answer to them, and in His work afterward. This too is only a fair sample of the way in which the Evangelists differ from each other in their accounts of the same transaction.

It has been pointed out that Jesus prayed to God the Father not so much to gain strength to support the weakness of His own human nature, but to obtain strength for man His brethren, and to set them an example how to act on the successful accomplishment of any work,—that they should retire from the scene of admiration and praise, and devote themselves to prayer to God.²

It has been suggested³ that in His answer Jesus replied to the thoughts of His disciples, who had been delighted with the applause and admiration which the inhabitants of Capernaum had shown at the miracles of healing and casting out devils which Jesus had just performed, and who therefore concluded that He ought to gratify their desire and remain amongst them.

For verses 40–45 see S. Matthew, ch. viii., page 154.

40. And there came a leper to Him, beseeching Him, and kneeling down to Him, and saying unto Him, If Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean.

V. omits and kneeling down to Him and: S. omits to Him: V. Lord, if Thou wilt.
Vulg. Et venit ad eum leprosus deprecans eum: et genu flexo dixit ei: Si vis, potes me mundare.

41. And Jesus, moved with compassion, put forth His hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, I will; be thou clean.

S.V. And He: S. omits unto him.
Vulg. Jesus autem misertus ejus, . . . ait illi: Volo, mundare.

42. And as soon as He had spoken, immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed.

S.V. omits as soon as He had spoken.
Vulg. Et cum dixisset, statim discessit ab eo lepra et mundatus est.

43. And He straitly charged him, and forthwith sent him away;

Vulg. Et comminatus est ei, statimque eiecit illum.

44. And saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

S.A. omits nothing.
Vulg. Et dixit ei: Vide nemini dixeris: sed vade, ostende te principi sacerdotum.

45. But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places: and they came to Him from every quarter.

¹ Euthymius, in Marc. i. 35; vol. ii. p. 33.
Maldonatus, in Marc. i. 35; vol. i. p. 540.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. i. 35; vol. viii. p. 579.
² S. Ambrose, in Luc. vi. 12; vol. ii. p. 1647.

Euthymius, in Marc. i. 35; vol. ii. p. 33.
Theophylact, in Marc. i. 35; vol. i. p. 179.
Maldonatus, in Marc. i. 35; vol. i. p. 540.
³ Maldonatus, in Marc. i. 38; vol. i. p. 540.

CHAPTER II.

[1. Christ healeth one sick of the palsy, 14. callth Matthew from the receipt of custom, 15. catcheth with publicans and sinners, 18. excoth His disciples for not fasting, 23. and for plucking the ears of corn on the sabbath day]

[Vulg. Murmurantis viridis quod paralyticus per tectum in grabato demisso, diceret remitti peccata, jubens ipsum ferre grabatum, sanatum; apud Levin quem ad sequendum vocaverat, discubens cum pluribus publicanis, rationem dicit, murmurantibus pharisæis, quare cum peccatoribus emersetur, et cur ipsius discipuli non jejunent: quos etiam epicas sabbato relentes excusat.]

For verses 1-12 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 169.

1. And again He entered into Capernaum, after some days; and it was noised that He was in the house.

S.V. And when He entered again into Capernaum after some days, it was noised.

2. And straightway many were gathered together, insomuch that there was no room to receive them, no, not so much as about the door: and He preached the word unto them.

S.V. omit straightway.
Vulg. omits straightway.

3. And they come unto Him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four.

S.V. they come bringing unto Him one sick.
Vulg. Et venerunt ad eum ferentes paralyticum.

4. And when they could not come nigh unto Him for the press, they uncovered the roof^a where He was: and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the sick of the palsy lay.

S.V. could not bring him unto Him.
Vulg. Et cum non possent offerre eum illi pre turba, nudaverunt tectum ubi erat.

5. When Jesus saw their faith, He said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee.

S.V. My son: S.V. omit thee.
Vulg. ad paralyticum: Fili, dimittuntur tibi peccata tua.

* They uncovered the roof.—“It is the opinion of some translators, that the cognate construction is not in accord with the genius or the idiom of our language, though its force and beauty in Greek is unquestionable; but no one can be at home in our earliest English, without being struck by its frequent recourse to such cognate constructions as ‘die the death,’ ‘fought the fight.’ In Mark ii. 4, ‘they uncovered the roof,’ why should not we have ‘they unroofed the roof’ (an English cognate construction to represent the Greek cognate ἀνεστράσαν τὴν στέγην)? In Matthew ix. 16, ‘no one putteth a piece,’ why not have a cognate construction corresponding to the Greek cognate ἐπιβάλλει ἐπιβλήμα, and render it, ‘no one patches a patch’? In S. Matthew vii. 2,

6. But there were certain of the scribes sitting there, and reasoning in their hearts,

7. Why doth this Man thus speak blasphemies? who can forgive sins but God only?

S.V. Why doth this Man thus speak? He blasphemeth.
Vulg. Quid hic sic loquitur? blasphematur.

8. And immediately when Jesus perceived in His spirit that they so reasoned within themselves, He said unto them, Why reason ye these things in your hearts?

V. omits so: S.V. He saith: V. omits unto them.

9. Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk?

S.V. omit thee.
Vulg. Dimittuntur tibi peccata; an dicere: Surge, tolle grabatum tuum et ambula?

10. But that ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (He saith to the sick of the palsy,)

11. I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house.

S.V. Arise, I say unto thee, take up.
Vulg. Tibi dico: Surge, tolle grabatum tuum et vade in domum tuam.

12. And immediately he arose, took up the bed, and went forth before them all; insomuch instead of ‘for with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again,’ why not have ‘for with what measure ye measure, it shall be measured to you in return’ (following out closely all the cognates of the original Greek)? So in S. Matthew x. 26, ‘There is nothing covered which shall not be revealed,’ we prefer a cognate rendering of the Greek cognate, ‘There is nothing covered which shall not be uncovered, or nothing unrevealed which shall not be revealed.’ In S. Matthew v. 35, we prefer a cognate for the Greek cognate, ‘the footstool of His feet’ (ὀπισθόδιον τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ), after the Rheims’ rendering, ‘the footstool of His feet.’” —‘The Church Quarterly Review,’ April 1876, p. 124.

that they were all amazed, and glorified God, saying, We never saw it on this fashion.

S.V. And he arose, and immediately took up: V. omits saying: S*. saying, It was never so seen in Israel.

Vulg. Et statim surrexit ille: et, sublatò grabatò, abiit coram omnibus, ita ut mirarentur omnes, et honorificarent Deum, dicentes: Quia nunquam sic vidimus.

For verses 13 and 14 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 172.

13. And He went forth again by the sea side; and all the multitude resorted unto Him, and He taught them.

S*. And they went forth again to the sea: S*. resorted unto them. Vulg. Et egressus est rursus ad mare: omnisque turba veniebat ad eum, et docebat eos.

14. And as He passed by, He saw Levi the son of Alphaeus sitting at the receipt of custom, and said unto him, Follow Me. And he arose and followed Him.

For verses 15-17 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 173.

15. And it came to pass, that, as Jesus sat at meat in his house, many publicans and sinners sat also together with Jesus and His disciples: for there were many, and they followed Him.

S.V. And it cometh to pass, that He sitteth at meat in his house, and many: A. came also and sat together. #

Vulg. Et factum est, cum accumberet in domo illius, multi publicani et peccatores simul discubebant cum Iesu et discipulis ejus: erant enim multi, qui et sequabantur eum.

16. And when the scribes and Pharisees saw Him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto His disciples, How is it that He eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?

S. And then followed Him also scribes of the Pharisees, and when they saw that He was eating.

V. And when the scribes of the Pharisees saw that He eateth with sinners and publicans: S. that your Master.

S.V. omit and drinketh. Vulg. Et scribæ et pharisæi videntes quia manducaret cum publicanis et peccatoribus, dicebant discipulis ejus: Quare cum publicanis et peccatoribus manducat et bibit magister vester?

17. When Jesus heard it, He saith unto them, They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

S.V. A. omit to repentance. Vulg. omits to repentance.

For verses 18-22 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 174.

18. And the disciples of John and of the Pharisees used to fast:^a and they come and say unto Him, Why do the disciples of John and of the Pharisees fast, but Thy disciples fast not?

S.V.A. and the Pharisees: S.V. and the disciples of the Pharisees: A. omits and of the Pharisees.

Vulg. Et erant discipuli Iohannis et pharisæi jejunantes: et veniunt et dicunt illi: Quare discipuli Iohannis et pharisæorum jejulant, tui autem discipuli non jejulant?

19. And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber fast, while the bridegroom is with them? as long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot fast.

20. But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days.

S.V.A. and then shall they fast in that day. Vulg. Et tunc jejunabunt in illis diebus.

21. No man also seweth a piece of new cloth on an old garment: else the new piece that filled it up taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worse.

Margin, raw or unwrought.

Vulg. Nemo assumentum panni rudis assuit vestimento veteri: alioquin auferet supplementum, novum a veteri, et major scissura fit.

22. And no man putteth new wine into old bottles: else the new wine doth burst the bottles, and the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be marred: but new wine must be put into new bottles.

S.V. else the wine shall burst them; and the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be marred: V. and the wine perisheth and the bottles: S*.V. but new wine must be put into new bottles.

Vulg. Et nemo mittit vinum novum in utres veteres: alioquin dirumpet vinum utres, et vinum effundetur, et utres peribunt.

For verses 23-28 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 208.

23. And it came to pass, that He went through the corn fields on the sabbath day; and His disciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn.

Vulg. Et factum est iterum cum Dominus sabbatis ambularet.

24. And the Pharisees said unto Him, Behold, why do they on the sabbath day that which is not lawful?

A. why do they that which is not lawful on the sabbath day? Vulg. Ecce, quid faciunt sabbatis quod non licet?

* Used to fast.—“The Greek Testament writers often use the imperfect tense of ἐλά with a participle, to mark, not a series of repeated actions, but the continuance of the same action, or the same state, for some time . . . Take, for example, Acts i. 10, 13, and 14, where the verbs used are periphrastic imperfects, and mean ‘continued to gaze,’ ‘continued to abide,’ ‘continued to attend.’ Take again S. Mark ii. 18, where the holy Evangelist tells us that the disciples of S. John and the Pharisees ‘were keeping a fast’ (ἵνα ἐν τρέφοντες).”—‘The Church Quarterly Review,’ April 1876, p. 123.

25. And He said unto them, Have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was an hungred, he, and they that were with him ?

S. saith.
Vulg. Et ait illis.

26. How he went into the house of God in the days of Abiathar the high priest,^a and did eat the shewbread, which is not lawful to eat but for the priests, and gave also to them which were with him ?

V. omits How.
Vulg. Quomodo introivit in domum Dei.

27. And He said unto them, The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath :

A. for man, not man.
Vulg. Sabbatum propter hominem factum est, et non homo propter sabbatum.

28. Therefore the Son of Man is Lord also of the sabbath.

^a In the days of Abiathar the high priest.—“It is well enough known what is here said in defence of the purity of the text ; namely, that Ahimelech the father was called Abiathar, and Abiathar the son was called also Ahimelech. But I suppose that something more was propounded by our Saviour in these words : for it was common to the Jews, under Abiathar, to understand the Urim and Thummim. Nor without good reason, when it appears, that under the father and the son, both of that name, the mention of inquiring by Urim and Thummim is more frequent than it is ever anywhere else ; and after Abiathar the son, there is scarcely mention of it at all. Christ, therefore, very properly adds, ἐν τῷ Ἀβιάθαρ ἀρχιερέως, ‘in the days of Abiathar the high priest,’ therein speaking according to a very received opinion in the nation ; as though He had said, David ate the shewbread given him by the high priest, who had the oracle by Urim and Thummim present with him, and who acted by the divine direction.”—LIGHTFOOT on Mark ii. 26 ; vol. ii. p. 336.

CHAPTER III.

[1. Christ healeth the withered hand, 10. and many other infirmities: 11. rebuleth the unclean spirits: 13. chooseth His twelve Apostles: 22. convinceth the blasphemy of casting out devils by Beelzebub: 31. and sheweth who are His brother, sister, and mother.]

[Vulg. Postquam manum aridam curaverat, pharisorum cedens machinationi, seedit, turbis undique ad ipsum confluentibus, quarum infirmos curat: duodecim a se electos (qui hic recensentur) mittit ad predicandum, data ipsis potestate super infirmitates ac demonia: scribas blasphemantes ipsum in Beelzebub ejicere demonia convinct falsitatis, dicens blasphemum in Spiritum sanctum irremissibilem, et quia sint mater et fratres ejus.]

For verses 1-6 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 210.

1. And He entered again into the synagogue; and there was a man there which had a withered hand.

S.V. into a synagogue.

2. And they watched Him, whether He would heal him on the sabbath day; that they might accuse Him.

S. whether He healeth him.

Vulg. Et observabant eum, si sabbatis curaret, ut accusarent illum.

3. And He saith unto the man which had the withered hand, Stand forth.

Margin, Arise, stand forth in the midst.

4. And He saith unto them, Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath days, or to do evil? to save life, or to kill? But they held their peace.

5. And when He had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, He saith unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it out; and his hand was restored whole as the other.

Margin, blindness.

S.V.A. omit whole as the other.

Vulg. Et extendit, et restituta est manus illi (omits whole as the other).

6. And the Pharisees went forth, and straightway took counsel with the Herodians against Him, how they might destroy Him.

For verses 7-12 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 212.

7. But Jesus withdrew Himself with His disciples to the sea: and a great multitude from Galilee followed Him, and from Judæa,

S.V. Jesus with His disciples withdrew to the sea: S. from Galilee and from Judæa followed Him.

Vulg. Jesus autem cum discipulis suis recessit ad mare; et multa turba a Galilæa et Judæa secuta est eum.

8. And from Jerusalem, and from Idumæa, and from beyond Jordan; and they about Tyre and Sidon, a great multitude, when they had heard what great things He did, came unto Him.

S*. omits and from Idumæa: S*. from beyond Jordan, they about Tyre.

S.V. hearing.

Vulg. Et ab Ierosolymis, et ab Idumæa, et trans Jordanem; et qui circa Tyrum et Sidonem, multitudo magna, audientes quæ faciebat, venerunt ad eum.

9. And He spake to His disciples, that a small ship should wait on Him because of the multitude, lest they should throng Him.

10. For He had healed many; insomuch that they pressed upon Him for to touch Him, as many as had plagues.

Margin, rushed upon Him.

A. also as many as had plagues.

Vulg. Multos enim sanabat ita ut irruerent in eum ut illum tangerent quot quot habebant plagas.

11. And unclean spirits, when they saw Him, fell down before Him, and cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God.

12. And He straitly charged them that they should not make Him known.

For verses 13-19 see S. Matthew, ch. x., page 185.

13. And He goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto Him whom He would: and they came unto Him.

S. but they came.

Vulg. et venerunt ad eum.

14. And He ordained twelve, that they should be with Him, and that He might send them forth to preach,

S.V. twelve, whom also He named Apostles.

Vulg. Et fecit illi duodecim cum illo: et ut mitteret eos predicare.

15. And to have power to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils:

S.V. omit to heal sicknesses and.

Vulg. Et dedit illi potestatem curandi infirmitates, et ejiciendi demonia.

16. And Simon He surnamed Peter ;

S.V. And He ordained the twelve, and Simon He surnamed.
 Vulg. Et imposuit Simoni nomen Petrus.

17. And James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James ; and He surnamed them Boanerges, which is, The sons of thunder :

18. And Andrew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Matthew, and Thomas, and James the son of Alphæus, and Thaddæus, and Simon the Canaanite,

All MSS., the Cananite.
 Vulg. et Simonem Cananaeum.

19. And Judas Iscariot, which also betrayed Him :

S. Mark alone records the following.

19. —and they went into an house.

Margin, home.
 S*, and He.
 Vulg. et veniunt ad domum.

20. And the multitude cometh together again, so that they could not so much as eat bread.

21. And when His friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on Him : for they said, He is beside Himself.

Margin, kinsmen.
 Vulg. dicebant enim : Quoniam in furorem versus est.

Maldonatus¹ has analysed with considerable minuteness the various explanations given to this passage by S. Jerome, the Venerable Bede, Theophylact, Euthymius, and the other commentators who lived before him, and holds that the following is the most probable account. Jesus is still at Capernaum, and the house in verse 19 is Peter's, already mentioned by S. Mark (i. 29). From the grammatical construction he concludes that it is Jesus and His disciples who are said not to have had time so much as to eat bread, and not the multitude. Several interpretations have been offered both as to the persons who wished to lay hold of Jesus, and also as to their object. He rejects the way some have interpreted the words of παρ' αὐτοῦ, as meaning His fellow-countrymen, or the domestics, on the ground that this is inadequate and does not come up to the full meaning of the phrase, which is generally used of relations, and which in this case most probably refers to His brethren, who are mentioned in verse 31. In company with a great number of ancient interpreters, as he says, he rejects with horror the very thought that the Blessed Virgin either said or believed that her Son was mad, or that His conduct was otherwise than it should be.

His brethren had heard of the excitement which prevailed in the city on account of Him ; they had heard too of His unceasing labour in behalf of the people, not allowing Himself time for the necessary refreshment of the body, and they concluded that only mischief could come from such exertions, and that it was their duty, as His nearest relations, to rescue from danger One whom they concluded was acting like an insane man, as if He had lost His senses, and was transported beyond Himself (ἐξίστηναι). They knew too the envy and indignation which His conduct would excite among the Pharisees. Either His brethren really believed that Jesus was gone out of His mind, or they made this a pretext to lay hold of Him and withdraw Him from the place. Either way their object was the same, to remove Him from what they considered a scene of danger to one of safety.

There were other occasions beside this on which His brethren wished to act differently from Jesus, not from any want of affection for Him, much less from any hostility to Him, but from insufficient knowledge of His real character. One of these is recorded at length by S. John (vii. 2, &c.).

For verses 22-30 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 214.

22. ¶ And the scribes which came down from Jerusalem said, He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth He out devils.

S. Beelzebub : V. Beelzeboul.
 Vulg. Et scribæ, qui ab Ierosolymis descendunt, dicebant : Quoniam Beelzebub habet.

23. And He called them unto Him, and said unto them in parables, How can Satan cast out Satan ?

24. And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand.

25. And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand.

S. that house will not be able to stand.
 Vulg. Et si domus super semetipsam disperit, non potest domus illa stare.

26. And if Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he cannot stand, but hath an end.

S*, rise up against himself, he is divided and cannot stand.
 Vulg. Et si satanas consurrexerit in semetipsum, disperit, et non poterit stare, sed finem habet.

27. No man can enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he will first bind the strong man ; and then he will spoil his house.

S.V. But no man.
 Vulg. Nemo potest vasa fortis ingressus in domum diripere.

28. Verily I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme :

S.V.A. and the blasphemies.

29. But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation :

S. but shall be in danger : S.V. of eternal sin.
 Vulg. non habebit remissionem in ætèrnum, sed reus erit æterni delicti.

¹ Maldonatus, in Marc., in. 20 ; vol. i. p. 555.

30. Because they said, He hath an unclean spirit.

For verses 31-35 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 222.

31. ¶ There came then His brethren and His mother, and, standing without, sent unto Him, calling Him.

S. and His mother cometh, and His brethren: V. and His mother and His brethren come; calling Him: A. seeking for Him.

Vulg. Et veniunt mater ejus et fratres: et foris stantes miserunt ad eum vocantes eum.

32. And the multitude sat about Him, and they said unto Him, Behold, Thy mother and Thy brethren without seek for Thee.

S.V. say: A. and Thy brethren and thy sisters.

Vulg. Et dicunt ei: Ecce mater tua et fratres tui foris querunt te.

33. And He answered them, saying, Who is My mother, or My brethren?

S.V. and My brethren.

Vulg. Quæ est mater mea et fratres mei?

34. And He looked round about on them which sat about Him, and said, Behold My mother and My brethren!

V. omits and before He looked.

Vulg. Et circumspiciens eos.

35. For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is My brother, and My sister, and mother.

V. omits For: S.V.A. My brother and sister.

Vulg. qui cum fecerit voluntatem Dei, hic frater meus, et soror mea, et mater est.

CHAPTER IV.

[1. The parable of the sower, 14. and the meaning thereof. 21. We must communicate the light of our knowledge to others. 26. The parable of the seed growing secretly, 30. and of the mustard seed. 35. Christ stilleth the tempest on the sea.]

[Vulg. Parabolan proposuit seminantis, quoniam discipulis declarat: lucernam dicit super candelabrum ponendam: addens parabolas de semine in terram jecto, quod crescit dormiente eo qui seminavit, et de grano sinapis: discipulis autem sorsim omnia interpretatur: in navi a somno exaltatus, tempestatem maris solat.]

For verses 1-9 see S. Matthew, ch. xiii., page 226.

1. And He began again to teach by the sea side: and there was gathered unto Him a great multitude, so that He entered into a ship, and sat in the sea; and the whole multitude was by the sea on the land.

S.V. and there gathereth unto Him a very great multitude.
Vulg. et congregata est ad eum turba multa.

2. And He taught them many things by parables, and said unto them in His doctrine,

3. Hearken; Behold, there went out a sower to sow:

4. And it came to pass, as he sowed, some fell by the way side, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up.

S.V. A. omit of the air.
Vulg. Et dum seminavit, aliud cecidit circa viam, et venerunt volucres cœli, et comederunt illud.

5. And some fell on stony ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth:

6. But when the sun was up, it was scorched; and because it had no root, it withered away.

7. And some fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up, and choked it, and it yielded no fruit.

8. And other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprang up and increased; and brought forth, some thirty, and some sixty, and some an hundred.

S.V. and did yield fruit, in that it sprang up and increased (literally, springing up and increasing).

Vulg. Et aliud cœcidit in terram bonam: et dedit fructum ascendentem et crescentem; et altera autem unum triginta, unum sexaginta, et unum centum.

9. And He said unto them, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

S.V. A. omit unto them.
Vulg. Et dicebat: Qui habet aures audiendi, audiat.

For verses 10-20 see S. Matthew, ch. xiii., page 228.

10. And when He was alone, they that were about Him with the twelve asked of Him the parable.

S.V. the parables.
Vulg. Et cum esset singularis, interrogaverunt eum li, qui cum eo erant duodecim, parabolan.

11. And He said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables:

S.V. A. Unto you is given the mystery.
Vulg. Vobis datum est nosse mysterium regni Dei.

12. That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them.

S.V. and it should be forgiven them (omit their sins).
Vulg. et dimittantur eis peccata.

13. And He said unto them, Know ye not this parable? and how then will ye know all parables?

14. ¶ The sower soweth the word.

Vulg. Qui seminat, verbum seminat.

15. And these are they by the way side, where the word is sown; but when they have heard, Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts.

S.V. that was sown in them: A. that was sown out of their hearts.
Vulg. et auferit verbum quod seminatum est in cordibus eorum.

16. And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground; who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness;

17. And have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time: afterward, when afflicttion or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended.

Vulg. Et non habent radicem in se, sed temporales sunt.

18. And these are they which are sown among thorns; such as hear the word,

S.V. And there are others who are: S.V. these are such as have heard.
Vulg. Et alii sunt, qui in spinis seminantur: hi sunt qui verbum audiunt.

19. And the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful.

S.V. of the world: S.V. and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and the lusts of other things entering in, and it.
Vulg. Et erumina saeculi.

20. And these are they which are sown on good ground; such as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirtyfold, some sixty, and some an hundred.

JESUS TEACHES HIS APOSTLES.

S. MARK iv. 21-25.

21 And He said unto them,
Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel,
or under a bed?
and not to be set on a candlestick?

22 For there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested;
neither was anything kept secret,

but that it should come abroad.
23 If any man have ears to hear,
let him hear.

24 And He said unto them,
Take heed what ye hear:
with what measure ye mete,
it shall be measured to you:
and unto you that hear shall more be given.

25 For he that hath,
to him shall be given:
and he that hath not,
from him shall be taken even that which he hath.

S. LUKE viii. 16-18.

16 No man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it — with a vessel,
or putteth it under a bed;
but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in may see the light.

17 For nothing is secret, that shall not be made manifest;
neither anything hid,
that shall not be known and come abroad.

18 Take heed therefore how ye hear:

for whosoever hath,
to him shall be given;
and whosoever hath not,
from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have.

21. ¶ And He said unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, or under a bed? and not to be set on a candlestick?

Vulg. Numquid venit lucerna ut sub modio ponatur, aut sub lecto? nonne ut super candelabrum ponatur?

22. For there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested; neither was anything kept secret, but that it should come abroad.

23. If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

24. And He said unto them, Take heed what ye hear: with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you: and unto you that hear shall more be given.

S.V. and more shall be given unto you (omit that hear).

Vulg. In qua mensura mensi fueritis, remetietur vobis, et adjicietur vobis.

25. For he that hath, to him shall be given: and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath.

S. Matthew relates that Jesus used the words "Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel," &c., in His Sermon on the Mount, and S. Mark and S. Luke represent Him as uttering them after His explanation of the parable of the sower. The solution of this apparent discrepancy most probably is, that Jesus made use of this simile, which was one of the common proverbs of the country, more than once, and under different circumstances, and as an illustration to enforce different lessons.

In S. Matthew the Apostles themselves are the light which Jesus has lighted, and He there teaches them that as such they must shine, and show light to others, even under the pressure of hatred and persecution. After the parable of the sower Jesus again used this expression, as recorded by S. Mark and S. Luke. But there He uses the light, not of His Apostles, but of His doctrine, of the truth which He taught. The Apostles had inquired of Him why He taught the people in parables. His answer was, because they were not as yet in a state to receive or understand His doctrine, if put before them fully or in a naked form. But that this should not always be so: for, from its very nature, it was never intended that a light should be kept always under a bushel; it was never intended that what He then hid, or kept secret, should never be made plain, or that His doctrine should always be kept veiled, or taught to the people under the form of parables. For a time would come when they would be in a state to understand His truth, and then it should be taught to them plainly and unreservedly. It also behoved them, as His Apostles, to take heed how they heard: for in proportion to their diligence and success in teaching the people His truth, in the same proportion should be their own increase in the knowledge of it. The importance of this He shows by expressing it in a twofold form, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you: and unto you that hear shall more be given. For he that hath,"¹ &c.

S. Mark alone records the following parable.

26. ¶ And He said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground;

27. And should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how.

Vulg. et semen germinat, et increseat dum nescit ille.

28. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.

S.V.A. omit For.

Vulg. Ultra enim terra fructificat, primum herbam, deinde spicam, deinde plenum frumentum in spica.

29. But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.

Margin. or ripe.

Vulg. Et cum produxerit fructus.

Considerable difference² of opinion has existed among commentators with respect to the meaning of some expressions in this parable, but little or none as to the main scope of the parable. The intention of Jesus appears to have been to foretell the certain success of His kingdom, or the certainty that His kingdom would spread among men; to point out the inherent power of the seed sown, of the word, to grow, whether observed by men or not, during the busy hours of the day or the silent hours of the night,—that before the seed sown could reach perfection and bear fruit, it must go through several successive stages, and then it would be reaped, cut down, and carried home.

"So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground;" that is, what takes place in the kingdom of God is like what takes place in the ground, that is sown, &c.

Some have referred the words "and should sleep, and rise night and day," to the seed, but others to the sower, to the Son of God or to His servants.

Some writers³ have endeavoured to identify the various stages of growth from the seed sown, the blade, the ear, and the full corn in the ear, with special virtues or graces, with the different degrees of excellence in the divine life to which a saintly man attains.

The harvest is the end of the world, or the end of each man's life.

For verses 30-34 see S. Matthew, ch. xiii., page 233.

30. ¶ And He said, Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it?

31. It is like a grain of mustard seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth:

32. But when it is sown, it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it.

S.V. And when.

Vulg. Et cum seminatum fuerit, ascendit, et fit majus omnibus olivibus et facti ramos magnos, ita ut possint sub umbra ejus aves celi habitare.

33. And with many such parables spake He the word unto them, as they were able to hear it.

34. But without a parable spake He not unto them: and when they were alone, He expounded all things to His disciples.

V. And without.

Vulg. sine parabola autem.

For verses 35-41 see S. Matthew, ch. viii., page 163.

35. And the same day, when the even was come, He saith unto them, Let us pass over unto the other side.

36. And when they had sent away the multitude, they took Him even as He was in the ship. And there were also with Him other little ships.

S.V.A. other ships.

Vulg. et aliae naves erant cum illo.

37. And there arose a great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship, so that it was now full.

S.V. So that the ship was now full: S. omits so that it was now full.

Vulg. Et facta est procella magna venti, et fluctus mittebat in navim, ita ut impleteret navis.

¹ V. Bede, in Marc. iv. 24; vol. iii. p. 171.

Euthymius, in Marc. iv. 24; vol. ii. p. 65.

Maldonatus, in Marc. iv. 24; vol. i. p. 564.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. iv. 24; vol. viii. p. 586.

² Theophylact, in Marc. iv. 26; vol. i. p. 192.

Euthymius, in Marc. iv. 26; vol. ii. p. 65.

Maldonatus, in Marc. iv. 26; vol. i. p. 564.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lii. p. 410.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. iv. 26; vol. viii. p. 587.

³ V. Bede, in Marc. iv. 28; vol. iii. p. 172.

S. Gregory Magnus, Moral. xxi. 29 (alias 11); vol. ii. p. 241.

in Evang. Homil. xv.; vol. ii. p. 1131.

38. And He was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow: and they awake Him, and say unto Him, Master, carest Thou not that we perish?

Vulg. Magister, non ad te pertinet, quia perimus?

39. And He arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And the wind ceased, and there was a great calm.

40. And He said unto them, Why are ye so fearful? how is it that ye have no faith?

S.V. Why are ye fearful? have ye not yet faith?

Vulg. Et ait illis: Quid timidi estis? necdum habetis fidem?

41. And they feared exceedingly, and said one to another, What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey Him?

Vulg. Et timuerunt timore magno, et dicebant ad alterutrum: Quis, putas, est iste, quia et ventus et mare obediunt ei?

CHAPTER V.

[1. Christ delivering the possessed of the legion of devils, 13, they enter into the swine. 25. He healeth the woman of the bloody issue, 25, and raiseth from death Jairus his daughter.]

[Vulg. In regione Gerasenorum demoniacum curat ferocissimum a legione demonum: quibus permittit ut in porcos ingrediantur, nec sint ut ipsum sequatur is qui liberatus erat: curata muliere a profluvio sanguinis, venit ad domum Jairi, ejusque filium resuscitat.]

For verses 1-20 see S. Matthew, ch. viii., page 164.

1. And they came over unto the other side of the sea, into the country of the Gadarenes.

S.V. of the Gerasenes: S2. of the Gergesenes.

Vulg. Et venerunt trans fretum maris in regionem Gerasenorum.

2. And when He was come out of the ship, immediately there met Him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit,

V. omits immediately.

Vulg. Et exeunti ei de navi, statim occurrit de monumentis homo in spiritu immundo.

3. Who had his dwelling among the tombs; and no man could bind him, no, not with chains:

S. and no man could any more bind him even with chains: V. and no man could any more bind him even with a chain.

Vulg. Qui demum habebat in monumentis, et neque catenis jam quicumque poterat eum ligare.

4. Because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces: neither could any man tame him.

Time him: A. bind him.

Vulg. et nemo poterat eum domare.

5. And always, night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himself with stones.

S.V. A. he was in the tombs and in the mountains.

Vulg. Et semper die ac nocte in monumentis et in montibus erat.

6. But when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshipped Him,

S.V. And when he.

Vulg. Videus autem Jesum a longe.

7. And cried with a loud voice, and said, What have I to do with Thee, Jesus, thou Son of the Most High God? I adjure Thee by God, that Thou torment me not.

S.V. A. and saith: A. Son of the living God?

Vulg. Et clamans voce magna dixit: Quid mihi et tibi, Iesu Fili Dei Altissimi?

I.

8. For He said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit.

S. And He said.

Vulg. Dicebat enim illi.

9. And He asked him, What is thy name? And he answered, saying, My name is Legion: for we are many.

S.V. A. And he saith unto Him, My name.

Vulg. Et dixit ei: Legio mihi nomen est, quia multi sumus.

10. And he besought Him much that He would not send them away out of the country.

A. And they besought Him: S. send him away.

Vulg. Et deprecabatur eum multum, ne se expelleret extra regionem.

11. Now there was there nigh unto the mountains a great herd of swine feeding.

S.V. A. unto the mountain.

Vulg. Erat autem ibi circa montem grex porcorum magnus, pascens.

12. And all the devils besought Him, saying, Send us into the swine, that we may enter into them.

S.V. And they besought Him.

Vulg. Et deprecabatur eum spiritus.

13. And forthwith Jesus gave them leave. And the unclean spirits went out, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea, (they were about two thousand;) and were choked in the sea.

S.V. And He gave them leave: A. omits unclean: S.V. into the sea, about two thousand, and.

Vulg. Et concessit eis statim Iesus. Et exeuntes spiritus immundi introierunt in porcos: et magno impetu grex precipitatus est in mare ad duo milia, et suffocati sunt in mari.

14. And they that fed the swine fled, and told it in the city, and in the country. And they went out to see what it was that was done.

S.V. They that fed them fled: S2.V. A. And they went to see.

Vulg. Qui autem pascabant eos, fugerunt.

15. And they come to Jesus, and see him that was possessed with the devil, and had the legion, sitting, and clothed, and in his right mind : and they were afraid.

2 M

S. And they came : S.V. sitting, clothed.
Vulg. Et veniunt ad Iesum . . . sedentem, vestitum.

16. And they that saw it told them how it befell to him that was possessed with the devil, and also concerning the swine.

17. And they began to pray Him to depart out of their coasts.

18. And when He was come into the ship, he that had been possessed with the devil prayed Him that he might be with Him.

S.V.A. And when He cometh.
Vulg. Cumque ascenderet navim, cepit illum deprecari, qui a demonio vexatus fuerat, ut esset cum illo.

19. Howbeit Jesus suffered him not, but saith unto him, Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee.

S.V.A. And He suffered him not.
Vulg. Et non admisit eum.

20. And he departed, and began to publish in Decapolis how great things Jesus had done for him : and all men did marvel.

For verses 21-24 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 175.

21. And when Jesus was passed over again by ship unto the other side, much people gathered unto Him : and He was nigh unto the sea.

22. And, behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus by name ; and when he saw Him, he fell at His feet,

S.V. omit behold : S.V.A. he falleth.
Vulg. Et venit quidam de archisynagoga nomine Iairus ; et videns eum procidit ad pedes eius.

23. And besought Him greatly, saying, My little daughter lieth at the point of death : I pray Thee, come and lay Thy hands on her, that she may be healed ; and she shall live.

S. And beseecheth Him.
Vulg. Et deprecabatur eum multum dicens : Quoniam filia mea in extremis est, veni, impone manum super eam, ut salva sit, et vivat.

24. And Jesus went with him ; and much people followed Him, and thronged Him.

For verses 25-34 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 177.

25. And a certain woman, which had an issue of blood twelve years,

S.V.A. And a woman.
Vulg. Et mulier quae.

26. And had suffered many things of many physicians, and had spent all that she had,

and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse,

27. When she had heard of Jesus, came in the press behind, and touched His garment.

S.V. had heard the things concerning Jesus.
Vulg. Cum audisset de Iesu.

28. For she said, If I may touch but His clothes, I shall be whole.

V. omits but : S. but His garment.
Vulg. Dicebat enim : Quia si vel vestimentum ejus tetigero, salva ero.

29. And straightway the fountain of her blood was dried up ; and she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague.

Vulg. et sensit corpore quia sanata esset a plaga.

30. And Jesus, immediately knowing in Himself that virtue had gone out of Him, turned Him about in the press, and said, Who touched My clothes ?

Vulg. Et statim Iesus in semetipso cognoscens virtutem quae exierat de illo, conversus ad turbam, ait.

31. And His disciples said unto Him, Thou seest the multitude thronging Thee, and sayest Thou, Who touched Me ?

32. And He looked round about to see her that had done this thing.

33. But the woman fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, came and fell down before Him, and told Him all the truth.

S*. and knowing.
Vulg. Mulier vero timens et tremens, sciens.

34. And He said unto her, Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole ; go in peace, and be whole of thy plague.

Vulg. Ille autem dixit ei.

For verses 35-43 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 178.

35. While He yet spake, there came from the ruler of the synagogue's house certain which said, Thy daughter is dead : why troublest thou the Master any further ?

36. As soon as Jesus heard the word that was spoken, He saith unto the ruler of the synagogue, Be not afraid, only believe.

S.V. But Jesus having casually heard the word.
Vulg. Iesus autem audito verbo quod dicebatur, ait archisynagogo.

37. And He suffered no man to follow Him, save Peter, and James, and John the brother of James.

38. And He cometh to the house of the ruler of the synagogue, and seeth the tumult, and them that wept and wailed greatly.

S.V.A. And they come . . . and He seeth.

Vulg. Et veniunt in domum archisynagogi, et videt tumultum.

39. And when He was come in, He saith unto them, Why make ye this ado, and weep? the damsel is not dead, but sleepeth.

40. And they laughed Him to scorn. But when He had put them all out, He taketh the father and the mother of the damsel, and them that were with Him, and entereth in where the damsel was lying.

S.V. in where the damsel was (conit lying).

Vulg. et ingreditur ubi puella erat jaceus.

41. And He took the damsel by the hand, and said unto her, TALITHA CUMI; which is, being interpreted, Damsel, I say unto thee, arise.

Vulg. Et tenens manum puellæ ait illi: Talitha cumi, quod est interpretatum: Puella (tibi dico) surge.

42. And straightway the damsel arose, and walked; for she was of the age of twelve years. And they were astonished with a great astonishment.

S. for she was about twelve years old; S.V. and they were straightway astonished.

Vulg. erat autem annorum duodecim: et obstupuerunt stupore magno.

43. And He charged them straitly that no man should know it; and commanded that something should be given her to eat.

Vulg. Et præcepit illis vehementer ut nemo id sciret.

CHAPTER VI.

[1. Christ is condemned of His countrymen. 7. He giveth the Twelve power over unclean spirits. 14. Divers opinions of Christ. 27. John Baptist is beheaded, 29. and buried. 30. The Apostles return from preaching. 31. The miracle of five loaves and two fishes. 48. Christ walketh on the sea : 53. and health all that touch Him.]

[Vulg. Christi doctrinam in ipsius patria admittitur : ubi tamen propter illorum incredulitatem pauca edidit miracula : apostolos mittens ad predicandum, instructi quid observare debeant : Herodes, audita Christi fama, dicit Ioannem Baptistam resurrexisse : cuius caput postulanti Herodiadis filio saltatrici propter iurjurandum tradiderat : in deserto quinque panibus et duobus piscibus quinque millia virorum satiat : super mare ambulans, tempestatem sedat : in terra Genesareth plurimos tactu fimbriae vestimenti sanat.]

For verses 1-6 see S. Matthew, ch. xiii., page 238.

1. And He went out from thence, and came into His own country ; and His disciples follow Him.

S.V. and cometh.

2. And when the sabbath day was come, He began to teach in the synagogue : and many hearing Him were astonished, saying, From whence hath this Man these things ? and what wisdom is this which is given unto Him, that even such mighty works are wrought by His hands ?

S. all these things ; that even, &c. : S.V. and such mighty works which are wrought.

Vulg. et multi audientes admirabantur in doctrina ejus, dicentes : Unde huic hæc omnia ? et quæ est sapientia, quæ data est illi : et virtutes tales quæ per manus ejus efficiuntur.

3. Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James, and Josès, and of Juda, and Simon ? and are not His sisters here with us ? And they were offended at Him.

S. of James and Joseph.

Vulg. frater Jacob, et Joseph, et Iudæ, et Simonis ?

4. But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honour, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house.

S. omits and among his own kin.

Vulg. Et dicebat illis Iesus : Quia non est propheta sine honore nisi in patria sua, et in domo sua, et in cognatione sua.

5. And He could there do no mighty work, save that He laid His hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them.

6. And He marvelled because of their unbelief.

For verses 6-13 see S. Matthew, ch. x., pages 184 and 187.

6. —And He went round about the villages, teaching.

S. And Jesus went.

7. ¶ And He called unto Him the Twelve, and began to send them forth by two and two ; and gave them power over unclean spirits ;

8. And commanded them that they should take nothing for their journey, save a staff only ; no scrip, no bread, no money in their purse :

S.V. no bread, no scrip.

Vulg. non peram, non panem, neque in zona æs.

9. But be shod with sandals ; and not put on two coats.

10. And He said unto them, In what place soever ye enter into an house, there abide till ye depart from that place.

A. And He saith.

Vulg. Et dicebat eis.

11. And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear you, when ye depart thence, shake off the dust under your feet for a testimony against them. Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city.

Margin. or.

S. And whatsoever place shall not receive you : S.V. omit Verily I say unto you—than for that city.

Vulg. omits Verily I say unto you—than for that city.

12. And they went out, and preached that men should repent.

S. and preached unto them.

Vulg. Et exeuntes predicabant ut penitentiam agerent.

13. And they cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them.

For verses 14-16 see S. Matthew, ch. xiv., page 242.

14. And king Herod heard of Him; (for His name was spread abroad;) and he said, That John the Baptist was risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do shew forth themselves in him.

V. And they said.

15. Others said, That it is Elias. And others said, That it is a prophet, or as one of the prophets.

S.V.A. But others said: S. And others, That it is: S.V.A. omit or.
Vulg. Alii autem dicebant: Quia Elias est. Alii vero dicebant: Quia propheta est, quasi unus ex prophetis.

16. But when Herod heard thereof, he said, It is John, whom I beheaded: he is risen from the dead.

V. he said, John, whom I beheaded, he is risen: S. he said, He whom I beheaded, this John is risen.

Vulg. Quo auditio Herodes ait: Quem ego decollavi Ioannem, hic a mortuis, resurrexit.

For verses 17-29 see S. Matthew, ch. xiv., page 244.

17. For Herod himself had sent forth and laid hold upon John, and bound him in prison for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife: for he had married her.

A. had sent forth and put John into prison, and bound him for Herodias' sake.
Vulg. Ipse enim Herodes misit, ac tenuit Ioannem, et vinxit eum in carcere propter Herodiam, &c.

18. For John had said unto Herod, It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife.

Vulg. Dicebat enim Ioannes Herodi.

19. Therefore Herodias had a quarrel against him, and would have killed him; but she could not:

Margin, an inward grudge.
Vulg. Herodias autem invidiabat illi.

20. For Herod feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and observed him; and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly.

Margin, kept him, or saved him.
V. knowing that he was a just man and an holy, he kept him.
S.V. and when he heard him, he hesitated much.
Vulg. sciens enim virum justum et sanctum: et custodiebat eum.

21. And when a convenient day was come, that Herod on his birthday made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee;

Vulg. Herodes natalis sui convivium fecit principibus, et tribunis, et primis Galilee.

22. And when the daughter of the said

Herodias came in, and danced, and pleased Herod and them that sat with him, the king said unto the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee.

S.V. came and danced, she pleased Herod, and them that sat with him.
Now the king said.
Vulg. Cumque introisset filia ipsius Herodias, et saltasset, et placuisset Herodi, simul, ne recumbentibus; rex ait puella.

23. And he sware unto her, Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom.

S. omits of me.
Vulg. Quia quicquid petieris dabo tibi, licet dimidium regni mei.

24. And she went forth, and said unto her mother, What shall I ask? And she said, The head of John the Baptist.

25. And she came in straightway with haste unto the king, and asked, saying, I will that thou give me by and by in a charger the head of John the Baptist.

S. came.
Vulg. Cumque introisset statim cum festinatione ad regem, petivit, dicens.

26. And the king was exceeding sorry; yet for his oath's sake, and for their sakes which sat with him, he would not reject her.

Vulg. noluit eam contristare.

27. And immediately the king sent an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought; and he went and beheaded him in the prison, Margin, one of his guard.

S.V. and commanded him to bring his head.
Vulg. Sed misso spicatore precepit afferri caput ejus in disco.

28. And brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damsel: and the damsel gave it to her mother.

29. And when his disciples heard of it, they came and took up his corpse, and laid it in a tomb.

S. and laid him in a tomb.
Vulg. et posuerunt illud in monumento.

For verses 30-44 see S. Matthew, ch. xiv., page 247.

30. And the Apostles gathered themselves together unto Jesus, and told Him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught.

S. all things, what they had done and taught.
Vulg. omnia que egerant, et docuerant.

31. And He said unto them, Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest a while: for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat.

32. And they departed into a desert place by ship privately.

Vulg. Et ascendentes in navim, abierunt in desertum locum seorsum.

33. And the people saw them departing, and many knew Him, and ran afoot thither out of all cities, and outwent them, and came together unto Him.

S.V. A. And they saw them departing: S. and many knew them: S.V. omit and came together unto Him.

Vulg. Et viderunt eos abeuntes, et cognoverunt multi: et pedestres de omnibus civitatibus concurrerunt illuc, et praevenierunt eos.

34. And Jesus, when He came out, saw much people, and was moved with compassion toward them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd: and He began to teach them many things.

S.V. And when He came out, He saw.

Vulg. Et exiens vidit turbam multam Iesus.

35. And when the day was now far spent, His disciples came unto Him, and said, This is a desert place, and now the time is far passed:

S*. came and said.

Vulg. accesserunt discipuli eius, dicentes.

36. Send them away, that they may go into the country round about, and into the villages, and buy themselves bread: for they have nothing to eat.

V. and buy themselves something to eat (omits for they, &c.): S. and buy themselves victuals, something to eat (omits for they, &c.).

Vulg. emant sibi cibos quos manducant.

37. He answered and said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they say unto Him, Shall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth of bread, and give them to eat?

38. He saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? go and see. And when they knew, they say, Five, and two fishes.

And when they knew, they say: S. And they come and say: A. they say unto Him.

Vulg. Et cum cognovissent, dicunt.

39. And He commanded them to make all sit down by companies upon the green grass.

40. And they sat down in ranks, by hundreds, and by fifties.

41. And when He had taken the five loaves and the two fishes, He looked up to heaven, and blessed, and brake the loaves, and gave them to

His disciples to set before them; and the two fishes divided He among them all.

S.V. gave them to the disciples.

Vulg. et dedit discipulis suis.

42. And they did all eat, and were filled.

43. And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fishes.

S. and of the two fishes.

Vulg. Et sustulerunt reliquias fragmentorum, duodecim copinos plenos, et de piscibus.

44. And they that did eat of the loaves were about five thousand men.

S. omits of the loaves: V. A. omit about.

Vulg. Erant autem qui manducaverunt quinque millia virorum.

For verses 45-52 see S. Matthew, ch. xiv., page 250.

45. And straightway He constrained His disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side before unto Bethsaida, while He sent away the people.

Margin, over against Bethsaida.

S. into a ship.

Vulg. ut praecederent eum trans fretum ad Bethsaidam.

46. And when He had sent them away, He departed into a mountain to pray.

47. And when even was come, the ship was in the midst of the sea, and He alone on the land.

48. And He saw them toiling in rowing; for the wind was contrary unto them: and about the fourth watch of the night He cometh unto them, walking upon the sea, and would have passed by them.

49. But when they saw Him walking upon the sea, they supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out:

50. For they all saw Him, and were troubled. And immediately He talked with them, and saith unto them, Be of good cheer: it is I; be not afraid.

51. And He went up unto them into the ship; and the wind ceased: and they were sore amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered.

S.V. omit beyond measure and wondered.

Vulg. Et plus magis intra se stupebant (omits beyond measure, &c.).

52. For they considered not the miracle of the loaves: for their heart was hardened.

For verses 53-56 see S. Matthew, ch. xiv., page 252.

53. And when they had passed over, they came into the land of Gennesaret, and drew to the shore.

54. And when they were come out of the ship, straightway they knew Him,

A. straightway the men of that place.
Vulg. continuo cognoverunt eum.

55. And ran through that whole region round about, and began to carry about in beds those that were sick, where they heard He was.

56. And whithersoever He entered, into villages, or cities, or country, they laid the sick in the streets, and besought Him that they might touch if it were but the border of His garment: and as many as touched Him were made whole.

Margin, it.

N.V. or into cities or into country.

Vulg. Et quocumque introbat, in vicis, vel in villas, aut civitates . . . et quodcumque tangebant eum, salvi fiebant.

CHAPTER VII.

[1. The Pharisees find fault at the disciples for eating with unwashen hands. 8. They break the commandment of God by the traditions of men. 11. Meat defileth not the man. 24. He healeth the Syrophenician woman's daughter of an unclean spirit, 31. and one that was deaf, and stammered in his speech.]

[Vulg. Phariseos redarguit, Christi arguentes discipulos, quod non lotis elevent manibus, cum ipsi tibi mandata ob suas traditiones transgredierentur; declarans quoniam possint hominem conquinare, nonne qui de corde exiit: Syrophœnissæ filiam, ad perseverantem illius supplicationem, a dæmonio liberat; et surdum ac mutum sanat.]

For verses 1-23 see S. Matthew, ch. xv., page 255.

1. Then came together unto Him the Pharisees, and certain of the scribes, which came from Jerusalem.

2. And when they saw some of His disciples eat bread with defiled, that is to say, with unwashen, hands, they found fault.

Margin, common.

S.V. A. omit they found fault.

Vulg. Et cum vidissent quosdam ex discipulis ejus communibus manibus, id est, non lotis, manducare panes, vituperaverunt.

3. For the Pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash their hands oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders.

Margin, diligently; in the original, with the fist.

Vulg. nisi crebro laverint manus.

4. And when they come from the market, except they wash, they eat not. And many other things there be, which they have received to hold, as the washing of cups, and pots, brassen vessels, and of tables.

Margin, beds.

S.V. omit and of tables.

Vulg. baptismata calicum, et urceorum, et aramentorum, et lectorum.

5. Then the Pharisees and scribes asked Him, Why walk not Thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwashen hands?

Then: S.V. And. S.V. with defiled hands.

Vulg. It interrogabant eum pharisei et scribæ . . . sed communibus manibus manducant panem?

6. He answered and said unto them, Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written,

"This people honoureth Me with their lips, but their heart is far from Me.

7. Howbeit in vain do they worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

S.V. omit answered and.

Vulg. At ille respondens, dixit eis.

8. For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do.

S.V. omit For: S.V. omit as the washing of pots and cups: and many other (A. omits other) such like things ye do.

Vulg. Reinquentes enim mandatum Dei, tenetis traditionem hominum, baptismata urceorum et calicum: et alia similia his facitis multa.

9. And He said unto them, Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition.

Margin, frustrate.

Vulg. bene irritum facitis preceptum Dei.

10. For Moses said, Honour thy father and thy mother; and, Whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death:

Vulg. morte moriatur.

11. But ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother, It is Corban, that is to say, a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me; he shall be free.

12. And ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother;

S.V. omit And.

Vulg. Et ultra non dimittitis eum quidquam facere patri suo, aut matri.

13. Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered: and many such like things do ye.

Vulg. Rescindentes verbum Dei.

14. ¶ And when He had called all the people unto Him, He said unto them, Hearken unto Me every one of you, and understand :

S.V. And when He had called the people again unto Him : V. He saith : S. Hearken and understand (omit) unto Me every one of you.
Vulg. Et advocans iterum turbam, dicebat illis : Audite me omnes, et intelligite.

15. There is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him : but the things which come out of him, those are they that defile the man.

S.V. which come out of the man.
Vulg. sed quæ de homine procedunt, illa sunt quæ communicant hominem.

16. If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

S.V. omit this verse.
Vulg. Si quis habet aures audiendi, audiat.

17. And when He was entered into the house from the people, His disciples asked Him concerning the parable.

S.V. asked of Him the parable.
Vulg. interrogabant eum discipuli rebus parabolam.

18. And He saith unto them, Are ye so without understanding also ? Do ye not perceive, that whatsoever thing from without entereth into the man, it cannot defile him ;

S. Do ye not yet perceive : S. from without entereth, it defileth not the man.
Vulg. Non intelligitis, quia omne extrinsecus intrinsecus in hominem, non potest eum communicare.

19. Because it entereth not into his heart, but into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purging all meats ?^a

Vulg. quia non intrat in cor ejus, sed in ventrem vadit, et in secessum exit, purgans omnes carnes :

20. And He said, That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man.

Vulg. Dicebat autem.

21. For from within, out of the heart of men,

^a Verse 19.—Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles read καθαρίων, not καθαρίζων.—SCRIVENER, 'New Testament,' 1877.

^b That expression, 'purging all meats' (καθαρίζων πάντα τὰ βρώματα), does really seem to be no part of the Divine discourse, but the Evangelist's inspired comment on the Saviour's words. Our Saviour (he explains) by that discourse of His ipse factus—'made all meats clean.' So Chrysostom : ο δὲ Μάρκος φησὶν, ὅτι 'καθαρίζων τὰ βρώματα.' ταῦτα ἔλεγεν [vii. 526, A.]. He seems to have derived that remark from Origen [in Matt. ed. Huet, i. 249, D] :—κατὰ τὸν Μάρκον ἔλεγε ταῦτα ὁ Σωτὴρ : καθαρίζων πάντα τὰ βρώματα.—From the same source, I suspect, Gregory Thaumaturgus (Origen's disciple). Bp. of Neocesarea in Pontus, A.D. 261 [Routh, iii. 257], derived the following :—καὶ ὁ Σωτὴρ ὁ 'πάντα καθαρίζων τὰ βρώματα' οὐ τὸ ἐκπορευόμενον, ὡς οἱ κοινοὶ τὴν ἐνδομυον, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἐκπορευόμενον. See, by all means, Field's most interesting Adnot. Hones in Chrys. vol. iii. p. 112.—DEAN BURGON, 'On the last Twelve Verses of S. Mark,' p. 179.

The substitution of καθαρίζων for καθαρίων, so far from being the unmeaning itacism it might seem at first sight, is a happy proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders,

S.V. proceed evil thoughts, fornications, thefts, murders.
Vulg. male cogitationes procedunt, adulteria, fornicationes, homicidia.

22. Thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness :

thefts : S.V. adulteries.
Vulg. Furta.

23. All these evil things come from within, and defile the man.

S. and they defile the man.

For verses 24-31 see S. Matthew, ch. xv., page 261.

24. ¶ And from thence He arose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into an house, and would have no man know it : but He could not be hid.

S.V. into the coasts, &c.
Vulg. Et inde surgens abiit in fines Tyri et Sidonis.

25. For a certain woman, whose young daughter had an unclean spirit, heard of Him, and came and fell at His feet :

S.V. But straightway a woman : S. came in and.
Vulg. Mulier enim statim ut audivit de eo, cujus filia habebat spiritum immundum, intravit.

26. The woman was a Greek, a Syrophenician by nation ; and she besought Him that He would cast forth the devil out of her daughter.

Vulg. Erat enim mulier gentilis, Syrophenissa genere.

27. But Jesus said unto her, Let the children first be filled : for it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs.

S.V. And He said unto her.
Vulg. Qui dixit illi : Sine priste saturari filios : non est enim bonum sumere panem filiorum, et mittere canibus.

28. And she answered and said unto Him, restoration of the true sense of a passage long obscured by the false reading." After giving the "overwhelming evidence" for καθαρίων, Scrivener continues, "Will anyone undertake to say what is meant by the last clause of the verse as it stands in the English Version, and as it must stand, so long as καθαρίων is read ? If, on the other hand, we follow Lachmann, Tregelles, Tischendorf, Westcott and Hort, we must take the Lord's words to end with ἐκπορεύεται, and regard καθαρίζων πάντα τὰ βρώματα as the Evangelist's comment on them : 'This He said, to make all things clean.' Compare Acts x. 15. This, and none other, seems to have been the meaning assigned to the passage by the Greek Fathers," &c.—SCRIVENER, Introduction, p. 506, ed. 1874.

McClellan retains the reading καθαρίων, and thus concludes his note in defence of it, "With all confidence, therefore, we retain the neut. καθαρίων, and construct it in apposition with the sentence : Things that enter into the mouth, &c., cannot pollute ; for the whole process of their passage through the body is one of decontamination."—MCCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 674.

Yes, Lord: yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs.

S. yet the dogs eat under the table of the.
Vulg. At illa respondit, et dixit illi: Ubique Domine, nam et catelli comedunt sub mensa de micis puerorum.

29. And He said unto her, For this saying go thy way; the devil is gone out of thy daughter.

30. And when she was come to her house, she found the devil gone out, and her daughter laid upon the bed.

S.V. she found her daughter laid upon the bed and the devil gone out.
Vulg. Et cum abisset domum suam, invenit puellam jacentem supra lectum, et demonium exisse.

31. ¶ And again, departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, He came unto the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis.

S.V. from the coasts of Tyre He came through Sidon unto the sea.
Vulg. Et iterum exiens de finibus Tyri, venit per Sidonem ad mare Galilee inter medios fines Decapoleos.

S. Mark alone records the following miracle.

32. And they bring unto Him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech;^a and they beseech Him to put His hand upon him.

S*. His hands.
Vulg. ut imponat illi manuum.

33. And He took him aside from the multitude, and put His fingers into his ears, and He spit, and touched his tongue;

34. And looking up to heaven, He sighed, and saith unto him, ΕΡΗΦΑΘΑ, that is, Be opened.

35. And straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain.

S.V. omit straightway: S. and straightway the string of his tongue.
Vulg. Et statim aperte sunt aures ejus, et solutum est vinculum lingue ejus, et loquebatur recte.

36. And He charged them that they should tell no man: but the more He charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it;

37. And were beyond measure astonished, saying, He hath done all things well: He maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak.

V. as He maketh.
Vulg. Et eo amplius admirabantur, dicentes: Bene omnia fecit: et surdos fecit audire, et mutos loqui.

S. Matthew (xv. 30, 31), in his account of this same visit of our Saviour to Decapolis, gives a general statement of His work, and says that He made the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to see, but he does not relate the healing of anyone in particular. S. Mark, on the other hand, says nothing about the great number that He healed, but selects one case for minute description. Of this he omits no one of the particulars. He relates how Jesus took the man aside from the multitude; how He put His fingers into his ears, and spat and touched his tongue; and how He looked up to heaven and sighed. He records the identical word that He used, with its translation into Greek, and how the man was instantly and perfectly cured. He relates how Jesus commanded the people not to make it known, and that they, from very gratitude and from the fullness of their hearts, published it all the more, and resounded His praise for the many mighty works that He had done.

From the words used¹ by S. Mark, καὶ τὸν ὀφθαλμὸν, it has been generally concluded by commentators that this man was not born deaf, but that he became so from some injury to the organs of hearing. If he were born deaf, the cure here wrought would be greater than appears on the surface of the narrative: for to heal a man who was born deaf, and to impart to him the whole knowledge of a language, would be a much greater miracle than to restore the diseased organs of hearing to a healthy condition, and at the same time convey the power of distinct utterance.

It may be that Jesus withdrew the deaf man from the confusion and distraction that often arise from the presence of a multitude to give greater opportunity for a devout faith in Him and in His power to spring up in the man's heart: for Jesus did not heal the bodies of those who came to Him and leave their souls in darkness and unbelief.

Jesus makes use of several external actions to effect a cure, not that these were necessary for Him, but as being significant to the people of His character. By putting His fingers into his ears, and by spitting and touching his tongue, He proved to them that every part of His Body could communicate a power which did not belong to human nature generally, ¹ Maldonatus, in Marc. vii. 32; vol. i. p. 585.

^a One that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech (καὶ τὸν ὀφθαλμὸν).—"The best commentators agree that it signifies, not one dumb from his birth, but one who had become so by accident: for otherwise he could not have spoken, unless we suppose the faculty of speech imparted by a direct miracle. This, indeed, I should not hesitate to suppose, were it necessary: but it is not. The word signifies one who has an impediment in his speech: now this might have arisen from what is called a hoes, or ulcer, producing a swelling; or from the tongue being bound by some membrane having become rigid. We say supposed. Similar expressions occur in the classical writers. Plutarch and Alexander Aph. (cited by Wets.) join the words καὶ τὸν ὀφθαλμὸν and ἀλαλῶς."—BLOOMFIELD'S 'Critical Digest,' S. Mark vii. 32; vol. ii. p. 61.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. vii. 32; vol. viii. p. 597.

and therefore that, though as Man He possessed a Body, He was not merely Man, but God as well as Man.¹

Jesus may have sighed at the sight of the misery and suffering which sin and the author of sin had entailed on the human race, and by looking up to heaven He may have indicated from whom alone help could be obtained.

Several explanations have been given of His command to the people not to make it known, and of their conduct on this occasion. That which is attended with the least difficulty is that the people saw through His motive in bidding them not to make it known; they saw that He forbade them, not because it was wrong for them who had received a benefit to make it known to others, but that it was more becoming in Him, who had conferred the blessing, to conceal it, and that they, in their gratitude, resolved to disobey Him and to publish the deed and to award the praise due to it, and in proportion as He wished to conceal it. The Evangelist evidently approves of the people's conduct as right, and worthy of imitation. Jesus thus shows Himself an example to those who confer a blessing on others, and the people are also an example to those who receive one.²

¹ Euthymius, in Marc. vii. 33; vol. iii. p. 105.

Theophylact, in Marc. vii. 33; vol. i. p. 208.

Maldonatus, in Marc. vii. 33; vol. i. p. 586.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. lxii. p. 16.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. vii. 33; vol. viii. p. 597.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iv. 4; vol. iii. p. 1219.

V. Bede, in Marc. vii. 36; vol. iii. p. 205.

Theophylact, in Marc. vii. 36; vol. i. p. 208.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxii. p. 17.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Marc. vii. 36; vol. viii. p. 598.

CHAPTER VIII.

[1. Christ feedeth the people miraculously: 10. refuseth to give a sign to the Pharisees: 14. admonisheth His disciples to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod: 22. giveth a blind man his sight: 27. acknowledgeth that He is the Christ, who should suffer and rise again: 34. and exhorteth to patience in persecution for the profession of the Gospel.]

[Vulg. Septem panibus paucisque pisciculis satiat quatuor hominum millia: discipulis a fermento phariseorum cavere jubet: cacum sensum curat: interrogatis apostolis quem Jesum esse dicerent, Petrus confitetur ipsum esse Christum: et paulo post Satanaz ab eo dicitur, quod increparet illum dum suam predicaret passionem: de tollenda cruce, et quod anima nihil debet esse carius.]

For verses 1-9 see S. Matthew, ch. xv., page 263.

1. In those days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called His disciples unto Him, and saith unto them,

S.V. being again great: S.V.A. He called His (S. the) disciples unto Him.
Vulg. In diebus illis iterum cum turba multa esset, nec haberent quod manducarent, convocatis discipulis, ait illis.

2. I have compassion on the multitude, because they have now been with Me three days, and have nothing to eat:

Vulg. quia ecce jam triduo suscipiunt me, nec habent quod manducent.

3. And if I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way: for divers of them came from far.

S.V. And divers of them: V. are from far.
Vulg. quidam enim ex eis de longe venerunt.

4. And His disciples answered Him, From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness?

S. And His disciples answered and said, From.
Vulg. Et responderunt ei discipuli sui: Unde illos quis poterit hic saturare panibus in solitudine?

5. And He asked them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven.

6. And He commanded the people to sit down on the ground: and He took the seven loaves, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave to His disciples to set before them; and they did set them before the people.

S.V. And He commandeth.
Vulg. Et praecepit turbas.

7. And they had a few small fishes: and He blessed, and commanded to set them also before them.

A. and He blessed them: S. and He blessed, and set them before them.
Vulg. Et habebant pisciculos paucos: et ipsos benedixit, et jussit apponi.

8. So they did eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets.

S. And all did eat: V. And they did eat.
Vulg. Et manducaverunt, et saturati sunt, et sustulerunt quod superaverat de fragmentis, septem sportas.

9. And they that had eaten were about four thousand: and He sent them away.

S. And they were four thousand: V. And they were about four thousand.
Vulg. Erant autem qui manducaverunt, quasi quatuor millia.

For verses 10-12 see S. Matthew, ch. xv., page 268.

10. ¶ And straightway He entered into a ship with His disciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha.

S*. And straightway Jesus entered: S.V. into the ship: V. Dalmanutha.
Vulg. Et statim ascendens navim cum discipulis suis, venit in partes Dalmanutha.

11. And the Pharisees came forth, and began to question with Him, seeking of Him a sign from heaven, tempting Him.

S. seeking of Him to see a sign.
Vulg. quærentes ab illo signum de cælo.

12. And He sighed deeply in His spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? verily I say unto you, There shall no sign be given unto this generation.

V. omits unto you.
Vulg. Amen dico vobis, si dabitur generationi isti signum.

For verses 13-21 see S. Matthew, ch. xvi., page 269.

13. And He left them, and entering into the ship again departed to the other side.

S. omits into the ship: A. into a ship.
Vulg. Et dimittens eos, ascendit iterum navim, et abiit trans fretum.

14. ¶ Now the disciples had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the ship with them more than one loaf.

15. And He charged them, saying, Take heed, beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod.

16. And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is because we have no bread.

S. V. omit saying: V. They have no bread.

Vulg. Et cogitabant ad alterutrum, dicentes: Quia panes non habemus.

17. And when Jesus knew it, He saith unto them, Why reason ye, because ye have no bread? perceive ye not yet, neither understand? have ye your heart yet hardened?

V. And when He knew it: S. V. have ye your heart hardened?

Vulg. Quocirca, ait illis: Jesus: Quid cogitatis, quia panes non habetis? nondum cognoscitis nec intelligitis: allicuius cibatum habetis cor vestrum?

18. Having eyes, see ye not? and having ears, hear ye not? and do ye not remember?

S. omits and before having ears.

Vulg. Oculos habentes non videtis? et aures habentes non auditis? nec recordamini.

19. When I brake the five loaves among five thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? They say unto Him, Twelve.

S. and how many.

Vulg. quot copulinos fragmentorum plenos sustulistis?

20. And when the seven among four thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? And they said, Seven.

S. And when the seven loaves: V. omits and before when: S. And they say:

V. And they say unto Him: Vulg. quando et septem panes in quatuor millia: quot sportas fragmentorum tulistis? Et dicunt ei: Septem.

21. And He said unto them, How is it that ye do not understand?

S. unto them, how ye not yet understand? A. unto them, How is it that ye do not yet understand?

Vulg. Et dicebat eis: quomodo nondum intelligitis?

S. Mark alone records the following miraculous cure.

22. ¶ And He cometh to Bethsaida; and they bring a blind man unto Him, and besought Him to touch him.

S. V. And they come.

Vulg. Eveniunt Bethsaidam.

23. And He took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; and when He had spit on his eyes, and put His hands upon him, He asked him if He saw ought.

A. and put His hands upon him: V. He asked him, Seest thou ought?

Vulg. et expuens in oculos ejus impositis manibus suis, interrogavit eum si quid videret.

24. And he looked up, and said, I see men as trees, walking.

S. V. A. I see men, because I see them as trees, walking.

Vulg. Et aspiciens, ait: Video homines velut arbores ambulantes.

25. After that He put His hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up: and he was restored, and saw every man clearly.

S. V. upon his eyes, and he saw and was restored, and saw everything clearly.

Vulg. Deinde iterum imposuit manus super oculos ejus; et cepit videre; et restitutus est ita ut clare videret omnia.

26. And He sent him away to his house, saying, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town.

S. omit, Go not into the town: S. V. saying, Go not even into the town:

S. V. omit nor tell it to any in the town.

Vulg. dicens: Vade in domum tuam: et si in vicum introieris, nemini dixeris.

Jesus was now come to Bethsaida, the city of Philip, Andrew, and Peter (John i. 44), where He had done many of His mighty works, and which still continued impenitent, and which He upbraids in the following words, "Woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes," &c. (S. Matt. xi. 21, 22). Two reasons have been given why Jesus led this blind man out of the town. Some¹ have supposed that it was in consequence of their impenitence that Jesus led the blind man out of Bethsaida, because they were unworthy to witness the miracle. The command which Jesus gave to the man after He had restored his sight, seems also rather to favour this interpretation. He sends him to his own home, which appears not to have been in Bethsaida, but bids him neither to go into the town, nor to tell it to any in the town. Others² have supposed that Jesus led this blind man away from the town for the same reason for which He took the man who was deaf and had an impediment in his speech, aside from the multitude (vii. 33), either because retirement was good for the man, as promoting the growth of faith in his heart, or because He Himself wished to pray to the Father in private.

Jesus heals this blind man by degrees, not instantly as on other occasions, but partially at first, and then perfectly. After Jesus had first put His hands on him he saw so dimly and imperfectly that he could only distinguish men from trees by their walking. It is probable that this man's restoration to sight was in proportion to his faith in Jesus, and in His power to heal him—that his faith at first was but small; that on receiving some relief it increased; and that along with his faith, his mental restoration to sight, his bodily restoration was also perfected.³

¹ Euthymius, in Marc. viii. 22; vol. iii. p. 109.

Theophylact, in Marc. viii. 22; vol. i. p. 211.

² Maldonatus, in Marc. viii. 23; vol. i. p. 599.

³ Euthymius, in Marc. viii. 23; vol. iii. p. 109.

Theophylact, in Marc. viii. 23; vol. i. p. 211.

For verses 27-30 see S. Matthew, ch. xvi., page 271.

27. ¶ And Jesus went out, and His disciples, into the towns of Cæsarea Philippi: and by the way He asked His disciples, saying unto them, Whom do men say that I am?

A. He asked the disciples.
Vulg. Et in via interrogabat discipulos suos.

28. And they answered, John the Baptist: but some say, Elias; and others, One of the prophets.

S.V. And they told Him, saying.
Vulg. Qui responderent illi, dicentes.

29. And He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Peter answereth and saith unto Him, Thou art the Christ.

S.V. And He asked them: V. omits and before Peter: S. the Christ, the Son of God.
Vulg. Tunc dicit illis: Vos vero quem me esse dicitis? Respondens Petrus, ait ei: Tu es Christus.

30. And He charged them that they should tell no man of Him.

For verses 31-38 and ix. 1 see S. Matthew, ch. xvi., page 279.

31. And He began to teach them, that the Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again.

32. And He spake that saying openly. And Peter took Him, and began to rebuke Him.

Vulg. Et palam verbum loquebatur.

33. But when He had turned about and looked on His disciples, He rebuked Peter, saying, Get thee behind Me, Satan: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men.

A. But when Jesus had turned about: S.V. and saith instead of saying.
Vulg. Qui conversus, et videns discipulos suos, comminatus est Petro, dicens.

34. ¶ And when He had called the people unto Him with His disciples also, He said unto them, Whosoever will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me.

35. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for My sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it.

S.V.A. omit the same.
—Vulg. Qui autem perdidit animam suam propter me et evangelium, salvam faciet eam.

36. For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?

A. For what shall it profit the man: S.V. For what profiteth it a man.
Vulg. Quid enim proderit homini, si lucretur mundum totum, et detrimentum anime sue faciat?

37. Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

S.V. For what giveth a man in exchange.
Vulg. Aut quid dabit homo commutationis pro anima sua?

38. Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of Me and of My words in this adulterous and sinful generation; of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when He cometh in the glory of His Father with the holy angels.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

The room of salt; and of Parvah.—"As there were three rooms between the middle Gate Corban, which was also called the Gate of the Women, and the more westward Gate Corban, which was also called the Gate Beth Mokadh—namely, two treasuries and a Levites' ward between the two; so there were three rooms also between the same middle Gate Corban and the gate more eastward, which was called the Gate Nitsots, and those were the room of the salt, the room of Parvah, and the room of the washers. The room of the salt was the most westward of the three, and joined to the Gate of the Women, and it was so called because they there laid up the salt for the use of the Temple: for howsoever salt and wine and oil and such things were sold in the Tabernæ for the use of particular persons' offerings, yet for the public offerings and service these things were stocked up at the public charge in several rooms appointed for them.

"The use of salt at the Temple was exceeding much, for nothing was laid on the altar unsalted, but only the wood, the blood, and the wine of the drink-offering. (Maimon, in issure Mizbeah, per. 5.) And how much salt might be spent upon all their sacrifices let anyone imagine, for this was the law, 'With all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt' (Levit. ii. 13). And they had not this way only for the spending of salt, but they also salted the skins of all the sacrifices when they had flayed them off: for the skins belonged to the priests as their fee. The course therefore of the priests, that was in serving, did still salt the skins of what sacrifices they offered that they might not be offensive, and kept them till the end of the week of their service; and on the eve of the Sabbath, towards night, they divided them to every one his share.

"The place where they salted and laid up the skins till that time was in the room of Parvah, which joined to this room of the salt on the east."—LIGHTFOOT on the Temple, ch. xxxi.; vol. i. p. 11023.

CHAPTER IX.

[2. Jesus is transfigured. 11. He instructeth His disciples concerning the coming of Elias: 14. casteth forth a dumb and deaf spirit: 30. foretelleth His Death and Resurrection: 33. exhorteth His disciples to humility: 38. bidding them not to prohibit such as be not against them, nor to give offence to any of the faithful.]

[Vulg. Transfigurato Iesu junguntur Moyses et Elias: dicit Elviam dum venerit, omnia restitutum: imo jam venisse, ne fuisse susceptum: surdum ac mutum spiritum ejicit, qui sola oratione et jejunio ejicitur: suam Passionem predicti: disputantes discipulos docet quis eorum sit major: de ejiciente demonium qui non sequebatur Iesum: de amputando manus, pedis, vel oculi scandalo.]

1. And He said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power.

Vulg. qui non gustabunt mortem, donec videant regnum Dei veniens in virtute.

For verses 2-8 see S. Matthew, ch. xvii., page 284.

2. ¶ And after six days Jesus taketh with Him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into an high mountain apart by themselves: and He was transfigured before them.

S.V. into an exceeding high mountain.

Vulg. et ducit illos in montem excelsum seorsum solos.

3. And His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them.

S.V. omit as snow.

Vulg. Et vestimenta ejus facta sunt splendentia, et candida nimis velut nix.

4. And there appeared unto them Elias with Moses: and they were talking with Jesus.

5. And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

6. For he wist not what to say; for they were sore afraid.

S.V. omit to answer.

Vulg. Non enim sciebat quid diceret: erant enim timore exterriti.

7. And there was a cloud that overshadowed them: and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, This is My beloved Son: hear Him.

S.V. And there was a voice out of the cloud, This is.

Vulg. Et venit vox de nube, dicens: Hic est Filius meus carissimus: audite illum.

8. And suddenly, when they had looked round about, they saw no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves.

For verses 9-13 see S. Matthew, ch. xvii., page 287.

9. And as they came down from the mountain, He charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of Man were risen from the dead.

Vulg. nisi cum Filius hominis a mortuis resurrexerit.

10. And they kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another what the rising from the dead should mean.

Vulg. Et verbum continuerunt apud se, conquiritentes quid esset, Cum a mortuis resurrexerit.

11. ¶ And they asked Him, saying, Why say the scribes that Elias must first come?

S. Why say the Pharisees and the scribes.

Vulg. Quid ergo dicunt pharisei et scribae.

12. And He answered and told them, Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things; and how it is written of the Son of Man, that He must suffer many things, and be set at nought.

S.V. And He told them (omit answered and): A. as it is written instead of and how it is written.

Vulg. Qui respondens, ait illis: Elias cum venerit primo, restituet omnia: et quomodo scriptum est.

13. But I say unto you, That Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him.

For verses 14-29 see S. Matthew, ch. xvii., page 289.

14. ¶ And when He came to His disciples, He saw a great multitude about them, and the scribes questioning with them.

S.V. And when they came to the disciples, they saw: S. (V.A.) questioning among themselves.*

Vulg. Et veniens ad discipulos suos, vidit turbam magnam circa eos, et scribas conquiritentes cum illis.

15. And straightway all the people, when they beheld Him, were greatly amazed, and running to Him saluted Him.

Vulg. Et confestim omnis populus videns Iesum, stup factus est, et expacerunt, et accurrerunt salutantes eum.

16. And He asked the scribes, What question ye with them?

Margin, among yourselves.

S.V. And He asked them: S.A. (V.) What question ye among yourselves?

Vulg. Et interrogavit eos: Quid inter vos conquiritis?

17. And one of the multitude answered and said, Master, I have brought unto Thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit;

S.V. omit and said.

Vulg. Et respondens unus de turba, dixit.

18. And whosoever he taketh him, he teareth him: and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth away: and I spake to Thy disciples that they should cast him out; and they could not.

Margin, dasheth him.

Vulg. Qui ubicunque eum apprehenderit, alidit illum.

19. He answereth him, and saith, O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him unto Me.

S.V.A. He answereth unto them.

Vulg. Qui respondens eis, dixit.

20. And they brought him unto Him: and when He saw him, straightway the spirit tare him; and he fell on the ground, and wallowed foaming.

Vulg. Et attulerunt eum. Et cum vidisset eum, statim spiritus conturbavit illum: et elisus in terram, volutabatur spumens.

21. And He asked his father, How long is it ago since this came unto him? And he said, Of a child.

22. And oftentimes it hath cast him into the fire, and into the waters, to destroy him: but if Thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us.

23. Jesus said unto him, If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth.

S.V. If thou canst (omit bel. xvi).

Vulg. Iesus autem ait illi: Si potes credere,

24. And straightway the father of the child cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief.

And straightway: S.V. omit; straightway: S.V. omit; And.

S.V.A. omit with tears: S.V.A. omit Lord.

Vulg. Et continuo exclamans pater pueri, cum lacrymis ait: Domine, crede mihi: Domine, adjuva incredulitatem meam.

1.

25. When Jesus saw that the people came running together, He rebuked the foul spirit, saying unto him, Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him.

26. And the spirit cried, and rent him sore, and came out of him: and he was as one dead; insomuch that many said, He is dead.

27. But Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up; and he arose.

28. And when He was come into the house, His disciples asked Him privately, Why could not we cast him out?

29. And He said unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting.

S.V. V. omit and fasting.

Vulg. Hoc genus in nullo potest exire, nisi in oratione et jejuniis.

For verses 30-32 see S. Matthew, ch. xvii., page 291.

30. ¶ And they departed thence, and passed through Galilee; and He would not that any man should know it.

31. For He taught His disciples, and said unto them, The Son of Man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill Him; and after that He is killed, He shall rise the third day.

V. omits unto them.

Vulg. Docuit autem discipulos suos, et dixit illis: Quoniam Filius hominis traditur in manus hominum, et occidetur eum, et occisus tertio die resurget.

32. But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask Him.

For verses 33-37 see S. Matthew, ch. xviii., page 297.

33. ¶ And He came to Capernaum: and being in the house He asked them, What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?

S.V. And they came to Capernaum: S.V. omit among yourselves.

Vulg. Et venerunt Capernaum. Qui cum domi essent, interrogabat eos: Quid in via tractabatis?

34. But they held their peace: for by the way they had disputed among themselves, who should be the greatest.

A. omits by the way.

Vulg. siquidem in via inter se disputaverant, quis eorum major esset.

35. And He sat down, and called the twelve, and saith unto them, If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all.

36. And He took a child, and set him in the midst of them : and when He had taken him in His arms, He said unto them, Vulg. quem cum complexus esset, ait illis.

37. Whosoever shall receive one of such children in My name, receiveth Me : and whosoever shall receive Me, receiveth not Me, but Him that sent Me.

S. one of these children : S. and whosoever receiveth Me.
Vulg. unum ex hujusmodi pueris . . . et quicumque me susceperit.

JESUS EXHORTS HIS DISCIPLES TO FORBEARANCE.

S. MARK ix. 38-41.

S. LUKE ix. 49, 50.

38 And John answered Him, saying,
Master, we saw one casting out devils
in Thy name,

and he followeth not us :

and we forbid him,

because he followeth not us.

39 But Jesus said, Forbid him not :
for there is no man which shall do a miracle in My name, that can lightly speak evil of Me.

40 For he that is not against us is on our part.

41 For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in My name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward.

49 And John answered and said,
Master, we saw one casting out devils
in Thy name ;

and we forbid him,

because he followeth not with us.

50 And Jesus said unto him, Forbid him not :

for he that is not against us is for us.

38. ¶ And John answered Him, saying, Master, we saw one casting out devils in Thy name, and he followeth not us ; and we forbid him, because he followeth not us.

And John answered Him, saying : S.V. John said unto Him.
S.V. omit and he followeth not us : S.V. because he followed not us.
Vulg. Respondit illi Joannes, dicens . . . qui non sequitur nos.

39. But Jesus said, Forbid him not : for there is no man which shall do a miracle in My name, that can lightly speak evil of Me.

40. For he that is not against us is on our part.

A. against you, is on your part.
Vulg. qui enim non est adversum vos, pro vobis est.

41. For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in My name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward.

S.V. in the name, that ye belong to Christ.
Vulg. in nomine meo, quia Christi estis.

The difficulty of connecting John's question with the words preceding it is shown by the variety of ways in which it has been proposed to do it. Induced by this and by the fact that S. Matthew omits John's question and our Saviour's answer altogether, though he gives the words immediately before and after them, some¹ have supposed that John did not propose his question at this time, but on some other occasion, as, for instance, when the seventy returned from their mission of preaching and working miracles. The expression "John answered Him" is considered no objection to this, because the word answered (ἀπεκρίθη) is sometimes used in the New Testament not as a reply to something that has been said before, but to introduce an entirely new subject, as in Matt. xi. 25 ; xxii. 1.

It may be that it was the mention of the blessing which those should obtain who should receive even a little child in the name of Jesus, that prompted John to ask whether they had done right in forbidding one casting out devils in His name because he followed not them. There is no reason to suppose that the disciples were actuated by any motives of personal jealousy in forbidding him, but that they acted with a sincere desire for His honour and glory. Jesus had publicly given to His followers, the Twelve and the Seventy, the office of preaching His kingdom and casting out devils. For others to assume this appeared to them an infringement on His authority, and they wished for His direction as to the future.

Two explanations have been given to the words "he followeth not us." Some² have supposed that the man here represented as casting out devils in the name of Jesus may have been a real believer in Him as the Messiah, but disinclined to give up all and follow Him as the Apostles and other disciples had done. Many disciples of Jesus there were who, from fear and other motives, did not openly confess

¹ Maldonatus, in Marc. ix. 38 ; vol. i. p. 598.

² S. Ambrose, in Luc. ix. 49, 50 ; vol. ii. p. 1705.

Euthymius, in Marc. ix. 38 ; vol. iii. p. 127.

Maldonatus, in Marc. ix. 38 ; vol. i. p. 599.

Him. Such, we know, were Nicodemus, Joseph of Arimathea, and others. They think that neither the words of John nor those of Jesus imply that this man was not a disciple or a believer in Jesus as the Messiah, but that he did not imitate the Twelve in their close and constant attendance upon Him. Others¹ have held that this man was not a disciple of Jesus, or only so far a disciple as that he was not an opponent; that, seeing the power which the name of Jesus had to cast out devils, he used it for that purpose and used it successfully and beneficially to men.

Jesus gives two reasons why they should not forbid him. 1. In performing miracles and casting out devils in His name this man was not acting in opposition to Him or to His disciples. He was doing the same work as they, though in an imperfect manner. Though he did not follow them, he was gathering with them, inasmuch as he was destroying the power of Satan. 2. If to give even a cup of cold water from respect to the name of Jesus was praiseworthy and should receive a reward, so likewise to cast out devils was also to do well, and should likewise receive a reward. He who gave a cup of cold water, and he who cast out devils, should both receive a reward, but a reward differing in the same proportion, as to cast out a devil is a greater blessing to man than to allay his thirst.

In these words,² "Forbid him not," our Saviour does not lend countenance to the author of schism and disunion in the Church, nor give immunity to the invader of the priestly office. To cast out devils was not confined to the apostolical or priestly office: it was given to the Twelve in common with the Seventy and others, and it was in no sense a priestly function. The lesson which our Saviour's words teach is, not to thwart or hinder the action of any man so far as it is good, on the ground that the rest of his conduct is not equally good. So far as his action is good, he is doing the work of Christ and His disciples, and shall receive a suitable reward. The disciples had reproofed the part of this man's conduct which did not deserve reproof. They had forbidden him to do that which showed great faith in the power of Jesus, and by which he weakened the power of Satan and benefited mankind. What was deserving of reproof in him was his lack of sufficient faith to become the disciple of Jesus, and to take up his cross and follow Him.

For verses 42-50 see S. Matthew, ch. xviii., page 299.

42. And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in Me, it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea.

S.V. omit in Me.

Vulg. Et quisquise scandalizaverit unum ex his pusillis credentibus in me.

43. And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched:

Margin, cause thee to offend.

to go: S.V. to enter.

Vulg. quam duas manus habentem ire in gehennam, in ignem inextinguibilem.

44. Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.^a

S.V. omit this verse.

Vulg. Ubi vermis eorum non moritur, et ignis non extinguatur.

45. And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched:

Margin, cause thee to offend.

S. to enter maimed or halt into life: S.V. omit into the fire that never shall be quenched.

Vulg. melius est tibi pedem introire in vitam eternam, quam duos pedes habentem mitti in gehennam ignis inextinguibilis.

46. Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.^a

S.V. omit this verse.

Vulg. Ubi vermis eorum non moritur, et ignis non extinguatur.

47. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire:

Margin, cause thee to offend.

S.V. into hell (omit fire).

Vulg. mitti in gehennam ignis.

48. Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

49. For every one shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt.^b

S.V. omit and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt.

Vulg. Omnis enim igne salietur, et omnis victima sale salietur.

50. Salt is good: but if the salt have lost its saltiness, wherewith will ye season it? Have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another.

¹ S. Augustine, de unico Bapt. cont. Petil. 12; vol. ix. p. 601.

V. Bede, in Marc. ix. 38; vol. iii. p. 225.

Theophylact, in Marc. ix. 38; vol. i. p. 220.

^a "Vv. 44, 46—omittit Tischendorf, uncinis includit Trengelles."—SCRIVENER, N. T., 1877.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evangel. lib. iv. 5, 6; vol. iii. p. 1219.

^b See Introductory Note.

CHAPTER X.

[2. Christ disputeth with the Pharisees touching divorce: 13. Blesseth the children that are brought unto Him: 17. reproveth a rich man how he may inherit life everlasting: 23. telleth His disciples of the danger of riches: 28. promiseth rewards to them that forsake any thing for the gospel: 32. foretelleth His death and resurrection: 35. biddeth the two ambitious suitors to think rather of suffering with Him: 46. and restoreth to Bartimeus his sight.]

[Vulg. Nullo modo dimittendam uxorem ostricti aliam ducendo: parvulos complexus, benedixit eis: dives qui precepta a juvenatib. observat, non amplectitur. Christi consilium de omnibus dividendis: qui referent pramti qui omnia relinquunt: rursus suam pradiat passionem: occasione ambitiosis aliorum Zebedi docet discipulos quod non ostensione d. mini, sed officio ministerii debeant esse majores: Bartimeum cecum sanat.]

For verse 1 see S. Matthew, ch. xix., page 311.

1. And He arose from thence, and cometh into the coasts of Judæa by the farther side of Jordan: and the people resort unto Him again; and, as He was wont, He taught them again.

by the farther side: S.V. and the farther side.
Vulg. Et inde exurgens venit in fines Judææ ultra Jordanem.

For verses 2-12 see S. Matthew, ch. xix., page 311.

2. ¶ And the Pharisees came to Him, and asked Him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting Him.

V.A. And Pharisees.

3. And He answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you?

4. And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorce, and to put her away.

5. And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept.

S.V. And Jesus said.
Vulg. Quibus respondens Jesus, ait.

6. But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female.

God made: S.V. He made.
Vulg. masculinum et feminam fecit eos Deus.

7. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife;

S. and his mother: S.V. omit and cleave to his wife.
Vulg. Propter hoc relinquit homo patrem suum et matrem, et adhaerebit ad uxorem suam.

8. And they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh.

Vulg. Et erunt duo in carne una.

9. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

10. And in the house His disciples asked Him again of the same matter:

S.V. the disciples: S.V.A. of this matter.
Vulg. discipuli ejus.

11. And He saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her.

12. And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery.

S.V. And if she shall put away her husband and marry another.
Vulg. Et si uxor dimiserit virum suum, et alii nupserit, moechatur.

For verses 13-16 see S. Matthew, ch. xix., page 315.

13. ¶ And they brought young children to Him, that He should touch them: and His disciples rebuked those that brought them.

S.V.A. and the disciples: S.V. rebuked them, instead of rebuked those that brought them.
Vulg. discipuli autem comminabantur offerentibus.

14. But when Jesus saw it, He was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.

V. omits and before forbid.
Vulg. Quos cum videret Jesus, indigne tulit, et ait illis: Sinite parvulos venire ad me, et ne prohibueritis eos.

15. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein.

16. And He took them up in His arms, put His hands upon them, and blessed them.

S.V. In His arms, and blessed them, and put His hands upon them.

For verses 17-22 see S. Matthew, ch. xix., page 316.

17. ¶ And when He was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to Him, and asked Him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?

A. Into the way, behold, a certain rich man came running.

18. And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou Me good? there is none good but one, that is, God.

19. Now knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother.

S. omits Do not commit adultery: S2. reads Do not kill, Do not commit adultery: V*. omits Defraud not: S*. and thy mother.*

20. And he answered and said unto Him, Master, all these have I observed from my youth.

*S. And he said unto Him.
Vulg. At ille respondens, ait illi.*

21. Then Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow Me.

*A. Then He beholding him: S. Yet one thing: S.V. omit take up the cross.
Vulg. Jesus autem intuitus eum, dilexit eum, et dixit ei: Unum tibi deest: omits take up the cross.*

22. And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved: for he had great possessions.

For verses 23-31 see S. Matthew, ch. xix., page 318.

23. ¶ And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto His disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

S. and said.

24. And the disciples were astonished at His words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!

*A. But He answereth and: S.V. omit for them that trust in riches.
Vulg. At Jesus rursus respondens ait illis: Filii, quam difficile est, confidentes in pecuniis, in regnum Dei introire!*

25. It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

*to go: S.V.A. to enter.
Vulg. Facilius est, camelum per foramen acus transire, quam divitem intrare in regnum Dei.*

26. And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, Who then can be saved?

*S.V. saying unto Him, Who.
Vulg. dicentes ad semetipsos: Qui potest salvus fieri?*

27. And Jesus looking upon them saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God: for with God all things are possible.

S.V. omit And before Jesus: S. said.
Vulg. Et intuens illos Jesus, ait.*

28. ¶ Then Peter began to say unto Him, Lo, we have left all, and have followed Thee.

S.V.A. omit Then: S. and have followed Thee, what shall we have therefore?

Vulg. Et cepit ei Petrus dicere: Ecce nos dimisimus omnia, et secuti sumus te.

29. And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for My sake, and the gospel's,

And Jesus, &c.: S. Jesus said unto him, Verily: V. Jesus said, Verily: V. or mother, or father: S.V. omit or wife: S. for the gospel omits my sake and).*

Vulg. Respondens Jesus, ait: Amen dico vobis: Nemo est, qui reliquerit domum, aut fratres, aut sorores, aut patrem, aut matrem, aut filios, aut agros, propter me et propter evangelium.

30. But he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life.

S. omits houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers (S*.A. read mother), and children, and lands, with persecutions.
Vulg. domos, et fratres et sorores, et matres, et filios, et agros cum persecutionibus.*

31. But many that are first shall be last; and the last first.

For verses 32-34 see S. Matthew, ch. xx., page 326.

32. ¶ And they were in the way going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them: and they were amazed; and as they followed, they were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen unto Him,

33. Saying, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of Man shall be delivered unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes; and they shall condemn Him to death, and shall deliver Him to the Gentiles:

S. omits and unto the scribes.
Vulg. Et filius hominis tradetur principibus sacerdotum, et scribis et senioribus.*

34. And they shall mock Him, and shall scourge Him, and shall spit upon Him, and shall kill Him: and the third day He shall rise again.

*S.V. and shall spit upon Him, and shall scourge Him.
Vulg. Et illudent ei, et conspuent eum, et flagellabunt eum, et interficient eum.*

For verses 35-45 see S. Matthew, ch. xx., page 327.

35. ¶ And James and John, the sons of Zebedee, come unto Him, saying, Master, we would that Thou shouldest do for us whatsoever we shall desire.

V. the two sons: S. saying unto Him: S2.V. whatsoever we shall ask of Thee.
Vulg. Et accedunt ad eum Iacobus et Ioannes filii Zebedei, dicentes: Magister, volumus, ut quodcumque petierimus, facias nobis.

36. And He said unto them, What would ye that I should do for you?

37. They said unto Him, Grant unto us that we may sit, one on Thy right hand, and the other on Thy left hand, in Thy glory.

35-37. S². Master, we would that we may sit one on Thy right (omit that Thou shouldest Grant unto us).

38. But Jesus said unto them, Ye know not what ye ask: can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?

and be baptized: S.V. or be baptized.
Vulg. potestis bibere calicem, quem ego bibo; aut baptismo, quo ego baptizor, baptizari?

39. And they said unto Him, We can. And Jesus said unto them, Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of; and with the baptism that I am baptized withal shall ye be baptized:

S.V. omit indeed.
Vulg. Calicem quidem, quem ego bibo, bibetis.

40. But to sit on My right hand and on My left hand is not Mine to give; but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared.

S.V. or on My left hand: S. is prepared of My Father.
Vulg. sedere autem ad dextram meam vel ad sinistram, non est meum dare vobis, sed quibus paratum est.

41. And when the ten heard it, they began to be much displeased with James and John.

A. they were much displeased with the two brethren.
Vulg. Et audientes decem, ceperunt indignari de Iacobo et Ioanne.

42. But Jesus called them to Him, and saith unto them, Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them.

Margin, think good.
But Jesus: S.V. And Jesus:—and their great ones: S. and the kings.
Vulg. Iesus aurem vocans eos, ait illis: Scitis quia hi, qui videntur principari gentibus, dominantur eis: et principes eorum potestatem habent ipsorum.

43. But so shall it not be among you: but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister:

S. But so is it not among you.
Vulg. Non ita est autem in vobis.

44. And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all.

of you: S.V. among you.
Vulg. Et quicumque voluerit in vobis primus esse, erit omnium servus.

45. For even the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many.

Vulg. et daret animam suam redemptionem pro multis.

For verses 46-52 see S. Matthew, ch. xx., page 329.

46. ¶ And they came to Jericho: and as He went out of Jericho with His disciples and a great number of people, blind Bartimæus, the son of Timæus, sat by the highway side begging.

S.V. Bartimeus, the son of Timeus, blind and a beggar (V. a blind beggar), sat by the highway side.
Vulg. filius Timæi, Bartimeus cæcus, sedebat iuxta viam mendicans.

47. And when he heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, and say, Jesus, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

48. And many charged him that he should hold his peace: but he cried the more a great deal, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

49. And Jesus stood still, and commanded him to be called. And they call the blind man, saying unto him, Be of good comfort, rise; He calleth thee.

S.V. and commanded, Call him.
Vulg. Et stans Iesus precepit illum vocari.

50. And he, casting away his garment, rose, and came to Jesus.

rose: S.V. sprang up.
Vulg. Qui projecto vestimento suo exiliens, venit ad eum.

51. And Jesus answered and said unto him, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? The blind man said unto Him, Lord, that I might receive my sight.

Vulg. Rabbuni, ut videam.

52. And Jesus said unto him, Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole. And immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way.

Margin, saved thee.
S.V. A. and followed Him in the way.
Vulg. Vade, fides tua te saluum fecit.

CHAPTER XL.

[1. Christ rideth with triumph into Jerusalem: 12. curseth the fruitless leafy tree: 15. purgeth the Temple: 20. exhorteth His disciples to steadfastness of faith, and to forgive their enemies: 27. and defendeth the lawfulness of His actions, by the witness of John, who was a man sent of God.]

[Vulg. Super pullum asinum cum honore Ierusalem ingreditur: sicum moluendo arfacit: euntes ac vendentes de templo egredit: efficaciam fiducie in Deum ostendit, dicens fratri remittenda quæ in nos commisit: scribis non dicit quæ potestate hac faciat, eo quod nec illi responderent ad propositum de Iohannis baptismo questionem.]

For verses 1-6 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 336.

1. And when they came nigh to Jerusalem, unto Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount of Olives, He sendeth forth two of His disciples,

A. to Jerusalem and to Bethphage.
Vulg. Et cum appropinquarent Ierosolymæ et Bethanie ad montem Olivarum.

2. And saith unto them, Go your way into the village over against you: and as soon as ye be entered into it, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon never man sat; loose him, and bring him.

S. omits over against you: S.V.A. whereon never man yet sat.
Vulg. Ite in castellum, quod contra vos est, et statim introeuntes illuc, invenietis pullum ligatum, super quem nemo adhuc hominum sedit.

3. And if any man say unto you, Why do ye this? say ye that the Lord hath need of him; and straightway he will send him hither.

S.V.A. he sendeth him again (A. omits again) hither.
Vulg. et continuo illum dimittet huc.

4. And they went their way, and found the colt tied by the door without in a place where two ways met; and they loose him.

V. a colt tied by a door without; in a place where two ways met.
Vulg. Et abeuntes invenerunt pullum ligatum ante januam foris in bivio.

5. And certain of them that stood there said unto them, What do ye, loosing the colt?

6. And they said unto them even as Jesus had commanded: and they let him go.

S.V. as Jesus had said.
Vulg. sicut præceperat illis Iesus.

For verses 7-11 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 339.

7. And they brought the colt to Jesus, and cast their garments on him; and He sat upon him.

V. and they bring: S. and they set Him upon him.
Vulg. Et duxerunt pullum ad Iesum: et inponunt illi vestimenta sua, et sedit super eum.

8. And many spread their garments in the way: and others cut down branches off the trees, and strawed them in the way.

S.V. and others spread branches, which they had cut out of the fields.

9. And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna; Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord:

S.V. omit saying.
Vulg. clamabant, dicentes.

10. Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest.

A. And blessed: S.V. omit in the name of the Lord.
Vulg. Benedictum quod venit regnum patris nostri David; Hosanna in excelsis.

11. And Jesus entered into Jerusalem, and into the Temple: and when He had looked round about upon all things, and now the eventide was come, He went out unto Bethany with the twelve.

S.V. And He entered into Jerusalem into the Temple.
Vulg. Et introivit Ierosolymam in templum.

For verses 12-14 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 344.

12. ¶ And on the morrow, when they were come from Bethany, He was hungry:

13. And seeing a fig tree afar off having leaves, He came, if haply He might find any thing thereon: and when He came to it, He found nothing but leaves; for the time of figs was not yet.

14. And Jesus answered and said unto it, No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever. And His disciples heard it.

S.V. A. And He answered.
Vulg. Et respondens dixit ei.

For verses 15-19 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 342.

15. ¶ And they come to Jerusalem: and Jesus went into the Temple, and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the Temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves ;

S.V. and He went : A. that sold and bought therein.
Vulg. et cum introisset in templum, et ut ejicere vendentes et ementes in templo.

16. And would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the Temple.

17. And He taught, saying unto them, Is it not written,

"My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer ?

But ye have made it a den of thieves."

Margin, an house of prayer for all nations.
S.V. and said : V. omits unto them.

18. And the scribes and chief priests heard it, and sought how they might destroy Him : for they feared Him, because all the people was astonished at His doctrine.

S.V.A. the chief priests and the scribes.
Vulg. Quo audito principes sacerdotum et scribe querelantur quomodo eum perderent.

19. And when even was come, He went out of the city.

V.A. they went out.
Vulg. Et cum vespera facta esset, egrediebatur de civitate.

For verses 20-26 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 344.

20. ¶ And in the morning, as they passed by, they saw the fig tree dried up from the roots.

S*. And in the morning He passed by, and they saw.
Vulg. Et cum mane transirent, viderunt ficum.

21. And Peter calling to remembrance saith unto Him, Master, behold, the fig tree which Thou cursedst is withered away.

Vulg. Et recordatus Petrus, dixit ei.

22. And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God.

Margin, Have the faith of God.
Vulg. Habete fidem Dei.

23. For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea ; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass ; he shall have whatsoever he saith.

22-23. S. If you have faith in God, verily I say unto you : V. omits For : S.V. he shall have it come ? whatsoever he saith.

24. Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.

S.V. What things soever ye pray and desire.
Vulg. omnia quaecumque orantes petitis.

25. And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any : that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses.

26. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.

S.V. omit this verse.
Vulg. Quod si vos non dimiseritis : nec Pater vester, qui in caelis est, dimittet vobis peccata vestra.

For verses 27-33 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 346.

27. ¶ And they come again to Jerusalem : and as He was walking in the Temple, there came to Him the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders,

28. And say unto Him, By what authority doest Thou these things ? and who gave Thee this authority to do these things ?

S.V. and said unto Him : S.V. or who gave Thee.
Vulg. Et dicunt ei : In qua potestate haec facis ? et quis dedit tibi ?

29. And Jesus answered and said unto them, I will also ask of you one question, and answer Me, and I will tell you by what authority I do these things.

Margin, one thing.
S.V. and Jesus said unto them.
Vulg. Jesus autem respondens, ait illis : Interrogabo vos et ego unum verbum.

30. The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men ? answer Me.

S. The baptism of John, whence was it ? from heaven or of men ?
Vulg. Baptismus Iohannis, de caelo erat, an ex hominibus ?

31. And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven ; He will say, Why then did ye not believe him ?

32. But if we shall say, Of men ; they feared the people : for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed.

S.V. But should we say, Of men ; they feared : S*. omits indeed.
Vulg. Si dixerimus, Ex hominibus, timeamus populum : omnes enim habebant Iohannem quia vere propheta esset.

33. And they answered and said unto Jesus, We cannot tell. And Jesus answering saith unto them, Neither do I tell you by what authority I do these things.

S.V.A. and say unto Jesus : S.V. omit answering.
Vulg. Et respondentes dicunt Iesu : Nescimus. Et respondens Iesus ait illis.

CHAPTER XII.

[1. In a parable of the vineyard let out to unthankful husbandmen, Christ foretelleth the reprobation of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. 13. He rebuketh the scribes of the Pharisees and Herodians about paying tribute to Cæsar: 18. convinceth the error of the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection: 28. rebuketh the scribes, who questioned of the first commandment: 35. refuteth the opinion that the scribes held of Christ: 38. bidding the people to beware of their ambition and hypocrisy: 41. and commendeth the poor widow for her two mites, above all.]

[Vulg. Parabola mercatoris vineæ agricolis locata, qui servos ac filium patrifamilias occiderant: tentatur a pharisæis de censu Cæsari solvendo: et a sadducæis de resurrectione: interrogatur a scribis de primo mandato: ipse vero rogat quomodo scribæ dicant Christum filium esse David, docens ab ipsis ceterulum: viduam laudat ob duo minuta in gazophylacium missa.]

For verses 1-12 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 348.

1. And He began to speak unto them by parables. A certain man planted a vineyard, and set an hedge about it, and digged a place for the winefat, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country.

Vulg. Vineam pastinavit homo, et circumdedit sepem, et fodit lacum, et addificavit turrin, et locavit eam agricolis, et peregre profectus est.

2. And at the season he sent to the husbandmen a servant, that he might receive from the husbandmen of the fruit of the vineyard.

S. V. of the fruits.

Vulg. ut ab agricolis acciperet de fructu vineæ.

3. And they caught him, and beat him, and sent him away empty.

4. And again he sent unto them another servant; and at him they cast stones, and wounded him in the head, and sent him away shamefully handed.

S. V. omits servant: S. V. omits and at him they cast stones: S. V. and they wounded him in the head, and entreated him shamefully.

Vulg. Et iterum misit ad illos alium servum: et illum in capite vulneravit, et contumelias affecerunt.

5. And again he sent another; and him they killed, and many others; beating some, and killing some.

S. V. omits again.

Vulg. Et rursus alium misit.

6. Having yet therefore one son, his well-beloved, he sent him also last unto them, saying, They will reverence my son.

S. V. He had yet one well-beloved son: he sent him last unto them.

Vulg. Adhuc ergo unum habens filium carissimum: et illum misit ad eos novissimum.

7. But those husbandmen said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be ours.

8. And they took him, and killed him, and cast him out of the vineyard.

9. What shall therefore the lord of the vineyard do? he will come and destroy the husbandmen, and will give the vineyard unto others.

V. omits therefore.

Vulg. Quid ergo faciet Dominus vineæ?

10. And have ye not read this scripture;

“The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner:

11. This was the Lord’s doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?”

12. And they sought to lay hold on Him, but feared the people: for they knew that He had spoken the parable against them: and they left Him, and went their way.

For verses 13-17 see S. Matthew, ch. xxii., page 354.

13. ¶ And they send unto Him certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians, to catch Him in His words.

Vulg. ut eum caperent in verbo.

14. And when they were come, they say unto Him, Master, we know that Thou art true, and carest for no man: for Thou regardest not the person of men, but teachest the way of God in truth: Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not?

Vulg. Licet dari tributum Cæsari, an non dabimus?

15. Shall we give, or shall we not give? But He, knowing their hypocrisy, said unto them,

Why tempt ye Me? bring Me a penny, that I may see it.

knowing: S^a, seeing; S^a, bring Me a penny hither.
Vulg. Qui sciens versutiam illorum, ait illis: Quid me tentatis? Afferte mihi denarium ut videam.

16. And they brought it. And He saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? And they said unto Him, Cæsar's.

And they said: A. They say.
Vulg. Dicunt ei.

17. And Jesus answering said unto them, Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. And they marvelled at Him.

S.V. omit answering: V. omits unto them.
Vulg. Respondens autem Iesus dixit illis: Reddite igitur quæ sunt Cæsaris, Cæsari: et quæ sunt Dei, Deo.

For verses 18-27 see S. Matthew, ch. xxii., page 356.

18 ¶ Then come unto Him the Sadducees, which say there is no resurrection; and they asked Him, saying,

19. Master, Moses wrote unto us, If a man's brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

V. and leave no child: V.V. should take the wife.
Vulg. Ut si cuius frater mortuus fuerit, et dimiserit uxorem, et filios non reliquerit, accipiat frater ejus uxorem ipsius.

20. Now there were seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and dying left no seed.

S.V. A. omit Now.
Vulg. Septem ergo fratres erant.

21. And the second took her, and died, neither left he any seed: and the third likewise.

neither left he any seed: S.V. and left no any seed.
Vulg. et nec iste reliquit semen.

22. And the seven had her, and left no seed: last of all the woman died also.

A. And the seven had her likewise, and left no seed: S.V. And the seven left no seed.
Vulg. Et acceperunt eam similiter septem: et non reliquerunt semen.

23. In the resurrection therefore, when they shall rise, whose wife shall she be of them? for the seven had her to wife.

S.V. omit therefore: S.V. omit when they shall rise.
Vulg. In resurrectione ergo cum resurrexerint, cujus de his erit uxor?

24. And Jesus answering said unto them, Do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the scriptures, neither the power of God?

And Jesus, &c.: S.V. Jesus said unto them.
Vulg. Et respondens Iesus, ait illis.

25. For when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels which are in heaven.

S. but are as angels in heaven.

26. And as touching the dead, that they rise: have ye not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake unto him, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?

Vulg. non legis in libro Moysi, super rubum quomodo dixerit illi Deus, iniquens.

27. He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living: ye therefore do greatly err.

S.V. A. but of the living (omit the God): S.V. omit therefore.
Vulg. Non est Deus mortuorum, sed vivorum. Vos ergo multum erratis.

For verses 28-34 see S. Matthew, ch. xxii., page 358.

28. ¶ And one of the scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that He had answered them well, asked Him, Which is the first commandment of all?

perceiving: S^a, seeing.
Vulg. Et videns quoniam bene illis responderit, interrogavit eum quod esset primum omnium mandatum.

29. And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord:

S.V. Jesus answered, The first is, Hear, O Israel.
Vulg. Quia primum omnium mandatum est.

30. And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment.

A. and with all thy mind, and with all thy soul: S.V. omit this is the first commandment.

Vulg. Et diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo, et ex tota anima tua, et ex tota mente tua, et ex tota virtute tua. Hoc est primum mandatum.

31. And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.

S.V. The second is this: S. but there is none.
Vulg. Secundum autem simile est illi: Diliges proximum tuum tanquam teipsum. Majus horum aliud mandatum non est.

32. And the scribe said unto Him, Well, Master, Thou hast said the truth: for there is one God; and there is none other but He:

V. omits And: S.V. A. for He is One (omit God), and there.
Vulg. Et ait illi scriba: Bene, magister, in veritate dixisti, quia unus est Deus, et non est alius præter eum.

33. And to love Him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbour as himself, is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices.

S. with all thy heart; S.V. omit with all the soul; S*. and to love thy neighbour.
Vulg. Et ut diligatur ex toto corde, et ex toto intellectu, et ex tota anima, et ex tota fortitudine; et diligere proximum tanquam seipsum.

34. And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, He said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. And no man after that durst ask Him any question.

For verses 35-37 see S. Matthew, ch. xxii., page 360.

35. ¶ And Jesus answered and said, while He taught in the Temple, How say the scribes that Christ is the Son of David?

36. For David himself said by the Holy Ghost, The LORD said to my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand, till I make Thine enemies Thy footstool.

S.V. omit for. Thy footstool; V. under Thy feet.
Vulg. Ipse cum David dixit in Spiritu Sancto: Dixit Dominus Domino meo, Sede a dextris meis, donec ponam inimicos tuos scabellum pedum tuorum.

37. David therefore himself calleth Him Lord; and whence is He then His Son? And the common people heard Him gladly.

S.V. omit therefore; S*. and how is He.
Vulg. Ipse ergo David dixit eum Dominum, et unde est filius ejus?

For verses 38-40 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiii., page 363.

38. ¶ And He said unto them in His doctrine, Beware of the scribes, which love to go in long clothing, and love salutations in the market-places,

S.V. omit them.
Vulg. Et docet eis in doctrina sua: Cavete a scribis, qui volunt in stolis ambulare, et salutari in foro.

39. And the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts:

Vulg. Et in primis cathedris sedere in synagogis, et primos discubitus in cenis.

40. Which devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: these shall receive greater damnation.

Vulg. Qui devorant domos viduarum sub obtentu prolixæ orationis: hi accipient prolixius judicium.

THE WIDOW'S MITE.

S. MARK xii. 41-44.

S. LUKE xxi. 1-4.

- 41 And Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury: and many that were rich cast in much.
- 42 And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing.
- 43 And He called unto Him His disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury:
- 44 for all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.

- 1 And He looked up, and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury.
- 2 And He saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites.
- 3 And He said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all:
- 4 for all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God: but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had.

41. ¶ And Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury: and many that were rich cast in much.

S.V. And He sat.
Vulg. Et sedens Jesus contra gazophylacium.

42. And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing.^a

43. And He called unto Him His disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you,

^a Two mites which make a farthing (κατὰ δύο ὃ ἐστὶ κοδαντῆς, duo nummicos).—"A very minute coin, the half of a quadrans, or farthing. It is in our common translation rendered mite, which (by the way) comes from minute, and farthing from fourthing, formed after the imitation of quadrans. It is, however, of more consequence to remark, that this was the smallest offering which could be received into the treasury. See Schoettg. Hor. Heb. 260, who cites Bava Bathra, fol. 10, 2."—BLOOMFIELD'S 'Critical Digest,' vol. ii. p. 107.

That this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury :

S.V.A. and said. Vulg. Et convocans discipulos suos, ait illis.

44. For all they did cast in of their abundance ; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.

For the time when Jesus uttered these words, see S. Matthew, ch. xxiii., page 370.

Jesus did not disapprove of the rich giving much ; but He wished to teach His disciples that God had regard to the means of the giver and to the feelings with which he offered his gift, and that sometimes those who in the eyes of men gave least, in the eyes of God gave the most. Probably He called His disciples apart that the rich might not hear what would appear to them rather like a disparagement of their gifts.

CHAPTER XIII.

[1. Christ foretelleth the destruction of the Temple: 9. the persecutions for the gospel: 10. that the gospel must be preached to all nations: 11. that great calamities shall happen to the Jews: 21. and the manner of His coming to judgment: 32. the hour whereof being known to none, every man is to watch and pray, that we be not found unprovided, when He cometh to each one particularly by death.]

[Vulg. Triumphavit ecclesiam, prodierunt bella et varias afflictiones ac persecutiones, abominatoremque desolationis: de pseudochristis et pseudoprophetis: post signa in corporibus celestibus veniet cum gloria Filius hominis: et hujus signum dat a fidei: quia autem nemo tempus novit, jubet omnes vigilare.]

For verses 1 and 2 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 375.

1. And as He went out of the Temple, one of His disciples saith unto Him, Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings are here!

2. And Jesus answering said unto him, Seest thou these great buildings? there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

S.V. omit answering.

Vulg. Et respondens Iesus, ait illi.

For verses 3-13 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 377.

3. And as He sat upon the mount of Olives over against the Temple,^a Peter and James and John and Andrew asked Him privately,

4. Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled?

Vulg. quando hæc omnia incipient consummari?

5. And Jesus answering them began to say, Take heed lest any man deceive you:

S.V. And Jesus began to say unto them.

Vulg. Et respondens Iesus cepit dicere illis.

6. For many shall come in My name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.

S.V. omit For.

Vulg. Multi enim venient in nomine meo.

7. And when ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled: for such things must needs be; but the end shall not be yet.

S. see that ye be not troubled: S.V. omit for.

Vulg. Cum audieritis autem bella, et opiniones bellorum, ne timueritis: oportet enim hæc fieri: sed nondum finis.

8. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be earthquakes in divers places, and there shall be famines and troubles: these are the beginnings of sorrows.

S.V. omit and after kingdom and after places: S.V. omit and troubles: S.V. the beginning.

Vulg. Exurget enim gens contra gentem, et regnum super regnum, et erunt terremoti per loca, et famēs. Initium dolorum hæc.

9. ¶ But take heed to yourselves: for they shall deliver you up to councils; and in the synagogues ye shall be beaten: and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for My sake, for a testimony against them.

S.V. omits to yourselves: V. omits for.

Vulg. Videte autem vosmetipsos. Tradent enim vos in concilis.

10. And the gospel must first be published among all nations.

11. But when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate: but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost.

S.V. And when they: S.V. omit neither do ye premeditate.

Vulg. Et cum duxerint vos tradentes, nolite præcogitare.

12. Now the brother shall betray the brother

^a And as He sat upon the Mount of Olives over against (κατέναντι) the Temple.—The Talmud tells us that there was a place upon Mount Olivet, just in the face of the Temple, where the Priest slew and burnt the red cow into the ashes of purification (Numb. xix. 2, &c.); and as he sprinkled the blood, he looked directly upon the Temple door (Midloth, cap. i. hal. 3).

"It is true indeed, from any tract of Olivet, the Temple might be well seen; but the word κατέναντι, 'over against,' if it doth not direct to this very place, yet some place certainly in the same line, and it cannot but recall to our mind that action of the High Priest." —LIGHTFOOT on Mark xiii. 3; vol. ii. p. 350.

to death, and the father the son ; and children shall rise up against their parents, and shall cause them to be put to death.

S.V. And.
Vulg. Tradet autem frater fratrem in mortem.

13. And ye shall be hated of all men for My name's sake : but he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

For verses 14-23 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 380.

14. ¶ But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing where it ought not, (let him that readeth understand,) then let them that be in Judæa flee to the mountains :

S.V. omit spoken of by Daniel the prophet.
Vulg. Cum autem videritis abominationem desolationis stantem ubi non debet, qui legit, intelligat.

15. And let him that is on the housetop not go down into the house, neither enter therein, to take any thing out of his house :

S.V. omit into the house.
Vulg. Et qui super tectum, ne descendat in domum.

16. And let him that is in the field not turn back again for to take up his garment.

17. But woe to them* that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days !

18. And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.

S.V. that it be not.
Vulg. Orate vero ut hieme non fiant.

19. For in those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time, neither shall be.

Vulg. Erunt enim dies illi tribulationes tales, quales non fuerunt ab initio creaturæ, quam condidit Deus usque nunc, neque fient.

20. And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved : but for the elect's sake, whom He hath chosen, He hath shortened the days.

21. And then if any man shall say to you, Lo, here is Christ ; or, lo, He is there ; believe him not :

Vulg. Ecce hic est Christus, ecce illic, ne credideritis.

22. For false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall shew signs and wonders, to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect.

S. But false Christs : S.V. omit even.
Vulg. Exurgent enim pseudochristi et pseudoprophetae, et dabunt signa et portenta ad seducendos, si fieri potest, etiam electos.

23. But take ye heed : behold, I have foretold you all things.

For verses 24-37 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 385.

24. ¶ But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light,

25. And the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken.

S.V. A. And the stars shall fall from heaven.
Vulg. Et stellæ cœli erunt decedentes, et virtutes, quæ in cœlis sunt, movebuntur.

26. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in the clouds with great power and glory.

27. And then shall He send His angels, and shall gather together His elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven.

S. And then He sendeth : V. the angels.
Vulg. Et tunc mittet angelos suos.

28. Now learn a parable of the fig tree ; When her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near :

Vulg. A. ficum autem discite parabolam. Cum jam ramus ejus tener fuerit, et nata fuerint folia.

29. So ye in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors.

30. Verily I say unto you, that this generation shall not pass, till all these things be done.

31. Heaven and earth shall pass away : but My words shall not pass away.

32. ¶ But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.

V. A. of that day or hour : V. no, not an angel in heaven.
Vulg. De die autem illo vel hora nemo scit, neque angeli in cœlo, neque Filius, nisi Pater.

33. Take ye heed, watch and pray : for ye know not when the time is.

V. omits and pray.
Vulg. Videte, vigilate, et orate.

* But woe (oval) to them.—“Our blessed Lord does not denounce ‘woe,’ but in the tenderness of His pity says, ‘Alas!’ (for the word alai here expresses pity rather than wrath) ‘unto them that are with child.’”—‘The Church Quarterly Review,’ April 1876, p. 138.

34. For the Son of Man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch.

S.V. omit and before to every man.

Vulg. Sicut homo qui peregre profectus reliquit domum suam, et dedit servis suis potestatem cuiusque operis, et janitori praecepit ut vigilet.

35. Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrow, or in the morning:

S.V. whether at even.

Vulg. nescitis enim quando dominus domus veniat: sero, an media nocte, an galli cantu, an mane.

36. Lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping.

37. And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch.

CHAPTER XIV.

[1. A conspiracy against Christ. 3. Precious ointment is poured on His head by a woman. 10. Judas selleth his Master for money. 12. Christ Himself foretelleth him He shall be betrayed of one of His disciples: 22. after the passover prepared, and eaten, instituted His Supper: 26. declareth aforehand the flight of all His disciples, and Peter's denial. 43. Judas betrayeth Him with a kiss. 46. He is apprehended in the garden, 53. falsely accused, and impiously condemned of the Jews' council: 65. shamefully abused by them: 66. and thrice denied of Peter.]

[Vulg. Consulant principes sacerdotum de occidendo Iesu: qui unguento pretioso a muliere perfunditur murmurantibus discipulis: venit ad Iudam: de cuius proditiōe discipulis loquitur in cena, in qua panem in corpus suum, et vinum in sanguinem consecrata tradit discipulis: pradiit omnes scandalizantes, et trinam Petri negationem: ac post trinam orationem capitur a Iudis: quorum uni Petrus abscedit auriculam: et discipulis fugientibus coram Caipha a falsis testibus accusatus, mortisque reus iudicatus, conspuitur ac caditur, et ter a Petro negatur.]

For verses 1 and 2 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 408.

1. After two days was the feast of the Passover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take Him by craft, and put Him to death.

2. But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people.

S.V. For they said.

Vulg. Dicbant autem: Non in die festo, ne forte tumultus fieret in populo.

For verses 3-9 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 410.

3. ¶ And being in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper, as He sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on His head.

Margin, pure nard, or liquid nard.

S.V. omit and before she brake.

Vulg. venit mulier habens alabastrum unguenti nardi spicati pretiosi, et fracto alabastro, effudit super caput ejus.

4. And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made?

S.V. omit and said.

Vulg. Erant autem quidam indigne ferentes intra semetipsos, et dicentes.

5. For it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor. And they murmured against her.

S. For the ointment might have been sold: V. For this ointment.

Vulg. Poterat enim unguentum istud venumdari plus quam trecentis denariis.

6. And Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on Me.

S. for she hath.

Vulg. bonum opus operata est in me.

7. For ye have the poor with you always, and whosoever ye will ye may do them good: but Me ye have not always.

S.V. ye may always do them good: S. ye may do good.

Vulg. et cum volueritis, potestis illis benefacere.

8. She hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint My Body to the burying.

Vulg. praevenit ungere corpus meum in sepulcrum.

9. Verily I say unto you, Whersoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her.

S.V. But verily: S.V. the gospel.

Vulg. Amen dico vobis: Ubicumque predicatum fuerit evangelium istud in universo mundo, et quod fecit haec, narrabitur in memoriam ejus.

For verses 10 and 11 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 412.

10. ¶ And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests, to betray Him unto them.

A. omits one of the twelve.

Vulg. Et Judas Iscariotes unus de duodecim.

11. And when they heard it, they were glad, and promised to give him money. And he sought how he might conveniently betray Him.

For verses 12-16 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 413.

12. ¶ And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, His disciples said unto Him, Where wilt Thou that we go and prepare that Thou mayest eat the passover?

Vulg. dicunt ei discipuli.

13. And He sendeth forth two of His disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him.

14. And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the goodman of the house, The Master saith, Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the passover with My disciples?

S.V. Where is My guestchamber.
Vulg. Ubi est refectio mea, ubi pascha cum discipulis meis manducem?

15. And he will shew you a large upper room furnished and prepared: there make ready for us.

A. omits and prepared: S.V. and there make.
Vulg. Et ipse vobis demonstrabit coenaculum grande, stratum: et illic parate nobis.

16. And His disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as He had said unto them: and they made ready the passover.

S.V. And the disciples: S*. went forth into the city.
Vulg. Et abierunt discipuli egi, et venerunt in civitatem.

For verse 17 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 415.

17. And in the evening He cometh with the twelve.

For verses 18-21 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 418.

18. And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with Me shall betray Me.

V. which eat with Me.
Vulg. Quia unus ex vobis tradet me, qui manducat mecum.

19. And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto Him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I?

S.V. omits. And before they began: A. one by one, Is it I, Master? S.V. omits and another said, Is it I?
Vulg. At illi coeperunt contristari, et dicere ei singulatum: Numquid ego?

20. And He answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve, that dippeth with Me in the dish.

S.V. And He said (omits answered and): A. that dippeth his hand with Me.
Vulg. Qui ait illis: Unus ex duodecim qui intingit meum manum in catino.

21. The Son of Man indeed goeth, as it is written of Him: but woe to that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed! good were it for that man if he had never been born.

Vulg. Et Filius quidem hominis vadit sicut scriptum est de eo: vae autem homini illi, per quem Filius hominis tradetur.

For verses 22-25 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 421.

22. ¶ And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: This is My Body.

S.V. He took bread: S.V. A. omitted take.
Vulg. accepit lesus panem, et benedixit, et debilit eis et ait: Sumite, hoc est corpus meum.

1.

23. And He took the cup, and when He had given thanks, He gave it to them: and they all drank of it.

24. And He said unto them, This is My Blood of the new testament, which is shed for many.

V. omits unto them: S.V. omits new.
Vulg. Et ait illis: Hic est sanguis mei novi testamenti, qui pro multis effundetur.

25. Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God.

S. I will not drink of the fruit.
Vulg. Amen dico vobis, quia jam non bibam de hoc genere vite usque in diem illum, cum illud bibam novum in regno Dei.

For verses 26-31 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 427.

26. ¶ And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

27. And Jesus saith unto them, All ye shall be offended because of Me this night: for it is written,

"I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered."

S.V. omits because of Me this night.
Vulg. Omnes scandalizabimini in me in nocte ista.

28. But after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee.

29. But Peter said unto Him, Although all shall be offended, yet will not I.

30. And Jesus saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny Me thrice.

S. omits twice.
Vulg. prorsusquam gallus vocem bis dederit, ter mecum negaturus.

31. But he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with Thee, I will not deny Thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all.

Vulg. At ille amplius loquebatur: Et si oportuerit me simul commori tibi, non te negabo. Similiter autem et omnes dicebant.

For verses 32-36 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 428.

32. And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and He saith to His disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray.

S.V.A. Gethsemani: A. to the disciples: V*. omits here.
Vulg. Et veniunt in predium, cui nomen Gethsemani. Et ait discipulis suis: Sedete hic donec oram.

33. And He taketh with Him Peter and James and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy;

Vulg. cepit parere et tædere.

34. And saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch.

35. And He went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from Him.

Vulg. Et cum processisset paululum, procidit super terram.

36. And He said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto Thee; take away this cup from Me: nevertheless not what I will, but what Thou wilt.

Vulg. Et dixit.

For verses 37-42 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 432.

37. And He cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? couldst not thou watch one hour?

and saith: A. He saith.

Vulg. Et ait Petro: Simon, dormis? non potuisti una hora vigilare?

38. Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak.

S.V. lest ye come into temptation.

Vulg. ut non intretis in tentationem.

39. And again He went away, and prayed, and spake the same words.

40. And when He returned, He found them asleep again, (for their eyes were heavy,) neither wist they what to answer Him.

S.V. And again He came and found them asleep.

Vulg. Et reversus, denuo invenit eos dormientes.

41. And He cometh the third time, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough, the hour is come; behold, the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

Vulg. ecce Filius hominis tradetur in manus peccatorum.

42. Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth Me is at hand.

Vulg. ecce qui me tradet, prope est.

For verses 43-46 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 434.

43. ¶ And immediately, while He yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and the scribes and the elders.

A. Judas Iscariot: S.V. omit great.

Vulg. venit Judas Iscariotes, unus de duodecim, et cum eo turba multa.

44. And he that betrayed Him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is He; take Him, and lead Him away safely.

Vulg. Dederat autem traditor ejus signum eis, dicens: Quemcumque osculatus fuero, ipse est, tenete eum, et ducite caute.

45. And as soon as he was come, he goeth straightway to Him, and saith, Master, Master; and kissed Him.

Vulg. Ave rabbi; et osculatus est eum.

46. ¶ And they laid their hands on Him, and took Him.

For verse 47 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 436.

47. And one of them that stood by drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high priest, and cut off his ear.

Vulg. Unus autem quidam de circumstantibus.

For verses 48-52 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 437.

48. And Jesus answered and said unto them, Are ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and with staves to take Me?

49. I was daily with you in the Temple teaching, and ye took Me not: but the scriptures must be fulfilled.

Vulg. sed ut impleantur scripturae.

50. And they all forsook Him, and fled.

Vulg. Tunc discipuli ejus relinquentes eum, omnes fugerunt.

51. And there followed Him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body,* and the young men laid hold on him:

S.V. a young man (omit certain): S.V. and they laid hold on him.

Vulg. Adolescens autem quidam sequebatur eum amictus sindone super nudo: et tenebant eum.

52. And he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked.

S.V. omit from them.

Vulg. At ille rejecta sindone, nudus profugit ab eis.

For verses 53 and 54 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 439.

53. ¶ And they led Jesus away to the high priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests and the elders and the scribes.

S. and here were assembled: A. and the scribes and the elders.

Vulg. et convenerunt omnes sacerdotes, et scribae, et seniores.

54. And Peter followed Him afar off, even into the palace of the high priest: and he sat with the servants, and warmed himself at the fire.

Vulg. et sedebat cum ministris ad ignem, et calefaciebat se.

For verses 55-65 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 441.

55. And the chief priests and all the council

* A young man having a linen cloth cast about his naked body.—See Matt. xvi. p. 438.

sought for witness against Jesus to put Him to death ; and found none.

A. for false witness.

Vulg. querebant adversus Iesum testimonium, ut eum morti traderent.

56. For many bare false witness against Him, but their witness agreed not together.

Vulg. et convenientia testimonium non erant.

57. And there arose certain, and bare false witness against Him, saying,

58. We heard Him say, I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands.

S. He said: A. I destroy.

Vulg. Quoniam nos audivimus eum dicentem: Ego dissolvam.

59. But neither so did their witness agree together.

Vulg. Et non erat conveniens testimonium illorum.

60. And the high priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, Answerest Thou nothing? what is it which these witness against thee?

V. Answerest: Thou nothing that these.

Vulg. Non respondes quicquid ad ea que tibi obijciuntur ab his?

61. But He held His peace, and answered nothing. Again the high priest asked Him, and said unto Him, Art Thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?

S.A. But Jesus held His peace. of the Blessed: S*. of God; A. of God the Blessed.

Vulg. Tu es Christus Filius Dei benedicti?

62. And Jesus said, I am: and ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

Vulg. Iesus autem dixit illi: Ego sum: et videbitis Filium hominis sedentem a dextris virtutis Dei, et venientem cum nubibus celi.

63. Then the high priest rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any further witnesses?

64. Ye have heard the blasphemy: what think ye? And they all condemned Him to be guilty of death.

S. Behold, now ye have heard.

Vulg. Audistis blasphemiam: quid vobis videtur?

65. And some began to spit on Him, and to cover His face, and to buffet Him, and to say unto Him, Prophecy: and the servants did strike Him with the palms of their hands.

Vulg. et colaphis eum cadere, et dicere ei, Prophetiza: et ministri alapis eum cedebant.

For verses 66-72 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 443.

66. ¶ And as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high priest:

S. a maid.

Vulg. Et cum esset Petrus in atrio deorsum, venit una ex ancillis summi sacerdotis.

67. And when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth.

68. But he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew.

S.V. I neither know nor understand. S.V. omit and the cock crew. Vulg. Neque scio, neque novi quid dicas. Et exiit foras ante atrium, et gallus cantavit.

69. And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them.

V. and said to them.

Vulg. Rursus autem cum vidisset illum ancilla, cepit dicere circumstantibus.

70. And he denied it again. And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilæan, and thy speech agreeth thereto.

S*. omits And before a little after. S.V. omit and thy speech agreeth thereto. Vulg. omits and thy speech agreeth thereto.

71. But he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not this Man of whom ye speak.

S*. omitted whom ye speak.

Vulg. Quia nescio hominem istum, quem dicitis.

72. And the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny Me thrice. And when he thought thereon, he wept.

Margin, he wept abundantly, or he began to weep.

S. omits the second time. S. omits twice.

Vulg. Et statim gallus iterum cantavit. Et recordatus est Petrus verbi, quod dixerat ei Iesus: Priusquam gallus cantetibus, ter me negabis. Et cepit flere.

CHAPTER XV.

[1. Jesus brought bound, and accused before Pilate. 15. Upon the clamour of the common people, the murderer Barabbas is loosed, and Jesus delivered up to be crucified. 17. He is crowned with thorns, 19. spit on, and mocked: 21. fainteth in bearing His cross: 27. hangeth between two thieves: 29. suffereth the triumphing reproaches of the Jews: 39. but confessed by the centurion to be the Son of God: 43. and is honourably buried by Joseph.]

[Vulg. Iesus coram Pilato accusatus, nihil respondet: præcigitur Barabbas, et Iesus traditur crucifigendus: qui multis modis illusus a militibus, ducitur ad crucifigendum: et discipulis ipsius vestimentis, inter latrones crucifigis, audit variorum iactatas in se blasphemias: subortuntur tenebre: et clamus Iesus Eli, acetoque potatus, cum clamore valido expirat: cuius corpus a Ioseph sepelitur.]

For verse 1 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 451.

1. And straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and scribes and the whole council, and bound Jesus, and carried Him away, and delivered Him to Pilate.

For verses 2-5 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 455.

2. And Pilate asked Him, Art Thou the King of the Jews? And He answering said unto him, Thou sayest it.

S.V. saith.

Vulg. At ille respondens, ait illi: Tu dicis.

3. And the chief priests accused Him of many things: but He answered nothing.

Vulg. omits but He answered nothing.

4. And Pilate asked Him again, saying, Answerest Thou nothing? behold how many things they witness against Thee.

S.V. omits saying.

Vulg. dicens: Non respondes quidquam?

5. But Jesus yet answered nothing; so that Pilate marvelled.

For verses 6-14 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 457.

6. Now at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired.^a Vulg. Per diem autem festum solebat dimittere illis unum ex vinctis, quemcunque petissent.

^a One prisoner whomsoever they desired.—The clear distinction drawn by the New Testament writer between the relatives δσς, δσας, and δσπερ, as distinguished from the ordinary relative ος, is not to be ignored. Take, for example, S. Mark xv. 6 (of Pilate): 'He was wont to release unto them one prisoner, whomsoever (δσπερ) they desired.' Here the Greek requires 'the very one whom' (and no other) 'they asked.' In Coloss. iii. 5, we find,

7. And there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection.

8. And the multitude crying aloud began to desire him to do as he had ever done unto them.

crying aloud: S.V. coming up: S.V. as he was wont to do.

Vulg. Et cum ascendisset turba, caput rogare, sicut semper faciebat illis.

9. But Pilate answered them, saying, Will ye that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

10. For he knew that the chief priests had delivered Him for envy.

S.V. he had known: V. that they had delivered Him.

Vulg. Sciebat enim quod per invidiam tradidissent eum summi sacerdotes.

11. But the chief priests moved the people, that he should rather release Barabbas unto them.

12. And Pilate answered and said again unto them, What will ye then that I shall do unto Him whom ye call the King of the Jews?

V. What shall I do, say, to the King: A. that I shall do to the King.

Vulg. Quid ergo vultis faciam regi Iudeorum?

13. And they cried out again, Crucify Him.

14. Then Pilate said unto them, Why, what evil hath He done? And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify Him.

S.V. omits unto them: S. the more exceedingly, saying.

Vulg. Pilatus vero dicebat illis: Quid enim mali fecit? At illi magis clamabant: Crucifige eum.

For verses 15-19 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 460.

'and covetousness, which is idolatry,' where the Greek requires, 'and especially covetousness, inasmuch as (ἣν) it is idolatry.' Then S. Matthew xiv. 36, 'and as many as touched were made perfectly whole,' where the Greek requires, 'and all (δσοι) as many as touched.'—The Church Quarterly Review, April 1876, p. 138.

15. ¶ And so Pilate, willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged Him, to be crucified.

16. And the soldiers led Him away into the hall, called Prætorium; and they call together the whole band.

Vulg. Milites autem duxerunt eum in atrium prætorii, et convocant totam cohortem.

17. And they clothed Him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about His head,

18. And began to salute Him, Hail, King of the Jews!

S. to salute Him and to say.

Vulg. Et exeperunt salutare eum: Ave rex Iudæorum.

19. And they smote Him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon Him, and bowing their knees worshipped Him.

For verses 20-23 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 463.

20. And when they had mocked Him, they took off the purple from Him, and put His own clothes on Him, and led Him out to crucify Him.

S. omits Him after to crucify.

Vulg. et educunt illum ut crucifigerent eum.

21. And they compel one Simon a Cyrenian, who passed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear His cross.

22. And they bring Him unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, The place of a skull.

S*. unto the Golgotha.

Vulg. Et perducunt illum in Golgotha locum.

23. And they gave Him to drink wine mingled with myrrh: but He received it not.

S. omits to drink.

Vulg. Et dabunt ei bibere myrrhatum vinum: et non accepit.

For verses 24-28 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 466.

24. And when they had crucified Him, they parted His garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take.

V. And they crucify Him and part His garments: S.A. they part.

Vulg. Et crucifigentes eum, dividerunt vestimenta ejus.

25. And it was the third hour, and they crucified Him.

26. And the superscription of His accusation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS.

27. And with Him they crucify two thieves; the one on His right hand, and the other on His left.

V. they crucified.

Vulg. Et cum eo crucifigunt duos latrones.

28. And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, "And He was numbered with the transgressors." ^a S.V.A. omits this verse.

Vulg. Et impleta est scriptura, quæ dicit: Et cum iniquis reputatus est.

For verses 29-32 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 470.

29. And they that passed by rallied on Him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, Thou that destroyest the Temple, and buildest it in three days,

30. Save Thyself, and come down from the cross.

S.V. Save Thyself by coming down.

Vulg. Salvum fac teipsum descendens de cruce.

31. Likewise also the chief priests mocking said among themselves with the scribes, He saved others; Himself He cannot save.

32. Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe. And they that were crucified with Him reviled Him.

For verses 33-37 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 473.

33. And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour.

34. And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, ELOI, ELOI, LAMA SABACH-THANI? which is, being interpreted, My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?

S.V. omits saying: S. Iema, A. Iima: S*, sabactani, A. sibacthani, V. zibaph-thani: A. being interpreted, God, My God, why: V. being interpreted, My God, why.

Vulg. Et hora nona exclamavit Iesus voce magna, dicens: Eloi, Eloi, lama sabacthani? quod est interpretatum: Deus meus, Deus meus, ut quid dereliquisti me?

35. And some of them that stood by, when they heard it, said, Behold, He calleth Elias.

A. that stood there.

Vulg. Et quidam de circumstantibus.

36. And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave Him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take Him down.

^a V. 28—lost in Tischendorf, unicus incluit Tischendorf. SCRIVENER, N. T. 1877.

A. And one ran, filled.

Vulg. Currens autem unus, et implens spongiam aceto, circumponensque calamo, potum dabat ei, dicens: Sinite, videamus si.

37. And Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost.

For verses 38–41 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 477.

38. And the veil of the Temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom.

39. ¶ And when the centurion, which stood over against Him, saw that He so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this Man was the Son of God.

S.V. that He so gave up the ghost.

Vulg. Quia sic clamans expirasset.

40. There were also women looking on afar off: among whom was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the less and of Joses, and Salome;

Vulg. inter quas Maria Magdalene, et Maria Iacobi minoris, et Ioseph mater, et Salome.

41. (Who also, when He was in Galilee, followed Him, and ministered unto Him;) and many other women which came up with Him unto Jerusalem.

S.V. omit also.

For verses 42–46 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 483.

42. ¶ And now when the even was come, because it was the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath, Vulg. quia erat parasceve, quod est ante sabbatum.

43. Joseph of Arimathæa, an honourable counsellor, which also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus.

S*. and himself waited.

Vulg. Venit Ioseph ab Arimathæa nobilis decurio.

44. And Pilate marvelled if he were already dead: and calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead.

Vulg. interrogavit eum si jam mortuus esset.

45. And when he knew it of the centurion, he gave the Body to Joseph.

46. And he bought fine linen, and took Him down, and wrapped Him in the linen,

S.V. omit and before took Him down.

Vulg. Ioseph autem mercatus sindonem, et deponens eum involvit sindone.

For verses 46 and 47 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 485.

46. — and laid Him in a sepulchre which was hewn out of a rock, and rolled a stone unto the door of the sepulchre.

S. a great stone.

Vulg. et advolvxit lapidem ad ostium monumenti.

47. And Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of Joses beheld where He was laid.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

The Last Twelve Verses of S. Mark.—"We believe that the results of Mr. Burgon's work, so far as it bears directly on the evidence, may be not unfairly summarised as follows:—

- "1. The evidence of the 'about 30 cursives' is really in favour of, and not adverse to, these verses forming a part of the Gospel. They all have a scholion recognizing the absence of them from some codices; at the same time in various words they testify to their being found 'in others,' 'in many,' 'in the ancient copies,' 'in the true Palestinian copy,' or 'in the approved copies preserved at Jerusalem.'
- "2. The evidence of the Fathers commonly quoted as adverse to the authenticity of the verses is really to be reduced to that of Eusebius. He does seem to have had some doubt about them, but the others only quote his words.
- "3. The force of the argument drawn from the alleged sudden change of style and phraseology is shown to be much less than it is commonly represented to be.
- "4. Most striking of all is Mr. Burgon's explanation of the undoubted omission of these verses from so many codices. He shows that the word τελος, whose occurrence at the 8th verse has misled so many critics, is really only the mark of the conclusion of an important ecclesiastical Lecture; and reminds us, in addition, that S. Mark's Gospel often, and in the West usually, stood last in order of the four, whence it might easily happen that the last verses of S. Mark were written on the last leaf of the codex, and so might be in danger of being damaged or torn away.
- "The adverse testimony, then, is reduced to—
- "1. The fact of the absence of these verses from a certain number of codices.
- "2. The deliberate opinion of Eusebius, which would be implied by his not 'canonizing' further than verse 8; assuming the statement ὡς αὖ Εὐαγγελιστὴς ὁ Παμφίλου ἐκάντισεν.
- "3. The somewhat marked difference of phraseology.
- "But this is balanced by such strong external evidence that we are driven to the conclusion that these verses have formed part of the canonical Gospel from the earliest times of which we have knowledge. The question only remains, Are they from S. Mark's own pen? Now, inasmuch as the claim of any part of Scripture to be received by us depends, not upon our knowledge of the writer, but upon the authority of the universal Church which has pronounced it canonical, it appears to us that a question of doubtful authorship is to be treated as a purely literary question, to be solved by the proper use of the critical and judicial faculties; and that such considerations as these may be allowed their full weight. There is certainly a difference between the first eight and the last twelve verses of this 16th chapter, which is not likely to occur in the composition of an author writing continuously. Whether S. Mark wrote them at an interval of some time from the rest, or whether he incorporated an account by a different hand from his own, as S. Luke certainly did both in his Gospel and in the Acts, or whether his Gospel, being for some reason incomplete, was completed in Apostolic times by the addition of an already existing narrative, need make no difference in our acceptance of the passage as inspired."—C. E. HAMMOND, 'Textual Criticism,' p. 110.

Internal evidence.—"Finally and chiefly,—and on this alone would we fearlessly rest the genuineness of the passage,—there is the marvellous structure and organic unity of the whole Section, with its one grand and original central thought of the Preaching of the accomplished Resurrection and its conflict with unbelief. The Section opens with the primary attestation of the Gospel message, ἀναστὰς ἐφάνη, 'when He was risen again, He appeared'; not 'risen again' only, nor 'appeared' only, but both together, ἀναστὰς ἐφάνη; and, having thus laid the foundation, it proceeds to the Gospel messages themselves, from the particular tidings of the first eye-witness, v. 10, to the universal proclamation by the Apostles, vv. 19, 20; intermediately unfolding, in beautiful harmony, the persistent obstacle of unbelief, vv. 11, 13; the Lord's upbraiding of unbelief, v. 14; the blessed promise to belief, v. 16; the damnation of unbelief, v. 16; the miraculous powers attendant upon belief, vv. 17, 18—all these so consistently only found in S. Mark ; and the whole closing with the corresponding record of the continuing attestation and confirmation of the Gospel message throughout the world, v. 20. No other Evangelist thus presents the Resurrection as a cardinal fact to be universally proclaimed and believed ; and whether we regard the originality of the plan or the excellence of the execution, we confidently submit that the character of this portion of the Gospel is one which no forger could have elaborated, and no 'fragment' or 'completion' have attained.

"On review therefore the clear conclusion is, that harmonic difficulties alone early inspired in some few quarters a certain amount of hesitation in the retention of the section, but that the external and internal evidence overwhelmingly establish its genuineness."—McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 684.

"With regard to the argument against these twelve verses arising from their alleged difference in style from the rest of the Gospel, I must say that the same process might be applied—and has been applied—to prove that S. Paul was not the writer of the Pastoral Epistles (to say nothing of that to the Hebrews), S. John of the Apocalypse, Isaiah and Zechariah of portions of those prophecies that bear their names. Every one used to literary composition may detect, if he will, such minute variations as have been dwelt upon, either in his own writings, or in those of the authors he is most familiar with."—SCRIVENER's Introduction, p. 511, ed. 1874.

CHAPTER XVI.

[1. An angel declareth the resurrection of Christ to three women. 9. Christ Himself appeareth to Mary Magdalene: 12. to two going into the country: 11. then to the Apostles, 15. whom He sendeth forth to preach the gospel: 19. and ascendeth into heaven.]

[Vulg. Materibus ad Christi monumentum obstupescitibus, angelus resurrectionem ipsius annuntiat: qui primus Maria Magdalene apparet, deinde duobus discipulis in alia effigie: de noua undecim recumbentibus apparet, exprobrata incredulitate, mittit eos ut in universo mundo predicent et baptizent, subiunctis signis quæ sequantur credentes, ac ita in celum ascendit.]

For verses 1-7 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 490.

1. And when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint Him.

2. And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun.

at the rising of the sun: All MSS. when the sun was risen.
Vulg. Et valde mane una sabbatorum, veniunt ad monumentum, orto jam sole.

3. And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?

4. And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away: for it was very great.

5. And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted.

6. And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted: Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: He is risen; He is not here: behold the place where they laid Him.

S*, omits of Nazareth.

Vulg. Iesum quæritis Nazarenum, crucifixum.

7. But go your way, tell His disciples and Peter that He goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see Him, as He said unto you.

For verse 8 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 493.

8. And they went out quickly, and fled from the sepulchre; for they trembled and were amazed: neither said they any thing to any man; for they were afraid.

S. V. A. omitt quickly.

Vulg. omitts quickly.

For verse 9 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 495.

9. ¶ Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, He appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom He had cast seven devils.

S. V. omit the verses 9-20.

For verses 10 and 11 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 497.

10. And she went and told them that had been with Him, as they mourned and wept.

11. And they, when they had heard that He was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not.

For verses 12 and 13 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 499, and S. Luke xxiv. 13.

12. ¶ After that He appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country.

Vulg. in alia effigie.

13. And they went and told it unto the residue: neither believed they them.

For verses 14-18 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 499.

14. ¶ Afterward He appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen Him after He was risen.

Margitt, together.

Vulg. Novissime recumbentibus illis undecim apparuit.

15. And He said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.

16. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.

Vulg. Qui crediderit, et baptizatus fuerit, salvus erit: qui vero non crediderit condemnabitur.

17. And these signs shall follow them that believe; In My name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues;

18. They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

There is abundant evidence to show that the early Church held that the power which Jesus here promised to bestow upon His disciples, viz. to work miracles, to cast out devils, and heal the sick, did not cease with the Apostles or their immediate successors.*

For verses 19 and 20 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 507.

19. ¶ So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, He was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God.

Vulg. Et Dominus quidem Iesus postquam locutus est eis, assumptus est in celum, et sedet a dextris Dei.

20. And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen.

* Miracles.—"Miraculous gifts were still [third century] common in the Church, as S. Irenæus (vide Euseb. E. H. v. 7: vol. ii. p. 445, Migne) has abundantly testified. Narcissus and S. Gregory Thaumaturgus have been already mentioned as those to whom they were vouchsafed. Origen, in his first and second books against Celsus, appeals to the prophecies that were spoken, the miraculous cures that were performed, and particularly the devils that were cast out, by the Christians of the present age: and his testimony is the more valuable as it occurs in a work against a subtle foe. Tertullian, S. Cyprian, and Eusebius attest that the gift of casting out devils was shared by the faithful generally. It is not to be denied, indeed, that the same mistaken zeal, through which we have spurious works without end for every genuine one, invented a like proportion of false miracles for every well-attested one; and hence the scepticism which has been, naturally enough, engendered in the one case and the other. A candid inquirer, however, will not grudge the labour of discriminating between what is true and what is false, where it can be done, for the sake of the truth."—E. S. FOULKE, 'Manual of Eccl. Hist.' p. 93.

"The conclusions to which the remarks which follow will be found to tend are such as these: that ecclesiastical miracles, that is, miracles posterior to the Apostolic age, are on the whole very different in object, character, and evidence from those of Scripture on the whole, so that the one series or family ought never to be confounded with the other, yet that the former are not therefore at once to be rejected; that there was no age of miracles, after which miracles ceased; that there have been at all times true miracles and false miracles, true accounts and false accounts; that no authoritative guide is supplied to us for drawing the line between the two; that some of the miracles reported were true miracles; that we cannot be certain how many were not true; and that under these circumstances the decision in particular cases is left to each individual, according to his opportunities of judging."—DR. NEWMAN, 'Essay on Ecclesiastical Miracles,' Fleury's 'Eccles. Hist.' vol. i. p. xiii.

How the Scripture miracles differed from the ecclesiastical, and why, has also been pointed out.

"Much stress has been laid throughout this Essay on the differences existing between the miracles recorded in Scripture and those which are found in ecclesiastical history: but from what has come before us in the course of it, it would seem that those differences are for the most part merely such as necessarily attend the introduction of a religion to the world compared with its subsequent course, the miraculous Agency itself being for the most part the same throughout. For instance, the miracles of Scripture are wrought by persons conscious of their power and of their exercise of it; for these persons are the very heralds of Almighty God, whom He has commissioned, whom He has instructed, and whom He has gifted for their work. The Scripture miracles are wrought as evidence of revealed truth, because they are wrought before that truth had as yet been received. They are grave and simple in their circumstances, because they are wrought by persons who know their gift, and, as being under immediate Divine direction, use it without alloy of human infirmity or personal peculiarity. They are definite and certain, drawn out in an orderly form, and finished in their parts, because they were found in that authoritative Document which was intended by God's Providence to be the pattern of His dealings and the rule of our thoughts and actions. They are undeniably of a supernatural character, not only because it is natural that the most cogent miracles should be wrought in the beginning of the Dispensation, but because the sacred writers have been guided to put into the foreground those works of power which are the clearest tokens of a Divine Presence, and to throw the rest into the distance. They have no marks of exaggeration about them, and are none of them false or suspicious, because Inspiration had dispersed the mists of popular error and the colouring of individual feeling, and has enabled the writers to set down what took place and nothing else. But when once Inspiration was withdrawn, whether as regards those who wrought or those who recorded, then a Power which henceforth was mysterious and inscrutable in operation, became doubly obscure in report; and fiction in the testimony was made to compensate for incompleteness in the manifestation."—Ibid. p. cxxiii.

S. LUKE.

SEVERAL¹ of the earliest Christian writers relate that S. Luke the Evangelist was a native of Antioch and a physician. That he was also a painter is not stated by any writer earlier than the twelfth century,² though this may have been a tradition from more ancient times. That S. Luke was converted through the preaching of the Apostles, and had never himself been a disciple of Jesus, was a common opinion among the early writers;³ and this is rendered more probable by his own words (i. 2). But some⁴ have held that S. Luke was one of the seventy or seventy-two disciples whom Jesus sent to preach the Gospel, and others that he was one of the two disciples to whom He appeared as they went to Emmaus.⁵

It was generally believed in the early Church that Luke was the constant companion of S. Paul, and that in all the places in his Epistles where he mentions Luke (Colos. iv. 14; 2 Tim. iv. 11; Philem. 24) he means the Evangelist.⁶ Some have also supposed that in the Epistle to the Romans (xvi. 21), where S. Paul speaks of Lucius, he means the Evangelist S. Luke. Origen, who records this opinion, and who would be perfectly familiar with all the usages and niceties of the Greek language, does not reject it on the ground that it would be impossible for Lucius, Λούκιος, to be substituted for Luke, Λουκᾶς.⁷

It has been said that S. Luke learnt the facts which he relates in his Gospel from the other Apostles as well as from S. Paul, but that he was such a constant companion and fellow-labourer of S. Paul, that the Apostle almost identified himself with S. Luke's work, and that in some places where he speaks of "my Gospel" (Rom. ii. 16, xvi. 25; 2 Thess. ii. 14), it is not meant his preaching of the Gospel, but the Gospel of S. Luke. This opinion is mentioned by several writers.⁸

Some⁹ have also supposed that by "the brother whose praise is in the Gospel throughout all the Churches" (2 Cor. viii. 18), S. Paul meant Luke the Evangelist.

Accounts¹⁰ vary as to the time when and the place where S. Luke died; some saying that he died at the age of eighty-four, others seventy-three; some in Bithynia, others at Ephesus. All seem to agree that in the reign of Constantine his remains were conveyed to Constantinople.

The date generally assigned to the Acts of the Apostles is about A.D. 63. That S. Luke wrote his Gospel before he wrote the Acts of the Apostles has always been considered a fair inference from Acts i. 1, but how much before is uncertain.

¹ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 4; vol. ii. p. 220.

S. Jerome, de Viris illust. 7; vol. ii. p. 620.

—, in Isaiah vi. 9; vol. iv. p. 98.

V. Bede, in Acta Apostolorum, præfat.; vol. iii. p. 938.

² Nicephorus, ii. 43.

—, vi. 16.

³ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iii. 10 (alias 11); p. 872.

—, iii. 14; p. 914.

Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 4; vol. ii. p. 220.

Tertullian, adv. Marcion, iv. 2; vol. ii. p. 363.

S. Jerome, de Viris illust. 7; vol. ii. p. 621.

V. Bede, in Luc. præfem.; vol. iii. p. 308.

⁴ S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, li. 11; vol. i. p. 908.

⁵ S. Gregory Magnus, in Job, præfat. i. 3; vol. i. p. 517.

Theophylact, in Luc. xxiv. 35; vol. i. p. 491.

Nicephorus, i. 34.

⁶ S. Irenæus, Eusebius, S. Jerome, ut supra.

Chrysostom, in Epist. ad Coloss. Homil. 12; p. 298.

⁷ Origen, in Epist. ad Roman. lib. x. 39; vol. i. p. 1288.

⁸ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 4; vol. ii. p. 220.

Tertullian, adv. Marcion, iv. 5; vol. ii. p. 367.

S. Jerome, de Viris illust. 7; vol. ii. p. 621.

⁹ S. Jerome, in Matt. prolog.; vol. vii. p. 18.

— (translat. Origen's Homil. i. in Luc.); vol. vii. p. 223.

Maldonatus, præfat. in Luc.; vol. ii. p. 3.

Cornelius a Lapide, in 2 Cor. viii. 18; vol. ix. p. 399.

¹⁰ Dorotheus, Synopsis, cited in Theophylact, præfat. in Luc.; vol. i. p. 266.

S. Jerome, de Viris illust. 7; vol. ii. p. 621.

Nicephorus, i. 34.

Maldonatus, præfat. in Luc.; vol. ii. p. 3.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES TO CHAPTER I.

The Priests and their courses.—"The priests were divided by David into four-and-twenty courses (1 Chron. xxiv.); not but that there had been courses before of them, but because there had not been so many. For reason itself will tell us, that since they were all bound to the sanctuary, and withal were so very many in number, they could not serve there mixedly and confusedly, but must need have some distinction and order. Some of the Jews say they were divided into eight courses by Moses, four of Eleazar and four Ithamar. But for this they have no ground to show at all. Others that they were divided into sixteen by him; namely, eight and eight of either family. And of the division itself there seemeth to be some probability in the text, but not of the divider. . . .

"These courses—thus newly increased by David for number, and thus newly ranked by lot for order, and both for the service of the Temple, when it should be built—it is but little to be doubted but that they began their round when the service of the Temple did first begin; which round began on the Sabbath next after the Feast of Tabernacles, about the two-and-twentieth day of the month Tisri (2 Chron. vii.). For on the three-and-twentieth day Solomon dismissed all the people to their own houses, ver. 10, after he had kept the Feast of Tabernacles seven days before according to the Law, beginning on the fifteenth day of the month and concluding on the one-and-twentieth day (Lev. xxiii.); and the next day after, or the two-and-twentieth day, was a solemn assembly, and that year (as it may be conceived) the Sabbath day. Now in the week of the Feast, so great was the company of the congregation, and so many the multitude of the sacrifices, that no single course was able to undergo the service, but then (as also at the other two great festivals) all the courses served indifferently (and so had they done at the Temple dedication, 2 Chron. v. 11), and on the next Sabbath the course of Jehoiarib or the first began.

"They changed every week, coming in on the Sabbath, and on the next going out (2 Kings xi. 7; 2 Chron. xxiii. 4). So that, by the time of the Passover, they were just gone about; and from thence they began their second round again. In the eighth course of which second round, for so was the course of Abia (1 Chron. xxiv. 10), Zacharias heareth the glad tidings of the birth of Christ's forerunner."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' Luke i.; vol. i. p. 401.

His lot was to burn incense (ver. 9).—"Sense and reason doth more bind us to understand casting of lots for this purpose than the grammatical construction or literal strictness of the word; for though it signify obtaining a thing by lot, yet not always by lot only, but even by any other means, as Acts i. 17: Judas ἔλαχε τὸν κλῆρον, obtained the lot of his ministration. And so Julian in Misopogone, Anacreon τρυφᾶν ἔλαχεν ἐκ μουσῶν, 'sortitus est ludere, vel deliciari,' &c. But undeniable reason telleth that it must of necessity be understood of obtaining by lot in this place.

"For the priests, in every one of the twenty-four courses, were exceeding many: for Josephus relateth that there were thousands in every course. And this are we sure of from evident Scripture, that at the crowning of Joash, when an insurrection by Athaliah was feared. The priests of two courses only are reputed as a guard sufficient for the king and about the Temple (2 Kings xi. 5-7). And when Uzziah would have burned incense, there were eighty priests ready to withhold him (2 Chron. xxvi. 17). So that among so great a multitude, therein but one man being only permitted to burn incense, it was necessary that he should be chosen from among them by lot, and the lot at this time fell to Zacharias.

"This his entering into the Temple was not going into the most Holy place; nor was this his burning of incense upon the day of expiation, but it was according to the daily service of the Temple, which required that incense should be burned every morning and evening in the Holy place without the vail (Exod. xxx. 6-8). The high priest indeed once every year offered incense within the vail on the day of expiation (Levit. xvi. 29, 30); but neither was Zacharias high priest, nor was this any such service. For, first, Luke when he speaketh of the high priest, he useth to call him by that title, as ch. iii. 2, Acts iv. 6; but in all this large story of Zacharias he never termeth him other than an ordinary priest. Secondly, Zacharias was of one of the twenty-four courses. But the high priest was of no course at all; and if he had, doubtless he had been of the first; but Zacharias was of the eighth. Zacharias at this time came to burn incense by lot, but the high priest came to do it in the most Holy place by succession. Fourthly, there was no altar of incense in the most Holy place, but there was one where Zacharias ministered. Fifthly, if these courses began their round, either with the beginning of the service of the Temple, or with the beginning of the year ecclesiastical, or with the beginning of the year civil, or from any of the three festivals, then was it not possible that the eighth course should light any whit near the feast of expiation. And where to begin them but from some of these, who can imagine? Sixthly, it was not so very consonant that John the Baptist should be born a high priest, which bore the fullest resemblance of the office of our Saviour, but a priest of an inferior rank, because a servant to the high. . . .

"There were constantly in the Temple at the hour of prayer, first, the priests of that course that then served; secondly, the Levites that served under the priests; thirdly, the men of the station, as the Rabbins call them, that is, certain men that were to represent the whole congregation in putting their hands upon the heads of the sacrifices; fourthly, those whose devotion moved to leave their other employments for that time and to be present at the service of God. All these might amount to a great number indeed; but the text, in naming the whole multitude of people, seemeth to have some further meaning, as if it would intimate that this was not upon an ordinary day of the week, but upon the Sabbath day, when the congregation was full, not only of the priests of the seventh course, that went that day out of their service, but also of all the multitude of the city, which were tied that day, in a more special manner, to the public worship.

"When the burnt offering began in the Temple, the trumpeters and singers began to sound and sing, and the whole congregation to pray and worship, and all this continued until the burnt offering was finished (2 Chron. xxix. 27, 28). Then the priest took a censer full of coals from off the altar (Levit. xvi. 12) [for by the custom of that day may be guessed the custom of the rest in this ordinary circumstance], and went into the Holy place, and burnt it upon the altar (Exod. xxx. 7). In the meantime the people in the outer court were employed in prayer (2 Chron. xxix. 29). 'And on the day of expiation they were in fear while the high priest was within, till he came out in peace, and then there was great joy among them, because they were accepted' (R. Tanchum on Exod. xxxiii.)."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' Luke i.; vol. i. p. 406, &c.

"Although Zacharias be said to have been of the course of Abia, yet it can hardly be thought that he was of his seed and posterity: for we find mention but of four of the courses that returned out of Babylon, and Abias was none of them (Ezra ii. 36-39). But the whole number of those priests that did return of those four courses, being about 4290, were cast by lot into twenty-four courses, according to the primitive institution, and Zacharias was of the eighth, as Abia's course had been before the Captivity, and which yet bore his name, as the others did their names, who had denominated the courses from their first original. Of this ordering of the courses after the Captivity both Talmuds speak largely in the treatise Taanith, cap. 4.

"Whether Zacharias was of the seed of Abia or no, it is apparent by his serving in Abia's course that he was not high priest, but one of the ordinary priests that served by course as their turn came, and that had their particular employment in the service by lot. The manner of their lottery for this purpose is mentioned at large in Tamid, cap. 3; in Joma, cap. 2."—IBID. 'Harmony of the New Test.' sect. iii.; vol. i. p. 202.

Course of Abijah.—"After Scaliger, Van Til, and Bengel, S. Luke's note of time of the conception of the Baptist can be shown to furnish a remarkable corroboration of the date Dec. 25, 749 A.U.C., for the birth of Jesus. From Luke i. 5-25, the Baptist was conceived 'after the days' of Zachariah's ministry, and Zachariah was of 'the course of Abijah.' Now 'the course of Abijah' was the eighth of the twenty-four courses of the priests, each of which ministered in turn for one week. But from the Talmud we have positive information that in the year A.D. 70, on the day of the destruction of the Temple under Vespasian, the first course had just entered on their ministry; and this day again by the same authority, supported by the Jewish Calendar (Ab 9, First of Destruction of the Temple) and by Josephus (B. J. vi. 4), was the 9th or 10th of the Jewish month Ab, i.e. the 5th or 6th of August, A.D. 70 = 823 A.U.C. Whence, reckoning backwards to the year preceding our provisional year of Christ's birth, it may be ascertained that the course of Abijah went out of office, and Zachariah accordingly 'departed to his house' on October 9 or 10, 748 A.U.C. (Wies, loc. cit.) We may conclude that effect was speedily given to the gracious promise of his wife's conception, and therefore fix the event on October 10 or 11. But the conception of Christ was in the sixth month (Luke i. 26) current thereafter, i.e. in the Jewish lunar reckoning, between February 27 and March 27, 749 A.U.C. Hence in that year the ecclesiastical date of the Annunciation, viz. Lady Day, or March 25 (which Lewin would place in November, 747 A.U.C.), accurately satisfies the requirements of the case; and, reckoning thence the period of gestation, we have a striking confirmation of our provisional conclusion, that our Lord was born about December 25, 749 A.U.C.—McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 391. See also Wieseler, 'Chronolog. Synopsis,' p. 121.

COMMENTARY ON S. LUKE'S GOSPEL.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO S. LUKE.

S.V. After Luke : A. The Gospel after or according to Luke.

Vulg. Sanctum Iesus Christi Evangelium secundum Lucam.

CHAPTER I.

[1. The preface of Luke to his whole Gospel. 5. The conception of John the Baptist, 26. and of Christ. 39. The prophecy of Elizabeth, and of Mary, concerning Christ. 57. The nativity and circumcision of John. 61. The prophecy of Zacharias, both of Christ, 76. and of John.]

[Vulg. Zacharie sacerdoti annuntiat Gabriel Joannis conceptum ex Elizabeth sterili : qui angelo non credens, mutus efficitur : idemque Gabriel Mariæ annuntiat conceptum Iesu Filii Dei de Spiritu Sancto : ad Mariæ salutem Joannis exultat in utero, et Elizabeth prophetat, ipsaque Maria canticum gratiarum actionis Domino decantat : in nati Joannis circumcissione Zacharias pater, recepta loquela, canticum gratiarum actionis edit.]

1. Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, Vulg. Quoniam quidem multi conati sunt ordinare narrationem, quæ in nobis completæ sunt, rerum.

2. Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witnesses, and ministers of the word ;

3. It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus,

4. That thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed.

Of the four Evangelists S. Luke alone prefixes a preface to his Gospel ; he alone states the reasons which induced him to compose it. These are three : 1. The example of others ; 2. The great opportunity which he had possessed of learning the truth of the things related, namely, from eye-witnesses and from the ministers of Christ ; 3. The improvement of Theophilus.

1. A difference of opinion prevails as to the persons meant by S. Luke in the words " forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order." Some have supposed that he alludes to S. Matthew and S. Mark. But the most common opinion is, that he referred to some of those imperfect and inaccurate statements of our Lord's life and ministry which appeared in very early times. The names of several of these which were put forth in the times immediately succeeding the Apostles are still extant. To gain credence and circulation among men, these apocryphal gospels were generally inscribed with the name of some Apostle or Apostolic man, such as the Gospel of Thomas or the Gospel of Nicodemus. It has also been thought by many that in using the word ἐπεχείρησαν, " have taken in hand," S. Luke intended to imply a censure on their undertakings, as abortive attempts.¹

2. The eye-witnesses of the things which S. Luke relates in his Gospel could only be the Apostles, and of them specially Peter, James, and John, the seventy disciples, and the Blessed Virgin Mary. It would be impossible for S. Luke to learn what he relates respecting the birth of John the Baptist, or of the Annunciation and Birth of Jesus, from anyone but the Blessed Virgin herself. We may reverently say that the diligence of which S. Luke speaks would have been very defective if it did not lead him to apply to the Mother of Jesus as the best source for information respecting the birth and life of her Son.

It seems uncertain whether S. Luke uses the expression " the word," τοῦ λόγου, here of the Second Person in the Trinity, the sense in which S. John uses it in his Gospel and ¹ Origen, Homil. i. in Luc. ; vol. iii. p. 1802.

Eusebius, Hist. Ecclesiast. lib. iii. 24 ; vol. ii. p. 268.

S. Epiphanius, Hæres. li. 7 ; vol. i. p. 900.

Theophylact, in Luc. i. 1 ; vol. i. p. 269.

Euthymius, in Luc. i. 1 ; vol. ii. p. 201.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. i. 1 ; vol. ii. p. 1534.

S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. lib. iv. 8 ; vol. iii. p. 1222.

V. Beale, in proem. Luc. ; vol. iii. p. 307.

Epistles, or whether he meant it in its common acceptation as the word or the Gospel; that is, whether he meant to say that he had learnt the things which he related from those who had seen the Word and had been His ministers, or that he had learnt the things he related from those who had been eye-witnesses of them, and also ministers of the Gospel. The former¹ meaning of the expression τοῦ λόγου here has been held by authorities of great weight, but the latter² has been the more generally received interpretation. One apparent objection to the former interpretation is, that this would be the only passage in which either S. Matthew, S. Mark, or S. Luke, uses this expression in this sense. It has been asserted that this use of the term λόγος is peculiar to S. John.

3. Who Theophilus was has been matter of much conjecture. That he was a real individual, and not a mere name representing all devout and sincere Christians, is plain from the language used with respect to him. S. Luke here addresses him as a man who had been orally instructed in the Christian religion, either by himself or by some other; and in the Acts of the Apostles he again addresses him as the man to whom he had dedicated his former treatise. An early opinion was that, like S. Luke, Theophilus was a native of Antioch. His title "most excellent," κράτιστε, has been thought to point out that he held some office or dignity in the city, as prefect or magistrate. The same word is applied by S. Luke to Felix (Acts xxiii. 26; xxiv. 3), and also to Festus (Acts xxvi. 25), to show their official rank and station.

In using the words "to write unto thee in order," καθεξής σοι γράψαι, S. Luke does not pledge himself to relate what he tells in strict chronological order, but to give a clear and methodical account of them.

5. ¶ There was in the days of Herod, the king of Judæa, a certain priest named Zacharias, of the course of Abia: and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth.

6. And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

7. And they had no child, because that Elisabeth was barren, and they both were now well stricken in years.

The Evangelist probably makes mention of Herod, the king of Judæa, for two reasons: to mark the time of the birth of John, the precursor of Jesus, and also to intimate that the time was approaching for the Messiah Himself to appear, because the sceptre was now departed from Judah, and thus the condition required in Jacob's prophecy (Gen. xlix. 10) was already fulfilled.

This was the first Herod, the son of Antipater the Idumæan, who ruled over Judæa through the favour of the Romans, and who, by his rapacity, unscrupulousness, and successful ambition, obtained the designation of the Great.

Of no man does the Scripture say so much to enlist our favourable opinion, apart from his own personal gifts and excellences, as it does of John the Baptist. It enters into minute details respecting his miraculous conception and birth; the profession of his father, who was a priest; the descent of his mother, who was of a priestly family, and the devout and religious character of both of them.

In the time of David the descendants of Aaron, the priests, had become so numerous that, to prevent confusion and disorder, he divided them into twenty-four orders or courses, and commanded that they should take their turn in the service of the Temple as they were drawn by lot. Abia or Abijah came out the eighth of the twenty-four courses, and to his course Zacharias belonged.

Of the commandments and ordinances, ταῖς ἐντολαῖς καὶ δικαιώμασι, here mentioned, the former are supposed to embrace all the moral commandments of God as contained in the Decalogue, and the latter all the ceremonial, that is, all God's ordinances relating to the external worship of Himself. All these Zacharias and his wife observed blameless, probably not without defect, but without any sinful defect, in the sight of God.

The miraculous conception of John was the more apparent because, in addition to the natural barrenness of Elisabeth, they were both now beyond the age when, generally speaking, children would be born to them.

8. And it came to pass, that while he executed the priest's office before God in the order of his course,

9. According to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was to burn incense when he went into the Temple of the Lord.

10. And the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the time of incense.

11. And there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar of incense.

12. And when Zacharias saw him, he was troubled, and fear fell upon him.

Was Zacharias one of the ordinary priests, or was he the high priest? On the answer to this question depends the whole explanation of the preceding passage. The early ¹ Origen, in Luc. i. 2; vol. iii. p. 1804.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. i. 2; vol. ii. p. 1535.

S. Jerome, prolog. in Luc.; vol. vii. p. 17.

Euthymius, in Luc. i. 2; vol. ii. p. 203.

² Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 2; vol. ii. p. 6.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 2; vol. viii. p. 627.

writers¹ of the Church appear to have been under the impression that Zacharias was the high priest. For many centuries this was the generally received opinion. Nicholas de Lyra in the fourteenth century was among the first to question the correctness of this interpretation. The arguments which he advanced against it have been received as sufficiently convincing by most commentators since that time.² The considerations which lead to the conclusion that Zacharias was not the high priest are: 1. The object of S. Luke here evidently is to exalt John the Baptist, by saying all that could be said in praise of his father and mother, both as regards their moral character and their social position. To say that his mother was of a priestly family, and that his father was a priest, was a great distinction. But how much greater would it have been if he could have said that his father was the high priest. If he could have said this, under the circumstances, we may almost conclude that he would have said it, but he did not. 2. The priest's office in the daily service of the Temple might have been described as to burn incense, because he had to burn incense to God on the altar every morning and every evening (Exod. xxx. 7, 8), and each of those times might have been described as "the time of incense." But the high priest's duty on the day of atonement could scarcely have been described in these words: for on that day the high priest had to sprinkle the blood of the sin-offering upon the mercy-seat and before the mercy-seat, and thus to make an atonement for his own sins and the sins of the people. It is true that on the day of atonement the high priest had to take incense into the holy of holies, and to burn incense so as to fill the holy of holies with a cloud of it. But this appears to have been a subsidiary part of the high priest's office on that day, while the chief part was to sprinkle the blood of the sin-offering (Levit. xvi.). The Evangelist would scarcely have mentioned that which was the least important, and have omitted the chief end of the day—the atonement for sin. We may therefore fairly conclude that, had this been the day of atonement, and Zacharias the high priest, S. Luke would have described his office in different terms, and not as "to burn incense," and the time for the atonement as "the time of incense." 3. The angel appeared to Zacharias "standing on the right side of the altar of incense." But if Zacharias were the high priest, and this were the day of atonement, he must be ministering in the holy of holies, where there was no altar of incense.

The considerations that appeared to the early writers sufficient to convince them that Zacharias was the high priest, and that this was the day of atonement, were: 1. That Zacharias was in the Temple, and "the whole multitude of the people" (πάν τὸ πλῆθος τοῦ λαοῦ) without. This, they reasoned, always happened on the day of atonement, and was not likely to take place in the daily service of the Temple, when incense was offered either in the morning or evening. 2. Because Zacharias was alone: hence they concluded that this must be the day of atonement; for the only time when the priest was expressly commanded to perform his office before God alone was when the high priest went into the holy of holies on the day of atonement (Levit. xvi. 17). 3. The people were without praying to God for His acceptance of the high priest's offering for their atonement. The fact that Zacharias had obtained by lot (ἐλαχες) the right to minister before God on this day, did not appear to the Fathers a sufficient objection to his being the high priest, and to this being the day of atonement. They knew that, according to the original institution, the high priest held his office for life, or until he was in some way disqualified from ministering before God. They also knew that, owing to the corruption of the times preceding the birth of our Saviour, the office had often been held for a short period only, and that, at this very time, there were living several men who had been appointed to the office of high priest. Thus they explained the casting of lots for the right to minister on this day, of the several men who had been appointed high priests casting lots among themselves, which of them should minister before God on this day of atonement.

On the whole, there is the most reason to believe that Zacharias was one of the ordinary priests, and not the high priest; that he was ministering not on the day of atonement, and therefore not in the holy of holies, but in the usual daily morning or evening service of the Temple, and in the holy place where the altar of incense was placed.

13. But the angel said unto him, Fear not, Zacharias: for thy prayer is heard; and thy wife Elisabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John.

14. And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth.

15. For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink; and he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb.

16. And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God.

17. And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to

¹ S. Ambrose, in Luc. i. 8; vol. ii. p. 1542.

S. Augustine, in Joan. tract. xlix. 27; vol. iii. p. 1758.

V. Bede, in Luc. i. 8; vol. iii. pp. 310, 782.

S. Chrysostom, Hom. in Diem Nat. Jesus Christ. 5.

Theophylact, in Luc. i. 8; vol. i. p. 272.

Euthymius, in Luc. i. 8; vol. ii. p. 207.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. ii. p. 18.

Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 9; vol. ii. p. 15.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 9; vol. viii. p. 629.

Bp. of Lincoln, in Luc. i. 9.

Dean Alford, in Luc. i. 9.

the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.

Margin, lyc.

Vulg. ut convertat corda patrum in filios, et incredulos ad prudentiam iustorum, parare hominibus perfectum.

It may be, as some think,¹ that, as a priest executing his office in the service of the Temple, Zacharias would not mingle his prayers for his own private wishes with those which he offered for the public good, but would confine himself solely to what concerned the people at large, their general welfare and the forgiveness of their sins, and especially their welfare in the speedy appearance of the Messiah, which all devout and intelligent Jews were now anxiously looking for. Others² have held that the tone of the angel's message, which related entirely to the fulfilment of Zacharias' desire for a son, showed what had been the subject of his prayer on this occasion. But it is possible that his prayer for offspring may not have been offered in this service, but at some former time, and before all hope had expired on the score of the age of himself and his wife; and that the angel now spake of it as heard, because an answer to his prayer for offspring implied an answer also to his prayer for the coming of the Messiah. A son is promised to Zacharias, who should go before the Messiah and be His forerunner. But if the forerunner of the Messiah is at hand, the Messiah Himself cannot be far behind.

The angel says that the son which shall be born to Zacharias shall be a source of joy and gladness to himself and to many; and to express this, he gives him the name of John, —that is, gratiosus, "full of grace."

But, besides being a source of joy and gladness to many, John should also be great in the sight of the Lord—that is, great in truth and reality, and not merely in the estimation of men; and the angel goes on to indicate three different ways in which this should be: 1. In the life of self-denial and abstinence from bodily pleasures which he should lead; 2. In the gifts of the Holy Spirit with which he should be endued, even before his birth into the world; 3. In the zealous execution of his office as the forerunner of the Messiah.

1. John's abstinence from bodily pleasures is expressed by drinking no wine or strong drink (οἶκα). The latter includes all intoxicating drink besides wine.

2. What had been already said partially of Jeremiah (i. 5) is here said more fully of John. He shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from (ἐν ἐκ) his mother's womb. Two explanations have been given of these words. Some³ have thought that they could only mean to imply a future sanctification, or a predestination to sanctification, on the ground that, according to our Saviour's own words (John iii. 3, &c.), before a child could be born again, or born of grace, he must first be naturally born, or born into the world, or that he must be born (nasci) before he could be born again (renasci). To this it has been replied⁴ that for a new birth, or a renewal of nature by grace, the conception or infusion of life may be counted sufficient, instead of an actual birth into the world. Hence this passage has been generally understood⁵ as implying an actual sanctification, a purification and exaltation, of the nature of John, even before his birth into the world. A proof of this he gave in recognizing the presence of his Lord, and in showing supernatural signs of pleasure because of Him.

3. John should also be Elijah, not because he was Elijah after any form of metempsychosis, not because the soul of Elijah had reappeared in him, but because he possessed the spirit and power, the zeal and ability to turn men from sin and unbelief to holiness and faith in Jesus as the Messiah. Some⁶ writers interpreted this, not of Elijah as he appeared in the days of Ahab, but of Elijah as they supposed he will appear in the last times; that John should have the same zeal and the same success in turning men from sin to Christ before His first coming, as Elijah will have before His second coming.

In describing the work of John, the angel quotes the words of the prophet Malachi, who, speaking of Elijah, says, "He shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers" (iv. 6); that is, he will reconcile those who are at variance. The angel quotes only the first member of this sentence, and then adds, as if to show how John will reconcile them, "and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just:" he will turn the disobedient, the unbelieving, and the unwilling to the faith and practice of the wise, of those who believe in Jesus as the Messiah.⁷ In preparing the minds of men by his example, by his preaching, and by his baptism, to receive the faith of Jesus, the whole mission of John was comprised.

18. And Zacharias said unto the angel, Whereby shall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years.

19. And the angel answering said unto him, I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God;

¹ S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. ii. 1; vol. iii. p. 1333.

² V. Bede, in Luc. i. 13; vol. iii. p. 311.

³ S. Chrysostom, de incomp. Dei natura, Hom. ii. 2.

⁴ Theophylact, in Luc. i. 13; vol. i. p. 272.

⁵ Euthymius, in Luc. i. 13; vol. iii. p. 209.

⁶ Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 13; vol. ii. p. 19.

⁷ S. Augustine, Ep. 57 in Darlaunum, vii. &c.; vol. ii. p. 840.

S. Jerome, in Jeremiah i. 5; vol. iv. p. 682.

⁸ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 15; vol. viii. p. 631.

⁸ S. Cyprian, Ep. 73 ad Jubaianum; 25; Migne's Patrol. vol. iii. p. 1126.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. i. 15; vol. ii. p. 1547.

Origen, Homil. iv. in Luc.; vol. iii. p. 1811.

S. Cyril Hierosol., Cateches. iii. 6, p. 435.

⁹ S. Augustine, in Joan. tract. iv. 5; vol. iii. p. 1408.

S. Gregorius Magnus, in Evangel. Homil. vii. 1; vol. ii. p. 1099.

Euthymius, in Luc. i. 17; vol. iii. p. 213.

¹⁰ Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 17; vol. ii. p. 24.

and am sent to speak unto thee, and to shew thee these glad tidings.

Vulg. Ego sum Gabriel, qui asto ante Deum; et missus sum loqui ad te, et hæc tibi evangelizare.

20. And, behold, thou shalt be dumb, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed, because thou believest not my words, which shall be fulfilled in their season.

Vulg. pro eo quod non credidisti verbis meis.

The fault of Zacharias here seems to have been distrust, not distrust of God's power to perform what the angel had promised, but distrust of the angel's character, whether he were really commissioned by God to deliver such a message to him. As the barrenness of Elisabeth, her age as well as his own, shot through his mind, what the angel promised appeared to him so contrary to all human probability, that he hesitated to believe that he had been sent to declare such things to him, at least he hesitated so far as to require a supernatural sign from him, and asked, "Whereby (κατὰ τί) shall I know this?" To infuse the necessary faith into the mind of Zacharias, the angel goes on to disclose his own name and nature, the mission on which he is sent to Zacharias, and the authority committed to him on this occasion.

1. The angel may have mentioned his name to remind Zacharias that he was the same who, about 456 years before, had given account to Daniel of the Messiah's sufferings (viii. 16, ix. 21), and who now appears to him to foretell the birth of the Messiah's forerunner; or by the meaning of his name, "the strength of God," or "God is my strength," to recall to his recollection by whose unlimited power what he had promised should be fulfilled. The words of the angel, "which stand in the presence of God," are probably but another form of expressing what is said by the angel Raphael in the Book of Tobit, "I am Raphael, one of the seven holy angels which present the prayers of the saints, and which go in and out before the glory of the Holy One" (Tobit xii. 15). Seven spirits are said to be before the throne of God (Apoc. i. 4), which are interpreted of these seven angels.¹ Michael is supposed to be called the archangel (ὁ ἀρχάγγελος), either as being the chief of these seven or as being one of a higher order of angels (Dan. x. 13, xii. 1; Jude 9; Rev. xii. 7).

2. The greatness of the angel's message in the eyes of God may be said to be shown by Gabriel's being sent from heaven to deliver it; and its importance to Zacharias and others, by his giving it the same name (εὐαγγελισσάθαι σοι ταῦτα) as that by which the Gospel was afterwards to be called. The message which announces the birth of the forerunner of the Saviour is part of the glad tidings of the Gospel, and is called by the same name.

3. That the sin which Zacharias committed was not a very grievous one, we may perhaps gather from the nature and duration of the punishment inflicted on him for it. His punishment was also to be the sign for which he asked when he said, "Whereby shall I know this?" To Zacharias it was a sign to increase his belief in the words of the angel; to the people it was a sign of the supernatural character of John's birth. Zacharias was to remain dumb until he should show his belief in the angel's words and his obedience to his command to call his son by the name of John. This dumbness probably also included deafness, as in the case of one born dumb, who is also deaf. In verse 22 Zacharias is called κωφός, which means either deaf or dumb, or both; and when they wish to ascertain the name of the child from Zacharias, they do not speak to him as to one who could hear but not speak, but they make signs to him.

21. And the people waited for Zacharias, and marvelled that he tarried so long in the Temple.

Vulg. Et erat plebs expectans Zachariam.

22. And when he came out, he could not speak unto them: and they perceived that he had seen a vision in the Temple: for he beckoned unto them, and remained speechless.

Vulg. Et ipse erat immens illis, et permansit mutus.

23. And it came to pass, that, as soon as the days of his ministration were accomplished, he departed to his own house.

24. And after those days his wife Elisabeth conceived, and hid herself five months, saying,

25. Thus hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein He looked on me, to take away my reproach among men.

The whole time of Zacharias' ministration, as there is every reason to think, lasted eight days. During this time he would lodge in the Temple in a place appointed for the ministering priests, and would not depart out of the Temple until the time of his ministration was ended. After he departed to his own house, his wife Elisabeth conceived. Why she hid herself for five months is not stated, and many different reasons have been assigned by commentators, some more probable than others, but all founded on conjecture.

26. And in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth,

27. To a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary.

S. of the house and lineage of David.
Vulg. de domo David.

28. And the angel came in unto her, and said,

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 19; vol. viii. p. 632.

Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee : blessed art thou among women.

Margin, graciously accepted, or much graced.
V. And he came in: A. came unto her: S.V. omit blessed art thou among women.
Vulg. Et ingressus angelus ad eam, dixit: Ave gratia plena: Dominus tecum: benedicta tu in mulieribus.

"In the sixth month" is generally understood here as meaning at the end of the sixth month; that is, six months after the conception of John the same angel Gabriel is sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, to a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph. For the reasons for believing that the word "espoused," μενηστευμένην, is used here to imply a legal marriage, see S. Matthew i. 18, page 72.

If the interpretation of the early Church be correct, the translators of our Authorized Version have missed the meaning of κεχαριτωμένην; for by their rendering "highly favoured" they evidently understood the word as expressing the magnitude of God's favour toward the Virgin in selecting her as the instrument for the Incarnation. The Fathers,¹ on the other hand, invariably apply it to express her personal condition previous and preparatory to her conception of Jesus, to describe the purity of soul and body produced in her by the Holy Spirit, in order that she might be a fitting instrument for the great Mystery of the Incarnation, and that she might be worthy to become the Mother of God. Hence they translate κεχαριτωμένην gratia plena, "filled with grace," or "full of grace."² Cornelius a Lapide says that the Syriac, Arabic, Egyptian, Ethiopic, and Persian Versions also translate it in this sense, as does also the Vulgate.

As the cause of this fulness of grace, the angel goes on to say, "The Lord is with thee."

Others are spoken of in the New Testament as full of the Holy Ghost besides the Blessed Virgin, as Jesus Himself and also S. Stephen (Acts vi. 5). In each of these cases the word "full" differs in its degree of fulness according to the capacity to receive. Jesus has been compared to the source or spring (fontes), the Virgin Mary to a stream nearest the source (fluvius), and S. Stephen to a streamlet farther from the source (viculus).³

The early Fathers of the Church being harassed by no fears of encouraging idolatrous worship of the Virgin Mary, were never niggard in their reverence for her, and were under no temptation to run into the opposite excess, and to rob her of any honour which was really her due. Hence they⁴ were accustomed to institute comparisons between Eve and the Blessed Virgin, and to show that as Eve was the mother of death to man, so the Virgin Mary, through the Incarnation, was the mother of life; that as Eve, by her ready compliance with the temptation of Satan, brought sin and death into the world, so the Virgin Mary, by her obedience, was made the instrument through which man could regain life and immortality.

29. And when she saw him, she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be.

S.V. omit when she saw him: S.V. at the saying.
Vulg. quæcum audisset, turbata est in sermone ejus.

30. And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary : for thou hast found favour with God.

31. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call His name JESUS.

32. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest : and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David :

33. And He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever ; and of His kingdom there shall be no end.

34. Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man ?

Vulg. quomam virum non cognosco.

In his address to Mary the angel quotes part of Isaiah's prophecy (vii. 14) of the birth of Jesus of a Virgin. But this she appears either not to have recollected or not to have understood ; for she supposes that the birth of this Child was to be after the ordinary manner, that is, through marriage, and that the angel is addressing her as a married woman, and therefore as in a condition to bring this about ; and she hastens to correct any impression he may have formed from her condition as a married woman, and says, "How shall this be, seeing I know not man?" For though married, she had no nuptial intercourse with her husband. Though connected with Joseph by ties which usually imply such intercourse, this was not the case with them ; for, influenced by a p. 1318.

¹ S. Ambrose, in Luc. i. 28 ; vol. ii. p. 1555.

S. Augustine, Enchiridion, 36 ; vol. vi. p. 250.

Sermo cxxvi. in Natali Joh. Baptistæ, v. ; vol. v.

S. Jerome, Epist. lxxv. 9, in Principium de Psal. xlv. ; vol. i. p. 628.

V. Bede, in Luc. i. 28 ; vol. iii. p. 316.

Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 28 ; vol. ii. p. 33.

Jansenius, in Luc. i. 28 ; cap. iii. p. 25.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 28 ; vol. viii. p. 635.

² Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 28 ; vol. ii. p. 34.

³ S. Justin Martyr, Dialog. sec. 327, p. 353.

S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iii. 22 (alias 33) ; p. 957.

v. 19 ; p. 1175.

S. Cyril Hierosol. Cateches. xii. 15 ; p. 741.

S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lxxviii. 18 ; vol. ii. p. 728.

Tertullian, de Carne Christi, cap. xvii. ; vol. ii. p. 782.

S. Jerome, Epist. xxii. ad Eustoch. 21 ; vol. i. p. 408.

S. Augustine, de Agone Christiano, 22 ; vol. vi. p. 605.

⁴ Full of grace (κεχαριτωμένην).—Its simple meaning is that Mary was the recipient of special grace, which it is obviously unfor-and unnecessary to dilute into favoured or loved. In this sense she was gracious or full of grace.—M^{rs} FLETCHER, New Testament, i. 688.

divine instinct, a supernatural prompting, Joseph and she were leading a life of holy celibacy. It is most probable that her words, "I know not man," have reference to Joseph.¹

The words "How shall this be, seeing I know not man?" (ἄνδρα οὐ γινώσκω) are susceptible of three meanings:—

1. How shall this be, for I am not married, and therefore know not man?

2. How shall this be, because, though married to Joseph, I know him not? for we are leading a life of holy celibacy.

3. How shall this be, for I am stedfastly purposed to lead a life of virginity?

Of these the first is the least probable; for it is contrary to the facts of the case, and it neither offers any opposition to the angel's words, which her answer was evidently intended to do, nor does it convey any information not before known to him; for, as an unmarried woman, it would be taken for granted that she knew not man. The second is the most probable; for her object was to rectify the judgment which she supposed the angel had formed from her condition as a married woman. The third, in its general tenor, is much the same as the second, but less definite. As here, the present tense is frequently used to express a future purpose as well as a present habit. "I know not man" may mean "Hitherto I have not known man, and it is my firm intention for the future not to know him."²

35. And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.

36. And, behold, thy cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age: and this is the sixth month with her, who was called barren.

37. For with God nothing shall be impossible.

38. And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word. And the angel departed from her.

That considerable difficulty surrounds the expression "the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee," is clear from the number of explanations that have been suggested of the word "overshadow" (ἐπισκιάσει). Cornelius a Lapide enumerates no less than eight. Several of these are by men whose names carry great weight with them in the interpretation of Scripture. That which appears to me the best is to this effect: that as a cloud conceals that which it overshadows, so the angel uses this term of the Holy Ghost to denote that the way in which He will accomplish His work will be hidden from the knowledge of men. The Holy Ghost shall cause the Virgin to conceive and bring forth the Son of God, but how this shall be is beyond the power of man to discover or to comprehend.

It may be that the power of the Highest (δύναμις ὑψίστου) is used as synonymous with the Holy Ghost, with perhaps the additional intimation that her conception has nothing human, nothing earthly, about it, but is altogether supernatural, wrought by God Himself. Conceived by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, Jesus was in every sense holy,³ and did not possess in His flesh the sinful stain, the seed of sin, which all Adam's descendants inherited from him. Hence it is said "that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." He shall be called what He is in reality, the Son of God.

To strengthen the Virgin's faith in the stupendous work which he came to announce, her miraculous conception, the angel proceeds to relate the conception of her cousin Elisabeth, who, after having passed all her married life barren and now become old, had, by God's special mercy, conceived. By this mention of her cousin, too, the angel prompted the Virgin to visit her, and thus further to carry out the counsels of God.

Language fails to express the importance to mankind of the Virgin's answer, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word:" for it was at this very instant, as it is reverently believed, that her conception took place. An individual writer or two there have been who thought that she had conceived before this, but the general opinion is that she conceived when she uttered these words, which were words, not merely of assent or willingness, but of eager desire.⁴

Elisabeth, who was of the tribe of Levi, is here called the cousin (ἡ συγγενής) of Mary, who was of the tribe of Judah. This may be because some priestly ancestor of Elisabeth had married a wife from the tribe of Judah, and their descendant would then be related to Mary: for the law restricting marriage to those who were of the same tribe did not relate to priests, the object of this law being to keep the patrimony in the same tribe and in the same family. But the priests were exempt from this, because no portion of the land was assigned to them. Some suppose that Elisabeth may be called cousin (ἡ συγγενής) as being of the same nation and belonging to the same tribal district.⁵

¹ S. Augustine, de Sancta Virginitate, iv.; vol. vi. p. 398.

Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 34; vol. ii. p. 43.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 34; vol. viii. p. 640.

² S. Thomas Aquinas, de Summa, part. iii. quest. 28, art. 4; vol. iv. p. 264.

³ S. Augustine, de Nuptiis et Concep. i. 12; vol. x. p. 421.

⁴ S. Leo Magnus, Serm. in Nativit. Dei, iv. 3; vol. i. p. 205.

S. Leo Magnus, Serm. in Nativit. Dei, v. 5; vol. i. p. 211.

⁵ vii. 2; vol. i. p. 217.

x. 4; vol. i. p. 232.

⁴ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. iii. p. 31.

Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 38; vol. ii. p. 51.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 38; vol. viii. p. 643.

⁵ Eusebius, Quæst. Evang. ad Steph. i. 7; vol. iv. p. 890.

39. And Mary arose in those days, and went into the hill country with haste, into a city of Juda;¹

40. And entered into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elisabeth.

The hill country of Judæa, anciently the mountains of the Amorites, is a name given to a series of conical but round-capped hills, on a high plateau, intersected with valleys and ravines, running from the south of Judæa towards the north. Though naturally bare of herbage and covered with stones, yet, by means of terraces of soil raised round the hills, and attention to the irrigation, this district was in ancient as well as in modern times among the most fruitful parts of Palestine. Here lay the brook or the valley of Eshcol, from which the spies cut down the cluster of grapes (Numb. xiii. 23). The cities or towns scattered about this region were always numerous and thickly inhabited.

Many writers have supposed that Hebron was the city in the hill country of Judæa where Zacharias and Elisabeth dwelt; others that Juttah, a little to the south of Hebron, was the more likely place. Both these were among the cities given to the children of Aaron the priest, and Hebron was one of the six cities of refuge (Josh. xxi. 13, &c.).

To estimate the strength of the desire which Mary had to visit her cousin, after the suggestion of the angel, we must take into account the distance between Nazareth and the hill country of Judæa, and the dangers and fatigue attending such a journey. The distance from Nazareth to Jerusalem would be about sixty miles, and from Jerusalem to the hill country about twenty more. Hence four days would be consumed in the journey. No mention is made of Joseph here, and Mary could not make this journey alone. If, as is generally believed, this was about the time of the Passover, she may have travelled to Jerusalem in company with friends who were going to the Passover, and, after offering up her prayers and thanksgivings in the Temple, have proceeded to the house of Zacharias and Elisabeth.¹

It would be unworthy of all that is recorded of Mary to conclude that she was urged to take this journey by any suspicion of the truth of the angel's words, or even by any desire for further confirmation of them. Her sole object doubtless was a holy sympathy with her cousin, and a desire to impart to her some share in the blessing which she had herself received.

41. And it came to pass, that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her womb; and Elisabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost:

¹ S. the babe leaped in her womb for joy.

42. And she spake out with a loud voice, and said, Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb.

43. And whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord should come to me?

44. For, lo, as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in mine ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy.

45. And blessed is she that believed: for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord.

Margm, which believed that there.

Vulg. Et beata, quæ credidisti, quoniam perficiuntur ea, quæ dicta sunt tibi a Domino.

This movement of John² in the womb was not a merely

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 39: vol. viii. p. 645.

² Origen, in Luc. Hom. vii.: vol. iii. p. 1817.

S. Cyril. Hierosol. Cat. iii. 6. p. 435.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 14; Homil. xii.

S. Cyril Alex. de Rect. Fid. ad Reginas ex Evang. Luc.; vol. ix. p. 1275.

Theophylact, in Luc. i. 41; vol. i. p. 278.

Euthymius, in Luc. i. 41; vol. iii. p. 229.

S. Ambrose, de Fide, lib. iv. ix. 113, &c.; vol. iii. p. 639.

Com. in Luc. i. 41; vol. ii. p. 1560.

S. Augustine, Ep. 57 ad Dardanum, vii. 25; vol. ii. p. 840.

S. Jerome, Dialog. contr. Lucif. 7; vol. ii. p. 162.

Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 41; vol. ii. p. 54.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 41; vol. viii. p. 646.

* Into the hill country . . . into a city of Juda (εις την ὄρειαν . . . εἰς πόλιν Ἰουδα).—We soon began to pass from the 'south country' of Judah to the 'hill country,' and marked indeed was the change, from easy smooth tracks over gently rolling downs, to rocky slippery paths up and down narrow valleys, between naked rugged hills full of caves, dreary and now (in winter) barren, save where a few patches of corn had been here and there sown in the hollows. Full of meaning came home the question of Amos, himself an inhabitant of the south country, 'Shall horses run up the rock? will one plough there with oxen?' (vi. 12.) There is a wonderful reality in many of these apparently trifling expressions of Holy Scripture, which day by day our journey brings home to the mind—the wilderness, 'the south country,' 'the hill country,' all in Judah, yet each so distinct, so characteristic in every feature.—TRISTRAM, 'Land of Israel,' p. 387.

"The walk up the valley revealed to us for the first time what Judah was everywhere else in the days of its prosperity. Bare and stony as are the hill-sides, not an inch of ground is lost. Terraces, when the ground is not too rocky, support the soil. Ancient vineyards cling to the lower slopes; olive, mulberry, almond, fig, and pomegranate trees fill every available cranny to the very crest; while the bottom of the valley is carefully tilled for corn, carrots, and cauliflowers, which will soon give place to melons and cucumbers. Streamlets of fresh water trickled on each side of our path. The production and the fertility, as evidenced even in winter, is extraordinary; and the culture is equal to that of Malta. That catacomb of perished cities, the hill country of Judah, through whose labyrinths we yesterday wandered, is all explained by a walk up the Vale of Eshcol; and those who doubt the ancient records of the population, or the census of David or his successors, have only to look at this valley, and by the light of its commentary to read the story of those cities."—Ibid. p. 397.

natural or casual circumstance, but was altogether supernatural and prophetic. It was not emotion in the mother that imparted motion to the child in her womb; for at the sound of Mary's salutation the child first receives the impression, and from him the mother. It may be that one object for which John was filled with the Holy Ghost before his birth was that he might recognize the presence of his Lord, and by a supernatural sign announce this to his mother, which she, being also filled with the Holy Ghost, would understand.

Elisabeth recognizes the blessing which Mary had received, that she had been blessed, not as much as any woman ever had been or ever would be blessed, but more than any other woman, above all other women. Being filled with the Holy Ghost, she understood that Mary bore in her womb Him who was blessed above all things created in heaven or in earth, and that Mary, in being selected for this office, was blessed above all other women.¹

¹ V. Bede, in Luc. i. 42; vol. iii. p. 320.
Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 42; vol. ii. p. 56.

The Blessed Virgin, Mother of God (Θεοτόκος).—"The Blessed Virgin was consecrated to be a temple of the Divinity in a singular manner; for the eternal Son of God, by an ineffable conjunction, united Himself to that human nature which was miraculously conceived and formed in her, even whilst it was within her; and so He that was born of her, at the very time that He was born of her, was Θεογενής, God and Man. Oh, astonishing condescension of the Son of God! Oh, wonderful advancement of the Blessed Virgin! And therefore we daily sing in our Te Deum, 'Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ; Thou art the everlasting Son of the Father. When Thou tookest upon Thee to deliver man, Thou didst not abhor the Virgin's womb.' Upon which account the Fathers of the Third General Council at Ephesus, convened against Nestorius, approved the title of Θεοτόκος, the Mother of God, given to the Blessed Virgin. They approved it, I say. They did not first invent it, as some have ignorantly affirmed. And therefore they themselves in their Synodical Epistle say, that the holy Fathers before them doubted not to call the Blessed Virgin Θεοτόκον, Deiparam, the Mother of God. Indeed, a whole age before that Council we find Eusebius expressly giving that title to the sacred Virgin in his third book of the Life of Constantine, chap. 43. And Socrates, a most credible witness in this matter, in the seventh book of his Eccl. Hist. chap. 32, assures us that Origen, long before Eusebius, largely explained and asserted that title as applied to the Blessed Virgin. And to go yet higher, we have heard Irenæus, who was a scholar to a scholar of the Apostles, magnifying the Virgin upon this account, that she did portare Deum, bear God within her. If she did portare Deum, she did parere Deum; if she bore God, she brought Him forth too, and so was Θεοτόκος, the Mother of God; that is, of Him that was God. Nay, the blessed martyr and disciple of the Apostles, Ignatius, in his Epistle to the Ephesians, edit. Vos. p. 27, feared not to say, 'Our God Jesus Christ was conceived of Mary.' But what need we search after human authorities when the inspired Elisabeth, in her divine rapture, a little before my text, ver. 43, plainly gives the Blessed Virgin the same title?—And whence is this to me, that the Mother of my Lord should come unto me?—where μήτηρ τοῦ Κυρίου, the Mother of our Lord, is doubtless of the same import with Θεοτόκος, the Mother of God; for the title of our Lord belongs to Christ chiefly, as He is our God. And we are to conceive Elisabeth, being filled with the Spirit, to have given this title of her Lord to the Babe in the Blessed Virgin's womb, not according to the

The Holy Spirit endues Elisabeth with fervour, so that "she spake out with a loud voice," and with knowledge, so that she spake of things past, present, and future. She pronounces Mary blessed, because she believed; she declares her the mother of her Lord, and foretells that there shall be a performance of the things that were told her from the Lord.

Elisabeth addresses Mary as "the mother of my Lord" (ἡ μήτηρ τοῦ Κυρίου μου). In the Third General Council, held at Ephesus A.D. 431, these words were interpreted to mean that Mary was the Mother of God—Θεοτόκος, Deipara. Nestorius, bishop of Constantinople, who did not hold the Catholic doctrine, that there was only One Person in Christ, of course opposed this also. He held that the Word was united to Man, but was not made Man, and that the Virgin was not Θεοτόκος, the Mother of God, but the Mother of the Man, or, as he expressed it, the Mother of Christ, Χριστόκος, intending by the term Christ, not the poor, narrow, vulgar sense of the degenerate Jews, but according to the most august and highest sense of the word, viz. that He is so our Lord as to be our God also."—BISHOP BULL, Sermon on Luke i. 48, 49; vol. i. p. 153.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 42; vol. viii. p. 647.

"It is to be observed that the ancient Doctors of the Church, when they contended with heretics about the title Θεοτόκος, Mother of God, designed not by that title so much to advance the honour of the Blessed Virgin, as to secure the real and inseparable union of the two natures in Christ, and to show that the human nature which Christ took of the holy Virgin never subsisted separately from the Divine Person of the Son of God."—Ibid. vol. i. p. 164.

The Virgin Mary's dignity.—"The nature which the Son of God assumed of His Virgin Mother is our common nature, which is by that assumption transcendently, to our own amazement and the admiration of angels, dignified and advanced.

"The eternal Word, by His Incarnation or being made flesh, intended not directly to honour the Blessed Virgin in particular, but mankind in general. He intended thereby to declare us His brethren, by being made of the same flesh and blood that we are, as the divine author of the Epistle to the Hebrews assures us, chap. ii. ver. 14.—'Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same;' and verse 17, 'Wherefore in all things it behoved Him to be made like unto His brethren.' In a word, the Son of God therefore honoured the Blessed Virgin so far, as in and from her to become Man, that He might advance human nature by assuming it into the Unity of His Divine Person; and that, being born of her, He might procure not only hers, but our common salvation."—Ibid. vol. i. p. 177.

The Invocation of the Blessed Virgin Mary.—"There is not one title to be found in any genuine writer of the first three hundred years after Christ (to go no farther) that may give any the least countenance to the invocation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, or of any other saint; but very many most express testimonies against it in all of them: and therefore we are most certain that the doctrine of the Church of Rome concerning the invocation of the Blessed Virgin and the other saints was none of the doctrines delivered by the holy Apostles to the Church of Christ. And for our part, we are content and fully satisfied with that knowledge of Christ alone which was preached in the rude earth of persecutions and martyrs; that is, in the best and most glorious ages of the Church."—Ibid. vol. i. p. 167.

God-Man, but the Man connected with God. Nestorius would allow the expression "the Mother of God," provided that those who used it confessed that it was used in an improper sense, and only because Jesus Christ was the Temple of God; for the main point in his heresy was that the Son of God was united with the Son of Man, but not made Man.¹

In opposition to Nestorius the Church Catholic held that there were two natures in the Son of Mary, the Divine and Human, and that these, through the Hypostatic Union, formed One Person, and that the term "Mother of God," Θεοτόκος, was rightly applied to Mary.

46. And Mary said, My soul doth magnify the Lord,

47. And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.

48. For He hath regarded the low estate of His handmaiden:^a for, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed.

49. For He that is mighty hath done to me great things; and holy is His name.

50. And His mercy is on them that fear Him from generation to generation.

51. He hath shewed strength with His arm;

He hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

Vulg. dispersit superbi mentis confusum.

52. He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree.

53. He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich He hath sent empty away.

54. He hath holpen His servant Israel, in remembrance of His mercy;

55. As He spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed for ever.

Several triumphal songs are recorded in the Old Testament, such as that by Moses (Exod. xv. 1), Deborah (Judges v. 1), Hannah (1 Sam. ii. 1), Hezekiah (Isaiah xxxviii. 9), and the three children (the Benedicite), and these all after some special instance of God's mercy. But never before had triumphal song such a theme as this, the fulfilment of God's long-promised mercy in the Incarnation.

The subject² of this song has been divided into three parts:

1. From the 46th verse to the end of the 49th, the Virgin praises God for His great mercy vouchsafed to herself in making her the instrument in the Incarnation; 2. From the 50th verse to the end of the 53rd she sings His praises for

¹ S. Cyril Alex. Dialog. cum Nestorio, quod S. Virgo Deipara; vol. ix. p. 250, &c.

² S. Gregorius Magus, lib. xi. Epist. 67 (alias ix. 61); vol. iii. p. 1207. [Maldonatus, Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 43; vol. ii. p. 56.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 43; vol. viii. p. 648.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 46; vol. viii. p. 649.

^a The low estate (τὴν ταπεινότητα) of His handmaiden.—“Our translators have well rendered ‘He hath regarded the low estate of His handmaiden;’ for the word ταπεινότης signifies here the same with ταπεινός, a mean, base, or vile condition, as our body of a base condition, or our vile body (Phil. iii. ver. 21). And it is often by the Seventy joined with a verb signifying to behold, respect, or regard, as here, and used to express a poor, mean condition; or, which is more, an afflicted condition, whereby one is brought very low, as we use to phrase it. So 2 Kings xiv. ver. 26. ‘The Lord saw the affliction of Israel;’ and Psal. xlv. ver. 18. ‘Look upon mine affliction.’ But it is especially to be noted that the words of Hannah upon much a like occasion (1 Sam. i. ver. 11), are in the Seventy almost the same with the words of my text.—‘If, indeed, Thou wilt look upon the affliction of Thine handmaiden,’ Erasmus had long ago observed this, and corrected the vulgar Latin, too closely followed here by our older English translation, which hath it, ‘He hath regarded humilitatem ancille, the humility or lowliness of His handmaiden,’ as that signifies the virtue of the mind which we commonly call humility, but is more properly called modesty, and by the Greeks termed ταπεινοφροσύνη. . . . The judicious Maldonat gives us this clear account of it: ‘If we weigh,’ saith he, ‘the sense of these words, it is so much the less credible that Mary should here have spoken of her own virtue, by how much more she excelled in that virtue; for I cannot think it to be humility for a man not only to know, but also to proclaim himself to be humble. Humility is the only virtue that knows not itself; and I cannot tell how it comes to pass that the humble person, as soon as he knows or makes known his own humility, loseth it. And besides, it was not the design of the most humble and holy Virgin to declare that, by her merits, she obtained so great a benefit; but rather to profess herself utterly unworthy of such a favour. She intended not, therefore, to say that her virtue, but rather her low and mean estate, and in a word her unworthiness, was regarded by God; that although she was altogether unworthy of it, yet God was pleased to vouchsafe her so great an honour. Thus to speak became her both as a virgin and an humble and modest one.’ . . . But what was the low estate of this blessed handmaiden of the Lord? I answer, it was a state of poverty. So poor she was, so mean her portion, that she could arrive to no higher a fortune than to be the espoused wife of a poor carpenter; so poor that in her childbirth she was not able to procure a room (even in her greatest necessity) in that inn to which she came as a guest; but being neglected by her richer kindred of the royal tribe and family of David, lay indeed in the straw, and was brought to bed in a stable, and that in a cave underground in the vicinity of the poor town of Bethlehem, according to the tradition of the most ancient Doctors of the Church. In the very place it was (as some have probably conjectured) where poor David, the ancestor of the Messias and His most illustrious type, fed his sheep, and from that mean kind of life was, by the singular grace and favour of God, called to be the king and ruler of his people (Psal. lxxviii. ver. 70, 71, 72). So mean she was, that at her purification her great and generous piety was confined to the offering of the poor, according to the law of Moses, a pair of turtle-doves or two young pigeons: a lamb (the prescribed offering to those of ability) her purse could not reach to (Luke ii. ver. 22, 23, compared with Levit. xii. ver. 6, 7, 8).

“Lastly, so poor she was, and still continued, that her Blessed Son, when dying, thought it necessary to recommend her to the charitable care of His most beloved disciple (John xix. ver. 25, 26, 27).”—BISHOP BULL, Sermon on Luke i. 48, 49; vol. i. p. 138, &c.

His mercy to the whole nation before the coming of Christ, as especially shown in delivering them from their enemies; 3. From the 54th to the end of the song she returns to the greatest of all mercies, the Incarnation, promised to the fathers and fulfilled in herself.

I. (verses 46-49). Mary first magnifies or sings the praises of God for His mercy in making her, lowly as she was, the honoured instrument of the Incarnation. In reply to Elisabeth, who had spoken of her in terms of praise, she refers her to the Lord, to whom alone all praise belongs, as the source of all power, wisdom, and goodness. She declares that her whole being, her soul, the seat of all the affections and emotions, as well as her spirit, the seat of reason and intellect, are all engaged in extolling Him who was in an especial sense her Saviour, as being her Son and her Redeemer. Such are the mighty works which God hath wrought, that not only Elisabeth, but all generations, shall henceforth call her blessed. It may be, as some have thought, that in the expression, "and holy is His name," there is an allusion to the sanctification with which she was endued preparatory to her conception.¹

II. (verses 50-53). From the Incarnation the Virgin turns to God's works of power and mercy which He had shown in the world generally, humbling the proud and exalting the meek and lowly. As the right hand or the arm is the emblem of strength among men, so the sacred writers often, as here, apply these terms to God to denote the exercise of His great power among men.²

III. (verses 54, 55). After glancing at the way in which God discriminates between the mighty and the lowly, the rich and the hungry, Mary returns again to His mercy as shown in the Incarnation. She points out that this was not an unexpected mercy, but one which He had declared to our fathers, and which was but the fulfilment of His promise made to Abraham and to those who should walk in the steps of Abraham's faith for ever. The interval between the first promise of the Incarnation and the fulfilment of His promise was so long that it appeared as if God had forgotten, and the fulfilment of His promise is spoken of as a calling to remembrance of His mercy.

56. And Mary abode with her about three months,³ and returned to her own house.

That Mary remained with Elisabeth until after the birth of John has had many able supporters,⁴ though this has not been the opinion of all commentators. Afterwards she returned to her own house; that is, to the house of her husband, which was at Nazareth in Galilee.

57. Now Elisabeth's full time came that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son.⁵

58. And her neighbours and her cousins heard how the Lord had shewed great mercy upon her; and they rejoiced with her.

59. And it came to pass, that on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father.

Vulg. et vocabant eum nomine patris Zachariam.

60. And his mother answered and said, Not so; but he shall be called John.

61. And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.

62. And they made signs to his father, how he would have him called.

63. And he asked for a writing table, and wrote, saying, His name is John. And they marvelled all.

64. And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God.

65. And fear came on all that dwelt round about them: and all these sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill country of Judæa.

Margin, these things.

87. on all that dwelt round about them and in all the hill country of Judæa, because of these sayings.

Vulg. Et factus est timor super omnia vicinas eorum: et super omnia montana Judæe divulgabantur omnia verba hæc.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 49; vol. viii. p. 654.

² Euthymius, in Luc. i. 51; vol. iii. p. 233.

³ Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 51; vol. ii. p. 62.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 51; vol. viii. p. 655.

⁵ Origen, in Luc. Homil. x.; vol. iii. p. 1825.

⁶ And Mary abode with her about three months.—"The ordinary view that Mary had returned to Nazareth before the birth of the Baptist appears at first sight the natural one; for this is not mentioned before ver. 57, and it is nowhere stated that Mary was present. But if we compare the words ἀνέκειτο μετὰ τρεῖς μηνὶς with ver. 26, it would appear that the Virgin stayed with her cousin Elisabeth for more than three months, and left her immediately before her delivery. This appears to me so unlikely, that I prefer to imagine that, with the view of completing all he had to say about Mary's journey at once, the Evangelist spoke of her return and its date in ver. 56, although he had still something to tell that occurred before that return home."—WIESELER, 'Chronological Synopsis,' p. 136.

Euthymius, in Luc. i. 56; vol. iii. p. 237.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. i. 56; vol. ii. p. 1562.

V. Bede, in Luc. i. 56; vol. iii. p. 323.

Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 56; vol. ii. p. 65.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 56; vol. viii. p. 657.

⁷ And she brought forth a son (καὶ ἐγέννησεν υἱόν).—"John Baptist was born in Hebron, the place of the residence of Abraham (Gen. xiii. 18), and of the first royalty of David. Here circumcision was first ordained (Gen. xvii.), and here is he born that was to bring in baptism instead of circumcision. The priests at the Temple, as they looked for break of day, used oft to say, 'The face of all the sky is bright even unto Hebron' (Talm. in Joma, cap. 3, and in Tamid, cap. 3). Compare the dawning of the Gospel now rising there, in the birth of the Baptist; and compare the words of Zacharias, a priest (ver. 78)."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. v.; vol. i. p. 204.

66. And all they that heard them laid them up in their hearts, saying, What manner of child shall this be! And the hand of the Lord was with him.

And the hand: S. For the hand.
Vulg. Et enim manus Domini erat cum illo.

The people dwelling in the hill country of Judaea would hear of the birth of this boy, and everything about it would appear to them invested with mystery. Elisabeth was barren till she was past the age for child-bearing, and Zacharias was also advanced in years. Ever since the vision which he had seen in the Temple he had remained dumb and deaf, and that happened just before Elisabeth's conception. The incident about the naming of the boy had increased the mystery. It was strange that Elisabeth should wish to call him John at all, but it was more strange that Zacharias, when appealed to, should declare that his name, as already fixed, was John, and that without any communication with his wife; and stranger still, that on this his tongue should be loosed, and he should speak. All this served to draw the attention of the people towards John.

67. And his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied, saying,

68. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for He hath visited and redeemed His people,

69. And hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of His servant David;

70. As He spake by the mouth of His holy prophets, which have been since the world began:

71. That we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us;

72. To perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember His holy covenant;

73. The oath which He sware to our father Abraham,

74. That He would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve Him without fear,

S.V. of enemies.
Vulg. de manu inimicorum nostrorum liberati.

75. In holiness and righteousness before Him, all the days of our life.

S.V. A. all our days.
Vulg. omnibus diebus nostris.

76. And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare His ways;

77. To give knowledge of salvation unto His people by the remission of their sins, Margin, for the remission.

A. our sins.
Vulg. ad dandam scientiam salutis plebi ejus, in remissionem peccatorum eorum.

78. Through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the dayspring from on high hath visited us, Margin, bowels of the mercy . . . surprising, or branch.

S.V. shall visit us.
Vulg. Per viscera misericordie Dei nostri, in quibus visitavit nos, oriens ex alto.

79. To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace.

Being filled with the Holy Ghost, Zacharias, in this prophetic hymn, gives utterance to a double prophecy, first of Christ and then of John.¹ (1.) From verse 68 to the end of verse 75, he sings the praises of God for the Deliverer, who was already conceived in the womb of the Virgin, but not yet born; and by various expressions he describes His work of redemption and the blessings of His grace. (2.) From verse 76 to the end of 79, he addresses John, infant as he was, and describes his office and the nature of his duties.

I. Though God was the God of all the earth, of all nations, He was more especially the God of Israel, as being worshipped by them. Zacharias speaks of the Redemption as past and complete, because the Redeemer was already conceived in the womb of the Virgin. But under the terms "visited and redeemed," he doubtless includes His Life, Death, and Resurrection, which he thus foretells.

As the horn is that by which animals defend themselves against their enemies, the horn is used among men as the emblem of strength and security, and of one who can confer this security and freedom from danger and fear. The horn of salvation in the house of His servant David is the Deliverer whom Mary had conceived in her womb, who will deliver Israel from their enemies.

This, too, was what the holy prophets from the beginning meant by their promise unto Israel of deliverance from their enemies.

In three different ways Zacharias expresses the object for which God had raised up this Deliverer: 1. To perform the mercy promised to our fathers; 2. To remember His holy covenant; and 3. To keep the oath which He sware unto our father Abraham.

This passage² has been held to support the opinion that the old fathers who had departed this life in the faith and fear of God derived some benefit, some amelioration of their ¹ Origen, in Luc. Homil. x.; vol. iii. p. 1823.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 68; vol. viii. p. 659.

² Origen, in Luc. Homil. x.; vol. iii. p. 1824.

Theophylact, in Luc. i. 72; vol. i. p. 282.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 72; vol. viii. p. 660.

condition, from the Incarnation, immediately on the coming of God in the flesh, and as the first-fruits of the fulness which they will afterwards inherit.

He sums up the blessings of the Incarnation as—1. Deliverance from their enemies, not bodily, but spiritual; and 2. The gift of grace to become His servants, and to render unto Him a service untainted by injustice towards man or by sin towards God, through the continuance of their life.

II. From speaking of the Saviour, Zacharias suddenly turns to John, the prophet of the Saviour, and addresses him, though but an infant of eight days old. Some¹ have supposed that Zacharias addresses John because he knew that he was endued with power to understand him. John's birth had been exceptional and supernatural; even in the womb he had possessed the power to prophesy and apparently to understand; so it is thought he may have retained this unusual power of reason and intelligence after his birth. Others have supposed that, in addressing John, Zacharias spake for the benefit of others, the bystanders and those who should learn from them.

As men go before a king to remove out of the way all impediments to his approach, all that would offend him as unsightly and unbecoming, and to prepare the necessary decorations as the signs of welcome, so John should go before the Son of Man to prepare men for His approach. Other men, such may be the connection of the words,² shall be His servants and serve Him in holiness and righteousness, but thou, child, shalt be in a still more intimate relation to Him, for thou shalt be His prophet and shalt go before His face and prepare His way.

John's mission was not to bring salvation or to grant remission of sins to men, but to point out Him who came to do this, whose great mercy for man had caused Him to be born of the Virgin Mary for this very purpose. It was this love that caused Him, who was the dayspring (ἀνατολή), to descend from on high, from heaven, and visit mankind.

ἀνατολή means a shooting up or a springing up, and is sometimes applied to plants, as in Ezek. xvi. 7, "the bud of the field" (ἡ ἀνατολή τοῦ ἀγροῦ, Septuag.), but more frequently to the light of the sun. In Zechariah iii. 8 and vi.

12, the Messiah is termed Tsamach, מִצַּח, which is rendered in the Septuagint ἀνατολή, and in the Authorized Version "the Branch." It is probably in allusion to this prophecy that Zacharias calls the Son of Mary ἀνατολή ἐξ ὕψους, and which, as the context shows, is most appropriately translated "the dayspring from on high." It was God's great mercy that induced Him to visit man and to become the Son of Mary, the dayspring to give light to those who were living in the darkness of ignorance and sin, such darkness as even now may be termed death, but which would inevitably lead to death. But He would guide their feet into the way of peace; and in the word "peace" are summed up all the blessings of life.

80. And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his shewing unto Israel.

Some have supposed that these words add confirmation to the opinion that John retained after his birth the supernatural power and use of reason which he seemed to possess in the womb. It may be that the Evangelist is merely describing the effects which usually take place in the interval between infancy and manhood; that as his bodily organs grew his spirit (πνεῦμα) showed itself more strongly in proportion; that as the strength of the spirit may depend on the growth and capacity of the body to receive it, so the body and spirit may be said to grow and be strengthened concomitantly.

When John retired into the deserts is not stated; that it was early is the impression which these words convey. It has been supposed³ that John was taken into the wilderness when still an infant, somewhere about the time that Herod sent and "slew all the children that were in Bethlehem and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under." Though the hill country would not be included within the terms "the coasts (ὄρια) of Bethlehem," if the supernatural circumstances respecting John's birth should reach the ears of Herod, they would at once excite his alarm, and he may have given a special order for the death of John.

¹ Origen, in Luc. Homil. x. p. 1825.

Theophylact, in Luc. i. 76; vol. i. p. 283.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. i. 76; vol. ii. p. 1564.

V. Bede, in Luc. i. 76; vol. iii. p. 326.

Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 76; vol. ii. p. 79.

² Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 76; vol. ii. p. 78.

³ Origen, in Luc. Homil. xi.; vol. iii. p. 1827.

Maldonatus, in Luc. i. 80; vol. ii. p. 81.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. i. 80; vol. viii. p. 664.

CHAPTER II.

[1. Augustus taxeth all the Roman empire. 6. The nativity of Christ. 8. One angel relateth it to the shepherds: 13. many sing praises to God for it. 21. Christ is circumcised. 22. Mary purified. 28. Simeon and Anna prophesy of Christ: 40. who increaseth in wisdom, 46. questioneth in the Temple with the doctors, 51. and is obedient to his parents.]

[Vulg. 17. Augusti decreto Joseph cum Maria ascendit in Bethlehem: ubi illa peperit Salvatorem: cujus natalitate ab angelo audita, pastores festini veniunt illum visuri: post circumcisi vocatur Jesus: quem post dies purificationis in Jerusalem debitum ut Domino sisteretur, Simeon senex benedixit, ac de matris in passum doloribus propheta: Annamque prophetissam vetula hominem conficitur: Jesus duodecim annorum plenus sapientia et gratia, perditus a parentibus, in medio doctorum invenitur: des eundemque Nazareth factus illis subditus.]

1. And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world^a should be taxed.

Marcin. cunctos.
A. omnes: Ana before it came.
Vulg. Factum est autem in diebus illis.

2. (And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.)

Vulg. Hec descriptio prima facta est a praside Syria Tyrino.

3. And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city.

S.V. And they went.
Vulg. Et ibant omnes ut profiterentur singuli in suam civitatem.

4. And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judæa, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem; (because he was of the house and lineage of David:)

5. To be taxed with Mary his espoused wife, being great with child.

S.V. his espoused (omit wife).
Vulg. Ut profiteretur cum Maria desponsata sibi uxore pregnantem.

No less than five objections have been raised against the accuracy of the Evangelist's description in these verses. It has been questioned—(1.) Whether Augustus ever did command a census of the whole Roman Empire. (2.) Whether a Roman census could be held in Judæa, during the reign of Herod the Great, or of his son Archelaus, because Judæa was not then a Roman province. (3.) Whether, according to the regulation of a Roman census, Joseph would be obliged to travel to Bethlehem, since the Romans were accustomed to take the census at the ordinary place of residence, or in the chief towns of the district. (4.) Whether Mary would present herself in person at the place where the census was taken. (5.) Whether Cyrenius, or Quirinius, could be the governor of Syria at the time when Jesus was born.

1. The decree for the census extended to "all the world" (πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην). By this expression we must understand the orbis terrarum of the Romans, though rather including than excluding the citizens of Rome itself.

There is no direct mention of this census of the whole Roman Empire, in any nearly contemporary authors; but, in the paucity of writers contemporary with S. Luke, this is not any real objection. It is mentioned by several later writers, who probably had other authorities for this statement, beside S. Luke. There are also a considerable number of censuses, the historical credibility of which no one questions, though they are only known to us through coins and inscriptions.

Amongst other considerations which add confirmation to S. Luke's account, is this: that some time previous to this, arrangements had been made by Julius Cæsar for a complete survey of the whole Roman Empire; and that this survey, after some interval, but previous to 750 A.D., had been carried out by Augustus, and that it was only preparatory for a census of the Empire.

No one who examines the whole evidence for this census can have any reasonable doubt that S. Luke is correct in his assertion.^b

^a All the world (πᾶσα ἡ οἰκουμένη).—"This expression cannot be restricted to Judæa, but must, in accordance with prevalent usage, adopted also by Luke, be interpreted of the Roman Empire, the then orbis terrarum."—WIESNER, 'Chronological Synopsis,' p. 65.

^b That all the world should be taxed.—"After the review of the evidence, both external and internal, direct and indirect, the careful inquirer will scarcely hesitate to acknowledge that the decree of Augustus for a general census of the Empire recorded by Luke is a fact, for the historical truth of which we have the fullest guarantee. The time, too, in which Luke places the publication of this decree, shortly before 750 A.D., is one which the history of the period renders thoroughly probable. At that time Augustus was at the very summit of his power. Nearly the whole empire

II. That Palestine was governed by native princes, at the time when Jesus was born, and that it did not become a Roman province until 759 A.U.C., did not render it impossible for Augustus to have issued a decree for a census of his whole empire, which would include Judæa in its operation. This might affect the manner in which the census was carried out, but it would not render it impossible. To conciliate the people, greater regard would be paid to their national feelings and customs, in the mode of conducting the census; and to conciliate Herod, the execution of it would probably be left in his hands, and in that of his agents. But Herod was very far from being independent of the good-will of the Roman Emperor. That he himself was alive to this, is shown throughout his whole reign, and especially towards the end of it. Herod himself, as well as some of the earlier native princes, had already submitted to have taxes levied on them by the Romans.*

III. It may have been the law, that every Roman citizen should be registered and taxed in the place of his residence, or in the chief city of his district, but it certainly was more in keeping with the customs and the genius of the Jewish nation, to be registered and taxed in the place which was the head of the tribe and the family. In a matter so odious to the Jews as was the taxing by the Romans, it is most probable that every possible consideration would be made, and every regard paid to the national feeling and prejudices. That the taxing was conducted in the Jewish manner, and not in the Roman, the very phraseology of S. Luke seems to imply.

IV. That Mary was not obliged to appear at the place where the census was taken, is most probable. She went to Bethlehem, doubtless, because it was necessary that her Child should be born there. But whether in doing this she was influenced by a natural clinging to Joseph, her husband and protector, or by some undefined or supernatural impulse, it is impossible to say.

V. S. Luke states that the taxing at which Jesus was born took place at a time when Herod was king of Judæa and Cyrenius governor of Syria (ἡγεμονεύοντος τῆς Συρίας Κυρηνίου). It is a fact well known from many sources, that Cyrenius was made governor of Syria about 759 A.U.C., or 6 A.D.: but as this was eight years after the death of Herod the Great, some have hence concluded that S. Luke has made a mistake, and has placed in the same year two events which were separated by an interval of eight years. What seems to them also to give some confirmation to this conclusion, is the fact that soon after his appointment as governor of Syria, in 6 A.D., Cyrenius took measures for enforcing a taxing of Judæa, which was the occasion of considerable disturbance among the Jews, and which is referred to by Gamaliel (Acts v. 37), as a very well-known event, "in the days of the taxing" (τῆς ἀπογραφῆς). Two explanations of this difficulty have been given.

1. It has been shown to be highly probable that Cyrenius was twice governor or procurator of Syria, and that he was first made governor of Syria either in the reign of Herod the Great, or so close upon it, that the truth of S. Luke's assertion remains unchallenged as an historical fact.¹ By an ingenious argument,¹ Dr. Zumpt has shown that the following is the most probable order of the governors of Syria about this time:—

C. Sentius Saturninus from the year . . .	9 before Christ.
P. Quinctilius Varus	6 "
P. Sulpicius Quirinius	4 "
M. Lollius	1 after Christ.
C. Marcus Censorinus	4 "
P. Sulpicius Quirinius	6 "
Q. Creticus Silanus	11 "

* See the Quarterly Review, April 1871, pp. 497-512.

was in the enjoyment of profound peace, and a decree had been issued by Augustus in 743 A.U.C., for the third time during his reign, to close the temple of Janus, though, in consequence of some disturbances in Dacia, it was not carried into effect till 752 A.U.C. What time could be imagined more favourable for extensive works of peace, or for a firm internal organization of the mighty Roman Empire?—WIESELER, 'Chronological Synopsis,' p. 73; see also pp. 66-82.

* The Census.—"When we take into consideration on the one hand the necessity for holding a census of the Jews, for the purpose of carrying out an improved and more judicious system of taxation, and, on the other, the dependent position of the allies in general and of Herod in particular, as well as the traces which present themselves of a systematic rigorous interference in Jewish affairs on the part of Augustus, especially at the close of Herod's reign, which is just the most important period of his life for our inquiry; and, further, when we remember that Augustus had at that time already issued the decree that 'all the οἰκουμένη should be taxed,' which, of course, included the kingdom of Herod as a rex socius, and that the breviarium of Augustus, as is expressly stated, took cognizance of the resources and returns of the socii; and finally, when we also bear in mind that the East had been assigned to the special care and guardianship of Augustus,—it is scarcely possible that we should any longer call in question the express declaration of the Evangelist Luke, an almost contemporary writer and otherwise well worthy of attention, and must therefore recognize the census of Palestine recorded by him to have been held in the time of Herod, as an historical fact."—Ibid. p. 85; see also pp. 82-92.

Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 129, &c.

* Quirinius twice Governor.—"It is true that this succession which Dr. Zumpt establishes does not at first sight solve the entire difficulty caused by the words of S. Luke; for, as we cannot place the Nativity of Christ later than the year 5 before the Common Era, so we can as little place the first governorship of Quirinius earlier than the year 4. But this remaining difficulty is apparent only. It is easy to conceive that a general census, more especially according to the Jewish method of division into tribes, must have taken a considerable time for its completion. It is easy to conceive how Joseph and Mary might go to be taxed at Bethlehem in the year 5, under the government of Syria by Saturninus or Quinctilius Varus, and yet not be called upon to pay nor held the taxing finally ordered till two or three years later, under the government of Quirinius. In this manner all ground for cavil disappears."—The Quarterly Review, April 1871, p. 507.

2. Another solution¹ of this difficulty is that S. Luke did not use the words ὑπερβύτας τῆς Συρίας in the sense of procurator of Syria, but of one invested with extraordinary powers for carrying a particular measure into effect. It is pointed out that Cyrenius was a person of considerable importance, and in great favour with the Emperor, and was altogether the most prominent man of his time; so much so, that at his death he received the honour of a public funeral, as a reward for his services to the State; that there is historical evidence to show that Cyrenius was frequently employed by the Emperor in matters requiring unusual tact and skill, and that he is especially named in a commission appointed for carrying out a census, and that it is probable that he was called governor of Syria not because he was the procurator of Syria, but because he was invested with extraordinary powers to carry out this census in Syria. In support of this other instances are given, of a similar use of the word ἡγεμὼν and its derivatives.

The first of the Fathers who repeats S. Luke's statement, that Jesus was born during the census held by Cyrenius as governor of Syria, is Justin Martyr, in the second century. Twice² he states this in his 'Apology for the Christians,' addressed to Antoninus Pius, and once in his 'Dialogue with Trypho the Jew;' but as no question had then arisen as to the accuracy of S. Luke's words, he gives no key to explain the apparent difficulty. The same may be said of the other Fathers, who refer to it, such as Tertullian,³ who several times appeals to the original proofs of the census deposited in the Archives at Rome, and who speaks of it as taken by Sensus Saturninus.

For the sense in which the Evangelist uses the expression "espoused wife" (τῇ μεμνησμενῇ αὐτοῦ γυναίκι), or "espoused," see S. Matthew i. 18, page 72.

6. And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered.

7. And she brought forth her first-born Son,^a and wrapped Him in swaddling clothes, and laid Him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.

The distance between Nazareth and Bethlehem was such, that it would require three days at least, probably four, to accomplish the journey. But the ancient interpreters, with whom the Mystery of the Incarnation was a much more absorbing subject of meditation than it is with us, were so far from thinking that Mary's condition was any objection to her taking this long journey, that they believed she performed it on foot.

It would almost appear from the expression "while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered," that the Birth of Jesus did not take place immediately after their arrival at Bethlehem, and as the effect of fatigue from the journey. The Fathers reverently held that, both in her journey to Bethlehem and afterwards in her delivery, Mary was free from all the weakness and pain which usually attend women in her condition. This was the second time, since her conception, that she had made this long journey from Nazareth to the south of Jerusalem; once to the hill country of Judaea, and now to Bethlehem.

The ancient commentators⁴ held, as the words of S. Luke would seem to imply, that Mary required no assistance either in her delivery of the Child, or in the attendance and care which the Child afterwards required.

Thus the long-expected time was come. In fulfilment of the many types and prophecies of the Old Testament, He

¹ McClellan, New Testament, p. 392, &c.

² Justin Martyr, Apolog. i. 75, p. 55.

— Apolog. i. 83, p. 69.

— Dialogue, cum Trypho, ii. 303; p. 306.

³ Tertullian, lib. iv. ad Marcion, vii.; vol. ii. p. 370.

— Adv. i. vol. ii. p. 405.

— Adv. i. vol. ii. p. 450.

^a December 25th, the day of Christ's Birth.—"Of the seven notes of time of the Nativity—viz. Rejoice King Heav'n, Strife of the priests, cause of Anna, Cause of Quirinus, Star of the Wise Men, Christ's age at His Baptism, Years of the building of Herod's Temple, and Shepherds' Night-watch, in the weeks—five have brought us, with very striking harmony, within the two months December 749–January 750 A.U.C.; while the other two, the third and last, have been shown to be not at variance with this date. Moreover, of these five, three have remarkably converged to the December rather than the January, while the former month equally satisfies the requirements of the other two notes. And, lastly, as to the day of the month, we have seen that the 25th, which in this month is the day supported by tradition, is almost demanded by some, and is in accordance with all the conditions. It has also the following important confirmation:—Down to the time of S. Chrysostom the Eastern Churches celebrated the Birth of Christ in common with the Baptism on January 6; but so con-

⁴ S. Gregory Nyssen, Orat. i. in Christi Resurrect.; vol. iii. p. 601.

S. Jerome, de perpet. Virginit. B. M. adv. Helvid. 8; vol. ii. p. 192.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxvi. 1; vol. ii. p. 1197.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. viii. p. 58.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. ii. 7; vol. viii. p. 669.

vincing to them at that period was the testimony of the Western Church in favour of December 25, that thenceforward they adopted it as the true date for a separate feast of the Nativity. S. Chrysostom's account of this great ecclesiastical change, and of the historical evidence on which it rested, needs to be given in his own words. He says (Hom. in Diem Natiem, ii. col. 351; A.D. 386): "It is not yet ten years since this Day [December 25] was clearly made known to us; nevertheless, it is now as earnestly celebrated as if it had been handed down to us from the first. . . . It is evident from the Evangelist that Christ was born during the first census: and in the city of Rome, from the Public Archives there deposited, anyone may learn and know exactly the season of this census. . . . From those, then, that know these things exactly and dwell in that city, have we received the Day; for they who live there, who from early times and old tradition have regularly celebrated it, have themselves now lately conveyed the knowledge of it to us." Inasmuch, then, as the Eastern Church, about A.D.

was born into the world, who was both God and Man, to be the Saviour of man. Nor was it by mere accident, or by man's sole arrangement, but in the expression of a deep Mystery, that He, who was the Living Bread which came down from heaven, was born in Bethlehem, or in the house of bread.

That the place where Jesus was born was a cave or hollow in the rock,* was a very early tradition in the Church. This is recorded by Justin Martyr, in the second century, and is repeated by some of the most eminent among the early writers.¹

Either in consequence of the great multitude who had come to Bethlehem on the same errand, or of the poverty of Joseph and Mary, there was no room for them in the inn. In the dwellings erected by men, there is no room for Him who came to be the Saviour of man. This cave is said to have been in the outskirts of the town, and seems to have been well known to the shepherds, and may have been used by them for their cattle. It has been supposed that cattle were even now within it, and that Jesus was placed in the manger, in the midst of the animals, with them on either side. Some of the early writers understood of Him the words of Habakkuk (iii. 2), as rendered by the Septuagint, ἐν μέσῳ δύο ζώων γρωσθήσῃ ("In the midst between two animals shalt Thou be known"); and also of Isaiah i. 3, "The ox knoweth his Owner, and the ass his Master's crib."²

For the words "she brought forth her first-born Son," see S. Matthew i. 25, page 74.

8. And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

Margin, the night-watches.
Vulg. et custodientes vigilas noctis super gregem suum.

9. And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.

S.V. omit lo: S*. shone over them.
Vulg. Et ecce angelus Domini stetit iuxta illos.

10. And the angel said unto them, Fear not:

for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

S*. which is to all people.
Vulg. quod erit omni populo.

11. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

12. And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

V. and lying: S. omits lying.
Vulg. Invenietis infantem pannis involutum, et positum in præsepio.

We have every reason to believe that the Birth of Jesus was first announced to these men as Jews and representatives of the Jewish nation, because they were devout and sincere worshippers of God under the Law, not because they were shepherds. We may see the same rule observed in all the persons connected with the Incarnation. There was a fitness in them to receive the blessing. Such was the case with the B. Virgin herself: so it was with Zacharias and Elisabeth; so it was with Simeon and Anna. We have direct testimony that all these were devout and holy in their lives. In the eyes of God, these shepherds, too, were doubtless fit persons first to receive the Gospel, the message of mercy through Christ. Some have held that the shepherds were three in number. But as this is first stated by late writers, it may not have been a very ancient tradition in the Church.³

The angel Gabriel, as it would seem, had been sent to Zacharias, to announce the birth of the forerunner of Jesus; and to the B. Virgin, to announce her conception of Jesus. Hence it has been supposed that the angel of the Lord, here sent to announce to the shepherds the Birth of Jesus, was also the angel Gabriel, as the angel of the Incarnation.⁴ His first office is to calm the fears which naturally had arisen at his presence, and then to deliver the good news which he brought. It has been remarked, that often as angels are recorded in the Old Testament to have appeared to men, they are nowhere described as invested with such glory as this angel is here.⁵

It may be that the persons to whom the angel's message, strictly interpreted, applied, were first the shepherds, and

¹ Justin Martyr, Dialog. ii. 304, p. 306.
Origen, contr. Celsum, i. 51; vol. i. p. 756.
Eusebius, Vita Constant. iii. 43; vol. ii. p. 1101.
S. Epiphanius, Hæres. li. 9; vol. i. p. 905.
S. Jerome, Ep. ad Marcellam, xlvii. (alias 17) 10; vol. i. p. 490.
— Ep. ad Paulinum, lviii. (alias 13); vol. i. p. 581.
² Origen, in Luc. Homil. xiii.; vol. iii. p. 1832.
S. Ambrose, lib. ii. in Luc. ii. 7; vol. ii. p. 1568.

³ Fl. L. Dexter, Chronicon, A.D. 1; Migne's Patrol. vol. xxi. p. 57.

S. Bernard, Serm. 6 de Nativ. Dom.
Cornelius a Lapede, in Luc. ii. 8; vol. viii. p. 674.

⁴ Maldonatus, in Luc. ii. 9; vol. ii. p. 92.
Cornelius a Lapede, in Luc. ii. 9; vol. viii. p. 674.

⁵ V. Bede, in Luc. ii. 9; vol. iii. p. 332.

377, actually surrendered its own practice to the force of the evidence for December 25 (viii. Cal. Jan.),—"dies," as S. Augustine says of it (in Heptat. ii. 90), "ecclesiis notissimus,"—and inasmuch as thenceforward in East as well as West the Nativity has regularly been celebrated on December 25, and as this day agrees as well or better than any other with all the results obtained by us independently of ecclesiastical tradition, therefore (against Greswell, Wieseler, Lewin, &c.) we finally conclude that our Lord was really born on this day, and accordingly, adding the aforesaid year, that the exact date of the Nativity was December 25, 749 A.U.C.—McClellan, 'New Testament,' p. 407.

⁶ "Grotoes are stables at Bethlehem still."—STANLEY, 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 153.

then 'those of whom the shepherds were representatives, i.e. the Jewish nation. His words are, "I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all the people" (παντί τῷ λαῷ). The promise that Jesus should be a Light to lighten the Gentiles, may not have been contained in the angel's words.'

He gives them a sign by which they might distinguish the Child, who was to be their Saviour, from other new-born children, and by which they might recognize the truth of his words. Doubtless he indicated, with sufficient certainty, where the manger was, in which they should find a Child (βρέφος) wrapped in swaddling clothes, though this is not stated by S. Luke.

13. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

14. Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.*

* * * A. and on earth peace among men of good pleasure.

Vulg. Gloria in altissimis Deo, et in terra pax bonis voluntatis.

Either these angels were present before but were not visible, or they now for the first time become attendants on "the angel of the Lord." Their great number and their condition are both indicated—"a multitude of the heavenly host" (στρατὶς ἀσπαιών).

What were the exact words of the latter part of the Angels' song, has been the source of considerable discussion: for a difference of opinion has arisen as to whether they sang εὐδοκία or εὐδοκίας; that is, "good will," or "of good will," or good pleasure. If they sang the former, εὐδοκία, then their song consists of three clauses, as in the A. V., "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward or among men." If they sang the latter, εὐδοκίας, their song will consist of only two clauses, thus: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace to men of good will."

The meaning assigned to the Angels' song will vary as one or other of these two readings is adopted. If, as seems the more probable, εὐδοκία be the right reading, then the subject of the Angels' song will be the glory to God in the highest, or among the angels, and the peace which is come upon earth, because that He, in whom God the Father is well pleased, is born among men; or, the Birth of God the Son among men, which the angels announce, is the cause in heaven of glory to God, and on earth of peace among men.

¹ Maldonatus, in Luc. ii. 10; vol. ii. p. 94.

* Good will toward men.—"Instead of ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία (which is the reading of the Textus Receptus), Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles, and Alford present us with ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκίας. Their authority for this reading is the consistent testimony of the four oldest MSS. which contain S. Luke ii. 14 (viz. B. N. A. D), the Latin Versions generally (in hominibus bonis voluntatis), and the Gothic. Against these are to be set Cod. A (in the hymn at the end of the Psalms), all the other uncials, together with every known cursive MS., and every other ancient Version in existence.

"So far, the evidence of mere antiquity may be supposed to preponderate in favour of εὐδοκίας; though no judicious critic, it is thought, should hesitate in deciding in favour of εὐδοκία, even upon evidence already adduced. The advocates of the popular theory ask: But why should the four oldest MSS., together with the Latin and Gothic Versions, conspire in reading εὐδοκίας, if εὐδοκία be right? That question shall be resolved by and by. Let them in the meantime tell us, if they can, how is it credible that, in such a matter as this, every other MS. and every other Version in the world should read εὐδοκία, if εὐδοκία be wrong? But the evidence of antiquity has not yet been nearly cited. I proceed to set it forth in detail.

"It is found, then, that whereas εὐδοκίας is read by none, εὐδοκία is read by all the following Fathers:—

"(1) Origen, in three places of his writings [i. 374 D; ii. 714 B; iv. 15 B—i.e. 240].

"(2) The Apostolical Constitutions, twice [vii. 47; vii. 12 ad fin.—third century].

"(3) Methodius [Galland. iii. 809 B—A.D. 290].

"(4) Eusebius, twice [Dem. Ev. 163 C; 342 B—A.D. 320].

"(5) Aphraates the Persian (for whose name that of Jacobus of Nisibis has been erroneously substituted, twice [i. 180 and 385—A.D. 337].

"(6) Titus of Bostra, twice [in loc., but especially in S. Luke xix. 29 (Cramer, ii. 141, line 20)—A.D. 350].

"(7) Gregory of Nazianzus [i. 845 C—A.D. 360].

"(8) Cyril of Jerusalem [p. 180, cf. bottom of p. 162—A.D. 370].

"(9) Epiphanius [i. 154 D—A.D. 375].

"(10) Chrysostom, four times [vii. 311 B; 674 C; viii. 85 C; xi. 374 B expressly—A.D. 404].

"(11) Cyril of Alexandria, in three places [Comm. on S. Luke, pp. 12 and 16; also Opp. ii. 593 A; vi. 398 C—A.D. 420].

"(12) Theodoret [in Coloss. i. 20—A.D. 430].

"(13) Theodotus of Ancyra [Galland. x. 446 B—A.D. 430].

"(14) Proclus, Archbishop of Constantinople [Gall. x. 629 A—A.D. 434].

"To which may be added the evidence of—

"(15) Cosmas Indicopleustes, four times repeated [Coll. Nov. PP. (Montfaucou), ii. 152 A, 160 D, 247 E, 269 C—A.D. 535].

"(16) Eulogius, Archbishop of Alexandria [Gall. xii. 308 E—A.D. 581].

"(17) Andreas of Crete, twice [Gall. xiii. 100 D, 123 C—A.D. 635].

"Now, when it is considered that these seventeen Fathers of the Church all concur in exhibiting the Angelic Hymn as our own Textus Receptus exhibits it—(viz. ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία)—who does not see that the four oldest uncial authorities for εὐδοκίας are hopelessly outvoted by authorities yet older than themselves? Here is, to all intents and purposes, a record of what was once found in two codices of the third century, in nine of the fourth, in three of the fifth, added to the testimony of the two Syriac, the Egyptian, the Ethiopic, and the Armenian Versions. In this instance, therefore, the evidence of antiquity is even overwhelming.

"Most decisive of all, perhaps, is the fact: this was the form in which the Churches of the East preserved the Angelic Hymn in their private as well as in their solemn public devotions. Take it from a document of the fifth century—

Δοξα ἐν υψίστοις Θεῷ καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς εἰρήνη
ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία

"But the text of this hymn, as a liturgical document, at a yet earlier period, is unequivocally established by the combined testimony of the Apostolical Constitutions (already quoted) and of Chrysostom, who says expressly, ἐχαριστοῦντες λέγομεν, Δοξα ἐν υψίστοις Θεῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς εἰρήνη, ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία [1st Ep. 347 B]. Now, this incontestably proves that the Church's estab-

The difficulty of assigning a satisfactory meaning to the words, if eudokias be adopted, is shown by the number of explanations that have been proposed.

It has been pointed¹ out that eudokeiv and its kindred words in the New Testament generally refer to God, as in the following instances: St. Matt. iii. 17; Ephes. i. 5 and 9.

15. And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

Margin, the men the shepherds.

S. the shepherds spake one to another, saying.

Vulg. pastores loquebantur ad invicem.

16. And they came with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, and the Babe lying in a manger.

17. And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this Child.

Vulg. Videntes autem cognoverunt de verbo, quod dictum erat illis de puero hoc.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. ii. 14; vol. viii. p. 676.

lished way of reciting the Angelic Hymn in the fourth century was in conformity with the reading of the Textus Receptus. And this fact infinitely outweighs the evidence of any extant MSS. which can be named; for it is the consentient evidence of hundreds, or rather of thousands, of copies of the Gospels of a date anterior to A.D. 400, which have long since perished."—DEAN BURGON, on the 'Last Twelve Verses of S. Mark,' p. 257, &c.

In support of the reading eudokias, see also Scrivener, Introduction, p. 513, ed. 1874.

"Both readings, therefore, appear to have very high external authority, but, against the judgment of most late editors, the former [eudokias] is to be preferred for the following reasons:—(1) Even the external authority for it is much greater, having the support of nearly all the uncials and cursives, strengthened by the Syriac Versions (where, if anywhere, we might have expected eudokias), and, excepting the Latin interpretations of Irenaeus and Origen, the Greek Fathers generally, and the ancient Greek Morning Hymn. On the other hand, the primæ manu reading of KB is corrected by N²B³; and the Latin Fathers merely follow Ital. and Vulg. without adding to their evidence. (2) Internally both rhythm and sense require the nominative eudokla. As to the rhythm, the bi-membral arrangement necessitated by the genitive produces a painfully rugged, inharmonious, and disproportionate couplet; while, on the other hand, the triplet occasioned by the nominative displays all the smoothness and beauty of symmetry of a finely-constructed lyric. . . . As to the sense, the heavenly warriors (σπαρτάρι οὐρανίου), on the announcement of a Saviour, celebrate the praise of God in an expository ode of Glory, Peace, and Divine Good Pleasure. It is inappropriate (especially in S. Luke's Gospel for Universal Humanity), and it is derogatory to the Saviour's mission and the Divine love, that the heavenly declaration of peace should be limited to the elect (John iii. 16, 17; 2 Cor. v. 19). More than this, even peace among men is evidently an inadmissible restriction. The 'peace' of the Saviour's Advent is a peace between God and man, as much or more than a peace between man and man. The

18. And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds.

Vulg. Et omnes qui audierunt, mirati sunt: et de his, quæ dicta erant a pastorebus ad ipsos.

19. But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart.

20. And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them.

In these few, brief, comprehensive sentences, the Evangelist records the conduct of the shepherds and of Mary. He describes the earnestness of the shepherds, in hastening to verify the sign which the angel had given them, with the result of their examination,—namely, their conviction that the Child, whom they found in the manger, was the Messiah—their Saviour. He relates, too, their zeal in publishing to others the things which they had themselves seen and heard, and their return to their occupation, filled with gratitude and praise to God for the revelation which He had made to them.

By a single word or two the Evangelist puts before us Mary, wrapt in the silent meditation of her own heart, reviewing God's dealings with her from first to last; namely,

Latins felt this so strongly that, with the genitive eudokias, they often ventured to ignore (if they had it) the preposition en, in, and to render pax hominibus, 'peace to men.' But further, the designation of men of the Divine quid d' pleasure is too exalted even for the elect ones; still less is it applicable to mankind generally. One only of the human family can be thus characterised, even 'the dearly beloved Son, in whom the Father is well pleased' (εὐδόκησα, Matt. iii. 17; cf. Coloss. i. 13). The nominative eudokla, therefore, is every way to be retained.

"Our next concern is with its interpretation. We must of course, as already indicated, understand the word not (as the Latins) of bona voluntas, 'good will' (εὐνοια, b. voluntas), but of the good pleasure or delight of God, and must also substitute in or among, en, for the unto or towards of the English Versions. It will then be perceived that the common view, which makes the third clause Hebraically parallel with the second only, is one-sided and inadequate. Rather it explains both the preceding clauses, and sets forth the *foundatio*n or efficient cause as well of the Glory in Heaven as of the Peace on earth. Now, this foundation or cause cannot be God's delight in mankind, even as viewed in the Beloved. As already noticed, the existence of such delight is doctrinally questionable, nor is it sufficiently sublime for the angelic theme. It results, therefore, that the reference is to the Saviour Himself, as the personal eudokla, ἡ ψυχή, Good Pleasure or Delight of the Father (just as He is likewise the personal Peace, Truth, Redemption, &c.), and to His habitation among the sons of men. The en ἀνθρώποις eudokla, in other closely-related words, is ἐνανθρώπησις τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ. In this way the choral hymn closes with a theme worthy of the highest rapture, furnishing a magnificent parallel to the title Emmanuel, 'God with us' (Matt. i. 23), and exultingly confirming the herald-angels' tidings of the Christ's birth: God's Good Pleasure born to dwell with men! Cf. Cyr. Alex. Com. in loc.; Payne Smith's trans. i. 17: 'It pleased God the Father to form into one new whole all things in Him, &c.: Christ, therefore, has been made for us both Peace and Good-will.'"—McCLELLAN, 'New Test.' p. 687, &c.

the salutation of the angel Gabriel, her Conception, the words of Elisabeth to her, the wonderful things that had happened to Zacharias, and now, again, the appearance of the angels to the shepherds and the words which they had uttered. On all these, one by one, Mary dwells in devout meditation.

21. And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the Child, His name was called JESUS, which was so named of the angel before He was conceived in the womb.

S.V.A. for the circumcising of Him.

Vulg. Et postquam consummati sunt dies octo ut circumcideretur puer.

It has been pointed out¹ that the Evangelist does not expressly say that Jesus was circumcised, though he uses language which certainly implies it. Some have thought that he did this purposely, to teach us that Jesus voluntarily submitted to be circumcised, though He was not, even as a Man, bound by the law of circumcision. For, being conceived of the Holy Ghost, He was not bound to observe a law which applied only to men born in sin; and that, in being circumcised, Jesus humbled Himself even more than He had done by His Birth. By his Birth of the B. Virgin He humbled Himself to the condition of a man; but by His circumcision, which was a mark of sin, He humbled Himself to the rank or condition of a sinner.

Amongst the many different reasons² that have been given why Jesus should be circumcised, one is, that it was done to conceal from Satan, until the proper time, that the Son of Mary was the Christ, the Son of God. It has been held that in the economy of the Incarnation many circumstances were ordered, so as to conceal from Satan, for a time, which was the Christ. For instance, Satan knew, from the prophecy of Isaiah (vii. 14), that the Christ should be born of a

Virgin; that he was deceived as to Mary being the Virgin, because, though really and in the truest sense a Virgin, she was legally married to Joseph; that, by Jesus being circumcised, Satan was again deceived; and that, though he suspected it, he did not find out for certain that the Son of Mary was the Son of God, until after he had tempted Him, and had been repulsed at every point.³

S. Luke twice states, here and in i. 31, that the name Jesus was given by the angel to the Son of Mary before He was conceived in the womb; and S. Matthew (i. 21) represents an angel as interpreting the meaning of the name, "for He shall save His people from their sins."

22. And when the days of her purification according to the law of Moses were accomplished, they brought Him to Jerusalem, to present Him to the Lord;^a

S.V.A. of their purification.

Vulg. Et postquam impleti sunt dies purgationis ejus.

23. (As it is written in the law of the Lord, Every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord;)

24. And to offer a sacrifice according to that which is said in the law of the Lord, A pair of turtledoves, or two young pigeons.

According to the law of Moses (Levit. xii.), the time which elapsed between the circumcising of a child, and the purification of his mother and his presentation in the Temple, was thirty-three days. On her purification, the mother was commanded to offer a lamb for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon or turtledove for a sin-offering. In the case of poor people, the mother, on her purification, was to bring a turtledove or young pigeon for a burnt-offering, instead of a lamb,

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. ii. 21; vol. viii. p. 678.

² S. Thomas Aquinas gives eight different reasons, apparently a summary of those mentioned by the Fathers: Summa iii. quæst.

^a To present Him to the Lord.—"On the east (in the Temple) are now visible the rock-cut steps of the famous gate Nicanor. Two of the spiral columns of King Herod are built rudely into its piers. Miracles were wrought, the Rabbis tell us, by the leaves of this great eastern portal, the Beautiful Gate of the Acts of the Apostles (iii. 10). It was this gate that opened self-moved, as recorded by Josephus (Bell. vi. 5, 4), as an omen of the approaching downfall of the city. It was wrought in Alexandria; and a storm arising when it was shipped, one leaf was thrown overboard. The tempest continuing, the mariners proceeded to lighten the vessel by throwing off the second. But Nicanor, the maker, bound himself to his work, and declared that he would be thrown in with it. Not only did his insistence prevail, but the first leaf was thrown up on the shore in answer to his prayers.

"An unusual halo hovers over the silent relics of the gate Nicanor, from the fact that it is one of the two spots within the walls of Jerusalem that were, beyond any manner of doubt, lightened by the presence of the Infant Christ. There His Mother, like all Jewish matrons, presented herself for her purification before she might pass into the court beyond. . . . This gate is exactly central to the sunrise line of the Temple.

xxxvii. art. i.; vol. iv. p. 337.

³ S. Leo Magnus, Sermon in Nativ. Dom. ii. 4; vol. i. p. 197.

"To the south, and a little to the west, of Nicanor, exist the steps of the Water Gate. . . . To the west of the Water Gate exist the traces of the Gate of Firstlings, one of the most important features of the entire Temple system. It lies directly between the adit of the double Huldah Gate and the Great Altar. Its position is distinctly identified by the Talmud (Succah, v. 4). On its fifteen steps the Levites chanted the fifteen psalms of degrees. It was ascended by the priests in a ceremonial which was instituted to commemorate the denunciation, by the prophet Ezekiel, of the worship of the sun by bowing towards the East. At this gate, or in its close vicinity, was breathed to God that song of the aged Simeon (the father of Paul's teacher, Gamaliel), which yet preserves, in the evensong of English churches and cathedrals, an echo of the music of the Temple; for here it was that the parents of the Child Jesus brought Him, as a first-born son, to present Him to the Lord. . . .

"We have thus pointed out two exact spots to which on a known day, eighteen hundred and seventy-five years since, the Child Jesus was borne by His parents."—Edinburgh Review, January 1873, p. 31, &c.

and another turtle dove or young pigeon for a sin-offering. S. Luke does not quote the first part of this law, as being inapplicable to Mary, because she was too poor to offer a lamb for a burnt-offering.

The Fathers¹ in general held that Mary submitted to the law of purification because it applied to all women after child-bearing, not because she required purification in any such sense as other women did.

According to the law of the first-born (Numb. xviii. 16), Mary would have to bring Jesus and present Him before the Lord, that is, in the Temple, and probably through a priest, as the Lord's due, and then redeem Him back again with five shekels. It is intimated that she complied with this law. Thus God obeys the law which He had Himself enacted in the most minute points.

Some commentators have placed the coming of the wise men to Bethlehem after the presentation of Jesus in the Temple; but the Church generally has placed it between His circumcision and His presentation in the Temple. On either supposition, it may be difficult to answer all the questions that may arise respecting it. But as S. Luke relates nothing about the coming of the wise men to Bethlehem, and S. Matthew nothing about the circumcision of Jesus or His presentation in the Temple, neither of them was called upon, by the course of the narrative, to give any explanation how, after the gifts presented by the wise men, Mary was so poor that she could not offer a lamb for a burnt-offering on her purification.

25. And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the Holy Ghost was upon him.

26. And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ.

27. And he came by the Spirit into the Temple: and when the parents brought in the Child Jesus, to do for Him after the custom of the law,

¹ omits Jesus.

² Valg. Et cum inducerent puerum Iesum parentes ejus, ut facerent secundum consuetudinem legis pro eo.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. ii. 22; vol. viii. p. 679.

² See Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. ii. 25; vol. viii. p. 681.

³ See Lightfoot, in Luc. ii. 25; vol. ii. p. 393.

⁴ Origen, in Luc. Homil. xv.; vol. iii. p. 1838.

* Simeon.—“Rabban Simeon, the son of Hillel, was alive and at Jerusalem in those very times wherein our Evangelist wrote, his father Hillel also still living, whom the son succeeded, upon the decease of his father, as President of the Council. But as to him, there is nothing famous concerning him amongst Jewish authors but his bare name. . . . He was therefore no father of traditions, neither were there any things recited from him in the Mishneh, which indeed was very extraordinary, but how it should

28. Then took he Him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said, Nothing is known for certain of this Simeon.* Some have supposed that he was the son of Hillel and the father of Gamaliel, and that he afterwards became president of the Sanhedrin; others,² that he was one of the priests. But to the character of no one does the Evangelist bear higher testimony than he does to Simeon, as endued both with the spirit of holiness and the spirit of prophecy.

It has been shown from the Talmud,³ that the Consolation of Israel (παράκλησις τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ) was a recognized term for the Messiah, whom the whole Jewish nation was now anxiously expecting. Nay, to such a pitch of eagerness were the Jews roused, that it was no uncommon thing for them to swear, as a most solemn oath, on their hopes of seeing the Consolation of Israel.

Some⁴ have thought that a peculiar blessing was conferred on Simeon, in being permitted to take up Jesus in his arms; that if those in the Gospel were healed of their infirmity (Matt. x. 20, and xiv. 36) when they touched only the hem of His garment, with a belief in His power to heal them, that equally great or even greater would be the reward of Simeon, who, with no less degree of faith in Him as the Saviour of the world, took Him up in his arms.

29. Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word:

30. For mine eyes have seen Thy Salvation,

31. Which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people;

32. A Light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Thy people Israel.

The Evangelist does not say that Simeon was a very aged man, but the impression produced by his words is that he was, and that in the course of nature he must shortly depart this life; but that whensoever, or how soon soever, he shall depart, he will now be content, since all his highest longings had been satisfied, and he had seen in the flesh the Salvation of God, the Saviour of man. The coming of God in the flesh to save mankind had been often foretold in the Old Testament under the name of Salvation, as in Psalm lxii. 2.⁵

There is a darkness of ignorance, and a darkness of wilful

⁵ S. Basil, in Psal. lxii. 2; vol. i. p. 472.

⁶ S. Augustine, contr. adversar. legis et Proph. i. 11; vol. viii. p. 611.

come to pass I cannot tell. Whether he had a sounder apprehension of things, or was not well seen in traditions, or was this very Simeon the Evangelist mentions, and so looked higher than the mere traditions of men; this is all the hindrance, that Rabban Simeon lived a great while after the birth of our Saviour, and had a son Gamaliel, whom he bred up a Pharisee.—LIGHTFOOT on Luke ii. 25; vol. ii. p. 393.

See also this Commentary, on S. Matthew, ch. xxvii. p. 450.

disobedience. In both these senses, the Gentiles, as compared with the Jews, were in darkness. To the Gentiles Jesus brought light, the knowledge of sin, and power to resist it, through faith in Him. To the Jews, whose darkness had been in a measure dispelled by the Law and the prophets, He brought glory also, by being born of their nation, and being made one of their brethren.

33. And Joseph and His mother marvelled at those things which were spoken of Him.

S. V. And His father and His mother.

Vulg. Et erat pater ejus et mater mirantes super his quæ dicebantur de illo.

34. And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary His mother, Behold, this Child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign which shall be spoken against;

35. (Yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also,) that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed.

S. V. that the bad thoughts.

Vulg. ut revelentur ex multis cordibus cogitationes.

It has been carefully pointed out¹ that Joseph is called the father of Jesus, not in compliance with the practice of the people, who called him His father in the belief that he was really His father, but because Joseph was legally His father, inasmuch as Joseph and Mary had been legally married, though no marital intercourse had passed between them.

Simeon goes on to prophesy that, though Jesus came to be the Saviour of all mankind, all would not believe in Him as such; for the Incarnation would be, as it were, a touchstone to try men's characters and to reveal the thoughts of their hearts. Devout, humble souls would believe in Him, and to them this would be a rising again (ἀναστῆναι), a rising from a life of sin to one of holiness. But the proud and irreligious would reject Him, and the consequence of this would be to them a fall (πτῶναι): their whole future life would be a fall from one sin into another, a continual hardening of their hearts in sin and unbelief. Nay, the Incarnation itself, the very economy through which God offered salvation to man, he foretells should become a sign to provoke opposition. That God should be made Man, born of a Virgin, subject to the weakness of the flesh and to the machinations of men, until He should be put to death on the cross,—this should be the subject of the bitterest opposition. The bitterness of their opposition even Mary herself should experience; for when she should stand by the cross of her Son, hear the reproaches that should be uttered against Him, and see the sufferings He should endure, it would pierce her soul with a pang of anguish, as painful as ever sword inflicted on the body.

Among the many interpretations which have been given to the words "Yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also," it has been said that such should be the degree of reproach and suffering which Jesus should endure from men, that Mary's faith in Him as the Son of God would waver, though only for a time, and a momentary doubt as to the truth of His claims would pass through her soul.² But this has been rejected, as unworthy of all that is known of the Blessed Virgin, and as receiving no manner of confirmation from any other portion of her life. The most approved explanation of these words is that which interprets them of her anguish, as she stood by the cross of her Son.²

Jesus came into the world for the salvation of all, for the rising again of all. But as many would reject Him, and would by their rejection of Him produce their own fall, He is said "to be set" (κεῖναι) for the fall and rising again of many. Thus He would be to some the occasion of their fall, and to others the cause of their rising again.

36. And there was one Anna, a prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser: she was of a great age, and had lived with an husband seven years from her virginity;

37. And she was a widow of about fourscore and four years, which departed not from the Temple,³ but served God with fastings and prayers night and day.

S. V. of about seventy-four years.

Vulg. Et hæc vidua usque ad annos octoginta quatuor.

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 1; vol. iii. p. 1071.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. ii. 33; vol. viii. p. 684.

² S. Augustine, Epist. clix. (alias 39) 33, ad Paulinum; vol. ii. p. 644.

V. Bede, in Luc. ii. 35; vol. iii. p. 346.

[Theophylact,

* Origen seems to have been the author of this explanation (in Luc. Homil. xvii.; vol. iii. p. 1845), and he was followed in it by a few Greek writers of note. S. Thomas Aquinas endeavours to soften down their expression, as if they could not really believe what their words nakedly interpreted would mean: Summa iii. quest. xxvii. art. iv.; vol. iv. p. 253.

³ Which departed not from the Temple.—It may be doubted whether any women ever discharged any office in the Temple. Some think they did; but that which they allege out of 1 Sam. ii. 22, concerning the women that assembled at the door of the Theophylact, in Luc. ii. 35; vol. i. p. 290.

Euthymius, in Luc. ii. 35; vol. iii. p. 275.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. x. p. 80.

Maldonatus, in Luc. ii. 35; vol. ii. p. 117.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. ii. 35; vol. viii. p. 686.

tabernacle of the congregation, is quite another thing from any public ministering, if we will admit the Targumist and the Rabbins for expositors. So Exod. xxviii. 8, women assembling by troops at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. The Targumists, both here and in the place newly quoted, have it "women that came to pray." . . .

"It is apparent that women were wont to come from other parts to the Tabernacle for devotion's sake, not to perform any ministry. So this Anna, by birth of the tribe of Aser, had changed her native soil, and fixed her abode at Jerusalem, partly for devotion, that she 38. And she coming in that instant gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of Him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem.

Margin, in Israel.
S.V. gave thanks likewise unto God : S.V. for the redemption of Jerusalem.
Vulg. Et hanc, ipsa hora superveniens, confitebatur Domino : et loquebatur de illo omnibus, qui expectabant redemptionem Israel.

Lest the testimony of Anna should be looked upon as that of an obscure woman, leading an ordinary life, the Evangelist is careful to specify her several claims to notice. Besides the dignity of her family, Anna was advanced in years, and endued with the gift of prophecy, and had been exemplary in every condition of life in which she had been placed, as a virgin, as a married woman, and as a widow. She was now eighty-four years old, and had apparently been married at twelve or fourteen years of age, and after living seven years with her husband, had been a widow the rest of her life, some sixty odd years. All this time she had spent chiefly in the Temple, serving God by a life of continual devotion, in prayer and fasting.

Some¹ have supposed that the Evangelist intended to say that Anna had been a widow eighty-four years. If to eighty-four we add the years of her virginity and the seven years of her married life, this would make her more than a hundred years old. But this is not the general opinion.

Galilee was the seat of the tribe of Aser, and it is probable that Anna had removed to Jerusalem, in order that she might be able thus to consecrate her life to God, by a continual round of devotion.

39. And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth.

S.V. And when He had performed He returned.
Vulg. Et ut perfecterunt omnia secundum legem Domini, reversi sunt.

40. And the Child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom : and the grace of God was upon Him.

S.V. omni in spirit.
Vulg. Puer autem crescebat, et confortabatur plenus sapientia.

S. Luke makes no mention of the slaying of the young children by Herod, or of the flight of Joseph with Mary and the young Child into Egypt, related by S. Matthew. It has therefore been considered uncertain whether, by the words

"they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth," he refers to a journey to Nazareth immediately after the presentation in the Temple, after which they went down into Egypt; or whether it is a journey to Nazareth, after their return from Egypt in the reign of Archelaus, to which S. Luke here refers. The former seems the more natural interpretation.²

In verse 40 Jesus is said to be "filled with wisdom" (πληροῦμενος σοφίας), and in verse 52 to "increase in wisdom" (πρόκειται σοφία). As each of these expressions is used of Him without any reservation or explanation, they must be true of Him in such a sense that they can both be said of Him at one and the same time. Hence it has been inferred that the Evangelist does not by the expression "He increased in wisdom" intend to define, in any more precise way, the relation of the divine and human natures in Jesus Christ, but by it to note the effects which time had on His mind, as they appeared to those around Him, just as by the expression "He increased in stature" he had noted the effects which time had upon His body; or, in other words, to record the impression produced on the minds of others, by His behaviour at a later compared with an earlier period of His life.³

It is no objection to this explanation, that the word "increased" is not used in the same sense in the two expressions "He increased in wisdom" and "He increased in stature;" that in the latter it means to grow in reality; and in the former to grow so that they saw more of it, or that it was more manifested to them. For Scripture often uses the same word in different senses, even in the same clause. The word "parents," for instance, in verse 41, is used in very different senses, when applied to Joseph and when applied to Mary. The expression "He increased in wisdom" must evidently be understood in some such sense as will be consistent with the other expression, "He was filled with wisdom." Jesus, through the Hypostatic Union, was filled with wisdom, which He unfolded to man in different degrees, at different times, but in proportions corresponding with His other dealings with man. Thus S. Luke may mean, that as Jesus increased in years and in strength of body, He, the more and in like proportion, manifested to men His wisdom.³

It may not be without significance that Jesus is said to increase in wisdom after He had just given to the world a greater proof of His wisdom than He had hitherto given; that is, after He had manifested, or laid bare to men, more of the wisdom with which He was filled than He had previously done.

¹ S. Ambrose, in Luc. ii. 35; vol. ii. p. 1575.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. ii. 39; vol. viii. p. 689.

³ S. Gregory Naz. Orat. xliii. in Basil. 38; vol. ii. p. 547.

S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. ii. 40; vol. v. p. 507.

Theophylact, in Luc. ii. 52; vol. i. p. 292.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xii. p. 96.

Maldonatus, in Luc. ii. 40; vol. ii. p. 122.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. ii. 40; vol. viii. p. 689.

might be the more at leisure for praying in the Temple, and partly as a prophetess, that she might utter her prophecies in the great Metropolis.

"She departed not from the Temple;" that is, not in the stated times of prayer, according as it is commanded Aaron and his sons, Levit. x. 7, "Ye shall not go out from the door of the tabernacle."

—LIGHTFOOT on S. Luke ii. 37; vol. ii. p. 394.

³ Jesus increased in wisdom.—See note to Matt. xiv. p. 391.

41. Now His parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the Passover.

*S^c. every year: S^c. according to custom.
Vulg. Et ibant parentes ejus per omnes annos in Jerusalem, in die solemnii Pasche.*

42. And when He was twelve years old, they went up to Jerusalem after the custom of the feast.

S^c. and they went up.

43. And when they had fulfilled the days, as they returned, the Child Jesus tarried behind in Jerusalem; and Joseph and His mother knew not of it.

*S^c. omits: Jesus: S.V. and His parents knew not of it.
Vulg. remansit puer Jesus in Jerusalem, et non cognoverunt parentes ejus.*

44. But they, supposing Him to have been in the company, went a day's journey; and they sought Him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance.

*S^c. omits: and acquaintances.
Vulg. et requirabant eum inter cognatos et notos.*

45. And when they found Him not, they turned back again to Jerusalem, seeking Him.

*S.V. And when they found Him not.
Vulg. Et non inventientes, regressi sunt.*

46. And it came to pass, that after three days they found Him in the Temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions.

47. And all that heard Him were astonished at His understanding and answers.

*V. And all were astonished.
Vulg. Stupebant autem omnes qui eum audiebant.*

48. And when they saw Him, they were amazed: and His mother said unto Him, Son, why hast Thou thus dealt with us? behold, Thy father and I have sought Thee sorrowing.

*S^c. Thy father and I seek Thee.
Vulg. Ecce pater tuus et ego dolentes querebamus te.*

49. And He said unto them, How is it that ye sought Me? wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business?

*S^c. that ye seek Me?
Vulg. Quid est quod me querebatis? nesciebatis quia in his quas Patris mei sum oportet me esse.*

50. And they understood not the saying which He spake unto them.

It was required of all the males that they should present themselves before the Lord at Jerusalem three times a year—at the Passover, at the feast of weeks or Pentecost, and at the feast of Tabernacles (Exod. xxiii. 15, 16, 17). Some¹ have thought that S. Luke's statement, that His parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the Passover, does not imply that they did not go up to the other feasts, but that he is simply recording their practice at the Passover, in order to introduce the following narrative.

Whatever danger, or fear of danger, there may have been from Archelaus, during the first few years of the life of Jesus, there would be none when He was twelve years old; for Archelaus had been already deposed and sent into banishment by Augustus.

Our wonder that Joseph and Mary could proceed a day's journey and not discover, until the evening halt, that Jesus was neither with them nor in the train of their kinsmen, will diminish when we take into consideration, that during the Passover week there would be assembled in Jerusalem probably not less than 3,000,000 of people, and that of these considerably more than 2,000,000 were strangers, who had come up for the Passover; and that though a few of these might set out for their own homes after the third day of the feast, the great majority would remain the whole seven days, and would be leaving Jerusalem the very same day on which, as we may gather from S. Luke's words, Joseph and Mary left for Nazareth. For they returned "when they had fulfilled the days" (τελειωσάντων τὰς ἡμέρας); that is, the whole seven days of the feast of unleavened bread.²

"After three days" is probably here, as in some other places, an equivalent expression for "on the third day." At the end of the first day they discovered that Jesus was not with them. On the second day they return to Jerusalem, and on the third day they find Him in the Temple. His well-known habit of resorting to the Temple on all occasions may have led them to seek Him there; or in their perplexity they may have gone to ask for Divine direction in their search.

The questions which, as we may reverently conjecture, it would not be unlikely for Jesus to ask the doctors, would be such as would bear on Himself, such as would lead them to see the meaning of their own Scriptures, and draw their attention to the signs foretold for the coming of the Messiah, as, for instance, to the seventy weeks mentioned by Daniel (ix. 24), and to the fact that the sceptre had already departed from Judah.³

Frequently afterwards, in His conversations with the Jews, Jesus says that He is sent by His Father, and must do the works of His Father. So the first words that are recorded of Him relate to His Father. He may have stayed behind in Jerusalem, partly to remind Joseph and Mary that His obedience to them was limited by the requirements

¹ Maldonatus, in Luc. ii. 41: vol. ii. p. 123.

² Maldonatus, in Luc. ii. 43: vol. ii. p. 124.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. ii. 43: vol. viii. p. 690.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. ii. 43: vol. viii. p. 690.

of His Father's work. Several of the Greek commentators appear to have translated His words, ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρὸς μου, "in My Father's house," and to have understood them of the Temple.¹

The revelations which had already been made to Joseph and Mary would probably lead them to understand the general bearing of His answer; namely, as to the Father of whom He spake, but not the way in which He should accomplish His Father's work. To Mary the most intimate revelation had been made, both at her Conception and since. Even Joseph must have gathered much from the communication of the angel, from the announcement of the shepherds, and from the prophecies of Simeon and Anna. Nevertheless, it is said, "They understood not the saying which He spake unto them." It required the development and partial fulfilment of them in action, before they could understand their meaning.

51. And He went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them: but His mother kept all these sayings in her heart.

S^c. V. all the sayings.

Vulg. et mater ejus conservabat omnia verba hæc in corde suo.

52. And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man.

Margin, age.

Vulg. Et Jesus proficiebat sapientia, et ætate, et gratia apud Deum et homines.

The Evangelist is careful to record the faith and devotion of the Blessed Virgin, and the way in which she increased this. Twice in this chapter (see ver. 19) he says, that she kept these sayings in her heart, or pondered them in her heart. Every fresh intimation respecting the nature of her Son was made a subject of further devout meditation.

¹ Origen, in Luc. Homil. xx.; vol. iii. p. 1852.

S. Epiphanius, Hæres. xxx. 29; vol. i. p. 457.

Euthymius, in Luc. ii. 46; vol. iii. p. 281.

CHAPTER III.

[1. The preaching and baptism of John: 15. his testimony of Christ. 20. Herod imprisoneth John. 21. Christ baptized, receiveth testimony from heaven. 23. The age, and genealogy of Christ from Joseph upwards.]

[Vulg. homo militat a domino impletur sua predicatione Isaac vaticinium: et turbis, publicanis, ac militibus dat consilium: dicit quid singulis facere oporteat: testaturque Christi excellentiam et baptismi ipsius: super quem ab ipso baptismum descendit columba, ac vox Patris auditur: testaturque ejus genealogia a Joseph usque ad Adam ascendens.]

1. Now in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judæa, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip tetrarch of Ituræa and of the region of Trachonitis,^a and Lysanias the tetrarch of Abilene,

2. Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests,^b the word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness.

In order to fix the time of the preaching of John the Baptist, which he is about to relate in the following chapter, S. Luke introduces one positive date, and five other less stringent notes of time.

It was (1) "in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar;" (2) "Pontius Pilate being governor of Judæa;" (3) "and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee;" (4) "and his brother Philip tetrarch of Ituræa and of the region of Trachonitis;" (5) "and Lysanias the tetrarch of Abilene;" (6) "Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests."

1. "In the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar" (ἐν ἔτει δὲ πεντεκαεστῷ τῆς ἡγεμονίας Τιβερίου Καίσαρος).

^a Ituræa and of the region of Trachonitis.—The classical Ituræa seems to have extended eastward of the modern Jaydur (Jedür). S. Luke makes Philip tetrarch of Ituræa and of the region of Trachonitis—that is to say, of the two Trachons. We also read (J. de Vitry) that the former bounded or adjoined Trachonitis on the west, and Gaulonitis on the north. Possibly then it included the Iklim el Billan (the Camel-thorn region), which occupies the south-eastern and eastern slopes of the Hermon: but it could hardly lie along the base of Libanus, between Tiberias and Damascus.^b In these days it is a tract of fertile but deserted country, separated from Jaulan (Gaulonitis) by the southern continuation of the Hermon range, a versant known as Jebel el Hish (Scrub-mountain). Its chef-lieu Kunayterah is completely abandoned, though inhabited in the days of Burckhardt. I need hardly record my disagreement upon this point with this traveller. He makes Jaulan a plain (?) south of Jaydur, and west of the Hauran, comprising part of Batanea, Argob, Hippene, and perhaps Gaulonitis. But I agree with him when he remarks that the maps of Syria are incorrect regarding the mountains of his 'Djolan.' To the east the Awwal Haman, or northernmost extension of the Hauran Valley, divides it from the

At the end of the year 764 A.U.C., or the beginning of 765 A.U.C.—that is, either at the end of the year 11 A.D. or the beginning of 12 A.D. of the common era—Augustus issued a decree, associating his stepson, Tiberius, with him as joint Emperor. Three years after this, namely, on August 19th, 767 A.U.C., Augustus died, leaving Tiberius sole Emperor. The question arises, from which of these two dates are we to reckon the fifteenth year of the reign (τῆς ἡγεμονίας) of Tiberius Cæsar? from the time when he became joint Emperor with Augustus, or from the time when he became sole Emperor, after the death of Augustus? As our Lord's Passion is well ascertained from other sources to have taken place in the year 30 A.D. common era, to reckon the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius from the time when he became sole Emperor would throw the beginning of John the Baptist's, and therefore of our Saviour's ministry, too late, as it would leave only one year for the duration of His ministry. But it is perfectly certain, from S. John's Gospel, that three Passovers at least, and probably four, were celebrated during His ministry; or, in other words, that our Lord's ministry lasted for certain more than two years, and probably more than three years. This and other considerations have led Leja (western Trachon). How small this is, and how densely populated it once was, requires but a glance. The tetrarchs Herod of Galilee, his brother Philip, and Lysanias of Abilene—not on the middle course of the Barada, but on the western limits of the Hauran—had frontiers distant from one another a single day's ride."—BURTON, 'Unexplored Syria,' vol. i. p. 179.

^b S. Luke's historical accuracy.—The following is the conclusion at which Wieseler arrived after a careful and minute examination of the first two verses of S. Luke's third chapter:—"We have now subjected the whole of the notes of time to a strict examination, and we can arrive at no other conclusion than this, which cannot be impressed too frequently or too decidedly on the opponents of a New Testament chronology, that while, up to this point, Luke has not only shown his desire to proceed in strict chronological principles, but may be proved to have actually done so, he has, in these two verses, attested both his endeavour after and his knowledge of chronology in a very evident manner; for he has not made a single statement which does not harmonize most perfectly with the leading date, the fifteenth year of Tiberius."—WIESELER, 'Chronological Synopsis,' p. 175.

scholars to conclude that the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius must be reckoned from the time when he was associated in the Empire with Augustus, and not from the time when he became sole Emperor. This solution^a of the difficulty, first proposed more than a hundred years ago, has gradually gained ground, until it has become the recognized solution among commentators.¹

2. "Pontius Pilate being governor of Judæa" (ἡγεμονεύοντος Πιλάτου τῆς Ἰουδαίας). Pontius Pilate, the well-known Roman governor, under whom our Lord suffered and died, was recalled from his post by Tiberius before the Passover of 789 A.U.C., after he had occupied it ten years; that is, from the end of 778 A.U.C., or the beginning of 779 A.U.C., to 789 A.U.C.²

3. "And Herod being tetrarch of Galilee" (καὶ τετραρχῶντος τῆς Γαλιλαίας Ἡρώδου). Herod Antipas is here meant. At the instigation of Herodias, who had previously been his brother Philip's wife (not the tetrarch Philip mentioned in this verse), he ordered the Baptist's execution (Matt. xiv. 4). He obtained his tetrarchy after the death of his father Herod, and was banished by Caligula to Lyons, about the autumn of 792 A.U.C., in the forty-third year of his reign.³ His reign, with that of the tetrarch Philip, lasted during the whole of our Lord's public ministry.

4. "And his brother Philip tetrarch of Ituræa and of the region of Trachonitis." Philip became tetrarch after the death of Herod the Great,⁴ and died in the twenty-third year of Tiberius, in the thirty-seventh year of his reign.⁵

5. "And Lysanias the tetrarch of Abilene." Little direct mention is made of this Lysanias by contemporary authors. But from several incidental notices by Josephus, it has been gathered that he was a descendant, and probably a grandson of Lysanias, son of Ptolemy Mennæus, who, as

Josephus relates,⁶ was put to death by Antony, in order to gratify Cleopatra with a portion of his possessions, the principal city of which was Abila, in the neighbourhood of Damascus.⁷

6. "Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests" (ἐπ' ἀρχιερέων Ἀννα καὶ Καϊάφα). We know from Josephus that Caiaphas, who was son-in-law to Annas, was the high priest at this time.⁸ In what sense S. Luke means to say that Annas was also high priest, has been the subject of almost endless discussion and conjecture. There can be no question that, according to the original institution, the office of high priest was held but by one man, who retained it during the term of his natural life. In the corrupt times that followed the Captivity, the high priest was not unfrequently deposed by the civil rulers, and another substituted in his stead. The case of this very Annas and his family is a well-known instance of the way in which the office of high priest was abused by the civil authorities; for Annas himself had been high priest, and had been deposed, and in his own lifetime was succeeded in his office by five sons and one son-in-law, several of whom were living at the same time.

Some have supposed that both Annas and Caiaphas were high priests at the same time, and performed the duties of the office in alternate years. But there is no other instance of such an arrangement on record. Josephus, in relating the appointment of a new high priest, always implies that the former was dead, or deposed from his office.

The explanation^c which has found most favour is, that Caiaphas was the high priest, and that Annas, an ex-high priest, was now deputy or Sagan, and that S. Luke mentions him in consequence of his very great political influence; that as he had enumerated the civil rulers of the time, he also mentions the ecclesiastical authorities; and that though

¹ Greswell, Diss. viii. ix. x.; vol. i.

² Wieseler, Beiträge, p. 177 (cited by Sanday, Fourth Gospel, p. 65).

³ The Quarterly Review, January 1872, p. 152.

⁴ McClellan, New Testament, p. 402.

⁵ Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 5, 2; vol. ii. p. 801.

⁶ ———, Whiston's Trans., Antiq. xviii. 4, 2, p. 489.

⁷ Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 8, 2; vol. ii. p. 819.

⁸ ———, Whiston's Trans., Antiq. xviii. 7, 2, p. 500.

^a In the fifteenth year of the reign.—This solution was first proposed by Nicholas Mann, Master of the Charter House, in 1733, in a treatise entitled 'Of the True Years of the Birth and Death of Christ'; and in 1743, in a Latin version of his work for the benefit of foreign scholars. See 'Quarterly Review,' January 1872, p. 152. 'It should be observed in this passage of S. Luke the word 'reign,' as our Authorized Version gives it, rather exceeds the meaning of ἡγεμονία in the Greek original. The word 'reign,' it is obvious, can be used only of a sovereign, and, in general, a sovereign ruling singly, while the Greek term may serve for any case of high authority. In this very text the Evangelist does not merely apply it to Tiberius, but gives the same epithet (as ἡγεμονεύοντος) to Pontius Pilate; and this, in an earlier passage, he does likewise to Publius Quirinius, as Governor of Syria. The exact meaning of S. Luke might be rather thus expressed: 'In the fifteenth year since Tiberius first bore sway.'—Ibid.

⁴ Josephus, Antiq. xvii. 8, 1; vol. ii. p. 770.

⁵ ———, Whiston's Trans., Antiq. xvii. 8, 1, p. 470.

⁶ Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 5, 6; vol. ii. p. 803.

⁷ ———, Whiston's Trans., Antiq. xviii. 4, 6, p. 490.

⁸ Josephus, Antiq. xv. 4, 1; vol. i. p. 669.

⁹ ———, Whiston's Trans., Antiq. xv. 4, 1, p. 409.

¹⁰ Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 2, 2; vol. ii. p. 794.

¹¹ ———, Whiston's Trans., Antiq. xviii. 2, 2, p. 485.

^b Lysanias.—Wieseler thus sums up his examination of the various passages of the ancient authors bearing on this question: "These passages from Josephus force us to the conclusion that, in perfect accordance with the statement of Luke, a younger Lysanias must have been reigning over Abilene, and that as tetrarch, between the years 734 A.U.C. and 790 A.U.C."—WIESELER, 'Chronolog. Synopsis,' p. 166.

^c Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests.—"Those commentators have unquestionably come to a more correct conclusion, who regard ἀρχιερέως as denoting an official position filled by Annas, either as ἱδ or high priest's deputy (as is maintained by Lightfoot, Reland, Wolf, Kühnöl, Paulus, De Wette), or as נשיא, i.e. President of the Great Sanhedrim, as is assumed by Selden."—Ibid. p. 169.

Caiaphas, as high priest, was nominally the head, Annas, from his family connections and personal influence, was really the head of the priestly faction, and the source of all political power.

In illustration of the office of Sagan or deputy, Lightfoot shows, by quotations from the Talmud, that it was not uncommon, on the Vespers of the Day of Atonement, to appoint a deputy to the high priest, who should enter the Holy of Holies and offer the sacrifice for the people on the Day of Atonement, in case any uncleanness should befall the high priest. He also cites an instance where it is said the actual high priest, by some accidental uncleanness, became disqualified from performing the duties of the Day of Atonement, and his brother, as Sagan, acted in his stead. The Sagan also possessed considerable power as head or ruler of the priests. In the case of Annas, to his official authority as Sagan was added his great personal influence from various sources. To this Josephus bears ample testimony.

For verses 3-6 see S. Matthew, ch. iii., page 89.

3. And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins ;

4. As it is written in the book of the words of Esaias the prophet, saying,

"The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight."

S.V. omit saying.
Vulg. omits saying.

5. Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low ; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways shall be made smooth ;

6. And all flesh shall see the salvation of God.

For verses 7-14 see S. Matthew, ch. iii., page 92.

7. Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come ?

Vulg. gemitiva viperarum.

8. Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father : for I say unto you, That God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

9. And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees : every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

Vulg. excidetur, et in ignem mittetur.

10. And the people asked him, saying, What shall we do then ?

11. He answereth and saith unto them, He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none ; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise.

S. Now he answered and said.
Vulg. Respondens autem dixit illis.

12. Then came also publicans to be baptized, and said unto him, Master, what shall we do ?

13. And he said unto them, Exact no more than that which is appointed you.

S. And he said, Exact no more.
Vulg. At ille dixit ad eos : Nihil amplius, quam quod constitutum est vobis, faciat.

14. And the soldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do ? And he said unto them, Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely ; and be content with your wages.

S. accuse not any falsely.
Vulg. Neminem concutatis, neque calumniam faciat.

For verses 15-18 see S. Matthew, ch. iii., page 94.

15. And as the people were in expectation, and all men mused in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ, or not ;

16. John answered, saying unto them all, I indeed baptize you with water ; but One mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose ; He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire :

17. Whose fan is in His hand, and He will thoroughly purge His floor, and will gather the wheat into His garner ; but the chaff He will burn with fire unquenchable.

S. V. Whose fan is in His hand to purge thoroughly His floor and to gather the wheat.
Vulg. Cuius ventilabrum in manu eius, et purgabit aream suam, et congregabit triticum in horreum suum, palam autem comburet ignem vestigibulum.

18. And many other things in his exhortation preached he unto the people.

For verses 19 and 20 see S. Matthew, ch. xiv., page 244.

19. But Herod the tetrarch, being reproved by him for Herodias his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done,

S. V. his brother's wife : S. omits and.
Vulg. de Herodis uxore fratris sui, et.

20. Added yet this above all, that he shut up John in prison.

For verses 21-23 see S. Matthew, ch. iii., page 96.

21. Now when all the people were baptized, it came to pass, that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened,

22. And the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon Him, and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art My beloved Son; in Thee I am well pleased.

S.V. omit which said.

Vulg. et vox de celo facta est : Tu es Filius meus dilectus, in te complacui mihi.

23. And Jesus Himself began to be about thirty years of age,* being (as was supposed) the Son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli,

S.V. And Jesus Himself was, when He began, about thirty years of age.

Vulg. Et ipse Jesus erat incipiens quasi annorum triginta, ut putabatur, filius Ioseph.

24. Which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi, which was the son of Melchi, which was the son of Janna, which was the son of Joseph,

V. of Janna.

Vulg. qui fuit Ianne.

25. Which was the son of Mattathias, which was the son of Amos, which was the son of Naum, which was the son of Esli, which was the son of Nagge,

26. Which was the son of Maath, which was the son of Mattathias, which was the son of Semei, which was the son of Joseph, which was the son of Juda,

S.V. of Semei : S.V. of Josech : S.V. of Joda.

Vulg. qui fuit Semei, qui fuit Ioseph, qui fuit Iuda.

27. Which was the son of Joanna, which was the son of Rhesa, which was the son of Zorobabel, which was the son of Salathiel, which was the son of Neri,

S*. of Jonan : S.V.A. of Joanan : A. Zorombabel.

Vulg. Qui fuit Ioanna; . . . qui fuit Salathiel.

28. Which was the son of Melchi, which was the son of Addi, which was the son of Cosam, which was the son of Elmodam, which was the son of Er,

S*. of Cosa : S.V. of Elmadam.

Vulg. qui fuit Cosan, qui fuit Elmadan.

29. Which was the son of Jose, which was the son of Eliezer, which was the son of Jorim, which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi,

S.V. of Jesu : S*. of Eliazer.

Vulg. Qui fuit Iesu, qui fuit Eliezer.

30. Which was the son of Simeon, which was the son of Juda, which was the son of Joseph, which was the son of Jonan, which was the son of Eliakim,

S.V. of Jonam : A. of Joanan.

Vulg. qui fuit Iona.

31. Which was the son of Melea, which was the son of Menan, which was the son of Mattatha, which was the son of Nathan, which was the son of David,

S.V. of Menna : A. omits which was the son of Menan : V. Mettatha : S*. V.

of Natham.

Vulg. qui fuit Menna, qui fuit Mathatha, qui fuit Nathan.

Nathan would seem to have been one of David's sons by Bathsheba after their marriage. He is named before Solomon, probably as being older (2 Sam. v. 14, and 1 Chron. iii. 5).

32. Which was the son of Jesse, which was the son of Obed, which was the son of Booz, which was the son of Salmon, which was the son of Naasson,

S.V. of Jobel : A. of Jobed : S*. of Balls : S.V.A. of Boos : S*. V. of Sala.

Vulg. qui fuit Obed, qui fuit Booz, qui fuit Salmon.

* The date of Christ's Baptism, &c.—“Our results then are, that our Lord at His baptism was (as Wieseler also holds on other grounds) a little over thirty years of age; that the Baptist's ministry began in the fifteenth year of the hegemony of Tiberius; and that the hegemony itself dates from March 765 A.U.C. Therefore, the ‘fifteenth year’ will embrace from March 779 to February 780 inclusive, the very period in which a Sabbatical year began (Wies. p. 186), and in which, according to our dates (hereby confirmed), John himself attained his thirtieth year. Pilate also, be it observed, entered upon his government in this same year, probably in June or July, but certainly not later than October (Jos. A. xviii. 4, 2. Cf. Grew. Diss. ix. and Q. Rev. No. 263, p. 155, with Lewin, 1493). Now, seeing that, independent of any particular year, both Eastern and Western tradition (unrefuted) steadfastly unite in celebrating the Baptism on January 6 (Feast of Epiphany), and that on the one hand we do not necessarily require more than three or six months for John's ministry before the Baptism, while on the other, as will appear from the dates of Christ's first post-baptismal Passover and Crucifixion, no later year than the first of the said ministry is available, therefore we can unhesitatingly fix the Baptism on January 6, 780 A.U.C. Hence, also, as to the beginning of the Baptist's ministry in 779, we may infer that it was soon after Pilate's arrival in Judea, and most probably, with the commencement of the Sabbatical year, in the month of October. Next reckoning backward from January 6, 780, thirty years exactly, we reach January 6, 750; whence, still proceeding a little further backward for the slight excess over thirty years, we reach just such a date as is furnished by December 25, 749, which thus receives a new and remarkably minute confirmation.”—McClellan, ‘New Testament,’ p. 405.

33. Which was the son of Aminadab, which was the son of Aram, which was the son of Esrom, which was the son of Phares, which was the son of Juda,

S*. of Adam: V. unus Which was the son of Aminadab, which was the son of Aram: S.V. Which was the son of Adam, which was the son of Aram: V. of Esrom: A. unus which was the son of Phares.
Vulg. qui fuit Aminadab, qui fuit Aram, qui fuit Esrom, qui fuit Phares.

34. Which was the son of Jacob, which was the son of Isaac, which was the son of Abraham, which was the son of Thara, which was the son of Nachor,

S*. of Isaac.
Vulg. qui fuit Isaac.

35. Which was the son of Saruch, which was the son of Ragau, which was the son of Phalec, which was the son of Heber, which was the son of Sala,

S.V.A. of Semch.
Vulg. qui fuit Saruch.

36. Which was the son of Cainan, which was the son of Arphaxad, which was the son of Sem, which was the son of Noe, which was the son of Lamech,

S.V. of Cainan.
Vulg. qui fuit Cainan.

Cainan is not mentioned as the son of Arphaxad in Genesis x. 24 and xi. 12, or in 1 Chron. i. 18, in the Hebrew copies of the Old Testament. The question has been raised, did S. Luke really insert Cainan into his text; and if so, whence did he derive it? Some have maintained that Cainan crept into S. Luke through some mistake of later transcribers. Others, on the ground that all known manuscripts of S. Luke contained Cainan, have held that S. Luke himself wrote it, that he copied it from the Septuagint, and that he followed the Septuagint in preference to the Hebrew, because the former were the Scriptures read among the Gentiles, for whom S. Luke was writing. This solution is maintained by Lightfoot,¹ who also insinuates a motive as influencing the Septuagint translators to insert Cainan into the text. Cornelius a Lapide² gives a list of the Fathers and of the commentators about the time of the Reformation who wrote about this, and of the opinions which they each held. In our own day the Bishop of Bath and Wells (Lord A. Hervey),³ after an elaborate examination of the earliest notices of this subject, has satisfied himself that Cainan was an unauthorized insertion into the original text both of S. Luke and also of the Septuagint in Gen. x. 24, xi. 12, and 1 Chron. i. 18. Cainan is however still found in these passages in the Septuagint,⁴ but it is not found in the Hebrew.

37. Which was the son of Mathusala, which was the son of Enoch, which was the son of Jared, which was the son of Maleleel, which was the son of Cainan,

S.V. of Jared: A. of Jared: S*. of Melchizedek: S. of Cainan.
Vulg. qui fuit Jared, qui fuit Maleleel, qui fuit Cainan.

38. Which was the son of Enos, which was the son of Seth, which was the son of Adam, which was the son of God.

Some of the points of difference in the genealogy of Jesus, as given by S. Matthew and as given by S. Luke, may be seen at a glance. S. Matthew, for instance, descends, and traces His genealogy from Abraham to David, and from David down to Jesus; while S. Luke ascends, and traces the genealogy of Jesus up to David, and from David to Abraham, and from Abraham up to Adam. Placed side by side, they are as follows:—

ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW.

ACCORDING TO ST. LUKE.

Abraham.	Adam.
Isaac.	Seth.
Jacob.	Enos.
Judas.	Cainan.
Phares.	Maleleel.
Esrom.	Jared.
Aram.	Enoch.
Aminadab.	Mathusala.
Naasson.	Lamech.
Salmon.	Noe.
Booz.	Sem.
Obed.	Arphaxad.
Jesse.	Cainan.
David.	Sala.
Salomon.	Heber.
Robbam.	Phalec.
Abia.	Ragau.
Assa.	Saruch.
Josaphat.	Nachor.
Joram.	Tharah.
Ozias.	Abraham.
	Isaac.
	Jacob.
	Juda.
	Phares.
	Esrom.
	Aram.
	Aminadab.
	Naasson.
	Salmon.
	Booz.
	Obed.
	Jesse.
	David.
	Nathan.
	Mattathia.
	Manan.
	Melea.
	Eliakim.
	Jonam.
	Joseph.

¹ Lightfoot, Harmony of the Four Evangelists, Luke iii. 36; vol. i. p. 488.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. iii. 36; vol. viii. p. 704.

³ Our Lord's Genealogy, ch. viii. p. 168, &c.

⁴ See Septuagint, Tischendorf's edition.

ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW.

Jeatham.
Achaz.
Ezekias.
Maussas.
Amon.
Josias.
Jechonias.
Salathiel.
Zorobabel.
Abiad.
Eliakim.
Azor.
Sadoe.
Achim.
Eliud.
Eleazar.
Matthan.
Jacob.
Joseph.
Jesus.

ACCORDING TO S. LUKE.

Julah.
Simeon.
Levi.
Matthat.
Jorim.
Eliezer.
Jose.
Er.
Elmodam.
Cosam.
Addi.
Melchi.
Neri.
Salathiel.
Zorobabel.
Rhosa.
Joanna.
Juda.
Joseph.
Sime.
Mattathias.
Matth.
Nagge.
Esi.
Naum.
Amos.
Mattathias.
Joseph.
Janna.
Melchi.
Levi.
Matthat.
Heli.
Joseph.
Jesus.

It will thus be seen that from Abraham to David the two genealogies correspond; that S. Matthew then traces the descent of Jesus from David through his son Solomon, and S. Luke through his son Nathan; and that the two lines again coalesce in Salathiel and Zorobabel, after whom they separate again. When they correspond again is one of the points in question. One of the chief difficulties in reconciling the two genealogies, or rather in explaining the difference between the two genealogies, exists in the two or three names prior to Joseph the husband of Mary.

S. MATTHEW.

David.
Solomon.
David.
Nathan.
David.
Nathan.
David.
Nathan.
David.
Nathan.
David.
Nathan.

S. LUKE.

David.
Nathan.
David.
Nathan.
David.
Nathan.
David.
Nathan.
David.
Nathan.
David.
Nathan.

In what sense was Joseph the son of Jacob and also the son of Heli? The right answer to this question would furnish the solution of the whole difficulty. Three principal explanations have been given:—

I. Julius Africanus, who flourished at the end of the second or the beginning of the third century, in his letter to Aristides gives an answer to this question, which he says was handed down to him as the explanation given by our Lord's own kinsmen.¹ According to this supposed tradition, Matthan and Matthat (called also Melchi²) successively married the same woman, and had each a son by her. Matthan, for instance, first married Estha, and had by her a son Jacob. On Matthan's death, Matthat married Estha, and had by her a son Heli. Thus, by their mother, Jacob and Heli, though of different families, were half-brothers. Again, Heli having married, and having died without issue, his brother Jacob married his widow, and had by her a son Joseph, who, by nature and strictly speaking, was Jacob's son, but, by the Jewish law, was reckoned the son of his deceased brother Heli.

The following,³ amongst other ancient writers, approve of this as the explanation why Joseph is called by S. Matthew the son of Jacob, and by S. Luke the son of Heli:—Eusebius, S. Gregory Nazianzen, S. Ambrose, S. Jerome, S. Augustine, the Venerable Bede, Euthymius, S. Thomas Aquinas, and Maldonatus. This explanation, after having been rejected by commentators, has very recently been again brought forward and advocated.⁴

II. The explanation which was next received as the best, at least as being more simple than the other, is that Matthan, (of S. Matthew) had a son Jacob and also a daughter Ann, and that Matthat (of S. Luke) had a son Heli, which is the same name as Eliakim or Joachim, who married Ann, the sister of Jacob, and that Heli and Ann had a daughter Mary, the Blessed Virgin, who married Joseph the son of Jacob. According to this, Joseph was the son of Jacob (S. Matthew i. 16), and the son-in-law of Heli (S. Luke iii. 23).

Cornelius a Lapide,⁵ who adopts this explanation, says that it was also advocated by the following learned commentators on Scripture about the time of the Reformation, or during the fifteenth and the sixteenth centuries:—Dionysius the Carthusian, Cardinal Cajetan, Cornelius Jansenius, Bishop of Ghent, whose Harmony of the Four Gospels Dupin describes as the most perfect that had appeared up to his time; Conrad Pellican, John Gagney, Peter Galatin, Dominic Soto, John Driedo, Peter Canisius, Melchior Cano, and Suarez. These were all reckoned among the most learned commentators

¹ Julius Africanus, ap. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. i. 7; vol. ii. p. 89.
Routh, Rel. Sac. ; vol. ii. p. 233.

² V. Bede, in Luc. iii. 24; vol. iii. p. 362.

³ Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. i. 7; vol. ii. p. 89.

S. Gregory Nazian., Carmen Theolog. i. 1; vol. iii. p. 482.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. iii. 23; vol. ii. p. 1594.

S. Jerome, in Matt. i. 16; vol. vii. p. 23.

S. Augustine, Retract. ii. 7; vol. i. p. 633.

V. Bede, in Luc. iii. 23; vol. iii. p. 362.

Euthymius, in Luc. iii. 24; vol. iii. p. 303.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Summ. iii. quest. 31, art. 3; vol. iv. p. 282.

Maldonatus, in Matt. i. 16; vol. i. p. 21.

⁴ McClellan, New Testament, p. 420.

⁵ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. iii. 23; vol. viii. p. 700.

and theologians of their time; and several of them are still looked upon as authorities of great weight.

Dr. Mill and the Bishop of Bath and Wells¹ state that this explanation has been advocated by a large proportion of Protestant writers, from Luther to the present time, including Spanheim, Chemnitz, Gomar, Vossius, Yardley, Broughton, Kuinoël, Hug, &c. To these may be added Lightfoot, South, Bengel, and more recently Dr. Ed. Robinson, the distinguished American traveller and harmonist.

From this it will appear that up to the fifteenth century the first explanation, or that recorded by Africanus, was the one which was generally received; and that from the fifteenth to the nineteenth century the second explanation has been the most popular.

III. The third solution of the difficulty proposed is that Matthan (of S. Matthew), the third from Joseph, is the same person meant by Matthat (of S. Luke). Dr. Mill² supposes that S. Augustine first suggested this solution, though without himself accepting it, as appears from the last expression of his opinion. This was left to be worked out in its fulness by the Bishop of Bath and Wells; the value of whose work on the Genealogies all must acknowledge to be great, apart from the truth or fallacy of this particular theory. He supposes that the line of David through Solomon failed first in Jechoniah, and that it was supplied with an heir from the other line of David through Nathan; and that it again failed, from want of issue, in the predecessor of Matthan, and was again supplied with an heir from the other line, which heir S. Matthew calls Matthan and S. Luke Matthat.

These are the three principal answers that have been given to the question, How was Joseph the son of Jacob according to S. Matthew, and the son of Heli according to S. Luke?

Against the first explanation several minor objections have been raised; but that which has been the most fatal to its continued reception is, that it applies the law of the Levirate, as it is called, to those who are only uterine brothers—that is, brothers only by the mother's side—contrary, as it is urged, to the whole spirit of the Jewish law and to the letter of Deut. xxv. 5.* The following writers may be mentioned as having urged this objection, and each of these writers may be taken as the representative of a school: Cornelius a Lapide of the Patristic school, Lightfoot of the Talmudic, and the Bishop of Bath and Wells of the Modern.

On the other hand, neither Dr. Mill nor Mr. McClellan sees any overwhelming force in this or in any of the objections.³

With respect to the third explanation, the objection that was raised against the interpretation that David's line through Solomon failed in Jechoniah, and was supplied with an heir from the other line of David through Nathan, exists with the same force here; namely, that the word "begat" in S. Matthew's genealogy always implies natural sonship and never legal heirship.⁴ See Commentary on S. Matthew i. p. 69.

As already stated (p. 70) the Fathers of the second century—S. Justin Martyr, S. Irenæus, S. Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian—supposed that S. Matthew's object in his genealogy was to show the descent of Jesus from David and from Abraham through His mother. Some later Fathers held that S. Matthew's object was to show that Jesus was the King of the Jews, the rightful heir to the throne of David, through Joseph the husband of Mary; and that S. Luke's object was to show His sacerdotal character. But they do not clearly explain how the sacerdotal descent of Jesus could be traced through David: for, in the words of S. Paul (Hebrews vii. 13), "Our Lord sprang out of Juda, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood."

Many in modern times hold that both the genealogies are Joseph's: that by S. Matthew, through a line of kings, to prove His regal descent; and that by S. Luke, through a line of men who were neither kings nor priests, to show his private descent. According to this explanation, the genealogy by S. Luke does not relate to Jesus at all; and that by S. Matthew, only so far as it shows that Jesus had a claim to the throne of David, through Joseph the husband of His mother.

The most probable explanation, as it appears to me, is that

¹ Dr. Mill, Sermons, p. 136.

² Bishop of Bath and Wells, on the Genealogies, p. 9.

³ Dr. Mill, Sermons, p. 191.

* Levirate marriages.—Various artificial theories of inheritances and levirate marriages have at different times been proposed, in order to explain and harmonize the two genealogies; but in the view here taken these become unnecessary. In respect to all of them, it may suffice here to quote the words of Lightfoot (on Luke iii. 23; vol. ii. 399): "There is neither need, nor reason, nor indeed any foundation at all for us to frame, I know not what marriages and the taking of brothers' wives, to remove a scruple in this place, wherein there is really no scruple in the least."—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek,' p. 186.

† Begat (γεννησθε).—"An examination of the pedigrees reveals that S. Matthew, whose is the descending table, avowedly registers throughout a natural lineage, φύσει, secundum naturam; but that S. Luke, whose is the ascending table, plainly admits in any link a legal parentage, νόμῳ, secundum legem. S. Matthew's distinctive word, repeated forty times, is the special word begat, γεννᾷν, denoting natural procreation: S. Luke's, expressed once and always implied, is the general word son, υἱός, embracing legal sonship. . . . Among the Jews no single person ever was or could be registered as a man's son on the sole ground that he was his legal heir, much less could he be said to have been begotten by him. The notion that γεννᾷν, begat, can be used of heirship, adoption, or other legal assumption, is pure imagination. There is not a single instance of such use. Everywhere and at all times it is used in exact and designed opposition to these: literally, of literal procreation, by male or female, in opposition to literal assumption; and metaphorically, of metaphorical procreation, in opposition to metaphorical assumption.—MCCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 417.

³ Dr. Mill, Sermons, p. 202.

McClellan, New Testament, p. 420.

given by Cornelius a Lapide and those who think with him on this subject; namely, that the object of both the Evangelists is the same, to trace the natural descent of Jesus from David and from Abraham, and, in S. Luke's case, from Adam—that in tracing the descent of Jesus from David, S. Luke does it through Nathan, who was in a private station, and S. Matthew through Solomon the king, and through a line of kings—that S. Matthew thus shows the right of Jesus to the throne of David through His mother, and through Joseph her husband; but that this was only a secondary object with him, his main object being to show His natural descent, that He was the Son of David—and that both the genealogies are Mary's, that by S. Matthew giving her maternal descent, and that by S. Luke her paternal!

It may be objected that if the genealogies are both Mary's, and if the object of both the Evangelists is to show the natural descent of Jesus through Mary His mother, why is not the name of Mary expressed, and why does the name of Joseph come into the genealogy at all? A sufficient answer to this is, that it was not the custom of the Jews to trace genealogies through females, but through men only. In all the genealogies given in the Old Testament there is not a single instance where the name of a woman stands as a separate link in a genealogy. This custom, the unusual and unprecedented nature of the circumstances in this case, the explanation appended to the name of Joseph, as the husband of Mary, all taken together, show that S. Matthew is tracing the natural descent of Jesus. The question may fairly be asked, If S. Matthew is not expressing the natural descent of Jesus from David through His mother, how, being a Jew and under the circumstances, could he have expressed this otherwise than he has actually done? For him to have put in the name of Mary and of her mother would have been utterly alien to the Jewish mind, and it would have been in accordance with a custom which did not prevail in his nation, and until after his death.*

The difference between the Jewish and the modern method of reckoning genealogies may be illustrated by the well-known pedigree of her Majesty Queen Victoria. It is not uncommon for Englishmen to express a considerable amount of satisfaction and thankfulness at the fact, that in their Queen they have a lineal descendant of the first Plantagenet, Henry II. But between Henry II. and Queen Victoria there are no less than five females in direct succession. How would a Jew in the Old Testament days, or in the times of the Evangelists, have expressed this? It would have been contrary to their practice and to all their notions of propriety for the Jews to have put in the names of these five women as separate and independent links in this genealogy. Only two courses would have been open to them, either not to count descent through these females as descent from Henry II. at all, or else to put the names of their husbands into the genealogy in the place of those of the women. In our Lord's genealogy, where the peculiar nature of the case necessitated descent from a woman, the latter of these alternatives is adopted, and the name of the Blessed Virgin's Husband is put into the genealogy instead of her own. Where, as in this case, the woman and her husband are cousins, the genealogy is scarcely affected by the substitution of his name for hers.

How slightly a genealogy is affected by the substitution of the husband's name for the wife's where they are cousins, may be seen by a glance at the case of Joseph and Mary. In tracing the descent of Jesus from Matthan, the grandfather of Joseph and Mary, S. Matthew does not put the name of Mary and of her mother and so up to Matthan into the genealogy, as a modern writer would have done, but, like a Jew of that time, he puts in the name of Mary's husband and of his father, and thus up to Matthan, their common ancestor.

THE JEWISH METHOD
(followed by S. Matthew).

Matthan
Jacob
Joseph, the husband of Mary,
Jesus.

MODERN METHOD.

Matthan
Ann
Mary
Jesus.

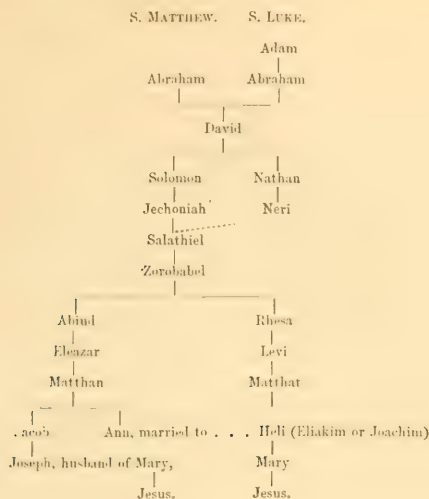

* Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. iii. 23; vol. viii. p. 701.

* The two genealogies.—“(1) Both tables at first view purport to give the lineage of our Lord through Joseph. But Joseph cannot have been the son by natural descent of both Jacob and Heli (Eli): Matt. i. 16; Luke iii. 23. Only one of the tables therefore can give his true lineage by generation. This is done apparently in that of Matthew; because, beginning at Abraham, it proceeds by natural descent, as we know from history, until after the exile; and then continues on in the same mode of expression until Joseph. Here the phrase is changed; and it is no longer Joseph who ‘begat’ Jesus, but Joseph ‘the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called the Christ.’ See Augustine, de Consensu Evangel. ii. 5.

“(2) To whom then does the genealogy in Luke chiefly relate? If in any way to Joseph, as the language purports, then it must be because he in some way bore the legal relation of son to Heli, either by adoption or by marriage. If the former simply, it is difficult to comprehend why, along with his true personal lineage as traced by Matthew up through the royal line of Jewish kings to David, there should be given also another subordinate genealogy, not personally his own, and running back through a different and inferior line to the same great ancestor. If, on the other hand, as is most probable, this relation to Heli came by marriage with his daughter, so that Joseph was truly his son-in-law (comp. Ruth i. 8, 12); then it follows that the genealogy in Luke is in fact that of Mary the mother of Jesus. This being so, we can perceive a sufficient reason why this genealogy should be thus given, viz. in order to show definitely, that Jesus was in the most full and perfect sense a descendant of David; not only by law in the royal line of kings through His reputed father, but also in fact by direct personal descent through His mother.”—ROBINSON, ‘Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek,’ p. 184.

The following diagram will convey a general impression of the line of interpretation adopted in this attempt to reconcile, or rather to explain, the differences between the genealogies of S. Matthew and S. Luke:—

CHAPTER IV.

[1. The temptation and fasting of Christ. 13. He overcometh the devil: 14. beginneth to preach. 16. The people of Nazareth admire His gracious words. 33. He cureth one possessed of a devil. 38. Peter's mother-in-law, 40. and divers other sick persons. 41. The devils acknowledge Christ, and are reproved for it. 43. He preacheth through the cities.]

[Vulg. Jesus post jejuniū quadraginta dierum, ac devictis Satanae tentationes, in synagoga Nazareth legit factum de se Isaiæ prophetiam; dicitque prophetam non esse acceptum in patria propria, quapropter voluit eum de monte præcipitare: ejecit in Capharnaüm demonium, sanatque socrum Simonis, et plures alios, a cæcis languoribus, ac demonia ejecit.]

For verses 1-13 see S. Matthew, ch. iv., page 103.

1. And Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost returned from Jordan, and was led by the Spirit into the wilderness, Vulg. et agebatur a Spiritu.

2. Being forty days tempted of the devil. And in those days He did eat nothing: and when they were ended, He afterward hungered.

S.V. omits afterward.

Vulg. Diebus quadraginta, et tentabatur a diabolo.

3. And the devil said unto Him, If Thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread.

And: S.V. Now.

Vulg. Dixit autem illi diabolus.

4. And Jesus answered him, saying, It is written,

"That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God."

S.V. omits saying: S.V. omits but by every word of God.

*Vulg. Et respondit ad illum Jesus: Scriptum est,
"Quia non in solo pane vivit homo, sed in omni verbo Dei."*

5. And the devil, taking Him up into an high mountain, shewed unto Him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

S.V. And he taking Him up, shewed unto Him.

Vulg. Et duxit illum diabolus in montem excelsum.

6. And the devil said unto Him, All this power will I give Thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it.

I give it: S.V. I will give it.

Vulg. Et ait illi: . . . et cui volo do illa.

7. If Thou therefore wilt worship me, all shall be Thine.

A. it all shall.

8. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Get thee behind Me, Satan: for it is written,

"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve."

S.V. omits Get thee behind Me, Satan: S.V. A. omits for.

Vulg. omits Get thee behind Me, Satan: for.

9. And he brought Him to Jerusalem, and set Him on a pinnacle of the Temple, and said unto Him, If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down from hence:

S.V. Now he brought Him.

10. For it is written,

"He shall give His angels charge over Thee, to keep Thee:

11. and in their hands they shall bear Thee up, lest at any time Thou dash Thy foot against a stone."

S.V. omits For.

Vulg. Scriptum est enim quod angelis suis mandavit de te.

12. And Jesus answering said unto him, It is said,

"Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

13. And when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from Him for a season.^a Vulg. usque ad tempus.

For verses 14-31 see also S. Matthew, ch. xiii., page 238.

^a For a season.—"In Luke iv, 13, ἀχρι καιροῦ, 'until a season,' is erroneously rendered in the Authorized Version, 'for a season.'"—The "Church Quarterly Review," April 1876, p. 138.

14. ¶ And Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee: and there went out a fame of Him through all the region round about.

S. omits round about.

Vulg. et fama exiit per universam regionem de illis.

15. And He taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all.

For verses 16-30 see also S. Matthew, ch. xiii., page 238.

16. ¶ And He came to Nazareth, where He had been brought up: and, as His custom was, He went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read.

17. And there was delivered unto Him the book of the prophet Esaias.* And when He had opened the book, He found the place where it was written,

Vulg. Et erat posuit librum.

18. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach
the Gospel to the poor;
He hath sent Me to heal the broken-hearted,
to preach deliverance to the captives,
and recovering of sight to the blind,
to set at liberty them that are bruised,
19. to preach the acceptable year of the Lord."

S.V. omit to heal the broken-hearted.

Vulg. propterquod unxit me, evangelizare pauperibus misit me, sanare contritos corde, predicare captivis remissionem, et cecis visum, dimittite contrarios in remissionem, predicare annum Domini acceptum et diem retributionis.

20. And He closed the book, and He gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on Him.

21. And He began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears.

It is probable that Jesus did not read that portion of Isaiah which was appointed for the day, but selected another passage more appropriate to bring before them His claims to be the Messiah foretold by the prophets of the Old Testament.

The words of Isaiah given by S. Luke, and as we now have them in the Authorized Version, are not quoted literally, either from the Hebrew or from the Septuagint. But they are taken from the Septuagint, with the addition of the clause, "to set at liberty them that are bruised." This clause may have been added by S. Luke as an explanation of the preceding words. Some¹ of the Fathers also, when quoting this passage of S. Luke, omit this clause; others give this, and omit the words "to heal the broken-hearted," which are also omitted by some of the earliest MSS., such as the Sinaitic and Vatican; and others give both of these clauses.

Jesus expressly says that they that day saw Isaiah's prophecy fulfilled by Him, the Son of Mary.² The Holy Spirit was upon Him in a sense in which He could not be said to be upon any mere man: for He was conceived by the Holy Ghost; He was the Word made flesh. At His Baptism, too, the Holy Spirit had visibly descended upon Him; "and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. iii. 16, 17). It is probably to this³ that Jesus here alludes, as being then publicly anointed by the Holy Spirit to His office to preach the Gospel to the poor—a term more especially applied to the Gentiles, as implying that they had received a more scanty revelation of God and of His laws than the Jews—to heal those who were broken-hearted at the sins which they had committed, to preach deliverance from sin to those who had been led captive by it, to give sight to those who had been spiritually blind, and to announce entire Redemption from Satan through Him.

By "the acceptable year of the Lord" the Jews would understand the year of Jubilee, when it was ordered (Levit. xxv.) that every man that had sold his possession should return unto it, and every man that had sold himself into bondage should become free. The freedom regained at the year of Jubilee was but a figure of the freedom of the soul procured for man by the coming of Christ, and the preaching of His Gospel.

22. And all bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of ¹ S. Irenaeus, contr. Hæreses, iii. 9 (alias 10), p. 871.

Eusebius, Demonstr. Evang. ix.: vol. iv. p. 688.

S. Cyprian, Testimon. ii. 10, p. 705.

S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 42; vol. iii. p. 1121.

* There was delivered unto Him the book of the prophet Esaias.—Give me leave therefore to conjecture that on the Sabbath wherein these things were transacted in the Synagogue at Nazareth, that section which was to be read in the prophets was according to the rubric in the prophet Isaiah; and upon that account the minister of the Synagogue delivered that book to our Saviour when He stood up to read.

* The words translated of the Evangelist, ἀναγνῶντας τὸ βιβλίον.

² S. Jerome, in Isaiah lxi. 1, &c.; vol. iv. p. 598.

³ Maldonatus, in Luc. iv. 18; vol. ii. p. 143.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. iv. 18; vol. viii. p. 707.

to me seem not barely to mean that He unfolded & opened the book, but that, being opened, He unrolled it from folio to folio, till He found the place He designed to read and expound; which, though it was not the section appointed by the rubric for the day, yet did not Christ much recede from the custom of the Synagogue, which allowed the reader to skip from one place to another.—LIGHTFOOT on S. Luke iv. 17; vol. ii. p. 407.

His mouth. And they said, Is not this Joseph's son?

23. And He said unto them, Ye will surely say unto Me this proverb, Physician, heal Thyself: whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in Thy country.

S.V. in Capernaum.
Vulg. in Capernaum.

24. And He said, Verily I say unto you, No prophet is accepted in his own country.

Jesus intimates that they required Him to perform the miracles He had done, or was said to have done, in Capernaum, not that they might be persuaded to believe in Him, but that they were actuated partly by feelings of doubt whether He could perform such miracles, and partly of wounded pride that, if He could perform such miracles, He had wrought them not in His own city, but elsewhere. He then proceeds to justify Himself, and to show them that His behaviour with respect to Nazareth, the city in which He had been brought up, and to Capernaum, the inhabitants of which were partly Gentiles, was of a piece with God's former works as related in the Old Testament; that God had not confined the benefit of His miraculous power to His own people Israel, but had sometimes displayed this to the Gentiles in preference to His own people, when He saw in them a disposition to appreciate His work more fully. He quotes two instances of this—the first in the well-known famine in the time of Elijah. There were many widows in Israel at that time, but God did not send the prophet to one of them, but to a widow in the Gentile city of Sarepta, that he might support her and her family by his miraculous power during the continuance of the drought. The second instance was the cure of Naaman, the Syrian leper, whom Elisha by his superhuman power cured of his leprosy, while he did not cure the many lepers that were in the land of Israel. He implies that as the widow of Sarepta and Naaman the Syrian by their conduct approved themselves more worthy to receive a display of God's miraculous power than the inhabitants of Israel, so also the inhabitants of Capernaum, though strangers, were more worthy to behold the proof of His Divine power than the inhabitants of Nazareth—that the latter were so prejudiced against Him, as having been one of themselves, and in their estimation no greater than themselves, that they would not listen to His instruction.

25. But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land;

26. But unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

27. And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian.

S.V. A. Naaman.
Vulg. Naaman.

In the account of this famine in the Old Testament (1 Kings xvii. 9, xviii. 1) it is represented as lasting three years. Jesus could not be ignorant of this, and yet He expressly states that it lasted three years and six months. Two explanations¹ have been given of this: either (1) Jesus followed some Jewish or traditional interpretation of the account of this famine in the Old Testament, well known to His hearers, and which explained it to mean that the famine lasted three years and six months, though stated in general terms to be three years; or (2) that Jesus by His superhuman knowledge corrected the statement of the historian, who had represented it as lasting only three years.

28. And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath,

29. And rose up, and thrust Him out of the city, and led Him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast Him down headlong.

Margin, edge.
Vulg. et duxerunt illum usque ad speculium montis.

30. But He passing through the midst of them went His way,

That one brought up in their own city, and He the son of such a man as Joseph, should claim to be the Messiah foretold by Isaiah, and that He should deem the inhabitants of Capernaum more worthy than themselves to receive the proofs which He had to give of His claim, and that He should justify Himself for acting thus by God's dealings of old with respect to His people Israel and the widow of Sarepta and Naaman the Syrian; all this filled them with the utmost rage, and they attempt to take His life.

Some² suppose that Jesus rendered Himself invisible to them, and so passed safely through the midst of them; others³ that He suddenly and miraculously caused them to change their intentions with respect to Him; others⁴ that He rendered their bodily organs, their hands and their feet, &c., powerless to carry their wishes into execution. But whichever was the precise mode in which Jesus effected His escape, it is plain that the Evangelist intends to represent it as accomplished by His superhuman power, and as a further proof of the truth of His claim to be the Son of God.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. liv. p. 423.
² Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. iv. 26; vol. viii. p. 710.
³ Maldonatus, in Luc. iv. 30; vol. ii. p. 150.

³ S. Ambrose, in Luc. iv. 28, 29; vol. ii. p. 1629.
⁴ V. Bede, in Luc. iv. 28, 29; vol. iii. p. 378.
⁵ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. iv. 30; vol. viii. p. 711.

For verses 31-37 see S. Mark, ch. i., page 515.

31. And came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and taught them on the sabbath days.

32. And they were astonished at His doctrine : for His word was with power.

33. ¶ And in the synagogue there was a man, which had a spirit of an unclean devil, and cried out with a loud voice,

34. Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with Thee, Thou Jesus of Nazareth? art Thou come to destroy us? I know Thee who Thou art; the Holy One of God.

Margin, Away.
S.V. omit saying.
Vulg. Dicens: Sine,

35. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil had thrown him in the midst, he came out of him, and hurt him not.

36. And they were all amazed, and spake among themselves, saying, What a word is this! for with authority and power He commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out.

37. And the fame of Him went out into every place of the country round about.

For verses 38 and 39 see S. Matthew, ch. viii., page 159.

38. ¶ And He arose out of the synagogue, and entered into Simon's house. And Simon's wife's mother was taken with a great fever; and they besought Him for her.

A. Jesus arose.

39. And He stood over her, and rebuked the fever; and it left her: and immediately she arose and ministered unto them.

S. and the fever left her.
Vulg. imperavit febris: et dimisit illam.

For verses 40 and 41 see S. Matthew, ch. viii., page 160.

40. ¶ Now when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto Him; and He laid His hands on every one of them, and healed them.

41. And devils also came out of many, crying out, and saying, Thou art Christ the Son of God. And He rebuking them suffered them not to speak: for they knew that He was Christ.

S.V. omit Christ.
Vulg. Quia tu es Filius Dei.

For verses 42-44 see S. Mark, ch. i., page 517.

42. And when it was day, He departed and went into a desert place: and the people sought Him, and came unto Him, and stayed Him, that He should not depart from them.

43. And He said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also: for therefore am I sent.

S. preach the Gospel of God: S.V. was I sent.
Vulg. Quia et aliis civitatibus oportet me evangelizare regnum Dei; quia ideo missus sum.

44. And He preached in the synagogues of Galilee.

of Galilee: S.V. of Judaea.
Vulg. in synagogis Galilee.

CHAPTER V.

[1. Christ teacheth the people out of Peter's ship: 4. in a miraculous taking of fishes, sheweth how He will make him and his partners fishers of men: 12. cleanseth the leper: 16. prayeth in the wilderness: 18. healeth one sick of the palsy: 27. calleth Matthew the publican: 29. eateth with sinners, as being the Physician of souls: 34. foretelleth the fastings and afflictions of the Apostles after His Ascension: 36. and liketh fainthearted and weak disciples to old bottles and worn garments.]

[Vulg. Ubi de navicula Petri descendisset, ille laxato ipsius jussu reti, conclusit copiosam piscium multitudinem: curatum leprosum mittit ad sacerdotem: paralyticum, remissa primum peccatis, jubet ut lectum suum tuleret: discumbens cum Levi, quem ex telonio vocaverat, causam dat murmurantibus pharisæis, quare cum peccatoribus conveneretur, et cur ipsius discipuli non jejunent.]

For verses 1-11 see S. Matthew, ch. iv., page 111.

1. And it came to pass, that, as the people pressed upon Him to hear the word of God, He stood by the lake of Gennesaret,

S*. as the people was gathered together and heard the word of God.
to hear: V. A. and heard.
Vulg. Factum est autem, cum turbe irruerent in eum, ut audiret verbum Dei.

2. And saw two ships standing by the lake: but the fishermen were gone out of them, and were washing their nets.

S*. omits two.
Vulg. Et vidit duas naves.

3. And He entered into one of the ships, which was Simon's, and prayed him that he would thrust out a little from the land. And He sat down, and taught the people out of the ship.

S*. And He sat down in the ship and taught the people.
Vulg. Et sedens docebat de navicula turbas.

4. Now when He had left speaking, He said unto Simon, Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.

Vulg. Ut cessavit autem loqui.

5. And Simon answering said unto Him, Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing: nevertheless at Thy word I will let down the net.

S.V. omit unto Him.
Vulg. Et respondens Simon, dixit illi.

6. And when they had this done, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes: and their net brake.

S.V. their nets.
Vulg. irrupit autem rete eorum.

7. And they beckoned unto their partners, which were in the other ship, that they should come and help them. And they came, and filled both the ships, so that they began to sink.

S*. And he beckoned.
Vulg. Et annuerunt sociis . . . ita ut pene mergerentur.

8. When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord.

S*. omits O Lord.
Vulg. Exi a me, quia homo peccator sum, Domine.

9. For he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken:

S*. for they were astonished.
Vulg. Stupor enim circumdederat eum.

10. And so was also James, and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men.

11. And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all, and followed Him.

For verses 12-16 see S. Matthew, ch. viii., page 154.

12. ¶ And it came to pass, when He was in a certain city, behold a man full of leprosy: who seeing Jesus fell on his face, and besought Him, saying, Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean.

13. And He put forth His hand, and touched him, saying, I will: be thou clean. And immediately the leprosy departed from him.

S*. His hands.
Vulg. Et extendens manum, tetigit eum.

14. And He charged him to tell no man: but go, and shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing, according as Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

S. omit and shew thyself to the priest.
Vulg. vaide ostende te sacerdoti.

15. But so much the more went there a fame abroad of Him: and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by Him of their infirmities.

a fame abroad of Him: S. His fame.
S.V. omit by Him.
Vulg. Perambulabat autem magis sermo de illo . . . et curarentur ab infirmitatibus suis.

16. ¶ And He withdrew Himself into the wilderness, and prayed.

For verses 17-26 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 169.

17. And it came to pass on a certain day, as He was teaching, that there were Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judæa, and Jerusalem: and the power of the Lord was present to heal them.

S.V. omit them after to heal.
Vulg. Et factum est in una diebus, et ipse sedebat docens . . . et virtus Domini erat ad sanandum eos.

18. ¶ And, behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palsy: and they sought means to bring him in, and to lay him before Him.

S. men brought a man lying on a bed.
Vulg. Et ecce viri portantes in lecto hominem.

19. And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in because of the multitude, they went upon the housetop, and let him down through the tiling with his couch into the midst before Jesus.

before Jesus: V. before all.
Vulg. ante Jesum.

20. And when He saw their faith, He said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee.

S.V. omit unto him. S. omits thee.
Vulg. dixit: Homo, remittuntur tibi peccata tua.

21. And the scribes and the Pharisees began to reason, saying, Who is this which speaketh blasphemies? Who can forgive sins, but God alone?

22. But when Jesus perceived their thoughts, He answering said unto them, What reason ye in your hearts?

23. Whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Rise up and walk?

24. But that ye may know that the Son of Man hath power upon earth to forgive sins, (He said unto the sick of the palsy,) I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy couch, and go into thine house.

25. And immediately he rose up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own house, glorifying God.

S. before Him.
Vulg. Et confestim consurgens coram illis, tulit lectum in qua jacebat.

26. And they were all amazed, and they glorified God, and were filled with fear, saying, We have seen strange things to-day.

A. and were filled with fear, and glorified God, saying.
Vulg. Et stupor apprehendit omnes, et magnificabant Deum. Et repleti sunt timore, dicentes: Quia vidimus mirabiliaodie.

For verses 27 and 28 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 172.

27. ¶ And after these things He went forth, and saw a publican, named Levi, sitting at the receipt of custom: and He said unto him, Follow Me.

S. and He saith.
Vulg. et ait illi.

28. And he left all, rose up, and followed Him.

For verses 29-32 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 173.

29. And Levi made Him a great feast in his own house: and there was a great company of publicans and of others that sat down with them.

S. omits Him: S. omits and of others.
Vulg. Et fecit ei convivium magnum Levi in domo sua; et erat turba multa publicanorum, et aliorum.

30. But their scribes and Pharisees murmured against His disciples, saying, Why do ye eat and drink with publicans and sinners?

S.V. But the Pharisees and the V. their scribes.
Vulg. Et murmurabant pharisæi et scribæ eorum.

31. And Jesus answering said unto them, They that are whole need not a physician; but they that are sick.

32. I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

S. but ungodly to repentance.
Vulg. sed peccatores ad penitentiam.

For verses 33-39 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 174.

33. ¶ And they said unto Him, Why do the disciples of John fast often, and make prayers, and likewise the disciples of the Pharisees; but Thine eat and drink?

Y. unto Him, The disciples of John fast often.

Vulg. quare discipuli Iohannis jejunant frequenter, et obsecrationes faciunt, similiter et pharisaeorum.

34. And He said unto them, Can ye make the children of the bridechamber fast, while the bridegroom is with them?

S.V. And Jesus said: S*. Can the children of the bridechamber fast.

Vulg. quibus ipse ait: Numquid potestis filios sponsi, dum cum illis est sponus, facere jejunare?

35. But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days.

36. ¶ And He spake also a parable unto them; No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old; if otherwise, then both the new maketh a rent, and the piece that was taken out of the new agreeth not with the old.

35, 36. S. And then shall they fast. In those days He spake a parable unto them.

Vulg. Tunc jejunabunt in illis diebus. Dicebat autem et similitudinem ad illos.

S.V. No man rendeth a piece of a new garment and putteth it upon an old: A. omits the piece: S.V. will make a rent: S.V. A. will not agree with the old.

Vulg. Quia nemo commissuram a novo vestimento immittit in vestimentum vetus: alioquin et novum rumpit, et veteri non convenit commissura a novo.

37. And no man putteth new wine into old bottles; else the new wine will burst the bottles, and be spilled, and the bottles shall perish.

Vulg. alioquin rumpet vinum novum utres, et ipsum effundetur, et utres peribunt.

38. But new wine must be put into new bottles; and both are preserved.

S*. But they put new wine: S.V. omits and both are preserved.

Vulg. Sed vinum novum in utres novos mittendum est et utraque conservantur.

39. No man also having drunk old wine straightway desireth new: for he saith, The old is better.

S.V. omits straightway: S.V. The old is good.

Vulg. Et nemo bibens vetus, statim vult novum: dicit enim: Vetus melius est.

CHAPTER VI.

[1. Christ reproveth the Pharisees' blindness about the observation of the Sabbath, by Scripture, reason, and miracle: 13. chooseth twelve Apostles: 17. healeth the diseased: 20. preacheth to His disciples before the people of blessings and curses: 27. how we must love our enemies: 46. and join the obedience of good works to the hearing of the word: 1st in the evil day of temptation we fall like an house built upon the face of the earth, without any foundation.]

[Vulg. Discipulus spicas sabbato volentes excutit, atque sabbato manum cuius aridum: electi laudem nominant Apostolos, et cum illis ac multitudine copiosius in loco campestris ducit beatitudines atque consilia ac precepta evangelica: de festuca in oculo fratris, et arboris bona ac mala ex fructu dignoscenda: audiens Christi verba cui comparatur sicut opere complent, et cui sicut non complent.]

For verses 1-5 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 208.

1. And it came to pass on the second sabbath after the first, that He went through the corn fields; and His disciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat, rubbing them in their hands.

S.V. on the sabbath, that He went through corn-fields: S. plucked ears of corn.
Vulg. Factum est autem in sabbato secundo primo.

2. And certain of the Pharisees said unto them, Why do ye that which is not lawful to do on the sabbath days?

S.V. omit unto them: V. omits to do.
Vulg. Quidam autem phariseorum dicebant illis: Quid facitis quod non licet in sabbatis?

3. And Jesus answering them said, Have ye not read so much as this, what David did, when himself was an hungred, and they which were with him;

4. How he went into the house of God, and did take and eat the shewbread, and gave also to them that were with him; which it is not lawful to eat but for the priests alone?

How he went: V. He went. S. omits and did take.
Vulg. Quomodo intravit in domum Dei, et panes propositionis sumpsit, et manducavit.

5. And He said unto them, That the Son of Man is Lord also of the sabbath.

S.V. unto them, The Son of Man is Lord of the sabbath.
Vulg. Et dicebat illis: Quia Dominus est Filius hominis, etiam sabbati.

For verses 6-11 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 210.

6. And it came to pass also on another sabbath, that He entered into the synagogue and taught: and there was a man whose right hand was withered.

S.V. omit also.
Vulg. Factum est autem et in alio sabbato.

7. And the scribes and Pharisees watched Him, whether He would heal on the sabbath day; that they might find an accusation against Him.

A. omits Him after watched: S.A. whether He healeth.
Vulg. Observabant autem scribe et pharisei si in sabbato curaret.

8. But He knew their thoughts, and said to the man which had the withered hand, Rise up, and stand forth in the midst. And he arose and stood forth.

9. Then said Jesus unto them, I will ask you one thing; Is it lawful on the sabbath days to do good, or to do evil? to save life, or to destroy it?

S.V. Now Jesus said: S.V. I ask you whether it is lawful: A. to kill for to destroy.
Vulg. Ait autem ad illos Iesus: Interrogo vos si licet sabbatis benefacere, an male: animum salvum facere, an perdere?

10. And looking round about upon them all, He said unto the man, Stretch forth thy hand. And he did so: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

A. He said to him: S. And he stretched it forth for And he did so: A. omits whole: S.V. omit whole as the other.
Vulg. Et circumspiciens omnibus dixit homini: Extende manum tuam. Et extendit: et restituta est manus ejus.

11. And they were filled with madness; and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus.

A. one with another saying.
Vulg. Et colloquebantur ad invicem, quidnam facerent Iesu.

For verses 12-16 see S. Matthew, ch. x., page 185.

12. And it came to pass in those days, that He went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God.

13. ¶ And when it was day, He called unto Him His disciples: and of them He chose twelve, whom also He named apostles;

14. Simon, (whom He also named Peter,) and Andrew his brother, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew, S.V. and James and John and Philip.

Vulg. et Andream fratrem ejus, Iacobum, et Ioannem, Philippum, et Bartholomæum.

15. Matthew and Thomas, James the son of Alphaeus, and Simon called Zelotes,

S.V. And Matthew: S. and James.
Vulg. Matthæum, et Thomam, Iacobum Alphaei.

16. And Judas the brother of James, and Judas Iscariot, which also was the traitor.

S.V. omit also.
Vulg. Et Iudam Iacobi, et Iudam Iscariotem qui fuit proditor.

For verses 17-26 see S. Matthew, ch. v., page 117.

17. ¶ And He came down with them, and stood in the plain, and the company of His disciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judæa and Jerusalem, and from the sea coast of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear Him, and to be healed of their diseases;

S.V. and a great company of His disciples: S. omits of people: S. adds and Peræa and Jerusalemon.
Vulg. Et turba discipulorum ejus, et multitudo copiosa plebis ab omni Iudæa, et Jerusalem, et maritima, et Tyri, et Sidonis.

18. And they that were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed.

S.V. A. And they that were vexed with unclean spirits were healed.
Vulg. Et qui vexabantur a spiritibus immundis curabantur.

19. And the whole multitude sought to touch Him: for there went virtue out of Him, and healed them all.

20. ¶ And He lifted up His eyes on His disciples, and said, Blessed be ye poor: for yours is the kingdom of God.

21. Blessed are ye that hunger now: for ye shall be filled. Blessed are ye that weep now: for ye shall laugh.

S. Blessed are they which hunger now: for they shall be filled.
Vulg. Beati qui nunc esuritis.

22. Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of Man's sake.

23. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for, behold, your reward is great in heaven: for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets.

S. for in this manner.
Vulg. secundum hæc enim

24. But woe unto you that are rich! for ye have received your consolation.

25. Woe unto you that are full! for ye shall hunger. Woe unto you that laugh now! for ye shall mourn and weep.

S.V. that are full now.
Vulg. Vae vobis, qui saturati estis: quia esurietis.

26. Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.

S.V. A. Woe when all: V. for likewise they did to the false prophets.
Vulg. Vae cum benedixerint vobis homines, secundum hæc enim faciebant pseudoprophetae patres eorum.

For verses 27-36 see S. Matthew, ch. v., page 127.

27. ¶ But I say unto you which hear, Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you,

28. Bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you.

S.V. A. omit and.
Vulg. Benedicite maledicentibus vobis, et orate pro calumniantibus vos.

29. And unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek offer also the other; and him that taketh away thy cloke forbid not to take thy coat also.

S. on the right cheek.
Vulg. Et qui te percussit in maxillam.

30. Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again.

31. And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.

V. omits also.
Vulg. et vos facite illis similiter.

32. For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them.

33. And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same.

S. V. For if ye do good: S.V. sinners also.
Vulg. Et si benefeceritis his qui vobis benefaciunt, quæ vobis est gratia? siquidem et peccatores hoc faciunt.

34. And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners; to receive as much again.

S.V. Sinners also.
Vulg. nam et peccatores.

35. But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for He is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil.

S. exspecto no omne in despero: S2 A. shall be great in heaven.
Vulg. benedicite et mirum date, nihil inde sperantes: et erit merces vestra multa, et eritis filii Altissimi.

36. Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful.

S.V. omit therefore: S.V. omit also.

For verses 37-42 see S. Matthew, ch. vii., page 143.

37. Judge not, and ye shall not be judged: condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive, and ye shall be forgiven:

S.V. and condemn not: A. that ye be not judged.

38. Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again.

S.V. pressed down, shaken together, running over: S.V. For with what measure ye mete, it shall be. V*. omits again.

39. And He spake a parable unto them, Can the blind lead the blind? shall they not both fall into the ditch?

S.V. Now He spake also a parable.

40. The disciple is not above his master: but every one that is perfect shall be as his master.

Margin, shall be perfected as his master.

S.V. above the master: V.A. but every one shall be perfected as his master: S. let him be perfected as his master.

41. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

42. Either how canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye.

Either how: S. And how; V. How.
Vulg. Aut quomodo potes dicere fratri tuo.

For verses 43-49 see S. Matthew, ch. vii., page 144.

43. For a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

S.V. neither again.
Vulg. Non est enim arbor bona, quae facit fructus malos: neque arbor mala, faciens fructum bonum.

44. For every tree is known by his own fruit. For of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramblebush gather they grapes.

Margin, a grape.
Vulg. neque de rubo vindemiant uvam.

45. A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh.

S.V. and the evil out of the evil bringeth forth.
Vulg. et malus homo de malo thesauro profert malum.

46. ¶ And why call ye Me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?

47. Whosoever cometh to Me, and heareth My sayings, and doeth them, I will shew you to whom he is like:

Vulg. Omnis qui venit ad me.

48. He is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it: for it was founded upon a rock.

S.V. and could not shake it, because it was well built.
Vulg. fundata enim erat super petram.

49. But he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that without a foundation built an house upon the earth; against which the stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great.

Vulg. et facta est ruina domus illius magna.

CHAPTER VII.

[1. Christ findeth a greater faith in the centurion a Gentile, than in any of the Jews: 10. healeth his servant being absent: 11. raiseth from death the widow's son at Nain: 19. answereth John's messengers with the declaration of His miracles: 24. testifieth to the people what opinion He held of John. 30. invincibly against the Jews, who with neither the manners of John nor of Jesus could be won: 36. and sheweth by occasion of Mary Magdalene, how He is a friend to sinners, not to maintain them in sins, but to forgive them their sins, upon their faith and repentance.]

[Vulg. Admirat' est centurionis fidem, absens sanat illius servum: iuxta portam civitatis Nain filium unicum viduæ reuocavit: coram discipulis Ioannis Baptiste per eos interrogantis an esset qui venturus erat, multa edidit signa: illique abeuntibus Ioannem plurimum extollit: Iudæis nec Ioannis nec Christi vita placuit, quæ pueris inimicis in foro acclamantibus assimilat: a peccatrice muliere pedes inunctus, respondet Simoni ob hoc murmuranti, proposita ad hoc parabola duorum debitorum, et remissa mulieri peccatis.]

For verses 1-10 see S. Matthew, ch. viii., page 156.

1. Now when He had ended all His sayings in the audience of the people, He entered into Capernaum.

S*. omits all: S.V. into Capernaum.

Vulg. Cum autem impleret omnia verba sua in aures plebis, intravit Capernaum.

2. And a certain centurion's servant, who was dear unto him, was sick, and ready to die.

S*. was ready to die (omit sick and).

Vulg. Centurionis autem cuiusdam servus male habens, erat moriturus: qui illi erat pretiosus.

3. And when he heard of Jesus, he sent unto Him the elders of the Jews, beseeching Him that He would come and heal his servant.

4. And when they came to Jesus, they besought Him instantly, saying, That he was worthy for whom He should do this:

A. saying unto Him.

Vulg. dicentes ei: Quia dignus est ut hoc illi præstes.

5. For he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue.*

6. Then Jesus went with them. And when He was now not far from the house, the centurion sent friends to Him, saying unto Him, Lord, trouble not Thyself: for I am not worthy that Thou shouldst enter under my roof:

S.V. sent friends, saying (V. unto Him), Lord.

Vulg. misit ad eum centurio amicos, dicens: Domine, noli vexari.

* A synagogue (τὴν συναγωγὴν).—"We prefer to render it, 'and himself has built us our synagogue,' as the article is here personal. In Luke xviii. 15, 'They brought unto Him also infants' (τὰ βρέφη), we propose as an emendation, 'their infants.'"—The Church Quarterly Review, April 1876, p. 129.

^b He went into a city called Nain.—"We are now on the highway from Tiberias to Nain, and, following the path along the

7. Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto Thee: but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed.

8. For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers, and I say unto one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.

9. When Jesus heard these things, He marvelled at him, and turned Him about, and said unto the people that followed Him, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.

Vulg. Quo auditio Iesus miratus est . . . nec in Israel tantam fidem inveni.

10. And they that were sent, returning to the house, found the servant whole that had been sick.

S.V. omit that had been sick.

Vulg. invenerunt servum, qui languerat, sanum.

S. Luke alone records the following miracle.

11. ¶ And it came to pass the day after, that He went into a city called Nain;^b and many of His disciples went with Him, and much people.

S*. into the city of Nain: S.V. and His disciples.

Vulg. Et factum est: deinceps ibat in civitatem quam vocatur Nain: et ibant cum eo discipuli ejus, et turba copiosa.

northern edge of Jebel Dûhy, in about an hour or more we reached that spot of hallowed memory. The foreground was singularly uninteresting, but the distant landscape on the way was of striking beauty. Hermon, clad in spotless snow, was now clear of Tabor, and the two thus stood forth side by side: Tabor, with its bright green foreground, dotted all over with grey trees, contrasted finely with the dazzling white of the former. Somewhere near this the

12. Now when He came nigh to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow: and much people of the city was with her.

A. There was a man carried out.
Vulg. ecce defunctus efferebatur filius unicus matris suae.

13. And when the Lord saw her, He had compassion on her, and said unto her, Weep not.

14. And He came and touched the bier: and they that bare him stood still. And He said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise.

Margin, coffin.
Vulg. Et accessit et tetigit loculum.

15. And he that was dead sat up, and began to speak. And He delivered him to his mother.

16. And there came a fear on all: and they glorified God, saying, That a great Prophet is risen up among us; and, That God hath visited His people.

The Evangelist relates this miracle with great minuteness of detail. He notes that he was a young man who was being carried out of the city for burial; that his mother was a widow; that he was her only son, and probably the only child she ever had (ὁὸς μονογενής),¹ and therefore one in whom all her maternal affection and hopes had been centred; and that much people of the city accompanied her, probably implying that she was a person of wealth or consideration in the city.

Some² have supposed that Jesus touched the bier as well as commanded the dead to arise, in order to indicate to the bystanders the life-giving power of His Body, to draw their attention to the fact that His Body was not like that of mere men, but that, by reason of the Hypostatic Union with the Godhead, His Body possessed supernatural power to communicate life and health, to raise the dead and heal the sick. On other occasions it is recorded that He healed the sick by touching them, or by their touching Him, or by their touching even the hem of His garment.

Many of the ancient writers saw in this miracle a mine of symbolic meaning.³

For verses 17-23 see S. Matthew, ch. xi., page 198.

17. And this rumour of Him went forth throughout all Judæa, and throughout all the region round about.

S*. omits of Him.
Vulg. Et exit hic sermo in universam Iudæam de eo.

18. And the disciples of John shewed him of all these things.

19. ¶ And John calling unto him two of his disciples sent them to Jesus, saying, Art Thou He that should come? or look we for another?

V. sent them to the Lord.
Vulg. et misit ad Iesum.

20. When the men were come unto Him, they said, John Baptist hath sent us unto Thee, saying, Art Thou He that should come? or look we for another?

S*. When they were come.

21. And in that same hour He cured many of their infirmities and plagues, and of evil spirits; and unto many that were blind He gave sight.

S*. V. In that hour: S*. In that day: S*. and of unclean spirits.
Vulg. In ipsa autem hora multos curavit a languoribus, et plagis, et spiritibus malis.

22. Then Jesus answering said unto them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. vii. 12; vol. viii. p. 722.

² S. Cyril Alex., in Luc. vii. 14; vol. v. p. 610.

Euthymius, in Luc. vii. 14; vol. iii. p. 355.

Theophylact, in Luc. vii. 14; vol. i. p. 317.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. vii. 14; vol. viii. p. 722.

sacred poet may have passed when he exclaimed, 'Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice in Thy Name.' They are eminently the two mountain features of Galilee.

"To the east of Nain, by the roadside, about ten minutes' walk from the village, lies the ancient burying-ground, still used by the Moslems; and probably on this very path our Lord met that sorrowing procession. A few oblong piles of stones, and one or two small built graves with whitened plaster, are all that mark the unfenced spot. Nain must have been a 'city'—the ruined heaps and traces of walls prove that it was of considerable extent, and that it was a walled town, and therefore with gates, according to the Gospel narrative; but it has now shrunk into a miserable Moslem village, i.e. a few houses of mud and stone, with flat earth roofs and doors three feet high, sprinkled here and there, without order or system, among the débris of former and better days. . . . An old Mussulman rose up from his prayers to point out to us what he said were the ruins of the widow's house, a mere heap of stones like the rest. It struck us as curious that a Mohammedan should thus, unasked, have had a locality to point out for a Christian miracle; it can scarcely have arisen from the number of inquiries after it, since Nain lies somewhat out of the beaten track; and though all the great events of the Old Testament are handed down among the Moslems in a more or less distorted form, their traditions very rarely extend to the New Testament. . . . There is a painful sense of desolation about Nain. All round is bare and forbidding, as though it had known not the time of its visitation, and therefore its houses had been left to it desolate."—TRISTRAM, Land of Israel, p. 129.

³ S. Ambrose, in Luc. vii. 11, &c.; vol. ii. p. 1660.

S. Augustine, Sermo xcvi. (alias 44 de verbis Dom.); vol. v. p. 591.

V. Bede, in Luc. vii. 11, &c.; vol. iii. p. 418.

hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached.

S.V. Then He answering: S.V. seen and heard, the blind see: S.V. and the deaf hear: S. and to the poor.

Vulg. Et respondens dixit illis: Euntes renuntiate Ioanni quae audistis et vidistis: Quia cecum vident, claudi ambulant, leprosi mundantur, surdi audiunt, mortui resurgunt, pauperes evangelizantur.

23. And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me.

For verses 24-35 see S. Matthew, ch. xi., page 199.

24. ¶ And when the messengers of John were departed, He began to speak unto the people concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness for to see? A reed shaken with the wind?

25. But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they which are gorgeously apparelled, and live delicately, are in kings' courts.

26. But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and much more than a prophet.

27. This is He, of whom it is written,

“Behold, I send My messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way before Thee.”

28. For I say unto you, Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist: but he that is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he.

S.V. omit For: S. Verily I say: S.V. there is none greater than John: but.
Vulg. Dico enim vobis: Major inter natos mulierum propheta Ioanne Baptistae nemo est: qui autem minor est in regno Dei, maior est illo.

29. And all the people that heard Him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John.

30. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him.

Margin, frustrated—within themselves.

S. omits against themselves.
Vulg. Pharisei autem et legis periti consilium Dei spreverunt in semetipsis.

31. ¶ And the Lord said, Whereunto then shall I liken the men of this generation? and to what are they like?

S.V. A. omit And the Lord said: S. Now whereunto shall I.
Vulg. Ait autem Dominus: Cui ergo similes dicam homines generationis huius?

32. They are like unto children sitting in the marketplace, and calling one to another, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept.

S.V. omit to you.

Vulg. lamentavimus, et non plorastis.

33. For John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine; and ye say, He hath a devil.

S.V. not eating bread.

Vulg. neque manducans panem, neque bibens vinum.

34. The Son of Man is come eating and drinking; and ye say, Behold a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!

35. But wisdom is justified of all her children.

S. of all her works.

Vulg. Et justificata est sapientia ab omnibus filiis suis.

S. Luke alone relates the following.

36. ¶ And one of the Pharisees desired Him that He would eat with him. And He went into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat.

37. And, behold, a woman in the city, which was a sinner, when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house, brought an alabaster box of ointment,

S.V. a woman which was in the city a sinner, and knowing.

Vulg. Et ecce mulier, quae erat in civitate peccatrix.

38. And stood at His feet behind Him weeping, and began to wash His feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed His feet, and anointed them with the ointment.

A. at the feet of Jesus, behind.

Vulg. Et stans retro secus pedes ejus.

39. Now when the Pharisee which had bidden Him saw it, he spake within himself, saying, This man, if He were a prophet, would have known who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth Him: for she is a sinner.

V*. if He were the prophet.

Vulg. Hic si esset propheta, sciret utique.

40. And Jesus answering said unto him, Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And he saith, Master, say on.

41. There was a certain creditor which had two debtors: the one owed five hundred pence, and the other fifty.

42. And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell Me therefore, which of them will love him most?

S.V. A. Which of them therefore.

Vulg. Non habentibus illis unde redderent, donavit utrisque. Quis ergo eum plus diligit?

43. Simon answered and said, I suppose that he, to whom he forgave most. And He said unto him, Thou hast rightly judged.

44. And He turned to the woman, and said unto Simon, Seest thou this woman? ^a I entered into thine house, thou gavest Me no water for My feet: but she hath washed My feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head.

^a V. A. wiped them with her hairs.
Vulg. et capillis suis terxit.

45. Thou gavest Me no kiss: but this woman since the time I came in hath not ceased to kiss My feet.

Vulg. hæc autem ex quo intravi.

46. My head with oil thou didst not anoint: but this woman hath anointed My feet with ointment.

47. Wherefore I say unto thee, Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little.

^b I said unto thee: V. the same also.
Vulg. Propter quod dico tibi . . . cui autem minus dimittitur, minus diligit.

48. And He said unto her, Thy sins are forgiven.

49. And they that sat at meat with Him began to say within themselves, Who is this that forgiveth sins also?

50. And He said to the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace.

What city this was is unknown. Apparently it was in Galilee. Some have supposed that it may have been Nain, where Jesus had raised the widow's son to life, as recorded in the early part of this chapter (vv. 11-18). Others have thought that it might be Magdala, where Mary resided.

Simon the Pharisee had a certain share of love to Jesus, otherwise he would not have invited Him to eat in his house, at a time when the Pharisees generally were hostile to Him. But there was a singular want of warmth in his love. For an Eastern to omit the various marks of courtesy and hospitality towards a guest, which Jesus reminds Simon he had not shown to Him, was not common, and evinced not mere forgetfulness, but intentional negligence.

Mary may have heard the preaching of John the Baptist, or she may have heard of the words which Jesus had uttered, and of the works which He had wrought in other places. Evidently she is not ignorant of His character. She knew enough to believe that He could forgive her sins. When, in deep humility and penitence for her past sins, she comes to Him, Simon, who is aware of her former life, draws conclusions disparaging to the knowledge and the character of Jesus. "This man," he says, "if He were a prophet, would have known who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth Him: for she is a sinner." To convince Simon that He was not ignorant of her character, and that though she had been a great sinner she was not unworthy to touch Him, because her sins, many as they were, had been all forgiven; nay, that she was even more worthy to touch Him than Simon himself, because her love to Him was greater than Simon's—to show this, and also to teach them that He, Jesus the Son of Mary, had the power to forgive sins, as well as the condition on which He forgave them, namely, love to Himself, He delivers the parable of the creditor who had two debtors.

It has been pointed out¹ that the conclusion which Jesus draws from the parable of the creditor who had two debtors, is not the principle, or at least is not the only principle, which He illustrates, when He applies the parable to the case of Simon and Mary Magdalene. The conclusion which Jesus draws, or rather which He makes Simon draw, from the parable of the creditor who had two debtors, is that he who owed most, and had been forgiven most, will love most. This conclusion, applied to Mary Magdalene, would be that she, having had much forgiven, would hereafter love Christ much. But His object was partly to show Simon that, though Mary had been a great sinner, she was worthy to touch Him, because her many sins had already been forgiven her, and also to show the way through which they had been forgiven her; namely, love to Himself. Jesus therefore, in His application of the parable, inverts the conclusion which He had drawn from it, and says, not that she loved much because she had been forgiven much, but that she had been forgiven much because she had loved much; that though her sins were many, they were all forgiven, because she had loved Him much. In the parable, love is represented as the effect of forgiveness, and in proportion to the amount forgiven; in the case of Mary, love to Jesus is represented as the cause of her forgiveness, and the amount forgiven is in proportion to the love which she had showed to Him. Thus Jesus illustrates two principles: the first by the parable that forgiveness creates love, and love in proportion to the amount forgiven; the second by Mary Magdalene, that love produces

¹ Maldenatus, in Luc. vii. 36, &c.; vol. ii. p. 165, &c.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. vii. 36, &c.; vol. viii. p. 727.

^a Simon, seest thou this woman?—Doth not our Lord Jesus Christ Himself impute the omission of some courteous ceremonies, even in domestic entertainment, to a colder degree of loving devotion, and take the contrary in latter part, not so much respecting what was less done as what was signified less by the one than by the other?—For to that very end He proceeds in part those gracious expostulations, "Simon, seest thou this woman? &c."—HOOKER, "Eccles. Polit." v. 65, 6; vol. ii. p. 320.

forgiveness, and forgiveness in proportion to the love shown to Him.

In order to make the principle, which Jesus illustrates by the case of the woman who anointed Him, the same as the conclusion which He drew from the parable of the creditor who had two debtors, some have supposed that this was not the first time she had seen Jesus, but that on some former occasion He had forgiven her sins, and had also cast seven devils out of her; and that she, hearing that He was in the house of Simon the Pharisee, took this opportunity of showing her gratitude and love to Him for the mercy and forgiveness which He had already bestowed upon her. But this is scarcely in accordance with our Saviour's words to her: "Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace," which seem rather to imply that it was her faith in Him on this occasion, and not at some former time, that had saved her.*

Mary Magdalene is the first person who is represented as coming to Jesus to obtain forgiveness of her sins. Many had come to Him to be healed of the infirmities of their bodies, but she is the first who is related as coming to be healed of the malady of her soul.

That the woman who here, in the house of Simon the Pharisee, anoints Jesus, was the same woman who afterwards anointed Him in the house of Simon the leper; or, in other words, that Mary Magdalene was the same person as Mary of Bethany, the sister of Lazarus: also that Simon, whom S. Luke calls the Pharisee, may be the same person as Simon whom S. Matthew and S. Mark call the leper; see Commentary on S. Matthew xxvi. 6, p. 411, and xxvii. 56, p. 483.

* For she loved much.—"If we consider these two or three things, we shall quickly understand the force and design of the ὅτι in the words ὅτι ἠγάπησε πολλὰ, 'for she loved much.'

"I. That this was not the first time when this woman betook herself to our Saviour, nor is this the first of her receiving remission of her sins. It is supposed that, not without good reason, this was Mary Magdalene. If so, then had her seven devils been cast out of her before; and at that time her sins had been forgiven her, our Lord at once indulging to her the cure both of her body and her mind. She therefore, having been obliged by so great a mercy, in gratitude and devotion now throws herself at the feet of Christ. She had obtained remission of her sins before this action; and from thence came this action, not from this action her forgiveness.

"II. Otherwise the similitude which our Saviour propounds about forgiving the debt would not be to the purpose at all. The debt is not released because the debtor loves his creditor, but the debtor loves because his debt is forgiven him. Remission goes before, and love follows.

"III. Christ does not say, 'She had washed My feet with her tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head, and anointed Me with ointment,' οὐ χάριν ἀφίενται αἱ ἀμαρτίαι, 'therefore her sins are forgiven;' but οὐ χάριν λέγω σοι ἀφίενται, &c., 'for this cause I say unto thee, her sins are forgiven her.' He tells Simon this that He might satisfy the murmuring Pharisee. 'Perhaps, Simon, thou wonderest within thyself that since this hath been so low a woman, I should so much as suffer her to touch Me; but I must tell thee, that it is very evident, even from this obsequiousness of hers, and the good offices she hath done to Me, that her sins are forgiven her: she could never have given these testimonies and fruits of her gratitude and devotion if she had still remained in her guilt, and not been loosed from her sins.'—LIGHTFOOT on Luke vii. 47; vol. ii. p. 415.

CHAPTER VIII.

[3 Women minister unto Christ of their substance. *4. Christ, after He had preached from place to place, attended with His Apostles, propoundeth the parable of the sower, 16, and of the candle: 21. delivereth who are His mother, and brethren: 22 rebuketh the winds: 26. casteth the legion of devils out of the man into the herd of swine: 37. is rejected of the Gadarenes: 43. healeth the woman of her bloody issue, 49. and raiseth from death Jairus' daughter.]

[Vulg. Parabolam de seminante proponit, ac discipulis interpretatur: nihil occultum quod non manifestetur: quos dicit suam esse matrem, suosque fratres: in mari a summo excelsitatis, ventum increpat: demoniacum ferocissimum a demonum legione liberat, permittens demonibus ut in porcos introeant: tacta fimbria vestimenti ejus mulier a fluxu sanguinis curatur, et filia Jairi archisynagagi verbo ipsius resuscitatur.]

S. LUKE alone contains the following (vv. 1-8).

1. And it came to pass afterward, that He went throughout every city and village, preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God: and the twelve were with Him, Vulg. et ipse iter faciebat per civitates et castella.

2. And certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene,^a out of whom went seven devils,^b

S. of unclean spirits.

Vulg. quae erant curatae a spiritibus malignis.

3. And Joanna the wife of Chuza^c Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, which ministered unto Him of their substance.

V. unto them.

Vulg. quae ministrabant ei de facultatibus suis.

* Mary called Magdalene (Μαρία ἡ καλουμένη Μαγδαληνή).—“In that contest whether Mary, the sister of Lazarus, was the same with Mary Magdalen, this passage will help a little toward the affirmative, that there was a town called Magdala very near Jerusalem.

“A clerk or scribe at Magdala set his candles in order every evening of the Sabbath, went up to Jerusalem, prayed there, returned and lighted up his candles, when the Sabbath was now coming in” (Echah Rabbathi, fol. 75, 2).

“It seems plain by this that Magdala and Jerusalem were not very far distant from one another, when all this was done so quickly, and in so short a space of time. Only we may learn this from the Gloss, that that Magdala was Magdala Zebaim, concerning which that sad and direful passage is related, that it was destroyed for its adulteries.

“There were three cities whose customs were carried to Jerusalem (Gloss, in waggons, because of their great weight). The names of these three cities were Cabul, Sichin, and Magdala. Why was Cabul destroyed? because of their discords. Why was Sichin destroyed? because of the magic arts they used. And why was Magdala destroyed? because of their whoredoms” (Echah Rabbathi, fol. 71, 4; and Hieros. fol. 69, 1).

“Now, therefore, what should hinder but that Mary, the sister of Lazarus of Bethany, might be called Magdalene, both for the nearness of the town, where perhaps she was married, and also

Many explanations have been given of the term Magdalene, by which Mary is distinguished. The most common is that she was so called from Magdala, a village situated on the west side of the Lake of Gennesaret, in the neighbourhood of Capernaum and Bethsaida.

Lightfoot shows by quotations from the Talmud that there was also a village called Magdala close to Jerusalem, which had a bad name from the low state of morality among its inhabitants. From this place he thinks Mary may have derived both her character and her name.

Some have supposed that by the devils which Jesus cast out of her are meant so many vices to which she was addicted, and that the term “seven” is used for an indefinite number. Others have held that the Evangelist's expression seems rather to imply a real demoniacal possession, and limited to the number seven—that to change her whole moral nature, and deliver her from some absorbing vice, wonderful as it for the lascivious manners of the townfolks, with which spot it is commonly believed Mary Magdalene had been tainted.”—LIGHTFOOT on John xii. 3; vol. ii. p. 387.

^b Out of whom went seven devils (ἀπ’ ἧς δαιμόνια ἐπὶ ἑξήκοντα).—“As to the number seven, we contend not, when there is hardly anything more usual than to put this certain number for an uncertain. Our difficulty is, whether these words are to be taken according to their letter, or according to the Jewish sense, who were wont to call vices by the name of devils, as ‘an evil affection is Satan’ (Gloss in Joma, fol. 67, 2). ‘Drunkennes by new wine is a devil’ (Gittin, fol. 77, 2). If this Mary be the same with the woman that was a sinner in the foregoing chapter, as is believed, then by devils seems to be understood the vices she was addicted to; especially when both the Pharisee and Evangelist call her a sinner, rather than demoniac. But this we leave at the choice of the reader.”—LIGHTFOOT on Luke viii. 2; vol. ii. p. 416.

^c Chuza (Χουζᾶ).—“We meet with such a name in Haman's genealogy. ‘The king promoted Haman the Hammadethite, the Agathite, the son of Chuza’ (Masseeh Sopher. cap. 13) . . . Only this let us take notice of by the way, that Chuza is a name in the family of Haman the Edomite, and this Chuza here was in the family of Herod, who himself was of the blood of the Edomites.”—LIGHTFOOT on Luke viii. 3; vol. ii. p. 416.

would have been considered, would not have been accounted miraculous, and would scarcely have been described as such by the Evangelists, and that the words "healed of evil spirits and infirmities" (τεθεραπευμένοι ἀπὸ πνευμάτων πονηρῶν καὶ ἀσθενειῶν) are not the terms in which the correcting of moral maladies or vices would have been described.¹

It has been observed² that it was much more in accordance with the habits of the Jews, and would have been much less the occasion of censure among them than among the Gentiles, for women to attend their instructor, and minister to him of their substance. These women acted as they did from gratitude for the benefits which they had received from Jesus. Whether Chuza was now dead or living is uncertain. Some have thought that the expression Joanna the wife of Chuza (Ἰωάννα γυναῖκα Χουζᾶ) rather implies that Chuza was still living, and that Joanna in gratitude for the cure which Jesus had wrought on her, followed Him, and that Jesus permitted her so to do.³

For verses 4-8 see S. Matthew, ch. xiii., page 226.

4. ¶ And when much people were gathered together, and were come to Him out of every city, He spake by a parable :

5. A sower went out to sow his seed : and as he sowed, some fell by the way side ; and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it.

6. And some fell upon a rock ; and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked moisture.

7. And some fell among thorns ; and the thorns sprang up with it, and choked it.

8. And other fell on good ground, and sprang up, and bare fruit an hundredfold. And when He had said these things, He cried, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

S.V.A. into.

Vulg. Et aliud cecidit in terram bonam.

For verses 9-15 see S. Matthew, ch. xiii., page 228.

9. And His disciples asked Him, saying, What might this parable be ?

S.V. asked Him, what this parable might be.

Vulg. Interrogabant autem eum discipuli ejus, quæ esset hæc parabola.

10. And He said, Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God : but to others in parables ; that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand.

S. and hearing, they might hear and not understand.

Vulg. et audientes non intelligent.

11. Now the parable is this : The seed is the word of God.

12. Those by the way side are they that hear ; then cometh the devil, and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved.

S.V.A. are they that have heard.

Vulg. Qui autem secus viam, hi sunt qui audiunt.

13. They on the rock are they, which, when they hear, receive the word with joy ; and these have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away.

S*. the word of God with joy : these have no root.

Vulg. cum gaudio suscipiunt verbum ; et hi radices non habent.

14. And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares and riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection.

Vulg. hi sunt qui audierunt.

15. But that on the good ground are they, which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience.

For verses 16-18 see S. Mark, ch. iv., page 526.

16. ¶ No man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel, or putteth it under a bed ; but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in may see the light.

V. omits that they which enter in may see the light.

Vulg. ut intrantes videant lumen.

17. For nothing is secret, that shall not be made manifest ; neither any thing hid, that shall not be known and come abroad.

18. Take heed therefore how ye hear : for whosoever hath, to him shall be given ; and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have.

Margin, thinketh that be hath.

Vulg. etiam quod putat se habere.

For verses 19-21 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 222.

19. ¶ Then came to Him His mother and His brethren, and could not come at Him for the press.

20. And it was told Him by certain which

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. iv. p. 426.

Maldonatus, in Luc. viii. 2 ; vol. ii. p. 173.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. viii. 2 ; vol. viii. p. 733.

² S. Jerome, in Matt. xxvii. 55 ; vol. vii. p. 214.

³ Maldonatus, in Luc. viii. 3 ; vol. ii. p. 173.

said, Thy mother and Thy brethren stand without, desiring to see Thee.

S.V. And it was told Him, Thy mother.

Vulg. Et nuntiaturum est illi: Mater tua et fratres tui.

21. And He answered and said unto them, My mother and My brethren are these which hear the word of God, and do it.

S. omits of God.

Vulg. qui verbum Dei audiunt et faciunt.

For verses 22-25 see S. Matthew, ch. viii., page 163.

22. ¶ Now it came to pass on a certain day, that He went into a ship with His disciples: and He said unto them, Let us go over unto the other side of the lake. And they launched forth.

23. But as they sailed He fell asleep: and there came down a storm of wind on the lake; and they were filled with water, and were in jeopardy.

24. And they came to Him, and awoke Him, saying, Master, Master, we perish. Then He arose, and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water: and they ceased, and there was a calm.

S. and it ceased.

Vulg. dicentes: Preceptor, perimus. At ille surgens, increpavit ventum, et tempestatem aquæ, et cessavit.

25. And He said unto them, Where is your faith? And they being afraid wondered, saying one to another, What manner of man is this! for He commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey Him.

S.V. Where is your faith? S. omits one to another.

Vulg. Ubi est fides vestra? Qui timentes, mirati sunt ad invicem dicentes.

For verses 26-39 see S. Matthew, ch. viii., page 164.

26. ¶ And they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes, which is over against Galilee.

S. of the Gergesenes: V. of the Gerasenes.

Vulg. Et navigaverunt ad regionem Gerasenorum.

27. And when He went forth to land, there met Him out of the city a certain man, which had devils long time, and wore no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs.

S.V. which had devils, and long time wore no clothes.

Vulg. occurrit illi vir quidam, qui habebat demonium jam temporibus multis, et vestimento non induebatur.

28. When he saw Jesus, he cried out, and fell down before Him, and with a loud voice said, What have I to do with Thee, Jesus, Thou Son of God most high? I beseech Thee, torment me not.

Vulg. Is, ut videt Iesum, proclit ante illum: et exclamans voce magna, dixit.

1.

29. (For He had commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man. For oftentimes it had caught him: and he was kept bound with chains and in fetters; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil into the wilderness.)

S*. omits and before he brake.

Vulg. Et ruptis vinculis agebatur a demonio in deserto.

30. And Jesus asked him, saying, What is thy name? And he said, Legion: because many devils were entered into him.

S. And He asked him.

Vulg. Interrogavit autem illum Iesus.

31. And they besought Him that He would not command them to go out into the deep.

32. And there was there an herd of many swine feeding on the mountain: and they besought Him that He would suffer them to enter into them. And He suffered them.

S*. And He suffered (omits them).

Vulg. Et permisit illis.

33. Then went the devils out of the man, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake, and were choked.

S. into the sea.

Vulg. in stagnum.

34. When they that fed them saw what was done, they fled, and went and told it in the city and in the country.

S.V.A. omit and went.

Vulg. fugerunt, et nuntiaverunt in civitatem et in villas.

35. Then they went out to see what was done; and came to Jesus, and found the man, out of whom the devils were departed, sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid.

Vulg. et invenerunt hominem sedentem, a quo demonia exierant, vestitum, ac sana mente, ad pedes ejus, et timentum.

36. They also which saw it told them by what means he that was possessed of the devils was healed.

S.V. omit also: S. told them saying.

Vulg. Nuntiaverunt autem illis, et qui viderant, quemodo sanus factus esset a legione.

37. ¶ Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about besought Him to depart from them; for they were taken with great fear: and He went up into the ship, and returned back again.

S. of the Gergesenes: V. of the Gerasenes. S.V. into a ship.

Vulg. Et rogaverunt illum omnis multitudo regionis Gerasenorum ut discederet ab illis.

38. Now the man out of whom the devils were departed besought Him that he might be with Him : but Jesus sent him away, saying,

S.V. but He sent him away.
Vulg. dimisit autem eum Iesus, dicens.

39. Return to thine own house, and shew how great things God hath done unto thee. And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done unto him.

For verses 40-42 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 175.

40. And it came to pass, that, when Jesus was returned, the people gladly received Him : for they were all waiting for Him.

waiting for Him : S*. waiting for God.
Vulg. erant enim omnes expectantes eum.

41. ¶ And, behold, there came a man named Jairus, and he was a ruler of the synagogue : and he fell down at Jesus' feet, and besought Him that He would come into his house :

42. For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, and she lay a dying. But as He went the people thronged Him.

Vulg. Et contigit, dum iret, a turbis comprimebatur.

For verses 43-48 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 177.

43. ¶ And a woman having an issue of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians, neither could be healed of any,

V. which could not be healed of any (omit had spent all her living upon physicians).
Vulg. quæ in medicos erogaverat omnem substantiam suam.

44. Came behind Him, and touched the border of His garment : and immediately her issue of blood stancheth.

45. And Jesus said, Who touched Me ? When all denied, Peter and they that were with him said, Master, the multitude throng Thee and press Thee, and sayest Thou, Who touched Me ?

V. omits and they that were with him : S.V. omit and sayest Thou, Who touched Me ?

Vulg. dixit Petrus, et qui cum illo erant : Preceptor, turbæ te comprimunt, et alligunt, et dicis : Quis me tetigit ?

46. And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched Me : for I perceive that virtue is gone out of Me.

47. And when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came trembling, and falling down before Him, she declared unto Him before all the people for what cause she had touched Him, and how she was healed immediately.

S.V.A. omit unto Him.
Vulg. et ob quam causam tetigerit eum, indicavit coram omni populo.

48. And He said unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort : thy faith hath made thee whole ; go in peace.

S. omits unto her.
Vulg. At ipse dixit ei.

For verses 49-56 see S. Matthew, ch. ix., page 178.

49. ¶ While He yet spake, there cometh one from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying to him, Thy daughter is dead ; trouble not the Master.

S.V. omit to him : S.V. trouble no more.
Vulg. dicens ei : Qui mortua est filia tua, noli vexare illum.

50. But when Jesus heard it, He answered him, saying, Fear not : believe only, and she shall be made whole.

S. He said to him, Fear not : S.V. He answered him, Fear not.
Vulg. respondit patri puella : Noli timere, crede tantum, et salva erit.

51. And when He came into the house, He suffered no man to go in, save Peter, and James, and John, and the father and the mother of the maiden.

52. And all wept, and bewailed her : but He said, Weep not ; she is not dead, but sleepeth.

S.V. for she is not dead.
Vulg. Nolite flere : non est mortua puella, sed dormit.

53. And they laughed Him to scorn, knowing that she was dead.

54. And He put them all out, and took her by the hand, and called, saying, Maid, arise.

S.V. And He took her (omit put them all out, and).
Vulg. (omits put them all out) Ipse autem tenens manum ejus clamavit, dicens : Puella, surge.

55. And her spirit came again, and she arose straightway : and He commanded to give her meat.

S*. omits and she arose straightway.
Vulg. Et reversus est spiritus ejus, et surrexit continuo.

56. And her parents were astonished : but He charged them that they should tell no man what was done.

CHAPTER IX.

[1. Christ sendeth His Apostles to work miracles, and to preach. 7. Herod desired to see Christ. 17. Christ feedeth five thousand: 18. inquireth what opinion the world had of Him: foretelleth His Passion: 23. proposeth to all the pattern of His patience. 24. The transfiguration. 37. He healeth the lunatick: 43. again forewarneth His disciples of His Passion: 46. commendeth humility: 51. biddeth them to shew mildness towards all, without desire of revenge. 57. Iudæans would follow Him, but upon conditions.]

[Vulg. Discipulos ad prædicandum mittens, sermone tradidit eis præcepta: Herodes autem Christi famæ cupit eum videre: ex quinque panibus et duobus piscibus satiat Iesus quinque virorum milia: Petrus illum confitetur Christum Dei: suam prædicat Passionem, et de propria cruce tollenda: transfigurato iunguntur Moyses et Elias in maiestate: ad preces patris demonium a filio eiecit: contentio oritur inter Apostolos de primatu: filii Zebædari volunt igne celesti consumi Samaritanos volentes Iesum suscipere: volentem sequi non suscipit: alterum autem vocat, ne permittit ut primum sepiat patrem.]

For verses 1-6 see S. Matthew, ch. x., pages 184 and 187.

1. Then He called His twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases.

V.A. He called the twelve together: S. He called the twelve apostles together.
Vulg. Convocatis autem duodecim apostolis.

2. And He sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.

V. omits the sick.
Vulg. et sanare infirmos.

3. And He said unto them, Take nothing for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money; neither have two coats apiece.

S.V. neither staff.
Vulg. Nihil tuleritis in via, neque virgam.

4. And whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide, and thence depart.

5. And whosoever will not receive you, when ye go out of that city, shake off the very dust from your feet for a testimony against them.

S.V. whoever receive you not.
Vulg. Et quicumque non receperint vos.

6. And they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the gospel, and healing every where.

For verses 7-9 see S. Matthew, ch. xiv., page 242.

7. ¶ Now Herod the tetrarch heard of all that was done by Him: and he was perplexed, because that it was said of some, that John was risen from the dead;

S. omits the tetrarch: S.V. omit by Him.
Vulg. Audierit aut. in Herodes tetrarcha omnia que fiebant ab eo.

8. And of some, that Elias had appeared; and of others, that one of the old prophets was risen again.

Vulg. Quia Elias apparuit: ab aliis autem: Quia propheta unus de antiquis surrexit.

9. And Herod said, John have I beheaded: but who is this, of whom I hear such things? And he desired to see Him.

S.V. But Herod said.
Vulg. Et ait Herodes.

For verses 10-17 see S. Matthew, ch. xiv., page 247.

10. ¶ And the apostles, when they were returned, told Him all that they had done. And He took them, and went aside privately into a desert place belonging to the city called Bethsaida.

S. omits all: A. adds and that they had taught after done.
S.V. privately into the city called Bethsaida: S. omits belonging to a city called Bethsaida.
Vulg. Et reversi apostoli, narraverunt illi quaecumque fecerunt: et assumptis illis recessit seorsum in locum desertum, qui est Bethsaida.

11. And the people, when they knew it, followed Him: and He received them, and spake unto them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing.

12. And when the day began to wear away, then came the twelve, and said unto Him, Send the multitude away, that they may go into the towns and country round about, and lodge, and get victuals: for we are here in a desert place.

V. And when the day already began to wear away.
Vulg. Dies autem coeperat declinare.

13. But He said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they said, We have not more but five loaves and two fishes; except we should go and buy meat for all this people.

14. For they were about five thousand men. And He said to His disciples, Make them sit down by fifties in a company.

S. Now they were: S.V. by about fifties.
Vulg. Erant autem fere viri quinque millia. Ait autem ad discipulos suos: Facite illos discumbere per convivia quinquagenos.

15. And they did so, and made them all sit down.

16. Then He took the five loaves and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, He blessed them, and brake, and gave to the disciples to set before the multitude.

17. And they did eat, and were all filled: and there was taken up of fragments that remained to them twelve baskets.

S. omits to them.
Vulg. Et manducaverunt omnes, et saturati sunt. Et sublatum est quod superfluit illis, fragmentorum cojuncti duodecim.

For verses 18-21 see S. Matthew, ch. xvi., page 271.

18. ¶ And it came to pass, as He was alone praying, His disciples were with Him: and He asked them, saying, Whom say the people that I am?

S. and Jesus asked them. the people: A. the men.

19. They answering said, John the Baptist; but some say, Elias; and others say, that one of the old prophets is risen again.

20. He said unto them, But whom say ye that I am? Peter answering said, The Christ of God.

21. And He straitly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing;

For verses 22-27 see S. Matthew, ch. xvi., page 279.

22. Saying, The Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be slain, and be raised the third day.

A. and rise again.

23. ¶ And He said to them all, If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me.

24. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for My sake, the same shall save it.

25. For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away?

Vulg. si lucratur universum mundum, se autem ipsum perdat, et detrimentum sui faciat?

26. For whosoever shall be ashamed of Me and of My words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when He shall come in His own glory, and in His Father's, and of the holy angels.

27. But I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God.

For verses 28-36 see S. Matthew, ch. xvii., page 284.

28. ¶ And it came to pass about an eight days after these sayings, He took Peter and John and James, and went up into a mountain to pray.

Margin, things.
Vulg. Factum est autem post hæc verba fere dies octo, et assumpsit Petrum, et Iacobum, et Ioannem.

29. And as He prayed, the fashion of His countenance was altered, and His raiment was white and glistering.

30. And, behold, there talked with Him two men, which were Moses and Elias:

31. Who appeared in glory, and spake of His decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem.

32. But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep: and when they were awake, they saw His glory, and the two men that stood with Him.

33. And it came to pass, as they departed from Him, Peter said unto Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias: not knowing what he said.

34. While he thus spake, there came a cloud, and overshadowed them: and they feared as they entered into the cloud.

S.V. and it was overshadowing them.
Vulg. facta est nubes, et obumbravit eos.

35. And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is My beloved Son: hear Him.

S.V. My chosen Son.
Vulg. Hic est Filius meus dilectus, ipsum audite.

36. And when the voice was past, Jesus was found alone.

For verse 36 see S. Matthew, ch. xvii., page 287.

36. —And they kept it close, and told no man in those days any of those things which they had seen.

For verses 37-42 see S. Matthew, ch. xvii., page 289.

37. ¶ And it came to pass, that on the next day, when they were come down from the hill, much people met Him.

38. And, behold, a man of the company cried out, saying, Master, I beseech Thee, look upon my son: for he is mine only child.

39. And, lo, a spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out; and it teareth him that he foameth again, and bruising him hardly departeth from him.

*S. omits lo: S. and it dasheth and teareth him.
Vulg. Et ecce spiritus apprehendit eum, et subito clamat, et elidit, et dissipat eum cum spuma.*

40. And I besought Thy disciples to cast him out; and they could not.

41. And Jesus answering said, O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you, and suffer you? Bring thy son hither.

42. And as he was yet a coming, the devil threw him down, and tare him. And Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and healed the child, and delivered him again to his father.

43. ¶ And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God.

For verses 43-45 see S. Matthew, ch. xvii., page 291.

43. —But while they wondered every one at all things which Jesus did, He said unto His disciples,

*S.V.A. while He (A. Jesus) was doing.
Vulg. omnibusque mirantibus in omnibus quae faciebat.*

44. Let these sayings sink down into your ears: for the Son of Man shall be delivered into the hands of men.

45. But they understood not this saying, and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not: and they feared to ask Him of that saying.

For verses 46-48 see S. Matthew, ch. xviii., page 297.

46. ¶ Then there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest.

47. And Jesus, perceiving the thought of their heart, took a child, and set him by Him,

*S.V. And Jesus knowing the thought.
Vulg. At Jesus videns cogitationes cordis illorum.*

48. And said unto them, Whosoever shall receive this child in My name receiveth Me: and whosoever shall receive Me receiveth Him that sent Me: for he that is least among you all, the same shall be great.

*S. and whosoever receiveth Me: S.V. the same is great.
Vulg. Et quicumque me receperit, recipit eum qui me misit. Nam qui minor est inter vos omnes, hic major est.*

For verses 49 and 50 see S. Mark, ch. ix., page 546.

49. ¶ And John answered and said, Master, we saw one casting out devils in Thy name; and we forbid him, because he followeth not with us.

50. And Jesus said unto him, Forbid him not: for he that is not against us is for us.

*S.V. But Jesus said: S.V.A. against you: V. is for you.
Vulg. Et ait ad illum Jesus: Nolite prohibere; qui enim non est adversum vos, pro vobis est.*

For verse 51 see S. Matthew, ch. xix., p. 311.

51. ¶ And it came to pass, when the time was come that He should be received up, He stedfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem, Vulg. dum compleretur dies assumptionis ejus, et ipse faciem suam firmavit ut iret in Jerusalem.

S. Luke alone contains the following verses (52-56).

52. And sent messengers before His face: and they went, and entered into a village of the Samaritans, to make ready for Him.

*S. into a city.
Vulg. in civitatem Samaritanorum.*

53. And they did not receive Him, because His face was as though He would go to Jerusalem.

54. And when His disciples James and John saw this, they said, Lord, wilt Thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did?

*S.V. And when the disciples: S.V. omit even as Elias did.
Vulg. Cum visissent autem discipuli ejus Iacobus et Iohannes: omits even as Elias did.*

55. But He turned, and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of.

*S.V.A. omit and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of.
Vulg. Et conversus increpavit illos, dicens: Nescitis cujus spiritus estis.*

56. For the Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them. And they went to another village.

*S.V.A. omit For the Son of Man . . . but to save them.
Vulg. Filius hominis non venit animas perdere, sed salvare. Et.*

For the time when this journey was made see S. Matthew, chap. xix., p. 311.

The Samaritans would not receive Jesus and His disciples because they knew that they were going up to Jerusalem for the express purpose of worshipping in the Temple there. The Samaritans, who¹ had set up a rival temple on Mount ¹ Josephus, Antiq. xi. 7 and 8, p. 500; and Whiston's Trans. vi. 7 and 8, p. 509.

Gerizim (John iv. 20), and had instituted a rival worship in opposition to the Temple and the worship at Jerusalem, resented this act of Jesus in going up to Jerusalem as a rejection of their claims, and refused to receive Him. They did not refuse to receive Him because they could not acknowledge Him as the Messiah. This question was not now raised. They reject Him because He was evidently on His way to Jerusalem to worship. Their rejection proceeded from bitterness of religious zeal, and not from motives of inhospitality.

It may be that Jesus sent His disciples to make ready for Him, knowing that the Samaritans would not receive Him, in order to accustom them to repulse. Some¹ have supposed that James and John were the messengers whom He had sent, and who therefore felt themselves more nearly concerned in this refusal of Him by the Samaritans.

The spirit² in which the disciples were proposing to act was the spirit of the law of Moses—that is, of strict justice; but the spirit of the Gospel which Jesus taught them to observe towards others, and especially with a view to their salvation, was the spirit of love and forbearance.

For verses 57–62 see S. Matthew, ch. viii., page 161.

57. ¶ And it came to pass, that, as they went in the way, a certain man said unto Him,

Lord, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest.

S.V. And as they went in the way: S.V.* omit Lord.
Vulg. Factum est autem, ambulantes illis in via, dixit quidam ad illum: Sequar te quocumque ieris.

58. And Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head.

59. And He said unto another, Follow Me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father.

60. Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead: but go thou and preach the kingdom of God.

S.V. He said.
Vulg. Dixitque ei Jesus.

61. And another also said, Lord, I will follow Thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, which are at home at my house.

62. And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

V. omits unto him.
Vulg. Ait ad illum Iesus: Nemo mittens manum suam ad aratrum, et respiciens retro, aptus est regno Dei.

¹ Euthymius, in Luc. ix. 54; vol. iii. p. 403.
Maldonatus, in Luc. ix. 54; vol. iii. p. 179.

² S. Jerome, CXXI. Epist. ad Algasiam, v.; vol. i. p. 1016.

CHAPTER X.

[1. Christ sendeth out at once seventy disciples to work miracles, and to preach: 17. admonisheth them to be humble, and wherein to rejoice: 21. thanketh His Father for His grace: 23. magnifieth the happy estate of His Church: 25. teacheth the lawyer how to attain eternal life, and to love every one for his neighbour that needeth his mercy: 41. reprehendeth Martha, and commendeth Mary her sister.]

[Vulg. Septuaginta duos promittens ad singulas civitates, tradidit precepta que in predicando observant: et gaudentibus de subjectis sibi demonibus, dicit non esse alios potestatem quoniam: commendat civitatem destinatis, in quibus facere erant plurima veritatis, et exultans in spiritu confitetur Patri: tantum legipertito, post recitatum preceptum de dilectione Dei et proximi, ostendit quis sit proximus per parabolam hominis a Ierusalem descendentis: Martha ministranti, et de sorore Maria conquerenti, dicit Mariam elegisse optimam partem.]

S. LUKE is the only one of the Evangelists who records the mission of the seventy disciples. Considerable difference of opinion has existed as to the time when Jesus sent out the Seventy. In a careful examination of this question McClellan¹ has enumerated six different opinions that have been held respecting this. He also mentions the names of eighteen well-known modern commentators who have expressed a preference for one or other of these opinions, and all of whom agree in this, that they place the mission of the Seventy within the last six months of our Saviour's ministry. In opposition to this he himself maintains that the order of S. Luke's narrative here, as well as in many other places, is not chronological; that several expressions in the narrative itself combine to show that the mission of the Seventy took place much earlier in our Lord's ministry, soon after the message of John the Baptist to Jesus and before his death, and soon after the mission of the Twelve.*

1. After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before His face into every city and place, whither He Himself would come.

V. seventy-two: V. omits also.
Vulg. Post hæc autem designavit Dominus et alios septuaginta duos.

2. Therefore said He unto them, The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few:

pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest.

S.V. And He said.
Vulg. Et dicebat illis.

3. Go your ways: behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves.

A. as sheep.
Vulg. Ecce ego mitto vos sicut agnos inter lupos.

4. Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes: and salute no man by the way.

S. omits and before salute.
Vulg. Nolite portare sacculum, neque peram, neque calceamenta, et neminem per viam salutaveritis.

5. And into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house.

6. And if the son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it: if not, it shall turn to you again.

V. A son of peace.

7. And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house.

8. And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat such things as are set before you:

¹ McClellan, New Testament, p. 447.

* The mission of the Seventy.—From the Evangelists themselves, therefore, we may gather with certainty that, like the Twelve, the Seventy were despatched from and returned to Capernaum, the now apostrophized head-quarters of the Galilean Mission (Luke x. 15); that their labours were transient and of brief duration; that the sphere of their work lay wholly or principally in Galilee, the scene (as Greswell rightly acknowledges, Diss. XXX.) of all our Lord's circuits; and that the date of their mission was shortly after the mission of the Twelve.—McClellan, New Testament, p. 449.

* That the first seven deacons were chosen out of the seventy disciples is an error in Epiphanius; for to draw men from places of weightier unto rooms of meaner labour had not been fit. The Apostles, to the end they might follow teaching with more freedom, committed the ministry of tables unto deacons. And shall we think they judged it expedient to choose so many out of those Seventy to be ministers unto tables, when Christ Himself had before made them teachers?—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.' v. 78, 6; vol. ii. p. 477.

9. And heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

10. But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say,

11. Even the very dust of your city, which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off against you: notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

^{S.V.A.} on us on our feet: ^{S.V.} omit unto you.

^{Vulg.} Etiam pulverem, qui adhaesit nobis de civitate vestra, exterminamus in vos: tamen hoc scitote, quia appropinquavit regnum Dei.

12. But I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom, than for that city.

^{V.A.} omit But.
^{Vulg.} omits But.

13. Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, sitting in sackcloth and ashes.

14. But it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment, than for you.

15. And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell.

^{S.V.} Capernaum: ^{S.V.} shalt thou be exalted to heaven? thou shalt be thrust (^{V.} come instead of be thrust) down to hell.
^{Vulg.} Et tu Capernaum usque ad cœlum exaltata, usque ad infernum demeris.

16. He that heareth you heareth Me; and he that despiseth you despiseth Me; and he that despiseth Me despiseth Him that sent Me.

Some MSS. read, "The Lord appointed other seventy-two." The Vulgate has "seventy-two." Some Fathers¹ also, both Greek and Latin, in their quotations of this passage, have "seventy-two." Maldonatus,² by an ingenious argument, endeavours to show the great probability that the Lord appointed seventy-two, even though seventy only are mentioned, a round number only being intended, as in some other instances.

It seems to have been our Saviour's rule to send two together, probably that the one might be a comfort and support to the other, and because two would be able to resist the temptations to which one might yield. S. Matthew enumerates the names of the twelve Apostles in x. 2. When Jesus first sent the Twelve to preach, He sent them two and two (Mark vi. 7); He sent two of His disciples to bring the ass and her foal, on which He should ride in triumph into Jerusalem (Luke xix. 29). He sent two to prepare the Passover for Him and His disciples (Luke xxii. 8). John the Baptist also sent two of his disciples to Jesus to inquire whether He were the Christ (Matt. xi. 2).

Most of the commands which Jesus here gives to these seventy disciples, He had already given to the twelve Apostles, when He sent them to preach. See S. Matthew, ch. x., page 188.

17. ¶ And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through Thy name.

^{V.} the seventy-two.

^{Vulg.} Reversi sunt autem septuaginta duo cum gaudio.

18. And He said unto them, I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven.

19. Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you.

^{S.V.} I have given.

^{Vulg.} Ecce dedi vobis.

20. Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven.

^{S.V.A.} omit rather.

^{Vulg.} omits rather.

In reply to their astonishment that the devils were subject to them in His name, Jesus assigns the reason of this; namely, the fall of their chief and leader, Satan. The fall of Satan from his power, for its vehemence and rapidity, He compares to the fall of lightning. It has been held³ that Jesus here refers to the fall of Satan both before the Incarnation and afterwards—when he was first cast down from heaven for pride and rebellion; and afterwards, when by His teaching and miracles, and by the whole economy of the Incarnation, Jesus destroyed the works of the devil. He was cast down from heaven to earth, from glory and honour to ignominy, and from power to weakness. In His name they had cast out devils, and He further promises them a continuance of this power against Satan and his angels.

Under the terms "serpents and scorpions," as explained by the expression "all the power of the enemy," He comprises every kind of spiritual power working for the ruin of men's souls.⁴ As serpents and scorpions differ from each other in their several noxious properties, and in their various degrees of power

¹ S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, xx. 4; vol. i. p. 277.

² S. Augustine, Sermo cii. (ad as de Sanctis, 42); vol. v. p. 605.

³ Maldonatus, in Luc. x. 1; vol. ii. p. 182.

⁴ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. x. 17; vol. v. p. 667.

Euthymius, in Luc. x. 17; vol. iii. p. 417.

Theophylact, in Luc. x. 17; vol. i. p. 345.

V. Bede, in Luc. x. 17; vol. iii. p. 465.

Maldonatus, in Luc. x. 17; vol. ii. p. 188.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. x. 17; vol. viii. p. 747.

⁴ S. Cyril Alex., Euthymius, Theophylact, V. Bede, Maldonatus, Cornelius a Lapide, ut supra.

to inflict injury on the bodies of men, so Jesus here promises His disciples power over evil spirits, equally able to inflict wounds on the souls of men, and equally differing in the nature of their wounds and in their power to inflict these.

The proper subject for their rejoicing was not that the devils were subject to them, but that their names were written in heaven. The former was given to the good and bad alike, to Judas with the rest of the twelve Apostles, and to Nicolaus with the rest of the seventy disciples. There was also a sense in which the latter was given to the good and bad alike, for it was spoken to all the twelve Apostles and to all the seventy disciples. In so far as it was God's gift, it was common to them all; but in so far as it depended on their improvement of His gift, it belonged to the good among them only.

For verses 21 and 22 see S. Matthew, ch. xi., page 203.

21. ¶ In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father; for so it seemed good in Thy sight.

S.V. He rejoiced in the Holy Spirit, and said.

Vulg. In ipsa hora exultavit Spiritu sancto, et dixit: Confiteor tibi Pater, Domine coeli et terræ.

22. All things are delivered to Me of My Father: and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal Him.

A. And He turned Him unto His disciples and said, All things, &c.

For verses 23 and 24 see S. Matthew, ch. xiii., page 231.

23. ¶ And He turned Him unto His disciples, and said privately, Blessed are the eyes which see the things that ye see:

24. For I tell you, that many prophets and kings have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

V. and to hear of Me those things.

25. ¶ And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted Him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

26. He said unto him, What is written in the law? how readest thou?

27. And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself.

28. And He said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.

29. But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbour?

It is generally admitted that this is not the same lawyer who came to Jesus and asked Him which is the great commandment in the law, as related by S. Matthew xxii. 35, &c. In reply to this lawyer, Jesus teaches him, as He had taught others on various occasions, that the way to enter the kingdom of heaven and to obtain eternal life was not by doing some one or more unusual things, or by pursuing a course of life unheard of before, but by diligently and devoutly acting up to the requirements of their own dispensation, by keeping their own commandments and believing in their own prophets. When Jesus taught this lawyer, that the way to obtain eternal life was by loving God with all his heart and his neighbour as himself, he still wished to justify himself, to defend the position which he had taken up, and show Jesus that this was not so plain a matter as He represented it, because it was difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain who was a man's neighbour. For this was a point which had been often discussed by the Scribes, but which had never yet been satisfactorily cleared up; some saying that all Jews were neighbours, and others that only the good among them were neighbours, and therefore that this commandment extended neither to Gentiles nor to the undeserving among the Jews. To teach the lawyer that, in the meaning of the commandment, all mankind were neighbours, and therefore that a man's duty was to love all men into whose society he was thrown, without any diminution of the obligation because they happened to be of different nations or of different religions, or were placed in different external circumstances,—to teach him this Jesus uses no chain of subtle reasoning, but relates the following simple parable or historical narrative.

30. And Jesus answering said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.

S.V. omit And he before Jesus.

Vulg. Suscepit enim Jesus, dixit.

31. And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side.

32. And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side.

S.V. when he came to the place and looked on him, passed by.

Vulg. Similiter et Levita, cum esset secus locum, et videret eum, pertransiit.

33. But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was : and when he saw him, he had compassion on him.

34. And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

35. And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him ; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee.

S.V. omit when he departed.
Vulg. omits when he departed.

36. Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was kinder unto him that fell among the thieves ?

S.V. omit now.
Vulg. Quis horum trium videtur tibi proximus fuisse illi, qui incidit in latrones ?

37. And he said, He that shewed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go, and do thou likewise.

S.V. Now Jesus said unto him.
Vulg. Et ait illi Jesus.

Jesus causes the lawyer himself to draw the conclusion, who was neighbour, or who discharged the duty of neighbour, to him that fell among the thieves. Then, having obliged him to confess that the Samaritan was the only one of the three who acted as a neighbour, and who fulfilled the commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," He extended the obligation of similar conduct to him, and, through him, to all men—namely, that no difference in race, or in religion, or in any other circumstances, can absolve any one man from the obligation of acting the part of a neighbour to another.

All the old commentators¹ on the parable of the good Samaritan, besides the plain and literal sense of it, give also a mystical interpretation of it, and all to the same import, to illustrate the Fall of Adam, and in him of all mankind, as well as their Redemption by Jesus Christ, who is the Good Samaritan.

The parable of the good Samaritan, if not a narrative of real life, is expressed with due regard to the reputation in which the neighbourhood of Jericho was held, for its many deeds of violence and robbery, and to the frequent passing and repassing of priests and Levites between Jerusalem and Jericho ; for Jericho was one of the principal stations for priests and Levites, when not actually engaged in ministrations at the Temple.* S. Jerome bears witness that in his time the neighbourhood of Jericho continued in the same unsettled, dangerous condition in which it is here represented by our Saviour.²

38. ¶ Now it came to pass, as they went, that He entered into a certain village : and a certain woman named Martha received Him into her house.

S.V. Now as they went, He entered : V. omits into her house.
Vulg. Factum est autem, dum irent, et ipse intravit . . . exceptit illum in domum suam.

39. And she had a sister called Mary, which also sat at Jesus' feet, and heard His word.

S.V. ? at the Lord's feet.
Vulg. que etiam sedens secus pedes Domini, audiebat verbum illius.

40. But Martha was cumbered about much serving, and came to Him, and said, Lord, dost Thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone ? bid her therefore that she help me.

41. And Jesus answered and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things :

S.V. ? And the Lord answered.
Vulg. Et respondens dixit illi Dominus : Martha, Martha, sollicita es, et turbaris erga plurima.

¹ Among many others see the following :—

Origen, in Luc. Homil. xxiv. ; vol. iii. p. 1886.

S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. x. 30, &c. ; vol. v. p. 681.

Euthymius, in Luc. x. 30, &c. ; vol. iii. p. 425.

Theophylact, in Luc. x. 30 ; vol. i. p. 349.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. x. 30 ; vol. ii. p. 1718. [S. Augustine,

S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. ii. 19 ; vol. iii. p. 1340.

V. Bede, in Luc. x. 30 ; vol. iii. p. 468.

Mansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxxi. p. 155.

Maldonatus, in Luc. x. 30 ; vol. ii. p. 193.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. x. 30 ; vol. viii. p. 750.

² S. Jerome, in Jerem. iii. 2 ; vol. iv. p. 699.

* From Jerusalem to Jericho.—The road from Jerusalem to Jericho was the most beaten and frequented in the whole land of Israel, and that not only as it led to Petra, but also upon the account of that great traffic that was between these two cities, especially because of the courses, that were as well in Jericho as Jerusalem. Of which we have discoursed elsewhere. To which I shall superadd this passage out of Jerusalem Tannith (fol. 67, 4) : 'The former prophets instituted four-and-twenty courses, and for every course a stationary classis of priest, Levites, and Israelites in Jerusalem. It is a tradition, four-and-twenty thousand was the stationary number out of Jerusalem, and half that station out of Jericho. Jericho could indeed have produced an entire station, but that it would give the preference to Jerusalem, and therefore it produced but half.'

"Here, therefore, you may see in this historical parable, why there is such particular mention made of a priest and Levite travelling that way, because there was very frequent intercourse of this sort of men between these towns, and that upon the account of the stations above mentioned."—LIGHTFOOT on Luke x. 30 ; vol. ii. p. 425.

"Behold I five hundred men of every course residing at Jericho ! But what were they ? They were ready at hand to supply any courses that wanted, if there were any such at Jerusalem ; and they took care of supplying them with necessities who officiated at Jerusalem. Hence it is the less to be wondered at, if you hear of a priest and a Levite passing along in the parable of him that travelled between Jerusalem and Jericho."—Id., 'Chorographical Century,' ch. xlvii. ; vol. ii. p. 45.

42. But one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her.

S.V. But there is need of few things or of one: S.V. for Mary hath chosen.
Vulg. Porro unum est necessarium? Maria optimam partem elegit, quæ non auferetur ab ea.

No conclusion can be drawn from the order in which S. Luke, when he first mentions Martha and her sister, places their names, putting Martha first and Mary afterwards; for S. John (xi. 2), when he first speaks of them, places Mary first and her sister after.

The Evangelist does not imply that Martha made this complaint of her sister, through any querulousness of temper, but through love to Jesus, and from fear lest all should not be done for His honour and entertainment which she judged necessary. Martha's fault, if fault it can be called, was not want of love for Jesus, but a mistake in the way of showing it. Mary's love may not have been greater than Martha's, but she had chosen the better way of showing it, that of learning from Him and feeding on His words. Martha was busied with preparing food for Jesus; Mary was intent on receiving food from Him. Thus Mary was better fulfilling the object for which Jesus had come, which was to impart to men, and not to receive from them. To minister to the bodily necessities of Jesus and His disciples was a good part, an exalted part, and Martha had chosen it; but to hang on His words and to learn from Him was a still better part, and this Mary had chosen.

Some¹ of the ancient commentators understand Jesus as referring the words "one thing is needful," to the body. Many² understand Him as using them in a double sense: first, of the body and its refreshment; and secondly, of the soul. The many things which Martha was busied in preparing were superfluous, only one of them was necessary. In providing these superfluous things, though they were proofs of her love to Him, Martha's time and thoughts had been almost entirely taken up, and she had little left for learning of Him. Yet, as one thing was needful for the body, namely, its necessary food, so one thing was also needful for the soul,—to learn of Him. To choose the latter, even to the neglect of providing the former for Him and His disciples, was the better part, and this Mary had chosen.

Martha and Mary have, from early times, been looked upon as different types of the religious life in the Church,—one engaged in active practical duties, and the other given up to acts of devotion, contemplation, and worship.³

¹ S. Basil, Regule fusiis tract. xx.; vol. iii. p. 973.

S. Jerome, Epist. xxii. ad Eustoch. 24; vol. i. p. 410.

² Theophylact, in Luc. x. 42; vol. i. p. 352.

Euthymius, in Luc. x. 42; vol. iii. p. 431.

V. Bede, in Luc. x. 42; vol. iii. p. 471.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxxii. p. 157.

Maldonatus, in Luc. x. 42; vol. ii. p. 198.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. x. 42; vol. viii. p. 753.

³ S. Basil, Monast. Constitut. i.; vol. iii. p. 1325.

S. Augustine, Serm. civ. (alias de verbis Dom. 27); vol. v. p. 617.

CHAPTER XI.

[1. Christ teacheth to pray, and that instantly: 11. assuring that God so will give us good things. 14. He, casting out a dumb devil, rebuketh the blasphemous Pharisees: 28. and sheweth who are blessed: 29. preacheth to the people, 37. and reprehendeth the outward shew of holiness in the Pharisees, scribes, and lawyers.]

[Vulg. Docet discipulos orare, ostendens perseveranti oratione omnia impetrari: ejecto demonio muto, confutat dicentes quod in Beelzebub ejiceret demonia: mulier quidam dicit beata ubera que Jesus suzerat: de signo Ionæ, de regina Austri, et Ninivitis, oculoque simplici et nequam: pharisaum qui ipsum invitaverat reprehendit, murmurantem quod illotis pranderet manibus: taxat hypocritarum et scribarum, dicens quod ab hac generatione exquiretur sanguis omnium prophetarum.]

For verses 1-4 see S. Matthew, ch. vi., page 135.

1. And it came to pass, that, as He was praying in a certain place, when He ceased, one of His disciples said unto Him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples.

S. omits also.

Vulg. sicut docuit et Ioannes discipulos suos.

2. And He said unto them, When ye pray, say, Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth.

S.V. say, Father, hallowed be Thy name: V. omits Thy will be done as in heaven, so in earth.

Vulg. dicite: Pater, sanctificetur nomen tuum. Adveniat regnum tuum (omits Thy will be done in heaven, so in earth).

3. Give us day by day our daily bread.

Margin. for the day.

Vulg. Panem nostrum quotidianum da nobis hodie.

4. And forgive us our sins; for we also forgive every one that is indebted to us. And lead us not into temptation; but deliver us from evil.

S.V. omit but deliver us from evil.

Vulg. omits but deliver us from evil.

S. Luke alone contains the following verses (5-8).

5. And he said unto them, Which of you shall have a friend, and shall go unto him at midnight, and say unto him, Friend, lend me three loaves;

6. For a friend of mine in his journey is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him?

Margin. out of his way.

Vulg. Quoniam amicus meus venit de via ad me.

7. And he from within shall answer and say, Trouble me not: the door is now shut, and my children are with me in bed; I cannot rise and give thee.

S. and I cannot.

Vulg. et pueri mei mecum sunt in cubili, non possum surgere, et dare tibi.

8. I say unto you, Though he will not rise and give him, because he is his friend, yet because of his importunity he will rise and give him as many as he needeth.

Vulg. Et si ille perseveraverit pulsans: dico vobis, et si non dabit illi surgens eo quod amicus ejus sit, propter improbitatem tamen ejus surget, et dabit illi quotquot habet necessarios.

Having given His disciples a form of prayer, and thus having taught them how to pray, Jesus then shows them the power of prayer. In a short parable He puts before them the efficacy of importunity among men, and leaves them to draw the necessary conclusion. If such is the efficacy of prayer and perseverance among men, what will it be with God, who wills to give the things we require?

For verses 9-13 see S. Matthew, ch. vii., page 143.

9. And I say unto you, Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.

10. For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.

V. it is opened.

Vulg. et pulsanti aperietur.

11. If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent?

Vulg. Quis autem ex vobis patrem petit panem, numquid lapidem dabit illi?

12. Or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion?

Margin. give.

Vulg. numquid porriget illi scorpionem?

13. If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?

Vulg. Quanto magis Pater vester de celo dabit spiritum bonum petentibus se?

For verses 14-23 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 214.

14. ¶ And He was casting out a devil, and it was dumb. And it came to pass, when the devil was gone out, the dumb spake; and the people wondered.

S.V. He was casting out a dumb devil.

Vulg. Et erat ejiciens demonium, et illud erat mutum.

15. But some of them said, He casteth out devils through Beelzebub the chief of the devils.

S.V. Beelzebub: A. Beelzebub: A. adds (after the devils) He answered and said, How can Satan cast out Satan?

Vulg. In Beelzebub principe dæmoniorum ejecit demonia.

16. And others, tempting Him, sought of Him a sign from heaven.

17. But He, knowing their thoughts, said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth.

Vulg. Omne regnum in seipsum divisum desolabitur, et domus supra domum cadet.

18. If Satan also be divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand? because ye say that I cast out devils through Beelzebub.

S. Why say ye that I cast out devils through Beelzebub? S.V. Beelzebub: A. Beelzebub.

Vulg. quia dicitis in Beelzebub me ejicere demonia.

19. And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your sons cast them out? therefore shall they be your judges.

20. But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you.

21. When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace:

22. But when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils.

Vulg. universa arma ejus auferet, in quibus confidebat, et spolia ejus distribuet.

23. He that is not with Me is against Me: and he that gathereth not with Me scattereth.

S. scattereth Me.

Vulg. et qui non colligit mecum, dispergit.

For verses 24-26 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 221.

24. When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest; and finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out.

S.V. and finding none, then he saith.

Vulg. et non inveniens dicit.

25. And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished.

S.V. findeth it empty, swept and.

Vulg. Et cum venerit, inventum eam scopis mundatam et ornatam.

26. Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in, and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first.

S. and taketh with himself seven other spirits.

Vulg. Tunc vadit, et assumit septem alios spiritus secum.

S. Luke alone contains verses 27 and 28.

27. ¶ And it came to pass, as He spake these things, a certain woman of the company lifted up her voice, and said unto Him, Blessed is the womb that bare Thee, and the paps which Thou hast sucked.

28. But He said, Yea rather, blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.

S. that hear the word of God, and keep the word of God.

Vulg. Quinimmo beati qui audiunt verbum Dei, et custodiunt illud.

To be the mother of Jesus was blessed; to hear the word of God and keep it was still more blessed. But both these degrees of blessedness were united in the Virgin Mary: for she was the mother of Jesus, and she was also the most holy and devout among women. We have every reason to believe that, in order to fit and prepare her for her office and to render her worthy to be the Mother of God, the Virgin Mary was endowed with the highest degree of grace, or divine influence, ever bestowed upon created being. Jesus, in His answer to this woman, does not deny that the Virgin was blessed in being His Mother. His object is rather to affirm that she was still more blessed in being holy and serving God. The former privilege, to be His Mother, could be Mary's only; the latter, to keep His word, which was the greater blessing, could belong to many women, could belong to the woman who, in the fulness of her admiration, had uttered this exclamation.

In saying, "Blessed is the womb that bare Thee, and the paps which Thou hast sucked," the speaker used terms which prove that, in the privilege of being the mother of Jesus, she had implied no moral preparation for it, but merely looked upon the naked human relationship of mother to a Son of such surpassing qualities. Jesus in His answer shows her, that human relationship to Him, though a great blessing, was inferior to divine relationship to Him; that is, relationship through mental and moral likeness, through union with Him and obedience to His words, and that this might even yet belong to her. To bear Him in her body could not be hers, but to bear Him in the heart could; and this was a greater source of rejoicing than to bear Him in her body, without any corresponding sanctification of the heart, which only she had considered when she pronounced His Mother blessed.¹

For verses 29–32 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 218.

29. ¶ And when the people were gathered thick together, He began to say, This is an evil generation: they seek a sign; and there shall no sign be given it, but the sign of Jonas the prophet.

S.A. This generation is an evil generation: S.V. omit the prophet.
Vulg. Generatio hæc, generatio nequam est: signum querit, et signum non dabitur ei, nisi signum Ionnæ prophete.

30. For as Jonas was a sign unto the Ninevites, so shall also the Son of Man be to this generation.

S. omits For.
Vulg. Nam sicut fuit Ionas signum Ninivitis.

31. The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them: for she came from the utmost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here.

32. The men of Nineve shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here.

Vulg. quia penitentiam egerunt ad prædicationem Ionnæ.

For verses 33–35 see S. Matthew, ch. v. and vi., pages 119 and 140.

33. No man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, neither under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that they which come in may see the light.

34. The light of the body is the eye: therefore when thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light; but when thine eye is evil, thy body also is full of darkness.

S.V.A. The light of the body is thine eye: S.V. when thine eye is single.
Vulg. Lucerna corporis tui, est oculus tuus. Si oculus tuus fuerit simplex, totum corpus tuum lucidum erit; si autem nequam fuerit, etiam corpus tuum tenebrosum erit.

35. Take heed therefore that the light which is in thee be not darkness.

36. If thy whole body therefore be full of light, having no part dark, the whole shall be full of light, as when the bright shining of a candle doth give thee light.

Margin, a candle by its bright shining.
Vulg. et sicut lucerna fulgoris illuminabit te.

Jesus may have drawn His illustrations from "a light" and from "the eye" more than once, and may have used them to enforce different truths. S. Matthew gives these in his relation of the Sermon on the Mount. Verse 36 has severely exercised the ingenuity of commentators to explain, with any degree of satisfaction, the tautology which appears to exist in the common reading. The best explanation² is probably that which proposes to understand "the whole" as referring not only to the body, but to the whole man. It has been suggested that if the reading were ὅμμα instead of σῶμα, the difficulty would be much less.

S. Luke alone contains verses 37–54.

37. ¶ And as He spake, a certain Pharisee besought Him to dine with him: and He went in, and sat down to meat.

S.V. beseecheth Him.
Vulg. rogavit illum quidam phariseus.

38. And when the Pharisee saw it, he marvelled that He had not first washed before dinner.

Vulg. Phariseus autem cepit intra se reputans dicere.

39. And the Lord said unto him, Now do ye Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and the platter; but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedness.

40. Ye fools, did not He that made that which is without make that which is within also?

41. But rather give alms of such things as ye have; and, behold, all things are clean unto you.

Margin, as you are able.
Vulg. Verumtamen quod superest, date elemosynam: et ecce omnia munda sunt vobis.

42. But woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these in Joan. tract. x. 3; vol. iii. p. 1468.

¹ S. Augustine, de S. Virginitate, 3; vol. vi. p. 398.

V. Bede, in Luc. xi. 27; vol. iii. p. 479.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. l. p. 398.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xi. 27; vol. ii. p. 206.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xi. 27; vol. viii. p. 759.

² Maldonatus, in Luc. xi. 36; vol. ii. p. 208.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xi. 36; vol. viii. p. 759.

ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

V*. omits of God.
Vulg. et prestatens iudicium et charitatem Dei; hæc autem oportuit facere, et illa non omittere.

This Pharisee does not appear to have been actuated by kindly motives towards Jesus, in inviting Him to dinner, but to have done so rather from a captious spirit, in order to find some flaw in His conversation or conduct. Jesus accepts the invitation, and, with a view to their further instruction, He at once proceeds to break through their traditionary rules with respect to washing.

Then, in reply to the thoughts of the Pharisee, He defends Himself, and shows the wickedness and folly of their conduct. He uses the outside and the inside of the cup and platter merely as illustrations to show the extreme absurdity of their conduct. The outside and the inside to which He has really regard is that of man, his body and soul. He then adds, πλὴν τὰ ἐνὸρτα δότε ἑλεμυσίνην, &c., which is rendered by the Authorized Version, "But rather give alms of such things as ye have," or as ye are able; "and, behold, all things are clean unto you."

The difficulty of these words is shown by the two totally different interpretations that have been given to them by commentators. Some translate the words, "But rather give alms of such things as ye have; and, behold, all things are clean unto you," and say that Jesus is here advising them to give alms as a remedy for their vice of covetousness and wrong dealing. Others translate the words, "Ye give alms of such things as ye have; and, behold, all things are clean unto you," that is, in your own opinion, and maintain that Jesus is ridiculing the exaggerated views which the Pharisees held of almsgiving, in thinking that they might go on unchecked in their vices, and all would be well provided they gave alms in proportion.

I. All the Fathers¹ who refer to this passage, without a single exception, explain our Saviour's words, δότε ἑλεμυσίνην, as in the imperative mood, as if He were proposing to them a remedy for their sin in the place of the frequent washing of the body, the remedy which they had themselves adopted. It seems never to have occurred to any of them to interpret it in any other sense, though they did not show the same agreement as to the meaning of τὰ ἐνὸρτα, translated in the A.V. "of such things as ye have," or "as ye are able," which, as Cornelius a Lapide shows, have been understood in no less than five different ways.²

The vice with which the Pharisees as a body were tainted

was covetousness, and this resulted in all kinds of merciless oppression. But Jesus does not prescribe almsgiving as a substitute for the recognized mode of obtaining forgiveness of sin; namely, repentance and restitution for the wrong done, and faith in Him. Almsgiving was not to atone for the past, except as the fruit of their repentance of the past. But almsgiving was to be to them the means through which they were to sanctify themselves for the time to come, through which they were to keep themselves just, and therefore pure and clean, in all their future dealings. It was to do for them what no amount of washing of the body could do; it was to cure and eradicate the vice of avarice. For no one amongst them who conscientiously gave to God a due portion of his substance, according to the circumstances of each case, would be likely to defraud his neighbour. It was because avarice could not co-exist along with systematic conscientious almsgiving, that it would be the means of rendering all things clean unto them. But such almsgiving as allowed the vice of avarice to remain and flourish, was not real; it was the abuse of almsgiving, such as they themselves already practised, such, for instance, as giving the tenth of mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and passed over judgment and the love of God.

II. The strong language which Scripture elsewhere uses with respect to the absolute necessity of repentance and restitution in order to the forgiveness of sin, has led some few post-Reformation commentators to conclude that Jesus cannot be here recommending the Pharisees to give alms in order to render all things clean unto them. They have therefore translated the words as if the Pharisees thought that mere almsgiving without repentance or reformation, or restitution, would atone for sin, and as if Jesus were ridiculing them for so thinking.

But the Pharisees do not appear,³ from this passage, to have had such exaggerated notions of the merits or benefits of almsgiving, as to think that giving alms would purify their souls from sin. Their absurdity was greater than this; for they thought that frequent washing of the body would cleanse the soul, which our Saviour describes as washing the outside of the cup, in order to cleanse the inside. Their absurdity consisted not in supposing that almsgiving, which was a moral act, would cure a moral evil; but in thinking that the washing of the body, which was a mere manual or ceremonial act, would effect the cure of a moral evil, that is, of a diseased soul.

The woes which Jesus denounces against the Pharisees and scribes or lawyers, are in sense almost identical with those which S. Matthew records, ch. xxiii.: but it has

¹ Origen, in Levit. Homil. ii.; vol. ii. p. 418.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. i.; vol. ii. p. 66.

S. Basil, Regulæ, brevius tract. 271; vol. iii. p. 1269.

S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xi. 41; vol. v. p. 714.

Euthymius, in Luc. xi. 41; vol. iii. p. 449.

Theophylact, in Luc. xi. 41; vol. i. p. 360.

S. Cyprian, lib. de Opere et Elemosinis, 2. p. 604.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xi. 41; vol. ii. p. 1725.

S. Augustine, Enchiridion, sive de fide, &c., 75, &c.; vol. vi. p. 268.

V. Bede, in Luc. xi. 41; vol. iii. p. 483.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xi. 41; vol. viii. p. 760.

³ See Maldenatus, in Luc. xi. 41; vol. ii. p. 213.

generally been held that they were uttered at two different times, and on two different occasions.

For verses 43-52 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiii., page 366.

43. Woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye love the uppermost seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets.

Vulg. quia diligitis primas cathedras in synagogis.

44. Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are as graves which appear not, and the men that walk over them are not aware of them.

S.V. omit scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!
Vulg. omits scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!

45. ¶ Then answered one of the lawyers, and said unto Him, Master, thus saying Thou reproachest us also.

46. And He said, Woe unto you also, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers.

47. Woe unto you! for ye build the sepulchres of the prophets, and your fathers killed them.

48. Truly ye bear witness that ye allow the deeds of your fathers: for they indeed killed them, and ye build their sepulchres.

S.V. omit their sepulchres.
Vulg. vos autem edificatis eorum sepulchra.

49. Therefore also said the wisdom of God,

I will send them prophets and apostles, and some of them they shall slay and persecute:

A. omits and after apostles.
Vulg. Mittam ad illos prophetas, et apostolos, et ex illis occident, et persequentur.

50. That the blood of all the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation;

51. From the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which perished between the altar and the temple: verily I say unto you, It shall be required of this generation.

52. Woe unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the key of knowledge: ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered.

Margin, forbid.
Vulg. ipsi non introistis, et eos qui introibant prohibuistis.

53. And as He said these things unto them, the scribes and the Pharisees began to urge Him vehemently, and to provoke Him to speak of many things:

S.V. And as He went thence, the scribes.
Vulg. Cum autem hæc ad illos diceret, coeperunt pharisei et legisperiti graviter insistere, et os ejus opprimere de multis.

54. Laying wait for Him, and seeking to catch something out of His mouth, that they might accuse Him.

S.V. laying wait for Him (S. omits for Him), to catch: A. omits and before seeking.

S.V. omit that they might accuse Him.
Vulg. Insidiantes ei, et querentes aliquid capere de ore ejus, ut accusarent eum.

CHAPTER XII.

[1. Christ parabolically to His disciples to avoid hypocrisy, and falsefulness in publishing His doctrine. 17. Warneth the people to beware of carnalities, by the parable of the rich man who sold up greater things. 22. We must not be so careful of earthly things. 31. Let each the Kingdom of God. 33. ye alone. 36. Be ready at a knock: be ye in prayer. 42. who knoweth the son of man. 44. Christ's ministry was to see to their charge. 49. and holy for persecution. 51. The people must take these things to heart. 58. beware of sea, fearful things to do without consultation.]

[Vulg. Cautionem docet a fermentis phariseorum, et quod omne occultum delegatur: quia etiam incedebat: de his pharisaeis Spiritum Sanctum: rebus et apostolis ad accessum persequentes: non cultu commissum in decubitu: fortitudo horum: per peribant: totis rebus et caritatis: et omnes colligebat ego de victis et restitui: horumque et boni proveniunt: et quod est fidei: et angelus dispensator: erat et angelus ignis in terris: et separationem: reprehendit quod tempore gratia non deperit: monuit ut quisque cunctis ab adversariis se libenter.

In this chapter S. Luke records many sayings which S. Matthew has related, as uttered by our Saviour at other times. Probably He would give the same instructions more than once to the same disciples, and especially if additional hearers were present.

For verse 1 see S. Matthew, ch. xvi., page 270.

1. In the mean time, when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people, insomuch that they trode one upon another, He began to say unto His disciples first of all, Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy.

For verses 2 and 3 see S. Matthew, ch. x., page 193.

2. For there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known.

For: V.A. But; S. omits.
Vulg. Nihil autem opertum est, quod non revelatur.

3. Therefore whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the housetops.

Vulg. Quoniam quae in tenebris dixistis, in lumine dicantur.

For verses 4-9 see S. Matthew, ch. x., page 194.

4. And I say unto you my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do.

5. But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear Him, which after He hath killed the body, hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear Him.

S. omits But.
Vulg. Ostendam autem vobis quem timeatis.

I.

6. Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God?

7. But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows.

V. omits therefore.
Vulg. Nolite ergo timere.

8. Also I say unto you, Whosoever shall confess Me before men, him shall the Son of Man also confess before the angels of God:

before the angels of God. S. before God.
Vulg. Et Filius hominis confitebitur illum coram angelis Dei.

9. But he that denieth Me before men shall be denied before the angels of God.

For verse 10 see S. Matthew, ch. xii., page 217.

10. And whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him: but unto him that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven.

For verses 11 and 12 see S. Matthew, ch. x., page 192.

11. And when they bring you unto the synagogues, and unto magistrates, and powers, take ye no thought how or what thing ye shall answer, or what ye shall say:

12. For the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say.

S. Luke alone contains the following (verses 13-21).

13. ¶ And one of the company said unto Him, Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me.

14. And He said unto him, Man, who made Me a judge or a divider over you?

15. And He said unto them, Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.

S.V. A. of all covetousness.
Vulg. Videte, et cavete ab omni avaritia.

This man, probably one of the crowd, may have appealed to Jesus in the belief that He was the Messiah, and that His decision would carry weight with his brother. But Jesus declines to become a divider between them, as not belonging to the office on which He came: for He came to impart a heavenly inheritance, not to settle disputes about an earthly one. He bids him beware of covetousness in all its forms. Then, to enforce the truth that a man's life does not depend on, or is not in proportion to, the abundance of his possessions, He delivers the following parable.

16. And He spake a parable unto them, saying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully:

17. And he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits?

18. And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods.

all my fruits: V. all my wheat. S. omnia et my goods.
Vulg. et illic congregabo omnia que nata sunt mihi, et bona mea.

19. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.

20. But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?

V. The Lord said.
Vulg. Dixit autem illi Deus: Stulte, hac nocte animam tuam repetunt a te.

21. So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God.

This is not a history in real life, but a parable¹ composed on purpose to illustrate the truth that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. Some have supposed that Jesus selected the ground and its fruits as being more stable than any other kind of riches, less liable to loss and to change than merchandise. He represents this rich man's possessions as increasing beyond all expectation; so much so, that they exceeded his capacity to bestow them, and that his anxieties and perplexities increased in like proportion. Instead of satiety and contentment, increase of riches brings only increase of care. He is the most full of doubts and anxieties at the very time when his land is the most fruitful; and his distress where to bestow his goods is expressed in the very same words that the hungry and destitute are accustomed to use when pinched for food, "What shall I do?" But none of his fruits are bestowed in feeding the hungry. His thoughts are all centred on himself.

God may have said to him, "This night thy soul shall be required of thee," either through his own conscience, or by an angel; or He may have said this to him not in words, but in act.

This parable does not carry us to the future judgment, like the parable of Dives and Lazarus; but it brings out in great prominence the fact, that the goods on which, during his life, all his thoughts had been occupied, when his soul is required are no longer his, and can in no way avail him. If, instead of laying them up in barns, he had bestowed them in feeding the hungry, they would have profited him after his soul had been required of him. Now he has no further interest in them, no further profit from them.

By His application of the parable, Jesus shows not only that riches do not lengthen a man's life, but also that unless a man spends his riches on God, and on the objects for which God entrusts him with them, on his death they become another's, and cease to yield him any further profit. "So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." As in the case of this rich man; the moment his soul was required of him, his riches departed from him, and yield him no further profit: so it will be in the case of every man who is rich, but who is not rich toward God, by works of mercy and charity to the poor and needy.

For verses 22-31 see S. Matthew, ch. vi., page 140.

22. ¶ And He said unto His disciples, Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat; neither for the body, what ye shall put on.

23. The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment.

S.V. For the life.
Vulg. Anima plus est quam esca.

24. Consider the ravens: for they neither sow nor reap; which neither have storehouse nor barn; and God feedeth them: how much more are ye better than the fowls?

¹ For this parable, see
S. Basil, Homil. in Luc. xii. 18; vol. iii. p. 261.
S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xii. 16; vol. v. p. 733.

S. Augustine, Sermo cvii. (alias de Tempore, 196); vol. v. p. 627.
Mardonius, in Luc. xii. 16; vol. ii. p. 218.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xii. 16; vol. viii. p. 765.

25. And which of you with taking thought can add to his stature one cubit ?

Vulg. Quis autem vestrum cogitando potest addere ad staturam suam cubitum unum?

26. If ye then be not able to do that thing which is least, why take ye thought for the rest ?

27. Consider the lilies how they grow : they toil not, they spin not ; and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

Vulg. non laborant, neque nent : dico autem vobis, nec Solomon in omni gloria sua vestiebatur sicut unum ex istis.

28. If then God so clothe the grass, which is to-day in the field, and to-morrow is cast into the oven ; how much more will He clothe you, O ye of little faith ?

29. And seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind.

Margin. live in careful suspense.

S.V. and what ye shall drink.

Vulg. aut quid bibatis.

30. For all these things do the nations of the world seek after : and your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things.

31. ¶ But rather seek ye the kingdom of God ; and all these things shall be added unto you.

the kingdom of God : S.V. His kingdom.

Vulg. Verumtamen querite primum regnum Dei, et justitiam ejus.

S. Luke alone contains verses 32 and 34.

32. Fear not, little flock ; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.

33. Sell that ye have, and give alms ; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth.

34. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

It is probable that by the term "little flock" Jesus may denote the Apostles, and through them the faithful generally. Some¹ have thought that He called them a little flock because they were overlooked or despised by the world, or because they were little in comparison with the number of the angels or with the number of unbelievers. Others² have also supposed that under the term "little flock" He pledges Himself to watch over them, with all the individual care and tender oversight with which a little flock is usually tended among men. Having bid this little flock not to fear, He also states the reason why they should not fear : "For it is your Father's good pleasure (εὐδόκησεν) to give you the kingdom." But He, who wishes them to inherit the kingdom, will not suffer them to want the necessities of this life. For these, therefore, they are not to be anxious ; and if they should be entrusted with more than these, He gives directions how they are to deal with them ; namely, to feed the poor and needy with them, and thus to provide for themselves bags in which to keep their treasure, bags that will not wax old.

The question arises, In what sense does Jesus bid them "sell that ye have and give alms" ? Did He command this to all the faithful, or only to some ? When the rich young man inquired of Him what he was to do to inherit eternal life, He said, "Keep the commandments : " and in reply to his statement that he had kept all these from his youth up, He said, "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor." From this it has been concluded that voluntary poverty, to sell all and give to the poor, is a counsel of perfection, and applies only to those who, having kept the commandments, would do more for God, and would shine more perfectly in His kingdom. In one sense this applies to all men, as indicating the preparation of the heart, inasmuch as all men should be ready to sell that they have and give to the poor, if this should plainly appear to be in the way of their duty.³

By laying up their treasure in heaven—that is, by distributing it amongst the poor—they will give the best proof they can that their heart is there too.

S. Matthew gives a portion of verse 33 in his relation of the Sermon on the Mount, ch. vi., page 139.

To render themselves worthy to enter into the kingdom, which their Father so graciously offers them, Jesus lays down the following three directions for their conduct, which have been briefly described as continence from evil, zeal in doing good, and watchfulness against the coming of the Son of Man to judgment.⁴

S. Luke alone contains verses 35 and 36.

35. Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning ;

Vulg. Sint lumbi vestri praeincti, et lucerne ardentes in manibus vestris.

36. And ye yourselves like unto men that

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xii. 32 ; vol. v. p. 742.

Euthymius, in Luc. xii. 32 ; vol. iii. p. 467.

Theophylact, in Luc. xii. 32 ; vol. i. p. 374.

² Maldonatus, in Luc. xii. 32 ; vol. ii. p. 222.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxvi. p. 180.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xii. 33 ; vol. ii. p. 223.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xii. 33 ; vol. vii. p. 767.

⁴ S. Augustine, Sermo cxxiii. (alias 39 de verbis Domini.) ; vol. v. p. 633.

wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately.

37. Blessed are those servants, whom the lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them.

38. And if he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch,* and find them so, blessed are those servants.

S.V. And if he shall come in the second or (literally and if) in the third watch, S.V. blessed are they.

Vulg. Et si venerit in secunda vigilia, et si in tertia vigilia venerit, et ita invenerit, beati sunt servi illi.

39. And this know, that if the goodman of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through.

S.V. he would not have suffered.

Vulg. vigilaret utique, et non sineret perfodi domum suam.

40. Be ye therefore ready also: for the Son of Man cometh at an hour when ye think not.

S.V. omit therefore.

Vulg. Et vos estote parati: quia qua hora non putatis, Filius hominis veniet.

Having prescribed these three rules for their conduct, all expressive of watchfulness against His returning to judgment, He goes on to show them what shall be the reward, when He returns from the wedding—that is, at the Resurrection—of those who shall have lived in the daily practice of them. In terms taken from the description of an earthly banquet, He expresses the everlasting rest and unutterable delight which those shall enjoy that shall be found watching. To ensure this watchfulness and prevent their being taken by surprise, He intimates that He may come at the second watch, or at the third watch; that is, at the time when He is least of all expected.¹

Several expositors have uttered grave warnings against too great a nicety in the application of every term in such parables as this. It is sufficient to be able to identify the main scope of them.

S. Matthew records verses 37–46 as spoken by our Saviour at another time: see chapter xxiv., page 392.

S. Luke alone contains verses 47 and 48.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xii. 36; vol. v. p. 745.

Euthymius, in Luc. xii. 36; vol. iii. p. 469.

Theophylact, in Luc. xii. 36; vol. i. p. 375.

S. Augustine, Sermo cxviii. alias 39 de verbis Dom.; vol. v. p. 633.

* In the second watch, and in the third watch.—In the very dead watches of all, at least if there be not a season of sleep. At the first watch they went to bed, and the fourth

41. ¶ Then Peter said unto Him, Lord, speakest Thou this parable unto us, or even to all?

42. And the Lord said, Who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season?

Steward: S.V. servant. S.V. whom his lord made.

Vulg. quem constituit dominus supra familiam suam, ut det.

43. Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing.

44. Of a truth I say unto you, that he will make him ruler over all that he hath.

45. But and if that servant say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to beat the menservants and maidens, and to eat and drink, and to be drunken;

46. The lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware, and will cut him in sunder, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.

Margin, cut him off.

Vulg. et dividet eum, partemque ejus cum infidelibus ponet.

47. And that servant, which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.

neither: S.V. or.

Vulg. qui cognovit voluntatem domini sui, et non preparavit, et non fecit secundum voluntatem ejus.

48. But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required: and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more.

In answer to Peter's question whether He had spoken the preceding parable to the Apostles only, or to all, Jesus replies to the effect that all shall be rewarded whom the Lord, when He comes, shall find watching; that all shall be punished who shall not be prepared for His coming, but not all equally; and that the severity of their punishment shall vary according to their knowledge of His will.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evangel. Homil. xiii.; vol. ii. p. 1125.

V. Bede, in Luc. xii. 36; vol. iii. p. 495.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xii. 36; vol. ii. p. 225.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xii. 36; vol. viii. p. 771.

watch, the time of getting up again, came on; so that the second and the third watch was the very dead time of sleep.—Lightfoot on Luke xii. 38; vol. ii. p. 439.

Some¹ have explained our Saviour's words so as to mean by the knowledge of "His will,"—the knowledge that He should come to judge mankind, and should reward them according to their doings. He here supposes the case of two men committing the very same sins; the one with the knowledge that Christ will come to judgment for these sins, the other in ignorance of this. The one is beaten with many stripes, because he committed those sins with the knowledge that Christ would bring him into judgment for them, and thus with a contempt of Him and His judgment; the other, though he commits the very same sins, is beaten with few stripes, because he did not know that Christ would come to judge him for them, and therefore did not commit them in contempt, but in ignorance of the future judgment. The second man was beaten because he knew that he was committing things that were forbidden by God; he was beaten with few stripes, because he did not know that Christ would bring him into judgment for them.

Others² have explained these words so as to interpret "His will" in a more general sense, and to imply that punishment for sin will in every case be in proportion to the degree of light and knowledge with which it was committed.

Theologians say³ there are four degrees of ignorance, and that the punishment of sin will vary according to the degree with which it has been committed. 1. There is invincible ignorance, "invincibilis," and that sin thus committed will not be punished at all. 2. There is ignorance which can be overcome, but with difficulty, "vincibilis sed difficulter." For sin thus committed there will be a certain amount of punishment. 3. There is gross ignorance, "crassa," arising from neglect; and 4. There is wilful ignorance, "affectata."

S. Luke alone contains verses 49 and 50.

49. ¶ I am come to send fire on the earth; and what will I, if it be already kindled?

Vulg. Ignem veni mittere in terram, et quid volo nisi ut accendatur?

50. But I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!

Marg. joined.
Vulg. Baptismo autem habeo baptizari; et quomodo coarctor usque dum perficiatur.

51. Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division:

52. For from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided, three against two, and two against three.

53. The father shall be divided against the son, and the son against the father; the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother; the mother in law against her daughter in law, and the daughter in law against her mother in law.

S. and the mother against: S⁸. against the daughter in law: S⁸. V. against the mother in law.

Vulg. Mater in filium, et filius in matrem suam, mater in filium, et filius in matrem, sororis in nurum suum, et nurus in sororem suam.

It has been conjectured, by more than one commentator,⁴ that there is no particular connection between verse 49 and the preceding verses, and that though the remainder of the chapter was delivered at a different time, and probably in a different place, it is related here by S. Luke, because in some of the verses it touches on a subject similar to what has gone before; namely, the necessity of preparation and watchfulness against the future judgment.

Several interpretations have been given to the term "fire" in the expression "I am come to send fire on the earth." Some have thought that it refers to the hatred and division among brethren, and to the persecution to which the preaching of the Gospel should give rise. But the interpretation which is supported by the highest authorities⁵ is, that by the term "fire" Jesus means the Holy Spirit, which, after His Ascension into heaven, He sent down upon His Apostles and disciples, under the form of "cloven tongues like as of fire" (Acts ii.). This, as His words imply, He is eager to send upon His disciples; but He is restrained, so to speak, by the economy of Salvation. For before that can be, He has a baptism to be baptized with. This baptism is His Death and Passion, to which He refers under the term "baptism," in His reply to the sons of Zebedee (Matt. xx. 20, &c.).

In His last conversation with His Apostles, Jesus again alludes to the necessity of His Death and Passion, before and in order to the Descent of the Holy Spirit. "Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send Him unto you." (John xvi. 7.)

It has been held⁶ that the words "And how am I straitened (ὡς συνέχεται) till it be accomplished!" express an

¹ Maldonatus, in Luc. xii. 47; vol. ii. p. 228.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xii. 47; vol. viii. p. 773.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxvii. p. 187.

⁴ Maldonatus, in Luc. xii. 49; vol. ii. p. 229.

⁵ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xii. 49; vol. viii. p. 774.

⁶ Origen, quoted in S. Jerome's Apolog. adv. Ruf. ii. 7; vol. ii. p. 429.

S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. vi.; vol. i. p. 79.

S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xii. 49; vol. v. p. 754.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xii. 49; vol. ii. p. 1733.

S. Jerome, in Matt. iii. 12; vol. vii. p. 30.

— in Zech. ix. 4; vol. vi. p. 1481.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evangel. Homil. xxx. 5; vol. ii. p. 1223.

V. Bede, in Luc. xii. 49; vol. iii. p. 499.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xii. 49; vol. viii. p. 775.

⁵ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, i. 21 (alias 18), p. 660.

Theophylact, in Luc. xii. 50; vol. i. p. 380.

Euthymius, in Luc. xii. 50; vol. iii. p. 477.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xii. 50; vol. ii. p. 1734.

V. Bede, in Luc. xii. 50; vol. iii. p. 500.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xii. 50; vol. ii. p. 231.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxvii. p. 187.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xii. 50; vol. viii. p. 776.

eager desire and longing for His Death and Passion, not a fear or dread of it, and this not for His own sake, but for the Salvation of man.

For verses 51-53 see S. Matthew, ch. x., page 195.

For verses 54-57 see S. Matthew, ch. xvi., page 269.

54. ¶ And He said also to the people, When ye see a cloud rise out of the west, straightway ye say, There cometh a shower; and so it is.

S. in the west.

Vulg. Cum videritis nubem orientem ab occasu.

55. And when ye see the south wind blow, ye say, There will be heat; and it cometh to pass.

S*. There cometh heat.

Vulg. dicitis: Quia aestus erit: et fit.

56. Ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky and of the earth; but how is it that ye do not discern this time?

S.V. that ye cannot discern this time.

Vulg. Hypocrite, faciem cœli et terræ nostis probare, hoc autem tempus quomodo non probatis?

57. Yea, and why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?

For verses 58 and 59 see S. Matthew, ch. v., page 124.

58. ¶ When thou goest with thine adversary to the magistrate, as thou art in the way, give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him; lest he hale thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and the officer cast thee into prison.

59. I tell thee, thou shalt not depart thence, till thou hast paid the very last mite.

CHAPTER XIII.

[1. Christ preacheth repentance upon the punishment of the Galileans, and others. 6. The fruitless fig tree may not stand. 11 He healeth the crooked woman: 18. sheweth the powerful working of the word in the hearts of His chosen, by the parable of the grain of mustard seed, and of heaven: 21. exhorteth to enter in at the strait gate, 31. and reproveth Herod and Jerusalem.]

[Vulg. occasione caliborum in suis sacrificiis interemptorum, et eorum qui in Siloe corruerant, hortatur ad penitentiam, aliosque exterminandos instat suis afflictionibus: archimagnatum redarguit, indignum quod sabbato curasset mulierem ac spiritu infirmitatis: comparat regnum celorum grano sinapis et fermento: de angusta porta; et quod quidam clauso ostio frustra pulsabant: Herodem dicit culpam, et Jerusalem ob crudelitatem suam descendam.]

S. LUKE alone contains verses 1-9.

1. There were present at that season some that told Him of the Galilæans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices.

2. And Jesus answering said unto them, Suppose ye that these Galilæans were sinners above all the Galilæans, because they suffered such things?

S. And He answered and said unto them: S.V. these things.
Vulg. Et respondens dixit illis.

3. I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

Vulg. sed nisi penitentiam habueritis, omnes similiter peribitis.

It is not certain that this incident is related by any ancient author besides S. Luke. Josephus records several risings of the Jews against the authorities in the time of Pilate, and which were repressed by him with needless severity. Some commentators have endeavoured to identify the following account by Josephus¹ as referring to the event related by S. Luke.

"But the nation of the Samaritans did not escape without tumults. The man who excited them to it was one who thought lying a thing of little consequence, and who contrived everything so that the multitude might be pleased: so he bade them get together on Mount Gerizim, which is by them looked upon as the most holy of all mountains, and assured them that, when they were come thither, he would show them those sacred vessels which were laid under that place, because Moses put them there. So they came thither armed, and thought the discourse of the man probable; and as they abode at a certain village, which was called Tirathaba, they got the rest together to them, and desired to go up the mountain in a great multitude together. But Pilate prevented their going up by seizing upon the roads with a great band of horsemen and footmen, who fell upon those that were gotten together in the village; and when they came to an action, some of them they slew and others of them they put to flight, and took a great many alive, the principal of whom, and also the most potent of those that fled away, Pilate ordered to be slain."

Josephus says these men whom Pilate slew were Samaritans. S. Luke calls those whom he mentions as slain by Pilate Galilæans. Some have hence concluded that they could not be referring to the same tragedy. Others² have explained this apparent difficulty by saying that they are called Samaritans from their country and race, and Galilæans because they belonged to the followers of Judas, whom S. Luke calls the Galilæan (Ἰούδας ὁ Γαλιλαῖος, Acts v. 37).

If S. Luke and Josephus are here referring to the same event, the slaughter of these Samaritans, and the mixing of their blood with the blood of their sacrifices, must have taken place on Mount Gerizim and not at Jerusalem. It has been said³ that this Judas of Galilee laid claim to great strictness, and would not allow his followers to address any human being by the title of Lord as a matter of honour but to reserve it for God alone, or to offer sacrifices for the welfare of the Roman Emperor, as not commanded by the law of Moses; and that Pilate, irritated by their refusal to follow the common custom, as well as by other things, ordered them to be slain and their blood to be mingled with the blood of the sacrifices which they were offering according to the law. But Josephus in his account of the slaughter of the Samaritans makes no mention whatever of sacrifices.

Jesus asks the people who told Him of the slaughter of the Galilæans the very same question which He knew they

¹ Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 5, p. 801.

Whiston's Trans. Antiq. xviii. 4, p. 489.

² Maldonatus, in Luc. xiii. 1; vol. ii. p. 234.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xiii. 1; vol. vii. p. 778.

³ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xiii. 1; vol. v. p. 761.

were desirous to ask Him, "Suppose ye that these Galilæans were sinners above all the Galilæans, because they suffered such things?" and then answers it. He knew that this was their belief, and He shows them that it was wrong. He does not deny that these men were sinners, but He teaches them that the barbarity and ferocity with which they had been treated in their death was no proof that they were greater sinners in the eye of God than many who did not suffer such things. The right use to make of this matter was not to conclude that their sin was great because their death was horrible, but to learn a lesson for themselves, and to take warning by the punishment of these men's sins, before their own similar conduct led them to a similar punishment. These Galilæans had been dealt with harshly perhaps, but they had been punished for rebellious conduct, under the plea of religious scruples against the lawful authorities; and their own seditious conduct under a similar plea of religion, unless reformed, would be sure to lead them to a similar punishment, even to a sacrilegious death. Our Saviour's words were a warning and a prophecy of the death which multitudes of the Jews should meet with, when through their national divisions and incessant rebellions against their conquerors they were besieged by the Romans under Titus and were slain by thousands in and around the Temple, amidst the sacrifices and on the altar of the Temple which they professed so much to revere.¹

Some² have supposed not only that our Saviour's words will bear a more general application, but that He intended such, and did not confine His comparison between His hearers and those whom Pilate had so barbarously slain to the manner of their death, but to the certainty of an equal punishment, either in this world or in the world to come, unless they repented of their sins.

Then to enforce the same truth, that a man's sin is not to be calculated by the suddenness, violence, or atrocity of his death, Jesus refers to a well-known local incident, which had probably given rise in their minds to the same conclusion as the slaughter of the Galilæans by Pilate.

4. Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem?

Magna, delictorum.

Vulg. peccatis quia et ipsi delictorum fuerunt.

5. I tell you, Nay : but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

The tower in Siloam is supposed to have been a tower near the fountain of Siloam in Jerusalem, which by some accident fell and destroyed these eighteen men. But no ancient author besides S. Luke has ever made the slightest reference to the fall of this tower.

6. ¶ He spake also this parable; A certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.

7. Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?³

V. why cumbereth it the place?

Vulg. ut quid tamen terram occupat?

8. And he answering said unto him, Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it:

9. And if it bear fruit, well: and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down.

S.V. And if it bear fruit after that, well: but if not, thou shalt.

Vulg. Et siquidem fecerit fructum: sin autem, in futurum succides eam.

The punishment of the Jewish nation, of which Jesus warned them in His remarks on those whom Pilate had slain and whose blood he had mingled with their sacrifices, He foretells still more distinctly in the parable of the barren fig-tree.

Great variety of opinion exists among the early commentators regarding the interpretation of this parable. The following⁴ appears to be the most literal explanation. The fig-tree is the Jewish Church, which God planted in His vineyard by His servant Moses. Through the Incarnation He sent His Son to visit His vineyard and to seek fruit on this fig-tree. For three years He had now been going from city to city, exhorting them to bring forth fruit, and in vain. God the Father is represented as saying, "Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?" and the Son as pleading that it might be spared another year, till He should dig about it and dung it,—till by further teaching and by additional manifestations of His power and love to them He should induce them to bring forth fruit. The object of this part of the parable is to show that nothing was omitted which could be done for them; that every possible means were used to bring the Jews as a nation to repentance. But the digging about the fig-tree and the dunging it failed to produce fruit: for in the middle of the fourth year, which had been given them at the

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xiii. 1; vol. v. p. 761.

² Theophylact, in Luc. xiii. 1; vol. i. p. 384.

³ Euthymius, in Luc. xiii. 1; vol. iii. p. 487.

⁴ Annotators, in Concord. Evangel. cap. xxviii. p. 189.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xiii. 1; vol. vii. p. 778.

² Maldonatus, in Luc. xiii. 1; vol. ii. p. 235.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xiii. 6; vol. viii. p. 779.

⁴ Why cumbereth it the ground? "We prefer to render it, Why does it make even the ground unproductive?" For this we take to be the real force of τίθη and καταργεῖ."—The Church Quarterly Review, April 1876, p. 130.

prayer of the dresser of the vineyard, the Jews filled up the measure of their iniquity and put to death the Son of God. After no long time the Roman Emperor was sent to inflict punishment on them, and to cut down the fig-tree.

Some have interpreted the three years during which fruit was sought on this fig-tree of the time before the giving of the Law from Mount Sinai, after the giving of the Law, and after the coming of Christ. Others of the three polities under which the Jews lived after the giving of the Law—under the Judges, the Kings, and the Priests or the Maccabees. Others have interpreted the three years to be the three conditions of man's life—childhood, manhood, and old age.

It has been observed¹ that the multiplicity of the external rites and ceremonies of the Jewish Church, and which failed to affect the heart and the conduct of the generality of the Jews, is well represented by a barren fig-tree, which, barren in fruit, is generally fruitful in leaves.

The barren fig-tree cumbered (karapyei) the ground. It was not only useless, but did positive mischief. By its roots and leaves it sucked up the nutriment which would have nourished fruitful trees. The authorities of the Jewish Church in centring all their attention on external acts, besides failing to influence the heart and life of their own worshippers, failed also to attract strangers to the worship of the One True God, but rather deterred them from it.

Some² eminent commentators hold that the fig-tree was intended to represent not so much the Jews as a Church or nation, but each individual man.

S. Luke alone contains verses 10-17.

10. And He was teaching in one of the synagogues on the sabbath.

11. ¶ And, behold, there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bowed together, and could in no wise lift up herself.

12. And when Jesus saw her, He called her to Him, and said unto her, Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity.

13. And He laid His hands on her: and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God.

14. And the ruler of the synagogue answered with indignation, because that Jesus had healed on the sabbath day, and said unto the people, There are six days in which men ought to work:

in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the sabbath day.

15. The Lord then answered him, and said, Thou hypocrite, doth not each one of you on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering?

S. V. But the Lord answered him: S. V. A. Ye hypocrites.
Vulg. Hypocriti, non minusque vestrum sabbato non solvit bovem suum aut asinum a praesepe.

16. And ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years, be loosed from this bond on the sabbath day?

17. And when He had said these things, all His adversaries were ashamed: and all the people rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by Him.

Vulg. Et omnis populus gaudebat in universis, quae gloriose fiebant ab eo.

Most of the cures which Jesus wrought He did either at the earnest request of the sick or of their friends. In the case of this woman, as appears from the narrative, no request was made to Him to heal her. Jesus Himself called her unto Him and healed her. He selected the time and the place, on the Sabbath and in the synagogue, that were best suited to arouse the attention and the opposition of the Pharisees, and then to prove to them that their observance of the Sabbath was not the observance which God required.

The length of time (eighteen years) during which she had been bound, proved that her malady was beyond the power of human skill to cure. This is also indicated by the words in which it is described, as "a spirit of infirmity," "a bond of Satan." Some authors³ have supposed that a mystery was hidden under the number eighteen.

When Jesus had said unto her, "Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity," and had laid His hands on her, immediately she was made straight. The cure was not wrought by His command only. Both His words and His hands co-operated to effect her cure: for the Body of the Son of Man, through the Hypostatic Union, was endued with super-human power.⁴

He calls the ruler of the synagogue and those who agreed with him "hypocrites," because, while pretending to act from zeal for the sanctity of the Sabbath, they were really influenced by feelings of envy and malice towards Himself. Having exposed the source of their opposition, He goes on to convict them of its injustice. He compares what He had

¹ S. Ambrose, in Luc. xiii. 6; vol. ii. p. 1741.

² S. Augustine, Sermo cx. (alias de verbis Dom. 31); vol. v. p. 638.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xiii. 6; vol. ii. p. 267.

³ S. Ambrose, in Luc. xiii. 11; vol. ii. p. 1745.

⁴ S. Augustine, Sermo cx. (alias de verbis Dom. 31); vol. v. p. 639.

V. Bede, in Luc. xiii. 11; vol. iii. p. 505.

Theophylact, in Luc. xiii. 11; vol. i. p. 387.

⁴ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xiii. 11; vol. v. p. 768.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xiii. 11; vol. ii. p. 242.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxxix. p. 191.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xiii. 11; vol. viii. p. 781.

done on this Sabbath with what they did every Sabbath, and shows that what He had done was so far from breaking the Sabbath that it sanctified it, and rendered honour and glory to the Author of it. Every word that Jesus utters on this occasion is unusually pregnant with meaning.

He contrasts the ox and the ass with "a daughter of Abraham." They break the letter of the commandment in order to show mercy to the ox or the ass: domestic animals, mere brute creatures, and not even the most noble among domestic animals. If He had broken the letter of the commandment, it was to show mercy to a woman, and to more than a woman, to "a daughter of Abraham." They do it to prevent their ox and their ass suffering from thirst for a few hours. He had done this to put an end to the suffering which this daughter of Abraham had endured from Satan for eighteen years. His miracle had been wrought in a moment by laying His hands on her, and uttering a command; their act was one which required both time and labour.

By His words His adversaries were silenced, and the multitudes, who were actuated by no sinister motives, "rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by Him."

For verses 18-21 see S. Matthew, ch. xiii., page 233.

18. ¶ Then said He, Unto what is the kingdom of God like? and whereunto shall I resemble it?

19. It is like a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and cast into his garden; and it grew, and waxed a great tree; and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it.

S.V. omitt. great.

Vulg. et factum est in arborem magnam.

20. And again He said, Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God?

21. It is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

22. And He went through the cities and villages, teaching, and journeying toward Jerusalem.

S. Luke alone records verse 23.

23. Then said one unto Him, Lord, are there few that be saved? And He said unto them,

24. ¶ Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able.

S.V. at the strait door.

Vulg. Contendite intrare per angustam portam.

25. When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and He shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are:

S.V. saying, Lord, open unto us.

Vulg. Cum autem intraverit paterfamilias, et clauserit ostium, incipientes foris stare, et pulsare ostium, dicentes: Domine, aperi nobis.

26. Then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in Thy presence, and Thou hast taught in our streets.

27. But He shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from Me, all ye workers of iniquity.

S. And He shall say to you, I know you not: V. And He shall speak, saying unto you, I know you not.

Vulg. Et dicet vobis: Nescio vos unde sitis.

28. ¶ There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out.

A. in His kingdom.

Vulg. in regno Dei.

29. And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God.

30. And, behold, there are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last.

S. Matthew gives verses 24-27 in his relation of the Sermon on the Mount, ch. vii., p. 148. Jesus may have uttered these words on more than one occasion, and S. Luke notes a fitting opportunity for Him to have repeated them: "One said unto Him, Lord, are there few that be saved?" Jesus does not minister to idle curiosity by answering this fruitless question, but shows him the way in which anyone may be saved.

S. Luke alone contains verses 31-33.

31. ¶ The same day there came certain of the Pharisees, saying unto Him, Get Thee out, and depart hence: for Herod will kill Thee.

S.V.A. The same hour.

Vulg. In ipsa die accesserunt quidam pharisaeorum.

32. And He said unto them, Go ye, and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected.

33. Nevertheless I must walk to-day, and to-morrow, and the day following: for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem.

Vulg. quia non capit prophetam perire extra Jerusalem.

34. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not!

35. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate: and verily I say unto you, Ye shall not see Me, until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord.

S.V. A. omit desolate: S.V. A. And (S. omits) I say unto you.

S.V. Ye shall not see Me, till ye shall say.

Vulg. Ecce relinquitur vobis domus vestra deserta. Ilico autem vobis, quia non videbitis me, donec veniat cum diebus.

An important question arises, Was the report which these Pharisees brought to Jesus true, or had they invented it to serve their own purposes? The latter has been the opinion of many distinguished commentators; for there is no proof that Herod Antipas was anxious to kill Him. It is said that "he was desirous to see Him of a long season, because he had heard many things of Him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by Him." (Luke xxiii. 8.) These words show that, from the report he had heard of Jesus, Herod had begun to entertain a great admiration for Him, rather than a longing to kill Him. And when he had it now in his power to kill Him, he did nothing but array Him in a gorgeous robe. It is true that this same Herod had put John the Baptist to death. But the narrative seems to imply that Herod was incautiously entrapped into that deed by Herodias, and had not deliberately planned it. Nor from the past conduct of the Pharisees can we suppose that they were likely to show any particular goodwill to Jesus, and warn Him of danger. It has therefore been concluded that this report which they professed to bring, that Herod was seeking an opportunity to kill Him, was invented by themselves in order to drive Him out of their own neighbourhood (where His influence was daily increasing, and where His life was secure) to Jerusalem, where the Pharisees would be better able to carry out their designs against Him.

Jesus might use the term "fox" of Herod, if, as the Pharisees said, he wished to kill him; but the Greek commentator S. Cyril¹ points out that Jesus did not say, "Go ye and tell that fox" (τῇ ἀλώπεκι ἐκείνῃ), but "this fox" (τῇ ἀλώπεκι ταύτῃ). From this and also from the context he concludes that Jesus had in these words another meaning, and perhaps even a double meaning, and that He thereby gave the Pharisees to understand that He saw through their trick, and knew their eagerness to get rid of His presence among them, and that He intends this term to apply to themselves, and especially to him who had invented the report, rather than to him of whom the report was spoken. S. Cyril's explanation has been followed, and his words quoted, by many subsequent commentators,² both Greek and Latin.

Jesus knew that it was because He cast out devils and wrought cures that they had got up this report, and therefore He said, "Go ye, and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected." If Herod had no wish to kill Him, this reply of Jesus could not apply to him, but would recoil, as it was intended, on those who had invented the statement. He also shows that this report, true or false, would have no influence with Him, and would not cause Him to depart out of their neighbourhood until He had finished His work. He should work a little time longer, but only a little, to-day and to-morrow, naming a definite time for an indefinite; and on the third day He should perfect His work, the work of man's salvation, by His death.

Some suppose that Jesus was at this time in Galilee; others that He was in Peræa, "journeying toward Jerusalem" (verse 22), both of which districts were in Herod's jurisdiction. But He intimates that He should not be put to death by Herod or in his dominions, but in Jerusalem. For it was becoming that Jerusalem, which had killed so many of the prophets, should also kill Him, who was the Head of the prophets, and who was the chief subject of their prophecies.

For verses 34 and 35 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiii., page 369.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xiii. 32; vol. v. p. 781.

² Theophylact, in Luc. xiii. 32; vol. i. p. 391.

Euthymius, in Luc. xiii. 32; vol. iii. p. 503.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. ch. xc. p. 195.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xiii. 32; vol. ii. p. 245.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xiii. 32; vol. viii. p. 783.

CHAPTER XIV.

[2. Christ healeth the dropsy on the Sabbath: 7. teacheth humility: 12. to feast the poor: 15. under the parable of the great supper, sheweth how worldly minded men, who condemn the word of God, shall be shut out of heaven. 25. Those who will be His disciples, to bear their cross must make their accounts aforeshand, lest with shame they result from Him afterward, 34. and become altogether unprofitable, like salt that hath lost his savour.]

[Vulg. In domo principis phariseorum hydropicum sabbato curat, ostendens legis spiritum ac phariseis hoc licere, et horum notans ambitionem, docet invitatum in convivium loco recumbere: parabola de invitatis ad cenam qui se excusant: sequens Christian debet omnibus renuntiare, sublata cruce sua, usque ad odium animæ propriæ: volens turrem adificare computat primum sumptus: commendatio salis.]

S. LUKE alone contains verses 1-6.

1. And it came to pass, as He went into the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the sabbath day, that they watched Him.

2. And, behold, there was a certain man before Him which had the dropsy.

3. And Jesus answering spake unto the lawyers and Pharisees, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath day?

S. V. on the sabbath day or not?

Vulg. dicens: Si licet sabbato curare?

4. And they held their peace. And He took him, and healed him, and let him go;

5. And answered them, saying, Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the sabbath day?

V. And He said unto them: V. A. a son or an ox.

Vulg. Et respondens ad illos dixit: Cujus vestrum asinus aut bos,

6. And they could not answer Him again to these things.

It is not easy to say what were the motives which induced this Pharisee to invite Jesus to eat bread with him, and different motives have been imputed to him. Some think that he wished to show that he was more liberal-minded and less given to envy than many of the Pharisees; others that he invited Jesus that they might have an opportunity to watch Him, and might find some accusation against Him, and that the man with the dropsy was placed there on purpose to see if Jesus would heal him on the Sabbath day.

Answering their thoughts, He inquired of the lawyers and Pharisees whether it was lawful to heal on the Sabbath day.

Receiving no answer, He healed the man with the dropsy, and then proved the lawfulness of His act from their own practice on the Sabbath. An ass or an ox was of less value than a man, and yet they did not scruple to release them from danger on the Sabbath day. To pull an ass or an ox out of a pit was a work of considerable time and labour, but it required no labour for Him to heal a man with the dropsy. He healed him by putting His hand on him (ἐπιλαβόμενος), simply by contact with His own Body, the usual medium through which He conveyed health to the souls and bodies of men. It is not stated that the man with the dropsy asked Jesus to heal him. It may be that he was deterred from that by fear of the Pharisees, and that he remained silent, imploring Him by his looks to have mercy on him.¹

S. Luke alone contains verses 7-10.

7. ¶ And He put forth a parable to those which were bidden, when He marked how they chose out the chief rooms; saying unto them,

Vulg. intendens quomodo primus accubitus egerent.

8. When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest room; lest a more honourable man than thou be bidden of him;

Vulg. non discumbas in primo loco.

9. And he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room.

Vulg. Da huic locum . . . novissimum locum tenere.

10. But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher: then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xiv. 2; vol. v. p. 786. Maldonatus, in Luc. xiv. 2; vol. ii. p. 249.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xiv. 2; vol. viii. p. 785.

S. V. A. in the presence of all that sit.
Vulg. coram omnibus discumbentibus.

11. For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

Having taught the Pharisees, through the healing of the man with the dropsy, that it was lawful to do good on the Sabbath day, or rather that the right observance of the Sabbath was to do good on it, Jesus makes use of the same opportunity to teach them another lesson, the lesson of humility. The Evangelist terms this a parable, probably because the doctrine which Jesus here inculcates He illustrates by what would be their own practice at a feast. He does not mean that humility or self-abasement is to be confined to their conduct at a feast, but He uses what takes place at a feast as an illustration to show them that pride is generally punished and humility valued and rewarded even among men; and He then adds that pride is always punished and humility always rewarded by God. He had already enforced the same truth and in the same words on another occasion, as related by S. Matthew, ch. xxiii., page 364.

S. Luke alone records verses 12-15.

12. ¶ Then said He also to him that bade him, When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbours; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee.

13. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind:

14. And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.

S. But thou shalt be.
Vulg. retribuatur enim tibi.

15. ¶ And when one of them that sat at meat with Him heard these things, he said unto Him, Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.

S. heard it, he said, Blessed.
Vulg. Hec cum audisset quidam de simul discumbentibus, dixit illi.

Having given a lesson to the guests how to act so as to secure the favour of God, Jesus then turns to the host who had invited Him. But He does not here discourage acts of kindness and benevolence to men, because they are friends or kinsmen. What He dissuades them from is the spending their worldly goods merely in the interchange of social civilities with those in their own condition of life. He teaches them to look higher, and to use the things of this world with a view to the world to come. If they spend these even lawfully, but with an eye to their own pleasure or profit—that is, to keep up their position or reputation among men—they shall meet with their reward here, and it will be such a reward as this world can give. But if they spend their goods in rendering help to the poor and needy, they will meet with no return in this life, but their reward will be from God, and in the life to come.

When Jesus had spoken these words, one of those who sat at meat with Him, struck with amazement and admiration at the wonderful things which he heard, exclaimed, "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God." Our Saviour then takes occasion to show them that the kingdom of God was formed here, that the selection for His kingdom was not made in heaven but on earth, and that He Himself had come down from heaven to form His kingdom and to invite men into it; and He goes on to show them how men had received His invitations. Some¹ suppose that the man who addressed Him was a man of gross conceptions, who imagined that to eat bread in the kingdom of God would be in a carnal sense, much the same as on earth, and that it was partly to correct this notion that Jesus delivered the following parable.

On the question whether the following parable by S. Luke is the same, or the same delivery of the same parable, as that related by S. Matthew xxii., see S. Matthew, page 352.

16. Then said He unto him, A certain man made a great supper, and bade many:

17. And sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready.

S. for it is now ready.
Vulg. quia jam parata sunt omnia.

18. And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused.

19. And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused.

20. And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come.

21. So that servant came, and shewed his lord these things. Then the master of the house being angry said to his servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind.

S. V. A. So the servant came. S. V. and the first and the last: A. omnes and the halt.

Vulg. Et recessit servus et narravit domino, dicens, Sic et ceteri pauperes et debiles, et coecos, et claudos, et introducti sunt.

22. And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room.

S.V. what then thou hast commanded is done.
Vulg. factum est ut imperasti.

23. And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled.

24. For I say unto you, That none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper.

Both the dinner¹ which a king made for the marriage of his son (Matt. xxii.), and the great supper which a certain man made, denote the Church of Christ; and, so far as they can be distinguished, the former rather expresses the Church militant here on earth, and the latter the Church triumphant in heaven. The term "supper" is more appropriately applied to the Church triumphant, as being the last refreshment of the day. The supper-time when all things were ready, may be after the Crucifixion, Resurrection, and Ascension of Jesus, and after the Descent of the Holy Spirit.

Though the kingdom of heaven was preached to the rest of the people of Israel at the same time that it was to the chief priests, scribes, and Pharisees, both by John the Baptist and by Jesus Himself, and by His Apostles, the latter may still be said to have been called first, because, from their greater intelligence and more intimate acquaintance with the Old Testament, they were in a better condition to understand that Jesus was the promised Messiah. Two causes are alleged as causing their refusal to accept the invitation to the supper: first, avarice, which showed itself in different forms, and is expressed by buying a piece of ground and by buying five yoke of oxen; and secondly, the love of pleasure and self-indulgence, expressed by marrying a wife. The rest of the Jews, and their different conditions in life, are indicated by the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind.

When the house is not filled by the seed of Abraham, the Gentiles are then invited. Their condition as less highly favoured by previous preparation and instruction than the Jews, is shown by the places from which they are collected, the highways and hedges. The ignorance and barbarism of some of the Gentiles were so great that it required immense labour and great exertion to reduce them to the obedience of the Gospel. They may be said to be compelled to come in, because they could be induced to come in only after great toil and urgency on the part of those who preached the Gospel to them.

25. ¶ And there went great multitudes with Him: and He turned, and said unto them,

26. If any man come to Me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple.

27. And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after Me, cannot be My disciple.

S. omits And: V. Whosoever therefore,
Vulg. Et qui non bajulat crucem suam.

To prevent the people from lightly attaching themselves to Him, under the impression that little or nothing would be required of them as His disciples, Jesus utters these warning words, with the two parables that follow. He does not teach them to undervalue or endeavour to loosen the ties of kindred or family, but He is setting before their eyes how much will be demanded of them as His disciples. No love of kindred, no love of life even, must stand in the way when the cause of the Gospel calls for the sacrifice of these.

Jesus had already uttered these or similar words on another occasion: see S. Matthew, ch. x. and xvi., pp. 195 and 281.

S. Luke alone contains verses 28-33.

28. For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?

29. Lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him,

30. Saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finish.

31. Or what king, going to make war against another king, sitteth not down first, and consulteth whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him that cometh against him with twenty thousand?

S. shall not sit down first and consult.
Vulg. non s-dens prius cogitat.

32. Or else, while the other is yet a great way off, he sendeth an ambassage, and desireth conditions of peace.

33. So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be My disciple.

The conclusion² with which these two parables are summed up renders it probable that they were not intended to apply

¹ For this parable, see

S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xiv. 16; vol. v. p. 788.

Theophylact, in Luc. xiv. 28; vol. i. p. 394.

Euthymius, in Luc. xiv. 16; vol. iii. p. 511.

S. Augustine, Sermo xlii. (alias de verbis Dom. 33); vol. v. p. 643.

V. Bede, in Luc. xiv. 16; vol. iii. p. 514.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xci. p. 203.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xiv. 16; vol. viii. p. 788.

² See S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xiv. 28; vol. v. p. 793.

Theophylact, in Luc. xiv. 28; vol. i. p. 402.

Euthymius, in Luc. xiv. 28; vol. iii. p. 519.

S. Augustine, Quest. Evang. ii. 31; vol. iii. p. 1343.

V. Bede, in Luc. xiv. 28; vol. iii. p. 517.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xcii. p. 207.

to all Christians, or at least to all in the same sense: for there are two kinds of disciples of Christ:—1. There are those who aim at a less exalted state of holiness, that to which the generality of Christians attain, who are content with striving to fulfil the precepts of the Gospel, and make no attempt to live by what are called the counsels of perfection. Even these are bound to forsake all for Christ at exceptional times, as in the time of persecution, or when the call of God is more than usually plain. 2. There are also disciples of Christ who aim at a higher state of holiness, at the saintly life, to which the Apostles and like-minded men attain, whose zeal for Christ is so burning that they are not satisfied with fulfilling the precepts of the Gospel, but go on to observe the counsels of perfection, and forsake all for Christ, as the persistent rule of their calling. A disciple of Christ with the ordinary zeal for His service can no more attain to this higher life than a man with the usual resources of one in a private station can build a tower, or than a king can successfully make war with another who has an army of double his number of men. Thus these two parables are intended to set forth the difficulty of this higher life and the necessity for sufficient consideration before undertaking it, lest by his failure he should give occasion to the enemies of the Gospel to blaspheme. To attempt more than is commanded, for Christ's sake, is praiseworthy, and if accomplished will bring a proportionate reward. To attempt more than is commanded and to fail, from want of previous consideration, brings more discredit on the cause than to attempt only what is commanded and fulfil it.

In the interpretation¹ of the latter parable there is no necessity to explain the second king as Satan, or, if so, care must be taken not to press unduly the expression "desireth conditions of peace," which mean no more than to acknowledge his inability to accomplish what he had thoughtlessly undertaken, and to cope with him under those conditions. Thus the general scope of the parable is to illustrate the folly of undertaking what is in itself exceedingly difficult, without due consideration beforehand. But there is not sufficient reason to think that the counterpart of each term exists in the Christian's warfare with Satan.

34. ¶ Salt is good: but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be seasoned?

S.V. Therefore salt is good: but if even the salt.

Vulg. Bonum est sal. Si autem sal exament, in quo condietur?

35. It is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghill; but men cast it out. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

The third and last of this group of parables is that of "the salt," and, as this last is plainly spoken of the Apostles, this forms a presumption that the two former are so also. As salt preserves that with which it is seasoned from corruption, so the Apostles were appointed to season the world by their doctrine and personal holiness, and to preserve it from becoming utterly corrupted by sin. But as salt which has lost its savour is perfectly useless for any good purpose, and becomes positively mischievous, producing barrenness in the land rather than fruitfulness, so an Apostle who has lost his faith in Jesus as the God Incarnate is no longer useful but injurious to his fellow-men, and spreads around him deadness and barrenness rather than fruitfulness in good works. To recover the salt which has lost its saltiness is as possible as to recover an Apostle who has renounced his faith in Jesus: for as there is nothing in nature that can impart saltiness to the salt which has lost its savour, so there is no teacher among men that can instruct and quicken to life again an Apostle who has fallen from his faith. Some² suppose that in the salt that had lost his savour Jesus had a special reference to Judas Iscariot. For this parable see also S. Matthew, ch. v., page 120.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xcii. p. 207.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xiv. 28; vol. ii. p. 253.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xiv. 28; vol. viii. p. 712.

² V. Bede, in Luc. xiv. 34; vol. iii. p. 519.

CHAPTER XV.

[1. The parable of the lost sheep; 8. of the piece of silver; 11. of the prodigal son.]

[Vulg. Scriptis et phariseis et sadduceis quod peccatores recipiunt, parabolas proponit de ore et deo hunc periculis ac inventis, et de filio prodigo ad patrem reverso, benignique ab ipso accepto, sententia filio indigne hoc fecerunt; et quantum sit in eubo gaudium super peccatore penitentiam agente.]

1. Then drew near unto Him all the publicans and sinners for to hear Him.

2. And the Pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This Man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them.

A. the scribes and Pharisees; S. saying, He receiveth.

3. ¶ And He spake this parable unto them, saying,

4. What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?

5. And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders,^a rejoicing.

6. And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost.

7. I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance.

S. Matthew also relates the parable of the lost sheep: see ch. xviii., page 303.

S. Luke alone contains verses 8-10.

8. ¶ Either what woman having ten pieces of silver,^b if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it?

9. And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost.

10. Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

Jesus delivered both these parables in answer to the objections of the Pharisees and scribes, who murmured, saying, "This Man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them." His object in both is the same, to show them that to seek that which is lost, and not that which is in safe keeping, is the principle on which men act in the affairs of this life, and that it is also the principle on which God and the holy angels act with regard to man himself.

Some commentators¹ think that Jesus mentions a hundred, and ten, because these are the numbers most appropriate in each case, a hundred sheep being a fair portion of the number to which a shepherd usually attends, and ten pieces of silver being the number which most women might possess. Others² suppose that in these numbers, as well as in several other expressions in these two parables, a symbolic meaning was also intended to be conveyed.

¹ Maldonatus, in Luc. xv. 8; vol. ii. p. 254.

² S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xv. 4; vol. v. p. 797.

S. Gregory Nazian. Orat. in Sanct. Pascha, 26; vol. ii. p. 660. Theophylact, in Luc. xv. 8; vol. i. p. 404. Euthymius, in Luc. xv. 8; vol. iii. p. 525.

^a On his shoulders (ἐπὶ τοῖς ὤμοις αὐτοῦ).—"S. Luke, in recording our Lord's parable of the Lost Sheep, makes the Good Shepherd place the lost sheep, when found, on 'his own shoulders,' a touch of pathos altogether lost in the Authorized Version, which ignores here the Greek αὐτοῦ, which reminds us forcibly of 'Him who Himself bare our infirmities.'"—The 'Church Quarterly Review,' April 1876, p. 137.

^b What woman having ten pieces of silver.—"Many of the

S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. ii. 32; vol. iii. p. 1343.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxiv. 3; vol. ii. p. 1247.

V. Bede, in Luc. xv. 3; vol. iii. p. 520.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xciv. p. 217.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xv. 8; vol. viii. p. 795.

women (of Nazareth) were clean and intelligent-looking, with their rolls of silver coins fringing their open faces—smiling faces, for all were Christian here. In this quaint head-dress, evidently of ancient design, consists a woman's wealth. It is her peculium, which her husband may not touch, and which descends to her daughter. There are few who cannot show at least fifty pieces round their face. How poor must one have been, who, like the woman in our Lord's parable, owned only ten such pieces fastened

S. Luke alone contains verses 11-32.

11. ¶ And He said, A certain man had two sons :

12. And the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living.

S. omits Father.
Vulg. Pater, da mihi.

13. And not many days after the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living.

14. And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land ; and he began to be in want.

15. And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country ; and he sent him into his fields to feed swine.

16. And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat : and no man gave unto him.

S.V. And he was desiring to be fed with the husks.
Vulg. Et cupiebat implere ventrem suum de siliquis.

17. And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger !

S.V. and I perish here with hunger.
Vulg. ego autem hic fame pereo.

18. I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee,

S. But I will arise.
Vulg. Surgam, et ibo.

19. And am no more worthy to be called thy son : make me as one of thy hired servants.

S.V.A. I am no more (omit And).
Vulg. Iam non sum dignus.

20. And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.

21. And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son.

S.V.A. in thy sight, I am no more : S.V. add make me as one of thy hired servants after the son.
Vulg. Pater, peccavi in celum et coram te : jam non sum dignus vocari filius tuus.

22. But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him ; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet :

S.V. Bring forth quickly.
Vulg. Cito proferite stolam primam.

23. And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it ; and let us eat, and be merry :

24. For this my son was dead, and is alive again ; he was lost, and is found. And they began to be merry.

V. omits again : S. omits and.
Vulg. et revixit . . . Et coeperunt epulari.

25. Now his elder son was in the field : and as he came and drew nigh to the house, he heard musick and dancing.

26. And he called one of the servants, and asked what these things meant.

27. And he said unto him, Thy brother is come ; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, because he hath received him safe and sound.

28. And he was angry, and would not go in : therefore came his father out, and intreated him.

S.V.A. but his father came out.
Vulg. Pater ergo illius egressus, cepit rogare illum.

29. And he answering said to his father, Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment : and yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends :

30. But as soon as this thy son was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf.

31. And he said unto him, Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine.

32. It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad : for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again ; and was lost, and was found.

S.V. omit again : S. he was lost.
Vulg. mortuus erat, et revixit ; perierat, et inventus est.

In this parable three principal persons are mentioned : the father and his two sons. That the father represents God, either God the Father, or Jesus Christ His Son, all are agreed. But a difference exists among the ancient writers as to her head-gear ! How she would miss one piece that was lost, both as ornament and as money ; how she would talk of it at the well, and how soon her neighbours would hear of her loss ; then also, how she would light her lamp, even at mid-day, and search through her windowless house, filled with all the goods and chattels of the family, from the plough to the hens that roosted on it at night. — TRISTRAM'S 'Land of Israel,' p. 420.

to the persons intended by the two sons. Some¹ suppose the two sons indicate two different people—the Jews and the Gentiles—the elder one standing for the Jews, and the younger for the Gentiles; others,² that the elder son represents the righteous, or those who claim to be righteous, such as the Pharisees and scribes who murmured against Jesus, and the younger son the wicked and profligate, and that both may be either Jews or Gentiles, without any distinction of nation or race. Others³ again hold that both these meanings may be contained in the parable, though the latter is the one which is most intimately connected with the context.

The chief difficulty as regards both these interpretations is found in the latter part of the parable, or in what has been called the appendix to the parable.⁴ The elder son is there introduced as murmuring at the delighted welcome which his penitent prodigal brother had received from their father, and as saying, "Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment." The explanation sometimes given to these words is, that they may be regarded partly as the claim which the Jewish nation made; a claim which was not altogether admitted as true, but which was so far admitted by the father in the words "Son, thou art ever with me," as that the Jews as a nation had never, like the Gentiles, fallen from the knowledge and the worship of the One True God. An equal difficulty will arise if these words are attributed to any individual man. Such a claim from any man, however righteous, must be understood in a very restricted sense, and could be but partially admitted. The father's words, "and all that I have is thine," may intimate God's willingness to impart to the Jews all the blessings of the Gospel dispensation.

It is easy to understand the envy and discontent which the elder son showed at the cordial reception which his erring but penitent brother met with at the hands of their father, if we understand him as speaking in the person of the Jewish people. For we know that they, as a nation, did murmur at the mercy showed to the Gentiles; that even Christian converts from the Jews were slow to understand; and that a miracle was wrought to teach S. Peter that the wall of separation between the two people was henceforward to be broken down. It is much more difficult to reconcile envy or discontentment with the mercy shown to another, however sinful, with the character of the righteous, or even with the claim to be righteous. It has hence been conjectured that our Saviour's object in these words may have been to show how far beyond all expectation and belief is the forgiveness and the blessing which God bestows upon the penitent; that it is so great, as even, if it were possible, to create envy and discontent among those who had not so fallen.

The younger son asked his father for the portion of goods that fell to him, and the father divided unto them his living. Regarding the two sons as representatives of the Jews and the Gentiles, we may say that to the younger was given all the gifts with which man is naturally endowed: freedom of choice, reason, intellect, &c. To the elder son he gives, in addition to these, the Law and the Prophets. The elder son, restrained by these additional gifts, remains in his father's house; that is, he continues with more or less of corruption to worship the One True God.

The explanation of the younger son's career will differ but little, whether we regard him as representing a nation or an individual character. Depending solely on his natural powers, he takes his journey into a far country,—he forgets and forsakes the worship of God, and in turn is forsaken by God, and falls into every conceivable sin. A famine comes on, and he hires himself to a citizen of that country,—becomes the servant of the devil, who sends him to feed swine, to indulge his own lusts and passions without stint. So great is the famine, that he would fain have satisfied himself with the husks (κεφάλια) that the swine did eat. The inadequacy of this food to satisfy a rational being is shown by describing it as the food on which brute beasts and those of the lowest kind did eat.

Coming to his senses, and after reflection, he resolves to arise from his state of abject submission to the devil in the gratification of his own carnal passions, and by repentance to return to God his Father, and to confess that he had lost all claim to be treated for the future as His son, and would be content with a less exalted position in His house, as a hired servant.

As "hunger" in this parable denotes the hunger of the soul,—lack of spiritual food,—so "bread" and "the fattened calf" will each refer to the soul; the first implying a sufficiency of nourishment, and the other the richest of all food, and most probably has special reference to the Body and Blood of the Son of God.⁵

On the penitence, the confession, and the forgiveness of the returned son, the father lavishes on him all his store of delights: the best robe (τὴν στολὴν τὴν πρῶτην), a ring for his hand, and shoes for his feet, and all to express his perfect reconciliation and restoration to purity, and to honour in his father's house equal to that which he had enjoyed before.

¹ S. Jerome, Epist. xxi. (alias 140) ad Damasum; vol. i. p. 379.

² S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. ii. 33; vol. iii. p. 1344.

³ V. Bede, in Luc. xv. 11; vol. iii. p. 522.

⁴ Tertullian, de Pudicitia, ix.; vol. i. p. 997.

⁵ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xv. 11; vol. v. p. 804.

Theophylact, in Luc. xv. 11; vol. i. p. 404.

Euthymius, in Luc. xv. 11; vol. i. p. 256.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xv. 11; vol. ii. p. 529.

⁶ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xciv. p. 221.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xv. 11; vol. viii. p. 796.

⁷ Maldonatus, in Luc. xv. 11; vol. ii. p. 255.

⁸ Tertullian, de Pudicitia, ix.; vol. i. p. 998.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xv. 23; vol. ii. p. 1761.

S. Jerome, Epist. xxi. (alias 140) ad Damasum; vol. i. p. 388.

S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. ii. 33; vol. iii. p. 1346.

Theophylact, in Luc. xv. 23; vol. i. p. 409.

Euthymius, in Luc. xv. 23; vol. iii. p. 541.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xciv. p. 224.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xv. 23; vol. ii. p. 270.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xv. 23; vol. viii. p. 801.

CHAPTER XVI.

[1. The parable of the unjust steward. 14. Christ reproveth the hypocrisy of the covetous Pharisees. 19. The rich glutton, and Lazarus the beggar.]

[Vulg. Per parabolam de villico iniquitatis hortatur ad faciendum elemosinas, docens quid mereatur fidelis aut infidelis mammonis dispensator, quodque nemo servare potest lucrum et mammonem: legem de prophetis usque ad Joannem fuisse dictam, et nihil de lege periturum; nec dimittendam ullum modum uxorem vel utrumque ducatur; de dextro cubone, et Lazaro mendico.]

ST. LUKE alone records the parable of the unjust steward, verses 1-12.

1. And He said also unto His disciples, There was a certain rich man, which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods.

S.V. unto the disciples.

2. And he called him, and said unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.

S. omits unto him: A. of the stewardship.
Vulg. et ait illi . . . redde rationem villicationis tue.

3. Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship: I cannot dig; to beg I am ashamed.

V. and to beg.
Vulg. fodere non valeo, mendicare erubescio.

4. I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they may receive me into their houses.

5. So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord?

6. And he said, An hundred measures of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty.

S. said unto him, An.
Vulg. At ille dixit: Centum cados olei.

7. Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, An hundred measures of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourscore.

S. But he said: V. he said.
Vulg. At ille: Accipe literas tuas.

8. And the lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely: for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light.

9. And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.

V². A. when it faileth.
Vulg. cum defeceritis.

10. He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much.

11. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?

12. And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?

13. ¶ No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

The three former parables Jesus addressed to the Pharisees, and the two following to His disciples generally, but in the presence of the Pharisees, and, as it would appear, with special reference to their case. In the former parables He reproved the Pharisees, who murmured because He associated with sinners; and He taught them that even the angels in heaven rejoiced over one penitent sinner more than over ninety-and-nine just persons who needed no repentance. In the two following He warns His disciples against avarice, a vice to which the Pharisees were notoriously addicted.

A few¹ ancient authors have interpreted this parable of the Jews and Gentiles; but by far the greater number of those who have commented on this parable have explained it without any distinction of race.¹

¹ Tertullian, de Fuga in Persecutione, xiii.; vol. ii. p. 118.

S. Jerome, Epist. cxvi. (alias lxi. ad Algasium), 6; vol. i. p. 1018.

When the steward bids the debtors each take his bill, or acknowledgment of his indebtedness, and write a new one and with a less amount, he bids them do it quickly, conscious that it was a work which might be interrupted and prevented.

The object of the parable is to teach men that they are only stewards of what they seem to possess, and not owners; and, by the example of this steward, by the success of his act, and by the commendation which his conduct met with at the hands of his master, to incite them to distribute their riches on works of charity and mercy to the poor, even though their object be apparently a selfish one, though it be with an eye to their own future interest, or to their welfare in the future life.

The charge against the steward is, that he had wasted his master's goods; that is, that he had spent them on himself, and not for the benefit of the tenants on his master's estate.

When the rich man heard what the steward had done, he commended him for having shown mercy to his debtors, though he had acted from a selfish motive, and had forgiven them part of their debt to his master in order that they might show a future kindness to himself. Yet such was the rich man's appreciation of mercy to the poor, that he commended the act, though it was done at his own expense.

This steward is called the unjust steward; but his injustice consisted not in forgiving the twenty measures of oil or the fifty measures of wheat to his master's debtors, but in wasting his master's goods; that is, most probably in having spent them on himself and on his own pleasures.

To defraud one man of goods in order to distribute them to the poor, is altogether alien to the parable, and is not contemplated in it; for the parable deals only with the goods which belong to the rich man, and which are entrusted to the steward for the benefit of the dwellers on the estate.

The rich man, the steward, the debtors, and the oil and wheat, all have their counterpart in God, in Christians who are more especially His servants, and in their fellow-creatures, particularly the poor and needy, and in the things of this world. Every Christian stands in the same relation to God and to his fellow-creatures as this steward did to the rich man and to his debtors. The steward was no more dishonest in disposing of the twenty measures of oil and the fifty measures of wheat, than a Christian is who deals with his goods as if he were owner of them and not a steward.

Our Saviour's reasoning is to this effect. As that rich man had such love for mercy to the poor and needy, that he commended his steward for having shown this to them, though he had done it with his master's property and with an eye to his own future interest, so your heavenly Father will commend you if you act with His goods in the same way, by showing mercy to the poor with them; and with the same object, that of gaining a future resting-place. For ye are placed in exactly the same situation. The goods which you have no more belong to you than the measures of oil and wheat belonged to that steward. They were his master's goods, and so are those which you have. But mercy to our fellow-creatures precludes all acts of fraud or injustice toward them.

Fraud and injustice are so common where money is concerned, that in the Syriac language they have acquired the name of "the unrighteous mammon," or "the unrighteous riches." This is so universally acknowledged, that men have expressed it in the form of a proverb, and say that a rich man is either an unrighteous man, or an unrighteous man's heir, "Dives aut iniquus, aut iniqui heres."²

Jesus sets before His disciples not only the example of the steward, but also that of worldly-minded men generally. He acknowledges that they make a wiser use of their substance, to gain their worldly ends, than His disciples do of their substance, to promote their eternal welfare.

He then shows the influence which the use or abuse of things temporal has with respect to things spiritual and eternal, and states the general principle, that he who has been faithful or unfaithful in that which is least, or in that which belongs to the body, and to this world, so he will be in that which is of higher moment, and belongs to the soul. He then applies this to the case of the Pharisees, and argues that because they had not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, in worldly goods, God had not entrusted them with the true riches; He had not employed them to impart His spiritual doctrine—that as they had not been faithful in that which was another man's, and for which they must therefore give an account, God would not give them that which was their own, or which was destined for them as a reward.

S. Matthew records verse 13 as uttered at a different time and in a different connection. He gives it in the Sermon on the Mount: see ch. vi. 24, page 140. Some have thought that S. Luke is the more correct in the place and in the connection which he has assigned to these words.³

S. Luke alone contains verses 14 and 15.

14. And the Pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided Him.

S.V. omīi also.

Vulg. Audiebant autem omnia hæc pharisæi.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xcv. p. 225.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xvi. 1; vol. ii. p. 273.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xvi. 1; vol. viii. p. 804.

² S. Jerome, Epist. cxx. (alias 150) ad Hedibian; vol. i. p. 984.

³ Maldonatus, in Luc. xvi. 13; vol. ii. p. 282.

¹ S. Ambrose, in Luc. xvi. 1; vol. ii. p. 1764.

S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. ii. 84; vol. iii. p. 1349.

V. Beke, in Luc. xvi. 1; vol. iii. p. 529.

Theophylact, in Luc. xvi. 1; vol. i. p. 412.

Euthymius, in Luc. xvi. 1; vol. iii. p. 347.

15. And He said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God.

The standard by which the Pharisees justified (δικαιοῦντες) themselves, or according to which they made themselves just, was wrong; for it was the judgment of men, not the judgment of God. It consisted therefore in external acts only, and not in the purification of the heart. For man sees but the outward act, God sees the heart; and that which in the opinion of men was highly esteemed, was often abominable in the sight of God. Jesus here states the general principle, and leaves the Pharisees to apply it to their own individual cases.

The following three verses were probably not uttered in this place or time, but in that which S. Matthew gives to them.¹

For verse 16 see S. Matthew, ch. xi. 13, page 201.

16. The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it.

S*. omits and every man presseth into it.
Vulg. et omnis in illud vim facit.

For verse 17 see S. Matthew, ch. v. 18, page 122.

17. And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.

For verse 18 see S. Matthew, ch. v., page 125.

18. Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery.

V. and he who marrieth.
Vulg. et qui dimissam a viro ducit.

S. Luke alone records the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, verses 19-31.

19. ¶ There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day:

20. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus,^a which was laid at his gate, full of sores,

S.V. And a certain beggar, named Lazarus, was laid.
Vulg. Et erat quidam mendiculus, nomine Lazarus, qui jacebat ad januam ejus ulceribus plenus.

21. And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover the dogs came and licked his sores.

S.V. with that which falleth.
Vulg. cupiens saturari de micis que cadebant de mensa divitis.

22. And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom:^b the rich man also died, and was buried;

23. And in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom.

S*. omits and.
Vulg. Mortuus est autem et dives, et sepultus est in inferno. Elevans autem oculos suos, cum esset in tormentis.

24. And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue;^c for I am tormented in this flame.

25. But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivest thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

S.V.A. But now here he is comforted.
Vulg. nunc autem hic consolatur.

26. And beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence.

27. Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house:

28. For I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment.

29. Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them.

S.V.A. But Abraham saith: S.V. omit unto him.
Vulg. Et ait illi Abraham.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xvi. 15; vol. viii. p. 808.

^a And cool my tongue.—"That the tongue of the damned in hell thirsts for water is also their conception. Talm. Jerus. in Chagigah. fol. 77, col. 4, is relating a story of a good man and a bad man that died. And the good man had no burial rites, but the bad man had. Afterward one in a vision saw the good man walking in gardens, and among pleasant fountains of waters; but the bad near a river, and his tongue reach after water, but could not reach it."—Ibid.

¹ Maldonatus, in Luc. xvi. 19; vol. ii. p. 284.

^a There was a certain beggar named Lazarus.—"Lazar is used constantly in the Jerusalem Talmud for Eleazar. The word signifies, 'God help me' or 'God is my help': a fit name under which to personate a beggar."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. lvi.; vol. i. p. 247.

^b Abraham's bosom is a phrase used by the Jews. "That day that Rabbi died, R. Ada ben Ahava said, 'This day he sits in Abraham's bosom' (Juchasin, fol. 77, col. 4)."—Ibid.

30. And he said, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent.

S. but if one rose from the dead and went unto them.
Vulg. sed si quis ex mortuis veritatis eos.

31. And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead.

Whether the narrative of the rich man and Lazarus is a history in real life, or a parable, is a subject that has been discussed from the earliest times. The ancient writers were divided in their opinion with respect to it. Some held that it was only a parable, and others that it was a history.¹ The latter contended that in no other acknowledged parable did our Saviour introduce the names of the persons whom He mentioned, and that therefore this was not a parable, but a real history of two well-known men, who had lived and died a short time before; that He mentioned the name of the one who was blessed, and not of the other, because he was condemned to eternal misery; that the early Christians in building churches in memory of this Lazarus, as well as in memory of Lazarus of Bethany, showed their belief that this Lazarus was a real person, and that he was a Jew, as is shown by his calling Abraham father. A tradition recorded by a writer in the twelfth century, and said to have been derived from the Jews, gives the name of this rich man as Nineus (Νινεύς).²

The most probable opinion³ appears to be, that this narrative is partly a history and partly a parable; that it is a history so far as it relates to this world, and a parable so far as it refers to the future world; that Jesus first relates the history of two men who had lived and died under the circumstances here recorded, one of whom had gone to a life of blessedness, and the other to one of misery. He then sets before them the blessedness of the one and the sufferings of the other in a form in which they could properly appreciate them. The only way to convey to men an adequate impression of the sufferings of wicked souls hereafter is through the body, and by the torture which the body can now endure. He therefore represents the rich man as clothed with a body, and cast into a flame of fire. The conversation of the rich man with Abraham, and his request that he would send Lazarus to relieve, even in the smallest degree, his sufferings, and his refusal, with the further request that he would send him to his father's house, is all part of the parable, and is intended to convey to men a knowledge of the life to come in the only way in which they could understand it.

The chief points that are brought out in the narrative are the extreme poverty and affliction of Lazarus in this world, and the luxurious self-indulgent habits of the rich man, with his utter disregard of the poor and afflicted, of whose condition he could not possibly plead ignorance—the end of the trial of each, and the different reward of it; the rich man lifting up his eyes in hell, being in torments, and Lazarus carried by angels into "Abraham's bosom," a place of rest and happiness,⁴ probably so called because Abraham was the father of the faithful, and because to him and to his seed the promises were made—the indescribable misery and broken spirit of the rich man, who begs that Lazarus, whom he had formerly neglected, might be sent to relieve his torture; Abraham's refusal on the ground that the condition of each in the present life had been fixed by their condition and by their behaviour in their former life, and of the unchangeable and unending nature of their present state—the rich man's further request that Lazarus, or some one from the dead, might be sent to warn his brethren, and Abraham's refusal on the ground that their life in this world was a trial of their belief in God's revealed word, and of their obedience to Him under certain conditions; that no change could be made in those conditions, and that their conduct would not be affected by it, even if any change could be allowed.

The rich man and Lazarus has been a most fertile subject for the eloquence of some of the most eminent among the Fathers.⁵

¹ The following among others regarded it as a history:—

S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, ii. 34 (alias 62), p. 834.

Clement Alex. (apparently), Pædag. ii. 10; vol. i. p. 521.

S. Chrysostom, in Epist. ii. ad Cor. Homil. vi. p. 80.

Euthymius, in Luc. xvi. 19; vol. iii. p. 559.

Tertullian, de Anima, vii.; vol. ii. p. 656.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xvi. 19; vol. ii. p. 1768.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evangel. Homil. xl. 1; vol. ii. p. 1302.

² Euthymius, in Luc. xvi. 20; vol. iii. p. 559.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlvii. p. 241.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xvi. 19; vol. ii. p. 284.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xvi. 9; vol. viii. pp. 808 and 812.

⁴ S. Ambrose, in Luc. xvi. 22; vol. ii. p. 1769.

S. Augustine, Confess. ix. 3; vol. i. p. 765.

— de Anima, iv. 16; vol. x. p. 538.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xlvii. p. 244.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xvi. 22; vol. ii. p. 287.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xvi. 22; vol. viii. p. 810.

⁵ S. Chrysostom, iv. Homilias de Lazaro.

S. Augustine, Serm. xiv. (alias de Tempore, 110); vol. v. p. 112.

— Serm. xli. (alias 11), in Ecclesiast. xxii. 28; vol. v. p. 248.

— Serm. cccxvii. (alias 25), in Luc. xvi. 19–31; vol. v. p. 1650.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evangel. Homil. xl.; vol. ii. p. 1302.

CHAPTER XVII.

[1. Christ teacheth to avoid occasions of offence. 3. One to forgive another. 6. The power of faith. 7. How we are bound to God, and not He to us. 11. He heareth the lepers. 22. Of the kingdom of God, and the coming of the Son of Man.]

[Vulg. Ut scandalizanti paribus; frater in me peccatus inculpandus est, sique peccanti ignoscendum: apostolus dicit fidei efficaciam: quodque dum amicus ipse precepta fuerint, et se credidit inuitari: deum leprosi mandantur, cuiusque Samaritanus erat ad agendis gratias recipere: dicit aduentum Filii Dei non creditum fore, sed illustrem, et inexpectato superuenturum, sicut dulcem mundo, et diaboli subversio superuenit.]

S. MATTHEW contains verses 1-6, not as uttered at one and the same time, but at different times, and in words slightly differing from those of S. Luke. For verses 1 and 2 see S. Matthew, ch. xviii., page 300.

1. Then said He unto the disciples, It is impossible but that offences will come: but woe unto him, through whom they come!

S.V.A. unto His disciples.
Vulg. ad discipulos suos.

2. It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones.

For verses 3 and 4 see S. Matthew, ch. xviii., page 304.

3. ¶ Take heed to yourselves: If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him.

S.V.A. omit against thee.
Vulg. Si peccaverit in te frater tuus.

4. And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him.

S.V. omit in a day: A. and if seven times in a day he shall turn (S.V. also he shall turn for turn).
Vulg. et septies in die conversus fuerit ad te.

For verses 5 and 6 see S. Matthew, ch. xvii., page 290.

5. And the Apostles said unto the Lord, Increase our faith.

6. And the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you.

S. unto the sycamine tree.
Vulg. dicetis huic arbori moro.

S. Luke alone contains verses 7-10.

7. But which of you, having a servant plowing or feeding cattle, will say unto him by and by, when he is come from the field, Go and sit down to meat?

8. And will not rather say unto him, Make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself, and serve me, till I have eaten and drunken; and afterward thou shalt eat and drink?

S. Make ready for me wherewith.
Vulg. Para quæ d. cenem.

9. Doth he thank that servant because he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not.

S.V.A. the servant: S*. omits that servant: S.V.A. omit him.
Vulg. Numquid gratiam habet servo illi, quia fecit quæ ei imperaverat?

10. So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do.

S*. omits all: A. all these things.
Vulg. cum feceritis omnia quæ præcepta sunt vobis.

Two very opposite explanations have been given of this parable, and also of its conclusion in verse 10. Some explain the parable as if the servant mentioned had not, according to his master's promise, or according to the terms of the agreement between his master and himself, established any claim or right to reward for his labour of "ploughing or feeding cattle," or for his service afterwards, on the ground that he was his master's servant (δοῦλος, mancipium), and therefore that all he could do belonged to his master of right, and that this explanation is, as they think, confirmed by the conclusion of the parable; that do in God's service whatever we can, little or much, we shall still be unprofitable servants, and that, as all are alike unprofitable servants, the rewards which He will distribute will be according to His own will, and not in proportion to the servant's labour in His service.

Others,¹ and apparently with a sounder judgment, say that the servant in the parable received wages for his labour in his master's service, but that as he did only what he was commanded, and nothing more than that, he did not receive thanks (χάρις) in addition to his wages.

Those who hold this explanation are careful to point out the distinction between what we owe to God because He created us and gave us all that we have, and what we owe to Him because He has commanded it. However zealous we are in His service, we cannot do more than we are bound to render to God as our Creator, but we may do more than He has commanded us. Jesus commanded the young man who inquired what he should do to inherit eternal life, to keep the commandments; but if he would do more and be perfect, He bade him sell all that he had and give to the poor, and he should have treasure in heaven, and come and follow Him. (S. Matthew xix. 16-22.) If he kept the commandments, he should enter into life; and if for Christ's sake he sold all that he had and gave to the poor, he should have an additional reward, a brighter crown. S. Paul was an instance of one who did more than was commanded him. The Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel (1 Cor. ix. 14); but in his zeal for God and for the success of the Gospel, he preferred to live by the labour of his own hands (1 Cor. ix. 14, &c.). S. Paul did that which was commanded, and he did more than that; he would therefore receive the reward promised to those who fulfil God's commands, and he would receive a reward for that which he did beyond what was commanded.

Nor is it difficult to see what Jesus means here by being "unprofitable servants" (δοῦλοι ἀχρεῖοι): for He does not always use the word in the same sense, neither does He call all men "unprofitable servants." In the parable of the talents He calls the servant who with five talents had gained other five, and the servant who with two talents had gained other two, "good and faithful servants" (εὖ, δοῦλε ἀγαθὲ καὶ πιστὲ); and the servant who had gained nothing, but had hid his lord's money, He calls an "unprofitable servant" (ἀχρεῖον δοῦλον). From this it is plain that he who does nothing that is commanded is an unprofitable servant, and that they who do all that is commanded but nothing more are also called "unprofitable servants," but in another sense; and that they who do all that is commanded, and who still have such zeal for their Master's service that they, like S. Paul, do more than is commanded, are "good and faithful servants."

The object of this parable is to teach His Apostles, and such as they were, to moderate the estimation which they may form of their own labours in the service of God, and to excite them to greater zeal.

S. Luke alone relates the healing of the ten lepers, verses 11-19.

11. ¶ And it came to pass, as He went to Jerusalem, that He passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee.

12. And as He entered into a certain village, there met Him ten men that were lepers, which stood afar off:

*S. omits which stood afar off.
Vulg. qui steterunt a longe.*

13. And they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us.

14. And when He saw them, He said unto them, Go shew yourselves unto the priests. And it came to pass, that, as they went, they were cleansed.

15. And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God,

16. And fell down on his face at His feet, giving Him thanks: and he was a Samaritan.

17. And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?

18. There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger.

19. And He said unto him, Arise, go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole.

*V. omits thy faith hath made thee whole.
Vulg. Surge, vade: quia fides tua te salvum fecit.*

That the event described in verses 12-19 took place in our Saviour's final journey from Galilee to Judæa, see S. Matthew, ch. xix., page 310.

The Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans. But a common calamity which excluded these men from the society of those who were not similarly afflicted had made the nine Jews and the one Samaritan companions. They seem to have agreed together to appeal to Jesus in a body to have mercy on them and heal them, in the belief that His compassion could scarcely withstand the united prayer of ten men.

Jesus sends them to the priest for several reasons, partly to prove their faith in His power, partly that the priests might themselves be witnesses of the reality of His miracle, and partly to test the gratitude of the ten lepers. The priest by the law was to examine and to declare whether a man was afflicted with the leprosy or not (Levit. xiv. 2). But Jesus did not send the lepers to the priest in order that he might heal them; neither did they go under the persuasion that the priest would heal them, but that Jesus would heal them, while the priest would declare them clean, and would restore them to their privileges among men. On their ready belief in His power,¹ as shown by their at once setting out to go to the priest, Jesus heals them. On their being healed, one of them turns back to give thanks to Jesus, as the author of his recovery to health, while the other nine go on to the priest. The nine Jews were probably so eager to regain their social rights among men by the priest's declaration that they were clean, or so anxious to observe to the very letter the law of Moses, that they forgot to return thanks to Jesus, the author of their blessing.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xcviii. p. 252. Maldonatus, in Luc. xvii. 7; vol. ii. p. 300.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xvii. 7; vol. viii. p. 818.

It may be that Jesus first healed the bodies only of the ten lepers; and that when the one Samaritan returned to give thanks, He healed the leprosy of his soul also, and that He implied this in the words, "Arise, go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole." To this it has been objected² that our Saviour did not heal any who had not faith in His power, with one notable exception, namely that of the high priest's servant (Luke xxii. 51), and that His usual custom was, when He healed the malady of the body, to heal that of the soul also. The nine lepers had faith in the power of Jesus to heal them, but they lacked the gratitude to give thanks to Him for it. The conduct of this one Samaritan and of these nine Jews foreshadowed that of the nations which they represented: for the Gentiles as a rule acknowledged Jesus the Son of Mary as their God and Saviour, while the Jews failed to recognize in Him the promised Messiah, and clung more tenaciously than ever before to the empty letter of their Law.

Some³ maintain that the numbers ten and one here indicate no further mystery than that, as ten implies a multitude and one the smallest portion of it, these show that many are called, but few are chosen; that many receive blessings from God, and that very few are grateful for them. Others⁴ think that a deeper mystery lies hidden both under the numbers in the narrative of the ten lepers, and also in other parts of it.

S. Luke alone records this question of the Pharisees, verses 20 and 21.

20. ¶ And when He was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, He answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observathere! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you.

Margin, among you.
S.V. Lo here, or there.
Vulg. Ecce hic, aut ecce illic.

It is probable that the Pharisees asked the question when the kingdom of God should come, not with a desire to learn, but in derision, in a spirit of disbelief and ridicule. John the Baptist had said that the kingdom of heaven was at hand. Jesus Himself had frequently declared that the kingdom of heaven was come. These Pharisees could see no signs of this kingdom, and, in derision and in unbelief, they asked Jesus when the kingdom of heaven should come.

As recorded by S. Luke, Jesus first answers the question briefly, and in reply to the Pharisees, and then more in detail to the disciples. His answer to the disciples S. Matthew records as delivered, in substance and in almost the same words, to His disciples privately, and but a few days before His Passion (Matt. xxiv. 3, &c.). It has hence been concluded, either that Jesus delivered this twice, or, what is more probable, that S. Luke has anticipated the order in which these words were spoken, with the view of giving a more complete answer to the inquiry of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come.⁵

In reply to the Pharisees He says that "the kingdom of God cometh not with observation" (μετὰ παρατηρήσεως), not with outward show, like the kingdoms of this world, and that "the kingdom of God is within you" (ἐντός ὑμῶν).

When men believe that Jesus the Son of Mary is the Christ, God manifest in the flesh, and obey His precepts, His kingdom is set up in their hearts. Already there were many who believed in Him, with a more or less perfect faith. The kingdom of God was therefore already begun, but it did not consist in an earthly throne or in earthly possessions, but in men's belief that Jesus the Son of Mary was God, and in submission to His commands. The kingdom of God was in this sense, therefore, "within them."⁶

Other meanings⁷ have been given to the words rendered "within you" (ἐντός ὑμῶν), such as "within your power." The kingdom of God is set up on earth, it is perfected and glorified in heaven. So long as the kingdom of God is on earth, it is militant against the kingdom of Satan; after the resurrection, it will be triumphant and glorified in heaven. Those only who are in the kingdom militant on earth will be in the kingdom triumphant in heaven. It is therefore in their own power—that is, by faith in Jesus the Son of Mary, and by obedience to His commands—to become members of

V. Bede, in Luc. xvii. 11, &c.; vol. iii. p. 543.

⁵ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xviii. p. 253.

⁶ S. Hilary, in Psalm ii.; vol. i. p. 287.

S. Basil, Epist. viii. 12, ad Cæsarienses; vol. iv. p. 266.

⁷ Theophylact, in Luc. xvii. 21; vol. i. p. 428.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xvii. 21; vol. ii. p. 311.

¹ Theophylact, in Luc. xvii. 14; vol. i. p. 426.

Euthymius, in Luc. xvii. 14; vol. iii. p. 573.

² Maltonatus, in Luc. xvii. 19; vol. ii. p. 308.

³ Maldonatus, in Luc. xvii. 12; vol. ii. p. 306.

⁴ S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. ii. 40; vol. iii. p. 1354.

S. Gregory Magnus, Moral. v. 10 (alias 11); vol. i. p.

His kingdom militant here, and of His kingdom triumphant hereafter.

The words ἐν τῷ ἐμῷ have also been rendered "in the midst of you."¹ Jesus, God Incarnate, the King of the kingdom, was in the midst of them, calling men by repentance and faith in Him to enter into the kingdom of God. The King of the kingdom is in the midst of them, though the Pharisees discern Him not.

22. And He said unto the disciples, The days will come, when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man, and ye shall not see it.

A. unto His disciples.
Vulg. Et ait ad discipulos suos.

Great as had been the bitterness and the malice with which the Jews had persecuted Jesus and His disciples, He foretells that greater still awaited them after His departure. The fury with which the Jews and others should persecute the disciples of Jesus, after His Ascension and before His second coming, should be so intense that they would long for one of the days of the Son of Man—that is, one of the days when He was visibly present among them to comfort and strengthen them.² For the persecution which they endured when He was present with them, during the three years of His ministry among them, should be light compared with that which they should suffer after His Ascension; and He forewarns them of this in order that they might prepare their hearts beforehand.

For verses 23 and 24 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 384.

23. And they shall say to you, See here; or, see there: go not after them, nor follow them.

S.V. See there and (V. or) see here: V. omits go not after them: V. do not follow them.
Vulg. Ecce hic, et ecce illic. Nolite ire, neque sectemini.

24. For as the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven; so shall also the Son of Man be in His day.

S.V.A. omits also: V. omits in His day.
Vulg. ita erit Filius hominis in die sua.

25. But first must He suffer many things, and be rejected of this generation.

For verses 26–30 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 392.

26. And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man.

27. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all.

S. and took them all away.
Vulg. et venit diluvium, et perdidit omnes.

28. Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded;

S.V. omits also.
Vulg. Similiter sicut factum est.

29. But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all.

A. brimstone and fire.
Vulg. pluit ignem et sulphur de celo.

30. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed.

For verse 31 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 381.

31. In that day, he which shall be upon the housetop, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away: and he that is in the field, let him likewise not return back.

S. and his stuff in his house.
Vulg. et vasa ejus in domo.

S. Luke alone contains verse 32.

32. Remember Lot's wife.

33. Whosoever shall seek to save his life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life shall preserve it.

He reminds His disciples of the momentous issue of their trial, and of the punishment which is sure to follow if they forsake Him, whether influenced by a love of earthly pleasure, or by fear of losing even life itself. In order to deter them from the first, He cites the well-known instance of Lot's wife recorded in the Old Testament (Gen. xix. 26); and from the second, He declares that he who shall save himself from death in the time of persecution, by betraying his faith in Jesus, shall lose the life eternal, and that he who shall give up his

¹ Euthymius, in Luc. xvii. 21; vol. iii. p. 575.
² S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xvii. 22; vol. v. p. 841.
Theophylact, in Luc. xvii. 22; vol. i. p. 428.
Euthymius, in Luc. xvii. 22; vol. iii. p. 577.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxiii. p. 394.
Maldonatus, in Luc. xvii. 22; vol. ii. p. 312.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xvii. 22; vol. viii. p. 822.

life in the service of God or in defence of his faith in Christ shall inherit eternal life.¹

For verses 34 and 35 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 392.

34. I tell you, in that night there shall be two men in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other shall be left.

35. Two women shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

36. Two men shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

S.V.A. omit this verse.

Vulg. Duo in agro; unus assumetur, et alter relinquetur.

For verse 37 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 384.

37. And they answered and said unto Him, Where, Lord? And He said unto them, Where-soever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together.

S.V. thither also will.

Vulg. Ubicumque fuerit corpus, illuc congregabuntur et aquile.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xvii. 33; vol. v. p. 845.
Theophylact, in Luc. xvii. 33; vol. i. p. 430.

Euthymius, in Luc. xvii. 33; vol. iii. p. 579.

S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. ii. 43; vol. iii. p. 1357.

CHAPTER XVIII.

[3. Of the importunate widow. 9. Of the Pharisee and the publican. 15. Children brought to Christ. 18. A ruler that would follow Christ, but is hindered by his riches. 28. The reward of them that leave all for His sake. 31. He foretelleth His death, 35. and restoreth a blind man to his sight.]

[Vulg. Per parabolum de iudice iniquitatis et vidua importuna docet semper orandum; per parabolum vero de phariseo et publicano, quomodo sit orandum: pueros a se repellit: dicitur qui a iuventute omnia se servasse precepta dicebat, audita Christi consilio de omnibus relinquendis abiit tristis: et quid erit premii omnia propter Christum relinquentibus: pradicat suam passionem, et prope Iericho circum illuminat.]

S. LUKE alone records the parable of the importunate widow, verses 1-8.

1. And He spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint;

S.V.A. that they ought always.

Vulg. quoniam oportet semper orare et non deficere.

2. Saying, There was in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man:

Margin, in a certain city.

Vulg. in quadam civitate.

3. And there was a widow in that city; and she came unto him, saying, Avenge me of mine adversary.

4. And he would not for a while: but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man;

5. Yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me.

6. And the Lord said, Hear what the unjust judge saith.

7. And shall not God avenge His own elect, which cry day and night unto Him, though He bear long with them?

8. I tell you that He will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless when the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?

At the end of the last chapter Jesus had forewarned His disciples of the persecution and afflictions which awaited them. Here He gives the remedy which they are to use in all their troubles. It has been pointed out that the words "always to pray, and not to faint," describe not so much the times at which, as the spirit in which, men ought to pray. In all their troubles they are to pray to God, and in all their prayers they are not to faint, but to persevere until they succeed.

A widow is selected in this parable probably because she is of all beings confessedly the least able to see herself righted in a lawsuit, and because she is the most likely to draw out the feeling of pity from a righteous, compassionate judge, and of disregard and contempt from a wicked judge.

Some¹ have translated the words ὡς μὴ εἰς τέλος ἐρχομένη ἡνωπάγη με, "lest coming at last she give me a blow;" and suppose that there is here an allusion to a custom common among many nations, of removing their judges after a time. After they had lost their office, these judges were often accused before their successor of mal-administration in their office, and punished. Though this judge feared not God, nor regarded man, yet he had some thought for his own interest; and, besides the weariness which she then caused him, he was afraid lest, if he persisted in refusing to vindicate the cause of this injured woman, she should in the end find means to inflict punishment on him for it.

The reasoning in the parable² is to this effect, from the minor to the major. If this wicked judge, influenced by motives so low and bad, could be induced by her importunity to vindicate the cause of this helpless widow, how much more will God, who is all righteous and full of compassion, listen to the continued prayer of the afflicted for help. If this judge, who hated the widow because she preferred her petition to him, was at length overcome by her assiduity and granted her request, how much rather will God grant the earnest supplication of those whom He has encouraged to pray to Him.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxiv. p. 411.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xviii. 5; vol. ii. p. 315.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xviii. 5; vol. viii. p. 825.

² S. Cyril Alex., in Luc. xviii. 7; vol. v. p. 850.

S. Augustine, Serm. cxv. (alias de verbis Dom. 36); vol. v. p. 655.

Quæst. Evang. ii. 45; vol. iii. p. 1358.

Jesus then points to the cause why men are not delivered out of their troubles; namely, their own want of faith. It depends on men themselves whether or not they are delivered out of their troubles, and not on God, who is always ready to answer the earnest prayer of His servants. Men are not delivered from their troubles now because of their want of faith; and He intimates that such will also be the case when the Son of Man comes. When the Son of Man comes, He will find few to deliver, because few will be living by faith in Him. This statement is put in the form of a question, not because it implies doubt or uncertainty, but because a question is in this case, as in many others, the strongest form of assertion.¹

S. Luke alone records the parable of the Pharisee and publican, verses 9-14.

9. And He spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others:

Margm., as being righteous.
Vulg. tanquam iusti.

10. Two men went up into the Temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican.

11. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank Thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican.

S. omits with himself.
Vulg. Phariseus stans, hac apud se orabat.

12. I fast twice in the week,^a I give tithes of all that I possess.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xviii. 8; vol. v. p. 853.
Theophylact, in Luc. xviii. 8; vol. i. p. 432.
Euthymius, in Luc. xviii. 8; vol. iii. p. 385.
V. Bede, in Luc. xviii. 8; vol. iii. p. 551.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxiv. p. 412.

^a I fast twice in the week.

¹ There were Fasts of the congregation, and Fasts of this or that single person, and both principally upon the account of afflictions or straits. (Alaimonides, Tannith, cap. 2.)

² The Fasts appointed by the congregation, by reason of general calamities, are not from day to day, because there are few that could hold out in such a Fast, but on the second and fifth days of the week. (Ibid.) On those days they assembled in their Synagogues to public prayers.

³ III. It was very usual for the single person to devote himself to stated and repeated Fasts, for religion's sake, even when there was no affliction or calamity of life to urge him to it. And those that did so, chose to themselves those very days which the congregation was wont to do, viz. the second and the fifth days of the week. (Tannith, fol. 12, 13).—LIGHTFOOT on Luke xviii. 12; vol. ii. p. 463.

^b And the publican, standing afar off.

¹ That the Israelites, when they went into the Temple to put up their own private prayers, went beyond the outward Court, or Court of the Gentiles, into the Court of the Women, this among other things makes it evident, viz. that in that Court were placed thirteen eleemosynary chests, into which they threw in their

13. And the publican, standing afar off,^b would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

S.V. But the publican: S. omits God.
Vulg. Et publicanus . . . dicens: Deus propitius esto mihi peccatori.

14. I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

In the last parable Jesus taught the necessity of perseverance in prayer, and intimates that faith was the foundation on which perseverance in prayer was built. In this parable He shows the necessity of humility in prayer.

Both the Pharisee and the publican stood and prayed. But no particular meaning is implied in the posture of standing; for the Jews, like the Christians, prayed indifferently, either kneeling or standing. It has been said there were not more than two seats in the Temple, one for the high priest and the other for the king.²

The difference between the Pharisee and the publican consisted in the life which they had hitherto led, in the feelings with which they are now actuated in their prayer to God, and in the issue of their prayer.

1. The Pharisee had lived in greater strictness than was required of him by the law of Moses. He had fasted twice or two days in the week, probably, on the second and fifth days.³ He had given alms, not merely of what the law required, such as the fruits of the earth, &c., but of all which he possessed. The habits which he mentions proved the Maldonatus, in Luc. xviii. 8; vol. ii. p. 316.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xviii. 8; vol. viii. p. 826.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xviii. 11; vol. viii. p. 827.

³ Theophylact, in Luc. xviii. 12; vol. i. p. 434.

voluntary oblations; which was done by the widow with her two mites in that place.

"II. It is a question whether any person, for his private praying, might come so far as the Gate of Nicnor, or the Court of Israel; much less into the Court of the Priests, unless the priests allow. We read of our Saviour's being in the Court of the Gentiles, viz. in Solomon's Porch; and that He was in the Treasury, or the Court of the Women: but you will hardly find Him at any time in the Court of Israel. And the negative upon their entrance into that Court is confirmed, at least if that rule avail anything which we meet with in Hieros. Beracoth (fol. 8, 4). R. Joshua ben Levi saith, 'He that stands to pray, it is necessary that he first sit down, because it is said, Blessed are they that sit in Thy house.' Now it was lawful for no person to sit down in that Court, but the king only.

"III. That therefore this publican stood so much further off while he prayed than the Pharisee, was probably more from his humility than any necessity that lay upon him so to do. For though the heathen and publican go together in these words of our Saviour, 'Let him be unto thee as an heathen and publican,' yet it is a question whether the publicans, if they were Jews, were banded to the outward Court only, as the heathens were."—LIGHTFOOT on Luke xviii. 13; vol. ii. p. 464.

truth of his claim to the virtues of chastity and freedom from covetousness: for nothing conduces to chastity like fasting, or to freedom from avarice like the giving of a tenth to God. The publicans were a class of men notorious for their grasping rapacity and their unrighteous exactions of the poor; and this publican was probably no better than the rest of his class, and he confesses as much in his prayer to God, not merely that he had sinned, but that he was an habitual sinner, ῥῆ ἁμαρτωλῶς.

2. The Pharisee stood boldly and prayed. He makes no confession of sins, asks for no pardon for the past, or grace for the future. He defends himself, and proves his own position before God. He enumerates the vices of which he had not been guilty, and the virtues which he practised. He divides mankind into two classes, himself and the rest. Not satisfied with vilifying human nature in general, he singles out the case of this publican, not as having any particular acquaintance with him, but as one of a class who were notorious sinners. Every word betokens his pride and self-esteem. The publican, on the other hand, shows his sense of his own unworthiness of the presence of God, by standing as far off from the place of His acknowledged Presence as possible. He stood afar off, μακρόθεν ἑστὼς, that is, from the Altar, or from the Holy place, among the last of the crowd that was there assembled, as in his own eyes the most unworthy of them all. He is overwhelmed with the enormity of his sins, and utters not a word of his own merits, or of the failings of others.

The Pharisee and the publican, though standing apart, were probably still near enough for the Pharisee to point out "this publican," and for the publican to overhear what the Pharisee said of him. But in his humility and self-abasement, the publican did not resent the Pharisee's disparaging allusion to himself, but accepted it as only a too faithful description.

3. The verdict which the Judge of all the earth delivered was, "I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other." The strict literal meaning¹ of these words is not that the publican was justified and the Pharisee condemned, though this may be a fair inference. But the literal meaning is, that the publican was justified in comparison with the Pharisee. The publican had gone up to the Temple more unjust than the Pharisee, in consequence of his former life having been more iniquitous; but in consequence of his humility and self-abasement, he went down to his house more righteous in the eyes of God than the Pharisee. The publican's former sins were forgiven through his present penitence and humility; and the Pharisee's virtues and devotional practices are vitiated through his pride and self-exaltation.²

For verses 15-17 see S. Matthew, ch. xix., page 315.

15. And they brought unto Him also infants,^a that He would touch them; but when His disciples saw it, they rebuked them.

16. But Jesus called them unto Him, and said, Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.

17. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein.

For verses 18-23 see S. Matthew, ch. xix., page 316.

18. And a certain ruler asked Him, saying, Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

19. And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou Me good? none is good, save one, that is, God.

20. Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Honour thy father and thy mother.

V.A. and mother.

Vulg. Honora patrem tuum et matrem.

21. And he said, All these have I kept from my youth up.

22. Now when Jesus heard these things, He said unto him, Yet lackest thou one thing: sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow Me.

S.V. Now when Jesus heard: S*. Thou lackest one thing (omit Yet).

Vulg. Quo audito, Iesus ait ei: Adhuc unum tibi deest.

23. And when he heard this, he was very sorrowful: for he was very rich.

S. when he heard all these things.

Vulg. His ille auditis, contristatus est.

For verses 24-30 see S. Matthew, ch. xix., page 318.

24. And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, He said, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

S.V. And when Jesus saw him (omit that he was very sorrowful): V. How hardly do they that have riches enter.

Vulg. Videns autem Iesus illum tristem factum, dixit: Quam difficile, qui pecunias habent, in regnum Dei intrabunt!

¹ Maldonatus, in Luc. xviii. 14; vol. ii. p. 320.

² For this parable see also—

S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xviii. 10, &c.; vol. v. p. 853.

Euthymius, in Luc. xviii. 10, &c.; vol. iii. p. 585.

S. Augustine, Sermo de verbis Domini, 36; vol. v. p. 656.

S. Gregory Magnus, Moral. xxiii. 6 (alias 7); vol. ii. p. 259.

V. Bede, in Luc. xviii. 10, &c.; vol. iii. p. 552.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xcix. p. 253.

* Infants.—See note on Luke vii. 5, page 618.

25. For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26. And they that heard it said, Who then can be saved?

27. And He said, The things which are impossible with men are possible with God.

28. Then Peter said, Lo, we have left all, and followed Thee.

29. And He said unto them, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake,

S. V. house, or wife, or brethren, or parents, or children.

Vulg. qui reliquit domum, aut fratres, aut uxorem, aut filios.

30. Who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting.

For verses 31-34 see S. Matthew, ch. xx., page 326.

31. ¶ Then He took unto Him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of Man shall be accomplished.

32. For He shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on:

33. And they shall scourge Him, and put Him to death: and the third day He shall rise again.

34. And they understood none of these things: and this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken.

For verses 35-43 see S. Matthew, ch. xx., page 329.

35. ¶ And it came to pass, that as He was come nigh unto Jericho, a certain blind man sat by the way side begging:

36. And hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant.

37. And they told him, that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.

S. V. over him.

Vulg. Dixit autem ei.

38. And he cried, saying, Jesus, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

A. over Jesus.

Vulg. dicens: Jesu fili David, miserere mei.

39. And they which went before rebuked him, that he should hold his peace: but he cried so much the more, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

A. which went by: S. Jesus, Thou Son of David.

Vulg. Et qui præibant, increpabant eum . . . clamabat: Fili David, miserere mei.

40. And Jesus stood, and commanded him to be brought unto Him: and when he was come near, He asked him,

A. And He stood.

Vulg. Mansit autem Jesus.

41. Saying, What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee? And he said, Lord, that I may receive my sight.

S. V. over saying.

Vulg. Dicens: quid tibi vis faciam?

42. And Jesus said unto him, Receive thy sight: thy faith hath saved thee.

43. And immediately he received his sight, and followed Him, glorifying God: and all the people, when they saw it, gave praise unto God.

CHAPTER XIX.

[1. Of Zacchæus a publican. 11. The ten pieces of money. 24. Christ riseth into Jerusalem with triumph: 41. weepeth over it: 45. driveth the buyers and sellers out of the Temple: 47. teaching daily in it. The rulers would have destroyed him, but for fear of the people.]

[Vulg. Ad Zachæum plurimis murmurantibus divertit: parabolam refert de homine nobili, qui alienis ad regnum accipiendum tradidit decem servis decem annos, quem ciues super se regnare volebant: super pullum asine intrans cum honore Ierosolymam, post super illum, pradicatque evertendam, et ingressus in Templum ejicit ementes ac vendentes.]

S. LUKE alone relates the conversion of Zacchæus, verses 1-10.

1. And Jesus entered and passed through Jericho.

2. And, behold, there was a man named Zacchæus, which was the chief among the publicans,^a and he was rich.

^a and was rich.
Vulg. et ipse dives.

3. And he sought to see Jesus who He was; and could not for the press, because he was little of stature.

4. And he ran before, and climbed up into a sycomore tree to see Him: for He was to pass that way.

5. And when Jesus came to the place, He looked up, and saw him, and said unto him, Zacchæus, make haste, and come down; for to-day I must abide at thy house.

S.V. omit and saw him.
Vulg. auspiciens Iesus vidit illum.

6. And he made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully.

7. And when they saw it, they all murmured, saying, That He was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner.

8. And Zacchæus stood, and said unto the Lord; Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken any thing from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold.

9. And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house, forsomuch as he also is a son of Abraham.^b

^a in this house.
Vulg. Quia hodie salus domui huic facta est.

10. For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.

Jesus was now on His way to Jerusalem to be crucified, as is plain from S. Mark's account of this journey (Mark x. 32).

* Chief among the publicans (Ἀρχιτελώνης).—"A few things concerning the degree of publicans.

"I. The Lexicographer tells us, that they called those the greater publicans, who redeemed at a certain fixed price the tax and other revenues of the Romans. These were commonly called the Decarii.

"II. There were publicans (to omit those who collected the taxes in every town) who stood at gates and bridges, requiring tribute of all passengers, concerning whom we meet with something in Schabb (fol. 78), where there is also mention of the greater and lesser publican. . . .

"Now, as to what order or degree amongst the publicans our Zacchæus held, it is neither easy nor tanti to determine it. The title of Ἀρχιτελώνης, chief among the publicans, will hardly bear it, that he was one of those that received toll or custom at bridges, though even among those there were who had the title of the greater publicans."—LIGHTFOOT on Luke xix. 2; vol. ii. p. 466.

^b Forso much as he also is a son of Abraham (καθὼς καὶ αὐτὸς υἱὸς Ἀβραάμ ἐστιν).—"That is, say most, the son of Abraham by faith; which, indeed, is most true. But I doubt, however, that this is not directly the sense of these words. For I question whether the Jews knew of any kind of relation to Abraham but that which was according to the flesh, and by way of stock and offspring. The son of Abraham by faith was a notion unknown; and I scarce believe our Saviour would speak to them in an unintelligible dialect. To which we may add, that if it had been said αὐτὸς υἱὸς Ἀβραάμ ἐγένετο (as it is ἐγένετο in the former clause), we might the easier have inclined to that sense, and applied it to his conversion, by which he was made a son of Abraham by faith. It would argue that his relation to Abraham was changed, and become other than what it was before, so as ἐγένετο in the former clause argued the condition of the house altered. But whereas it is said, υἱὸς Ἀβραάμ ἐστιν, he is, and not he is made, a son of Abraham, I would take it in the same sense with that, ch. xiii. 16, 'this woman being a daughter of Abraham;' that is, in the literal sense of it: as if He should say, Although you murmur, having this chief publican in so much contempt and indignation, as if he was an accursed thing; yet he is of the seed of Abraham as well as you yourselves. He is not a heathen publican, but an Israelite: and seeing the Son of Man cometh to seek and to save that which is lost, especially the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Salvation is come to his house this day, for he also is a son of Abraham."—LIGHTFOOT on Luke xix. 9; vol. ii. p. 467.

The Evangelist describes Zacchæus by his name, his office, and his riches. The publicans generally were men who acquired wealth, and he who had obtained the right to be called "the chief among the publicans" must have been unusually rich: for at times he might be called upon to pay large sums in advance, or to make good the deficiencies of his subordinates in office. His riches are especially mentioned to show the greatness of the sacrifice that he made when he gave up his worldly goods.

Some¹ have held that Zacchæus was a Gentile, and that this was the reason why they all murmured when Jesus went to be his guest and why they called him a sinner, ἀμαρτωλός. In support of this opinion it has been said that, when Zacchæus announces his intention to part with his goods and to lead a life of righteousness, he makes no mention of any requirements of the law, such as tithes or fasts, but simply of alms to the poor and restitution of the wrong of which he had been guilty, like Cornelius the centurion, and as any other Gentile would have done. It has also been said that the expression "forasmuch as he also is a son of Abraham," is so far from disproving that Zacchæus was a Gentile, that it rather increases the probability of it, as implying that, though he was not a son of Abraham by descent, he was by his faith.

Another² and a more probable opinion is, that Zacchæus was a Jew, and that the people murmured when Jesus went to be his guest, and called him a sinner because he was a publican, as the term "sinner" was indifferently used for either a Gentile or a publican. What lends weight to this is that his name Zacchæus is Jewish, and means pure; that Jesus preached only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Nor is it probable, judging from His acts, that He would cast so great a stumbling-block in the way of the Jews believing in Him as the Messiah as to go and be the guest of a Gentile. Among all the charges which the Jews brought against Him they never alleged this, and for the reason, we may presume, that they were unable to do so. The will was not wanting.

Whatever difference of opinion may have existed among the ancient writers as to whether Zacchæus was a Jew or a Gentile, little or none existed as to the meaning of his words, "Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor," &c. These words³ have been generally understood as referring to the future, not to the past, and imply that he has now resolved to part with his goods; to devote one-half to the poor, and with the other half to make restitution for that which he had acquired by wrongful exaction,—a restitution in a fourfold proportion. Standing without any introduction or connection, his words have a somewhat abrupt sound. The probability is, that Zacchæus uttered them in reply to some words of counsel and exhortation of Jesus, such as He addressed to the rich young man (xviii. 22), to go and sell all that he had and distribute unto the poor, and follow Him, which S. Luke has not recorded.

Zacchæus had probably been attracted to Jesus by the report he had heard of His miracles; and he became eager to see the Man who had the power to open the eyes of the blind, and the goodness to care for the poor. His eagerness is shown by the exertion and inconvenience to which he put himself to see Jesus. But to have Him as his guest was an honour on which he had not calculated. When once brought into contact with the Son of Man, Zacchæus puts forth qualities either totally concealed before or but very imperfectly exercised, and he attains a perfection which the rich young man, a character once far more promising than Zacchæus, failed to reach. The former had kept all the commandments from his youth up; but when exhorted by Jesus to go on to perfection, and to sell all that he had and give to the poor, and to lay up treasure in heaven, he shrunk from it. It was not so with Zacchæus. Formerly the commandments had been more than he could keep, but now, after Jesus, the Word made flesh, had become his guest, he could accomplish far more than the commandments required.

Though the Evangelist has not related that Zacchæus, like S. Matthew, left his office and followed Jesus, this is the natural conclusion, and was a very common opinion. We can hardly believe that he who cared so much for Jesus, and so little for his goods as to part with all that he had, would continue to fill the publican's office. No further mention is made of Zacchæus in the Gospels, and but little is said of him in the ecclesiastical traditions of the Primitive Church that have come down to us. In a work⁴ commonly attributed to a contemporary of the Apostles, and held by critics to have been written not later than the end of the second or the beginning of the third century, a tradition is recorded that after the Ascension Zacchæus became a companion

¹ Tertullian, iv. adv. Marcion, 37; vol. ii. p. 451.

S. Cyprian, de Opere et Eleemosynis, viii. p. 608.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xix. 2, &c.; vol. ii. p. 1792.

V. Bede, in Luc. xix. 2, &c.; vol. iii. p. 561.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xix. 7; vol. ii. p. 323.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxi. p. 298.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xix. 7; vol. viii. p. 833.

³ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iv. 12 (alias 26); p. 1006.

S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xix. 8; vol. v. p. 867.

Theophylact, in Luc. xix. 8; vol. i. p. 442.

Euthymius, in Luc. xix. 8; vol. iii. p. 595.

Tertullian, iv. adv. Marcion, 37; vol. ii. p. 451.

S. Ambrose, in Luc. xix. 8; vol. ii. p. 1792.

S. Fulgentius, Epist. ad Gallam, cap. 17; p. 321.

V. Bede, in Luc. xix. 8; vol. iii. p. 561.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxi. p. 298.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xix. 8; vol. ii. p. 324.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xix. 8; vol. viii. p. 833.

⁴ S. Clementis Romani Recognitiones, lib. i. 72, p. 38; iii. 66, p. 110.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xix. 9; vol. viii. p. 834.

of S. Peter, and was appointed Bishop of Cæsarea in Palestine.

Some¹ of the ancient writers took great pains to point out the symbolical points in the conversion of Zaccheus.

For the parable of the pounds, see also S. Matthew, ch. xxv., page 398.

11. And as they heard these things, He added and spake a parable, because He was nigh to Jerusalem, and because they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear.

12. He said therefore, A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return.

13. And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, Occupy till I come.^a

14. But his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us.

15. And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading.

S.V. how much they had gained.
Vulg. quantum quisque negotiatus esset.

16. Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds.

17. And he said unto him, Well, thou good servant: because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities.

18. And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds.

19. And he said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities.

20. And another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin:

21. For I feared thee, because thou art an austere man: thou takest up that thou laydest not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow.

22. And he saith unto him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant. Thou knewest that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow:

S.V. omit And.
Vulg. Dico autem vobis . . . et quod habet auferetur ab eo.

23. Wherefore then gavest not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with usury?

24. And he said unto them that stood by, Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds.

25. (And they said unto him, Lord, he hath ten pounds.)

26. For I say unto you, That unto every one which hath shall be given; and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him.

S.V. omit For: S*. omits unto you: S*.V. omit from him.
Vulg. Dico autem vobis . . . et quod habet auferetur ab eo.

27. But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.

The parable contains an outline of the economy of the Incarnation.

The nobleman is Jesus the Son of Mary, a Man but not an ordinary man. He was the Word made flesh, born of the Virgin Mary, but conceived by the Holy Ghost. His journey into a far country to receive for Himself a kingdom, and to return, includes all the time between His Ascension and His coming again at the Day of Judgment.

This parable has a special reference to His disciples, and was delivered to correct an erroneous impression which they had formed. They were now near Jerusalem, and they had gathered from various intimations that something unusual was about to take place, and they concluded that He was going to receive the kingdom of which He had so often spoken to them, and that those who had laboured in His service should now receive the reward of their labour. He therefore teaches them that before He received a kingdom, or at least His kingdom in glory, He must first depart from them, and for a long time, and that they should not receive the reward of their labour until His return; that the reward He should give them would not be the same to all; and that, though it would exceed the value of their labour, it would be to each in strict proportion to the amount of his labour.

As applied to the Apostles and others to whom He delivered the parable, the pound which He distributes to

¹ S. Ambrose and V. Bede, ut supra.

S. Augustine, Sermo clixiv (alias de verbis Apostol. 8); vol. v. p. 942.

^a Till I come.—We prefer, 'while I am on my way' (ἐως ἐρχομαι), for this is the Greek, and not ἐως ἀν ἔλθω.—The 'Church Quarterly Review,' April 1876, p. 130.

S. Gregory Magnus, Moral. xxvii. 46 (alias 26); vol. ii. p. 445.

each of His ten servants expresses the spiritual gifts which they received; and they traded with these and gained other pounds when they used these gifts to persuade men to believe in Jesus and to enter His kingdom. As applied to Christians in general, the pound may mean any Christian grace, especially such as will influence others for their good.

The reward which will be given to the most diligent in his Master's service is represented as so great as to excite the admiration and surprise of the bystanders. They reply, "Lord, he hath ten pounds," or he hath sufficient already.

His enemies who refused to obey Him were the Jews; and though His words, "But those Mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before Me," may have their perfect fulfilment at the Day of Judgment, many think they contain a prophetic allusion to the punishment of the Jewish nation by the Romans under Titus.¹

For verses 28-34 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 336.

28. ¶ And when He had thus spoken, He went before, ascending up to Jerusalem.

29. And it came to pass, when He was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount called the mount of Olives, He sent two of His disciples,

S.V. two of the disciples.
Vulg. misit duos discipulos suos.

30. Saying, Go ye into the village over against you; in the which at your entering ye shall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man sat: loose him, and bring him hither.

31. And if any man ask you, Why do ye loose him? thus shall ye say unto him, Because the Lord hath need of him.

S.V. omit unto him.
Vulg. sic dicetis ei.

32. And they that were sent went their way, and found even as He had said unto them.

33. And as they were loosing the colt, the owners thereof said unto them, Why loose ye the colt?

34. And they said, The Lord hath need of him.

For verses 35-40 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 339.

35. And they brought him to Jesus: and they cast their garments upon the colt, and they set Jesus thereon.

36. And as He went, they spread their clothes in the way.

37. And when He was come nigh, even now at the descent of the mount of Olives, the whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice for all the mighty works that they had seen;

38. Saying, Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord: peace in heaven, and glory in the highest.

S.V. Blessed be the King in the name: V. Blessed be He who cometh King in the name.
Vulg. Benedictus qui venit rex in nomine Domini.

39. And some of the Pharisees from among the multitude said unto Him, Master, rebuke Thy disciples.

40. And He answered and said unto them, I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out.

S.V. omit unto them.
Vulg. Quibus ipse ait.

S. Luke alone describes Jesus weeping over Jerusalem, verses 41-44.

41. ¶ And when He was come near, He beheld the city, and wept over it,

42. Saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes.

S.V. even thou in this day the things which belong unto peace: A. in this day.
Vulg. Si cognovisses et tu, et quidem in hac die tua, quas ad pacem tibi!

43. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side,

44. And shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation.

Jesus wept over Jerusalem at the very time when the city itself was filled with rejoicing. The city resounded with rejoicing, and with rejoicing at His presence among them, but He beheld the city and wept over it in sorrow. The calamities which He foresaw hanging over the city, their ignorance of this, and their rejection of Him who would have brought peace to them, drew tears from His eyes,

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xix. 27; vol. v. p. 876.

Theophylact, in Luc. xix. 27; vol. i. p. 447.

Euthymius, in Luc. xix. 27; vol. iii. p. 605.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xvii. p. 302.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xix. 27; vol. viii. p. 837.

For this parable see also—

S. Augustine, Quæst. Evang. ii. 46; vol. iii. p. 1359.

V. Beza, in Luc. xix. 11, &c.; vol. iii. p. 502.

Thus the time when He wept over the city was the time most fitted to create a belief in the reality of His sorrow, and in the truth of His prophecy. Had He wept before, when the Jews derided Him and persecuted Him, or afterwards when they sought to put Him to death, His words might have appeared the effect of anger rather than of sorrow.

Some have proposed to understand His words, "If thou hadst known, even thou" (εἰ ᾔσθως καὶ σὺ), as a wish, in the sense of "Would that thou hadst known." To this it has been objected that though the Septuagint translators and classical authors sometimes use εἰ in the sense of a wish, utinam, the New Testament writers in no other instance use the word in this sense.¹

Another² explanation is that Jesus uses the word εἰ in the sense of "if," but that His words, like the words of all who speak under the influence of strong emotion, are abrupt and incomplete, and require some words to be understood to render them connected and complete. Some of the early commentators understood the passage in this sense, and some offer suggestions as to the words which are required to fill up the sense. The sentence, thus completed, runs thus: If thou hadst known as I know, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace, thou wouldst have remained, or thou wouldst not have been destroyed, or thou wouldst weep as thou now rejoicest, but now they are hid from thine eyes.

Jesus then goes on to describe the utter destruction which the Romans should bring on them and on their city as a punishment for their rejection of Him, who would have brought peace to them, when for three years He went about among them proving Himself to be their Messiah. The Jewish historian Josephus relates the fulfilment of this prophecy.³

For verses 45-48 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 342.

45. And He went into the Temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought;

S.V. them that sold (omit therein, and them that bought).
Vulg. ejlere vendentes in illo, et ementes.

46. Saying unto them, It is written, My house is the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves.

V. It is written, And My house shall be.
Vulg. Scriptum est: Quia domus mea domus orationis est.

47. And He taught daily in the Temple. But the chief priests and the scribes and the chief of the people sought to destroy Him,

48. And could not find what they might do: for all the people were very attentive to hear Him.

Margin, hanged on Him.
Vulg. omnis enim populus suspensus erat, audiens illum.

¹ Maldonatus, in Luc. xix. 42; vol. ii. p. 328.

² S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xix. 42; vol. v. p. 880.

Theophylact, in Luc. xix. 42; vol. i. p. 449.

Euthymius, in Luc. xix. 42; vol. iii. p. 609.

S. Augustine, Epist. cxviii. (alias 79); vol. ii. p. 902.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxxix. 1; vol. ii. p. 1294.

V. Bede, in Luc. xix. 42; vol. iii. p. 570.

³ Bell. Jud. vi.

CHAPTER XX.

[1. Christ avoucheth His authority by a question of John's baptism. 9. The parable of the vineyard. 19. Of giving tribute to Caesar. 27. He convinceth the Sadducees that deny the resurrection. 41. How Christ is the Son of David. 45. He warneth His disciples to beware of the scribes.]

[Vulz. Non dicit sacerdotibus ac scribis qui potestate hoc faciunt, quia nec illi respondent ad propositum de hominis baptismo questionem: parabolam refert de vineyardis, qui castis domini servis etiam filium ejus occiderunt: tentatur Iesus de tributo Cæsari dabo, et a Sadduceis de resurrectione: quomodo dicunt Christum filium esse David: cavendum a scribis ambitiosis.]

For verses 1-8 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 346.

1. And it came to pass, that on one of those days, as He taught the people in the Temple, and preached the gospel, the chief priests and the scribes came upon Him with the elders,

S.V. on one of the days: A. the priests.
Vulg. in una diebus . . . convenerunt principes sacerdotum.

2. And spake unto Him, saying, Tell us, by what authority doest Thou these things? or who is He that gave Thee this authority?

S.V. and spake saying unto Him: S*. omits Tell us.
Vulg. Et alunt dicentes ad illum: Dic nobis.

3. And He answered and said unto them, I will also ask you one thing; and answer Me:

4. The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?

5. And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; He will say, Why then believed ye him not?

S.V. omit then.
Vulg. quare ergo.

6. But and if we say, Of men; all the people will stone us: for they be persuaded that John was a prophet.

7. And they answered, that they could not tell whence it was.

8. And Jesus said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

S*. And He answered and said.
Vulg. Et Iesus ait illis.

For verses 9-19 see S. Matthew, ch. xxi., page 348.

9. Then began He to speak to the people this parable; A certain man planted a vineyard, and let it forth to husbandmen, and went into a far country for a long time.

S.V.A. A man (omit certain): V*. for a time.
Vulg. Homo plantavit vineam . . . et ipse peregre fuit multis temporibus.

10. And at the season he sent a servant to the husbandmen, that they should give him of the fruit of the vineyard: but the husbandmen beat him, and sent him away empty.

11. And again he sent another servant: and they beat him also, and entreated him shamefully, and sent him away empty.

12. And again he sent a third: and they wounded him also, and cast him out.

13. Then said the lord of the vineyard, What shall I do? I will send my beloved son: it may be they will reverence him when they see him.

V*. omits What shall I do? S.V. omit when they see him.
Vulg. Quid faciam? . . . forsan cum hunc viderint, verebuntur.

14. But when the husbandmen saw him, they reasoned among themselves, saying, This is the heir: come, let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours.

A. omits come.
Vulg. Hic est heres, occidamus illum.

15. So they cast him out of the vineyard, and killed him. What therefore shall the lord of the vineyard do unto them?

16. He shall come and destroy these husbandmen, and shall give the vineyard to others. And when they heard it, they said, God forbid.

17. And He beheld them, and said, What is this then that is written,

"The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner?"

18. Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken:
but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder."

19. ¶ And the chief priests and the scribes the same hour sought to lay hands on Him; and they feared the people: for they perceived that He had spoken this parable against them.

V.A. And the scribes and the chief priests: S*. the people, because He had spoken.
Vulg. principes sacerdotum, et scribæ . . . et timuerunt populum: cognoverunt enim quod ad ipsos dixerit similitudinem hanc.

For verses 20-26 see S. Matthew, ch. xxii., page 354.

20. And they watched Him, and sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that they might take hold of His words, that so they might deliver Him unto the power and authority of the governor.

21. And they asked Him, saying, Master, we know that Thou sayest and teachest rightly, neither acceptest Thou the person of any, but teachest the way of God truly:

Margin, of a truth.
Vulg. sed viam Dei in veritate doces.

22. Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Cæsar, or no?

23. But He perceived their craftiness, and said unto them, Why tempt ye Me?

S.V. omit Why tempt ye Me?
Vulg. Quid me tentatis?

24. Shew Me a penny. Whose image and superscription hath it? They answered and said, Cæsar's.

S. Shew Me a penny. And they shewed unto Him a penny. And He said, Whose image: S.V. And they said.
Vulg. Ostendite mihi denarium: cujus habet imaginem et inscriptionem? Respondentes dixerunt ei: Cæsaris.

25. And He said unto them, Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's, and unto God the things which be God's.

26. And they could not take hold of His words before the people: and they marvelled at His answer, and held their peace.

For verses 27-40 see S. Matthew, ch. xxii., page 356.

27. ¶ Then came to Him certain of the Sadducees, which deny that there is any resurrection; and they asked Him,

S.V. which say that there is no resurrection.
Vulg. qui negant esse resurrectionem.

28. Saying, Master, Moses wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

S.V. and he be without children.
Vulg. et hic sine liberis fuerit.

29. There were therefore seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and died without children.

30. And the second took her to wife, and he died childless.

31. And the third took her; and in like manner the seven also: and they left no children, and died.

30, 31. S.V. And the second and the third took her, and in like manner also the seven left no children and died.

31. A. And the third took her in like manner, and in like manner.

—Vulg. 30. Et sequens accepit illam, et ipse mortuus est sine filio.

31. Et tertius accepit illam. Similiter et omnes septem, et non reliquerunt semen, et mortui sunt.

32. Last of all the woman died also.

S. At last the woman died also.
Vulg. Novissime omnium mortua est et mulier.

33. Therefore in the resurrection whose wife of them is she? for seven had her to wife.

S. (* omits Therefore) In the resurrection whose wife (S*. adds of them) shall she be?

Vulg. In resurrectione ergo, cujus eorum erit uxor?

34. And Jesus answering said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage:

S.V. omit answering.
Vulg. Et ait illis Iesus.

35. But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage:

36. Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection.

37. Now that the dead are raised, even Moses shewed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob.

38. For He is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto Him.

39. ¶ Then certain of the scribes answering said, Master, Thou hast well said.

40. And after that they durst not ask Him any question at all.

S.V. For after that.
Vulg. Et amplius non audebant cum quidquam interrogare.

For verses 41-44 see S. Matthew, ch. xxii., page 360.

41. And He said unto them, How say they that Christ is David's son ?

A. How say some.
Vulg. Quomodo dicunt.

42. And David himself saith in the book of Psalms,

"The Lord said unto my Lord,
Sit Thou on My right hand,

S.V. For David himself.
Vulg. Et ipse David.

43. Till I make Thine enemies Thy foot-stool."

44. David therefore calleth Him Lord, how is He then his son ?

For verses 45-47 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiii., page 363.

45. ¶ Then in the audience of all the people He said unto His disciples,

V. unto the disciples.
Vulg. dixit discipulis suis.

46. Beware of the scribes, which desire to walk in long robes, and love greetings in the markets, and the highest seats in the synagogues, and the chief rooms at feasts ;

47. Which devour widows' houses, and for a shew make long prayers : the same shall receive greater damnation.

CHAPTER XXI.

[1. Christ commendeth the poor widow. 5. He foretelleth the destruction of the Temple, and of the city Jerusalem: 25. the signs also which shall be fore the last day. 34. He exhorteth them to be watchful.]

[Vulg. Viduam duo minuta offerentem præfert divitibus multa offerentibus: subversionem Templi prædicit, variisque malis, afflictionibus et persecutionibus adversus quæ roborat apostolus: prædicit quoque subversionem Jerusalem, et Iudeorum captivitatem ac dispersionem: de signis præcursoris judicium: cavendum a crapula, ebrietate, curisque hujus vite, et vigilandum ac orandum.]

For verses 1-4 see S. Mark, ch. xii., page 555.

1. And He looked up, and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury.

2. And He saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites.

S.V. omit also.

Vulg. Vidit autem et quandam viduam pauperulam.

3. And He said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all:

4. For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God: but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had.

S.V. omit of God.

Vulg. in munera Dei.

For verses 5 and 6 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 375.

5. ¶ And as some spake of the Temple, how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts, He said,

6. As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

S.V. add here after upon another.

Vulg. non relinquetur lapis super lapidem.

For verses 7-19 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 377.

7. And they asked Him, saying, Master, but when shall these things be? and what sign will there be when these things shall come to pass?

8. And He said, Take heed that ye be not deceived: for many shall come in My name, saying, I am Christ; and the time draweth near: go ye not therefore after them.

Margin, and, The time.

S.V. omit therefore.

Vulg. et in ipsos appropinquantem nolite ergo me post eos.

9. But when ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be not terrified: for these things must first come to pass; but the end is not by and by.

10. Then said He unto them, Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom:

11. And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven.

S.V. shall be, and in divers places famines and pestilences (V. pestilences and famines).

Vulg. Et terremotus magni erunt per loca, et pestilentie, et fames.

12. But before all these, they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and into prisons, being brought before kings and rulers for My name's sake.

13. And it shall turn to you for a testimony.

S.V. omit And.

Vulg. Continget autem vobis in testimonium.

14. Settle it therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before what ye shall answer:

S.V. omits therefore.

Vulg. Ponite ergo in cordibus vestris.

15. For I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist.

S.V. to resist nor gainsay.

Vulg. resistere et contradicere.

16. And ye shall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and some of you shall they cause to be put to death.

17. And ye shall be hated of all men for My name's sake.

18. But there shall not an hair of your head perish.

19. In your patience possess ye your souls.

V. ye shall acquire.

Vulg. In patientia vestra possidebitis animas vestras.

For verses 20-24 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 380.

20. And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh.

21. Then let them which are in Judæa flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto.

22. For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled.

23. But woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck, in those days! for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people.

S. omits But: S. in those days, for there shall be in those days great distress.

Vulg. Vae autem pregnantibus et nutrientibus in illis diebus: erit enim.

24. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

For verses 25-36 see S. Matthew, ch. xxiv., page 385.

25. ¶ And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring;

S. adds and after nations: S.V.A. with perplexity on account of the noise of the sea and the waves.
Vulg. et in terris pressura gentium præ confusione sonitus maris, et fluctuum.

26. Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken.

27. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory.

28. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh.

29. And He spake to them a parable; Behold the fig-tree, and all the trees;

30. When they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand.

31. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

32. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled.

33. Heaven and earth shall pass away: but My words shall not pass away.

34. ¶ And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares.

S. omits And.
Vulg. Attendite autem vobis.

35. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth.

34, 35. S.V. come upon you unawares as a snare: for it shall come on all.
Vulg. Tanquam laqueus enim superveniet in omnes qui.

36. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man.

S.V. But watch ye and pray always, that ye may be able to escape.
Vulg. Vigilate itaque, omni tempore orantes, ut digni habeamini fugere ista omnia.

S. Luke alone contains verses 37 and 38.

37. And in the day-time He was teaching in the Temple; and at night He went out, and abode in the mount that is called the mount of Olives.

38. And all the people came early in the morning to Him in the Temple, for to hear Him.

CHAPTER XXII.

[1. The Jews conspire against Christ. 3. Satan preparereth Judas to betray Him. 7. The Apostles prepare the passover. 19. Christ instituteth His holy Supper, 21. covertly foretelleth of the traitor, 24. dehorteth the rest of His Apostles from ambition, 31. assurereth Peter his faith should not fail : 34. and yet he should deny Him thrice. 39. He prayeth in the mount, and sweateth blood, 47. is betrayed with a kiss : 50. He healeth Malchus' ear, 54. He is thrice denied of Peter, 63. shamefully abused, 66. and confesseth Himself to be the Son of God.]

[Vulg. Cogitant principes sacerdotum de occidendo Iesu, quem vendit Judas : jubet parari pascha : panem in corpus suum et vinum in sanguinem consecrata tradit discipulis, præcipiens ut idem faciant : contentio discipulorum quis eorum sit major : prædicit trinom Petri negationem, jubens vendi tunicam et emi gladium : post probam in agonia orationem, et sudorem instar sanguinis in terram decurrentis, capitur a Iudeis : quorum uni Petrus abscidit auriculam : conqueritur quod ad eum quasi ad latronem capiendum egerint : in domo principis sacerdotum ter a Petro negatur, et a Iudeis caditur ac illudatur, et mane in concilio interrogatus fatetur se Dei Filium.]

For verses 1 and 2 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 408.

1. Now the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover.

2. And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill Him ; for they feared the people.

For verses 3-6 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 412.

3. ¶ Then entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve.

4. And he went his way, and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray Him unto them.

5. And they were glad, and covenanted to give Him money.

6. And he promised, and sought opportunity to betray Him unto them in the absence of the multitude.

S*. And he sought opportunity (omits promised and).
Vulg. Et spocondit. Et querebat opportunitatem.

For verses 7-13 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 413.

7. ¶ Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed.

8. And He sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat.

9. And they said unto Him, Where wilt Thou that we prepare ?

V. that we prepare for Thee to eat the passover ?
Vulg. At illi dixerunt : Ubi vis paremus ?

10. And He said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water ; follow him into the house where he entereth in.

S*. omits of water.
Vulg. amphoram aquæ portans.

11. And ye shall say unto the goodman of the house, The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the passover with My disciples ?

S. saying, The Master saith : S. Where is My guestchamber.
Vulg. Et dicetis patrifamilias domus : Dicit tibi magister : Ubi est diversorium ?

12. And he shall shew you a large upper room furnished : there make ready.

S. and there make ready.
Vulg. et ibi parate.

13. And they went, and found as He had said unto them : and they made ready the passover.

For verses 14-16 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 415.

14. And when the hour was come, He sat down, and the twelve Apostles with Him.

S*. V. and the Apostles.
Vulg. et duodecim apostoli cum eo.

15. And He said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer :

Margin, I have heartily desired.

16. For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.

S.V.A. I will not eat it (A. thereof).
Vulg. Quia ex hoc non manducabo illud.

For verses 17-20 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 421.

17. And He took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves :

S*. Take and divide it among you.
Vulg. Accipite, et dividite inter vos.

18. For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.

S.V. I will not drink henceforth.
Vulg. Non bibam de generatione vitis.

19. ¶ And He took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is My Body which is given for you : This do in remembrance of Me.

A. saying, Take, This is.
Vulg. dicentes, Hic est corpus meum, quod pro vobis datur : hoc facite in meam commemorationem.

20. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in My Blood, which is shed for you.

For verses 21-23 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 418.

21. ¶ But, behold, the hand of him that betrayeth Me is with Me on the table.

22. And truly the Son of Man goeth, as it was determined : but woe unto that man by whom He is betrayed !

S.V. For truly (S*. omits truly) the Son of Man.
Vulg. Et quidem Filius hominis.

23. And they began to inquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing.

24. ¶ And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest.

S. omits also.
Vulg. Facta est autem et contentio inter eos.

25. And He said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them ; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors.

S*. and their rulers exercise authority over them and are called.
Vulg. Et qui potestatem habent super eos, benefici vocantur.

26. But ye shall not be so : but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger ; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve.

27. For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth ? is not he that sitteth at meat ? but I am among you as he that serveth.

28. Ye are they which have continued with Me in My temptations.

29. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as My Father hath appointed unto Me ;

A. And I appoint unto you a covenant, as My Father hath appointed unto Me a kingdom.
Vulg. Et ego dispono vobis sicut disposuit mihi Pater meus regnum.

30. That ye may eat and drink at My table in My kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

In their last journey to Jerusalem, there had been a dispute among the Twelve which of them should be the greatest. Two Evangelists, S. Matthew (xx. 20) and S. Mark (ix. 33, &c.), both relate this in the proper place in the narrative. But S. Luke makes no mention of this dispute in their journey to Jerusalem. But in his relation of the events which took place in the evening on which Jesus instituted the Eucharist, S. Luke says, "And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest." But of any strife among the Twelve during this evening, neither S. Matthew nor S. Mark say a word. Some¹ have therefore not unreasonably concluded that S. Luke, in his allusion to their strife, is not referring to any fresh instance of it, which occurred during this evening, but to that which had taken place in their journey up to Jerusalem, but of which he had not given any relation in its proper place ; and that S. Luke refers to it now, in order to account for the tone of the address which Jesus proceeds to deliver to the Twelve : for, though Jesus had rebuked His disciples at the time for their dispute, He afterwards refers to it again.

He shows them that all strife for greatness, one over the other, was inconsistent with the very nature of His kingdom. In His kingdom the first and last were reckoned differently from what they were in the kingdoms of the world. The first in His kingdom was the one who most nearly resembled Himself : the first was therefore he who undertook the meanest task, the lowliest office. He should enter His kingdom, as God and Man, only through humiliation, persecution, ignominy, suffering, and finally through Death on the Cross ; so in like manner must they also enter into the kingdom which, after His departure, He should bequeath to them. It must be through participation in His sufferings, in His humiliation.

S. Luke alone contains verses 31 and 32.

31. ¶ And the Lord said, Simon, Simon,

¹ Maldonatus, in Luc. xxii. 28 ; vol. ii. p. 333.

behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat :

V. omits And the Lord said : S. said, Simon, behold.

Vulg. Ait autem Dominus : Simon, Simon, ecce Satanas expetivit vos.

32. But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not : and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren.

There is a marked difference between the early commentators on this passage and the later. The former¹ see in our Saviour's words a proof that Satan could not tempt anyone without God's permission, and a pledge that he should not tempt Peter to his ruin ; that, though Peter should through fear deny his Master, his faith should not so far fail, but that by repentance he should be converted, and reinstated in His favour ; and that by his example, as of one who had sinned and had repented, and had been forgiven, he should strengthen his brethren. Besides the pledge that Peter himself should not fall from the faith in Jesus, later commentators² see also in our Saviour's words a promise that Peter's successors in the See of Rome, for all time, shall remain firm in the faith of Jesus. Whether this doctrine be a legitimate deduction from our Saviour's words or not, it is a noteworthy fact that such an interpretation of this passage is not found in any of the early commentators, and in no writer before the twelfth century. The Patristic commentators explain our Saviour's words as a pledge that S. Peter's own faith should not fail, and make no allusion to his successors.

For verses 33 and 34 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 427.

33. And he said unto Him, Lord, I am ready to go with Thee, both into prison, and to death.

34. And He said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest Me.

S.V. until thou shalt.

Vulg. donec ter abneges nosse me.

S. Luke alone contains verses 35-38.

35. And He said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing ? And they said, Nothing.

36. Then said He unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip : and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one.

S.V. But He said unto them.

Vulg. Dixit ergo eis.

37. For I say unto you, that this that is written must yet be accomplished in Me,

"And He was reckoned among the transgressors :"

for the things concerning Me have an end.

S.V. A. omitt yet : S.V. for that which concerneth Me hath an end.

Vulg. quoniam adhuc hoc quod scriptum est . . . etenim ea, que sunt de me, finem habent.

38. And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And He said unto them, It is enough.

S. omits Lord.

Vulg. At illi dixerunt : Domine.

Various explanations have been given of these words. Some have suggested that Jesus does not here command the Apostles to do these things, but that He only permits them. Others³ that He is foretelling what they will do, using the subjunctive mood for the future, as in some cases of prophecy. Others⁴ think that, though speaking to the Apostles, Jesus is showing the straits to which the Jewish nation will be reduced, both for the means of support and defence, by the war which will overtake them as a punishment for putting Him to Death as a malefactor.

The most probable interpretation⁵ is, that by these words Jesus is preparing His disciples for the sharp trial that awaited them ; namely, His own Passion and Death by Crucifixion, and their dispersion by persecution. The danger which is impending will be so great, that they must no longer rely on the friendly feeling of the multitude towards them. Even with the utmost care and foresight, they will scarcely be able to preserve themselves from death, either by hunger or by violence. All this will take place, not from His want of power to support and protect them, as was shown when He first sent them to preach the Gospel, but in the fulfilment of the prophecies respecting Himself, which foretold that He must be put to Death, and on the charge that He was a malefactor, a breaker of the law.

The Apostles did not perceive what was our Saviour's object in His address to them, and understood His words in a literal sense, and produce two swords, and He replies, "It is enough ;" that is, that no more are required. For in

¹ S. Ambrose, in Luc. xxii. 31 ; vol. ii. p. 1817.

² S. Augustine, de Correp. et Gratia, vi. and viii. ; vol. x. pp. 922 and 926.

³ V. Bede, in Luc. xxii. 31 ; vol. iii. p. 600.

⁴ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xxii. 31 ; vol. v. p. 916.

Theophylact, in Luc. xxii. 31 ; vol. i. p. 470.

Euthymius, in Luc. xxii. 31 ; vol. iii. p. 639.

⁵ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cxxxiii. p. 479.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xxii. 31 ; vol. ii. p. 337.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xxii. 31 ; vol. viii. p. 846.

³ S. Basil, Regule brevius tract. 251 ; vol. iii. p. 1250.

⁴ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xxii. 35 ; vol. v. p. 917.

⁵ S. Chrysostom, Homil. lxxxiv. in Matt. ; vol. ii. p. 483.

Theophylact, in Luc. xxii. 35 ; vol. i. p. 472.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxiii. p. 482.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xxii. 36 ; vol. ii. p. 339.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xxii. 36 ; vol. viii. p. 847.

thinking that even these were necessary, they had misunderstood His meaning.

Some¹ have thought that the two swords (μάχαραι) which the Apostles produced were not military swords, but knives, which they had used but a short time before to cut the paschal lamb.

For verse 39 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 427.

39. ¶ And He came out, and went, as He was wont, to the mount of Olives; and His disciples also followed Him.

V*. omits also: S.V.A. and the disciples.
Vulg. secuti sunt autem illum et discipuli.

For verses 40-44 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 428.

40. And when He was at the place, He said unto them, Pray that ye enter not into temptation.

41. And He was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed, 42. Saying, Father, if Thou be willing, remove this cup from Me: nevertheless not My will, but Thine, be done.

Margin, willing to remove.

43. And there appeared an angel unto Him from heaven, strengthening Him.^a Vulg. Apparuit autem illi angelus de celo, confortans eum.

44. And being in an agony He prayed more earnestly: and His sweat was as it were great drops of blood^b falling down to the ground.^c 43, 44. S.V.A. omit these two verses.

Vulg. Et factus in agonia, prolixius orabat. Et factus est sudor ejus, sicut gutte sanguinis decurrentis in terram.

For verses 45 and 46 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 432.

45. And when He rose up from prayer, and was come to His disciples, He found them sleeping for sorrow,

S.V.A. to the disciples.
Vulg. ad discipulos suos.

46. And said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.

For verses 47 and 48 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 434.

47. ¶ And while He yet spake, behold a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jesus to kiss Him.

S.V.A. omit And.
Vulg. omits And.

48. But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss?^d

S*. omits Judas.
Vulg. Iuda, osculo Filium hominis tradis?

For verses 49-51 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 436.

49. When they which were about Him saw what would follow, they said unto Him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword?^e

S.V. omit unto Him.
Vulg. dixerunt ei.

50. ¶ And one of them smote the servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear.

51. And Jesus answered and said, Suffer ye thus far. And He touched his ear, and healed him.

A. omits And: S.V. the ear.
Vulg. Respondens autem Iesus . . . auriculum ejus.

For verses 52 and 53 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 437.

52. Then Jesus said unto the chief priests, and captains of the Temple, and the elders, which were come to Him, Be ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and staves?

53. When I was daily with you in the Temple, ye stretched forth no hands against Me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkness.

S*. but this is the hour, and.
Vulg. sed hæc est hora vestra.

¹ S. Chrysostom, ut supra.

^a An angel from heaven strengthening Him.—See Matt. ch. xxvi., p. 431.

^b His sweat was as it were great drops of blood.—See Matt. ch. xxvi., p. 433.

^c Vv. 43, 44.—For a full and clear statement of the evidence for and against this passage, see Hammond's 'Textual Criticism,' p. 166, who thus concludes, "On the whole there is no reasonable doubt upon the passage." See also Scrivener, Introduction, p. 521, ed. 1874; McClellan, 'New Testament,' p. 699.

^d Betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss? (φιλῆσαι τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου παραδίδως;)—We find the dative noun φιλῆσαι in its most unusual, and so in its most emphatic place, beginning a sentence. We therefore translate it, 'Is it with a kiss that thou betrayest the Son of Man?'—The 'Church Quarterly Review,' April 1876, p. 132.

Euthymius, in Luc. xvii. 38; vol. iii. p. 645.

^e Lord, shall we smite, &c. (Κόpie, εἰ παράδωκεν).—We render this, 'Lord, grant it (and) we shall smite with the sword.' Here we place a comma after εἰ, and omit, with some authorities, the note of interrogation. This usage of εἰ, as of the Latin si, is not infrequent in Philo, and in other writers of the Apostolic period, and is closely and naturally connected with the admitted use of εἰ, εἴθε, and the Latin si in an optative sense, just as much so as the feeling of a wish is connected with the expression that it might be granted. The prayer of Æneas in Virgil (vi) may be well rendered, Grant (si nunc) now that the golden bough upon the tree may present itself duly to our sight.—Ibid., p. 159.

For verses 54 and 55 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 439.

54. ¶ Then took they Him, and led Him, and brought Him into the high priest's house. And Peter followed afar off.

55. And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them.

For verses 56-62 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 445.

56. But a certain maid beheld him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man was also with Him.

57. And he denied Him, saying, Woman, I know Him not.

S.V. And he denied, saying, I know Him not, woman.
Vulg. At ille negavit eum, dicens: Mulier, non novi illum.

58. And after a little while another saw him, and said, Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not.

59. And about the space of one hour after another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with Him: for he is a Galilæan.

60. And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew.

S.V.A. a cock crew.

61. And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how He had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny Me thrice.

S.V. add to-day after crow.
Vulg. Quia prius quam gallus cantet, ter me negabis.

62. And Peter went out, and wept bitterly.

S.V. And he went out.
Vulg. Et egressus foras Petrus flevit amare.

For verses 63-65 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 442.

63. ¶ And the men that held Jesus mocked Him, and smote Him.

S.V. that held Him.
Vulg. Et viri qui tenebant illum.

64. And when they had blindfolded Him, they struck Him on the face, and asked Him, saying, Prophecy, who is it that smote Thee?

S.V. they asked Him (omit struck Him on the face, and).
Vulg. Et velaverunt eum, et percutiebant faciem ejus: et interrogabant eum.

65. And many other things blasphemously spake they against Him.

For verses 66-71 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 451.

66. ¶ And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people and the chief priests and the scribes came together, and led Him into their council, saying,

67. Art Thou the Christ? tell us. And He said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe:

S.V. omits you.
Vulg. Si vobis dixero.

68. And if I also ask you, ye will not answer Me, nor let Me go.

S.V. omit also: S.V. you will not answer (omit Me, nor let Me go).
Vulg. Si autem et interrogavero.

69. Hereafter shall the Son of Man sit on the right hand of the power of God.

S.V.A. But hereafter.
Vulg. Et hoc autem.

70. Then said they all, Art Thou then the Son of God? And He said unto them, Ye say that I am.

71. And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard of His own mouth.

CHAPTER XXIII.

[1. Jesus is accused before Pilate, and sent to Herod. 8. Herod mocketh Him. 12. Herod and Pilate are made friends. 13. Barabbas is desired of the people, and is loosed by Pilate, and Jesus is given to be crucified. 27. He telleth the women, that lament Him, the destruction of Jerusalem: 34. prayeth for His enemies. 39. Two criminals are crucified with Him. 46. His death. 50. His Burial.]

[Vulg. Accusatus coram Pilato mittitur ad Herodem, qui illum spreto illius: Pilatus conatur ipsum dimittere, proposito Barabbas homicida, et promissa castigatione: Indis tamen instantibus morti adjudicatur: ductusque ad supplicium, velut mulieres super se flere: cum latronibus crucifixus, Patrem orat pro crucifigentibus: irridetur a principibus et a militibus acclum offerentibus: posita superscriptione blasphematur ab uno latrone, alteri vero promittitur in paradiso consortium: post tenebras atque signa clamans expirat: quem centurio iustum pradiat, et Joseph corpus ejus sepelit.]

For verse 1 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 451.

1. And the whole multitude of them arose, and led Him unto Pilate.

For verses 2 and 3 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 455.

2. And they began to accuse Him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that He Himself is Christ a King.

S.V. perverting our nation: S.V. and saying, that He Himself. Vulg. Hunc invenimus subvertentem gentem nostram . . . et dicentem se Christum regem esse.

3. And Pilate asked Him, saying, Art Thou the King of the Jews? And He answered him and said, Thou sayest it.

S. and saith. Vulg. At ille respondens ait.

S. Luke alone relates that Jesus was sent to Herod, verses 4-16. (See S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 457.)

4. Then said Pilate to the chief priests and to the people, I find no fault in this Man.

5. And they were the more fierce, saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place.

S*. omits teaching: S. and beginning. Vulg. docens per universam Iudeam, incipiens.

6. When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the Man were a Galilæan.

S.V. When Pilate heard it (omit of Galilee). Vulg. Pilatus autem audiens Galilæam.

7. And as soon as he knew that He belonged unto Herod's jurisdiction, he sent Him to Herod, who himself also was at Jerusalem at that time.

S*. at the same time. Vulg. qui et ipse Ierosolymis erat illis diebus.

8. ¶ And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: for he was desirous to see Him of a long season, because he had heard many things of Him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by Him.

S*. When Herod (omit And): S.V. omits many things. Vulg. Herodes autem viso Iesu . . . eo quod audierat multa de eo.

9. Then he questioned with Him in many words; but He answered him nothing.

S. omits Then: S. not. Vulg. interrogabat autem . . . at ipse nihil illi respondebat.

10. And the chief priests and scribes stood and vehemently accused Him.

11. And Herod with his men of war set Him at nought, and mocked Him, and arrayed Him in a gorgeous robe, and sent Him again to Pilate.

S. And Herod also: S*. omits again. Vulg. Sprevit autem illum Herodes . . . et remisit ad Pilatum.

12. ¶ And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together: for before they were at enmity between themselves.

S.V. Herod and Pilate. Vulg. Herodes et Pilatus.

13. ¶ And Pilate, when he had called together the chief priests and the rulers and the people,

14. Said unto them, Ye have brought this Man unto me, as one that perverteth the people: and, behold, I, having examined Him before you, have found no fault in this Man touching those things whereof ye accuse Him:

15. No, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him; and, lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto Him.

S.V. for he sent Him to us. Vulg. nam remisit vos ad illum.

16. I will therefore chastise Him, and release Him.

The Galileans had the reputation of being the most restless and turbulent of all the Jews, and Pilate had several times come into collision with them. Some of them he was said to have slain, and to have mingled their blood with their sacrifices (Luke xiii. 1). It was probably in order to prejudice the mind of Pilate against Jesus that the chief priests said, "He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place." Pilate, eager to catch at any way of relieving himself from the office of judging Jesus, sends Him to Herod Antipas, who had come up to Jerusalem for the Passover, as to His own more immediate governor.¹

To human eyes Pilate was consulting his own personal convenience in sending Jesus to Herod; in reality he was bringing the highest personage in the land to give evidence to His innocence. Herod was pleased with the consideration which Pilate had shown him, and he had long wished to see Jesus. But he who had taken his brother Philip's wife and had put John the Baptist to death, and had been guilty of other crimes, is unable to gratify his curiosity, or to obtain a single answer from Jesus. For He had answered little to the questions of Pilate, and He answers nothing to those of Herod, and Jesus is sent back mocked and derided, but practically declared, in the judgment of Herod, innocent of any serious charge.

Pilate, who had not the courage to brave the enmity of the chief priests and acquit Jesus, was still unwilling to condemn Him, whom he believed to be innocent; and he now tries a middle course, and hopes by scourging Him to render Him an object of compassion, and thus to excite the sympathy of the people in His behalf, and by that means to release Him.

For verses 17-23 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 457.

17. (For of necessity he must release one unto them at the feast.)^a

V. A. omit this verse.

Vulg. Necesse autem habebat dimittere eis per diem festum unum.

18. And they cried out all at once, saying, Away with this Man, and release unto us Barabbas :

19. (Who for a certain sedition made in the city, and for murder, was cast into prison.)

S*. was in prison.

Vulg. missus in carcerem.

¹ See S. Ambrose, in Luc. xxiii. 11; vol. ii. p. 1829.

V. Bede, in Luc. xxiii. 5; vol. iii. p. 611.

^a "V. 17.—Deest in Tischendorf, Tregelles, uncials includit Lachmann, post ver. 19 ponit [Tregelles marg.]."—SCRIVENER, 'New Testament,' 1877.

20. Pilate therefore, willing to release Jesus, spake again to them.

S. V. A. But Pilate, willing.

Vulg. Iterum autem Pilatus locutus est ad eos, volens dimittere Iesum.

21. But they cried, saying, Crucify Him, crucify Him.

22. And he said unto them the third time, Why, what evil hath He done? I have found no cause of death in Him: I will therefore chastise Him, and let Him go.

23. And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that He might be crucified. And the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed.^b

S. V. and their voices prevailed.

Vulg. et invalescent voces eorum.

For verses 24 and 25 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 460.

24. And Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required.

Margin, asserted.

25. And he released unto them him that for sedition and murder was cast into prison, whom they had desired; but he delivered Jesus to their will.

S. V. A. omit unto them.

Vulg. Dimisit autem illis.

For verses 26-33 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 463.

26. And as they led Him away, they laid hold upon one Simon, a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus.

27. ¶ And there followed Him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented Him.

V. A. omit also: S. and of women: they bewailed and lamented Him.

Vulg. Sequatur autem illum multa turba populi, et mulierum: que plangebant et lamentabantur eum.

28. But Jesus turning unto them said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children.

29. For, behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck.

30. Then shall they begin to say to the Theophylact, in Luc. xxiii. 5; vol. i. p. 481.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxli. p. 572.

^b The voices . . . prevailed (καταχυν).—"Where it really means 'kept growing stronger,' or louder."—The Church Quarterly Review, April 1876, p. 130.

mountains, Fall on us ; and to the hills, Cover us.

31. For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry ?

32. And there were also two other, malefactors, led with Him to be put to death.

33. And when they were come to the place, which is called Calvary,—

Margin. The place of a skull.

For verses 33, 34, 38 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 466.

33. — there they crucified Him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left.

34. ¶ Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them ; for they know not what they do. And they parted His raiment, and cast lots.

S.V. omit Then said Jesus . . . what they do : A. omits Father.

Vulg. Iesus autem dicebat : Pater, dimitte illis, non enim sciunt, quid faciunt.

For verses 35-43 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 470.

35. And the people stood beholding. And the rulers also with them derided Him, saying, He saved others ; let Him save Himself, if He be Christ, the chosen of God.

S. omits also : S.V. omit with them.

Vulg. et deridebant eum principes cum eis.

36. And the soldiers also mocked Him, coming to Him, and offering Him vinegar,

S.A. omit also.

Vulg. Bludebant autem ei et milites.

37. And saying, If Thou be the King of the Jews, save Thyself.

A. And saying, Thou art the King.

Vulg. Et dicentes : Si tu es rex.

38. And a superscription also was written over Him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

S.V. was over Him (omit written) : S.A. of Greek, of Latin, of Hebrew.

S.V. omit in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew.

S.V. The King of the Jews is this.

Vulg. Erat autem et superscriptio scripta super eum litteris grecis, et latinis, et hebraicis : Hic est rex Iudeorum.

39. ¶ And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on Him, saying, If Thou be Christ, save Thyself and us.

V. omits saying : S.V. Art Thou not the Christ ? Save Thyself.

Vulg. dicens : Si tu es Christus, salvum fac teipsum, et nos.

40. But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation ?
1.

S.V. answering and rebuking him said.

Vulg. Respondens autem alter increpabat eum, dicens.

41. And we indeed justly ; for we receive the due reward of our deeds : but this Man hath done nothing amiss.

42. And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when Thou comest into Thy kingdom.

S.V. And he said, Jesus, remember me : S.A. when Thou comest in Thy kingdom.

Vulg. Et dicebat ad Iesum : Domine, memento mei, cum veneris in regnum tuum.

43. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with Me in paradise.

S.V. And He said.

Vulg. Et dixit illi Iesus.

For verses 44-46 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 473.

44. And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour.

S.A. omits and.

45. And the sun was darkened, and the veil of the Temple was rent in the midst.

S.V. the sun being eclipsed.

Vulg. Et obscuratus est sol.

46. ¶ And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, He said, Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit : and having said thus, He gave up the ghost.

For verses 47-49 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 477.

47. Now when the centurion saw what was done, he glorified God, saying, Certainly This was a righteous man.

48. And all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things which were done, smote their breasts, and returned.

S.V. having beheld the things : A. omits beholding the things which were done.

Vulg. Et omnis turba eorum qui simul aderant ad spectaculum istud, et videbant quae fiebant.

49. And all His acquaintance, and the women that followed Him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things.

For verses 50-53 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 483.

50. ¶ And, behold, there was a man named

Joseph, a counsellor; and he was a good man, and a just :

V. a counsellor, a good man and just.
Vulg. qui erat decurio, vir bonus et justus.

51. (The same had not consented to the counsel and deed of them;) he was of Arimathæa, a city of the Jews: who also himself waited for the kingdom of God.

S.V. who waited (omit also himself).
Vulg. qui expectabat et ipse regnum Dei.

52. This man went unto Pilate, and begged the Body of Jesus.

53. And he took It down, and wrapped It in linen,——

For verses 53–56 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 485.

53. —— and laid It in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid.

S. and laid Him in a sepulchre.
Vulg. et posuit eum in monumento exciso.

54. And that day was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on.

A. omits and.
Vulg. Et dies erat paraseeves, et sabbatum illucescebat.

55. And the women also, which came with Him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how His Body was laid.

S.V.A. omit also.
Vulg. omits also.

56. And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment.

CHAPTER XXIV.

[1. Christ's Resurrection is declared by two angels to the women that came to the sepulchre. 9. These report it to others. 13. Christ Himself appeareth to the two disciples that went to Emmaus: 36. afterwards He appeareth to the Apostles, and reproacheth their unbelief: 47. giveth them a charge: 49. promiseth the Holy Ghost: 51. and so ascendeth into heaven.]

[Vulg. Multi-ribus ad Christi monumentum consermatum quod ejus corpus non invenirent, angeli ipsum resurrexisse nuntiavit, et illa Apostolis, qui et tantum deliramentum accipiant: Petrus ad monumentum currens et ipso clarior quod corpus non inveniret: duobus in Emmaus euntibus, Jesus scripturas interpretatur, et in fractione panis aliter agnoscitur: congregatis discipulis palam se probat, et cum eis edens aperit sensum ut scripturas intelligant, ac promisso Spiritu sancto in celum ascendit.]

For verses 1-8 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 490.

1. Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them.

S.V. omit and certain others with them.
Vulg. *omit*s and certain others with them.

2. And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre.

3. And they entered in, and found not the Body of the Lord Jesus.

4. And it came to pass, as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold, two men stood by them in shining garments:

S.V. in shining raiment.
Vulg. in veste fulgenti.

5. And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead?

Margin, Him that liveth.
Vulg. Quid queritis viventem cum mortuis?

6. He is not here, but is risen: remember how He spake unto you when He was yet in Galilee,

7. Saying, The Son of Man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.

8. And they remembered His words,

For verses 9-12 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 493.

9. And returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things unto the eleven, and to all the rest.

10. It was Mary Magdalene, and Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told these things unto the Apostles.

A. omits It was: S. V. A. *omit*s which.
Vulg. Erat autem . . . que.

11. And their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not.

S.V. And these words.
Vulg. verba ista.

12. Then arose Peter, and ran unto the sepulchre; and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves, and departed, wondering in himself at that which was come to pass.

S. omits laid by themselves: V. omits laid: A. omits by themselves.
Vulg. et procumbens vidit linteamenta sola posita.

For the synopsis of this appearance see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 499.

13. ¶ And, behold, two of them went that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs.

A. that same hour: S. about a hundred and threescore.
Vulg. ipsa die . . . sexaginta.

14. And they talked together of all these things which had happened.

15. And it came to pass, that, while they communed together and reasoned, Jesus Himself drew near, and went with them.

V. *omit*s Himself.
Vulg. ipse Jesus appropinquans.

16. But their eyes were holden that they should not know Him.

17. And He said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad?

S.V. As, as ye walk? And they stood sad.
Vulg. Qui sunt hi sermones, quos confertis ad invicem ambulantes, et estis tristes?

18. And the one of them, whose name was Cleopas, answering said unto Him, Art Thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days?

S. these things.
Vulg. quæ facta sunt.

19. And He said unto them, What things? And they said unto Him, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people:

S. mighty in word and deed.
Vulg. potens in opere et sermone.

20. And how the chief priests and our rulers delivered Him to be condemned to death, and have crucified Him.

21. But we trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, to-day is the third day since these things were done.

S. we trust that it is He which shall redeem: S.V. and beside all this, it is the third day.
Vulg. Nos autem sperabamus . . . et nunc super hæc omnia, tertia dies est hodie.

22. Yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre;

23. And when they found not His Body, they came, saying, that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that He was alive.

24. And certain of them which were with us went to the sepulchre, and found it even so as the women had said: but Him they saw not.

25. Then He said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken:

26. Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into His glory?

27. And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, He expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning Himself.

S. unto them, what in all the scriptures were the things
Vulg. interpretabatur illis in omnibus scripturis quæ de ipso sunt.

28. And they drew nigh unto the village, whither they went: and He made as though He would have gone further.

29. But they constrained Him, saying, Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And He went in to tarry with them.

S.V. is already far spent.
Vulg. et inclinata est jam dies.

30. And it came to pass, as He sat at meat with them, He took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them.

31. And their eyes were opened, and they knew Him; and He vanished out of their sight.

Margin, ceased to be seen of them.
S.V. omits and they knew Him.
Vulg. et cognoverunt eum: et ipse evanuit ex oculis eorum.

32. And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while He talked with us by the way, and while He opened to us the scriptures?

V. omits within us: S.V. omits and.
Vulg. Nonne cor nostrum ardens erat in nobis, dum loqueretur in via, et.

33. And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them,

34. Saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.

S.V. Indeed the Lord is risen.
Vulg. Quod surrexit Dominus vere.

35. And they told what things were done in the way, and how He was known of them in breaking of bread.

Foremost among the questions which arise on this passage are these: 1. Who was Cleopas? 2. Who was the disciple that was with him? 3. Where was Emmaus?

1. There was an early tradition¹ in the Church that the Cleopas here mentioned was a native of Emmaus, and that the house in which Jesus was entertained, and in which He was known in the breaking of bread, afterwards became the site of a Christian church. It has also been supposed that this Cleopas was the same as Cleopas or Alphaeus the father of James and Josès, and who has also been supposed to be the brother of Joseph, the husband of the B. Virgin.²

2. Who the companion of Cleopas was is uncertain, as is shown by the various opinions that have been held on this point. Two of the earliest authors³ who undertake to give his name call him Simon, but not meaning by that name either Simon Peter or Simon the Canaanite, but some other

¹ S. Jerome, Epist. cviii. (alias 27) ad Eustochium, Epitaphium Paulæ 8; vol. i. p. 893.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xxiv. 18; vol. viii. p. 857.

³ Origen, in Comm. ad Joan. præfat. 7; vol. iv. p. 33.
S. Cyril Alex., in Luc. xxiv. 13; vol. v. p. 944.

disciple of Jesus called Simon. The next writer¹ in the order of antiquity calls him Ammaon, probably as being a native of Emmaus. Another writer,² contemporary with the last, speaks of him as being the Nathanael mentioned in S. John's Gospel (i. 45). There were also not wanting some³ who supposed that S. Luke the Evangelist was here meant. But it is pretty clear from the introduction to S. Luke's Gospel that he had not seen Jesus.

3. With respect to the situation of Emmaus two different opinions have been held. The most ancient writer⁴ who describes the situation of the Emmaus mentioned in this passage, speaks of it as being in the neighbourhood of Beth-horon, and as being identical with the town afterwards called Nicopolis, which was about 22 miles from Jerusalem. This agrees with the situation of Emmaus mentioned in the Book of the Maccabees, which was in the plain country of Judaea (1 Macc. iii. 40), and not far from Bethhoron (1 Macc. ix. 50). To this there are two objections: (1) the reading of the commonly-received text, which makes Emmaus only 60 furlongs, or some 7 miles, from Jerusalem. But this objection is diminished by the reading of the newly-discovered Sinaitic MS., which gives 160 furlongs, and which would make this Emmaus agree, as regards its distance from Jerusalem, with the Emmaus of the Maccabees, and with the Emmaus or Nicopolis of S. Jerome and Eusebius. The other objection is the supposed difficulty the two disciples would have in going to Emmaus from Jerusalem and returning the same evening. Both these objections are considered in the note.*

¹ S. Ambrose, in Luc. xiv. 35; vol. ii. p. 1847.

² S. Epiphanius, Hæres. xxiii. 6; vol. i. p. 306.

³ S. Gregory Magnus, in præfat. in lib. Job i. 2; vol. i. p. 517.

⁴ Theophylact, in Luc. xiv. 35; vol. i. p. 491.

* Emmaus.—The following is a summary of the argument with respect to the situation of Emmaus:—

"There can be no doubt, that in the earliest period of which we have any record, after the apostolic age, the opinion prevailed in the Church, that Nicopolis (as it was then called) was the scene of that narrative. Both Eusebius and Jerome, in the fourth century, are explicit on this point: the one a leading bishop and historian, the other a scholar and translator of the Scriptures. Indeed they seem to have known of no other interpretation; nor is there a trace of any other in any ancient writer. The same opinion continued general down through succeeding ages until the commencement of the fourteenth century: when slight traces begin to appear of the later idea, which fixed an Emmaus at Kubeibeh: a transfer of which there is no earlier vestige, and for which there is no possible ground, except to find an Emmaus at about sixty stadia from the Holy City.

"Thus for thirteen centuries did the interpretation current in the whole Church regard the Emmaus of the New Testament as identical with Nicopolis. This was not the voice of mere tradition, but the well-considered judgment of men of learning and critical skill, resident in the country, acquainted with the places in question, and occupied in investigating and describing the scriptural topography of the Holy Land. The objections which lie against this view have been well presented by Reland and others; and are the four following:—

"First.—The express statement of Luke, that Emmaus was distant from Jerusalem sixty stadia. Such is indeed the present reading, as found in all the editions, and in most of the manuscripts of the New Testament that have come down to us. But it is no less true, that several manuscripts, and some of them of high authority, read here one hundred and sixty; and thus point to Nicopolis. This may then have been the current reading in the days of Eusebius and Jerome. There seems indeed to be a strong probability that it actually was so: since otherwise, those Fathers, in searching for the Emmaus of Luke, had only to seek at the distance of sixty stadia from Jerusalem in order to find it. We therefore may draw at least this definite conclusion, viz. that in their day such an Emmaus was unknown; and also, that probably their copies read one hundred and sixty stadia. It may have been that the word, or numeral letter signifying a hundred, had early begun to be dropped from the text by a lapse of transcribers; and that this was increased as copies were multiplied in other lands, by copyists who knew nothing of Palestine; until at length, by degrees, the omission became current in the manuscripts. Indeed how if any lib. de Viris illust. cap. lxiii.; vol. ii. p. 675.

¹ S. Jerome, Epist. cviii. (alias 27) ad Eustochium, Epitaphium Paulæ 8; vol. i. p. 883.

in Ezek. cap. xlviii. 21; vol. v. p. 488.

in Obad. v. 19; vol. vi. p. 1113.

of the manuscripts now extant were written in Palestine. There exist likewise, in the New Testament, other examples of erroneous readings, which have doubtless, in like manner, crept in through the error of transcribers.

"Second.—Josephus (B. J. vii. 6. 6) relates that Vespasian (or Titus) assigned in Palestine a place of habitation for eight hundred men whom he had dismissed from his army: it was called Emmaus, and was distant from Jerusalem sixty stadia. This, it is said, confirms the present reading of the New Testament. But since, as is well known, the works of Josephus were copied in a later age, almost exclusively by Christian transcribers, this passage would very naturally be conformed to the current reading in Luke; while it is also true that several manuscripts of Josephus still read here thirty stadia. This, at least, shows the reading to be variable, and therefore doubtful; so that it can have no weight in determining the text of the New Testament. Indeed, the original of it may just as well have been one hundred and sixty.

"Third.—The Emmaus of Luke and of Josephus, it is said, is called a village; while Nicopolis was a city. But the word employed by Luke (κώμην) signifies strictly a town without walls, a country-town, as distinguished from a fortified city; and that used by Josephus (χωρίον) denotes a place, and is also put for a fortified post or town. Emmaus had been laid in ashes by Varus, shortly after the death of Herod, and would seem not to have been fully rebuilt until the third century, when it received the name of Nicopolis. When Luke wrote, therefore, it was probably still a place partially in ruins and without walls; a fitting post for a colony of disbanded soldiers.

"Fourth.—The distance of Nicopolis from Jerusalem is too great, it is said, to admit of the return of the two disciples the same evening, so as to meet the assembled Apostles. This, however, would depend not so much upon the distance as upon the time when they set off. They 'rose up the same hour' (Luke xiv. 32), and naturally returned in haste to make known their glad tidings, although with all their haste they could not well have traversed the distance in less than five hours. It was not yet evening when they arrived at Emmaus, and if they set off to return even as late as six o'clock, which at that season would be about sunset, they might reach the city by eleven o'clock. The Apostles were assembled, and the doors were shut 'for fear of the Jews' they had indeed partaken of an evening meal, but this had already been long ended, for Jesus afterwards inquires if they have there any food. It was evidently late. There is nothing, therefore, impossible or improbable in the supposition that the two had

(2) The opinion most generally received in modern times is that Emmaus is on or near the site of the modern village of Kubeibeh, about 7 miles from Jerusalem. The only authority for this is the reading of the commonly-received text.

Perplexed and disheartened, the two disciples were discoursing on the events of the last few days, when Jesus drew near and went with them. Two reasons¹ have been assigned why they did not recognize Him: (1) The form in which He appeared, which S. Mark (xvi. 12) calls another form (ἑτέρα μορφή); and (2) because their eyes were holden that they should not know Him—that is, by some supernatural power. After His Resurrection, Jesus appeared to His disciples in His own Body, but glorified, and in some mysterious manner their power to recognize Him seems to have depended on the strength of their love and on their belief in His Resurrection.

Having drawn from them a confession that their hopes in Jesus as the deliverer of Israel had been disappointed, He shows them that Jesus was to redeem Israel not from their temporal enemies, but from sin and from the devil, and that He was to accomplish this by His Death on the Cross, and that thus He was to enter into the glory of His kingdom by rising from the dead and ascending into heaven. He then unfolds to them the meaning of the Scriptures which relate to

S. MATTHEW.	And as they were eating,	Jesus took bread,	and blessed it,	and brake it,	and gave it to the disciples (xxvi. 26).
S. MARK.	And as they did eat,	Jesus took bread,	and blessed,	and brake it,	and gave to them (xiv. 22).
S. LUKE.		And He took bread,	and gave thanks,	and brake it,	and gave unto them (xxii. 19).
S. LUKE.	As He sat at meat with them,	He took bread,	and blessed it,	and brake,	and gave to them (xxiv. 30).

S. MATTHEW.	ἐσθιόντων δὲ αὐτῶν,	λαβὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς	τὸν ἄρτον,	καὶ εὐλογήσας,	ἔκλασε,	καὶ ἐδίδου τοῖς μαθηταῖς.
S. MARK.	καὶ ἐσθιόντων αὐτῶν,	λαβὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς	ἄρτον,	εὐλογήσας,	ἔκλασε,	καὶ ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς.
S. LUKE.		καὶ λαβὼν	ἄρτον,	εὐχαριστήσας,	ἔκλασε,	καὶ ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς.
S. LUKE.	καὶ ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ κατακλιθῆναι αὐτὸν μετ' αὐτῶν,	λαβὼν τὸν ἄρτον,	εὐλόγησε,	καὶ κλάσας		ἐπέδιδον αὐτοῖς.

It will thus be seen at a glance that the resemblance could not possibly be greater. 2. The usual blessing at meals would take place before the meal commenced, as is natural, and as the Evangelists always represent our Saviour as Himself. When they approached the end of their journey, "He made as though He would have gone further" (προσποιεῖτο πῶρρότερό πορεύεσθαι). This probably means that in order to give them the opportunity of asking Him to abide with them, when they ceased to proceed, Jesus still continued to advance until they pressed Him to stay. No deceit could possibly be exercised by Jesus: here there was no scope for such. The expression may even contain some allusion to His Ascension.² It is generally supposed that one or both these disciples dwelt at Emmaus, and that they had been to Jerusalem for the Passover.

When the hearts of the disciples burnt with love for Jesus, and their belief in His Resurrection was confirmed "as He sat at meat with them, He took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them. And they knew Him." That this was the Eucharistic blessing of bread, and not the ordinary blessing before meals, has been the belief of some of the most eminent commentators on Scripture from the earliest times.³ The following reasons add confirmation to this interpretation:—

1. S. Luke describes the blessing and the breaking of the bread here in exactly the same terms as S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke describe the blessing and the breaking of the bread in the Institution of the Eucharist. For instance:—

acting whenever they describe His blessing of bread at meals. But the blessing of the bread here was in the middle of the meal, or perhaps even at the end of the meal, as was the case in the Institution of the Eucharist. There can be little de Consens. Evang. lib. iii. 25; vol. iii. p. 1206.

¹ S. Augustine, Epist. ad Paulin. cxlix (alias 59), sec. 31; vol. ii. p. 643.

² S. Augustine, Contra Evang. ii. 51; vol. iii. p. 1362.

Quæst. mendacium, cap. xiii.; vol. vi. p. 538.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxiii. 1; vol. ii. p. 1182.

V. Bede, in Luc. xxiv. 28; vol. iii. p. 627.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xxiv. 28; vol. ii. p. 352.

hastened back a long distance, late at night, perhaps with much bodily effort, to declare to their brethren the wonderful things of which they had been witnesses. A like amount of travel, on an extraordinary occasion, would be nothing strange even at the present day.

"The case then may be thus presented:—On the one hand, the reading of good MSS. gives the distance of Emmaus from Jerusalem at one hundred and sixty stadia, at which point there was a place called Emmaus, which still exists as the village Amwās: and all this is further supported by the critical judgment of learned men residing in the country near the time, as also by the unbroken tradition of the first thirteen centuries. On the other hand, there is ³ S. Jerome, Epist. cviii. (alias 27) ad Eustochium, Epitaphium Paulæ 8; vol. i. p. 883.

S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 25; vol. iii. p. 1206.

Serm. cccxxv. (alias de Tempore 140) cap. ii.; vol. v. p. 1118.

V. Bede, in Luc. xxiv. 28; vol. iii. p. 627.

Theophylact, in Luc. xxiv. 28; vol. i. p. 495.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xxiv. 28; vol. ii. p. 354.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xxiv. 28; vol. viii. p. 859.

the current reading of sixty stadia in most of the present MSS., written out of Palestine, supported only by a doubtful reading of Josephus, but with no place existing either now or at the end of the third century to which this specification can be referred. So far as it regards the New Testament, it is a question between two various readings: one, now the current one in MSS. and editions, but with no other valid support; the other, supported in like manner by MSS., as also by facts, by the judgment of early scholars and by early and unbroken tradition. After long and repeated consideration, I am disposed to acquiesce in the judgment of Eusebius and Jerome."—ROBINSON, 'Later Researches,' p. 147.

doubt that Jesus partook of bread on this occasion with them to prove to the disciples that He was not a spirit only, but that He had also a living human Body; that then He took bread and blessed it and brake it and gave to them, and that immediately after He became invisible to them. There is no reason to suppose that our Saviour used a mode of giving thanks at meals which was so peculiar to Himself that the two disciples recognized Him by the use of it. In practice He conformed generally to the ritual that He found among the Jews. This is strikingly seen in His use of the Paschal ritual, which in our Saviour's time was as different as possible from the simple ritual prescribed to the Israelites in the first Passover. In the cases where He departed from the usual Jewish customs, such as respected the Sabbath and the frequent washing of the body, it was in order to point out to them that they were putting a ceremonial act in the place of a moral one, restricting to the body that which was meant to apply to the soul. The Jews were on the watch for every occasion to find fault with Him, and we may fairly presume that He would not unnecessarily deviate from their customs, and adopt a mode of giving thanks at meals peculiar to Himself, and thus throw a stumbling-block in the way of their believing in Him as the Messiah. The Eucharistic breaking of bread was not a novel mode of performing an existing rite, but a new Sacrament instituted by Himself. 3. This is also rendered probable from the effect produced. When they had partaken of the bread which He had blessed and gave to them—that is, of His Body—they knew Him. Though the Evangelist only mentions the blessing and giving of the bread, the probability is that He went on to bless and give them the cup also, and that S. Luke mentions only the first part as sufficient to describe the whole action. This is rendered more probable¹ by the terms in which S. Luke afterwards describes this act, “the breaking of the bread,” τῇ κλάσει τοῦ ἄρτου (v. 35), which are the very same words by which this same writer afterwards describes an undoubted celebration of the Eucharist in both kinds (Acts ii. 42; xx. 7). This would be the first celebration of the Eucharist after its Institution, and we need not wonder that Jesus gave them proof of the miraculous nature of that mystery by becoming known to them through it.

A writer of the seventeenth century,² who is usually a trustworthy commentator on Scripture, has held that the Evangelist intends to represent Jesus as blessing and breaking and giving only the bread, and not as also going on to bless and give them the cup, and would regard this as an instance of communion in one kind only, and as a warranty to the Church for that custom. To this it is sufficient to reply that the Primitive Church did not regard this as in any sense a warranty for such a conclusion. This is plain from the language of S. Paul, and from the custom of the universal Church for many centuries, and from the fact that communion in one kind, though permitted for some centuries previously, was not finally settled as the rule of even the Western Church, until the Council of Constance, A.D. 1414–1418.³ In this Council it was decreed, “Circa S. Eucharistia sacramentum quod licet Christus sub utraque specie instituerit, eundemque administrandi modum Ecclesia Primitiva retinuerit, his tamen non obstantibus, consuetudo Ecclesie, quæ sub specie panis tantummodo a Laicis suscipitur, est observanda.”⁴

When Cleopas and his companion reach Jerusalem, they found the disciples gathered together, and discussing the Resurrection of Jesus, which had been attested by the women and by Peter; and as soon as the two appear the disciples eagerly impart this news to them, which they in their turn confirm by their own experience, and relate how that Jesus had gone with them, how He had opened to them the Scriptures, how He had sat down to meat with them, and how He had become known to them in the breaking of the bread. Some⁵ have supposed that the Evangelist's narrative implies that the appearance of Jesus to Simon Peter was prior to His appearance to the two at Emmaus; others⁶ that it was after. The appearance of Jesus to the two disciples

¹ Maldonatus, in Luc. xxiv. 30; vol. ii. p. 355.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xxiv. 30; vol. viii. p. 859.

³ Cave, Historia Literaria, sub voce Concilium Constantiense.

⁴ Bingham's Antiq., Book xv. c. 2. p. 812.

⁵ Landon's Manual of Councils, p. 157.

[Joyce,

Joyce, England's Sacred Synods, pp. 460, 465.

⁶ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 25; vol. iii. p. 1204.

⁷ McClellan, New Testament, p. 534.

* Communion under both kinds.—“That in the solemn public administration of the Lord's Supper the laity received under both kinds, from the foundation of the Church of Christ to the twelfth century, is admitted on all hands. (See Mabillon, Acta SS. Bened. Sæc. iii. præf. c. 75.) The danger of spilling the consecrated wine led to the adoption of a tube, or fistula, through which it might be drawn.

“When this practice, too, was found to have its peculiar disadvantages, the custom sprang up in some churches, and continues in the East to this day, of administering to the people the Eucharist Bread dipped in the consecrated wine, in which case the particle was administered by means of a spoon, made for that purpose. This practice seems to be alluded to in the first canon of the Third Council of Braga (A.D. 675), which condemns those who were accustomed ‘intinctam eucharistiam populus pro complemento communionis porrigere.’ In this case we are not to understand that the administration of the immersed particle was over and above communion proper, for the later portion of the canon distinctly implies that this ‘intincta eucharistia’ was substituted for the evangelical practice of administering separately the bread and the cup. How this practice, which was condemned in the West as schismatical and against apostolic tradition, came to be so widely spread in the East, is difficult to say. That in the time of Chrysostom the deacon still ministered the cup to the people may be shown by various passages in his works, which proves that the administration of ‘eucharistia intincta’ had not then begun in the Byzantine Church. Nor is it easy to say when it was introduced. This manner of communicating was widely prevalent in ancient times in the case of sick persons.”—Smyth's Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, vol. i. p. 416.

going to Emmaus was not an uncommon subject with the great preachers among the Fathers.¹

For verses 36-43 see also S. Matthew, ch. xxviii. page 500.

36. ¶ And as they thus spake, Jesus Himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

S.V. He Himself.

Vulg. Stetit Iesus in medio eorum.

37. But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit.

38. And He said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts?

V. in your heart.

Vulg. in corda vestra.

39. Behold My Hands and My Feet, that it is I Myself: handle Me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see Me have.

S. My Feet and My Hands.

Vulg. Videte manus meas, et pedes.

40. And when He had thus spoken, He shewed them His Hands and His Feet.

41. And while they yet believed not for joy, and wondered, He said unto them, Have ye here any meat?

A. believed Him not and wondered for joy.

Vulg. Adhuc autem illis non creditibus, et mirantibus præ gaudio.

42. And they gave Him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honeycomb.

S.V. omit and of an honeycomb.

Vulg. partem piscis assi, et favum mellis.

43. And He took it, and did eat before them.

A. before all.

Vulg. Et cum manducasset coram eis, sumens reliquias dedit eis.

The disciples were terrified and affrighted, because, though the doors were shut, Jesus stood in the midst of them. They concluded that, as He had passed through the shut doors, He must be a spirit (πνεῦμα); that is, a being possessed of a spiritual nature only, but not a being possessed of a body and soul. They were unable to distinguish between a spirit or spiritual being, and a Man or human being whose Body was endowed with the supernatural powers generally possessed by spirits only: for of such they had had no experience. It was to correct such thoughts as these which arose in their hearts, and to convince them that He was not a spiritual being, but a Man, and the same Man, the Son of Mary, whom they had known for the three years before, that He showed them His Hands and His Feet, or, as S. John says, His Hands and His Side, each Evangelist probably mentioning that on which he fixed his attention most.

Whether the disciples did handle the Body of Jesus, and touch the print of the nails in His Hands and Feet and the gash in His Side, cannot now be known for certain. Many of the ancient writers thought they did, and that those especially did who were most full of doubt with respect to His being the same whom they had known before, the Son of Mary.²

—There is every reason to believe that our Saviour's Body after His Resurrection retained not the wounds which He had received in His Hands and Feet and in His Side, by the nails and the spear; not wounds unhealed, but the scars or marks or cavities where those wounds had been. He retained the print of the wounds in His Body, in order that He might heal the wounds in the faith of His disciples.³

To convince His disciples still further that He was not a spiritual being, but a glorified human being, possessing a Body and a Soul, Jesus asked them for meat, and they gave Him a piece of a broiled fish and of an honeycomb, which He ate before them. Some of the most ancient MSS., like the Sinaitic, Vatican, and Alexandrine, omit the words "and of an honeycomb," and S. Cyril in his commentary on this verse makes no allusion to it. Other ancient commentators refer to it, and some give a symbolic meaning to it.⁴

It has been remarked⁵ that, because our Saviour's Resurrection Body retained the marks of the wounds which He had received from the nails and from the spear, and because He ate food, we are not to conclude that such will be the normal condition of our bodies after the resurrection, either that they will retain scars of the wounds which they had in life, or that they will take food to sustain them. He retained the print of the nails and of the spear, and He took food, as proofs to His disciples that He had a real Body,

¹ See Augustine, Sermon. cccxxiv. (alias 87). cccxxv. (alias 140). cccxxvi. (alias 88), cccxxvii. (alias 145), cccxxix. (alias 146); vol. v. pp. 1115-1128.

² S. Leo Magnus, Epistol. cxx. (alias 93) ad Theodoret., cap. iii.; vol. i. p. 1050.

— Epistol. cccxxix. (alias 110) ad Juvenalem, cap. i.; vol. i. p. 1103.

V. Bede, in 1 Epistol. Joan. i. 1; vol. iv. p. 86.

—, in Luc. xxiv. 44; vol. iii. p. 631.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xxiv. 39; vol. ii. p. 359.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xxiv. 39; vol. viii. p. 861.

³ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xxiv. 38; vol. v. p. 948.

S. Augustine, Sermon. cccxxvii. (alias de Tempore 145) cap. iii.; vol. v. p. 1124.

S. Augustine, Epistol. cii. (alias 49) ad Deogratias, quæst. i.; vol. ii. p. 372.

S. Leo Magnus, Sermo de Ascens. i. 3; vol. i. p. 396.

⁴ S. Cyril Alex. in Luc. xxiv. 38; vol. v. p. 948.

S. Augustine, Sermo cclxlii. (alias de Tempore 147) cap. ii.; vol. v. p. 1139.

S. Jerome, lib. cont. Joan. Ierosol. 26; vol. ii. p. 379.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxiv. 5; vol. ii. p. 1187.

V. Bede, in Luc. xxiv. 42; vol. iii. p. 631.

Theophylact, in Luc. xxiv. 42; vol. i. p. 486.

⁵ S. Augustine, Epistol. cii. (alias 49) ad Deogratias, quæst. i. 6; vol. ii. p. 372.

Euthymius, in Luc. xxiv. 41; vol. iii. p. 675.

V. Bede, in Luc. xxiv. 43; vol. iii. p. 631.

and that He was the same Man whom they had known before, the Son of Mary.

The question has been asked whether the fact that the disciples handled Jesus, and touched the scars in His Hands, His Feet, His Side, and that they saw Him take food, was a sufficient proof of the truth of the Resurrection, a complete proof that He was not a mere spirit, but a human being; a Man, and the same Man, with whom they had conversed for three years, the Son of Mary. The answer given to this question has been, that though these facts taken by themselves might not be a perfect proof, logically speaking, that these taken in connection with the ancient prophecies and with our Saviour's own predictions respecting the Resurrection, with His miracles and teaching, and with the fact that He appeared to them at intervals for forty days—that all these taken together are a sufficient moral proof; that is, a proof sufficient to convince the reason of man, sufficient to warrant any human being in believing and acting on them.¹

For verses 44-49 see also S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 500.

44. And He said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning Me.

V.A. These are My words: S. omits and after Moses.
Vulg. Hæc sunt verba quæ locutus sum.

45. Then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures,

46. And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day:

S.V. Thus it is written that the Christ would suffer and rise.

47. And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

S.V. repentance for the remission.

¹ S. Thomas Aquinas, Summa iii. 55, art. vi.; vol. iv. p. 510.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlvii. p. 631.
Maldonatus, in Luc. xxiv. 39; vol. ii. p. 362.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xxiv. 39; vol. viii. p. 861.

* Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, &c.—“We are told by Apollonius (apud Euseb. Eccl. Hist. v. 18; vol. ii. p. 480, Migne), an author of the second century, that there was a tradition (and a tradition of such a date must be received with the utmost respect) that the Saviour gave commandment to the Apostles not to leave Jerusalem till after twelve years from His Ascension; and Eusebius (Eccl. Hist. iii. 7; vol. ii. p. 236) goes so far as to say, that during the whole forty years which elapsed between the death of Christ and the destruction of Jerusalem, the greater part of the disciples, together with James the Bishop, still continued there, God afford-

48. And ye are witnesses of these things.

S.V. omit And.

49. ¶ And, behold, I send the promise of My Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high.*

S. omits behold: S.V. omit of Jerusalem.

Many² have held that our Saviour spake the words which S. Luke here records, not on the day of the Resurrection, but on the day of His Ascension: for in the Acts of the Apostles (i. 4, &c.) this same Evangelist represents Jesus as delivering in substance these same words on the day of His Ascension. Confirmation is added to this by the reflection that it would most probably not be on the day of His Resurrection, but on the day of His Ascension, that He would bid them tarry in Jerusalem until the Descent of the Holy Spirit upon them. Others think that He may have uttered these words more than once.

Jesus gives His disciples every possible proof of the truth of His Resurrection. He is seen of them, He converses with them, He is handled by them, He eats with them; and as if all these proofs were not sufficient, He refers them to the Old Testament, under the Hebrew division of the Law, the prophets, and the Psalms, and declares that these had already foretold that He should “thus suffer”—that is, on the cross, and rise from the dead the third day; and still further He imparts to them a supernatural power to understand these Scriptures. Thus He appeals both to their senses and to their reason, and also enlightens their intellectual perception. He declares that their office as Apostles consisted in being witnesses of the truth of His Resurrection, and in preaching to all nations repentance and remission of sins through faith in the risen Jesus. He then renews the promise of the Holy Spirit, or of power from on high, which He reminds them had been already promised by the Father through the prophets, as in the prophet Joel (ii. 28), and bids them tarry in Jerusalem until they are clothed with this power.

For verses 50-53 see also S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 507.

50. ¶ And He led them out as far as to ² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cl. p. 646.

Maldonatus, in Luc. xxiv. 48; vol. ii. p. 367.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Luc. xxiv. 44; vol. viii. p. 863.

ing it this advantage, in the hopes that it would even yet repent and be saved. Moreover, the same tradition of Apollonius is recorded in the ‘Preaching of Peter,’ a document certainly in existence in the beginning of the second century, or about the year of our Lord 123 (Grabe, Spicileg. i. p. 62): the passage to this effect, quoted also from it by Clemens Alexandrinus (Strom. vi. 5; vol. ii. p. 264, Migne), in the accuracy of the substance of it thus deriving a further sanction from him.—J. J. BLUNT, ‘Hist. of Christian Church,’ p. 43.

Bethany,^a and He lifted up His hands, and blessed them.

S.V. And He led them out unto Bethany.
Vulg. Eduxit autem eos foras in Bethaniam.

51. And it came to pass, while He blessed them, He was parted from them, and carried up into heaven.

S*. omits and carried up into heaven.
Vulg. et ferebatur in celum.

52. And they worshipped Him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy :

V*. omits great.
Vulg. cum gaudio magno.

53. And were continually in the Temple, praising and blessing God. Amen.

A*. omits in the Temple : S.V. omit praising and : S. omits Amen.
Vulg. Et erant semper in templo, laudantes et benedicentes Deum. Amen.

S. Luke passes from the day of Christ's Resurrection to the day of His Ascension, and relates nothing of what took place in the interval between them : neither His appearance to the disciples when Thomas was with them (John xx. 26), nor to the disciples when fishing on the lake of Tiberias (John xxi. 1), nor to the multitude of brethren on the mountain in Galilee (Matt. xxviii. 16). He relates with a careful minuteness how Jesus led His disciples to Bethany, and how with uplifted hands He blessed them, and how while He blessed them He ascended from Mount Olivet (Acts i.) into heaven.

The object of S. Luke, in common with each of the other Evangelists, is to relate that the Word was made flesh and dwelt among men, and then ascended into heaven ; that He ascended into heaven, not as God only, but as God and Man—not only that His Divine nature ascended, but that His human Body and Soul ascended too ; that the same Body ascended into heaven which was born of the Blessed Virgin Mary, which was nailed to the cross and pierced with the soldier's spear, which was laid in the sepulchre and rose again the third day ; that the same Soul ascended into heaven, which had compassion on the multitudes and was grieved with their unbelief, which mourned over Jerusalem and which was in an agony in the garden.

The Ascension of Jesus into heaven had already been prefigured by the apparent ascension of Elijah into heaven, or by his being carried in a chariot of fire towards heaven. But Elijah had ascended not really into heaven, but only towards heaven, or in the direction of heaven (הַשָּׁמַיִם; ὡς εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, Septuagint, 2 Kings ii. 11). For no mortal man could ascend into heaven until Jesus the God-Man had first ascended ; and it is as the fruits of His Ascension and as His brethren that any of the children of Adam can ascend into heaven.

S. Luke lastly relates how the disciples spent their time between the Ascension of Jesus and the Descent of the Holy Spirit, in the Temple praising and blessing God, whom they had worshipped when they saw Him ascend into heaven, and whom they now continued to worship. They were waiting for the promised Descent of the Holy Spirit upon them, and they were living a life of preparation for this.

It has been remarked¹ that S. Luke begins his Gospel with describing a scene in the Temple, the offering of incense by Zacharias, and the appearance of the angel to him, and that he ends his Gospel with the description of another scene in the Temple, the continued service of praise rendered to God by the Apostles and others.

¹ V. Bede, in Luc. xxiv. 53 ; vol. iii. p. 634.

^a Bethany.—See note on Bethphage, Matt. xxi. 1, page 337.

S. JOHN.

THE Evangelist S. John was by trade a fisherman, the son of Zebedee and the brother of James, generally called James the greater, who was the first Bishop of Jerusalem, and who was afterwards put to death by Herod (Acts xii. 2). His mother's name is nowhere in the Gospels mentioned as such, the sons being generally designated from their father, "the sons of Zebedee," and the mother from her sons, "the mother of Zebedee's children." But from a comparison of Matt. xxvii. 56 and Mark xv. 40, we gather that her name was Salome.

MATTHEW xxvii. 56.

Among which was
Mary Magdalene,
and Mary the mother of James and Joseph,
and the mother of Zebedee's children.

MARK xv. 40.

Among whom was
Mary Magdalene,
and Mary the mother of James the less and of Joseph, and Salome.

From the fact that the Peshito Version puts in an "and" in John xix. 25, "Now there stood by the cross of Jesus His mother, and His mother's sister, and Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene," it has been inferred that the Evangelist intends to indicate four women instead of three, as has generally been understood. If this be correct, comparing this verse with Matt. xxvii. 56 and Mark xv. 40, we gather that the sister of the mother of Jesus was Salome, the mother of the Evangelist, and that John was the first cousin of Jesus. This relationship to Jesus may also furnish the reason why Salome came to Him and requested that her sons might sit one on His right hand and the other on His left in His kingdom (Matt. xx. 21).

According to the opinion generally received in the earliest times of the Christian Church, S. John was the youngest of the Apostles, and remained unmarried to the end of his life.¹ After the dispersion of the Apostles throughout the world, S. John received Asia as his field of labour, and became the first Bishop of Ephesus, where he afterwards died, and was buried.² He is said to have lived sixty-eight years after the Crucifixion, into the reign of Trajan.

In addition to the proofs adduced in the Introduction to this Commentary, that the Fourth Gospel was from the first accepted by the Church as the work of S. John the

It is related³ that, before S. John was banished to the Isle of Patmos by the Emperor Domitian, he was thrown into a caldron of boiling oil, from which he came out unharmed.

He is said to have written his Gospel to confute the various heresies on the Incarnation and kindred subjects that he saw springing up around him. His determination to show no countenance to those who corrupted the doctrines of Christ is shown by a characteristic story which is recorded by Irenæus, the disciple of Polycarp, who was himself the disciple of S. John. On one occasion when the Evangelist was on the point of entering a public bath he beheld the heretic Cerinthus, and such was the Evangelist's horror at his conduct that on perceiving him he immediately rushed out. Irenæus⁴ says that several were then living who had heard Polycarp, the disciple of S. John, relate this.

Of the Four Gospels, S. John's⁵ was written last, and after his other works, the Epistles and the Apocalypse. The date usually assigned to this is about A.D. 99, or a little earlier. This would be about sixty-six years after the Ascension, and twenty-seven after the destruction of Jerusalem.

Evangelist, it may not be out of place to add here the results arrived at by one or two independent inquirers into the same subject.

¹ Tertullian, de Monogam. 17; vol. ii. p. 952.

S. Jerome, adv. Jovin. i. 26; vol. ii. p. 246.

² S. Irenæus, contr. Hereses, ii. 22 (alias 39), p. 785.

iii. 3, p. 854.

Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 1 and 31; vol. ii. pp. 216 and 280.

³ S. Jerome, de Viris illust. 9; vol. ii. p. 623.

— adv. Jovin. i. 26; vol. ii. p. 247.

S. Jerome, in Dan. ix. 24; vol. v. p. 547.

⁴ Tertullian, de Præscript. 36; vol. ii. p. 49.

S. Jerome, adv. Jovin. i. 26; vol. ii. p. 247.

⁵ S. Irenæus, contr. Hereses, iii. 3, p. 853.

Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iii. 28, and iv. 14; vol. ii. pp. 276, 337.

⁶ S. Jerome, in Matt. prolog.; vol. vii. p. 18.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. argument.; vol. viii. p. 867.

"The results of an inquiry into the origin of the Fourth Gospel may be briefly described as follows:—

"A chain of external evidence, which no modern criticism has been able to break, and of which recent investigations have brought to light some lost links, connects the Fourth Gospel with the Apostolic age, and with its reputed author, the Apostle John; and it is only strong dogmatic prepossessions which have led any, whether in earlier or later times, to challenge the consensaneous tradition of the ancient Church respecting its authorship.

"The internal indications of the Johannine authorship of the Fourth Gospel are yet more decisive; and the assaults of hostile criticism have not only proved futile, but have served in a remarkable manner to confirm the conclusions which have been drawn from the external evidence.

"The Gospel itself presents phenomena which can be explained only on one or other of the following suppositions: either that the author was an eye-witness of the scenes which he describes, or that he was a writer in comparison with whom the greatest poets and writers of fiction sink into insignificance.

"The Prologue of the Fourth Gospel, which is alleged to savour of the philosophy of a later age, is in entire harmony with the circumstances under which that Gospel is said to have been composed, and with the residence of the writer in a city such as Ephesus, which was one of the chief centres of Eastern and Western civilization. The peculiar characteristics, as regards style and terminology, of the Fourth Gospel accord with the known antecedents of the reputed writer, and are exactly such as might have been expected in the work of a Palestinian Jew who had been brought into contact in his early years with Hellenists, who remained in Jerusalem for many years after the Ascension, and who spent the later portion of his life in Ephesus.

"The fundamental points of difference between the Fourth Gospel and the Synoptic Gospels, as regards their contents and their general mode of dealing with a common subject, are utterly inexplicable on the supposition that the Fourth Gospel is the production of a later age; and they admit only of one explanation, viz. that the writer was an eye-witness of what he has recorded, and that he knew that his book would be received as the genuine production of that Apostle whose authority it claims. On the other hand, the coincidences with the Synoptic Gospels—whether the writer was or was not acquainted with them—are such as to afford strong corroborative evidence of the substantial truth of both.

"The alleged geographical and historical inaccuracies of the Fourth Gospel admit for the most part of satisfactory explanation, and of reconciliation with the results of ancient and modern research. In any case they amount only to difficulties, similar to those which are found in all writings of antiquity; and they are such as further investigation and further discoveries may entirely remove."—Edinburgh Review, Jan. 1877, p. 42.

"We now sum up the results of our inquiries as to the external attestation of the Fourth Gospel. We see that, as soon as traces of the Gospel meet us, it is testified to, both inside and outside of the Church, as a work of John's, and as a book of unquestionable Apostolic authority. But these traces and this testimony go beyond the middle of the second century, and drive us back to the beginning of it. Now it is fixed that the Apostle John lived at Ephesus, and that till late—to Trajan's time. And it is just there that we have to seek for the home of John's Gospel. But the nearer to the time of John we are forced to go back with this book, the more impossible it is that the recollections of the Apostle, which were still so fresh and general, would have so generally, and without opposition, let such a book as the Gospel is be pressed on them if it had not been Apostolic, and, above all, if it had been so foreign to John's sphere of thought and to his leanings, as men say it is.

"Therefore the external testimony attests the Johannine composition. The character of the book itself must needs make this supposition impossible if we are not to believe this testimony. In that case there would be nothing left for us but to let this book stand as an insoluble problem. The question is, whether or not the character of the book itself forbids its composition by John. . . .

"We may close this inquiry with the following result:—The author of the Gospel shows himself to be a Jew by birth, who is familiar with Jewish circumstances and with the Old Testament Scriptures in the original, and who has so vivid a conception of the events which he relates*that we must suppose him to be an eye-witness of them. He expressly names himself as such a witness. And from the way in which he speaks of himself in relation to the other disciples of Jesus, whom he calls by their names, he forces us to think of the Apostle John. After all this, we have no reason to hold his claim for a fiction. The fiction would be carried out far too artistically and far too cunningly to fit either the simplicity or the moral character of this book."—LUTHARDT, 'St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel,' pp. 162, 185.

"I can as little think of the author of the Fourth Gospel as a forger, or even disciple laboriously building upon other men's foundations, as see in him a passive organ of infallibility. Both views equally fail to explain the facts; and by the facts in this, as in all cases, we must judge, certain that in the end the interests of truth must accord with them. In this case they seem to give a clear verdict. The Gospel is the work of the Apostle, the son of Zebedee; it is the record of an eye-witness of the life of our Lord Jesus Christ; and its historical character is such as under the circumstances might be expected—it needs no adventitious commendation to make it higher."—SANDAY, 'The Authorship and Historical Character of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 303.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

"Palestine is a name which in the Authorized Version is applied only to Philistia, and not to the rest of the country. . . . The country is spoken of in the Bible by more than one name. It is called the Land of Canaan, as opposed to the Land of Gilead, lying on the opposite side of the river Jordan; the Land of the Hebrews (Gen. xl. 15 only); the Land of the Hittites (Josh. i. 4); the Land of Israel (1 Sam. xiii. 19) during the Monarchy. In Hosea it is the Land of Jehovah; in Zechariah it is the Holy Land; in Daniel the Glorious Land; in Amos it is the Land of the Amorite, while sometimes it is simply the Land. Between the Captivity and the time of our Lord, the name Judea had extended itself over the whole country; and in 2 Esdras xv. 31, it is called the Land of Zion.

"The name of Palestine was given to the whole country after the Christian era. Ptolemy (A.D. 161) calls it Palestina. Later on it was divided into Palestina Prima, Secunda, and Tertia.

"The name by which it was known in the Middle Ages was 'Terra Sancta,' the Holy Land.

"The whole country is no larger than the Principality of Wales—viz. 140 miles long and 40 in average breadth. Small as this theatre of the most stupendous drama in the world's history is, it has never to this day been scientifically or even superficially explored. From end to end are ruins. There are ruins which the Israelites found when first they dispossessed the Canaanites; ruins which date from their own two monarchies; ruins of that long period between Nehemiah and Herod; ruins Herodian; ruins Roman, but post-Herodian; ruins Christian; ruins Saracenic; ruins Christian, of later date; and ruins Mohammedan. On every hill-top is a tel, on every hill-side is a mound. . . .

"The country consists of plains, hills, and torrent beds. A range of hills extends from the Lebanon southwards, having on either side, east and west, a belt of lowland, to which access is gained by the ravines (fumaras, as Captain Burton calls them), the wadies which, dug in summer, carry down the winter rains to the plains below."—"Our Work in Palestine," p. 1, &c.

"From afar off we could distinguish the lay of the waters of Merom, heading the huge and unique fissure which is bisected by the rapid Jordan till it expires in the bitter waters of the Asphaltite Lake. The whole formed an epitome of Syria and Palestine, which have been said to epitomize the habitable world. Here we saw at a glance all the gradations of climate, from the tropical to the polar. We were viewing from Alpine heights the plains of the temperate zone, falling into the torrid about Tiberias. Our range embraced every form of ground, coast-scenery and inland, volcanic and sedimental, mountain and hill, fertile plain, rich valley and garden-land, oasis and desert, rock and precipice, fountain and spring sweet and mineral, river, rivulet, and torrent, swamp and lakelet and sea. There were all varieties of vegetation, from the mushroom to the truffle; from liquorice to rhubarb and sumach; from the daisy, the buttercup, and the bilberry, to the mulberry, the grape-vine, and the fig; from the pine, the walnut, and the potato, to the palm, the plantain, and the jujube. A fair range of products—coal, bitumen (Judaicum), and lignite, iron, copper, and pyrites, with perhaps other metals still unexplored—lies beneath its surface, expecting the vivifying touch of modern science; whilst its gypsum, syenite, porphyry, pudding-stone, and building-material have been worked since the dawn of history. Thus the country was directly fitted for the three chief forms of human society—the pastoral, the agricultural, and the commercial, represented by the tent, the cottage, and the city on the shore. In its palmy days the land must in many places have appeared to be one continuous town; whilst even at the present time there is no country of proportional area which can show so many and such contrasts of races. Syria and Palestine, I may safely prophesy, still await the hour when—the home of a free, a striving, and an energetic people—it will again pour forth corn and oil, it will flow with milk and honey, and it will 'bear, with proper culture, almost all the good things that have been given to man.'—BURTON'S 'Unexplored Syria,' vol. i. p. 78.

"In Palestine, as in Greece, every traveller is struck with the smallness of the territory. He is surprised, even after all that he has heard, at passing, in one long day, from the capital of Judea to that of Samaria; or at seeing, within eight hours, three such spots as Hebron, Bethlehem, and Jerusalem. The breadth of the country, from the Jordan to the sea, is rarely more than fifty miles. Its length, from Dan to Beersheba, is about a hundred and eighty miles. The time is now gone by when the grandeur of a country is measured by its size, or the diminutive extent of an illustrious people can otherwise than enhance the magnitude of what they have done."—STANLEY'S 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 113.

"The length of the Holy Land from Dan to Beersheba is only one hundred and forty miles, and its breadth sixty miles; and yet this small area, the theatre of the most engrossing portion of the world's history from the earliest times, still remains only partially explored."—"Recovery of Jerusalem," p. 471.

"Of Palestine we are shamefully ignorant, though the whole area of the country is not larger than Lancashire and Yorkshire together."—MACGREGOR, 'The Rob Roy on the Jordan,' p. 212.

"The great elevation of this country above the level of the sea is most forcibly brought out by the journey we have made. From the moment of leaving the Arabah has been almost a continual ascent. We mounted the great Pass of Sâfeh, and having mounted, hardly descended at all, crossed the great table-land of Beersheba, and then mounted the barrier of the hills of Judah, and thence have been mounting ever since. Hebron is, in fact, only four hundred feet lower than Helvellyn [three thousand and fifty-five feet]. How well one understands the expression, 'They went down into Egypt.'"—STANLEY'S 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 102.

"The atmosphere of Palestine is very clear; and there are many points from which Mount Hermon at one extremity of the Holy Land, and the Dead Sea at the other, can be distinctly seen, the view thus extending over a distance of one hundred and fifty miles. The hill-tops also are all bare, and large trees are rarely seen."—"Recovery of Jerusalem," p. 441.

"I am struck by what is also noticed by Miss Martineau—the Western, almost the English character of the scenery. Those wild uplands of Carmel and Ziph are hardly distinguishable (except by their ruined cities and red anemones) from the Lowlands of Scotland or of Wales; these cultivated valleys of Hebron (except by their olives) from the general features of a rich valley in Yorkshire or Derbyshire."—STANLEY'S 'Syria and Palestine,' p. 101.

Jerusalem.—"The position of Jerusalem, as must always be borne in mind, is that of a mountain city. From the Mediterranean Sea on the one hand, and the Dead Sea and Valley of Jordan on the other, there is a steady ascent to the city. It stands 2,500 ft. above the level of the Mediterranean and 3,700 ft. above that of the Dead Sea. Moreover, it is built on that mountain ridge, the backbone of Palestine, which runs through the country from north to south. . . .

"The city is built on a plateau of tertiary limestone. The geological character of the country, viewed as a whole, is described (Ordnance Survey Notes, p. 3) as consisting of tertiary and cretaceous strata. . . .

"It is clear to the most superficial observer that the city is built on two hills, one of which, Zion, is considerably higher than the other, Moriah. . . .

"Jerusalem, as is well known, is honeycombed with excavated caves, natural caverns, cisterns cut in the rock, subterranean passages, and aqueducts. In its underground chambers and catacombs it is richer than any known city—Rome, Constantinople, Paris, or Kiev, or any other. The catacombs of Rome, Kiev, and Paris appear to have been originally designed for the most part as places of burial: those of Constantinople were uniformly constructed for the purpose of water-supply. In Jerusalem the excavated chambers and caves were for three purposes. Some of them, especially the Bahr el Khebir, were for the supply of water; some, those outside the city, were for burial-places; while of those under the city, the vast caverns known as the Royal Quarries were actually used as quarries for the stone used in building. The entrance to them is by an opening so low that it is necessary to stoop: but the height rapidly increases. The evidences of the place having been used as a quarry are very plain and numerous—the cuttings, about four or five inches wide, still remaining; and on the left-hand side of each cutting may be observed a little hollow formed at the corner, into which a wick and oil may have been placed. The quarries extend, so far as was ascertained when measurements were taken, to about 200 yards in a south-easterly direction: they are about 100 yards wide. But considerable additions must be made to these measurements, owing to quite recent discoveries by Mr. Schick. . . .

"The town itself covers an area of 209·5 acres, of which thirty-five are occupied by the Haram Esh Shereef. The remaining space is divided into different quarters: the Christian quarter, including the part occupied by the Armenians, taking up the western half; the Mohammedans have the north-east portion; the Jews the south-east. The whole population of the city is now about 16,000. The circumference is very nearly two and a quarter miles, while the extent of the city—small as it is, it now seems too large for the population—may be illustrated by the fact that it would very nearly occupy the space included between Oxford Street and Piccadilly on the north and south, and Park Lane and Bond Street on the east and west. . . .

"The first mention of Jerusalem is that of Judges i. 8, when the children of Judah fought against it, took it, smote it with the edge of the sword, and set the city on fire. That was its first siege, about 1400 B.C., so that its history begins 700 years before Rome was founded, and even then the city is already built. . . .

"The siege of Titus was the twentieth in its history. . . . In 1244 A.D. the city underwent its last and twenty-seventh siege, at the hands of the wild Kharezmian hordes, who plundered the city and slaughtered the priests and monks.

"The present walls were built by Suleiman the Magnificent in the year 1542. . . .

"Jerusalem is builded according to the prophecy of Jeremiah, on her own heap. There was a city there before the time of David. The second city may be called that of Solomon—from B.C. 1000 to B.C. 597, a space of 400 years. We have next the city of Nehemiah, which lasted for say 300 years, and gave place to a more magnificent and Græcised city, which gradually grew up in the stormy period of Herod and his immediate predecessors. This city, destroyed by Titus A.D. 70, was followed, after an interval of complete ruin, by a purely Roman city of the later empire, which lasted till the time of the Mohammedans. The Christian city of Godfrey and the Baldwins may be called the seventh city; and the modern city—the result of 600 years of Moslem rule—may fairly be called the eighth.

"Rubbish and débris cover every foot of the ground, save where the rock crops up at intervals. The rubbish is the wreck of all these cities, piled one above the other. If we examine it, we have to determine, at every step, among the ruins of which city we are standing. Solomon, Nehemiah, Herod, Hadrian, Constantine, Omar, Godfrey, Saladin, Suleiman—each in turn represents a city."—'Our Work in Palestine,' pp. 21–67.

"Jerusalem, in a sense the metropolis of the world, has still many nooks not even visited by men who can use their eyes and pens, and yet all that is left of that city would easily be contained in Hyde Park."—MACGREGOR, 'The Rob Roy on the Jordan,' p. 212.

COMMENTARY ON S. JOHN'S GOSPEL.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO S. JOHN.^a

S.V. After John: A. The Gospel after, or according to, John.
Vulg. Sanctum Iesu Christi Evangelium secundum Iohannem.

CHAPTER I.

[1. The divinity, humanity, and office of Jesus Christ. 15. The testimony of John. 39. The calling of Andrew, Peter, &c.]

[Vulg. Verbum est Deus, vita, et lux omnium hominum illuminans; per quod omnia facta sunt, et quod homo factum est: cui testimonium perhibet Iohannes, dicens se vocem, et indignum qui illius solat corrigiam calceamenti, cumque esse agnum Dei qui tollit peccatum mundi: Andreas alter duorum Iohannis discipulorum qui Iesum secuti sunt, adducit ad illum etiam Simonem fratrem suum; Philippus quoque a Iesu vocatus, adducit ad eum Nathanael.]

THE Incarnation may justly be called the basis of the Christian religion. A flaw here would bring down the whole superstructure. Even an error in apprehending it materially affects a man's whole moral system. Hence arises the necessity for the utmost care in any explanation of it, and in every single term that is used to explain it. Some¹ of the early commentators held that the principal object which S. John proposed to himself in his Gospel was to set forth at greater length, and with more preciseness than had been done by the other Evangelists, the true nature of the Incarnation; and thus to forearm the Church against the dangerous errors that had already begun to be disseminated by Cerinthus, Ebion, and the other heretics who taught that Jesus Christ had no existence before He was born of the Virgin Mary.² He had already done this in his Epistles, and he pursues the same course in the opening verses of his Gospel.

¹ S. Irenaeus, contr. Haeres. iii. 11, p. 879.

S. Epiphanius, Haeres. li. 2; vol. i. p. 889.

S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. i.; vol. vi. p. 21.

^a The headings of the Gospels.—"The headings of the Gospels, κατά, &c., 'according to,' &c., certainly do not belong to the authors themselves. We cannot say from what date they spring. When Volkmar thinks that John's heading belongs about to the time 175, that is just his opinion and nothing more. But even if the Gospel did not bear that name on its brow at the very first, yet they still knew from the beginning from whose hands they received a Gospel. These books did not rove around in the book-market as anonymous writings. Like the Epistles, they were handed over by their authors to certain persons or Churches, and were from the first supported by the authority of these. On the ground of this knowledge, then, those who collected the Gospels and put them together added the names of the authors in headings. We have, therefore, every cause to assume that they flow to us from entirely trustworthy sources. The more a book was already in general use in the Church, the less could a feigned name be added at a later date. This obtains in full measure, as we have seen, for our Gospel [S. John]. Those collections, however, may very well have begun by the end of the first century, at a time when they could, with a little care and foresight, still learn the author's name quite certainly. It would be stupid to suppose that this collection of our four Gospels arose only at the time when the collection secured general recognition almost everywhere in the wide countries in which Christians lived; namely, about the middle of the second century."—LUTHARDT, 'St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 79.

S. Jerome, de Viris illust., cap. 9; vol. ii. p. 623.

V. Bede, in Joan. i.; vol. iii. p. 636.

Maldonatus, in Joan. i.; vol. ii. p. 375.

^b The Gnostics.—"With the exception of the Gnostic errors there is no evidence of any heresy being introduced into the Church in the first century. While the Apostles were alive it was perhaps hardly possible; and though the Fathers have led us into the habit of speaking of the Gnostics as heretics, we must carefully distinguish between the ancient and modern use of the term heresy. When a Christian adopted the Gnostic notion concerning Christ, he in fact ceased to be a Christian: he perhaps retained the name, but he gave up his hope of a resurrection and his faith in a Redeemer; and I conceive that S. John had these cases in view when he said that already 'there were many Antichrists;' and when he added, 'They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us.' (1 John ii. 19.) It is therefore very essential to be remembered that ecclesiastical history speaks of no heresy, i.e. of no division of opinion among genuine Christians in the first century. I am now speaking of matters which concern salvation, or which are held by one party or the other to be necessary for belief. There were doubtless many local customs and religious ceremonies which were observed in one country and not in another. The great division of Jewish and Gentile Christians was likely to lead to differences which

It has been said¹ that the general object of all the Scriptures is to set forth two things respecting the Saviour of mankind: first, that He as God has been from all eternity, that He is God the Son, and is described as The Word, The Brightness of the Father, and Wisdom; secondly, that He took upon Him the nature of man, and was born of the Virgin Mary. An eminent exemplification of this is found in S. John's Gospel: for in the first two verses he shows the relation of Jesus Christ to God. He is Himself God;

He is the Word; He is from all eternity, before all created things; He is of the same nature as the Father. Then in the next he shows His relation to created things.

1. In the beginning^a was the Word,^b and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

^a Vulg. In principio erat Verbum, et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum.

2. The Same was in the beginning with God.

¹ S. Athanasius, Oratio iii. 29, contra Arianos; vol. ii. p. 385.

nothing perhaps but the presence and authority of the Apostles could have kept within bounds. If the Jews had believed that the Mosaic ceremonies were necessary for salvation, this would have been a heresy in the fullest and worst sense of the term; and whenever such a notion was started, it was met by the Apostles with the most decisive opposition. But when the matter was put upon its right footing, and the ceremonies of the Mosaic law were retained merely as national customs, then there was no rupture of the bond of peace, and Jews and Gentiles held communion with each other, though the former adhered to practices which were looked upon by the latter as wholly unnecessary."—DR. BURTON, 'Lectures on Eccles. Hist.' p. 285.

"The reader who is only acquainted with the modern use of the term heresy will be surprised to find the Gnostics spoken of as heretics. But such is the invariable usage of the early ecclesiastical writers: and Gnosticism borrowed so largely from the Gospel as well as from Judaism that its professors were often confounded with the Christians; and, what is worse, many real Christians, as the Apostles had foretold, began in the second century to go over to the Gnostics. The leading feature of this extravagant theology was to acknowledge the divinity of Christ, but not of Jesus. Christ, who was an emanation from God, was united with Jesus at His Baptism, but He neither became Incarnate at His Birth nor expired with Him on the cross. This doctrine therefore, though it confirms in a remarkable manner the pre-existence and divinity of Christ, entirely destroyed the notion of His atonement. Jesus Christ was merely a preacher of righteousness sent into the world to reveal the knowledge of the true God, and to free mankind from the tyranny of the Demiurgus or the Evil Principle. This is a clue to the whole mystery of Gnosticism; and the various modifications of it, as taught in this century by Basilides, Cerdon, Marcion, and Valentinus, consisted mostly in the number and arrangement of the successive Æons or Emanations which were supposed to have proceeded from the First Cause."—Ibid., p. 335.

^a In the beginning.—"The first verse of S. John's Gospel may be thus interpreted: 'In the Beginning,' or Origin, i.e. in the Father, 'was the Word.' Thus S. Athanasius himself understands that text (Orat. iv. 1; vid. Orat. iii. 9; Nyssen, contr. Eunom., iii. p. 106; Cyril, Theaur. 32, p. 312)."—DR. J. H. NEWMAN on Athanasius; Library of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 195.

^b The Word (ὁ Λόγος).—"As the Word of God our Lord is considered first as in the bosom of the Father, next as proceeding from Him to create, form, and govern the universe. This contrast is sometimes expressed by the terms ἐνδοξένος and προφορικός, the internal and the external Word. These are taken from heathen philosophy, nor are they often used by the Fathers; but the idea they convey has a Christian meaning and requires terms equivalent to these to express it, if these, on account of their associations, are inexpedient. Heathen terms are not in themselves inexpedient, since S. John uses the word 'Logos,' which the Platonists, as well as Philo, had used before him; and as these authors further used the two words 'Eniathetic' and 'Prophoric' in order to denote a change of condition in the Eternal Word, which Christianity also acknowledges, it was but natural in Christian writers to follow the precedent of the Apostle; and as he designated the Second Person of the Trinity as the Logos, in like manner to call Him Eniathetic, viewed in His relation to God, and Prophoric viewed in His relation to creation.

"The history of the words is this: Logos, as we know, stands in Greek both for reason and for speech; and since the inward thought is immediately connected with and passes on into language, as its corresponding development, it was natural to consider the mental and vocal act as virtually one, as the common term expressing them suggested, as if a thought were only an inchoate word, and a word only a perfected thought. Hence the Logos Eniathetic and Prophoric of the Stoics, who thus both distinguished and identified thinking and speaking. Still more appropriately were these terms applied by the Platonists to their Divine Logos, to express his state of repose and then of action. From the Platonists the terms passed over to Christian writers."—Idem, 'Theological Tracts,' p. 162.

"It is especially to be observed here (as has been long ago remarked by learned men) that almost always in the Scriptures of the Old Testament, when God is mentioned as speaking to us, assisting us, or in short holding any sort of intercourse with us, the Chaldee paraphrases render the name of God by מְיֹמִר, מְיֹמִר, Verbum, 'the Word'; no doubt signifying hereby, that in such passages it is the Son of God who is spoken of, who is called the Word, and whose peculiar office it is to hold converse with us. Thus in Gen. iii. 8, instead of 'They heard the voice of the Lord God,' the Targum of Onkelos and the Targum ascribed to Jonathan have, 'They heard the voice of the Word of the Lord God.' In the same chapter, verse 9, instead of 'And God called unto Adam,' the Jerusalem Targum has, 'And the Word of the Lord called unto Adam'; just as we have before seen that Philo understood the passage. In Gen. xxi. 20, instead of 'And God was with him,' Onkelos has, 'And the Word of the Lord was with him, to help him'; and in the 22nd verse, instead of 'God is with thee,' Onkelos has, 'The Word of the Lord is with thee for a help.' So in Hosea i. 7, instead of 'And I will save them by Jehovah their God,' the Targum of Jonathan has, 'I will save them by the Word of the Lord their God, &c.'—EP. BULL, 'Defence of the Nicene Creed,' vol. i. p. 33.

"Nor is it probable that either Plato or Trismegist did first discover so much of this grand mystery as was known among the heathens before S. John wrote his Gospel. And it is no less impious than improbable to suspect that S. John should borrow those divine expressions of the Word's divinity from any heathen philosopher, as that blasphemous Platonic exclaimed when he read the beginning of his Gospel, that he had stolen his expressions out of his master Plato. Nor was S. John himself the first of all sacred writers which did display the titles of the Son of God by ὁ Λόγος, or by the Word, Light, or Life, which was without beginning or ending: most probable it is that Plato and Trismegist did borrow that light which they had in that mystery from the ancient Hebrews, or from rules received by them by constant tradition, for interpreting not one but many passages in Moses and the prophets, as S. John there doth from the same rule or tradition. No doubt the Chaldee paraphrasts did express the divine nature of the Son of God by the Word; the one before S. John did write his Gospel, the other near upon the same time: for Jonathan (as Fagius tells us) did live

It has been thought probable¹ that the Evangelist quotes the words "In the beginning," ἐν ἀρχῇ, from the first chapter of Genesis, and uses them much in the same sense as they are used there; namely, before all creation. Many have expressed their admiration at S. John's skilful choice of words here, and have declared that no verb could have expressed his general meaning better, or have agreed with "In the beginning," ἐν ἀρχῇ, and The Word, ὁ Λόγος, better than ἦν, the imperfect tense of the verb εἶμι, to be.

All the early writers agree that by the term "The Word," ὁ Λόγος, S. John here means God the Son, though they are not agreed as to the reason why He is so described, some giving one reason and some another, and some² have thought that there were more reasons than one why this particular term was used to describe God the Son.

It has been also held³ that the word πρὸς, translated "with," contains in itself a fulness of meaning, and that S. John purposely used it to express several great truths, such as—1. That there is a distinction of Persons between God the Father and God the Son;⁴ 2. That there is a Oneness of nature and of will between the Father and the Son; and 3. That the Son is equal to the Father.⁵

Thus in a threefold form, The Word was with God—The Word was God—The Same was in the beginning with God, the Evangelist expresses: 1. That The Word is a distinct Person from the Father; 2. That He is One with the Father; 3. That He is from all eternity. Being with the Father, He is a different Person from the Father: being God, He is co-equal with the Father.

He then shows the relation of the Word to created things.

3. All things were made by Him;⁶ and without Him was not any thing made that was made.⁷

Vulg. Omnia per ipsum facta sunt; et sine ipso factum est nihil quod factum est.

¹ S. Basil, Oratio in Joan. i. 1; vol. iii. p. 473.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 1; Homil. iii.

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 1; vol. i. p. 505.

³ S. Augustine, in Joan. i. 1, tract. i.; vol. iii. p. 1384.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. i. p. 3.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 1; vol. viii. p. 874.

⁵ S. Jerome, Epist. liii. (alias 103) ad Paulinum; vol. i. p. 543.

⁶ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. i. p. 4. [Maldonatus,

Maldonatus, in Joan. i. 1; vol. ii. p. 388.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 1; vol. viii. p. 875.

⁷ Tertullian, contr. Praxeas, cap. 5; vol. ii. p. 160.

⁸ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. i. 1; vol. vi. p. 32.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 1; Homil. iii.

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 1; vol. i. p. 506.

⁹ S. Cyril Hierosol. Catechesis, xi. 10; p. 701.

about the time wherein Herod re-edified the second Temple; Onkelos a little after the destruction of it and of Jerusalem by Titus." Dean Jackson then goes on to quote instances.—DEAN JACKSON on the Creed, Bk. vii. ch. 27; vol. vii. p. 243.

"All the titles of the Son of God are consistent with each other, and variously represent one and the same Person. 'Son' and 'Word' denote His derivation; 'Word' and 'Image,' His similitude; 'Word' and 'Wisdom,' His immateriality; 'Wisdom' and 'Hand,' His co-existence. 'If He is not Son, neither is He Image.' S. Athan. Orat. ii. 2. 'How is there Word and Wisdom unless there be a proper offspring of His substance?' Orat. ii. 22; vid. also Orat. iv. 20, &c. vid. also Naz. Orat. 30, n. 20; Basil, contr. Eunom. i. 18; Hilar. de Trinit. vii. 11; tract. in Joan. xlviii. 6, and in Psalm lxxv. (xlv.) 5."—DR. J. H. NEWMAN on Athanasius; Lib. of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 27.

"The point in which perhaps all the ancient heresies concerning our Lord's divine nature agreed, was in considering His different titles to be those of different beings or subjects, or not really and properly to belong to one and the same person; so that the Word was not the Son, or the Radiance not the Word, or our Lord was the Son, but only improperly the Word, not the true Word, Wisdom, or Radiance. Paul of Samosata, Sabellius, and Arius agreed in considering that the Son was a creature, and that He was called, made after, or inhabited by the impersonal attribute called the Word or Wisdom. When the Word or Wisdom was held to be personal, it became the doctrine of Nestorius."—Ibid., p. 41.

¹ All things were made by Him.—"The Catholic doctors of the first three centuries all with one accord taught that Jesus Christ, that is, He who was afterwards called Jesus Christ (before He was made man, that is, before His Birth, according to the flesh, of the most Blessed Virgin), existed in another nature far surpassing the human; that He appeared to holy men as a prelude to His Incarnation; that He always presided over and provided for that Church which He was afterwards to redeem with His own blood; and that thus from the beginning the whole order of the divine administration (as Tertullian expresses it) had its course through Him; and that moreover, before the foundations of the world were laid, He was present with God His Father, and that through Him this universe was created."—BR. BULL, 'Defence of the Nicene Creed,' vol. i. p. 15.

² Without Him was not any thing made that was made.—"Some end the sentence here, and some but begin it, and some neither, but bring it a step further. Some point thus, 'All things were made by Him, and without Him was nothing made. That which was made in Him was life.' A reading which Chrysostom (Hom. v. in John) saith was used by heretics, whereby to prove the Holy Ghost to be a creature. . . . Others read it thus: 'All things were made by Him, and without Him was nothing made which was made by Him.' And then they begin a new sentence: 'He was life,' &c., a reading conceived to have been used by the Manichees, whereby to prove duo principia, a good and a bad.

"Ignatius Martyr, Epist. ad Antioch, Tatianus, in Harmon. Chrysostom, in loc. and others of the ancients, and the Arabic, Syriac, Italian, Spanish, French, Dutch, read as we do; and so the very sense of the place requireth to read."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John i.; vol. i. pp. 392, 394.

"The words 'that was made,' which end this verse, were omitted by the ancient citers of it, as Irenaeus, Clement, Origen, Eusebius, Tertullian, nay, Augustine; but because it was abused by the Eunomians, Macedonians, &c., as if derogatory to the divinity of the Holy Spirit, it was quoted in full, as by Epiphanius, Ancor. 75, who goes so far as to speak severely of the ancient mode of citation (vid. Fabric. and Routh, ad Hippol. contr. Noët. 12)."—DR. J. H. NEWMAN on S. Athanasius; Library of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 208.

"The verse was not ended as we at present read it, especially in the East, till the time of S. Chrysostom, according to Simon (vid. in Joan. Hom. v. init.), though, as we have seen above, S. Epiphanius had spoken strongly against the ancient reading. S. Ambrose (de Fide, iii. 6) refers it to the Arians; Lampe refers it to the Valentinians on the strength of Iren. (Har. i. 8, n. 5). Theophilus,

To the Arians, who held that the Son was inferior to the Father, and quoted this verse as showing that He was a mere instrumental, subordinate cause in the act of creation, the Catholic Fathers¹ were accustomed to reply: (1.) That though the word διὰ, rendered "through," was sometimes used as a mere instrumental cause, this could not be the sense in which S. John here used it: for he had just shown that the Word was God, One with God, and from all eternity with God, and it would be contradictory to this to say that the Word was used as a mere subordinate instrument in the act of creation. (2.) That the word διὰ does not necessarily imply an inferior, subordinate, or mere instrumental cause, and that S. Paul sometimes uses it of God the Father, as in the following instance, "God is faithful, by whom (δι' οὗ) ye were called unto the fellowship of His Son Jesus Christ our Lord" (1 Cor. i. 9). It is clear, therefore, that whatever may be the sense of the words "All things were made by Him," and they probably contain a great fulness of meaning, the use of the word "by" (διὰ) does not imply any inferiority in the Word, or that He is not a willing intelligent co-operator in the work of creation.

To the Macedonians, who argued that if all things were created by the Word, the Holy Spirit must have been created by Him, they replied² that S. John had precluded this by the limitation which he introduces, namely, "All things, that were created, were created by Him."

In early times there seems to have been some uncertainty as to the way in which this sentence should be divided. Three different methods were used. Some³ pointed the words thus: "Without Him was not any thing made, that was made in Him," and then began a new sentence. Most⁴ of the Latin commentators and some of the Greek divided the sentence thus: "Without Him was not any thing made," then came a full stop, and the next sentence ran, "That which was made in Him was life," &c. The third reading is that which is now generally adopted, and which was always used by some of the Greek commentators.⁵ The heretical teachers would doubtless use that division of the sentence which most favoured their peculiar opinions. But even among the most orthodox of the commentators there seems to have been a difference of opinion as to the way in which these words ought to be divided.

4. In Him was life;^a and The Life was the light of men.

S. in Him is life.
Vulg. In ipso vita erat, et vita erat lux hominum.

5. And The Light shineth in darkness;^b and the darkness comprehended it not.

As the Creator The Word is the Author of all natural life. It may be partly on this account that He is called The Life, ¹ S. Athanasius, Oratio contr. Arianos, ii. 31, &c.; vol. ii. p. 212. S. Basil, de Spiritu Sancto, 10; vol. iv. p. 83.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 3; Homil. v.

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 3; vol. i. p. 508.

Euthymius, in Joan. i. 3; vol. i. p. 13.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. i. p. 6.

Maklonatus, in Joan. i. 3; vol. ii. p. 393.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 3; vol. viii. p. 877.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 3; Homil. v.

S. Gregory Nazian., Oratio de Spiritu Sancto, 12; vol. ii. p. 145.

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 3; vol. i. p. 510.

³ S. Epiphanius, Ancoratus, 75; vol. iii. p. 157.

S. Hilary Pict., de Trinitate, ii. 20; vol. ii. p. 63.

⁴ Tertullian, adv. Hermogen., cap. xx.; vol. ii. p. 216.

S. Ambrose, de Fide, iii. 6; vol. iii. p. 598.

S. Augustine, in Joan. i. 3, tract. i.; vol. iii. p. 1387.

Clemens Alexandrinus, Pædag. i. 6; vol. i. p. 281.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. i. 3; vol. vi. p. 77.

⁵ Nonnus, Metaphrasis Evangel. Joan. i. 3, 4, p. 3.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 3, Homil. v.

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 3; vol. i. p. 510.

Euthymius, in Joan. i. 3; vol. iv. p. 15.

in loc. (if the comment. on the Gospels is his), understands by ὁὐδὲν 'an idol,' referring to 1 Cor. viii. 4. Augustine, even at so late a date, adopts the old reading (ὁὐδ. de Gent. ad lit. v. 29-31). It was the reading of the Vulgate, even at the time it was ruled by the Council of Trent to be authentic, and of the Roman Missal. The verse is made to end after 'in Him' (thus, ὁὐδὲν, ὁ γέγονεν ἐν αὐτῷ) by Epiphanius, Ancor. 75, Hil. in Psalm cxlviii. 4; Ambrose, de Fide, iii. 6; Nyssen, in Eunom. i. p. 84 app., which favours the Arians. The counterpart of the ancient reading, which is very awkward ('What was made in Him was life'), is found in August. loc. cit. and Ambrose in Psalm xxxviii. 33, but he also notices, 'What was made, was in Him' (de Fide, loc. cit.). It is remarkable that S. Ambrose attributes the present punctuation to the Alexandrians in loc. Psalm. in spite of Athanasius' and Alexander's (Theod. Hist. i. 3, p. 733), nay, Cyril's (in loc. Joan.) adoption of the ancient.—Ibid. p. 335.

^a In Him was life.—To the Eternal Father belongs the origin of life, by the necessity of His nature. From Him it passes eternally to the Eternal Son of His love by necessary derivation; and to the Son Incarnate by voluntary gift. For, 'as the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself.' And one main purpose of S. John's Gospel was to reveal how this gift is extended from the Head to the members. 'These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His name' (John xx. 31). Such is His own merciful declaration, 'I am come that they might have life' (John x. 10); 'I am the Resurrection and the Life' (John xi. 25); 'I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life' (John xiv. 6); and the evil of those who rejected Him He states to be, 'Ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life' (John v. 40). Such is the manner in which the gift of life is communicated to mankind; it comes through the intervention of the one Mediator, and the agency of His Spirit: 'for if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin, but the spirit is life because of righteousness.' So that when Cornelius and his friends had been marked out as qualified subjects for Baptism by the supernatural descent of the Holy Ghost, it was said, 'Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.'—R. I. WILDERFORCE, 'On the Holy Eucharist,' p. 414.

^b ἦν is the reading of all the MSS. in the world, except the Sinaitic and Codex Bezae.—BURTON, 'On the Last Twelve Verses of S. Mark,' p. 110.

^c The Light shineth in darkness.—On the corruption of man's nature, see note on Matt. xviii. p. 295.

7. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through Him might believe.

8. He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light.

9. That was the true Light,^a which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.^b

Valg. Ut lux vera quæ illuminat omnem hominem venientem in hunc mundum.

By one means or another¹—by reason, by the works of creation, and by conscience—He offered light to all who were in the world, but men in general failed to recognize and to pay the honour which was due to Him as the Creator. Even when God came and dwelt among men, how few believed in Him; not to say, how few of those who were His own by creation, how few of those who were His own peculiar people! So far were they from worshipping Him as God, that they put Him to death, the death which they themselves deemed accursed. The Romans were merely the instruments in His death; the Jews were His accusers and the authors of His Crucifixion. Of His twelve Apostles, of His seventy disciples, whom He had sent to teach and to work miracles, all forsook Him and fled.

10. He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not.^c

S. was made because of Him.
Valg. et mundus per ipsum factus est.*

11. He came unto His own, and His own received^d Him not.

Valg. In propria venit, et sui eum non receperunt.

God came unto mankind through the economy of the Incarnation. The Jewish nation was "His own," by choice (Deut. vii. 6); by purchase (Exod. xix. 4, 5); by covenant (Deut. xxvi. 18); and by kindred (Heb. ii. 16).

To the few who did receive Him He gave the privilege of becoming sons of God. He Himself, the Word, was the Son of God by Eternal Generation; they were to become sons of God by birth. But this birth was not, like their human birth, by the will of man, by the will of their parents, but by the will of God. Their human or natural birth had taken place independently of themselves. A condition was required prior to this birth; namely, they must believe in the Son of God the Word, who had come into the world.

12. But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His Name:^e

*Margin, the right or privilege.
Valg. dedit eis potestatem filios Dei fieri.*

13. Which were born, not of blood,^f nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

V. A. Which were made.
Valg. Qui non ex sanguinibus, neque ex voluntate carnis, neque ex voluntate viri, sed ex Deo nati sunt.*

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 9; Homil. viii.
S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. i. 9; vol. vi. p. 124.

822 A.U.C. From these data it follows that a Sabbatical year must have occurred 189 years subsequently to the first period named, and 42 years before the last, i.e. the autumn of 779 A.U.C. I consider it therefore probable that John began his call to repentance immediately after the completion of his thirtieth year, at the commencement of the Sabbatical year which then occurred. However this may be, the Baptism of Jesus took place, at any rate, in the middle of this Sabbatical year."—WIESELER, 'Chronolog. Synopsis,' p. 185.

^a The true Light.—See note on John vi. 32.

^b Verse 9.—"This verse may be either read, 'which coming into the world, lighteth every man,' or as our English hath it; which latter is approved the true. 1. By the very place where the word coming or ἐρχόμενος lieth, for it followeth not immediately the word ὅς, but ἀνθρώπων, and so being joined with it, reason and the custom of grammar tell that it should be construed with it. 2. It is ordinary among the Jews to call men by this periphrasis, 'such as come into the world,' which idiom of the Hebrews the Evangelist followeth here. The Syriac readeth as we do."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John i.; vol. i. p. 392.

^c The world.—"From the signification of κόσμος as the material world, which is not uncommon in Scripture (Matt. xiii. 35; John xxi. 25; Rom. i. 20), followed that of κόσμος as the sum total of the men living in the world (John i. 29, iv. 42; 2 Cor. v. 19), and then upon this, and ethically, those not of the ἐκκλησία, the alienated from the life of God (John i. 10; 1 Cor. i. 20, 21;

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 9; vol. i. p. 512.
Euthymius, in Joan. i. 9; vol. iv. p. 19.

James iv. 4; 1 John iii. 13)."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on the 'Synonyms of the New Test.,' p. 206.

^d Received.—"In verse 11 it is παρέλαβον, in verse 12 it is ἔλαβον, which though they signify the same thing, yet might some distinction of sense be observed in the distinction of words: for Christ came among the Jews bodily, yet they would not so much as receive Him bodily, nor acknowledge Him for Messiah at all; but coming among the Gentiles by His Word and Spirit, they received Him spiritually."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John i.; vol. i. p. 393.

^e On His Name.—"That is, in or on Him: for the Name of God in Scripture doth often stand for God Himself, as Ps. lxxvi.; Micah vi. 9; Acts iii. 16, &c. 'For God is without any mixture or composition, but a most pure and simple essence, and therefore His Name and Himself are, not two several things, as they be in the creatures, but one and the same.' (R. Menahem on Exod. ix.)"—Ibid., p. 396.

^f Of blood, literally of bloods (ἐξ αἱμάτων).—"Not a few nouns which in most modern languages are used only in the singular, are in Greek authors and the New Testament employed for the most part in the plural. This is owing to their having, from a general, or Grecian, or Biblical point of view, a manifold or comprehensive signification.

^g Of the plural αἵματα, as source of descent, a direct parallel occurs only in Eurip. 'Ion,' 693, in the poetic style."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 189.

By three separate forms of expression the Evangelist shows that the privilege of becoming sons of God was not an inheritance, to which they succeeded as a matter of course, because they were sons of Adam, but that it was a supernatural gift, over and above their natural endowments, and that it was given to whom He would, and in the way in which He would. (1.) "Not of blood;" it was not a birth-right, nor in any way connected with natural descent. Their descent from Abraham, on which they prided themselves so much, could not give them this privilege of becoming sons of God. (2.) "Nor of the will of the flesh." (3.) "Nor of the will of man." It could not be acquired by any power inherent either in the body or in the mind of man.

* The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (ἐν ἡμῖν). — It is not in man's ability either to express perfectly or conceive the manner how this was brought to pass. But the strength of our faith is tried by those things wherein our wits and capacities are not strong. Howbeit because this divine mystery is more true than plain, divers having framed the same to their own conceits and fancies are found in their exposition thereof more plain than true. Inasmuch that by the space of five hundred years after Christ, the Church was almost troubled with nothing else saving only with care and travail to preserve this article from the sinister construction of heretics. Whose first mists when the light of the Nicene Council had dispelled, it was not long ere Macedonius transferred unto God's most Holy Spirit the same blasphemy wherewith Arius had already dishonoured His co-eternally begotten Son: not long ere Apollinarius began to pare away from Christ's humanity. In refutation of which impieties when the Fathers of the Church, Athanasius, Basil, and the two Gregories, had by their painful travails sufficiently cleared the truth, no less for the Deity of the Holy Ghost than for the complete humanity of Christ, there followed hereupon a final conclusion, whereby those controversies, as also the rest which Paulus Samosatenus, Sabellius, Photinus, Etnus, Eunomius, together with the whole swarm of pestilent demi-Arians, had from time to time stirred up since the Council of Nice, were both privately first at Rome in a smaller synod, and then at Constantinople in a general famous assembly, brought to a peaceable and quiet end, seven-score bishops and ten agreeing in that confession which by them set down remaineth at this present hour a part of our Church liturgy, a memorial of their fidelity and zeal, a sovereign preservative of God's people from the venomous infection of heresy.

"Thus in Christ the verity of God and the complete substance of man were with full agreement established throughout the world, till such time as the heresy of Nestorius broached itself, 'dividing Christ into two persons, the Son of God and the Son of Man, the one a person begotten of God before all worlds, the other also a person born of the Virgin Mary, and in special favour chosen to be made entire to the Son of God above all men, so that whosoever will honour God must together honour Christ, with whose person God hath vouchsafed to join Himself in so high a degree of gracious respect and favour.' But that the self-same person which verily is man should properly be God also, and that by reason not of two persons linked in amity, but of two natures, human and divine, conjoined in one and the same person, the God of glory may be said as well to have suffered death as to have raised the dead from their graves, the Son of Man as well to have made as to have redeemed the world, Nestorius in no case would admit.

"That which deceived him was want of heed to the first beginning of that admirable combination of God with man. 'The Word (saith S. John) was made flesh and dwelt in us.' The Evangelist useth the plural number, men for manhood, us for the nature whereof we consist, even as the Apostle, denying the assumption of angelical nature, saith likewise in the plural number, 'He took

This birth is by the will, by the operation, of God. The effect of this birth on the soul cannot, like the natural birth, be recognized by the senses. But nevertheless this birth is no fiction, no accommodation of language. It is more real than the natural birth, more lasting, more important to the soul, as much more so as the will of God excels the will of man.

This birth of man by the will of God is a great mystery. But the Birth of God of a woman is a greater, a more wonderful mystery even than this.

14. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us,^a (and we beheld His glory, the glory not Angels but the seed of Abraham" (Heb. ii. 16). It pleased not the Word or Wisdom of God to take to itself some one person amongst men, for then should that one have been advanced which was assumed and no more; but Wisdom, to the end she might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all, — she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us. The seeds of herbs and plants at the first are not in act but in possibility that which they afterwards grow to be. If the Son of God had taken to Himself a man now made and already perfected, it would of necessity follow that there are in Christ two persons, the one assuming and the other assumed; whereas the Son of God did not assume a man's person unto His own, but a man's nature to His own Person, and therefore took scmen, the seed of Abraham, the very first original element of our nature, before it was come to have any personal human subsistence. The flesh and the conjunction of the flesh with God began both at one instant; His making and taking to Himself our flesh was but one act: so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting. By taking only the nature of man He still continueth one person, and changeth but the manner of His subsisting, which was before in the mere glory of the Son of God, and is now in the habit of our flesh.

"Forasmuch therefore as Christ hath no personal subsistence, but one whereby we acknowledge Him to have been eternally the Son of God, we must of necessity apply to the person of the Son of God even that which is spoken of Christ according to His human nature. For example, according to the flesh He was born of the Virgin Mary, baptized of John in the river Jordan, by Pilate adjudged to die, and executed by the Jews. We cannot say properly that the Virgin bore, or John did baptize, or Pilate condemn, or the Jews crucify the nature of man, because these all are personal attributes; His person is the subject which receiveth them; His nature that which maketh His person capable or apt to receive. If we should say that the person of a man in our Saviour Christ was the subject of these things, this were plainly to entrap ourselves in the very snare of the Nestorians' heresy, between whom and the Church of God there was no difference, saving only that Nestorius imagined in Christ as well a personal human subsistence as a divine, the Church acknowledging a substance both divine and human, but no other personal subsistence than divine, because the Son of God took not to Himself a man's person, but the nature only of a man.

"Christ is a Person both divine and human, howbeit not therefore two persons in one, neither both these in one sense, but a person divine, because He is personally the Son of God; human, because He hath really the nature of the children of men. In Christ therefore, God and man, 'There is (saith Paschasius) a twofold substance, not a twofold person, because one person extinguisheth another, whereas one nature cannot in another become extinct.' For the personal being which the Son of God already had, suffered not the substance to be personal which He took, although together with the nature which He had the nature also as of the only-begotten of the Father,) a full of grace and truth.

The Incarnation is revealed to us by Holy Scripture, and it must be explained consistently with the language of Scripture. This is no subject for unbelieving, speculative reason to define. The teaching of the Catholic Church, which He took continueth. Whereupon it followeth against Nestorius, that no person was born of the Virgin but the Son of God, no person but the Son of God baptized, the Son of God conformed, the Son of God and no other person crucified; which one only point of Christian belief, the infinite worth of the Son of God, is the very ground of all things believed concerning life and salvation, by that which Christ either did or suffered as man in our behalf."—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.' v. 52, 1-3; vol. ii. p. 232, &c.

"That the Word was made flesh, is not in accordance with the views of any of the heretics: for the heretics who at that period entertained any false opinion respecting the person of the Lord Jesus (as we have observed somewhere already), may all be divided into two classes. One was that of the Phantasiasts, who, while acknowledging the manifest Godhead in our Saviour, took away from Him the human nature, thinking the conjoining of God with man utterly unworthy of the Divine majesty. . . . The other class of heretics, on the contrary side, acknowledged a human nature only in our Jesus, as the Cerinthians and Ebionites. However, it is but too plain that both classes denied that the Word of God was made flesh; that is, that Christ was God and Man. Lastly, in verse 17, the Apostle (as Grotius has remarked) incidentally confutes a heresy, which Cerinthus and Ebion held in common, as to the observance of the law of Moses being necessary to salvation. 'The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.'"—BISHOP BULL, 'Judgment of the Catholic Church,' vol. iii. p. 29.

"According to the received doctrine of the Church, all rational beings, and in one sense all beings whatever, are 'from God,' over and above the fact of their creation; and of this truth the Eusebians made use to deny our Lord's proper divinity. Athanasius lays down elsewhere that nothing remains in consistence and life except from a participation of the Word, which is to be considered a gift from Him additional to that of creation, and separable in idea from it. Thus he says 'that the all-powerful and all-perfect holy Word of the Father, pervading all things and developing everywhere His power, and illuminating all things visible and invisible, gathers them within Himself and knits them in one, leaving nothing destitute of His power, but quickening and preserving all things and through all, and each by itself, and the whole altogether.' (Contra Gentes, 42.) Again, 'God not only made us of nothing, but also vouchsafed to us a life according to God, and by the grace of the Word. But men, turning from things eternal to the things of corruption at the devil's counsel, have brought on themselves the corruption of death, who were, as I said, by nature corrupted, but by the grace of the participation of the Word had escaped their natural state, had they remained good.' (Incarn. 5.) Man thus considered is in his first estate a son of God and born of God, or, to use the term which occurs so frequently in the Arian controversy, in the number not only of the creatures, but of things generate, γεννητά. This was the sense in which the Arians said that our Lord was the Son of God; whereas, as Athanasius says, 'Things generate, being works, cannot be called generate, except so far as, after their making, they partake of the begotten Son, and are therefore said to have been generated also, not at all in their own nature, but because of their participation of the Son in the Spirit.' (Orat. i. 56.) The question then was, as to the distinction of the Son's divine generation over that of holy men; and the Catholics answered that He was ἐκ οὐκίας, from the substance of God: not by participation of grace, not by resemblance, not in a limited sense, but really and simply, and directed by the Holy Spirit, and limited by the language of Scripture and by the analogy of the faith, is to the following effect:—

"The Word was made flesh," not in the sense in which water is made wine by being mixed with it; not in the sense in which food is made flesh by being taken into it and assimilated to it; not in the sense in which gold is made into a therefore by an internal divine act."—DR. J. H. NEWMAN on Athanasius; Lib. of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 32.

"As of the only-begotten of the Father.—"Nothing can be plainer to the attentive student of Scripture than that our Lord is there called the Son of God, not only in respect of His human nature, but of His pre-existent state also. And if this be so, the very fact of the revelation of Him as such implies that we are to gather something from it, and attach in consequence of it some ideas to our notion of Him, which otherwise we should not have attached, else would it not have been made. Taking then the word in its most vague sense, so as to admit as little risk as possible of forcing the analogy, we seem to gain the notion of derivation from God, and therefore of the utter dissimilarity and distance existing between Him and all beings except God His Father, as if He partook of that unapproachable, incommunicable Divine nature, which is increate and imperishable.

"But Scripture does not leave us here: in order to fix us in this view, lest we should be perplexed with another notion of the analogy derived from that adopted sonship, which is ascribed therein to created beings, it attaches a characteristic epithet to His Name, as descriptive of the peculiar relation of Him who bears it to the Father. It designates Him as the only-begotten, or the Only Son of God, terms evidently referring, where they occur, to His heavenly nature, and thus becoming the inspired comment on the more general title. It is true that the term generation is also applied to certain events in our Lord's mediatorial history: to His resurrection from the dead; and, according to the Fathers, to His original mission in the beginning of all things to create the world; and to His manifestation in the flesh. Still, granting this, the sense of the word 'only-begotten' remains, defined by its context to relate to something higher than any event occurring in time, however great or beneficial to the human race.

"Being taken then, as it needs must be taken, to designate His original nature, it witnesses most forcibly and impressively to that which is peculiar in it, viz. His origination from God, and such as to exclude all resemblance to any being but Him, whom nothing created resembles. Thus, without irreverently and idly speculating upon the generation in itself, but considering the doctrine as given us as a practical direction for our worship and obedience, we may accept it in token that whatever the Father is, such is the Son. And there are some remarkable texts in Scripture corroborative of this view; for instance, that in the fifth chapter of S. John, 'As the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself. What things soever the Father doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise: for the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth Him all things that Himself doeth. . . . As the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom He will . . . that all men should honour the Son even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which hath sent Him.' This is the principle of interpretation acknowledged by the primitive Church. . . .

"The reverential spirit in which the Fathers held the doctrine of the genesis led them to the use of other forms of expression, partly taken from Scripture, partly not, with a view of signifying the fact of the Son's full participation in the divinity of Him who is His Father, without dwelling on the mode of participation or origination, on which they dared not speculate. Such were the images of the sun and its radiance, the fountain and the stream, the root and its shoots, a body and its exhalation, fire and the fire kindled from statue by the skilful hands of the workman, but rather in the way in which the soul and body being united together make one man.

The term "flesh" is here used for the whole man.¹ It is used in this sense in many places in Holy Scripture. The following are instances: "By the deeds of the Law there shall no flesh be justified in His sight." (Rom. iii. 20.) "Except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved." (Mark xiii. 20.) "That no flesh should glory in His presence." (1 Cor. i. 29.)

By this union the nature of God was not changed into man, nor the nature of man into God. Each remained perfect, with its own power, its own weakness, so to speak, its own will. The union was in the Person. God and Man became One Person, Christ Jesus. In the One Person there were two natures, two wills.

"And dwelt among us." Of old God had dwelt among His chosen people Israel, and had given visible tokens of His presence among them in the Tabernacle and in the Temple. For thirty-three years the Word made flesh sojourns or tabernacles among men. His glory as of the only-begotten of the Father, though veiled by His human nature, He manifests among them, in His life, in His miracles, in His Transfiguration on the Mount, in His glorious Resurrection and Ascension.

Some commentators² have thought that by the words "He dwelt among us" (ἐσκήνωσεν ἐν ἡμῖν) the Evangelist meant to say that He took upon Him our nature—the nature of man; others,³ that by the term "us" he more probably meant himself and the rest of the disciples, who had been His intimate companions, and had witnessed His daily life and miracles, and who could most truly say, "We beheld His glory." But the difference between these two interpretations is not very great.

As one of the three who had been chosen to behold His glory in the Transfiguration, S. John may make special reference to that event. S. Peter had already said: "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of His majesty. For He received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to Him from the excellent glory, This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with Him in the holy mount." (2 Peter i. 16-18.) S. John here adds his testimony to this fact: "We beheld His glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father."

There could be no question that the Word, the Second Person in the Godhead, was full of grace and truth. Though the Divine nature was veiled from the eyes of men by the Incarnation, it was not thereby diminished or affected. The Word made flesh, God Incarnate, was full of grace and truth. "In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." (Coloss. ii. 9.)

The Evangelist supports his own testimony by that of John the Baptist. Even before Jesus had begun His ministerial life the Baptist had spoken of Him to his disciples; and when He did come, he cried, saying, "This was He of whom I spake."

In verse 15 the Baptist, when speaking of Jesus, said, "This was He" (οὗτος ἦν); and in verses 27 and 30 he said, ¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 14; Homil. xi.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. i. 14; vol. vi. p. 157.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. ii. p. 15.
Maldonatus, in Joan. i. 14; vol. ii. p. 417.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 14; vol. viii. p. 883.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 14; Homil. xi.
S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. i. 14; vol. vi. p. 161.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. ii. p. 16.
Maldonatus, in Joan. i. 14; vol. ii. p. 418.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 14; vol. viii. p. 884.

it; all which were used as emblems of the sacred mystery in those points in which it was declared in Scripture, viz. the mystery of the Son's being from the Father, and, as such, partaker in His divine perfections."—DR. NEWMAN, 'Arians of the Fourth Century,' pp. 163 and 167.

"It is sometimes erroneously suggested that such illustrations as this [the sun and its radiance] are intended to explain how the Sacred Mystery in question is possible, whereas they are merely intended to show that the words we use concerning it are not self-contradictory, which is the objection most commonly brought against them. To say that the doctrine of the Son's generation does not trench upon the Father's perfection and immutability, or negative the Son's eternity, seems at first sight inconsistent with what the words 'Father' and 'Son' mean, till another image is adduced, such as the sun and radiance, in which that alleged inconsistency is seen to exist in fact. Here one image corrects another; and the accumulation of images is not, as is often thought, the restless and fruitless effect of the mind to enter into the Mystery, but is a safeguard against any one image, nay, any collection of images, being supposed sufficient. If it be said that the language used concerning the sun and its radiance is but popular, not philosophical, so again the Catholic language concerning the Holy Trinity may, nay must be, economical, not adequate, conveying the truth, not in the tongues of angels, but under human modes of thought and speech."—DR. J. H. NEWMAN on S. Athanasius; Library of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 43.

"S. Augustine tells us that we must distinguish between the two titles 'Only-begotten' (μονογενής) and 'First-born' (πρωτότοκος), interpreting the former by the words 'In the beginning was the Word,' and the latter by the Apostle's saying that He is 'First-born among many brothers,' that, since 'they were not such by nature, by believing they received power; that His Son might be Only-begotten with the Father, and First-born toward us.'"—Idem, 'Theological Tracts,' p. 161.

"πρωτότοκος is not an exact translation of Primogenitus, though Homer, as Petavius says, may use πρῶτος for gigno. It is never used in Scripture for 'Only-begotten.' We never read there of the First-born of God or of the Father, but First-born of the creation, whether the original creation or the new."—Idem, p. 158.

"The meaning is simply, 'as of the only-begotten,' &c. Even in this instance the particle of itself does not indicate what exists re vera, though, if we regard the sense, this notion is implied in the comparison (exactly as, i.e. the true, perfect glory of the Son of God, &c.)."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 639.

"This is He" (οὗτός ἐστι). Some¹ have explained this difference of tense in this way: When John delivered his first testimony and said, "This was He," it was immediately after Jesus had been baptized, and when the Spirit, in some manner visible to the bystanders, had caught Him up from the very midst of the company, and carried Him to the wilderness. It was on this, when Jesus had been just carried out of their sight, that John exclaimed to the people who stood there, "This was He of whom I spake." On the two other occasions when John said, "This is He," Jesus Himself was present.

15. ¶ John bare witness of Him, and cried,^a saying, This was He of whom I spake; He that cometh after me is preferred before me:^b for He was before me.

^a S. omits saying: S*. This was He who cometh after me, who is preferred before me.

^b Vulg. Ioannes testimonium perhibet de ipso, et clamat, dicens: Hic erat qui post me venturus est, ante me factus est: quia prior me erat.

Jesus came after the Baptist, in the sense^a that His Conception was announced to the Virgin Mary six months after Elisabeth had conceived John, that His Birth was after John's, and that He began His ministry after John. But He was preferred before him; He was placed before him in honour, in dignity, and glory, because He was before him, because He was God, while John was a mere man; because He was from all eternity, while John Baptist began his existence with his birth of Elisabeth.

After He had introduced the testimony of John the Baptist the Evangelist resumes the subject of His fulness.

16. And of His fulness have all we received, and grace for grace.^c ^c S.V. Because of His fulness.

Vulg. Et de plenitudine eius.

Some^a think that these are still the words of the Baptist; others,^b and with greater probability, that they are the words of the Evangelist, who is adding his confirmation to the testimony of the Baptist.

Many explanations have been offered of the words "grace for grace" (χάρις ἀντὶ χάριτος). It may be^c that he intended to say, that through Jesus we receive continual accessions of grace; that where one grace is improved, another is given. The Evangelist may also mean that the grace which we receive through the Word made flesh corresponds with His fulness of grace: that as He is the Son of God, so He gave them also, who believed in Him, power to become sons of God; He by Eternal Generation, they by the birth which he has just described.

He next compares the old system under which the Jews had been trained, "the Law," with the new system, "the Kingdom of Heaven." Moses, by God's direction, had inaugurated a system of special preparation for the Incarnation, by positive commands and by ceremonial acts, of which the chief force lay in their being types and shadows of something to come: all comprehended under the term "the Law." But this system, as being prophetic of the Incarnation, was in itself imperfect, and could only be completed by the coming of God in the flesh. Jesus the Son of Mary was God in the flesh; He was the Word made flesh.

Moses had, it is true, given them "the Law," but he could not give them grace or power to keep the Law. Moses

¹ Lightfoot, Harmony of the Four Evangelists, John i. 15; vol. i. p. 516.

² S. Augustine, in Joan. i. 15, tract. iii.; vol. iii. p. 1399.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 15; Homil. xiii.

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 15; vol. i. p. 518.

Euthymius, in Joan. i. 15; vol. iv. p. 31.

³ Origen, in Joan. i., tomus vi.; vol. iv. p. 201. [Theophylact,

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 15; vol. i. p. 518.

⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 16; Homil. xiv.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. i. 16; vol. vi. p. 169.

Maldonatus, in Joan. i. 16; vol. ii. p. 426.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 16; vol. viii. p. 886.

⁵ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 16; vol. viii. p. 886.

^a John beareth witness and cried (μαρτυρεῖ καὶ κέκραυε).—"The word μαρτυρεῖ of the present tense is properly to be understood of John's whole ministry, function, and office, as verse 7 explaineth it, He came for a witness; not to be restrained to this or that particular vocal and verbal testimony that John gave of Christ, nor to all the vocal testimonies that he gave of Christ, but to be dilated to John's whole course and ministry that he beareth witness to Christ, in that God raised up such an one to be His forerunner. And the word κέκραυε, in the prater tense, is to be applied to the particular testimony that John gave of Christ in that his ministry; so that the former word refereth to John's person and his whole function, and the latter only to the manner of his executing of one particular of that function."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John i.; vol. i. p. 517.

^b Is preferred before me.—"ἐμπροσθεν μου γέγονεν, which the Vulgar Latin hath dangerously translated, ante me factus est, 'He was made before me;' and accordingly the Arians in ancient time made use of this in this sense against the eternity of the Son. Whereas the word ἐμπροσθεν (as Beza well observeth it) in the New Testament doth constantly refer to place, and not to time, as Mark i. 2; Matt. xvii. 2; Luke xii. 8, and xix. 27, 28, and divers other places; and therefore our English hath well expressed it with an intimation of such a thing, 'is preferred before me.' For ἐμπροσθεν μου and πρὸς αὐτόν in this speech of the Baptist must needs have a distinct and different sense, because the word ἔτι between them doth show that the one is made the reason of the other; He was before me in place and pre-eminence, because He was before me in time and being. Now the word γέγονεν, which seemeth to refer to the time past (and which hath occasioned ἐμπροσθεν by some to be understood concerning priority of time), is to be construed in such a construction as the word ἐγενήθη is in Matt. xxi. 42, and γενόμενος, Acts iv. 11; words not of the present tense, and yet necessarily to be rendered in the present time, 'is become the head of the corner.'"—Ibid., p. 518.

^c Grace for grace (χάρις ἀντὶ χάριτος).—ἀντὶ "has here a peculiar signification, which however is easily traced to its primary import—grace over-against, in equal measure with grace; a subsequent portion of grace in the place of that which preceded; and thus grace uninterrupted, unceasingly renewed."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 382.

gave men the knowledge of what was right; Jesus Christ, as being God, could alone give them the power to do it.

17. For the Law was given by Moses, but grace and truth^a came by Jesus Christ.^b

^a S. omnis Christ.

^b Vulg. gratia et veritas per Iesum Christum facta est.

Jesus Christ alone could give them grace to become sons of God. He alone could give them remission of their sins, peace with God, and power to fulfil the Law.

The temporal blessings and the temporal punishments which Moses promised them, on their keeping or on their neglecting the Law, were but shadows of those which Jesus announced. Prosperity in this life was but a shadow of the life everlasting. Punishment in this world was but a foreshadowing of everlasting punishment with the devil and his angels. The rites, the ceremonies, the sacrifices under the Law, were not perfect in themselves. They all foreshadowed

One to come, One from whom they derived whatever significance, whatever efficacy they possessed. They all foreshadowed, and they were all fulfilled in, the Word made flesh.

The reason here given why Jesus declared the will and the knowledge of God perfectly, and why Moses did not, is that no one but He had seen God. The Patriarchs did not see God, but an angel or representative of God.¹ No one had seen God but He who was the Word, who was One with God, of the same nature, and who shared the most intimate relation with God that language can express. Neither had the Incarnation diminished His Oneness with the Father. The Word made flesh is perfect God and perfect Man.

18. No man hath seen God at any time; the only-begotten Son,^c which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him.

^c S. V. the only-begotten God which is (S. omnis which is) in the. Vulg. unigenitus Filius, qui est in sinu Patris, ipse enarravit.

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. i. 18, tract. iii.; vol. iii. p. 1403. Maldonatus, in Joan. i. 18; vol. ii. p. 432.

^a Truth.—"When it is said 'the Law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ' (John i. 17), it is plain that the antithesis cannot lie between the false and the true, but only between the imperfect and the perfect, the shadowy and the substantial. So, too, the Eternal Word is declared to be τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀληθινόν (John i. 9), not denying thereby that the Baptist was also 'a burning and a shining light' (John v. 35), or that the faithful are 'lights in the world' (Phil. ii. 15; Matt. v. 14); but only claiming for a greater than all to be 'the Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.' Christ declares Himself ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ἀληθινός (John vi. 32), not that the bread which Moses gave was not also 'bread of heaven' (Ps. cv. 40), but it was such only in a secondary, inferior degree: it was not food in the highest sense, inasmuch as it did not nourish up into eternal life those that ate it (John vi. 49). He is ὁ ἀμπελος ἡ ἀληθινή (John xv. 1), not thereby denying that Israel also was God's vine, which we know it was (Ps. lxxx. 8; Jer. ii. 21), but affirming that none except Himself realized this name, and all which this name implied, to the full (Hos. x. 1; Deut. xxxii. 32). It would be easy to follow this up further; but these examples, which the thoughtful student will observe are drawn chiefly from S. John, may suffice. The fact that in his writings the word ἀληθινός is used two-and-twenty times as against five times in all the rest of the New Testament, is one which he will scarcely dismiss as accidental. See also note on iii. 18."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on 'Synonyms of New Testament,' p. 27. See also note on v. 35.

^b Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.—"Of grace, whereby is meant God's love in action, we hear but little comparatively in the Old Testament, and that little is connected generally with those typical rites whereby the minds of men were carried onward to the coming Saviour. With the Gospels begins the further dispensation of grace. Yet in the Gospels we read of no general gift of grace to mankind; its season was not yet arrived: the womb of time was still pregnant with the gift which was to enoble the whole human family. What then do the Gospels say of grace? They speak of its communication to that heir of man's race, to that representative of humanity, in whom those spiritual blessings were still gathered together, which were soon to be diffused throughout His brethren. Every mention of grace in the Gospels refers to its communication to the Man Christ Jesus, the one Mediator, in whom were concentrated those gifts which He afterwards imparted to mankind. 'The Child grew, and the grace of God was upon Him!' 'And we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.' The Gospels then speak of grace, not as bestowed on humanity at large, but on the Humanity of Christ: for it was the appointment of Infinite Wisdom that this gift was not bestowed from Him to others till humanity had first been perfected in Himself. 'It became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings.' Though the humanity of the Second Adam had by nature been pure from spot, yet was suffering the appointed course through which it was perfected for the work of mediation. 'For their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they also might be sanctified through the Truth.' Thus did that Manhood which was taken in the Virgin's womb become a meet instrument for leavening the whole mass of corrupted nature. And this work being perfected, we see the new Adam, who, like His earthly predecessor, 'had been made a little lower than the angels, crowned through the suffering of death with glory and honour.' And then did 'He ascend up on high, and having led captivity captive, gave gifts unto men.' That which He had received because He was human He had power to give because He was divine. Thus did He bestow upon all His members that gift of grace which had hitherto centred in Himself. Therefore do we read for the first time respecting our Lord's disciples, 'great grace was upon them all.' In this manner was the gift of the Holy Ghost, which had hitherto had its dwelling in the New Head of humanity, bestowed upon His body the Church. The love of God had flowed forth into the Manhood of the Incarnate Son, that thence it might diffuse itself through His brethren."—R. I. WILBERFORCE on Holy Baptism, p. 15.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 18; vol. viii. p. 888.

^c The only-begotten Son, &c.—"Athanasius manifestly attributes a threefold nativity to the Son. The first is that whereby as the Word He existed from everlasting of the Father and with the Father, as the co-eternal offspring of the eternal mind of the Father. This alone is the true and properly so-called nativity of the Word, in so far forth as He is the Word of God and God. It is by reason of this nativity, Athanasius thought, that He is called in the Scriptures the Only-begotten; and it is in this respect alone that he thought also that the Son is of the Father; that is to say, has derived the beginning and origin of His subsistence from the Father. The second nativity consists in that condescension whereby the Word went out from God the Father to create the universe. Athanasius held that it is in reference to this that He is called in the Scriptures the First-born of every creature. From this nativity

It is plain from the other Evan. lists that S. John does not record all the testimonies which the Baptist bears to Jesus as the Christ.* He probably selects the following as the most public and official, as that given in direct answer to the authoritative inquiries of the priests and Levites, as to the nature of the office which John was sent to fill.

19. ¶ And this is the record of John, when no accession was made to the Divine Person of the Word; seeing that, as he says, it was rather a humiliation and condescension on His part. Lastly, His third nativity then took place when the same divine Person came forth from the bosom and glory of the Father and entered into the womb of the Blessed Virgin; and thus 'the Word was made flesh,' or was born man, in order that through Him we men might receive the adoption of sons.—BR. BULL, 'Defence of the Nicene Creed,' vol. ii. p. 505.

* Verse 18.—For viós Luchmann reads θεός; Tregelles places θεός in the margin.—SCRIVENER, N. T., 1876.

It has been observed that, owing to the reading of three primary Greek MSS. having become known only within the last half century, this verse has not shared with other disputed texts of high doctrinal interest either the advantages or the disadvantages of repeated controversial discussion. The latest and most exhaustive discussion of the subject is that by Dr. Hort, published in 1876. In two dissertations, a very model of patient research, he examines the question whether the reading here should be viós or θεός, or as it would be written in the early MSS. ἦν or ἦν, and arrives at the following general conclusion (p. 1): "The result, I think it will be found, is to show that ἡ ἀποκάλυψις θεός should be accepted in place of the received reading ἡ ἀποκάλυψις viós, alike on grounds of documentary evidence, of probabilities of transcription, and of intrinsic fitness." He gives a summary of the documentary evidence in the following words:—

"To gather up the documentary evidence with the usual abbreviations, we have—θεός: ⲛ B C * L 33.

Memph., Syr. vulg., Syr. hel. mg. [? Aeth.]

Valentiniani*, Iren., Clem., Orig., [Euseb.]

†Syn. Anc., Epiph., Did., Bas., Greg. Nyss., Cyr. Alex.*

Ch. Cæs.

viós: A X, &c., &c. [? D].

Latt. om., Syr. vet., Syr. hel., Syr. hier., Arm. [Aeth. codd.] [? Iren. (lat.)], ? † Ep. Ant., ? † Act. Arch. (lat.), Euseb.*

Ath.*, †Eust., ? † Alex. Al. [? Bas.], Greg. Naz. [? Greg. Nyss.]

†Tit. Bost., Theod. Mops., Chrys., &c.

"Testimonies marked with * prefixed are clear and sufficient; those marked with † depend on a single quotation, with a neutral context. The Latin Fathers, as almost always, attest only what was read in the Latin versions: all Latin authorities have unicus Filius or unigenitus Filius; q. adding Dei."—DR. HORT, 'Two Dissertations on John i. 18,' p. 6, ed. 1876.

Canon Lightfoot says the "Only-begotten God" would seem to have equal or superior claims to "the only-begotten Son," and must either supersede it or claim a place side by side with it.—ON the Revision of the English Testament, p. 27, ed. 1871.

The following is the conclusion arrived at by Profs. Milligan and Roberts in their examination of the evidence for the reading here.

"In reviewing this evidence it is to be observed—

"(1) That the weight of manuscript authority is decidedly in favour of the reading 'God.'

"(2) That versions testify to a wider range of this reading than of the other in the early Church.

"(3) That the Fathers cannot be implicitly relied on, as the more important of them may be quoted on both sides.

"(4) That, notwithstanding this, there is a degree of distinctness and precision in their references to 'God,' as the reading, that we do not find in their references to 'Son.'

"(5) Besides this, it was quite natural that they should often speak of 'the only-begotten Son,' for the term 'Son' was that commonly used of Jesus. It was not so natural that they should speak of 'the only-begotten God,' for the language is not only strange in itself, but the term 'God' was commonly used of the Father. It is impossible therefore to account for their use of this latter expression at all, unless they were thoroughly satisfied that it was the true reading. 'Son' was to them the appropriate designation of Jesus, and their argument is, that this 'Son' is called 'God' in the passage of S. John now before us.

"(6) This argument is strengthened by the fact that the Valentinian heretics read 'God,' a circumstance which would tend to make the Church suspicious of it, unless convinced that the reading was correct.

"(7) It is to be noticed that there were other variations of the reading known, besides that which we are considering, such as 'the only-begotten Son of God,' 'the only-begotten Son God,' 'the only-begotten.' These variations unquestionably point to 'God' as the original and fundamental reading; that out of which, and the difficulties connected with which, they would most naturally arise.

"(8) 'God' is by much the more difficult of the two readings. We can at once understand how 'Son' should be substituted for it. It is almost impossible to conceive how the contrary substitution could take place. Or, if it be thought that the variation began in the margin, and from thence passed into the text, we see without difficulty how 'God' being supposed to be in the latter, 'Son' should be placed in the former as an explanatory gloss, but not how 'God' should be put in the margin, if 'Son' were originally in the text.

"(9) Lastly, the internal evidence is very strongly in favour of reading 'God.' It is the constant tendency of S. John to refer at intervals to what he had placed at the beginning of a section or passage, or to what had been the leading thought upon which he had been dwelling. The eighteenth verse of the first chapter closes the prelude to his Gospel, and is exactly the place, therefore, where we might expect to meet with such a summary. But in that prelude he had had his mind fixed on two points; that in Jesus we have that Word of God which is God, and that Jesus is the only-begotten of the Father. Now, then, as he draws all the sublime statements of this prelude to his Gospel to a close, he sums them up in the words, 'No man hath seen God at any time; the only-begotten God, which is in the bosom of the Father, hath declared Him.' We accept this as the true reading of this most important verse."—"The Words of the New Testament," by Profs. MILLIGAN and ROBERTS, p. 162, ed. 1873.

On the other hand, Scrivener maintains that the real force of the evidence justifies the reading ἡ ἀποκάλυψις viós. "Those who will resort to 'ancient evidence exclusively,' for the recension of the text, may well be perplexed in dealing with this passage. The oldest manuscripts, versions, and writers are hopelessly divided, so that we can well understand how some critics (without a shadow of authority worth notice) have come to suspect both θεός and viós to be accretions, or spurious additions to ἡ ἀποκάλυψις. If the principles advocated in ch. vii. be true, the present is just such a case as calls for the interposition of the more recent uncial and cursive codices; and when we find that they all, with the single exception of Cod. 33, defend the reading ἡ ἀποκάλυψις viós, we feel safe in concluding that, for once, Codd. ⲛ B C and the Peshito do not approach the autograph of S. John so nearly as Cod. A, the Curetonian Syriac, and Old Latin versions."—DR. SCRIVENER, Introduction, p. 526, ed. 1874.

For additional arguments in support of the reading ἡ ἀποκάλυψις viós, see McClellan, 'New Testament,' p. 707, ed. 1875.

the Jews* sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou?

V. A. unto him from Jerusalem.
Vulg. quando miserunt Iudei ab Ierosolymis sacerdotes et Levitas ad eum.

There were many reasons to induce the priests and scribes to turn their eyes towards John the Baptist. By his priestly descent he was one of their own order. The miracle which had attended his birth would be well known in Jerusalem; for it had happened when his father, Zacharias, was engaged in the public ministration of the service of the Temple. The sanctity of John's life, his baptism, the novelty of his preaching, of his dress and mode of living, and his success among the people, all combined to draw the attention of the authorities at Jerusalem to him.

The signs of the times, too, were ominous of some great event. The sceptre had departed from Judah, and was now in the hands of Herod, the Edomite. The seventy weeks foretold by Daniel (ix. 24) for the coming of the Messiah were completed. As the national interpreters of the Scriptures they would be well acquainted with all this. Their contempt for the claims of the carpenter's son, if rumours respecting Him had as yet reached them, might lead them readily to acquiesce, in case John should declare himself the Messiah, the Christ. John's reply seems to indicate that their question was put in such a form as to require a direct answer, whether he were the Christ or not; and if not, as some think, to lead him to make such a claim.

20. And he confessed, and denied not; but confessed, I am not the Christ.

S. omits but confessed.

21. And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that prophet?^b And he answered, No.

Margin, a prophet.

S. And they asked again: S. omits And: S. Art thou a prophet?

Vulg. Et interrogavit eum: Quid ergo? Elias es tu? Et dixit: Non sum. Propheta es tu? Et respondit: Non.

22. Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself?

23. He said, I am the voice^c of one crying

* The Jews—“The scrutiny and judging of a prophet belonged only to the Sanhedrin or great Council at Jerusalem: and so is the Talmudic tradition, in the treatise Sanhedrin Perek i.: ‘They judge not a tribe, nor a false prophet, nor the high priest, but in the judicatory of Seventy and One.’ And to this law and practice of theirs those words of Christ relate in Luke xiii. 33, ‘It cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem,’ because a prophet could not be judged upon life and death in any place but there.

“This Court and Council sent these messengers to John to make inquiry after him, and after his authority; and so is the word, the Jews, to be understood in this verse, for the representative body of the Jews in the great Judicatory. And they sent priests and Levites to examine him, as men of the greatest knowledge and learning in the Law, and men of the likeliest abilities to try him, and to dispute and discourse with him according to that in Mal. ii. 7, ‘The Priest’s lips should keep knowledge, and they should see the Law at his mouth.’”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the Four Evangelists,’ John i.; vol. i. p. 521.

^b Art thou a prophet? (ὁ προφήτης εἶ σύ):—“There is some question whether to read it in the force of the article, or no; there are some that do read it so, and some that do not. The Syriac and the Vulgar Latin take no notice of the article at all, but read it as if it were without, ‘Art thou a prophet?’ And so doth the margin of our English Bible; and others, with our English text, do interpret the words as speaking of some peculiar prophet, which was neither Christ nor Elias, but some other pointed at and intended by that prediction. (Deut. xviii. 15; viz Cyril and Chrys., &c.) . . .

“I cannot but apprehend that their questioning of the Baptist in these words, ὁ προφήτης εἶ σύ, is indefinitely meant, ‘Art thou a prophet?’ Not this or that prophet, but art thou a prophet at all? For prophecy had been long decayed amongst them; and when they saw one appear now of so prophetic a character as the Baptist was, and when he had resolved them he was neither Christ nor Elias, their properest question then was, Art thou then any other prophet come after so long a time, as there have been no prophets amongst us? And he answers, No; that is, not in their sense, not a prophet of the same ministry with those in the Old Testament, but of another nature, or not one of those prophets of the Old Testament revived, as Matt. xvi. 14, but a minister foretold of by one of those prophets, as Isa. xl. 3.

“The reason that I refuse the strict interpretation of this question, ‘Art thou that prophet?’ as if they spake of some particular man, is partly because the article ὁ is not always to be construed in such a strictness, as pointing out a particular thing or person, but is very commonly, nay, most commonly, of a more large and general signification. But chiefly because I find not in the Jewish writers any particular prophet mentioned, whom they expected to come, as they did Christ and Elias; and for aught I find, they do not interpret that place in Deut. xviii. 15 of any such a particular person, but of the succession of prophets in general,” &c.—LIGHTFOOT on John i. 23; vol. i. p. 525.

“Voice, word.—“Φωνή from φωνά, rendered in our version ‘voice’ (Matt. ii. 18), ‘sound’ (John iii. 8), ‘noise’ (Rev. vi. 1), is distinguished from ψόφος, in that it is the cry of a living creature, being sometimes ascribed to God (Matt. iii. 17), to men (Matt. iii. 3), to animals (Matt. xxvi. 34), and, though improperly, to inanimate objects as well (1 Cor. xiv. 7), as to the trumpet (Matt. xxiv. 31), the wind (John iii. 8), the thunder (Rev. vi. 1). But λόγος, a word, saying, or rational utterance of the νοῦς, whether spoken or unspoken, being, as it is, the correlative of reason, can only be predicated of men, of angels, or of God.

“... The great theologians of the early Church—above all, Origen in the Greek, and Augustine in the Latin—loved to transfer the antithesis of the φωνή and the λόγος to John the Baptist and his Lord; the first claiming for himself no more than to be ‘the voice of one crying in the wilderness’ (John i. 23), the other emphatically declared to be ‘the Word which was with God, and was God’ (John i. 1).

“In drawing out the relations between John and his Lord, as expressed by these titles, the Voice and the Word, Vox and Verbum, φωνή and λόγος, Augustine traces with a singular subtlety the manifold and profound fitnesses which lie in them for the setting forth of those relations. A word, he observes, is something even without a voice: for a word in the heart is as truly a word as after it is outspoken; while a voice is nothing,—a mere unmeaning sound, an empty cry,—unless it be also the vehicle of a word. But when they are thus united, the voice in a manner goes before the word, for the sound strikes the ear before the sense in the wilderness,^a Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias.

The Baptist answered their question in the sense in which they asked it. Both our Saviour Himself (Matt. xi. 14) and the Angel (Luke i. 17) declared that John was the Elijah of the New Testament dispensation. But he was not Elijah in the sense in which the Jews were looking for him; he was not Elijah the Tishbite reappearing among them.

The prophet Malachi (iv. 5) had declared that Elijah the prophet—or, as the Septuagint renders it, Elijah the Tishbite—should come before the great and terrible day of the Lord. The Jews, because they were ignorant that there would be two Advents of Christ—the first in humility, the second in glorious majesty—had mistaken the prophet's meaning,¹ and were now anxiously looking for the coming of Elijah the Tishbite in person. When, then, the Baptist declared in the strongest possible form, that he was not the Christ, they ask him, Art thou Elijah? When he saith, I am not: they ask him, Art thou the prophet? They may mean either the prophet of whom Moses spake (Deut. xviii. 15–18), or some distinguished prophet, who would immediately precede the coming of the Messiah.

John Baptist's mission was not to prophesy, but to arrest the attention of the people, and direct it to Jesus as the Christ; to preach repentance, and to prepare the way for Christ's approach; and to bear witness to Him, and to point Him out to the people. John was not a prophet who foretells the distant coming of his King; he was the herald who announces His arrival, His actual presence among them.

Ezekiel (xxxvi. 25) had prophesied that the Christ should cleanse His people from all their filthiness by baptism, and that He would give them a new heart and a new spirit. Zechariah (xiii. 1) had also declared that He would open for the house of David, and for all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, a fountain for the remission of sin and uncleanness. The priests and scribes who were sent from Jerusalem to examine John would be well versed in such passages as these. The Pharisees had the reputation of being skilled in the words of Scripture, and in all the questions of the day. Whether those who were sent were Pharisees themselves, or, as some translate the passage, had been sent by the Pharisees, they were sure to represent the intelligence and acuteness of that sect. They therefore retort upon John, with a charge of inconsistency in baptizing, if he were not "the Christ," or Elijah, or the prophet.

24. And they which were sent were of the Pharisees.^b

S.V.A*. And they were sent of the Pharisees, Vulg. Et qui missi fuerant, erant ex phariseis.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 21; vol. viii. p. 890.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Malachi iv. 5; vol. vii. p. 855.

is conveyed to the mind; yet while it thus goes before it in this act of communication, it is not really before it, but the contrary. Thus, when we speak, the word in our hearts must precede the voice on our lips, which voice is yet the vehicle by which the word in us is transferred to, and becomes also a word in, another; but this being accomplished, or rather in the very accomplishment of this, the voice has passed away, exists no more; but the word which is planted now in the other's heart, as well as in ours, remains. All this Augustine transfers to the Lord and to His forerunner. John is nothing without Jesus; Jesus just what He was before without John; however, to men the knowledge of Him may have come through John. John the first in time, and yet He who came after, most truly having been before him. John, so soon as he had accomplished his mission, passing away, having no abiding significance for the Church of God; but Jesus, of whom he had told, and to whom he witnessed, abiding for ever. (Sermon 296.)—ARCHBISHOP TRENCI, 'Synonyms of New Testament,' p. 318.

* "The Wilderness in which John the Baptist dwelt until his thirtieth year, and into which Jesus, when His time arrived, passed for His forty days of prayer and watching, begins at the gates of Hebron and Jerusalem, spreads beyond and below these cities to the south and west, and covers the mountain slopes of Judah from the crest of the high table-land of Ramah and Olivet down to the Fountain of Elisha and the shores of the Dead Sea. It is a tract of country about the size and shape of Sussex, not being a mere waste of scorching sands, herbless and waterless all the year, like the deserts of El Arish and Gizeh, but only a dry, unpeopled region, in which the wells are few, the trees low and stunted, the wadies full of stones instead of water, and the caves tenanted by leopards and wolves. It contains no town, not even a village. It has no road, no khan. The fox, the vulture, the hyæna prowl about its solitude. But even in the wilderness nature is not so stern as man. Here and there, in clefts and basins, and on the hill-sides, grade on grade, you observe a patch of corn, a clump of olives, a single palm; but the men who sow the grain, who shake down the fruit, are nowhere to be seen. They dare not stay upon the grounds which they rip with their rude ploughs, or on which with careless husbandry they watch the olive-trees grow: they hie away for protection to the hamlets, and watch-towers on the hill-tops; to Maon, Tekoa, Bethlehem, and Bethany; for the Taáma Bedaween claim to be lords of the soil, and the spring grass and wild herbage tempt the Adouan from El Belta, the ancient Ammon, into these stony parts. No Syrian peasant dares to build his hut on land over which a Bedaween spreads his tent. In the wilderness of Judah the children of Esau are still what they were of old, the only abiding sheikhs and kings."—DIXON'S 'Holy Land,' vol. i. p. 244.

"We were in a most dreary country: calcined hills and barren valleys, furrowed by torrent beds, all without a tree or shrub, or sign of vegetation. The stillness of death reigned on one side, the sea of death, calm and curtained in mist, lay upon the other; and yet this is the most interesting country in the world. This is the Wilderness of Judæa; near this God conversed with Abraham, and here came John the Baptist preaching the glad tidings of salvation. These verdureless hills and arid valleys have echoed the words of the Great Creator; and at the head of the next ravine lies Bethlehem, the birthplace of the meek Redeemer,—in full sight of the Holy City, the theatre of the most wondrous events recorded on the page of history,—where that Self-Sacrifice was offered, which became thenceforth the seal of a perpetual covenant between God and man!"—LYXON'S 'Expedition to the Dead Sea,' p. 383.

* "The Pharisees in this Evangelist are generally to be understood the Sanhedrin; nor indeed do we find in S. John any mention of the Sadducees at all. Consult John i. 24, iv. 1, viii. 3, and xi. 46, &c.

"Josephus (Antiq. xiii. 10, 5) says the Pharisees have such a

25. And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet?

S. And they said unto him (omits asked him and).
Vulg. Et interrogaverunt eum, et dixerunt ei.

26. John answered them, saying, I baptize with water: but there standeth* one among you, whom ye know not;

Vulg. medius autem vestrum stetit, quem vos nescitis.

27. He it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose.

S.V. who cometh (omit He it is): S.V. omit is preferred before me.
Vulg. Ipse est qui post me venturus est, qui ante me factus est.

The Baptist answers the Pharisees' question by pointing out to them the difference between his baptism and that of the Messiah. His baptism was not that foretold by the prophet. It did not confer a new heart and a new spirit. It was in no sense a fount to wash away sin and uncleanness. His baptism was merely the badge of those who undertook to repent of their sins, and to look forward to the Christ. His baptism was no outward rite conveying grace to the soul; it was a washing of the body only, and did not affect the soul.¹

My baptism, he would say, is only a preparation for the Messiah's. By inducing men to repent of their sins, I put them into a state to receive the forgiveness and the Holy Spirit, which the Christ will shortly bestow on them by baptism. He is already in the very midst of you, but ye know Him only as the carpenter's son. It is He of whom I have already spoken, who coming after me is preferred before me, and for whom I am not worthy to perform the most menial acts.

28. These things were done in Bethabara^b beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

S.V.A. in Bethany: S. beyond the river of Jordan.
Vulg. Hæc in Bethania facta sunt trans Jordanem.

¹ S. Gregory Nazian., Oratio in Sancta Lumina, 17; vol. ii. p. 353.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 26; Homil. xvi.

sway amongst the people, that, if they should say anything against the king or high priest, they would be believed.

"And a little after, the Pharisees have given out many rules to the people from the traditions of the Fathers, which are not written in the laws of Moses: and for that very reason the Sadducees rejected them, saying they ought to account nothing as law or obligatory, but what is delivered by Moses, and what hath no other authority but tradition only ought not to be observed. And hence have arisen questions and mighty controversies, the Sadducees drawing after them the richer sort only, while the multitude followed and adhered to the Pharisees. (Antiq. xiii. 10, 6.)

"Hence we may apprehend the reason why the whole Sanhedrin is sometimes comprehended under the name of the Pharisees, because the common people, and the main body of that nation, were wholly at the management of the Pharisees, governed by their decrees and laws."—LIGHTFOOT on S. John ix. 13; vol. ii. p. 571.

^b There standeth (ἵστημι).—"The Syriac rendeth it in the present tense, as doth also our English, and so doth Beza and divers others, and so indeed might the Greek word very well bear it; but since it is said, John saw Jesus coming the next day, it is an argument that He was not present there now, and therefore it is most properly to be read in the time past, 'there hath stood one among you.'"—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John i.; vol. i. p. 513.

^c Bethabara.—"The site of Bethabara is of interest as the probable one of our Lord's baptism, and as such has been eagerly sought. As yet, however, no trace of the name has been recovered, and the arguments on the probable position are far from satisfactory. Bethabara is only once mentioned in the New Testament, as the place where John was baptizing soon after, and probably at the time of the commencement of Christ's ministry (John i. 28). We learn, first, that it was 'beyond Jordan' (πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου); and second, probably in the 'region round about Jordan' (Matt. iii. 5); the περιχωρος, which is supposed identical with the Ciccar of the Old Testament, a term by which Dean Stanley understands the Zor, or lower valley through which the Jordan flows in the middle of the Ghor or broader depressed plain.

"From the fact that 'Jerusalem and all Judea' went out to be baptized, Bethabara has been generally located in the southern part of the valley, near to the traditional site of the baptism; and in explaining the topography of the flight of Midian, and the slaughter of Oreb and Zeeb, I have had occasion to point out that such a site would best fit the Bethabara of the Book of Judges—the ford held by the men of Ephraim, and generally thought to be identical with the New Testament Bethabara.

S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. i. 26; vol. vi. p. 188.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 38, art. 3; vol. iv. p. 346.

"The word Bethabara ('House of the crossing over,' or 'Ford') is one very likely to be applicable to many points on the course of the Jordan. In the south it would have a special application, and might be considered as traditionally preserving the memory of the great 'crossing over'—the passage of the Jordan by the children of Israel under Joshua. It would seem probable that the Bethabara, or house of the ford, was a small hamlet or group of houses in the immediate vicinity; and it may even be supposed that part was west, part east of the river, thus explaining the qualification of 'Bethabara beyond Jordan.' This is rendered yet more probable if the περιχωρος be properly equivalent with the Ciccar, as in this case the site of Bethabara is limited to a distance of about half a mile from the water.

"Curiously enough, the oldest manuscripts read Bethany instead of Bethabara, but the reading is not admitted, nor would the Judean Bethany be a fit place for baptism, or in any way to be described as in the region of Jordan. Bethabara is mentioned as a known place by Eusebius, but he seems evidently to refer to the modern traditional site. In the absence of more exact information, it has been generally identified with Bethnimrah, which has been fixed at the modern Nimrin. This identification rests solely on the fact that Eusebius describes Νέμμα as a large village in Katania, and called Abara.

"It seems, however, to have escaped notice that there is a serious objection to placing Bethabara so far south. Our Lord descended from Galilee to Jordan, and to Galilee He returned after the Baptism and Temptation. In the chapter which relates the testimony of John the Baptist to Christ, and which contains the passage, 'These things were done in Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing,' we learn, in continuation (ver. 43), 'The day following Jesus would go forth into Galilee;' and the next chapter commences, 'And on the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee,' at which Christ was present (John ii. 1).

Three of the oldest MSS., the Sinaitic, the Vatican, and the Alexandrine, as well as others of later date, read "in Bethany beyond Jordan." Origen¹ has the unfortunate reputation of having introduced Bethabara into the text, instead of Bethany, which he says was found in almost all the MSS. and also in Hieracleon (whom Cave places A.D. 126), but was persuaded that Bethabara was meant, because on making inquiry he found there was a place called Bethabara, but not a Bethany in the neighbourhood where he supposed this spot must lie; the only Bethany which he knew being, as he says, near Jerusalem, and not on the other side of the Jordan. Several² of the early writers subsequent to Origen either read Bethabara, or refer to it as a better reading.

But the Bethany referred to in the text could not be the Bethany, the town where Lazarus and his sisters lived. That was on the west side of Jordan; this beyond Jordan, or on the east side of it. Bethabara and Bethany have much the same meaning: the one being the house of the ferry or ford, and the other the house of the ship or ferry-boat. It is not, therefore, improbable that these are two names for the same place, or for adjoining places.

The following appears to be the order of events. After Jesus had been baptized by John,^a which this Evangelist does not relate, He retires into the wilderness for forty days to be tempted by the devil. In the meantime a deputation of priests and Levites had arrived from Jerusalem to examine the Baptist on the nature of his office, when he delivers the foregoing testimony to Jesus in His absence. Then on the next day John seeth Jesus, who was returning from the Temptation, coming to him, when he again bears witness to Him in His presence, apparently before his own disciples. Then on the next day John again bears witness to Jesus, who was again present, before two of his disciples.

The only objection to this is on the ground that the expression "there standeth one among you" (μέσος δὲ ὑμῶν ἑστῆκεν) is to be understood literally, as implying that Jesus was actually then and there standing in the midst of them. It may, perhaps, be more correctly interpreted as meaning that the Christ was dwelling in the very midst of them, going in and out daily amongst them, but that they did not recognize Him, that they knew Him only as the son of Joseph and Mary, or it may be explained as in the note.

Thus the Baptist delivers three testimonies to Jesus on three consecutive days: (1) in His absence, to the deputation from the Jewish Sanhedrin at Jerusalem; (2) in His presence, to the general body of John's own disciples; (3) in His presence, to two of John's disciples.

29. ¶ The next day John^b seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb

¹ Origen, in Joan. i. 28. tomus vi.; vol. iv. p. 269.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 28; Homil. xiv.

S. Epiphanius, Hæres. li. 13; vol. i. p. 912.

"It seems to me, therefore, that the search for this site should be confined to the immediate neighbourhood of Jordan, within thirty miles of the site of Cana of Galilee (the present Khirbet Kana); and it is precisely in such a position, one mile north of the mouth of Wady Jalud, within an easy two days' journey (twenty-five miles) of Nazareth and Cana, and at one of the principal fords, that we have found the name.

"The fords of Jordan, some shifting and insignificant, but others permanent and lying on principal roads, have as yet been very little known. We were careful to collect every one we could, and to verify the names and positions. It was no slight task, as our sketch of the river now shows upwards of fifty, of which eight only are to be seen on Murray's map, lately published. The labour of this part of the Survey was very trying, but we should be sufficiently rewarded by this simple discovery, if generally accepted.

"The ford in question is called Makhâdhet 'Abâra, or the 'Ford of the crossing over,' for the name is derived from the Arabic root, 'Abr, having the meaning of crossing; and thus, though the second a is an aleph, and would not occur in the Hebrew Beth-'abara, the Arabic root and the Hebrew root, and consequently the meaning of the name in both languages, are identical.

"Makhâdhet 'Abâra is one of the principal northern fords; the great road descending Wady Jalud in its northern side, and leading to Gilead and the south of the Hauran, passes over by it. The situation is well fitted for the site of the baptism, not only on account of its nearness to Galilee and Nazareth, but also because the river-bed is here more open, the steep banks of the upper valley or ghor lesser and farther retired, thus leaving a broader space for the collection of the great crowd which had followed John the Baptist into the wilderness.

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 28; vol. i. p. 523.

Euthymius, in Joan. i. 28; vol. iv. p. 45.

S. Jerome, de Situ et Nominibus; vol. iii. p. 884.

"As regards the village itself, no traces seem now to exist. In the valley of Jordan there were scarcely any ruins, and those round Jericho all date seemingly in Christian times. Were the former villages similar to the miserable mud hovels of Jericho, Seythopolis, and Delhemiyeh, it would, however, be quite possible for all traces to have vanished of the hamlet here, standing eighteen centuries ago. The position on a principal road would in any case make the proposed site that most probable for a hamlet, and it seems unlikely that any more important place would have been situated so near to the banks of the river."—Palestine Exploration Fund, page 72, April 1875.

^a Christ's place of Baptism.—"On the twenty-eighth (Easter-Tuesday, March 1738) we set out, from near Jericho, about two o'clock in the morning, to go to the river Jordan; we went north-east, and the Greeks soon left us to go south-east: for those of both religions propose to go to the place where Christ was baptized, but happen to differ in their opinions, and are three or four miles wide of each other. . . . The river Jordan is deep and very rapid; it is wider than the Tiber at Rome, and may be about as wide as the Thames at Windsor."—POCOCKE'S Travels, vol. ii. p. 32.

"When the children of Israel passed over Jordan, they went six miles and a quarter to Gilgal, where they set up an altar of twelve stones, in memory of that passage, at the distance of a mile and a half from Jericho (Joseph. Antiq. v. 1; Josh. iv. 20). So that it is probable they passed over the river Jordan about this place, which seems to be the nearest part of the river to Jericho, and is said to be about seven miles from it."—Ibid. p. 33.

^b Interpolations.—Dean Burgon observes that the word John here, and the word Jesus in John i. 43, vi. 14, xiii. 3, xxi. 1, are confessedly interpolations, their presence being accounted for of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.

Margin, beareth.
S.V.A. he seeth.
Vulg. Altera die vidit Ioannes Iesum venientem ad se.

30. This is He of whom I said, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me: for He was before me.

Those by whom the Baptist was surrounded were Jews, men who from their earliest years had been so accustomed to the sacrifice of a lamb morning and evening, that the very mention of a lamb without any further addition would naturally suggest to their minds a victim, a sacrifice, and atonement for sin. When then the Baptist points out Jesus, and cries, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away, or beareth, the sin of the world," if they assigned any meaning to his words, they would see in Jesus the Victim to be offered in sacrifice, by His death to make atonement for the sin of the world. The Baptist, too, would be well aware that such would be the sense which his words would convey to the Jewish mind. Yet he lays no restriction on his meaning, no limit to the efficacy of this Sacrifice; no limit either in time, or in amount of guilt. The Baptist then goes on to say, that he had learnt this by special revelation from heaven.

31. And I knew Him not: but that He should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water.

32. And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon Him.

S. omits saying: S. and abiding.
Vulg. dicens: quia vidi Spiritum descendentem quasi columbam de caelo, et mansit super eum.

33. And I knew Him not: but He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on Him, the same is He which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.

34. And I saw, and bare record^a that this is the Son of God.

A. that He is: S. that this is the chosen of God.
Vulg. et testimonium perhibui quia hic est Filius Dei.

When the Baptist says that he did not know Jesus until

He was revealed to him by a special sign, he may not mean that he did not know Jesus at all, not even as his own kinsman, nor as the reputed son of Joseph and Mary; though even this would not be very surprising, when we consider the retired life which John had led from his childhood upward, in the wilderness, apart from the haunts of men. What he undoubtedly does assert is, that he did not know Jesus as the Lamb of God, as the Word made flesh, as the Christ, until God had by special revelation declared Him; that he did not know Him, at least with such fulness of knowledge as to manifest Him unto Israel. He came for that very purpose, but he must wait until he had received the appointed sign.

Some knowledge of Jesus as the Christ John seems to have had before His Baptism. As such he had demurred to baptize Him (Matt. iii. 13). This knowledge, such as it was, may have been the result of his own inferences from what he had seen and heard of Jesus. John had come to manifest Jesus unto Israel: but before he was allowed to do this, he implies that his knowledge must be confirmed in the most unmistakable manner; that he must have a direct revelation from heaven, before he could point Him out as the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world.¹

By a comparison of the Evangelists we see that three, S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. John, say that the Holy Spirit descended from heaven upon Jesus "like a dove," and that Luke is even more definite still, and says that He descended "in a bodily shape like a dove." We can scarcely imagine it possible that these expressions were intended to mean no more than that the Holy Spirit came down from heaven upon Jesus, and that the manner of His descent was like that of a dove flying down. It is far more in accordance with the traditional belief of the Church in all ages, to conclude that the Holy Spirit made use of the form of a dove to descend visibly upon Jesus.² At the Day of Pentecost He descended upon the Church in the form of tongues, and sat upon each of them (Acts ii.). At the same time we must be careful not to suppose that the dove was more than an instrument for His visible descent. There was no union between the Holy Spirit and the dove, as in the Hypostatic Union, when the Word was made flesh. The dove may have been chosen for its symbolic use, as by its gentleness and purity, indicative of the influences and of the fruits of the Holy Spirit.

The visible descent of the Holy Spirit upon Jesus was a proof to John that Jesus, the Son of Mary, was also the Son of God. This was his warrant henceforth to proclaim Him to Israel as the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of ¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. i. 33, tract. v.; vol. iii. p. 1415.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 33; Homil. xvii.

by the fact that in these places an ecclesiastical lesson begins, that therefore some word more definite than "He" was required to indicate the person speaking or acting.—BURTON on "The last Twelve Verses of S. Mark," p. 221; see also note on i. 43.

² A I saw and bare record (καὶ ὡρακα καὶ μεμαρτύρηκα).—

S. Cyril, in Joan. i. 33; vol. vi. p. 196.

² Grotius, in Matt. iii. 15; Critici Sac. vol. vi. p. 106.

"The latter proof appears to denote that the testimony borne by John at the Baptism of Christ remains firm and valid: I have seen and I have testified."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 288.

the world. It has also been considered¹ as a pledge from God to the Church, that Baptism preceded by repentance, and celebrated as Jesus afterwards commanded, with water in the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, should always be accompanied by the Holy Spirit. For eighteen hundred years the Church has acted in the belief, that as surely as the Holy Spirit, in the form of a dove, descended visibly upon Jesus, and remained upon Him, so surely, though not visibly, would the Holy Spirit descend upon every sincere penitent, who is baptized with the Baptism of Christ.

On the next day the Baptist again bears testimony to Jesus, before two of his disciples. Either these two disciples had not been present the day before, when he pointed Jesus out as "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," or John repeats his testimony before them, in order, by a kind of gentle pressure, to induce them to withdraw themselves from him, and to attach themselves to Jesus as His disciples.

See S. Matthew, chap. iii. page 96.

35. ¶ Again the next day after John stood, and two of his disciples;

36. And looking upon Jesus as He walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God!

37. And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus.

S. omits And.

Vulg. et secuti sunt Iesum.

Neither S. Matthew, S. Mark, nor S. Luke says anything about our Saviour's actions from His Baptism, with the exception of the Temptation, until the imprisonment of John the Baptist, when He departs into Galilee. The Evangelist S. John is silent about the Temptation, but he alone fills up the interval, and traces the steps of Jesus from the time when He returned from His Temptation until the imprisonment of the Baptist. The other three Evangelists relate only John's actions, and the testimony which he bore to Christ before His Baptism, while S. John relates both other acts and other testimonies of the Baptist to Christ besides those before His Baptism. It is in strict accordance with this that S. John here relates that Peter and Andrew follow Jesus before He calls them to be His disciples, while the other Evangelists make no mention of it; for this was while the Baptist was still at liberty. S. Matthew (iv.) relates that Jesus called Peter and Andrew, and that then they follow Him. But there is no contradiction here. These are relations of two different events, with an interval of several months between them, one before the Baptist's imprisonment, and the other after.

38. Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi,^a (which is to say, being interpreted, Master,) where dwellest Thou?

Margin, alidest.

S. omits Then: S. omits unto them.

Vulg. Conversus autem Iesus . . . dicit eis.

39. He saith unto them, Come and see. They came and saw where He dwelt,^b and abode with Him that day: for it was about the tenth hour.

V. Come, and ye shall see: S.V.A. They came therefore: S.V.A. omit for: A. the sixth hour.

The earliest² commentators who have explained this passage, understood S. John as calculating the hours from sunrise, or 6 o'clock in the morning, and so interpreted the "tenth hour" to be 4 o'clock P.M., or two hours before sunset.

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. i. 33, tract. vi.; vol. iii. p. 1428.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 39; Homil. xviii.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. i. 39; vol. vi. p. 217.

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 39; vol. i. p. 527.

[Euthymius,

Euthymius, in Joan. i. 39; vol. iv. p. 55.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. xvii. p. 142.

Maldonatus, in Joan. i. 39; vol. ii. p. 446.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 39; vol. viii. p. 894.

^a Rabbi.—"This and other titles of their doctors, as Rab, and Rabban, and Rabbi, were but lately grown into use and request among them, and sprang up but very little before the birth of Christ. The prophets, and the men of the great synagogue, and all the generations till the times of Hillel, had been content with their bare proper names, as Sadoc, Baithus, Antigonus, Shammai, Hillel, Shemaya, Abtalion, and the like, very frequent and common in mention in the Jewish authors. But Simeon the son of Hillel (he that took our Saviour in his arms, Luke ii.) was the first Doctor among them cum titulo, and he was called Rabban. From his times and forward, titles came exceedingly into request and fashion among them, and none more common than the title Rabbi, as appeareth frequently in the Gospel, and infinitely in their own writers." &c.—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John i., vol. i. p. 514.

^b Houses.—"Many of the dwelling-houses (at Kerasesh, Chorazin) are in a tolerably perfect state, the walls being in some cases six feet high; and as they are probably the same class of houses as that in which our Saviour dwelt, a description of them may be interesting. They are generally square, of different sizes—the largest measured was nearly thirty feet—and have one or two columns down the centre to support the roof, which appears to have been flat, as in the modern Arab houses. The walls are about two feet thick, built of masonry or of loose blocks of basalt; there is a low doorway in the centre of one of the walls, and each house has windows twelve inches high, and six and a half inches wide. In one or two cases the houses were divided into four chambers."—'Recovery of Jerusalem,' p. 347.

"Several lamps, weights, jars, and an iron bar were found in this canal, and also a stone roller for rolling flat roofs, precisely similar to those in use on the flat roofs of the Lebanon; so it is evident that at some period at least one house in Jerusalem was covered with a flat roof of wooden joists and mud: and I am inclined to the opinion that this was the general mode of construction of roofs until after the city was destroyed by Titus, when wood becoming scarce, the vaulted roof came into use."—Ibid. p. 108.

This continued to be the received explanation until the eighteenth century, when, in order to reconcile the apparent discrepancy between S. John and S. Mark as to the time of the Crucifixion, it was suggested that S. John did not use the same method of reckoning the hours of the day that the other Evangelists did,¹ but that he used a notation of time which he had learnt during his residence in Asia Minor, and reckoned the hours, as we do, from midnight to midday, and from midday to midnight, and that by the "tenth hour" he meant 10 o'clock A.M.

Not to mention here other reasons—see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii. p. 469—it may be asked, Is it probable that S. John would use a method of calculating the hours of the day different from that which was used by the other Evangelists and by the inhabitants of the country, and by the foreigners resident in the country where the events recorded took place, and give no intimation of this, and that too in a book which may be said to abound with explanations of customs and expressions peculiar to the Jews?

Reckoning "the tenth hour" to be 4 o'clock P.M., some commentators understood the Evangelist as meaning that the two disciples abode with Jesus the rest of that day, or the two hours that remained of that day; others that the disciples were so eager to learn from Jesus, that they abode with Him a whole day, that is, a period of not less than twenty-four hours. Whatever was the time, it was long enough to convince them that Jesus was the Messiah.

40. One of the two which heard John speak, and followed Him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother.

A. Now one of the two.

Some, by comparing this verse with chapter xxi. 2, have conjectured that Thomas was the other disciple; but it was a very common opinion among the early writers that the other disciple was S. John himself.² In relating the transactions in which he and others were concerned, this Evangelist's invariable custom is never to speak of himself by name. Throughout the whole of his Gospel he never once mentions his own name. John and his brother James were partners in the fishing trade with Andrew and his brother Simon. It would thus follow very naturally that they would be companions in other matters of common interest, especially if, as appears, they were both disciples of the Baptist.

Thus Andrew was first drawn to Jesus by the testimony of John the Baptist, and then by an internal conviction derived from his own conversation with Jesus. Full of love and zeal after this conversation, he is not content to keep the discovery to himself. He hastens to communicate to his brother that they have found the Messiah, the object of their search.

41. He first findeth^a his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ.^b Margin, the Anointed.

Vulg. Invenimus Messiam (quod est interpretatum Christum).

42. And he brought him to Jesus. And when Jesus beheld him, He said, Thou art Simon the son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, A stone.

Margin, Peter.

S.V. omit And before he brought: S.V.A. omit And before when: S.V. the son of John.

Vulg. Intuitus autem eum Jesus, dixit: Tu es Simon filius Jona; tu vocaberis Cephas, quod interpretatur Petrus.

Jesus begins to teach Simon, on his very first introduction to Him, that He is more than man, that the past and the future are alike open to Him. He discovers to him his name and his origin, Simon, son of Jona. He changes his name from Simon to one that was more expressive of his future, either of his future faith in Jesus as the Son of God, or of his future office in the Church.

S. Augustine,³ in explaining this passage, observes that as

¹ Dr. Townson's Discourses on the Four Gospels, p. 215.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 40; Homil. xviii.

S. Epiphanius, Hæres. li. 14; vol. i. p. 916.

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 41; vol. i. p. 528.

Euthymius, in Joan. i. 41; vol. iv. p. 57.

[Jansenius,

^a He first findeth.—"In John i. 41, and in John viii. 7, the Greek πρώτος requires in the one case, 'He is the first to find;' and in the other, 'Let him be the first to cast a stone at her.' There is assuredly a wide difference between doing a thing before we do anything else, and being the first to do it."^b—The 'Church Quarterly Review,' April 1876, p. 137.

^b Which is, being interpreted, the Christ.—"These are the words of the Evangelist the historian, and not the words of Andrew; for it was needless for him to tell Peter what was the meaning of Messiah, and accordingly the Syriac translator hath omitted this clause; and that in verse 42, 'which is by interpretation, Peter;' and that also, chap. iv. 25, 'which is by interpretation, Christ,' as knowing it unnecessary to tell an Hebrew, or a Syrian, what is meant by Messiah, or Cephas."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John i.; vol. i. p. 515.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xvii. p. 142.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 37; vol. viii. p. 893.

³ S. Augustine, in Joan. i. 42, tract. vii.; vol. iii. p. 1444.

Dean Jackson, on the Creed, bk. iii. ch. 8; vol. ii. p. 249.

^c The son of Jona.—"There are that conceive a corruption to be in the writing of this word, for, they say, it should be Joanna. And of that mind is Jerome the Vulgar Latin, Erasmus, at John xxi. 15; and of that writing is Erasmus, his Greek copy there, and some others here. But upon what ground this facile and most general reading of Jona (for so the Syrian, Arabic, most and best Greek copies, and most translations utter it) should be forsaken, and one so far-fetched and strained as Joanna be embraced and taken for the right, I cannot yet understand or apprehend."—Ibid., John i.; vol. i. p. 531.

"Jona was a name among the Jews very commonly used, and we meet with it frequently among the Talmudic authors, written Jonah; why therefore should not Peter's father be allowed the name of Jonah, as well as that of John?"—Ibid., John i. 42; vol. ii. p. 523.

Petrus is derived from Petra, which means the Church, Jesus, by this change of name from Simon to Peter, pointed both to the Church which He was about to found, and also to the prominent share which Peter would have in building up His Church.

Philip was the first whom Jesus expressly called to be His disciple. Being of the same city as Andrew and Peter, Bethsaida, it is possible that Philip had already been favourably impressed towards Jesus by their report of Him. Bethsaida was a city or town on the west side of the Sea of Galilee. A little to the south of Bethsaida was Cana, also in Galilee, the city of Nathanael, who appears to have been a friend of Philip.

43. ¶ The day following Jesus^a would go forth into Galilee, and findeth Philip, and saith unto him, Follow me.

S.V.A. He would go: S.V.A. and Jesus saith unto him.

Vulg. In crastinum voluit exire in Galileam, et invenit Philippum. Et dicit ei Jesus.

44. Now Philip was of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter.

S. omits Now.

Vulg. Erat autem Philippus a Bethsaida.

Nathanael is only once besides mentioned in the Gospels (John xxi. 2)—at least, by this name. He is said to have been a man with a reputation for great skill in the Law, and some¹ have thought that this was probably the reason why Jesus did not choose him to be one of his twelve Apostles; because He chose none but the poor and unlearned, that His power in converting the world might be the more manifest in their weakness. Others² have held that Nathanael was chosen among the twelve Apostles, only that he is spoken of under another name, that of Bartholomew. The following are the reasons which have led to this opinion:—

1. The other Evangelists (Matt. x. 3; Mark xiii. 18; Luke vi. 14) join Philip and Bartholomew together, while S. John calls Philip and Nathanael. 2. If Nathanael and Bartholomew be not the same, we nowhere read of the call of Bartholomew by Jesus. 3. The other three Evangelists speak of Bartholomew, but never of Nathanael; and S. John names Nathanael, but not Bartholomew. The plain inference from which is, that these two names denote the same person. 4. S. John (xxi. 2) associates Nathanael, Peter, Thomas, James, and John as fishing together, when Jesus appeared to them after His Resurrection, on the Lake of Tiberias. Four of these were Apostles; it is therefore probable, or at least not improbable, that the fifth, Nathanael, was also an Apostle: and if he were an Apostle, he must be the same as Bartholomew. 5. Bartholomew was not a proper name at all, but merely a description of his descent—son of Tolmai—while Nathanael was the proper name. A similar instance we have in the case of Simon Bar-jona (Matt. xvi. 17), Simon being the proper name, and Bar-jona, son of Jonas, a description of his origin. 6. Of no man's character did our Saviour express greater admiration, and to none did He promise greater things than to Nathanael. He might therefore, with great probability, have chosen him one of His twelve Apostles.

45. Philip findeth Nathanael,^b and saith unto him, We have found Him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.

Philip may be here describing Jesus to Nathanael, as He was known by common rumour, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph. As such Nathanael, who was of Cana, a city close to Nazareth, would easily recognize Him. It may be that Philip in these words gives his own opinion of Jesus, as the Messiah, as He who was foretold by Moses and the prophets, and yet as the son of Joseph. At a much later period than this (John xiv. 9), Philip had a very imperfect opinion as to who Jesus really was. Though He had been three years with His disciples, Philip had scarcely then mastered the truth that Jesus, whom men called the son of

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. i. 45, tract. vii.; vol. iii. p. 1446.

² Rupertus, in Joan. i. 45; vol. iii. p. 272.

* Interpolations.—Introductory clauses or proper names are frequently interpolated at the commencement of Church Lessons (περικοπαι), whether from the margin of ordinary manuscripts of the Greek Testament (where they were usually placed for the convenience of the reader), or from the Lectionaries or proper Service Books, especially those of the Gospels (Εὐαγγελιστάρια). Thus in our English Book of Common Prayer the Name of Jesus is introduced into the Gospels for the 14th, 16th, 17th, and 18th Sundays after Trinity; and whole clauses into those for the 3rd and 4th Sundays after Easter, and the 6th and 24th after Trinity. To this cause is due the prefix εἰπε δὲ ὁ κύριος (Luke vii. 31); and καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς πρὸς τοὺς μαθητὰς εἶπε (Luke x. 22); and such appellations as ἀδελφοὶ ἢ τέκνον Τυμώθε (after ὁ δὲ in 2 Tim. iv. 5) in some copies of the Epistles. Hence the frequent interpolation (e.g., Matt. iv. 18; vii. 5; xiv. 22) or change of position (John i. 43) of Ἰησοῦς.—SCRIVENER'S

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xvii. p. 145.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 45; vol. viii. p. 896.

'Intro. to Criticism of New Testament,' p. 11. See also note on i. 29.

^b Nathanael.—"We find the name Nathanael in the Old Testament also: as 1 Chron. xv. 24; Ezra x. 22, &c. But Philip and Andrew, and Nicodemus, &c., were names of a later edition, taken up into use since the Grecian power and language had overspread Judæa, and those Eastern countries. This Nathanael was of Cana of Galilee (John xxi. 2), one of the first disciples called, and that continued with Jesus to the very last, as it appeareth by that place in John. Now since all these that are mentioned in this chapter by name—as Peter, and Andrew, and Philip—were made Apostles, it is somewhat strange if Nathanael missed the like place."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John i.; vol. i. p. 515.

"From a comparison of the lists of the Apostles and John xxi. 2, with this narrative, Nathanael is undoubtedly the same as Bartholomew."—McLILLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 545.

Joseph, was the Son of God, the Word made flesh, One with the Father and equal to the Father.

46. And Nathanael said unto him, Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? ^a Philip saith unto him, Come and see.

S. omits And.

Vulg. Et dixit ei Nathanael.

Nazareth was a small obscure town in Galilee,^b a district despised by the inhabitants of Judæa for the rudeness and want of cultivation of its inhabitants, and also perhaps for the great admixture of Gentiles or foreigners which it always contained. Here Jesus was conceived (Luke i. 26), but He was not born here, but in Bethlehem of Judæa. The popular opinion at this time was that Jesus was born at Nazareth. From knowing only this popular rumour arose Nathanael's prejudice against Jesus as the Christ. But his objection was to Galilee, not to Nazareth in particular. He would have had a similar objection against any place in Galilee. This appears from John vii. 41, &c. How can this Jesus be the Christ? reasons Nathanael; He was born in Nazareth, and the prophets say that the Christ shall spring from Bethlehem. Nathanael's question to Philip, "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?" was prompted partly by the reputation of Galilee, and partly by the prediction of the prophets. But Nathanael did not shut himself up in the belief of this, and close his heart to all explanation and examination on the subject. Here doubtless was one proof of the guilelessness of his character. Nathanael in this shows himself an earnest and a sincere seeker after the truth.

47. Jesus saw Nathanael coming to Him, and

^a Nazareth.—"It is one peculiarity of the Galilean hills, as distinct from those of Ephraim or Judah, that they contain or sustain green basins of table-land just below their topmost ridges . . . Such, above all, is Nazareth; fifteen gently-rounded hills seem as if they had met to form an enclosure for this peaceful basin—they rise round it like the edge of a shell to guard it from intrusion. It is a rich and beautiful field in the midst of those green hills—abounding in gay flowers, in fig-trees, small gardens, hedges of the prickly pear; and the dense rich grass affords an abundant pasture. The expression of the old topographer, Quaresmius, was as happy as it is poetical: 'Nazareth is a rose, and, like a rose, has the same rounded form, enclosed by mountains as the flower by its leaves.' The village stands on the steep slope of the south-western side of the valley."—STANLEY'S 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 365.

^b "There is a well, named after the Virgin, to the east of the city, which we gazed at with extreme interest; it still supplies Nazareth with water, and thither, without doubt, came the Virgin Mother and her Saviour Son, day after day, to draw water—as we saw the daughters of Nazareth coming while we stopped our horses to drink of it."—LORD LINDSAY'S 'Letters from the Holy Land,' ii. 84.

^c Galilee.—"The geographical position of Naphtali produced great effects upon its history. The tribe occupied border-land. It came into close contact with the Syrians of Damascus, with the mountain tribes of Lebanon, and especially with the great commercial saith of him, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!

S. and saith of Nathanael.

Vulg. Vidit Iesus Nathanaël venientem ad se, et dicit de eo.

48. Nathanael saith unto Him, Whence knowest Thou me? Jesus answered and said unto him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig-tree,^c I saw thee.

The words "the true and guileless Israelite" may have been a name by which Nathanael was known amongst his friends, as descriptive of his singularly upright dealing towards others, in the same way that Aristides was called "the just" among his fellow Athenians. As Jesus had given to Peter the first intimation that He knew more than mere man could know by telling him what was his name, and who was his father, though He had never seen him before, so He acts towards Nathanael, and addresses him by the appellation by which he was known among his intimate friends. When Nathanael expresses his surprise that Jesus knew him at all, and especially that He knew the name which his friends had given him, Jesus goes on to inform him that He knew not only his upright dealing towards men, and the name by which they described that, but that He knew also his righteous conduct towards God; that He knew even his most secret acts of devotion, which, as he thought, could be known only to himself, as they were performed within the thick impenetrable shade of the fig-tree. It was by slight proofs at first and by slow degrees that He led on both Peter and Nathanael to acknowledge that He was God as well as Man. Thus Jesus both gave His sanction to the truth of the description, "an Israelite indeed, nation of Phenicia. Separated from the body of the Jewish people, forced into connection with strangers, the Naphtalites became less exclusive than their brethren. The Phenicians traded with them, and settled among them. (1 Kings ix. 11-13.)

"That sharp line which separated Jew and Gentile was in part at least obliterated. In worship, in manners, and even in language, they accommodated themselves to their Gentile neighbours, and at length the whole land was called 'Galilee of the Gentiles,' and its people lost caste with the exclusive Jews of the South. These facts may help to explain the question of Nathanael: 'Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?' (John i. 46;) and the remark of the woman regarding Peter, 'Thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto' (Mark xiv. 70)."—"Giant Cities of Bashan," p. 261.

^c The fig-tree.—"The advantages of the fig-tree as a shade are shown in the following:—"As we approached, one of the camel-drivers, pointing to a cluster of six large fig-trees, cried out, 'Tacht et-teen,'—under the fig-tree. And soon we felt the pleasantness of this shade; for there is something peculiarly delightful in the shade of the fig-tree. It is far superior to the shelter of a tent, and perhaps even to the shadow of a rock; since not only does the mass of heavy foliage completely exclude the rays of the sun, but the traveller finds under it a peculiar coolness, arising from the air gently creeping through the branches. Hence the force of the Scripture expression, 'when thou wast under the fig-tree.'"—'Mission to the Jews from Scotland,' p. 108.

in whom there is no guile," as applied to Nathanael, and also used it as a means to discover to him who He was.

49. Nathanael answered and saith unto Him, Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God; Thou art the King of Israel.

S. said, Rabbi: V. omits and saith unto Him: A. Thou art King.
Vulg. Respondit ei Nathanaël, et ait. Rabbi, tu es Filius Dei, tu es rex Israel.

50. Jesus answered and said unto him, Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig-tree, believest thou? thou shalt see greater things than these.

51. And He saith unto him, Verily, verily,* I say unto you, Hereafter^b ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man.

S.V. omitt hereafter.

Vulg. Et dicit ei. Amen, amen dico vobis, videbitis celum apertum.

In His conversation with Nathanael, Jesus refers to two well-known events in the life of the Patriarch Jacob: (1) His wrestling with the Angel of God, in memory of which his name was changed to Israel; for as a prince he had power with God and with man, and had prevailed (Gen. xxxii. 24). (2) To the vision which appeared to him at Bethel (Gen. xxviii. 12): "And he dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it."

Jesus addresses Nathanael by a term which indicated that he, like Jacob, had wrestled with God in prayer, and had prevailed with Him. In reply to Nathanael's question, how He could know anything of his character at all, Jesus alludes to certain of his secret acts of devotion and meditation, which Nathanael thought could be known only to God and to himself. But to reveal the secret thoughts of the heart was but a small thing for the Word made flesh. He intimates that He had much greater things than this to do; that His work was to renew the intercourse between heaven and earth, which by man's sin had been so long interrupted, to reconcile man to God, to establish on earth the economy which Jacob's dream had prefigured.

It is probable that in these words Jesus refers to the Church and to her spiritual privileges, to the angels who should act as ministering spirits for them who should be heirs of salvation, to the unbroken communication which should henceforth be maintained between heaven and earth, as much perhaps as to any special appearance of angels, in the Nativity, in the Agony in the Garden, in the Resurrection, or in the Ascension. Though these words were spoken to Nathanael, the promise was to all: "Ye shall see."

In calling Jesus the Son of God, some¹ have supposed that Nathanael, convinced by the greatness of the miracle which He had shown, in revealing to him his most secret acts, confessed that He was the Son of God by nature, One with the Father and equal to the Father; others,² that by these words he only meant to say that Jesus was in some eminent, unusual degree favoured by divine revelation from God. It would seem more than probable³ that neither Nathanael, nor Philip, who had heard the testimony of John the Baptist, nor any of them, except the Baptist, as yet understood the full meaning of the words "the Son of God." They believed Him to be the Messiah, who had been foretold by the prophets, and, in some sense, to be the Son of God; but it is doubtful whether they understood that He was the Word made flesh, the Second Person in the Godhead, One with the Father and equal to the Father. Jesus leads them on by degrees to a perfect knowledge of this great Mystery.

It was probably⁴ for this purpose that, after Nathanael had confessed Jesus to be the Son of God, He calls Himself the Son of Man. This is the name by which He is constantly styled in the Gospels, and always by Himself. It may be that He uses this expression here to recall Nathanael's thoughts to the first promise, and to teach him that He is the Second Adam, the seed of the woman who should bruise the serpent's head (Gen. iii. 15), who should undo the mischief wrought by the disobedience of the First Adam, and who should renew man's intercourse with angels, which the First Adam by his sin had forfeited.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. i. 49; vol. vi. p. 224.

S. Augustine, in Joan. i. 49, tract. vii.; vol. iii. p. 1448.

Maldonatus, in Joan. i. 49; vol. ii. p. 454.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. i. 49; Homil. xvi. [Theophylact,

Theophylact, in Joan. i. 49; vol. i. p. 530.

Euthymius, in Joan. i. 50; vol. iv. p. 67.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xvii. p. 145.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. i. 49; vol. viii. p. 897.

* Verily, verily (Greek, Amen, amen).—"Let the reader observe a peculiar use of the word Amen among the Jews. The judges adjured a man, saying, 'We adjure thee by the Lord God of Israel, or by Him whose name is Merciful, that thou hast nothing of this man's in thy hand; and he answered, Amen;' or they said, N. the son of N. is cursed of the Lord God of Israel, or of Him whose name is Merciful, if such a man's goods be in his hand, and he discover it not; and he answered, Amen.' (Maimonides' tract Shevuoth, ver. 11.) And so he related concerning vows, that 'whosoever vowed any holy thing, and I bound it up with Amen, he was tied.' (Ec. Vid. Sam. Petit, variarum Lect. i. 7, who concludeth hereupon thus, 'Cum dicit Christus, 'Αμην λέγεις ἑαυτῷ, idem est ac dicere, Juratus vobis dico.'—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John i.; vol. i. p. 515.

^b Hereafter.—"Our English and Erasmus render ἀπ' ἄρα 'hereafter,' and so have left the time at a very large and uncertain scantling. But the Syriac and the Vulgar render it 'from this time' or 'henceforward,' and so it most properly and naturally meaneth. For it signifieth not only a date of time, and some one action done after that date at a time uncertain, but a continuance of such actions or things from that date forward."—Ibid. vol. i. p. 537.

CHAPTER II.

[1. Christ turneth water into wine, 12. departeth into Capernaum, and to Jerusalem, 14. where He purgeth the Temple of buyers and sellers, 19. He foretelleth His Death and Resurrection. 23. Many believed because of His miracles, but He would not trust Himself with them.

[Valg. Iesus ad nuptias invitatus, aquam in vinum convertit, et a Capernaum veniens Ierosolymam, eiecit de Templo negotiatores; ac signo a Iudæis petito, dicit: Solvite Templum hoc, etc.; multi propter signa crediderunt in nomine Iesu, quibus ipse non credebatur.]

CANA of Galilee, the village where our Saviour turned the water into wine, and where he afterwards healed the nobleman's son (John iv. 46), was the home of Nathanael (John xxi. 2). There is some doubt as to the true site of the ancient Cana. But the truth of the Gospel narrative is not in any way affected by our uncertainty as to the site of Cana.

1. And the third day^a there was a marriage in Cana^b of Galilee; and the mother of Jesus was there:

2. And both Jesus was called, and His disciples, to the marriage.

The Evangelist does not say that the mother of Jesus was invited, but that she was there; that Jesus was invited, and that the invitation was extended to His disciples. All this goes to make it probable, that this was the marriage of some intimate friend or relative of the family.

An opinion prevailed at one time, but resting on a very insufficient foundation, that this was the marriage of the Evangelist S. John. Those who first gave expression to this seem to have had no better reason than a few words which were either falsely attributed to S. Augustine, or, if his, were incorrectly understood. These words are, "Johannes, quem Dominus de fluctivaga nuptiarum tempestate vocavit."¹ But it is evident from many passages that S. Augustine, in common with other Fathers of eminence in the Church, held that S. John continued unmarried to the end of his life.²

Not a word is said about Joseph, the husband of Mary, whether he were at the marriage or not. The last occasion on which he was mentioned was eighteen years before this, when Jesus was twelve years old (Luke ii. 41). Hence it has been inferred, with some degree of probability, that Joseph was not living when Jesus began His public ministry.³

The disciples who were invited along with Jesus to the marriage were not His Apostles. Jesus did not choose His Apostles until after John Baptist was cast into prison (Matt. iv. 12); and the events related in this chapter took place before that (John iii. 24). The disciples⁴ were probably the

¹ S. Augustine, Prefatio in Joan.; vol. iii. p. 1380.

² S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lxxviii.; vol. ii. p. 713.

S. Jerome, in Jovin. i. 26; vol. ii. pp. 246, 248.

S. Augustine, in bono Conjugal. 21; vol. vi. p. 391.

— in Joan. xxi. 22, tract. cxxiv.; vol. iii. p. 1976.

Maldonatus, Prefat. in Joan.; vol. ii. p. 373. [Cornelius

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. ii. 1; vol. viii. p. 900.

³ S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lxxviii.; vol. ii. p. 713.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xviii. p. 146.

Maldonatus, in Joan. ii. 2; vol. ii. p. 458.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. ii. 2; vol. viii. p. 901.

⁴ Maldonatus and Cornelius a Lapide, ut supra.

^a And the third day.—"The third day refers back probably to John i. 44. The journey in returning to Galilee did not require more than two days. Cana, now Kana el-Jelil, was situated about seven miles north of Nazareth, and about three miles N. by E. of Sepphoris: see 'Bibl. Res. in Palest.,' iii. p. 204."—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek,' p. 188.

^b Cana.—"About two miles further (that is, five miles from Sepphoris) is Kephre Kenna, where, the Latins say, our Saviour wrought His first miracle of turning water into wine at the marriage of Cana. On the south side of the village is a fountain, out of which, they say, the water was taken that was turned into wine. . . . It is certain this situation, so near Nazareth, makes it very probable that it was the place where this miracle was wrought; but the Greeks have a tradition that it was at Gana, on the west side of the plain of Zabulon, about three or four miles north-west of Sepphoris; and it is very extraordinary they should allow that the water was carried from this fountain, which is at the distance of four or five miles from it. Whichever was the place, it seemed to be a matter unsettled about the beginning of the last century, when a writer on the Holy Land (Quaresmius) endeavoured to fix it here, as the most probable place; though Adrichomius seems to give such a description of it from several authors as would incline to think that it was the other Kana."—POCOCKE, Travels, vol. ii. p. 66.

"Dixon ('Holy Land,' vol. i. p. 332) discusses the claims of these two places to be the Cana of Scripture at great length, and gives it in favour of Kephre Kenna. Robinson 'is in favour of Khurbet Kana, or Kana el-Jelil, as he calls it.'—'Bibl. Researches,' vol. iii. p. 205.

five mentioned at the end of the last chapter: viz., Andrew and his companion, whose name is not given, but supposed to be the Evangelist S. John; Simon Peter, Philip, and Nathanael. Another ground for thinking that S. John was present at this miracle, is the circumstantiality with which he relates it. It has been observed that he gives to this miracle a minuteness of detail which he only gives to the actions at which he himself was present. His not naming himself is in keeping with his usual custom.

The events of the last few days S. John records with a chronological exactness that is remarkable.

Some¹ have supposed that "the third day" was reckoned from the event last mentioned, from the conversation which Jesus had held with Nathanael, and His departure into Galilee. This would leave one clear day between His departure into Galilee and the marriage in Cana. Others² have thought that "the third day" is dated from the testimony of John the Baptist. John stood, and two of his disciples, and he testified of Jesus, and they followed Him. And the day following Jesus would go into Galilee, and meeteth with Philip and Nathanael, and the third day there was a marriage. If the latter be the meaning intended, S. John would teach us that Jesus began to work His miracles and to exercise His ministry publicly on the fourth day after His return from the Temptation.

3. And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto Him, They have no wine.

¹ S. And they had no wine, because the wine of the marriage was finished.
Then saith the mother of Jesus unto Him, They have no wine.
² Vulg. Et deficiente vino, dixit mater Iesu ad eum: Vinum non habent.

4. Jesus saith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? Mine hour is not yet come.

¹ V. A. And Jesus saith.
² Vulg. Et dixit ei Iesus: Quid mihi et tibi est mulier? nondum venit hora mea.

The meaning of our Saviour's reply to His mother is beset with considerable difficulty. Some³ of the early writers too hastily concluded that the Blessed Virgin in her appeal to her Son was actuated by a love of personal influence, or by a feeling of vainglory. Others,⁴ interpreting her words in a sense that is more consistent with the context, and with what is related of the Virgin Mary and of our Lord's treatment of her, in other places of the Gospels, have arrived at a different conclusion.

Christ's words do not imply a rebuke to His mother. They are an explanation of the principle on which He would act throughout His ministry: viz., that no love of kindred, that no considerations of human relationship would influence Him in His conduct, except on one single occasion, and that had not yet arrived.

1. Our Saviour's own words to His mother do not necessarily imply a rebuke to her. Conduct in her such as to require a rebuke from her Son would be inconsistent with all her former life. Unless impelled by the unmistakable sense of the words, why should we select a meaning to this passage which attributes to the Blessed Virgin a weakness which hitherto she had never shown, and which is inconsistent with every action which is recorded of her? At no time, either before this or after it, does she show any love of personal influence, any desire to gain applause among her friends, by her power over her Son, or by her connection with Him in any way. This might be very naturally the conduct of an ordinary woman. But the Virgin Mary was not an ordinary woman. Human as she was, she had always acted on higher motives than the generality of mankind. In the trial under which Zacharias failed, in the belief of God's promise contrary to the general course of nature, she was triumphant. Zacharias did not believe the word of the angel that a child should be born to him, because he was an old man and his wife well stricken in years. But the Blessed Virgin did not disbelieve the angel's word, that she should conceive in her womb and bring forth a son, because she knew not man. Her exclamation was: "Behold the handmaid of the Lord: be it unto me according to thy word." This had been the guiding principle of her life ever since. The angel said unto her: "Hail, thou that art full of grace, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women" (Luke i. 28). Is it reasonable to suppose that she of whom this was said, would act on the usual low motives that influence others?

We have the testimony of the angel that up to the time of the Annunciation she had acted on the very highest of motives. Are we then to conclude that her thirty years' intercourse with God—intercourse such as no other being was ever favoured with—are we to conclude that this had no influence with her, or rather that it had a degenerating influence, that it gave her a lower tone of action than before? Was she less holy, more selfish, and more unworthy than before? It would be impossible to conceive this; it would contradict all our experience.

Nor was the Blessed Virgin an uninterested spectator of the mighty events that were taking place around her. We know that she had watched with eager eyes every development of the great Mystery, her miraculous Conception of Jesus, His Birth, His Life. She had kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart (ii. 19). She was probably

¹ Origen, in Joan. ii. 1, tomus vi. 39; vol. iv. p. 288.

² Epiphanius, Hæres. li. 16; vol. i. p. 929.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xviii. p. 145.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. ii. 14, vol. viii. p. 809.

⁵ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. ii. 3; Homil. xvi.

Theophylact, in Joan. ii. 3; vol. i. p. 532.

Euthymius, in Joan. ii. 3; vol. iv. p. 71.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. ii. 3; vol. vi. p. 225.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xviii. p. 146.

³ Maldonatus, in Joan. ii. 3; vol. ii. p. 459.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. ii. 4; vol. viii. p. 802.

aware of His Baptism by John, of the visible descent of the Holy Spirit upon Him,—it may be, too, of His Temptation, and of the witness of the Baptist.¹

What had she now said to Him to require a rebuke? His loving subjection to her for thirty years did not embolden her to bid Him, or even to intercede with Him, in behalf of her friends. She simply states their need, and leaves the consideration of it to Himself. Her only words are, "They have no wine." Are these such words as to require a rebuke from our Lord to His mother, and that mother such as the Blessed Virgin was, before all the assembled company, and to be handed down for all ages as a memorial against her?

The term "woman," in our translation, imparts a degree of harshness to the sentence, which it does not possess in the original. Unless our Lord had called her "mother," no other word in the Greek language would have been so tender or so delicate as the term which we have translated "woman."

2. Our Saviour's answer to His mother is an explanation of the principle on which He would act throughout His whole public ministry, which He was then just commencing. No love of kindred, no considerations of mere human relationship would influence Him, except on one single occasion, and that time had not yet come. His miracles must be performed for the glory of God and the salvation of man, irrespective of all family ties. The public statement of this principle of action was necessary at the beginning of His ministry, and an opportunity offers itself in the house of an intimate friend or relation before the working of His very first miracle.

The common opinion, and one very consonant with the usual practice among men, no doubt would be, that His power to work miracles might be fairly exercised for the special benefit of His friends and relations. Something of the kind seems to have been the feeling of the woman who exclaimed, "Blessed is the womb that bare Thee, and the paps which Thou hast sucked." (Luke xi. 27.) A similar feeling He corrected, when those around said unto Him, "Behold Thy mother and Thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with Thee." (Matt. xii. 47.)

"The mother of Jesus saith unto Him, They have no wine." Through the length of the feast, or the number of guests, or through the poverty of the bridal party, the wine had failed. He, who was her Son, and their friend or relation, could supply their want. Such might be the current of her thoughts, and our Saviour answers those thoughts. "Jesus saith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with Thee? Mine hour is not yet come." This may mean, that the time for manifesting Himself to men by miracles was not yet come.² It has also been explained in a way more in accordance with the sense in which the expression "Mine hour" or "His hour" is used on other occasions; that is, with reference to the time of His Passion. The rest of His answer, "What have I to do with thee?" has also been interpreted as referring to this. From His mother He had received His Human nature; but this of itself could not perform miracles. His power as God could alone work miracles, and that could not be exerted for the assistance of those who were relations, merely because they were connected by the ties of family or blood. An hour would come when He would fully recognize in His mother the strong claims of human relationship, the claims which she had upon Him for assistance and support as His mother. That hour would not be until He was hanging on the cross; then He would as a Son provide a home for His mother in the house of His beloved disciple, S. John the Evangelist. (John xix. 26.)³

His mother sees from His answer to her that He will supply the want of wine, though His reason for so doing will not be the one which she had supposed—His relationship to the bridal party, but for the manifestation of His glory, and that His disciples might believe on Him. In this persuasion—

5. His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it.⁴

6. And there were set there six waterpots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece.

S. omittit set.
Vulg. Erant autem ibi lapideæ hydræ sex positæ secundum purificationem Judæorum.

7. Jesus saith unto them, Fill the waterpots with water. And they filled them up to the brim.

S. And Jesus.
Vulg. Dicit eis Iesus.

8. And He saith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast. And they bare it.

9. When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was: (but the servants which drew the water knew;) the governor of the feast called the bridegroom,

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. ii. 3, Homil. xxi.

Theophylact, in Joan. ii. 3; vol. i. p. 532.

Euthymius, in Joan. ii. 3; vol. iv. p. 71.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xviii. p. 146.

Maldonatus, in Joan. ii. 4; vol. ii. p. 463.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. ii. 4; vol. viii. p. 902.

³ S. Augustine, in Joan. ii. 4, tract. viii.; vol. iii. p. 1455.

* Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it.—See note on Matt. xx. 23, p. 328.

10. And saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the good wine until now.

S. multi quædam: S. V. omittit: S. aut. Vulg. Et dicit: Omnis homo primum bonum vinum ponit: et cum inebriatur, tunc et quod deterius est: Tu autem servasti bonum vinum usque adhuc.

The servants were required to fill the waterpots, that they might be evidence that no fraud or deception was practised—they were to fill waterpots, of which there could be no suspicion—they were to fill them with water, and up to the brim, that there might be no possibility of fraud by pouring into them any liquid or drug so as to impart the taste and colour of wine.

At a very moderate calculation these six stone jars or waterpots would contain 110 gallons, and at the lowest calculation they would hold sixty galls, a greater quantity of wine than would be consumed at this feast.¹

The office of ruler of the feast² was to regulate all the matters of the feast, and to decide any question of order and precedence that might arise. Whether he was one of the guests who might be chosen on each occasion to fill this post, or whether he was there for that express purpose, his office was evidently one of considerable consequence. His opinion on all matters would be held decisive, and for several reasons. Besides being invested with authority, his anxiety to preserve order and decorum would restrain him from anything like indulgence himself. Thus the keenness of his own taste would not be blunted. His knowledge as to the quality of wine, as we may fairly suppose, would from his experience be beyond question. But how little did this ruler of the feast know of the depth of meaning which his words contained. When he called the bridegroom, and saith unto him, "Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the good wine until now." The real Bridegroom, who was also at this feast, the Bridegroom of the Church, had indeed kept the good wine until now.

"The Law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ" (i. 17). These words are a summary of the difference between the Old and the New Covenant. This difference may also be expressed, and was probably meant to be expressed, in another way. The water which Jesus at this marriage-feast converts into wine, is as the blessings of the Law; the wine, the good wine, as the richer blessings of the Gospel. In this light the miracle wrought at the very beginning of His ministry is prophetic of the blessings which He should confer on mankind. This miracle not only manifested forth His power as God, and strengthened the feeble faith of His disciples in Him; it was also the key-note of the merciful dispensation which He was then inaugurating. Looking upon this action of our Saviour in its lowest view, not as prophetic, but in its social aspect, the first public display of His Divine power would for ever be associated in the minds of men with the joys of the bridegroom, the festivities of wedded love, and the sanctities of home.

11. This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested forth His glory; and His disciples believed on Him.

S. His glory. Vulg. Hoc fecit initium signorum Iesus in Cana Galilee.

These words might be understood in three different ways.

1. Some have supposed that the Evangelist meant that this miracle in Cana of Galilee was the first miracle that Jesus ever wrought.

2. So far as the grammatical construction is concerned he might mean, that Jesus wrought miracles before this, but that this was the first of those which He wrought in Cana of Galilee.

3. Others have held that the Evangelist meant that Jesus wrought other miracles before this, but that this was the first which He wrought to manifest His glory, and to induce men to believe in Him as the Messiah.

The *first*³ was the interpretation which was generally held by the Fathers and early commentators, who believed that this was absolutely the first miracle which Jesus wrought, and that S. John had purposely said this to intimate that no credence was to be given to the histories of the miracles which Jesus wrought in His Childhood, which began to be circulated among the Christians in early times. The second would be held by those who believed in the truth of the report, that as a Child He had wrought miracles. The *third*⁴ was held by those who believed that Jesus had before this miraculously supplied the necessities of the family at Nazareth.

About the character of the act which He had just performed there could be no mistake. The witnesses were too many and too independent of each other. Every person at the marriage could bear testimony as to the qualities of the wine which He had made. Thus by suspending the ordinary course of nature, or by acting above and beyond it for a time, Jesus proved that His power was not restrained within the same limits as that of a mere man, and therefore that He was more than a mere man. By this means He prepared the way for His future teaching, that He was sent by the

¹ Smith's Bib. Dict., article Measures.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. ii. 9, Homil. xxii.

Theophylact, in Joan. ii. 9; vol. i. p. 533.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. ii. 11; Homil. xvi. xxiii.

Theophylact, in Joan. ii. 11; vol. i. p. 535.

Euthymius, in Joan. ii. 11; vol. iv. p. 79.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 43, art. 3; vol. iv. p. 391.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang., cap. xviii. p. 148.

Cerinthian's Epistle, in Joan. ii. 11; vol. vii. p. 994.

⁴ Maldonatus, in Joan. ii. 11; vol. ii. p. 468.

Father, that He was One with the Father, and equal to the Father.*

Thus by His presence and first miracle that He wrought, Jesus adorned and beautified the holy estate of matrimony. He teaches that in the exercise of His Divine power He could be influenced by no motives of personal intimacy or human relationship; He manifests His power as God; He lays the foundation of faith in Him in the hearts of His disciples, or confirms what already existed in a feeble, wavering condition; and He sets forth, as it were in figure, the rich blessings of the Gospel.

12. ¶ After this He went down to Capernaum,^b He, and His mother, and His brethren, and His disciples: and they continued there not many days.

S.V. Capernaum: S. omits and His disciples: A. and He continued.
Vulg. Post hoc descendit Capernaum ipse, et mater ejus, et discipuli ejus:
et ibi manserunt non multis diebus.

Capernaum was a city to the N.E. of Cana, situated in "the land of Gennesaret," which was a rich, busy plain on the west shore of the Sea of Galilee, and which at that time was one of the most prosperous and crowded districts in the whole of Palestine. Being on the shore, Capernaum was lower than Nazareth and Cana of Galilee, from which the road to it was one of descent. Capernaum was better fitted than Nazareth to be the centre from which a knowledge of His teaching and miracles could be disseminated. Nazareth was an obscure village, where He Himself was despised for the supposed lowliness of His Birth and connections.

This is not the journey to Capernaum mentioned in S. Matthew iv. 13, because that was after John Baptist had been cast into prison, and this before (John iii. 24; iv. 1).¹

His mother, and His brethren, and His disciples are still with Him.

For our Lord's brethren see Commentary on S. Matthew, chap. xii., page 223.

13. ¶ And the Jews' Passover^c was at hand, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem,

S. John expressly indicates three Passovers by name; the one here, another chap. vi. 4, and the last chap. xviii. 39. He also mentions a Feast of the Jews (v. 1), which, as appears most probable, was the Passover. He thus speaks of four Passovers during our Saviour's ministry, while the other three Evangelists mention only one Passover; namely, that at which Jesus was crucified. But there is no contradiction between S. John and the other three Evangelists as to the number of the Passovers: for none of those three ever utter a single word which in any way implies that the Passover of which they speak is the only one that occurred during Christ's ministry.

The reason that leads the first three Evangelists to allude to one Passover only, while S. John speaks of three at least, was probably this: S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke confine themselves almost exclusively to the history of Christ's sayings and doings in Galilee; they never relate any of His works in Judæa until He went up to Jerusalem the last time for His Crucifixion, while S. John chiefly records His ministry in Judæa, and principally in Jerusalem. To take S. Matthew as a representative of the other three. From chapter iv. to xix. is taken up entirely with our Saviour's work in Galilee; in chap. xix. He sets out on His journey to Jerusalem for the Crucifixion, and from xxi. to the end is contained the history of the last week of His ministry. Thus only one visit to Jerusalem is here recorded. But it is very different in S. John's Gospel. His special object evidently was to record that portion of our Saviour's work which He performed in Judæa and Jerusalem, and exceptionally only that in Galilee.

Thus though the Evangelists have given different results, they have been actuated by the same principle; namely, to note the time of the Passover, when it is in some way connected with the events which they are describing. For instance, it would have been impossible to give anything like a full account of the Crucifixion without recording that it occurred during the celebration of the Passover, and therefore all the four Evangelists refer to this Passover. But it was easy enough to record the Sermon on the Mount, the parable of the sower, or the labourers in the vineyard, &c., without alluding to the Passover, because these were in no way connected with it. They were not delivered either in the place

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang., cap. xix. p. 149.

* A miracle.—"By a miracle I understand, speaking generally, not the mere use of the common natural powers accumulated or enlarged, but an operation involving what, I suppose, would be called medically an organic departure from her customary laws; an operation, too, which must absolutely be performed upon man himself or some other object, after some manner which shall be appreciable in its results by his faculties, and calculated to satisfy them, when in their greatest vigilance, that it is a real experience and not a mere delusion of the senses."—THE RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, 'Studies on Homer,' vol. ii. p. 361.

^b Capernaum is compounded of two words, Cephara and Naum. Now that Cephara signifieth a village, it is undoubted, for the word occurreth several times in that sense in the Old Testament (1 Sam. vi. 18; 1 Chron. xxvii. 25; Nehemiah vi. 2, &c.). But whether the latter word Naum were written נָעוּם or נָחוּם is some doubt.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. ii. 13; vol. viii. p. 905.

fulness. The Hebrew map of Canaan writes it נָחוּם, the 'Town of Nahum,' or the 'Town of Consolation,' which name suited very well with it, now when Christ had His habitation in it; but it is commonly supposed that it was called נָעוּם, or the 'Town of Beauty,' because of the pleasant situation of it on the banks of Gennesaret, and because of the beauty of the buildings of the town itself."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John ii.; vol. i. p. 539.

^c The Passover.—"Of the three great feasts to be kept at Jerusalem, it will be found that the Lord went up to the Passover in the first year of His ministry, to Pentecost in the second, and to Tabernacles in the third; then again to the Passover whereat He was crucified. N.B.—S. John alone records the first three, viz. one for each year; but S. Luke alludes to them (Luke xiii. 6, 7)."—McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 546.

where the Passover was kept, or during the time of its celebration. But to describe the purging of the Temple at the first Passover during His ministry, as related by S. John, without giving any intimation that it occurred immediately before the Passover, would have been to miss some of the principal points in the action: for it was probably in consequence of the approaching Passover that the market was held in the Temple Court at all. For this market existed chiefly for the convenience of the strangers who flocked to Jerusalem during the celebration of the three great feasts. It was the Passover that collected the immense concourse of people, who by His miracles and His teaching were induced to believe in His supernatural power. It was the nearness of the Passover that would give in the minds of the people a particular significance to His purifying of the Temple. They had assembled a few days before the Passover in order to purify themselves for the worthy celebration of it, and Jesus shows them that God would have His Temple purified as well as the worshippers.

Four Passovers would comprise three years of His ministry. The time between His Baptism and this His first Passover is said to be a few months, probably six. S. John enables us to see how part of this time was spent. Forty days were spent in the Fast before the Temple came to Him. How long the threefold temptation occupied, we are not informed, nor how long He abode in the wilderness after the Temptation was ended and when the angels ministered unto Him, or before He returned to John the Baptist. Three days we have account of Him at the Jordan, and going into Galilee (John i. 29, 35, 43), and the next day after that He is at Cana at the marriage feast. This was probably the fourth day from His first appearing after He had left the wilderness, and the third since He entertained John's two disciples. We have thus a clear account of six weeks, or thereabouts, of the time which He spent between His Baptism and His first Passover. The rest was probably spent in going about Galilee and preaching the Gospel. It has been stated by a writer in the fourth century that the marriage in Cana of Galilee took place on the sixtieth day from the Baptism of Jesus.¹

At the time S. John wrote his Gospel he was living among the Gentile Christians of Asia Minor, and he therefore explains that the Passover, to be present at which our Saviour now goes up to Jerusalem, was a Jewish feast. His cleansing of the Temple at the commencement of His ministry had only a temporary effect. When His presence was withdrawn, we see the Jews returned to their usual profanation, and He repeats His work in the early part of the last week of His ministry (Matt. xxi. 12).

Our word "Temple" is the translation of two Greek words, (1) ἱερόν, which means the whole consecrated precinct, including the outer or unroofed court; (2) ναός, the portion appropriated as the abode of God's Presence. In the following paragraph both these words are used: the first when our Lord drives out the buyers and sellers, &c., from the Temple; and the second, where He says, "Destroy this Temple, and I will raise it up in three days."

Every Israelite was bound, within the seven days that the Feast of the Passover lasted, to these two things—1. To appear before the Lord in the Court, and that with a sacrifice. 2. To solemn joy and mirth, and that also with sacrifices. The former was called by the Jews "appearance;" the latter, Chagigah, the festival. God commanded His people thus: "Thou shalt sacrifice the Passover unto the Lord thy God, of the flock and the herd" (Deut. xvi. 2). The Paschal lambs would be taken from the flock, and the after sacrifices, the Chagigah, from the flock and the herd, or from the herd only. The Targum of Jonathan says: "Ye shall kill the Passover before the Lord your God, between the eves, and your sheep and oxen on the morrow, in that very day, in joy of the feast."² It was to sell to the people the Paschal lambs, and the sheep and oxen for the Chagigah sacrifices, that the market was held in the Temple Court, either by the priests or by their connivance and authority.

14. And found in the Temple (ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ) those that sold oxen and sheep and doves, and the changers of money sitting:

S. that sold sheep and oxen.
Vulg. vendentes boves, et oves, et columbas.

15. And when He had made a scourge of small cords, He drove them all out of the Temple, and the sheep, and the oxen; and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables;

S. He made a scourge of small cords and drove them.
Vulg. Et cum fecisset quasi flagellum de funiculis, omnes eiecit de templo, oves quoque, et boves.

16. And said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence; make not My Father's house an house of merchandise.

A. and make not.
Vulg. Et his qui columbas vendebant, dixit . . . et nolite facere domum Patris mei, domum negotiationis.

17. And His disciples remembered that it was written, The zeal of Thine house hath eaten Me up.

S.V. omit And: S.V.A. of Thine house eateth Me up.
Vulg. Recordati sunt discipuli ejus, quia scriptum est: Zelus domus tue comedit me.

The market here mentioned was held in the Temple, or in the outer court, and, as mentioned above, was for the sale of such animals as were required for the sacrifices of the

¹ S. Epiphanius, Hæres. li. 16; vol. i. p. 240.

² Lagoutte on Mark xv. 25; vol. ii. p. 347.

Temple. The money-changers were there to facilitate the purchase of these animals, as well as the payment of the Temple-rate, the half-shekel, which each man from twenty years old was to pay as an offering to the Lord (Exod. xxx. 13). No defence is set up for this traffic, on the ground that it had a kind of quasi-religious character about it, as being chiefly in the hands of the priests, or that the animals were required for God's service, and the payment for the maintenance of the Temple and its worship, for incense, wood, shewbread, &c., or that the sale was not exactly in the Temple, but in the outer Court. The house of God was for prayer, and not for trade, and the unhallowed selfish thoughts which are too apt to mingle themselves with trade.

It is probable that the practice of holding their market in the Temple Court was introduced after their return from the Captivity, as none of the prophets allude to it. This time Jesus accuses them of sacrilege only; the next time, when He expels them from the Temple, He accuses them of extortion and injustice. He says they had made His Father's house a den of thieves (Matt. xxi. 12).

Some of the early writers were accustomed to look upon our Lord's expulsion of the buyers and sellers, &c., from the Temple as one of His greatest miracles. One man, outwardly like themselves, backed by no earthly authority, ejects from the Temple a multitude, whose gains and whose character He attacks. The awe inspired by His deed, and by the manner of the doer of it, renders them powerless to resist.

Enraged at their expulsion from the Temple, at the interruption to their traffic, and at the charge of sacrilege which Jesus brings against them, the Jews in turn accuse Him of acting without authority. They knew that He had received no countenance from the chief priests, and they require of Him a sign to prove that He was commissioned by God to act as He did.

As a proof of His divine power, of His commission from God and Oneness with God, He appeals to His future Resurrection. He does this in language which they misunderstand. This is one of the many instances where, in His conversation with the Jews, our Saviour uses words in one sense which they understand in quite a different sense, but which He does not explain to them. The reason doubtless is, that they are not in a frame of mind to receive such explanation. Either their faith or their knowledge is too imperfect.

18. ¶ Then answered the Jews and said unto Him, What sign shewest Thou unto us, seeing that Thou doest these things?

19. Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this Temple,^a and in three days^b I will raise it up.

20. Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this Temple in building,^c and wilt Thou rear it up in three days?

21. But He spake of the Temple of His Body.

^a S. of the Temple of the Body.

Vulg. Ille autem dicebat de templo corporis sui.

22. When therefore He was risen from the dead, His disciples remembered that He had said this unto them; and they believed the scripture, and the word which Jesus had said.

^b S.V.A. omit unto them.

Vulg. recordati sunt discipuli ejus, quia hoc dicebat, et crediderunt scripturam.

* Destroy this Temple (λύσατε τὸν ναὸν τοῦτον).—"Even recent expositors erroneously take Imperative in John ii. 19, xx. 22, for a Future, supporting their view by a reference to the Hebrew of such passages as Gen. xx. 7, xlv. 18. Inasmuch as every command relates to a future time, the Future tense as a general expression of futurity may be used for the Imperative; but the special form of the Imperative cannot, vice versa, be employed for the more general Future. Such a disregard of logical principles would involve speech in inextricable confusion."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 328.

^b "In three days does not signify that three whole days are to be spent on something, but that something is to take place within that space of time, and, by consequence, before its expiration."—Ibid., p. 404.

* Years of the building of the Temple.—"At our Lord's first Passover after His Baptism the Jews asserted that 'the present Temple (ὁ ναὸς οὗτος) had been forty and six years in building' (John ii. 13, 22). The present Temple was that of Herod, and it was begun in the eighteenth year of Herod's reign (Jos. A. xv. 11, 1, 2). Strictly speaking, in the more limited sense, this Temple (ναὸς) had been 'built by the priests in one year and six months' (jd. 6), but the connected buildings and courts were not finally completed till about thirty-five years after our Lord's death (jd. xx. 9, 7). To determine then the year of the present Passover, we have simply to reckon forty-six years from 'the eighteenth year of Herod's reign.' Here, however, we meet with a difficulty almost exactly similar to that which we encountered in deciding upon 'the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius.' The reign of Herod, like that of Tiberius, had two different beginnings, one that of his declaration as king by the Romans in 714 (Jos. A. xiv. 14, 5, 'the first day of his kingdom'), the other that of the commencement of his sole reign upon the execution of the Maccabean King Antigonus in 717 A.U.C. Both these dates are recognized and employed by Josephus himself, not only in regard to Herod's reign generally (A. xiv. 14, 5; xvii. 8, 1), but also in regard to this very building of the Temple (A. x. 11, 1; B. i. 21, 1). This, it will be noticed, is a confirmation of our conclusion as to a twofold reckoning in the case of Tiberius. Inasmuch however as Josephus generally reckons from the death of Antigonus (see Gesw. Diss. v.), we shall conclude that he reckons 'the eighteenth year' from that date, viz. from 717 A.U.C., which accordingly, in Jewish reckoning, will be from Nisan (April) 734 to Nisan 735. The exact month was the Jewish Kisleu, our December (Jos. A. xv. 11, 6, with xiv. 16, 4); whence computing in Jewish method the forty-six years of John ii. 20, we reach Nisan 780 for the Passover in question. Wieseler (p. 153; as also Meyer, Tisch, Lange), in violation of his own acknowledgment as to Jewish methods of computation (pp. 47-49), makes it Nisan 781; an error which, as he rightly places the Lord's death in 783, also shortens the Lord's ministry by a whole year. Our Lord's first Passover therefore after His Baptism being in April 780, His Baptism falls on 6th January, 780, and the Nativity thirty years previously, viz. on December 25, 719 A.U.C."—McLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 406.

Roughly speaking, there had been three Temples. The first was built by Solomon, and was completed in seven years (1 Kings vi. 37). This was plundered and burnt by the Chaldeans under Nebuchadnezzar, when he carried the two tribes captive to Babylon, B.C. 584 (2 Kings xxv. 13-15; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17-20). The second Temple was built by Zerubbabel, after their return from the seventy years' captivity at Babylon (Ezra iii. 12). This second Temple, which was greatly inferior to the first Temple in glory and splendour, Herod the Great rebuilt. He did this in order to conciliate the people, and reconcile them to his usurped rule over them; and his successors had continued to add to it, and adorn and beautify it up to the present time. Josephus says¹ that Herod reigned thirty-four years, and that he began to rebuild the Temple in the eighteenth year of his reign.² In this way it could be said that the building of the present Temple had been extended over forty and six years.

Our Lord's words, "Destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up," were prophetic. They had much the same force as if He had said, "You will destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up again." When they quote these words against Him before the Council, they incorrectly represent Him as saying that He would destroy the Temple, not that they would (Mark xiv. 58). He spake of the Temple of His Body, where dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead. They thought that He spake of the Temple where God occasionally but specially manifested His Presence, which was but a type of His Body. Neither the Jews nor His disciples understood His words at the time. The Jews probably never understood them. After His Resurrection His disciples called these words to mind, and recognized the fulfilment of them.

23. ¶ Now when He was in Jerusalem at the Passover, in the feast day,^a many believed in His name, when they saw the miracles which He did.

24. But Jesus did not commit Himself unto them, because He knew all men,

25. And needed not that any should testify of man: for He knew what was in man.

What was the nature of the miracles which Jesus wrought at the Passover, beyond the cleansing of the Temple, we are not informed. As afterwards, they were probably healing the sick and casting out devils. Two instances of the effects which they produced on the mind are mentioned. They convinced Nicodemus that Jesus must be a teacher come from God, and they attracted the favourable attention of the Galileans (John iv. 45) who were present at this Passover, and bespoke their good will towards Him. It was now four hundred years since the Jews had had among them a prophet who had wrought miracles. Since the day that Daniel closed the mouth of the lions, we have no instance recorded of the working of miracles by any prophet or public teacher, until Jesus turned the water into wine at the marriage in Cana of Galilee.

His knowledge of what was in man induced Him at the beginning of His ministry, when His work was still to do, to withhold Himself from the people. But the same knowledge led Him in the fulness of time, when His work was done, to trust Himself to them.

¹ Josephus, Antiq. xvii. 8; vol. ii. p. 770.

Whiston's Trans., Antiq. xvii. 8, p. 470.

² Josephus, Antiq. xv. 11; vol. i. p. 699.

Whiston's Trans., Antiq. xv. 11, p. 429.

^a The feast-day.—"This feast-day at the Passover may best be conceived to be the first day of the festival week, or the day after the Passover was eaten; for on that day was the appearance of the people in the Court of the Temple, as the law appointed, that thrice every year they should appear before the Lord; for that appearing mentioned in the Law (saith Rambam) was that every one appear in the Court the first holy day of the festival, and bring an offering.' (In Hagg., per. i.) On that day therefore, the concourse of the people being the greatest, it is most proper to suppose that Christ began to show Himself in His miraculous power, as He had done a day or two before in His prophetic zeal, in driving the market out of the Temple."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John iii.; vol. i. p. 564.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER III.

Jordan.—"The absurdity of the etymology of Jordan from Jor and Dan, the supposed names of two sources, is obvious; for the name Jordan is merely the Greek form (Ἰορδάνης) for the Hebrew יַרְדֵּן, Jarden, the Descender, which has no relation to the name Dan. Further, the name Jordan was applied to the river from the earliest times; and we have it constantly in the Scriptures in the time of Abraham, at least five centuries before the name was given to the city at its source. Yet this etymology goes back at least to the time of Jerome (Comm. in Matt. xvi. 13): 'Jordanes oritur ad radices Libani; et habet duos fontes, unum nomine Jor, et alterum Dan; qui simul mixti Jordanis nomen efficiunt,' &c."—ROBINSON'S 'Later Bib. Res.,' p. 412.

"From the Hasbeya source to the Dead Sea, the direct distance is about 120 miles. I estimate the addition to be made for winding of the channel from the source to the end of the Sea of Galilee as 20 per cent., and for the rest as 100 per cent. (judging from Warren's outline of that part).

"This would make the water in the first part to be 60 miles long; and in the second part 140 miles, or in all 200 miles of channel, from the source to the Dead Sea.

"The Hasbeya source is 1700 feet above the Mediterranean, and the Dead Sea is 1300 feet below the Mediterranean, so that the total fall of Jordan is 3000 feet, which would be 15 feet per mile of its channel, or 25 feet per mile of its direct distance. . . .

"The surface of the Lake of Tiberias is 653 feet below the ordinary sea-level (its greatest depth is 165 feet).

"From Kerak, at its southern end, the river descends about 650 feet into the Dead Sea. As a general outline, then, it may be said that the Jordan runs 20 miles, falling 1400 feet, into a basin (Lake Hooleh) 12 miles long; then runs 10 miles, falling 700 feet, into another basin (Sea of Galilee), 14 miles long; then runs 65 miles, falling 700 feet, into a basin (Dead Sea) 50 miles long and 1800 feet deep. Here the waters of Jordan being fresh, and therefore lighter than the highly-saturated salt water of the Dead Sea, the river stream most probably disperses over the upper surface only, and so, being evaporated before they mingle much with the brine that lies heavy and deep below, they are wafted by the south wind in clouds once more to Hermon; and condensed into snow-flakes, with water from the Abana and Pharpar, also borne up to Hermon, they trickle down again to run along old Jordan's bed, their endless round."—MACGREGOR, 'The Rob Roy on the Jordan,' p. 817.

"During the whole course of the Jordan from source to end there does not seem to be one notable cascade or regular 'fall.'"—Ibid., p. 309.

"The Jordan seems never to have been navigable for traffic. If any boat went down the lower part before Molyneux (1847), or the upper part before the Rob Roy (1868), it must have been for exploration.

"Newbold says (As. Soc. I., vol. xvi. 23), 'that we hear no mention of boats or bridges in the different passages of the Israelites.' Ferry-boats, however, seem to have been established very early: we hear of one for Jordan in 2 Sam. xix. 18."—Ibid., p. 416.

"The Jordan flows through a rent or fissure in the plain some twenty or thirty feet below the level of the broad ancient river-bed; so that the fringe of reeds or canes, which makes the bank bright and cool, is invisible a few yards off."—DIXON'S 'Holy Land,' i. p. 295.

"Nine hours after leaving Jerusalem; we reached the banks of the river, concealed till you are close upon it by dense thickets of trees, reeds, and bushes, the pride of Jordan, growing luxuriantly to the very edge of the water."—LORD LINDSAY'S 'Letters on Holy Land,' ii. p. 64.

"I found, when I came to the river-side, that the track reappeared upon the opposite bank, plainly showing that the stream had been fordable at this place. Now, however, in consequence of the late rains, the river was quite impracticable for baggage-horses. A body of waters, about equal to the Thames at Eton, but confined to a narrow channel, poured down in a current so swift and heavy, that the idea of passing with laden baggage-horses was utterly abandoned."—'Eothen,' p. 140.

"We had skirted the band of foliage from the shore of the Lake, delighting in the varied tints of orange, red, and greens of every hue, against the background of dark-blue mountains behind it. Now descending into the depth of the ghôr, or deep valley which the rushing Jordan has worn for itself, we entered into the charming shade of the tall fine trees—poplars, willows, tamarisks, planes, terebinths—and a thick jungle of agnus castus and everlastings, both in blossom, the fine tall canes waving their beautiful flowery heads and flaunting leaves in the breeze—‘the reeds shaken by the wind.’ These reeds are the Arundo donax, the ‘Pride of Jordan,’ on which the young lions lay when they mourned—because the floods came and hid the reeds, and they were chased away (Zech. xi. 3).

“The plain of the Jordan—now called El Ghôr—would appear to have been always the most important plain in Israel, as its name in Scripture is Ha-arabah (Joshua xviii. 18), the plain par excellence; and the river is the only really large one in the land of Canaan: its three sources we had seen already—that at Hasbeya, that at Tel el Khady, and that at Banias; but the ancient inhabitants reckoned only the last as its veritable source. The Hebrew name is Yarden, the descender; and the old Arabic writers preserved this in the word ‘Ordoun for the upper part of the stream—below the Lake of Galilee it is called Scheriat-el-Kebeer, the great watering-place. The valley is enclosed between ridges, rising with steep precipitous sides, between 1000 and 2000 feet; the eastern side is the loftiest. The breadth of the valley here is about nine or ten miles; but it becomes very much narrower farther north. The river is itself sunk below the level of the valley between two sets of banks; those confining the water are low; the upper ones are much higher, and at a considerable distance from the stream. The continuous rush of its volume of water has worn this track for itself. Lower down, all along the Jericho plain, there are three sets of terrace banks; the middle one is covered with shrubs, canes, and low herbs. The average breadth of the river is about 150 feet.

“Its valley, from being so much depressed below the level of the Mediterranean, is of an intensely hot climate—‘a gigantic furnace,’ as Van de Velde calls it, in the vivid account he gives of his own sufferings there: he was in the Ghôr in the month of May, when, of course, the inevitable scirocco was constantly upon them, and he says that ‘the heat was considerably worse to bear than anything he had ever felt even in South Africa.’”—BEAUFORT’s ‘Travels in Syria,’ ii. p. 136.

“We were particularly struck with the appearance of the Jordan valley, over which far and wide was spread a bright green carpet of turf, a sight we had not seen before in Palestine.”—‘Recovery of Jerusalem,’ p. 374.

CHAPTER III.

[1. Christ teacheth Nicodemus the necessity of regeneration. 14. Of faith in His Death. 16. The great love of God towards the world. 18. Condemnation for unbelief. 23. The baptism, witness, and doctrine of John concerning Christ.]

[Vulg. Nicodemum nocte obijt de recensendo ex aqua et Spiritu, ac de sui instor anei serpentis exaltatione, quodque Deus Filium suum misit ad salvandum mundum: facta questione de purificatione, bonnes suis discipulis de Christo murmurantibus, laudat ipsum, dicens illum crescere oportere, se autem minui, et quod Pater omnia dederit in manu ejus: ut qui in eum credit, habeat vitam eternam; qui vero non credit, maneat ira Dei super eum.]

THE following conversation between Jesus and Nicodemus was held at Jerusalem, whither He, and the five disciples before mentioned, had gone up for the Passover. His driving out the buyers and sellers, &c., from the Temple, and purging it of all sacrilegious traffic, as well as the other miracles which He had wrought, had begun to draw upon Him the attention of the more earnest among those who were present at this Passover. The reappearing of a Teacher among them who could work miracles, after the cessation of this power for four hundred years, would necessarily excite the greatest interest amongst all classes at Jerusalem.

Among those who had been forcibly struck by the miracles which Jesus wrought, as related in the last chapter, ver. 23, was Nicodemus. The Evangelist mentions two points which make the conversion of Nicodemus to the teaching of Jesus the more remarkable—his religious belief and his worldly position. He was a Pharisee, one of the sect which was the bitterest persecutor of Jesus all through His ministry, and the effect of whose principles was radically opposed to the humility which He inculcated. He was also a ruler of the Jews, a member of the Sanhedrin, the great Council of the Jewish nation. By principle he was most opposed to the teaching of Jesus, and by his position he had the power to oppose its progress. The conversion of such a man proved at once the power of the Gospel and the sincerity of the man.

1. There was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus,^a a ruler of the Jews:

2. The same came to Jesus by night, and said unto Him, Rabbi, we know that Thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that Thou doest, except God be with him.

S. V. A. came to Him: S. and no mán.

Vulg. Hic venit ad Iesum nocte, . . . nemo enim.

It was no great proof of cowardice in Nicodemus to come to Jesus by night. Had he not possessed great sincerity of character, he was just in that position of life that would have deterred him from coming at all. He was a "master of Israel," a "ruler of the Jews," one who was accustomed to sit in the Council of the nation. On the other hand, Jesus was reputed, and as far as Nicodemus would know, correctly reputed, to be the son of a poor carpenter, born in an ignoble village in the despised district of Galilee, and His disciples five poor illiterate fishermen from the same district. To attach himself to such a company as this, there was required in Nicodemus an unusual share of honesty and moral courage. Nothing but a very strong conviction of the truth of what Jesus had said, coupled with an eager desire to learn more about it, could have influenced a man in his rank of life to come even by night to Jesus. Night, too, was probably the only time during which he could gain a private interview with Him. If he came, as some have thought, the very next night after he had seen the miracles and heard the doctrine, it would be a proof of his eagerness and earnestness, as well as of his courage. This was looked upon as a proof of his sincerity rather than of his fear. In the two other places where Nicodemus is mentioned, it is added, as if to his credit, that it was he who came to Jesus by night (John vii. 50; xix. 39).

It is uncertain whether Nicodemus meant to imply by the phrase "we know," &c., that the Sanhedrin as a body was convinced of this, or whether he referred to himself personally,

^a Nicodemus.—"Nicodemus undoubtedly was a spectator and witness of the miracles which Jesus had done at the Passover; and so the Syriac translator seemeth to conclude, when he rendereth the beginning of this chapter thus: 'Now there was one of the Pharisees named Nicodemus there;' and so his own words seem to argue, as spoken not upon hearsay, but upon ocular witness,

'We know that Thou art a Teacher come from God, for none can do such miracles,' &c. He having seen those wondrous workings by day come to Jesus that night, as may in most probability be conjectured, and the word νυκτός very properly rendered in such a definite and determinate construction."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John iii.; vol. i. p. 564.

using, as is common in many languages, the first person plural for the first person singular, or whether he meant that it was commonly known and acknowledged, as being a matter which was put beyond all question by the miracles which He had wrought.

As far as we can learn by the narrative, the five disciples mentioned in the first chapter were still with Jesus, and it may be that S. John was himself present at the interview between Jesus and Nicodemus. Though this is not stated, there is nothing improbable in the supposition.

3. Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily,^a I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.^b

Μαται, ἰσχυραδωσιν.
Σωτηριανδ'σιν ὁμοιου.
Αμην. Νουσις οὐκ ἔστιν ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ.

^a Verily, verily.—“Verily, verily.” Greek, ‘Amen, amen.’ Consider these two particulars concerning it: 1. What our Saviour doth properly intend and mean by Amen, when He useth it so oft; and, 2. Why John the Evangelist doth constantly use it doubled, when the other three never use it so at all.

“1. As to the first, it is to be observed that the word Amen is an Hebrew word, and is very commonly used in the Old Testament; but this withal is to be observed, that it is never used in the Old Testament but by way of wishing or appreciation (the 16th verse of Isaiah lxxv. only excepted). As when it cometh single, as Deut. xxvii., twelve times over, where the LXX. render it γενοίτο. ‘Be it done.’ 1 Kings i. 36, where the LXX. have it γένοιτο οὗτος, ‘So be it.’ Nehem. v. 13, Jer. xxviii. 6, Ps. cvi. 48. Or when it cometh double, Numb. v. 22, Ps. xli. 13, lxxii. 19, and lxxviii. 52, which the LXX. express γενοίτο, γένοιτο. ‘Be it done, be it done;’ or ‘So be it, so be it.’ In all these places it is used by way of prayer or imprecation, according as the subject-matter was to which it was applied, as David Kimchi expresseth it. It is spoken, saith he, either by way of prayer, or by way of undertaking, as that they take upon them a curse if they transgress.

“But in these utterances of our Saviour the sense of it is altered from precatory to assertory, or from the way of wishing to the way of affirming: for what one Evangelist expresseth, ‘Amen I say unto you, This poor widow,’ &c., Mark xii. 43; another uttereth ἀληθὲς Ἀμέν, ‘Of a truth I say unto you,’ Luke xvi. 1; Matthew saith, ‘Amen I say unto you, That some that stand here,’ &c., which Luke giveth ἀληθὲς Ἀληθὲς, ‘Of a truth I say unto you’ (iv. 27). So ‘Ἀμην in Matt. xxiii. 36 is rendered ay, ‘truly,’ Luke xi. 51. For indeed the word Amen doth properly betoken and signify truth, as is apparent by the construction of that verse forementioned, Isaiah lxxv. 16, ‘He who blesseth himself in the earth, shall bless himself in the God of truth; and he that sweareth in the earth, shall swear by the God of truth,’ as not only our English, but also R. Sol. and David Kimchi, do well render it; and the gloss of Kimchi upon the place is worth the citing. He saith in the earth, because in all the world there shall be one truth, and that shall be the truth of the God of truth.

“Now Christ is called Amen, Rev. iii. 14, as being not only the faithful and true witness, but even He in whom all the promises of God are yea and Amen, 2 Cor. i. 20, and even truth itself.

“Therefore when He cometh to publish the Gospel, which is that one truth that should be in all the world, He speaketh of His own, and useth a different style from the Prophets (which used to authorize their truths with ‘Thus saith the Lord’), and speaketh ἀποστολως, upon His own authority, as the God of truth. ‘Amen, I say unto you.’ In this word, therefore, is included two things, namely, the truth spoken and the truth speaking it; and the expression doth not only import the certainty of the things delivered, but also recalleth to consider that He that delivers it is Amen the God of truth, and truth itself. And this consideration will help to give a resolution to the second scruple that was proposed, and that is, why John alone doth use the word doubled, and none other of the Evangelists.

“I am but little satisfied with that gloss given by some upon this matter, namely, that John doth constantly double this word because the matters spoken by him are of a more celestial and sublime strain than the matters spoken by the other Evangelists, and therefore the greater attention is challenged to them by this gemination: for neither can I see, nor dare I think of, any such superiority and inferiority in the writings of the Evangelists.

“Nor do I suppose that Christ used this gemination Himself (for it is very strange that in those speeches that this Evangelist mentioneth He should do so, and in the speeches that the others mention He should not do so, when it may be, sometimes it was, the very same speech); but I conceive that the Evangelist hath doubled the word, that he might express the double sense which the single word in our Saviour’s mouth and in the other Evangelists includeth. And so he addeth nothing to what Christ spake, but explaineth His speech to the utmost extent. He saith in the other Evangelists, Amen singly, but He meaneth thus doubly. ‘This is truth, and I am truth that speak it.’ Now John, that he might clear this double meaning, doth double the word, Amen, Amen; the one whereof doth refer to the thing that is spoken, and the other to the person that speaketh it.

“But the question proposed is not yet resolved, why John should do thus, rather than any of the other: but the same answer that resolveth why John should relate so many things that none of the other three do ever mention, will resolve this: namely, that it was God’s will and disposal that there should be four that should write the Gospel, and that some writing one thing, and some another, some after one manner, some another, the Story should be divinely made up to its full perfection. Now John wrote last, and he had warrant and opportunity to relate what the others had omitted. And as for the particular in hand, he saw that the other had only produced this word single, as Christ indeed had continually uttered it, and that they had some of them expounded it in a place or two ἀληθὲς and αὐτὸς, to show that it was to be taken in these speeches in a meaning different from that precatory strain in which it was constantly used in the Old Testament, but yet that there was something more included in the word, and therefore he is warranted by the Holy Ghost to explain it to the full in two words, Amen, Amen. And thus the counsels of the Lord of old, uttered and revealed by the Prophets, do in the preaching of the Gospel by our Saviour prove Truth, truth, (Isaiah xxv. 1.)—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the Four Evangelists,’ John i.; vol. i. p. 535.

Regeneration.—“What is regeneration? It is the effect of that gift of grace which the Father of all mercies was pleased to embody in the manhood of the Incarnate Son, that thereby humanity at large might be re-constructed; and which, in Him and by Him, is received by those happy members of the family of man to whom the Gospel comes, and by whom it is not rejected through unbelief or impentence. It is not therefore the general influence of the Divine power, but the gift bestowed through the Mediator; neither is it the mere promulgation by Christ of a better law, but His re-creating presence. Nor yet is it attained by all men, nor even by all to whom it is offered; but by those to whom it is given of God, and who do not reject it. It is Christ taking up His dwelling in man; ‘for in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything nor uncircumcision, but the new creation; and as many as walk according to this rule, grace be on them and mercy, and upon the Israel of God.’—R. I. WILBERFORCE on Holy Baptism, p. 27.

“What is meant by the work of man’s regeneration? In its original form this work assuredly was general, complete, and immediate; but its object was only that Head of our race in whom

4. Nicodemus saith unto Him, How can a man be born when he is old?^a can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born?

To see the kingdom of God is to enter into it, as is plain from ver. 5, or to partake of it: as, to see corruption, Psalm xvi. 10; to see death, Luke ii. 26, John viii. 51; to see evil, Psalm xc. 15; to see sorrow, Revelation xviii. 7; to see good, Ecclesiastes vi. 6, &c., to be in these states, or to partake of them. In verse 36, to see life is to have life.

S. John always doubles the Amen, even when the other Evangelists give it singly. A love of brevity, so far as was consistent with truth, may have influenced them. But, writing last of all the Evangelists, and with the special object of recording the sayings and conversations of Jesus at length, and using his own discretion as to the way, he endeavours to convey the full meaning of our Saviour's words to the people. He also relates conversations which the others had omitted, or he relates at length what they had recorded in a condensed form.¹

The word ἀνωθεν, here translated "again," sometimes means from above, from heaven, as in verse 31. From verse 4 it would seem that Nicodemus understood it in the sense of over again, afresh; and this by many² has been supposed to be its meaning here. Some³ of the Greek commentators thought that Jesus meant from heaven, and that Nicodemus understood Him to mean over again, afresh. But it is possible that Jesus did not speak to Nicodemus in Greek; and so there might not be the same ambiguity in the word He used as there is in ἀνωθεν.

Every man is born once, of his parents, which is his natural birth, according to the usual course of nature. By this birth he becomes a descendant of Adam, and inherits all the weakness to resist temptation which belonged to Adam, after he had yielded to the temptation of the serpent, and had disobeyed the command of God. By his natural birth every man is born a child of wrath (Eph. ii. 3). By his natural birth every man is born in the power of darkness (Col. i. 13). But the Baptist came preaching that another kingdom was about to be established, the kingdom of heaven, or the kingdom of God; and he persuaded men to prepare to enter into this kingdom of heaven. In the next few verses Jesus explains to Nicodemus, and, as some⁴ think, in answer to his inquiry, how to gain admittance into the kingdom of heaven. It must be by birth, but not the birth which he had already passed through. Every man, in order to see or to enter the kingdom of heaven, must be born afresh, over again.

In answer to Nicodemus, whose thoughts run entirely on his natural birth, and who asks, how it was possible for this to be repeated,—how a man after he has grown old, which probably was the case with Nicodemus himself,⁵ can be born again,—our Lord explains that this birth is altogether different in character from his first or natural birth.

5. Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit,^b he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

S. he cannot see the kingdom of heaven.

Vulg. Nisi quis renatus fuerit ex aqua et Spiritu sancto, non potest intrare in regnum Dei.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iii. 3; vol. viii. p. 911.

² Origen, in Epist. ad Roman. lib. v. 8; vol. iv. p. 1038.

³ Cyril Alex. in Joan. iii. 3; vol. vi. p. 241.

Theophylact, in Joan. iii. 3; vol. i. p. 539.

⁴ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xx. p. 155.

Maldonatus, in Joan. iii. 3; vol. i. p. 481.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iii. 3; vol. viii. p. 911.

⁵ Jansenius, Maldonatus, Cornelius a Lapide, ut supra.

[Cornelius

manhood was purified perfectly and at once by the taking it into God. The regeneration of collective manhood was wrought in the instant of our Lord's Incarnation; and therefore of the two places in which the term regeneration occurs in Scripture, one refers to the consummation of that kingdom of Christ of which His Incarnation was the commencement. But when this work is wrought in individual men, what is effected is not the complete and instant change of their whole nature, but only the infusion of that Divine seed of a higher humanity by which their spiritual progress is commenced. Such a gift does not exclude the action of man's own responsibility. It is but to place men in a higher state of trial by the infusion of a principle above nature. The new seed must have time to overcome the old principle of corruption; its existence must be recognized, its growth encouraged."—R. I. WILBERFORCE on Holy Baptism, p. 32.

^a Being old.—"So is the Greek geronion (γέρων ὢν). The Syriac hath kept close to the sense given, 'Can an old man be born?'"—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John iii.; vol. i. p. 562.

^b Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit.—"To hide the general consent of antiquity agreeing in the literal interpretation, they cunningly affirm that 'certain' have taken those words as meant of material water, when they know that of all the ancients there is not one to be named that ever did otherwise either expound or allege the place than as implying external baptism."—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.,' v. 59, 3; vol. ii. p. 263.

"The true necessity of baptism, a few propositions considered will soon decide. All things which either are known causes or set means whereby any great good is usually procured, or men delivered from grievous evil, the same we must needs confess necessary. And if regeneration were not in this very sense a thing necessary to eternal life, would Christ Himself have taught Nicodemus that to see the kingdom of God is impossible, saving only for those men which are born from above?

"His words following in the next sentence are a proof sufficient, that to our regeneration His Spirit is no less necessary than regeneration itself necessary unto life.

"Thirdly, unless as the Spirit is a necessary inward cause, so

6. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.

7. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again.

Margin, from above. Vulg. Oportet vos nasci denuo.

8. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.

A. or whither it goeth: S. that is born of the water and of the Spirit.
Vulg. sed necis unde veniat, aut quo vadat: si necis omnis qui natus est ex Spiritu.

Jesus teaches Nicodemus that those only can be citizens of the kingdom of heaven who have a spiritual nature, and that birth by the union of flesh and blood cannot impart the spiritual nature; that flesh and blood can only impart a carnal nature, and that the Birth of water and of the Spirit can alone give this spiritual nature. The Birth of water and of the Spirit referred to in this passage, the Fathers, with singular unanimity, interpret of the Sacrament of Baptism.¹

Three different senses have been given to the word πνεῦμα, rendered "wind" in verse 8. Some² suppose that Jesus is still speaking of the Holy Spirit, and is explaining to Nicodemus that no man can find out why He appears to influence one man and not another, and why in one way and not another.

Some³ have also thought that it denotes the soul here; others⁴ again, and with greater probability, that it means the

¹ S. Justin Martyr, Apologia i. sect. 94, p. 89.

Origen, in Epist. ad Roman., lib. v. cap. 8; vol. iv. p. 1037.

— in Luc. Homil. xiv.; vol. iii. p. 1835.

Eusebius Pamphil. in Isaiah iii. 2; vol. i. p. 109.

S. Basil, Homil. in Sanctum Baptisma; vol. iii. p. 428.

S. Cyril Hierosol. Catechesis, iii. 4; p. 430.

S. Gregory Nazian. Oratio xl. in Sanctum Baptisma, 4; vol. ii. p. 361.

S. Gregory Nyssen, Oratio in Baptisma Christi; vol. iii. p. 580.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iii. 5; Homil. xxv.

Theodorus Mopsuestensis, in Joan. iii. 5; p. 741.

Nonaus, in Joan. iii. 5; p. 22.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. iii. 5; vol. vi. p. 244.

Theophylact, in Joan. iii. 3; vol. i. p. 539.

Euthymius, in Joan. iii. 3; vol. iv. p. 91.

Tertullian, de Baptismo, cap. xii.; vol. i. p. 1213.

S. Cyprian, Testimon. iii. 25; p. 750.

S. Ambrose, de Spiritu Sancto, iii. 10; vol. iii. p. 791.

S. Jerome, in Ezek. xvi. 9; vol. v. p. 131. [S. Augustine,

S. Augustine, in Joan. iii. 3, tract. xii.; vol. iii. p. 1486.

V. Bede, in Joan. iii. 5; vol. iii. p. 668.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 66, art. 9; vol. iv. p. 617.

See also Dr. Pusey on Baptism, vol. ii. part ii. p. 30; 4th ed.

² Tracts of the Times.

³ S. Gregory Nazian. Oratio xxxi. de Spiritu Sancto, 29; vol. ii. p. 168.

S. Ambrose, de Spiritu Sancto, iii. 10; vol. iii. p. 791.

S. Augustine, in Joan. iii. 8, tract. xii.; vol. iii. p. 1486.

S. Gregory Magnus, in 1 Kings xvi. 13, lib. vi. 3; vol. v. p. 460.

⁴ Maldonatus, in Joan. iii. 8; vol. ii. p. 486.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iii. 8; Homil. xxvi.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. iii. 8; vol. vi. p. 246.

Theophylact, in Joan. iii. 8; vol. i. p. 540.

Euthymius, in Joan. iii. 8; vol. iv. p. 99.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xx. p. 157.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iii. 8; vol. viii. p. 912.

water were a necessary outward mean to our regeneration, what construction should we give unto those words wherein we are said to be new-born, and that ἐξ ὕδατος, even of water? Why are we taught that with water God doth purify and cleanse His Church (Ephes. v. 26)? Wherefore do the Apostles of Christ term baptism 'a bath of regeneration' (Tit. iii. 5)? What purpose had they in giving men advice to receive outward baptism, and in persuading them it did avail to remission of sins (Acts ii. 38)?

"If outward baptism were a cause in itself possessed of that power, either natural or supernatural, without the present operation whereof no such effect could possibly grow, it must then follow that, seeing effects do never prevent the necessary causes out of which they spring, no man could ever receive grace before baptism; which being apparently both known and also confessed to be otherwise in many particulars, although in the rest we make not baptism a cause of grace, yet the grace which is given them by their baptism doth so far forth depend on the very outward sacrament, that God will have it embraced not only as a sign or token what we receive, but also as an instrument or mean whereby we receive grace, because baptism is a sacrament which God hath instituted in His Church, to the end that they which receive the same might thereby be incorporated into Christ (Leo, Sermo de Pass. Dom. xii. 6; vol. i. p. 357, Migne), and so through His most precious merit obtain as well that saving grace of imputation which taketh away all former guiltiness (Tertullian, de Carnis Resurrectione, 8; vol. i. p. 806, Migne; Greg. Nazian. de Sanct. Baptismo, Oratio xl. sec. 2; vol. ii. p. 360), as also that infused Divine virtue of the Holy Ghost, which giveth to the powers of the soul their first disposition towards future newness of life."—Ibid., v. 60, l. 2; vol. ii. p. 264.

"The question in hand betwixt our Saviour and Nicodemus was about his entrance and introduction into the Kingdom of God, or his coming under the days and benefit of Messiah's appearing, which he was sensible was now come.

"And therefore Calvin mistakes and mis-states the question in this place, which made him so resolutely to refuse the general exposition of water for Baptism: 'I can by no means be swayed to think that Christ speaketh of Baptism here, for that would have been unreasonable.' And why unreasonable? Why, he gives this reason, 'Because Christ was exhorting to newness of life.' But that is not the prime and proper question or theme in hand. The matter in hand was about Nicodemus' translation into the days of the Messiah (of which the nation had so high thoughts); that is, as he thought, into a changed state of happiness, and, as it was indeed, into a changed principling and profession, to come under new grounds of religion, and under a new manner of profession different from what he was under before. Our Saviour tells him, he must not think to slip into the participation of this Kingdom without any more ado than this, 'Now the days of the Messiah are come, I shall have my share of the happiness of them, and they will even drop into my mouth;' but he must be newly moulded, out of his reliance upon his birth prerogative, out of his legal righteousness, out of his carnal performances and ceremonious services, and by a new birth, as it were, must be introduced into this new world and condition. Now, even those that deny that Baptism is spoken of here, yet cannot deny that Baptism was the way which Christ had appointed for introduction into this new profession; and if the introduction thereunto was the question that was in agitation, as indeed it was, they can as little deny that Baptism is meant and spoken of here."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John iii.; vol. i. p. 572.

wind, and that Jesus is teaching Nicodemus not to disbelieve in the Birth of water and of the Spirit, because he cannot see it; that there are other things which are not subject to the bodily senses, which still have a real existence, and which we judge of from their effects; that we cannot discern the wind, for instance, or the soul. We know them only from certain properties, from certain effects or results. We know nothing of their origin, of their nature, of their final destination, still we believe in their existence. In the same way we are to judge of every one born of the Spirit. The senses cannot be cognizant of the fact, but we are to believe it on the word of the Saviour, and to receive further confirmation by the effects.

By this illustration Jesus teaches Nicodemus (1) that the truth and reality of the Birth of water and of the Spirit is as distinctly perceived by the fruits and consequences of it, as the wind is by its sound; (2) that the Spirit accomplishes this work by an agency as free and unlimited as is the wind, which cannot be restrained or confined in its course; (3) that this work is as inscrutable, and as much beyond the power of human reason to fathom, as it is to discover where the course of the wind begins or where it ends.

Not only does Jesus teach Nicodemus this as a doctrine necessary to be understood, but He enforces it almost as a positive command, "Ye must be born again," δεῖ ὑμᾶς γεννηθῆναι ἄνωθεν.

When Nicodemus still professes his inability to comprehend this, Jesus reminds him that his office as a master or teacher of Israel should lead him to investigate this question, at least so far as to satisfy himself of the truth of it. He implies that this was no new doctrine; that the prophets had long before foretold that the heart of man should be changed, and that by the outward washing of the body and the unseen operation of the Holy Spirit accompanying it. Ezekiel (xxxv. 25), for instance, had said: "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh. And I will put My Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in My statutes, and ye shall keep My judgments and do them."

The ceremonial washings of the body under the Mosaic Law, with which Nicodemus would be perfectly familiar, did not affect the heart at all. They were never used for that purpose. Those washings were outward in their application, and outward in their effects. The Holy Spirit did not operate through them to cleanse the heart. But the Baptism of Jesus in the river Jordan had inaugurated a new era, a new dispensation. By His own Baptism, and by the visible descent of the Holy Spirit upon Him, He had for ever sanctified the element of water for this purpose. He had given a pledge that the Holy Spirit should for ever accompany the Baptism which He should institute.

9. Nicodemus answered and said unto Him, How can these things be?

10. Jesus answered and said unto him, Art thou a master of Israel,^a and knowest not these things?

Vulg. Tu es magister in Israel, et hæc ignoras?

11. Verily, verily, I say unto ^athee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness.^b

12. If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe, if I tell you of heavenly things?

13. And no man hath ascended up to heaven,

^a The teacher of Israel (ὁ διδάσκαλος τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ).—"Nicodemus is regarded as the teacher of Israel, καὶ ἐξ ὧν, he in whom all erudition was concentrated, so that the contrast καὶ ταῦτα οὐ γινώσκεις may be more fully indicated."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 127.

"Campbell observes that the article here is remarkable, and that it is omitted in no MS. It must therefore be concluded to have a sense which is indispensable to the passage; and Campbell is certainly right, when he contends that it ought to be expressed in translations. It is, indeed, the more remarkable, that we should find the article in all the MSS. . . .

"To determine the precise meaning of the appellation is a task which, I believe, no commentator pretends to have accomplished. We know that Nicodemus was a person of high consideration, and a member of the Sanhedrin; and some suppose him, and not without reason, to have been the same Nicodemus who is frequently mentioned in the Talmud; in which case he was not, in wealth and consequence, inferior to any Jew of that time. Still it will be asked, Why did our Saviour say to Nicodemus, 'Art thou the teacher of Israel?' I have only conjecture to offer; but even this may be tolerated, where nothing certain is known, and when even conjecture has scarcely been attempted. It has been observed that the Jews gave their Doctors high and sounding titles; in the same manner, probably, as among the Schoolmen in the Middle Ages, one was called the Angelic Doctor, another the Admirable, and a third the Ineffragable. Might not, then, Nicodemus have been styled by his followers ὁ διδάσκαλος τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ? On this supposition, nothing is more probable than that our Saviour should have taken occasion to reprove the folly of those who had conferred the appellation, and the vanity of him who had accepted it; and no occasion could have been more opportune than the present, when Nicodemus betrayed his ignorance on a very important subject. . . . The reproof is more severe in the present form of expression, since it seems to signify not only that the followers of Nicodemus distinguished him by this appellation, but also that he thought himself not altogether unworthy of it."—MIDDLETON on the Greek Article, p. 242.

^b Witness, testimony (μαρτυρία).—"How many readers have read in the English the third chapter of S. John, and missed the remarkable connection between our Lord's words at verse 11 and the Baptist's taking up these words at verse 32; and this because μαρτυρία is translated 'witness' on the former occasion, and 'testimony' on the latter."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on Authorized Version, p. 57.

but He that came down from heaven, even the Son of Man which is in heaven.^a S.V. omni which is in heaven.

Vulg. Filius hominis qui est in celo.

Jesus calls upon Nicodemus to believe the truth of what He had said, not on the ground that he understood it, but on His evidence; on the ground that He, who could not possibly be mistaken, declared it was so.

He admits that the subject is one of difficulty to the mere intellect. If Nicodemus could scarcely comprehend His teaching on the Birth of water and of the Spirit, when it is explained in terms derived from the natural birth, when it is compared with what takes place in the regular course of nature, and when its operations are illustrated by similar operations in the works of nature, such as the wind, how could he possibly understand it if all these helps and illustrations were withdrawn, and it were presented to him in its full naked aspect? Or, according to others,¹ if Nicodemus could not comprehend the doctrine of birth by Baptism, how could he possibly understand other and higher mysteries, such, for instance, as relate to the Godhead?

In the concluding part of His conversation on the new birth, our Saviour leads Nicodemus on to a more correct knowledge respecting Himself. Nicodemus had addressed Him as a "teacher come from God," and He here instructs him that He is not merely a teacher come from God, He is God Himself,—God who fills heaven and earth.

The expression "ascended up to heaven" is used with reference to man, and to man's limited intelligence. To God, who fills all things, such an expression could not be applied in the same sense in which it is applied to man. Man, who lives on earth, can only know what is done in heaven either by ascending to heaven himself, or by trusting the testimony of one who has already been there. Jesus, as God, had no need to ascend up into heaven in order to learn the things of heaven. By His nature as God He was already in heaven;

He knew what was done in heaven, He knew with a knowledge that mere man can never possess.

The connection of our Saviour's argument is something of this kind. Even earthly things, comparatively speaking, such as the new birth, you could not discover by reason, you can only understand it when revealed to you, and only then by the most familiar explanation; what will you do then in the case of higher mysteries than this, in the case of what may be called heavenly things? You must believe them on the testimony of some one who knows. "I am the only one who can know: for no man has ascended into heaven. I, as God, fill heaven as well as earth; I therefore know all things, even the things of heaven. Nevertheless you receive not My testimony, you believe not My teaching."

In disbelieving the testimony of Jesus they rejected their own salvation; for the Son of Man, He who was both God and Man, was the great object of all saving faith. Nay, more, the great object of their faith was not simply the Son of Man, but the Son of Man exalted, or crucified; and Jesus teaches Nicodemus that men must look to the crucified God Incarnate for help, just as the Israelites looked to the brazen serpent. The children of Israel who had been bitten by the fiery serpents, when they looked upon the brazen serpent which Moses at God's command had set up, were miraculously healed (Numb. xxi.). The brazen serpent set up on a pole was a type of the Son of Man, the God Incarnate exalted upon the Cross. The Israelite, with his body poisoned by the bite of the fiery serpent, but healed by his looking upon the brazen serpent, was a type of the Christian with his soul poisoned by the bite of the old Serpent, but healed by his faith in the crucified God.²

14. ¶ And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up:

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iii. 12; Homil. xxvii.

Theophylact, in Joan. iii. 12: vol. i. p. 341.

Euthymius, in Joan. iii. 12: vol. iv. p. 103.

^a The Son of Man which is in heaven.—Westcott and Hort remove from the text the weighty and doubtless difficult, but on that account only the more certainly genuine, words ὁ υἱς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, setting them in the margin between marks which intimate that they are not weighty enough to stand even with double brackets in the text. Tischendorf rejected them (as indeed does Professor Milligan) in his 'Synopsis Evangelica,' 1864, but has since repented of his decision. The authorities for omission are Σ B L T [v.] alone among manuscripts. C D E F are defective here; but the clause is contained in A E G H I K M S U V Γ Δ Π, and in all cursives save one, *A, and one Evangelistarium omitting ἐν. No versions are cited against it, except the Æthiopic and one MS. of the Memphitic: it appears in every one else, including the Latin, the four Syriac, and the Armenian. There is really no patristic evidence to set up against it, for it matters nothing that Eusebius might have cited the words twice, and did not; that Cyril of Alexandria, who alleges them once, passed them over once; that Origen also (in the Latin translation) neglected them once, inasmuch as he quotes them twice, once very expressly. Hippolytus [220] is the prime witness in their behalf, for he draws the theological inference from the passage (ἀποσταθείς ἡ βασιλεὺς αὐτῶν ἐπὶ τῆς ὁδοῦ καὶ ἐν αἰσῶσι), wherein he is followed in two places by Hilary and by Epiphanius. To these add Dionysius of Alexandria [iii.], Novatian [iii.], Aphraates the Persian [330], Didymus, Lucifer, Chrysostom [iv.], and Theodoret [v.]; and we then have a consensus of versions and ecclesiastical writers from every part of the Christian world joining Cod. A and the later manuscripts in convicting Σ B L, &c., or the common sources from which they were derived, of the deliberate (?) suppression of one of the most mysterious, yet one of the most glorious, glimpses afforded to us in Scripture of the nature of the Saviour on the side of His proper Divinity.—SCHWENK, Introduction, p. 326, ed. 1874: see also McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 710.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iii. 14; Homil. xxviii.

Dean Jackson on the Creed, Bk. viii. ch. 31; vol. vii. p. 154.

15. That whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life.

A. on Him : S.V. should have eternal life (omit not perish, but).

Vulg. Ut omnis, qui credit in ipsum, non pereat, sed habeat vitam æternam.

In referring to the account of the brazen serpent in the Pentateuch, Jesus Christ gives His sanction to the substantial accuracy of the history of the Israelites as received in His time. He gives His testimony not only to the general accuracy of the history of the Israelites, but also to its prophetic character. He accuses them, by their traditions, of falsifying the meaning, the spirit of their Scriptures, but He never accuses them of altering the Scriptures themselves.

Nicodemus is not represented as asking any further questions during the rest of the interview, but Jesus continues to explain to him the nature of His doctrine, and anticipates any objections that might be made against His being God on the ground of His Crucifixion. So far from that being a proof that He was not God, it was the very proof that He was God. It is the proof of God's love for the world, and of such love as only God can show. Lost in sin as the world was, God sent not His Son to condemn, to punish it, but to save and restore it. Such love as this was the work of God only.

16. ¶ For God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

S.V. the only-begotten Son.

Vulg. ut Filium suum unigenitum daret.

17. For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved.

S.V. the Son.

Vulg. Filium suum.

He goes on to show Nicodemus that the cause of men's condemnation is their unbelief in the Incarnation. Men refuse to believe that He, Jesus the Son of Mary, was God. This is the cause of their condemnation.

18. ¶ He that believeth on Him is not condemned : but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only-begotten Son of God.

S.V. omit but.

Vulg. qui autem non credit, iam judicatus est.

The cause of man's condemnation is his unbelief in the Incarnation. But what is the cause of his want of belief in the Incarnation? Was it the greatness of the Mystery? Was it the difficulty in comprehending or in believing it? Our Saviour says that the cause of their unbelief was their indulgence in sin, their love of sin. Their heart was hardened against proof by indulgence in sin, their eyes were closed against the light by indulgence in sin. The same miracles which had arrested the attention of Nicodemus, and which had led him to conclude that Jesus was a teacher come from God, and that no man could do the miracles which He did unless God were with Him, had no influence on the Pharisees as a body. But the difference was in the state of their heart, of their life, and not in the quality of the proof that was offered to them.

19. And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.

20. For every one that doeth evil^a hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved.

Margin, discovered.

Vulg. ut non arguantur opera.

21. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God.

The effect which this conversation had upon Nicodemus we see in his subsequent conduct. Soon after this we find him defending Jesus against the chief priests and Pharisees, and demanding that He should not be condemned until He had been heard (vii. 50). Later still, he is associated with Joseph of Arimathea in the holy office of embalming, anointing, and burying the Body of Jesus (xix. 39).

After His conversation with Nicodemus, Jesus retired from Jerusalem, the chief city of Judæa, and went with His disciples into the country of Judæa.¹

¹ Maldonatus, in Joan. iii. 22; vol. ii. p. 498.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iii. 22; vol. viii. p. 917.

^a S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iii. 22; Homil. xxix.
Theophylact, in Joan. iii. 22; vol. i. p. 546.

^b That doeth evil.—“As there is an opposition here of light and darkness, that is, of the truth and error, of a true doctrine and false, so is there an opposition of doing evil and doing the truth, and the one may be the better understood by the other. ἁγία πνεύματι, which is the phrase used here, and ἀμαρτίαν ποιεῖν, which phrase is used by this same Evangelist (1 John iii. 8), do not nakedly signify to sin, for the Saints of God do sin (James iii. 2; 1 Kings viii. 46), and cannot do otherwise (Rom. vii. 15, &c.); and yet John saith, that whosoever is born of God, ἀμαρτίαν οὐ ποιεῖ (1 John iii. 9); but these phrases, to do evil and commit sin, do signify a setting of a man's self to do evil deceitfully

peccato, as Beza translates it. So, on the contrary, to do truth is dare operam veritatis, as he also renders it here, when a man's bent and desire is to do uprightly; when gracious desires of doing truth and uprightness lie in the bottom, though the scum of many failings swim aloft in the heart; when to will is present, as Rom. vii. 18, and when the mind is to serve the law of God, as Rom. vii. 25. Whosoever is so composed inclineth not the light, but delighteth to come to it, and to the touchstone of the truth, that his works may be made manifest.”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the Four Evangelists,’ John iii.; vol. i. p. 580.

22. ¶ After these things came Jesus and His disciples into the land of Judæa; and there He tarried with them, and baptized.*

In chap. iv. it is said "that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, though Jesus Himself baptized not, but His disciples." We can scarcely conclude from these two passages taken together that Jesus never baptized at all, but that He did not baptize many or generally. The opinion of early writers¹ appears to be that Jesus baptized His disciples, or some of them, and they the rest. No disciples have been mentioned by name as yet, except the five in chap. i. He did not appoint His Apostles until after John the Baptist's death.

One difference between the baptism of John and Christ's Baptism is seen in the fact that John administered his baptism himself only. He did not delegate it to others, and it was called John's baptism, because John administered it, and not because he instituted it and commanded others to administer it by his authority. On the other hand, Christ's Baptism was called His, not because Christ administered it, but because Christ by His authority and power instituted it, and commanded His disciples through all ages to administer it. The baptism of John would not be John's if administered by any other. The Baptism of Christ, administered in the way He commanded, would continue to be His Baptism, and to convey His power to cleanse, to the end of the world. He would work in and through His disciples to the end of time.

Some² have supposed that the Baptism which Jesus administered through His disciples before His Ascension, differed in character from that which He administered by His disciples after His Ascension, and that His Baptism before His Ascension did not convey the New Birth—the blessings of the Holy Spirit.

It is true that the Holy Spirit was not given visibly and in its fulness until after His Ascension. But even before His Death He forgave the sins of the paralytic (Matt. ix. 2); He forgave the sins of Mary Magdalene, and filled her with the grace of love (Luke vii. 36-50). What He could grant by a word, He could bestow through the sacrament; and it has been rightly held³ that we have not sufficient reason to conclude that He would withhold His promised blessing, even for a time, even until after His Ascension. If the Sacrament of the Eucharist, which Jesus instituted before His death, was perfect, we may safely conclude that the Sacrament of Baptism was equally perfect, even before the visible and full outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

23. ¶ And John also was baptizing in Ænon near to Salim,^b because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized.^c

¹ S. Augustine, Epist. cclxv. (alias 108) ad Seleucianam 5; vol. ii. p. 1086.

Euthymius, in Joan. iii. 22; vol. iv. p. 117.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iii. 22; vol. viii. p. 918.

² Tertullian, de Baptismo, cap. xi.; vol. i. p. 1212.

Rupertus, in Joan. iii. 22; vol. iii. p. 352.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iii. 22; Homil. xlix. [Theophylact, Theophylact, in Joan. iii. 22; vol. i. p. 546.

³ S. Augustine, in Joan. iv. 1, tract. xv.; vol. iii. p. 1511.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 66, art. 2; vol. iv. p. 604.

Maldonatus, in Joan. iii. 22; vol. ii. p. 499.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iii. 22; vol. viii. p. 918.

* Jesus and His disciples baptize in the land of Judæa.—
"The duration of the Lord's Judean ministry is not stated, and must chiefly be determined by the following considerations and the date of John's imprisonment: (1) The needful caution hinted at in John ii. 24, the description of the sojourn in iii. 22, and the absence from the ensuing Pentecost, argue a brief ministry concluding before the Pentecost, i.e. before May 30. (2) It was terminated during the season of drought in Judæa (John iii. 22, 23). (3) From the language of surprise ('behold, this man baptizeth') in which the fact of Christ's ministry of baptism is communicated to John by John's disciples, its exercise cannot already have been of very long continuance; and yet, from the success reported ('all come unto Him'), it must have been long enough for an all-prevailing influence, at least in a particular neighbourhood (John iii. 26; and, for 'all,' cf. Mark i. 37; Luke iv. 15; viii. 40; iv. 45). (4) The tone of John's last witness (John iii. 25-36), 'dying in music' (cf. Plat. Apol. c. 30), is prophetic of speedy removal from public life; the 'waning moon.' (5) Upon this removal our Lord's departure for Galilee closely followed (Matthew iv. 12; John iv. 1). (6) On the arrival in Galilee, the Passover miracles are yet fresh in the minds of the Galileans, and the Passover is still 'the Feast' (John iv. 44, 45). Hence the duration must be fixed at about five weeks. Greswell, ii. 214, reckons it at twenty-seven days.

* N.B. The brief Judean ministry, not recorded by the Synop-tists, may be alluded to in Matthew iv. 25; viii. 10-12; and parallels. —MCCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 547.

^b Ænon.—"The traditional site of Ænon, after Eusebius and Jerome, is in Samaria, about eight miles south of Scythopolis. Robinson, however, places it near Sychar, still in Samaria. But it is inconsistent with all the notices of the Baptist to suppose that he was ever commissioned to Samaria (Matthew iii. 1; xi. 7; Luke i. 15, 77; John iii. 22, 23, &c.). Such a mission would have given deep offence to the Jews, and been a patent reason for that declining success of John, for which, in John iii. 26, his disciples seek an explanation. Hence we must identify John's Ænon and Salim either (as Wieseler, Lewin, al.), with the O. T. Ænon and Saleim in the southern borders of Judah (Josh. xv. 32, xix. 7; Wies. C. S. p. 223), or (as Barclay) with places near Wady Farak, about six miles north-east of Jerusalem (Kitto, B. C. iii. 737)."
Ibid., p. 547.

^c "One of our main objects in visiting the Ghôr (a broad valley or plain, described by Josephus as extending from the Lake of Tiberias to the Dead Sea), was to make search after the Ænon and Salim mentioned in connection with John the Baptist. I regret to have to say that our search was fruitless.

"We learn from the Scriptural narrative that John the Baptist was 'baptizing in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water (many waters) there.' Salim, therefore, was the more important town; and Ænon, apparently, a place of fountains near by.

"According to Jerome, both Ænon and Salim were situated in this part of the Ghôr, eight Roman miles south from Scythopolis. They were probably at a considerable distance from the Jordan;

24. For John was not yet cast into prison.

All the Evangelists refer to the imprisonment of the Baptist, but S. John is the only one who relates any of the works which Jesus wrought before John was cast into prison. He alone records the miracle of the water turned into wine at the marriage in Cana of Galilee, of His driving out the buyers and sellers from the Temple at the beginning of His ministry, and His conversation with Nicodemus.

John Baptist was not yet cast into prison, but his ministry was fast drawing to a close. How long his ministry lasted is uncertain. It has been conjectured by modern commentators, and apparently with a great degree of probability, that John commenced his ministry about October, A.D. 26, which was the beginning of a Sabbatical year. But there is a difference of opinion as to the time of his imprisonment by Herod; for though all the four Evangelists, as well as the contemporary historian Josephus, mention the taking of Herodias by Herod, and John's reproof of him for this, and consequent imprisonment, not one of them gives sufficient grounds to determine for certain the time when this occurred.* Different conclusions have been drawn respecting this, some¹ maintaining that John's ministry lasted less than a year, and others² more than two years.

25. ¶ Then there arose a question between

¹ McClellan, New Testament, pp. 543 and 548.

² Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 215, &c.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iii. 25; Homil. xxiv.

Nonnus, Metaphr. Evang. Joan. iii. 25; p. 27. [Theophylact, some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying.

S. V. A. and a Jew.

Vulg. Facta est autem questio ex discipulis Ioannis cum Iudeis de purificatione.

26. And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, He that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou barest witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and all men come to Him.

Some³ of the Greek commentators, following an early reading, imply that this question about purifying arose between John's disciples and one Jew; but the Latin commentators generally, and some of the Greek,⁴ read "the Jews." The precise form which the dispute took is not expressed, but enough is given to lead us to conclude that it had reference to the comparative merits of the two baptisms, or their relation to each other. The Jew might be disposed to underrate the baptism of John, because it did not cleanse or sanctify those who came to it. The disciples of John would naturally consider themselves interested in his honour and reputation. They knew that he was the first of the two to baptize, that he had baptized great multitudes, and amongst them Jesus Himself. Others might speak of the many miracles which Jesus had wrought, and remind them that John Baptist had Theophylact, in Joan. iii. 25; vol. i. p. 547.

Euthymius, in Joan. iv. 25; vol. iv. p. 119.

⁴ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. iii. 25; vol. vi. p. 260.

S. Augustine, in Joan. iii. 25, tract. xiii.; vol. iii. p. 1496.

otherwise the Evangelist would hardly have mentioned the abundance of water. In another passage, Jerome regards this Salim as the residence of Melchizedek, and affirms, that in his day the palace of Melchizedek was still shown, which by the magnitude of its ruins attested the ancient magnificence of the work.

"It was natural to infer that, of such extensive ruins, some traces might yet remain. Our inquiries were constant and persevering, but we could obtain no trace of corresponding names or ruins. . . .

"It may further be remarked, that so far as the language of Scripture is concerned, the place near which John was baptizing may just as well have been the Salim over against Nābulus."—ROBINSON'S "Later Researches in Palestine," p. 353.

"The village of Salim (near Nābulus) is directly north of Beit Firik, on a low hill on the north side of the plain. It was said to have two sources of living water, one in a cavern, and the other a running fountain called 'Ain Kibir.'"—Ibid. p. 298.

"Nābulus (the ancient Sychar) is furnished with water in singular abundance in comparison with the rest of Palestine. On the east is the large fountain of Defneh, running off east and turning a mill. On the west are the similar fountains by which we are encamped. In the higher part of the city itself are two large fountains, and another in the ravine above, on the side of Mount Gerizim. The water of these three flows off west, partly along the streets of the city, and partly in a canal, from which gardens are irrigated, and several mills supplied."—Ibid. p. 299.

* John Baptist's imprisonment.—"The exact date of John's imprisonment cannot be determined with absolute certainty; but we can arrive at a sufficiently close approximation. It arose out of Antipas's marriage with Herodias (Mark vi. 17, 18), and the marriage itself out of Antipas's visit to Rome on some unrecorded business (Jos. A. xviii. 5, 1). Now Greswell, by an error regarding Ascension Day of this year, fixes it on May 16, A.D. 27; which is a little too early. Wieseler and Lewin, on the other hand, on the strength of a purely imaginary connection between Antipas's visit and a supposed condolence with the Emperor upon the death of Livia, in A.D. 29; which is certainly far too late. We may obtain a safer and more accurate result as follows. Josephus repeatedly particularises that Antipas's business on this occasion was despatched in Rome (Jos. A. xviii. 5, 1). Now the Emperor quitted Rome in A.D. 26, never to return (Tac. Ann. v. 57; Suet. Tib. 39). Hence, as Antipas's visit to Rome was confessedly to strengthen his influence with the Emperor, it cannot be placed later than the summer or autumn of A.D. 26; and inasmuch as in A.D. 27 Antipas founded the city of Tiberias in honour of the Emperor (Euseb. Chron. which exactly agrees with Jos. A. xviii. 2, 3), the most reasonable inference is, that the visit was in connection with this foundation. Antipas may therefore not improbably have wintered in Rome in A.D. 26; returned home in the spring of A.D. 27 (cf. Herod the Great's case, Jos. A. xvi. 4, 6; 5, 1); fulfilled his contract of marriage with Herodias in April or May; and imprisoned John shortly before Pentecost, say on Ascension Day, May 22; which would exactly accord with the time required by the Gospel narratives (see also Greswell, ii. 213, &c.; iii. 420, &c.; Wieseler, 215, &c.; Lewin, p. lvii. &c.)."—McClellan, New Testament, p. 548.

wrought no miracle, and that John in his testimony had preferred Jesus to himself.¹

27. John answered and said, A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven.

Margin, take unto himself.

28. Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before Him.

S. audite me.
Vulg. Ipsi vos mihi testimonium perhibetis.

29. He that hath the Bride is the Bridegroom: but the friend of the Bridegroom, which standeth and heareth Him, rejoiceth greatly because of the Bridegroom's voice: this my joy therefore is fulfilled.

30. He must increase, but I must decrease.

Some² suppose that John uses the words, "A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven," of himself, and that they form the reason which John gives to his disciples for not assuming the pre-eminence over Jesus, namely, because God had not given him that; others³ that John uses these words of Jesus, and that they are the reason which he gives to induce his disciples to acquiesce in the superior success of Jesus over himself, namely, on the ground that Jesus could not acquire this superiority unless God had given it to Him.

In order still more to check the feeling of jealousy which his disciples were beginning to entertain towards Jesus, and to reconcile them to a still further increase of His fame among men and to a further decrease of his own, John goes on to give several additional reasons. Jesus is the Christ, while John is but the forerunner; He is the Bridegroom, while John's highest glory is to be the friend of the Bridegroom; He is above all, from heaven, while John is from the earth; He is the Son of God.

John had already borne witness to Jesus as He who should baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire; as the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world; and he now bears witness to Him as the Bridegroom, He who by His Incarnation had betrothed to Himself the Church, the Body of faithful men, as His Bride. Like a true friend of the Bridegroom, John had prepared and made ready for the marriage. He had shared His joy at hearing His voice.

John intimates that so far was he from feeling any jealousy because men began to leave his baptism and come to Jesus, that it was the very thing which had been wanting to fill up his joy. The commencement of his joy was when God revealed to him the coming of His Son; it was increased when he beheld and baptized Him; it was now completed, fulfilled, when all men began to leave him and come to Christ.

31. He that cometh from above is above all: he that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth: He that cometh from heaven is above all.

S. but he that is on the earth.
Vulg. qui est de terra, de terra est, et de terra loquitur.

32. And what He hath seen and heard, that He testifieth; and no man receiveth His testimony.

S. He that cometh from heaven, testifieth what (S^c. whom) He hath seen and heard.
Vulg. Et quod vidit, et audivit, hoc testatur.

33. He that hath received His testimony hath set to his seal that God is true.⁴

Vulg. Qui accepit ejus testimonium, signavit quia Deus verax est.

34. For He whom God hath sent speaketh

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iii. 26; Homil. xxix.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. iii. 26; vol. vi. p. 261.

S. Augustine, in Joan. iii. 26, tract. xli.; vol. iii. p. 1496.

V. Bede, in Joan. iii. 26; vol. iii. p. 674.

² S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. iii. 27; vol. vi. p. 261. [S. Augustine,

S. Augustine, in Joan. iii. 27, tract. xlii.; vol. iii. p. 1497.

V. Bede, in Joan. iii. 27; vol. iii. p. 674.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iii. 27; Homil. xxix.

Theophylact, in Joan. iii. 27; vol. i. p. 548.

Euthymius, in Joan. iii. 27; vol. iv. p. 121.

* That God is true.—In the Latin, verus and verax would severally represent ἀληθής and ἀληθινός, and in the main reproduce the distinctions existing between them; indeed, the Vulgate does commonly by their aid indicate whether of the two words stands in the original; but the English language, since it has lost or nearly lost 'very' (erat) as an adjective, retaining it no otherwise than as an adverb, has only the one word 'true' by which to render them both; so that the difference between the two disappears in our Version: and this of necessity, and by no fault of our translators, unless indeed we account it a mistake on their parts that they did not recover 'very,' which was Wiclif's common translation of verus (thus John xv. i, 'I am the verri vine'), and which to recover would not have been very difficult in their time, would be scarcely difficult in ours. It would have been worth while to make the attempt; for the difference, which we thus efface, is a most real one. What exactly the nature of it is, a single example will at once make evident. God is Θεός ἀληθής, and He is Θεός ἀληθινός; but very different attributes and prerogatives are ascribed to Him by the one epithet and by the other. God is ἀληθής (John iii. 33; Rom. iii. 4—verax), inasmuch as He cannot lie, as He is ἀληθής (Tit. i. 2), the truth-speaking and the truth-loving God. But He is ἀληθινός (1 Thess. i. 9; John xvii. 3; Isa. lxx. 16—veritas), very God, as distinguished from idols and all other false gods, the dreams of the diseased fancy of man having no substantial existence in the actual world of realities.

"It will be seen that it does not of necessity follow that whatever may be contrasted with the ἀληθινός must thereby be concluded to have no substantial existence, to be altogether false and fraudulent. Inferior and subordinate realizations, partial and imperfect anticipations of the truth, may be set over against the truth in its highest form, in its ripest and completest development; and then to this last alone the title ἀληθινός will be vouchsafed. . . . We should frequently miss the exact force of the word; we should, indeed, find ourselves entangled in many and serious the words of God : for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto Him.

S.V. for He giveth not : V* omits the Spirit.
Vulg. non enim ad mensuram dat Deus Spiritum.

35. The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into His hand.

The Baptist uses the same argument to convince his disciples of the truth of what Jesus taught, as Jesus had Himself used to Nicodemus (ver. 13). The knowledge of heavenly things can only be gained from one who had been in heaven. No mere man had ever been in heaven. Jesus, by His very nature as God, has been and is in heaven. He is, therefore, the only one who is able to reveal the things of heaven.

And yet no man, very few comparatively, receive His testimony. But whoever receives the words of the Son as true, declares that the Father is also true: for the Father and the Son are One. "He that hath received His testimony hath set to his seal that God is true." By this act of believing in the Son, he, so far as in him lies, affirms and declares that the Father is true, as strongly and as solemnly as if he signed and sealed this with his own proper signet.¹

John does not declare in direct terms that the Father and the Son are One; but the collective force of the various arguments which he uses in the last six verses of the chapter amounts to this. The time had not come for him to teach this truth in the naked form in which Jesus afterwards taught it to His disciples.

The last argument which the Baptist used to allay the jealousy of his disciples and to induce them to believe in Jesus as the Son of God, is that through Him alone could they obtain everlasting life.

36. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life :^a and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.

S. omits and
Vulg. qui autem incredulus est Filio, non videbit vitam, sed ira Dei manet super eum.

He speaks of everlasting life as present as well as future. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life." This may be explained in two ways. 1. It may be that the life to which he refers, and which he calls everlasting life, does not begin in the present but in the future state; but that the right to this everlasting life is gained in the present world. Anyone, therefore, who has gained in this world a right to everlasting life in the future world, may be now said to have everlasting life, inasmuch as he has the right and title to it. He who believes on the Son, by which belief his claim to everlasting life is established, may be said now to have everlasting life. 2. But it is more probable that the everlasting life to which he refers begins in this world, and is continued and matured in the world to come. Everlasting life is the same life as our Saviour had explained in His conversation with Nicodemus. It is a life which a man receives at his Birth of water and of the Spirit, and without which he cannot be a citizen of the kingdom of heaven. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Everlasting life is the life to which the Evangelist has already referred, when he said: "But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His Name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." (Chap. i. 12, 13.) Here it is the life of grace in the soul; hereafter it will be the life of glory.²

Thus the chapter begins and ends with the same subject, life. In the beginning of it, Jesus teaches Nicodemus that life, by the Birth of water and the Spirit, is necessary for the new kingdom, the kingdom of God. In the concluding part of the chapter, the Baptist teaches his disciples that the same life, but which he calls everlasting life, can only be obtained by believing in Jesus as the Son of God. A mere change of opinions, a mere intellectual process, was not the condition required for the kingdom of heaven; it must be a change of being, a new life, a new relation to God, which, imparted at the Birth of water and of the Spirit, would continue through all eternity.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxi. p. 165.

Maldonatus, in Joan. iii. 33; vol. ii. p. 507.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iii. 33; vol. viii. p. 921.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxi. p. 166.

Maldonatus, in Joan. iii. 36; vol. ii. p. 510.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iii. 36; vol. viii. p. 921.

embarrassments, if we understood ἀληθινός necessarily as the true opposed to the false. Rather it is very often the substantial as opposed to the shadowy and outline. Thus, Heb. viii. 2, mention is made of the σκηνή ἀληθινή, into which our great high-priest entered; which, of course, does not imply that the tabernacle in the wilderness was not also most truly pitched at God's bidding, and according to the pattern which He had shown (Exod. xxv.); but only that it and all things in it were weak earthly copies of things which had a most real and glorious existence in heaven (ἀντίτυπα τῶν ἀληθινῶν); the passing of the Jewish high-priest into the holy of holies, with all else pertaining to the worldly sanctuary, being but the σκιά τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν, while the σῶμα, the filling up of these outlines, was of and by Christ (Col. ii. 17). This F. Spanheim (Dub. Evang., 106) has well put: "ἀλήθεια in Scriptura Sacra interdum sumitur ethice, et opponitur falsitati et mendacio; interdum mystice, et opponitur typis et umbris, ut εἰκὼν illis respondens, quæ veritas alio modo etiam σῶμα vocatur a Spiritu S. opposita τῇ σκιά."—ARCHB. TRENCH on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 25.

^a Hath everlasting life.—"The thought would be weakened if ἔχει were taken for ἔξει. The notion which John attached to ζωῆς admits, and almost requires, the Present. The expression ζῶντες αἰώνων might accordingly be appropriately applied to one who is not as yet in the enjoyment of eternal life, but who, in the certain hope of attaining it, is already as it were in possession of it. In what immediately follows the Apostle very accurately distinguishes the Future from the Present."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 281.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

Jacob's well.—"The undoubted scene of our Lord's conversation with the Samaritan woman."—ROBINSON'S 'Later Researches,' p. 132.

"At the edge of the plain of Mukna (Moreh), a mile and a half east of the town, is Jacob's well, on the piece of ground he purchased from the Shechemites. Not far from the well is the site of Joseph's tomb. The identity of the well has never been disputed. Christians, Jews, Moslems, and Samaritans, all acknowledge it; and the existence of a well in a place where water-springs are abundant, is sufficiently remarkable to give this well a peculiar history.

"Some men were set to work to clear out the mouth of the well, which was being rapidly covered up. A chamber had been excavated to the depth of ten feet, and in the floor of the chamber was the mouth of the well, like the mouth of a bottle, and just wide enough to admit a man's body. We lowered a candle down the well and found the air perfectly good; and after the usual amount of noise and talking among the workmen and idlers, I [Lieutenant S. Anderson, R.E.] was lashed with a good rope round the waist, and a loop for my feet, and lowered through the mouth of the well by some trusty Arabs, directed by my friend Mr. Falcher, the Protestant missionary. The sensation was novel and disagreeable. The numerous knots in the rope continued to tighten and to creak, and after having passed through the narrow mouth I found myself suspended in a cylindrical chamber, in shape and proportion not unlike that of a barrel of a gun. The twisting of the rope caused me to revolve as I was being lowered, which produced giddiness, and there was the additional unpleasantness of vibrating from side to side, and touching the sides of the well. I suddenly heard the people from the top shouting to tell me that I had reached the bottom, so when I began to move I found myself lying on my back at the bottom of the well: looking up at the mouth, the opening seemed like a star. It was fortunate that I had been securely lashed to the rope, as I had fainted during the operation of lowering. The well is seventy-five feet deep, seven feet six inches in diameter, and is lined throughout with rough masonry, as it is dug in alluvial soil. The bottom of the well was perfectly dry at this time of the year (the month of May), and covered with loose stones. There was a little pitcher lying at the bottom unbroken, and this was an evidence of there being water in the well at some seasons, as the pitcher would have been broken had it fallen upon the stones. It is probable that the well was very much deeper in ancient times, for in ten years it had decreased ten feet in depth. Every one visiting the well throws stones down for the satisfaction of hearing them strike the bottom, and in this way, as well as from the débris of the ruined church built over the well during the fourth century, it has become filled up to probably more than a half of its original depth. . . .

"The gardens in the Vale of Shechem were looking very beautiful at this time (May 1st). The fig-trees, the latest of all, were in full leaf, and the people commenced to reap in the plain on this day."—'Recovery of Jerusalem,' p. 467.

"Maunderell, March 24th, 1697, found fifteen feet of water in the well. In April 1839, my friend the Rev. S. Calhoun found water in the well ten or twelve feet deep."—ROBINSON'S 'Biblical Researches,' iii. 109.

"A very obvious question presented itself to us upon the spot, viz. How can it be supposed that the woman should have come from the city, now half an hour distant, with her water-pot, to draw water from Jacob's well, when there are so many fountains just around the city, and she must also have passed directly by a large one at mid-distance? But, in the first place, the ancient city, probably in part, lay nearer to this well than the modern one: and then, too, it is not said that the woman came thither from the city at all. She may have dwelt, or have been labouring, near the well; and have gone into the city only to make her wonderful report respecting the stranger prophet. Or, even granting that her home was in the city, there would be nothing improbable or unusual in the supposition, that the inhabitants may have set a peculiar value on the water of this ancient well of Jacob, and have occasionally put themselves to the trouble of going thither to draw. That it was not the ordinary public well of the city is probable from the circumstance that there was here no public accommodation for drawing water."—Ibid., iii. 111.

No mention is made of any mechanical contrivance by which the woman drew the water, and yet, considering the great depth of the well, there must have been some. She could not raise it with her pitcher. Modern travellers in Palestine have noticed several ways of raising water from the deep wells.

"We came to a well at the foot of a hill, on which there is a village called Perè: the oxen raise the water by a bucket and rope, without a wheel, and so by driving them from the well the bucket is drawn up."—POCOCKE'S Travels, ii. 61.

"At the foot of the hill is what the monks call the well of Zabulon: the water is drawn by boys in leathern buckets, and carried in jars up the hill on women's heads."—Ibid., ii. 62.

"At Ajfūr (between Jerusalem and Gaza) there was an ancient well in the valley, exhibiting quite a pastoral scene of patriarchal days. Many cattle, flocks of sheep, and kids, and also camels, were all waiting around the well; while men and women were busily employed in drawing water for them. These people at once offered and drew water for us and our thirsty animals, without the expectation of reward. The well was square and narrow; by measuring the rope we found the depth to be sixty feet. A platform of very large stones was built up around it, and there were many drinking troughs. On the platform was fixed a small reel for the rope, which a man seated on a level with the axis wound up, by pulling the upper part of the reel towards him with his hands, while he at the same time pushed the lower part from him with the feet."—ROBINSON'S 'Biblical Researches,' ii. 351.

"Here (Sumneil, between Jerusalem and Gaza) is a large public well at the foot of the hillock; it measured 110 feet deep to the surface of the water, and eleven feet in diameter; the walls being circular and composed of hewn stones of good masonry. Women were drawing water from the well by a rope passing over a pulley, which they hauled up by running off with it a great distance into the field, in the manner of sailors."—Ibid., ii. 368.

CHAPTER IV.

[1. Christ telleth with a woman of Samaria, and revealeth Himself unto her. 27. His disciples marvel. 31. He declareth to them His zeal to Galile's glory. 33. Many Samaritans believe on Him. 43. He departeth into Galilee, and healeth the ruler's son that lay sick at Capernaum.]

[Vulg. Jesus cum muliere Samaritana loquatur de super riva, et adorato pater in spiritu, mirantibus et discipulis dicit se eorum habere, quem illic viderunt, nempe Patris obedientiam: de messia autem ne seminante: multi Samaritanorum credunt verum, filium regali caritate restituit.]

Jesus had already paid one visit to Galilee since the commencement of His ministry, and had then wrought the miracle which this Evangelist describes in the second chapter. He now undertakes a second journey thither. This is most probably the visit of which S. Matthew (iv. 12) and S. Mark (i. 14) both speak. But as neither of these Evangelists relate any of the acts of Jesus between His Temptation and John's imprisonment, they naturally record this His visit into Galilee immediately after their mention of the Baptist's imprisonment.¹

The reason which S. John assigns for this journey into Galilee is that the Pharisees or Sanhedrin at Jerusalem were beginning to grow jealous of His increasing influence with the people. The crowds that daily flocked to the baptism of John had in their opinion become too great either for the public safety or for the continuance of their power in the nation, and the influence of Jesus was becoming greater even than that of John. Jesus therefore retires for a time into a more remote district. The fulness of time was not yet come for Him to yield Himself up to their malice. By removing into Galilee He would be almost beyond the influence and machinations of the Sanhedrin; and though He would still be within the jurisdiction of Herod, the more distant He was from the place of his abode the less likely He was to attract Herod's attention, and to cause him in any way to interfere and attempt to put a stop to His ministry.

1. When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John,

S. When therefore Jesus knew.
Vulg. Ut ergo cognovit Jesus.

2. (Though Jesus Himself baptized not, but His disciples,)

3. He left Judæa, and departed again into Galilee.

A.V.* omittit again.
Vulg. Reliquit Judæam, et abiit iterum in Galileam.

4. And He must needs go through Samaria.*

5. Then cometh He to a city of Samaria,

¹ S. Augustine, de Consensu Evang. ii. 18; vol. iii. p. 1097.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xvii. p. 166.

Maldonatus, in Joan. iv. 1; vol. ii. p. 543.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iv. 1; vol. viii. p. 923.

* From Jerusalem to Galilee, through Samaria.—“Samaria was already under the Romans, and it was the custom of the Galileans, when they came to the holy city at the festivals, to take their journey through the country of the Samaritans.”—JOSEPHUS, Antiq. xx. 6, 1; Whiston's Trans., p. 540.

“It was absolutely necessary for those that go quickly [to Jerusalem] to pass through that country [to Samaria]: for in that road you may, in three days' time, go from Galilee to Jerusalem.”—JOSEPHUS, Life, sect. 52; Whiston's Trans., p. 17.

“From Jerusalem to Nazareth, by way of the hill towns of Shiloh, Sychar, Nain, and Endor, the distance, as a bird would fly, is about sixty-four miles, being nearly the same as that from Oxford to London. By the camel-paths, and there are no other, it is eighty miles. A good rider, having little baggage and less curiosity, may get over the ground in two long days; to do so, Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. xvi.; vol. i. p. 215.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, p. xxvii. and 18.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 19.

Mc Clellan, New Testament, p. 548.

however, he must make up his mind to spend twelve hours each day in the saddle, on stony hill-sides, with very little water and still less shade, under the blazing light of a Syrian sun. An easy journey, with time to rest and read, to see the wells, ruins, and cities on the route, may be made in four days; though better still in five.

“The Lord and His disciples went through the land on foot; resting by the wells, under the shade of fig-trees, in the caves of rocks.”

“The first part of this journey, a ride of thirty-six miles from the Damascus gate, to be done in about twelve hours, brings you to one of the most lovely and attractive spots in Palestine: the site of Joseph's tomb and Jacob's well, where Jesus, resting from His long walk, begged the woman of Samaria to give Him drink.”—DIXON'S ‘Holy Land,’ ii. 72.

which is called Sychar,* near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph.

The expression, "He must needs go through Samaria," has doubtless reference partly to the situation of the countries here mentioned, Samaria lying between Judæa and Galilee. Jesus is now in Judæa, and to reach Galilee He must needs pass through Samaria. Josephus incidentally mentions that it was usual for the Galileans to travel by the way of Samaria to Jerusalem, upon the celebration of their festivals. But these words, like so many other expressions, may have a latent reference to His gracious designs of mercy to this Samaritan woman, or to Samaria in general. When He afterwards sent the twelve Apostles, He said unto them:

* Sychar.—Two explanations are given of the word Sychar. Some suppose that it was a name applied to the town of Shechem; others think that it was a different place. Lightfoot says, "It is read in some copies and by some expositors, with y in the first syllable, as in the text of Chrysostom, Montanus, the Arabic, the Italian of Brucioli, Chemnitius, Grotius, &c.; and by some with i, Sychar, as the Vulgar Latin, Beza, Diodati's Italian, the Spanish, French, Dutch, and some Greek copies which these followed. Be it read whether way it will, Sychar, or Sihar (as such changes are not strange), the place and city apparently was the same with Sichem, so famous in the Old Testament. And that appeareth plain by this, that it is said, there was the portion of land which Jacob gave to his son Joseph, which plainly was Sichem (Gen. xxiii. 18, 19; and xlviii. 22)."—Harmony of the Four Evangelists, John iv.; vol. i. p. 593.

"It is a very general conceit upon this word, both by expositors that write upon this chapter, and others that mention the word occasionally, that it is written wrong and corruptly, for it should be written and read Sychem. But (1) their very so saying doth show and argue that it is generally read Sychar in all copies, and are all corrupt. (2) It is hard to imagine how any scribe should so miswrite or misread, as to write yp for xe, seeing there is so little affinity between the letters in the Greek. And (3) any scribe that was a Scripture man could not easily so mistake, seeing there is so frequent mention of Sichem in the Bible, but of Sihar never. Therefore to me it is past all doubting, that the word is written and read in our copies exactly, and to a letter, as it was written by the Evangelist himself. And it may be conceived that he wrote it, as it was sometimes (and it may be commonly) called among the Jews. The hatred and dissension between the Jews and Samaritans was exceeding bitter, and it is no strange thing if the Jews used this as a nickname for the Samaritans' chief city, to call it Sychar instead of Sichem. The people of the kingdom of Samaria are called the drunkards of Ephraim (Isaiah xxviii. 1): 'Woe to the crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim,' &c. Now the word Sychar importeth and signifieth drunkenness, and it may very well be conceived that, seeing the Jews abhorred the Samaritans so much as they did, that they framed the name Sychem into the drunken name Sychar, and in scorn called the metropolis of the Samaritans so, in the disdain and scorn that they had against them. So they called Beelzebub, Beelzebub, or the god of a dung-hill, for the greater detestation, and so the Holy Ghost calleth Achan, Achar (1 Chron. ii. 7), to hit him home for his troubling of Israel (Josh. vii.). Compare the changing of Sychem into Sychar with the changing of Achan into Achar, and why may we not apprehend this to be done purposely, and without mistakes of transcribers as well as that?"—LIGHTFOOT on S. John iv. 5; vol. i. p. 597.

This was also the opinion of Dr. Robinson, the American traveller, who says: "In consequence of the hatred of the Jews, and in allusion to the idolatry of the Samaritans, the town Sichem probably received among the Jewish common people the byname of Sychar, which we find in the Gospel of S. John; while Stephen, in addressing the more courtly Sanhedrin, employs the ancient name (Acts vii. 16). Sychar might be derived from a Hebrew root, meaning either falsehood or drunkard."—Bib. Res. iii. 118.

Josephus describes Shechem as between Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal. The present Nâbulus is a corruption of Neapolis; and Neapolis succeeded the more ancient Shechem. The city received its new name from Vespasian. The situation of the town is one of surpassing beauty. It lies in a sheltered valley, protected by Gerizim on the south and Ebal on the north. The feet of these mountains, where they rise from the town, are not more than 500 yards apart. The bottom of the valley is about 1800 feet above the level of the sea, and the top of Gerizim 800 feet higher still. The site of the present city, which is believed to have been also that of the Hebrew city, occurs exactly on the water-summit; and streams issuing from the numerous springs there flow down the opposite slopes of the valley, spreading verdure and fertility in every direction. Travellers vie with each other in the language which they employ to describe the scene that bursts here so suddenly upon them, on arriving in spring or early summer at this paradise of the Holy Land.

"Here," says Dr. Robinson (iii. 95), "a scene of luxuriant and almost unparalleled verdure burst upon our view. The whole valley was filled with gardens of vegetables and orchards of all kinds of fruit, watered by several fountains, which burst forth in various parts and flow westward in refreshing streams. It came upon us suddenly like a scene of fairy enchantment. We saw nothing to compare with it in all Palestine. Here, beneath the shade of an immense mulberry-tree, by the side of a purling rill, we pitched our tent for the remainder of the day and night. . . . We rose early, awakened by the songs of nightingales and other birds, of which the gardens around us were full."

Others maintain that Sychar does not indicate Shechem, but some other place in the same neighbourhood.

"Travellers and apologists alike now more commonly identify Sychar with the village bearing the Arabic name of Askar. . . .

"The points which the Talmudical passages quoted by Delitzsch (Zeitschr. f. Luth. Theol. 1865, p. 240, &c.) establish are these:—

"(1) A place called 'Sychar,' or 'Sychar,' is mentioned in the Talmud. . . .

"(2) The Talmudical passages speak not only of 'Sychar,' but of 'Ayin Sychar,' i.e. 'the Well of Sychar.'

"(3) The 'Well of Sychar,' which they mention, is in a corn-growing country. This is clear, from the incident which leads to the mention of the place in the two principal Talmudical passages where it appears; Baba Kamra 82b, Menachoth 64b. It is there stated that on one occasion, when the lands in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem were laid waste by war, and no one knew whence the two loaves of the Pentecostal offering, the first-fruits of the wheat harvest, could be procured, they were obliged ultimately to bring them from 'the valley of the Well of Sychar.' Now the country which was the scene of the interview with the Samaritan woman is remarkable in this respect: 'one mass of corn, unbroken by boundary or hedge' (Stanley's 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 229)—as it is described by a modern traveller; and indeed the prospect before Him suggests to our Lord, as we may well suppose, the image which occurs in the conversation with the disciples immediately following: 'Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest.' It is true that the Talmudical passages do not fix the locality of their 'Ayin Sychar'; but all the circumstances agree. It was just from such a country as this (neither too near nor too far distant for the notices) that the Pentecostal loaves would be likely to be procured in such an emergency."—CANON LIGHTFOOT, 'Contemp. Rev.,' May 1875, p. 860, &c.

"Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not" (Matt. x. 5). He seems to recognize the alien descent of the Samaritans, and to treat them on the footing of Gentiles. He does not forbid His Apostles to pass through Samaria,¹ but not to go of set purpose to preach the Gospel to them. The reason, too, is given. The Gospel must first be preached to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel;" and their prejudice against it must not be excited by preaching to the Gentiles and the Samaritans: their time was not yet come.

Sychar, or Shechem, must have been a very sacred spot to the Jews, as well as to the Samaritans: and Jacob's acknowledged connection with it is, as it were, one of the links that bind the Old and New Testaments together. In the Book of Joshua (chapter xxiv. 32) it is said that this parcel of ground became the inheritance of the children of Joseph, and that Joseph's bones were buried here. S. Stephen implies that others also of the patriarchs or their families were buried here (Acts vii. 15).

6. Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with His journey, sat thus^a on the well:^b and it was about the sixth hour.

^a Vulg. Jesus ergo fatigatus ex itinere, s. debat sic supra fontem. Hora erat quasi sexta.

What a mysterious dispensation, that He who made the body should feel the hunger and thirst and fatigue incident to the body; that He who made the sun should feel exhaustion from its heat; that He who made all things should depend for sustenance, and for the support of His life, on the benevolent feelings of His own creatures! Holy women, it is said, ministered to Him of their substance, and He had a common purse with the twelve Apostles.

The hour is probably mentioned as a reason for His weariness, the sixth hour being the time when the sun was hottest and most exhausting. The earliest writers² who explain our Saviour's conversation with the woman of Samaria interpret the sixth hour as 12 o'clock at noon, reckoning the first hour from sunrise. This was the received explanation until the eighteenth century, when it was suggested³ that S. John reckons the hour from midday and midnight, and not, as the other Evangelists do, from sunrise.

The morning and the evening were the usual times for drawing water, and then the women generally went in troops. The fact that this woman was alone may show that she had gone for water at an unusual time, the hour of noon.

For other reasons for believing that S. John reckons the hours from sunrise, like the other Evangelists, see this Commentary on S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 469.

7. There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water: Jesus saith unto her, Give Me to drink.

^a A certain woman.
^b Vulg. Venit mulier de samaria.

8. (For His disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.)

9. Then saith the woman of Samaria unto Him, How is it that Thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.^c ^c S. The woman of Samaria saith unto Him: Samaritans for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.

^d Vulg. Venit ergo et mulier illa Samaritana . . . non enim contantur Iudei Samaritanis.

10. Jesus answered and said unto her, If thou

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. iv. 5; vol. vi. p. 289.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iv. 6; Homil. xxxi.

³ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. iv. 6; vol. vi. p. 293.

Theophylact, in Joan. iv. 6; vol. i. p. 553.

Euthymius, in Joan. iv. 6; vol. iv. p. 135.

[Jansenius,

^a Sat thus (ἐκάθιστο οὕτως)—"that is, in a weary posture, or after the manner as tired men used to sit down. Le Dieu taketh it only for an elegance in the Greek which might well be omitted; and accordingly the Syriac hath omitted it and not owned it at all. But see it emphatical in other places also: 1 Sam. ix. 13; 1 Kings ii. 7; Acts vii. 8."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John iv.; vol. i. p. 593.

^b οὕτως has been considered redundant. But that adverb is thus frequently employed after a participle to imply a repetition of the participial notion: 'tired with the journey, sat down thus' (sicut erat, in consequence of being thus fatigued).—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 640.

^c On the well (ἐν τῇ πηγῇ).—"It should be rather by the well—in its immediate neighbourhood. On two other occasions, namely, Mark xiii. 29, John v. 2, our translators have rightly gone back from the more vigorous rendering of ἐν with a dative, to which they have here adhered. Yet it ought to be said that Winer ('Grammar of the New Testament') is on the side of our Version as it stands."—ARCHB. TRENCH on Authorized Version, p. 90.

^d ἐν τῇ πηγῇ, 'on the well' (the margin of the well), the struc-

Jansenius, in Concord. Evangel. cap. xxiii. p. 172.

Maldonatus, in Joan. iv. 6; vol. ii. p. 516.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iv. 6; vol. viii. p. 924.

³ Townson's Discourses on the Four Gospels, p. 217.

ture round it was higher than the mouth of the well itself."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 410.

^e For the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans (οὐ γὰρ συγγράμναι Ἰουδαίῳ Σαμαριταῖν).—"1. That translation which the French and English follow, seems to stretch the sense of the word beyond what it will well bear. For granting the Samaritans were mere heathens, yet did not this forbid the Jews having any kind of dealings with them, for they did not refuse merchandising with any of the Gentile nations whatever. . . .

"2. That version, non attulerunt Iudeis Samaritanis, as Beza, or non contantur, as the Vulgate, hardly reacheth the sense of the word, or fully comes up to the truth of the thing."

Lightfoot then goes on to prove, by quotations from ancient Jewish writings, that the Jews did not refuse to deal with the Samaritans in the way of trade, but they would not borrow anything of them, or accept anything from them gratis, or allow of any interchange of acts of kindness and courtesy between them, and concludes: "Nor, indeed, can the word συγγράμναι in this place intend anything else. For whereas it was lawful for the Jews to converse with the Samaritans, buy of them, use their knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give Me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water.

That His disciples should have gone into the village of Sychar, apparently at some distance, to buy food; that Jesus should find this Samaritan woman alone, when He could remonstrate with her on the wickedness of her life, was part of the same act of mercy. From His dress and dialect, she would easily recognize Him to be a Jew; and she knew the feud that had existed between the Jews and Samaritans for hundreds of years.

It is not certain whether the words "for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans," are the words of the woman, or whether they are the explanation of the Evangelist. They may be either, but the former seems the more general opinion.¹

In these words Jesus endeavours to excite her desire to learn two things—the gift of God, and the real character of Him who was speaking with her. The gift of God was, by name, "living water," but in reality the Holy Spirit. He Himself was in outward appearance a mere man, a Jew, as she had called Him, but in reality He was God.

The quality of water differs so much, according to the condition in which it exists, that there may be said to be two very different kinds: 1. Water without motion, stagnant, collected in artificial cisterns; 2. Living water, perpetually flowing from a natural spring. Jesus asks of the Samaritan woman water from the well, water more nearly resembling that collected in artificial cisterns; and says, that if she had known who He was, she would have asked of Him, and He would have given her, "living water." By the expression "living water," Jesus means the water that causes life. He is endeavouring to raise her thoughts from earth, from the water of the body to the water of the soul, the Holy Spirit. The woman misunderstands His use of the words "living water," and expresses her doubts of His power to do this. He has nothing to draw water with, and He is not greater than Jacob, who gave this well. There is no other water here, as she argues, but that of this well: "and the well is deep, and Thou hast nothing to draw with: from whence then hast Thou that living water?"

11. The woman saith unto Him, Sir, Thou hast nothing to draw with,^a and the well is deep: from whence then hast Thou that living water?

S.V. She saith unto Him: S. omits then.

Vulg. Dicit ei mulier: Domine . . . unde ergo habes aquam vivam?

12. Art Thou greater than our father Jacob,^b which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle?

S. he drank also thereof himself.

Vulg. et ipse ex eo bibit, et hii ejus, et pecora ejus.

She praises the water of this well for its goodness and abundance. What Jacob himself and his children drank of must be good; what his cattle drank of must be plentiful. Jesus does not reply to her question, "Art Thou greater than our father Jacob?" but leaves her to conclude that He was greater than Jacob, from the superiority of the water which He would give over that which Jacob had given. The water which He should give had two properties which no other water had. He who drank of it should never thirst again; and it should be in him "a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

13. Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again:

14. But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.

S. omits him before shall be.

Vulg. fiet in eo fons aque salientis in vitam aeternam.

Of the properties of water which ancient writers have mentioned as symbolizing the Holy Spirit, the two most striking are its power to purify and its power to nourish. No stain can be cleansed without water, neither can any life be supported without water.

Maldonatus, in Joan. iv. 9; vol. ii. p. 517.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iv. 9; vol. viii. p. 925.

and to the sepulchres of their fathers with invincible tenacity."—THOMSON'S 'Land and the Book,' p. 477.

^a Thou hast nothing to draw with (οὐτε ἀντήλμα ἔχεις).—"Camerarius out of Plautus Latinis ἀντήλμα situlam, Baza out of Austin hauritorium . . . It seems they brought their buckets with them to draw with, as well as their vessels to carry water in, unless they made the same vessel serve for both uses, by letting it down to draw with a cord."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' S. John iv.; vol. i. p. 593.

^b Art Thou greater (αἰ σὺ μείζων εἶ): than our father Jacob?—"Here the Greek μὴ beginning the interrogative sentence with the noun, which it qualifies, demands, 'Thou art not greater, art Thou?'"—The 'Church Quarterly Review,' April 1876, p. 138.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iv. 9; Homil. xxii.

Theophylact, in Joan. iv. 9; vol. i. p. 554.

labour, answer to their benedictions 'Amen,' lodge in their towns (Luke ix. 52), I would fain know in what sense, after all this, can it be said, 'ἰουδαῖοι οὐ συγγράτταται Σαμαρείταις,' but in this only, that they would not be obliged to them for any kindness."—LIGHTFOOT on S. John iv. 9; vol. ii. p. 538.

"If of old the Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans, the latter, the Samaritans of Nabalus, at the present day reciprocate the feeling; and neither eat nor drink, nor marry, nor associate with the Jews; but only trade with them."—ROBINSON'S 'Biblical Researches,' iii. 107.

"There are not now two hundred Samaritans, all told, in the world. They themselves mention one hundred and fifty as the correct census. They are a strange people, clinging to their law

But the thoughts of the woman still cling to earth. From His conversation with her thus far, she fails to learn either the character of Him who was speaking or the nature of the "living water." Of the two qualities which He mentions as belonging to the water which He can give, her desires settle upon that which appears most likely to apply to her own bodily wants. She divests His words of their proper meaning, namely, that he who received the gift of the Holy Spirit should never require any other kind of spiritual strength in his conflict with Satan and his temptations; and she applies them in her own sense to the body, and to the thirst of the body.

15. The woman saith unto Him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw.

The prophets had spoken of "water" and of "living water" with reference to the soul, and as applying to the gift of the Holy Spirit, in such clear unveiled language, that had the woman been a Jew instead of a Samaritan she would scarcely have failed to see His application of those terms. But this was the defect of her national cred. The Samaritans did not receive as Holy Scripture the prophets, or any portion of the Old Testament except the books of Moses; at least they did not receive them as of the same authority as the writings of Moses. Besides other passages, Isaiah had said, "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation" (Isa. xli. 3); "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour My Spirit upon thy seed, and My blessing upon thine offspring" (xlv. 3); "My people have committed two evils; they have forsaken Me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water" (Jer. ii. 13); "In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness" (Zech. xiii. 1); "And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem" (xiv. 8).

So far Jesus had not succeeded, so to speak, in raising the thoughts of this Samaritan woman beyond her own daily bodily wants. He has apparently excited in her no interest to learn the nature of the "living water," or the character of Him who talked with her. He therefore touches another chord.

16. Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither.

Y. He saith unto her.
Vulg. Proferit Jesus.

17. The woman answered and said, I have no husband. Jesus said unto her, Thou hast well said, I have no husband:

V. answered and said unto Him: S. omits and said.
Vulg. Respondit mulier, et dixit.

18. For thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: in that saidst thou truly.^a

Some¹ suppose that in the words "thou hast had five husbands," &c., Jesus meant to insinuate that the five whom she had had were like the one she now had, not lawfully her husband. But the more common opinion is that Jesus only reproaches her for unlawfully having the last.²

Some have thought that in the passage "he whom thou now hast is not thy husband," a stress is possibly to be laid on the word "thy," that after having had five legitimate husbands, the one whom she now had may have been the husband of some other woman. But when she honestly confesses that she has no husband, Jesus does not rouse her anger by unsparingly denouncing her sin. He first praises her for the truthfulness of her confession.

She now begins to rise to the knowledge of His character, and—it may be with a sincere desire to learn where to pray properly—she proposes to Him, as a prophet, the great question of the day, whether the Temple of Jerusalem or on Mount Gerizim, which overhung her own city of Sychar, was the right place for the worship of God.³

The Patriarch Jacob had offered sacrifice at Sychar, or Shechem (Gen. xxxiii. 20). From Mount Gerizim the six tribes had solemnly pronounced the blessings that should be on those who kept the Ten Commandments (Deut. xxvii. 12). At Shechem, Joshua, before his death, had recounted to the assembled Israelites God's merciful dealings with them (Josh. xxiv.). A temple, if not then standing, had formerly stood on Mount Gerizim. All this might seem to convey a kind of right and legality to the worship offered there. But God had chosen one place for His worship, one place only for sacrifices to be offered to Him. He had said, "Take heed to thyself that thou offer not thy burnt offerings in every place that thou seest: but in the place which the Lord shall choose in one of thy tribes, there thou shalt offer thy burnt offerings, and there thou shalt do all that I command thee" (Deut. xii. 13). This place was Jerusalem. Neither length of time nor the eminence of the worshippers could invest any other place with the right, which God had given to Jerusalem alone.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang., cap. xxiii. p. 174.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iv. 18; vol. viii. p. 928.

³ S. Hilary, de Trinitate, li. 31; vol. ii. p. 71.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iv. 18; vol. viii. p. 928.

¹ Maldonatus, in Joan. iv. 18; vol. ii. p. 524.

² S. Augustine, in Joan. iv. 18, tract. xv.; vol. iii. p. 1518.

V. Beale, in Joan. iv. 18; vol. iii. p. 682.

Euthymius, in Joan. iv. 18; vol. iv. p. 147.

Rupertus, in Joan. iv. 18; vol. iii. p. 339.

[Jansenius,

^a In that saidst thou truly.—Τούτο ἀληθὲς εἶπας, 'this hast thou spoken true,' hoc verum dixisti. On the other hand, τούτο ἀληθὲς εἶπας (as Kuhnol maintains) would be ambiguous.—WISLER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 186.

19. The woman saith unto Him, Sir, I perceive that Thou art a prophet.

S. omittit Sir.
Vulg. Dicit ei mulier: Domine.

20. Our fathers worshipped in this mountain; and ye say, that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship.

S. that it is in Jerusalem where.
Vulg. et vos dicitis, quia Ierosolymis est locus ubi adorare oportet.

21. Jesus saith unto her, Woman, believe Me, the hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father.

S.V. believe Me, woman: A. the hour cometh that ye shall.
Vulg. Mulier, crede mihi, quia venit hora quando.

22. Ye worship ye know not what: we know what we worship: for salvation is of the Jews.

Vulg. Vos adoratis quod nescitis; nos adoramus quod scimus, quia salus ex Iudeis est.

23. But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: ^a for the Father seeketh such to worship Him.

Vulg. Nam et Pater tales querit qui adorent eum.

24. God is a Spirit: and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth.

S. omittit Him: S. in the spirit of truth.
Vulg. et eos, qui adorant eum, in spiritu et veritate oportet adorare.

In His answer, Jesus first declares that the worship at present offered to God, whether at Jerusalem or on Mount Gerizim, should shortly, very shortly, be abolished. He then settles the question in dispute between the Jews and the Samaritans, and gives it in favour of the Jews. He intimates that the Samaritans worship they know not what; that the object of their worship, as well as the manner of their worship, was wrong. Along with the God of Israel they worship false gods, the knowledge of which their fathers had brought with them from Babylon and its neighbourhood. The Jews know what they worship: for salvation is of the Jews. This was the case both as regards the Old dispensation and the New. The will of God respecting Himself, and the way in which He would be worshipped, was in ancient times revealed to the Jews; and so far as it became known to the Gentiles, this knowledge was disseminated from the Jews. In the New dispensation, Jesus, the Author of salvation, was born of the Jews, and from them He became a Light to lighten the Gentiles.

But true as is the worship which the Jews offer when compared with that of the Samaritans, He implies that it is not to continue, nay, that it is already superseded. God has chosen another mode of being worshipped, free from the defects of both these. With the true God the Samaritans worship false gods. Their worship is not true. The Jews worship the true God, but their worship is not spiritual. It consists chiefly in the sacrifice of animals, in rites which begin and end with the body, and it is limited to one place, the Temple at Jerusalem. But all these are only shadows, types of the worship which Christ should establish. Henceforth, Jesus Himself, the God Incarnate, should be the object of their worship, and with the worship of the heart, by acts of devotion, faith, hope, repentance. These, wherever offered and by whomsoever offered, should be accepted by God in the place of the victims which had hitherto been offered to Him rightly at Jerusalem, but ignorantly, superstitiously, and unlawfully at Gerizim.

25. The woman saith unto Him, I know that Messias cometh, which is called Christ: when He is come, He will tell us all things.

S. He telleth us.
Vulg. cum ergo venerit ille, nobis annuntiabit omnia.

26. Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am He.

The woman only expresses the general expectation which existed at this time, that the coming of the Messiah was at hand. Even if the Samaritans did not receive the prophets, and would therefore be ignorant of Daniel's prophecy of the Messiah, the learned among them would be acquainted with the prophecy of Jacob (Gen. xlix. 10), and the rest would know it from common rumour.

27. ¶ And upon this came His disciples, and marvelled that He talked with the woman: ^b yet no man said, What seekest thou? or, Why talkest thou with her?

S. said unto Him.
Vulg. nemo tamen dixit.

^a In spirit and in truth.—“Ἐν πνεύματι καὶ ἀληθείᾳ, which qualify προσκυνήσουσιν, must not be resolved and degraded into the adverbs πνευματικῶς καὶ ἀληθῶς. The preposition ἐν there denotes the element in which προσκυνεῖν is exercised.”—WINER, ‘Grammar of the New Testament,’ p. 444.

^b With the woman (μετὰ γυναῖκος).—So also Lightfoot translates this passage. His opinion is that, though the article is not expressed in the Greek, it is to be understood in the sense. He supposes that the surprise of the disciples was raised, not so much because Jesus was talking with a woman, but with a Samaritan. This had already been a cause of wonder to herself (ver. 9). He quotes a passage from Maimonides to show that the Jews were allowed to buy meat of, and to sell meat to, those with whom they were not allowed to enter into familiar conversation. “‘For they might not use any commerce nor any converse with a person excommunicate (as the Samaritans were to the Jews), but only so much as for the providing of meat.’ (Maim. in Talmud, torah, per. 7.)”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the Four Evangelists,’ John iv.; vol. i. p. 594.

The following is Ep. Middleton's note on this:—“Campbell lays some stress on the absence of the article, and thinks the meaning is, ‘with any woman at all.’ From the absence of the article nothing

The surprise of the disciples may have been caused either because He was holding a conversation with a woman, a stranger and in a lonely place, which they looked upon as a breach of Jewish propriety, or because He was holding a conversation with this particular woman, on the ground either that she was a Samaritan, or that from certain indications, which the disciples easily recognized, she was a woman of infamous character; but whatever was the source of their surprise, reverence for Jesus prevented them from giving expression to it.

28. The woman then left her waterpot, and went her way into the city, and saith to the men,

29. Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?*

30. Then they went out of the city, and came unto Him.

V.A. omit Then.

She concluded that He was a prophet, because He had revealed to her the secrets of her own life, and she believes He is the Messiah, on His own word. In the fulness of her faith and zeal, she leaves her waterpot, she forgets the errand on which she had been so intent, she neglects the water with which her mind had been so full that she had no thoughts for the "living water," and hurries into the city to announce to others her good news. Her question, "Is not this?" or "Is this the Christ?" as it has been translated, does not imply any hesitancy or halting in her own belief, but rather a desire that they should draw their own conclusion.

31. ¶ In the meanwhile His disciples prayed Him, saying, Master, eat.

can be inferred, because of the preposition. On the whole I am inclined to believe that the surprise felt by the Apostles was rather at our Saviour's conversing with this particular woman, than with any woman indiscriminately. . . . The business of fetching water belonged exclusively to females; and wells had, from that cause, become places of resort for the loose and licentious of both sexes. It is possible, therefore, that the surprise of the disciples might be excited, more especially by our Saviour's conversing with this particular woman whom He had found in such a place; and her appearance probably bespoke somewhat of her real character, as exhibited in the sequel of the story."—On the 'Greek Article,' p. 243.

Alford translates this "with a woman," and Canon Lightfoot remarks on it: "The English Version, 'They marvelled that He talked with the woman,' implies that the disciples knew her shameful history—a highly improbable supposition, since she is obviously a stranger whose character our Lord reads through His Divine intuition alone: whereas the true rendering, 'He talked with a woman,' which indeed alone explains the emphatic position of γυναικός, points to their surprise that He should break through the conventional restraints imposed by rabbinical authority, and be seen speaking to one of the other sex in public. A rabbinical precept was, 'Let no one talk with a woman in the street, no not with his own wife.'"—Revision of the English New Testament, p. 115.

* Is not this the Christ? (οὐκ οὗτος ἐστὶν ὁ Χριστός;)—"Correcting all our previous translations, our translators rendered the words οὐκ οὗτος ἐστὶν ὁ υἱὸς Δαβὶδ; (Matt. xii. 23) with perfect

32. But He said unto them, I have meat to eat that ye know not of.

33. Therefore said the disciples one to another, Hath any man brought Him ought to eat? ^b

S. The disciples say one to another (omit Therefore).
Vulg. Dicunt ergo discipuli ad invicem.

34. Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to finish His work.

Our Saviour is gradually unfolding the object of His own mission, as well as that of His disciples, in their degree, and He incites them by various considerations zealously to fulfil it. As He had just done in His conversation with the Samaritan woman, so He now acts with His disciples: He kindles their curiosity and interest by using words that are in common use in a higher sense. Words that are generally confined to the body and its wants, He applies to the soul. His hunger, His longing for the conversion of the Samaritans was so intense that the hunger of His body was nothing to it. According to your usual mode of reckoning, He says, there are yet four months unto the harvest; but I can point out to you a harvest now ready, fields already ripe for the harvest: a harvest, too, in which those who gather it in shall receive as their wages not an earthly recompense, but life eternal.

The fields "white already to harvest" were the city of Sychar and the other cities of Samaria, the firstfruits of which were the body of men who were returning with the Samaritan woman to hear Jesus for themselves. The harvest was their conversion to the faith in Jesus as the Messiah, the Son of God. The reapers were Jesus Himself and His disciples, accuracy, 'Is this the Son of David?' fully understanding that, according to the different idioms of the Greek and English, the negative particle of the original was not to reappear in the English (Acts vii. 42; John viii. 22). I am unable to say when the reading which appears in all our modern Bibles, 'Is not this the Son of David?' first crept in: it is already in Hammond, 1659; but it is little creditable to those who should have kept their text inviolate, that they have not exercised a stricter vigilance over it. It is curious that, having escaped error here, our translators should yet have fallen into it in the exactly similar phrase at John iv. 29, οὐκ οὗτος ἐστὶν ὁ Χριστός; where they do render, 'Is not this the Christ?' but should have rendered, 'Is this the Christ?' The Samaritan woman in her joy, as speaking of a thing too good to be true, which she will suggest, but dare not absolutely affirm, asks of her fellow-countrymen, 'Is this the Christ?' Can this be He whom we have looked for so long? expecting in reply not a negative, but an affirmative answer."—ARCHBISHOP TREXEN on Authorized Version, p. 101.

^b Hath any man, &c.—Μή (μήτι) is used when a negative answer is presumed or expected. Some, however, think that μή sometimes anticipates an affirmative answer in the New Testament. But the speaker, in such case, always leans to a negative answer, and would not be surprised if he received one: John iv. 33, 'Has any one brought Him anything to eat?' I do not think so, especially as we are here in the country of the Samaritans."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 534.

who by their teaching were bringing to perfection the first principles of reverence towards God, which Moses and others had sown in their hearts.

35. Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest.

S.V.A. for they are white to harvest. Already (A. adds also) he that reapeth.
Vulg. quia albae sunt jam ad messem.

36. And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together.

V. omits both.
Vulg. ut et qui seminat, simul gaudet, et qui metit.

37. And herein is that saying true,^a One soweth, and another reapeth.

Vulg. In hoc enim est verbum verum.

38. I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labour: other men laboured, and ye are entered into their labours.

Some modern commentators suppose that in the words "Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest?" our Saviour has no particular reference to the time of the year at which He was speaking, but is making use of one of the common sayings of the country; the meaning of which is, that between seed-time and harvest there is always an interval of four months. An early and more probable opinion¹ is that He is referring to the actual time of the year. Interpreted in this sense, these words enable us to fix the time of this conversation.

Lightfoot² quotes several ancient Jewish writers to show that the time for sowing wheat and spelt was during the months Tisri and Marheshvan, or from the middle of September to the middle of November, and that the time for sowing the barley was in the months Shebat and Adar, from January to March, or seventy days before the Passover. The conclusion which he draws from this is that, though Jesus says there are yet four months to the harvest, the seed for that harvest was only partially sown; the barley, the hope of the harvest to come, was not yet committed to the ground. The knowledge of this fact helps to throw additional light on our Saviour's words. Directing their attention to the multitudes of Samaritans whom He saw coming towards them, He said, "Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." Behold what a harvest of souls are here, where there has been but scanty seed sown! Compared with the Jews, only little seed had been sown among the Samaritans, either in the time of the prophets, or during the ministry of Jesus Himself. The last eight months He had spent in Judaea and Jerusalem, and this is His first visit to Samaria, and see how ready they are to receive His Word and to believe in Him as the Christ!

The harvest of the Jews began at the Passover. On the second day of the Passover the Law enjoined them to bring a sheaf of the firstfruits of their harvest, and wave it before the Lord, and from that day they counted seven weeks to Pentecost. (Levit. xxiii. 10-15.) The Passover was the fourteenth day of the first month—Nisan (the end of March and the beginning of April). Four months before the Passover would be about the end of our November.

39. ¶ And many of the Samaritans of that city believed on Him for the saying of the woman, which testified, He told me all that ever I did.

S. omits on Him: S.V. omittit ever.
Vulg. Ex civitate autem illa multi crediderunt in eum Samaritanorum Quia dixit mihi omnia quaecunque feci.

40. So when the Samaritans were come unto Him, they besought Him that He would tarry with them: and He abode there two days.

V. were come together unto Him: S. and He abode with them two days.
Vulg. Cum venissent ergo ad illum Samaritanam et mansit ibi duos dies.

41. And many more believed because of His own word;

42. And said unto the woman, Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard Him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world.

S. of thy testimony: S. we have heard Him ourselves: S.V. omittit the Christ.

Vulg. Jam non propter tuam loquelam credimus; ipsi enim audivimus, et scimus, quia hic est vere Salvator mundi.

The honesty and sincerity of the Samaritans contrast well with the hardness and unbelief of the Jews. After converse with Him for two days only, the Samaritans believe that

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iv. 35; Homil. xxiv.
S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. iv. 35; vol. vi. p. 325.
Theophylact, in Joan. iv. 35; vol. i. p. 562.
Euthymius, in Joan. iv. 35; vol. iv. p. 139.

[S. Augustine,

S. Augustine, in Joan. iv. 35, tract. xv.; vol. iii. p. 1521.

V. Bede, in Joan. iv. 35; vol. iii. p. 687.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iv. 35; vol. viii. p. 933.

Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 194.

² Lightfoot on John iv. 35; vol. ii. p. 544.

* That true saying (ὁ ἀληθὺς λόγος).—A few MSS. are without the article; but as Matthæi well observes, "ad hoc non adesse potest." If we render, "in this instance the saying is true," the article must be omitted; but if, "in this is exemplified the true saying," the article is absolutely necessary, as in S. John i. 9; vi. 32; xv. 1. . . . "The great majority of MSS. ought, I think, to prevail; they are at least as fifty to one."—MIDDLETON on the Greek Article, p. 244.

Jesus is the Saviour of the world. After three years' preaching, after the performance of so many and such mighty miracles, the Jews as a body refused to believe in Him. Belief and unbelief in Jesus as God depended not so much on the proofs that were offered, as on the heart and on the previous life of those to whom the proofs were exhibited.

It may be, as some¹ have thought, that Jesus remained only two days with the Samaritans out of consideration for the Jews, to avoid the reproach which they would be sure to fix upon Him for it, and the conclusion they would draw, that He could not be the Christ, because Christ was promised not to the Samaritans but to the Jews.

43. ¶ Now after two days He departed thence, and went into Galilee.

S.V. He departed thence into Galilee.

Vulg. Post duos aut in dies exit inde; et abiit in Galilæam.

44. For Jesus Himself testified, that a prophet hath no honour in his own country.

45. Then when He was come into Galilee, the Galilaens received Him, having seen all the things that He did at Jerusalem at the feast: for they also went unto the feast.

Usually Nazareth, His own country, would be included under the term Galilee, but here "His own country" is used in contradistinction to Galilee.² Jesus went not to Nazareth, because He knew that a prophet had no honour in his own country, but He went into Galilee; that is, into the other parts of Galilee.

Continuing His journey from Judæa into Galilee (iv. 3), which had been interrupted by His conversation with the Samaritan woman, our Saviour goes to Cana of Galilee, leaving or passing by Nazareth (Matt. iv. 13), because a prophet had no honour in his own country. Nazareth had been His residence, His country from childhood up to manhood, and the inhabitants despised Him, being, as they thought, the son of a carpenter. He probably goes to Cana to confirm by His presence the faith in Him which His former miracle had created.

46. So Jesus came again into Cana of Galilee, where He made the water wine. And there was a certain nobleman,^a whose son was sick at Capernaum.

Margin, courtier, or ruler.

S. So they came again: V. So He came again: S^a, where they made.

Vulg. Venit iterum in Cana Galilææ, ubi fecit aquam vinum. Et erat quidam nobiles, cujus filius infirmabatur Capernaum.

47. When he heard that Jesus was come out of Judæa into Galilee, he went unto Him, and besought Him that He would come down, and heal his son: for he was at the point of death.

S. Now there was a certain nobleman, whose son was sick at Capernaum (Capernaum, also V); he hearing that Jesus was come out of Judæa into Galilee, went the more unto Him: S.V. cumque Him esset besegit.

Vulg. Cum cum audisset quia Jesus adveniret a Judæa in Galilæam, abiit ad eum, et rogabat eum ut descenderet, et sanaret filium ejus: incipiebat enim mori.

48. Then said Jesus unto him, Except ye see signs and wonders,^b ye will not believe.

Vulg. Nisi signa et prodigia videritis, non creditis.

¹ Janseus, in Concord. Evang., cap. xliii. p. 179.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iv. 49; vol. viii. p. 934.

* A certain nobleman (ὁν τις βασιλικός).—"It is hard, in the variety of constructions that are given of the Greek word βασιλικός, to tell what this man was that was so titled. The Vulgar Latin and Erasmus render it regulus, a little king; the Syriac, one of the king's servants; which the Arabic followed in sense, though not in words. The Italian hath it signore, a great man, or of high degree; Nonnus, βασιλικὸς ἀνὴρ, a man of the king's, which is the very epithet that is used by the Arabic, and several other expositions of it are given."—LIGHTFOOT, Harmony of the Four Evangelists, John iv. v. p. 605.

^b Signs and wonders.—"These words (τέρας, σημεῖον, δύναμις, ἐνδοξον, παράδοξον, θαύμασιον) have this in common, that they are all used to characterize the supernatural works wrought by Christ in the days of His flesh: thus σημεῖον, John ii. 11, Acts ii. 19; τέρας, Acts ii. 22, John iv. 48; δύναμις, Mark vi. 2, Acts ii. 22; ἐνδοξον, Luke xii. 1; παράδοξον, Luke v. 26; θαύμασιον, Matt. xxi. 15: while the first three, which are far the most usual, are in like manner employed of the same supernatural works wrought in the power of Christ by His Apostles (2 Cor. xii. 12). They will be found on closer examination not so much to represent different kinds of miracles, as miracles contemplated under different aspects and from different points of view.

"Τέρας and σημεῖον are often linked together in the New Testament (John iv. 48; Acts ii. 22, iv. 30; 2 Cor. xii. 12), and times out of number in the Septuagint. . . .

² S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. iv. 43; vol. vi. p. 329.

Janseus, in Concord. Evang., cap. xliii. p. 180.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iv. 43; vol. viii. p. 935.

"The same miracle is upon one side a τέρας, on another a σημεῖον, and the words most often refer, not to different classes of miracles, but to different qualities in the same miracles; in the words of Lampe (Com. in John; vol. i. p. 513), 'Eadem enim miracula dici possunt signa, quatenus aliquid sui occultum sui futurum docent: et prodigia (τέρατα) quatenus aliquid extraordinarium, quod stuporem excitat, sistant. Hinc sequitur signorum notitiam latius patere, quam prodigiorum, omnia prodigia sunt signa, quia in illum usum a Deo dispensata, ut arcum indicent. Sed omnia signa non sunt prodigia, quia ad signandum res celestes aliquando etiam res communes adhibentur.' . . . Origen long ago called attention to the fact that the name τέρας is never in the New Testament applied to these works of wonder, except in association with some other name. They are often called σημεῖα, often δυνάμεις, often τέρατα καὶ σημεῖα, more than once τέρατα, σημεῖα καὶ δυνάμεις, but never τέρατα alone. The observation was well worth making; for the fact which we are thus bidden to note is indeed eminently characteristic of the miracles of the New Testament, namely, that a title by which more than any other these might seem to hold on to the prodigies and portents of the heathen world, and to have something akin to them, should thus never be permitted to appear except in the company of some other, necessarily suggesting higher thoughts about them.

"But the miracles are also σημεῖα. . . . Among all the names which the miracles bear, their ethical end and purpose comes out

49. The nobleman saith unto Him, Sir, come down ere my child die.

A. ere my son die.
Vulg. Dicit ad eum regulus: Domine, descende prius quam moriatur filius meus.

50. Jesus saith unto him, Go thy way; thy son liveth. And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way.

S.V. omil And S. the word of Jesus and went his way.
Vulg. Credidit homo sermōi quem dixit ei Iesus, et ibat.

51. And as he was now going down, his servants met him, and told him, saying, Thy son liveth.

S. the servants met him and told that his son liveth: V. omits and told him: V.A. that his son liveth.
Vulg. servi occurrunt ei, et nuntiaverunt dicentes, quia filius ejus viveret.

52. Then enquired he of them the hour when he began to amend. And they said unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him.

V. the very hour wherein.
Vulg. Interrogabat ergo horam ab eis in qua melius habuerat.

53. So the father knew that it was at the same hour in the which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth: and himself believed, and his whole house.

S. He said unto him.
Vulg. Quia illa hora erat, in qua dixit ei Iesus: Filius tuus vivit.

This ruler (βασιλεύς), according to the use of the word by Josephus, was probably one of Herod's officers.¹ Some² writers have thought that he was a Gentile; others,³ and with greater probability, that he was a Jew. The weakness of his faith and our Saviour's words to him, "Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe," rather favour the opinion that he was a Jew. The Gentiles were far more open to conviction that Jesus was the Christ than the Jews were. The Samaritans had lately given a very striking example of this. The Jews, above all others, required "signs and wonders," i.e. the exercise of superhuman power, either in accordance with the working of nature, such as suddenly to heal the sick, or in opposition to it, such as to raise the dead.

In this case Jesus had two cures to work, the cure of the father's unbelief and the cure of his son's fever. The father had perhaps heard of the miracle which, a few months before, Jesus had performed at Cana, how He had turned the water into wine; or he was one of the Galileans who had seen all the things that He did at Jerusalem at the feast; or he may have only heard of these, and his faith was less perfect than if he had seen them. Anyhow, he could only connect the power of Jesus with His presence, and urges Him to come down to Capernaum, a distance of twenty-five miles, ere his child died. But on his importunity, Jesus by a word heals both the father and the son: the father of his unbelief and the son of his fever. By the question which he puts to his servants, "when he began to amend," it would seem that even then the father did not expect a sudden, but a gradual recovery. On hearing the account of his servants as to the hour when the fever left his son, the father believes still more in Jesus. He believes not only that He has power to heal the sick, but also that He is the Christ.

The fever left the child at "the seventh hour;" which, calculating from sunrise, would be one o'clock, or noon. In answer to the plea that S. John used a different mode of calculating the time from the other Evangelists, and that he began to reckon the hours from midday or midnight, and not from sunrise, a method which he is said to have learnt during his residence in Asia Minor, it is objected—(1) the improbability there is that S. John would put into the mouth of these servants, Galileans, or living in Galilee, a mode of reckoning the hours which, as is evidenced by the practice of the other Evangelists, was not commonly, if at all, used in Palestine; (2) that Origen,³ who was born in Alexandria within 100 years after S. John wrote his Gospel, and who has left an elaborate commentary on the cure of this nobleman's son by our Saviour, calculates the seventh hour from sunrise, and is evidently ignorant that S. John, either here or elsewhere, used a notation different from that of the other Evangelists. On this subject see also Commentary on S. Matthew, ch. xxvii. page 469.

Some⁴ of the early commentators pointed out that this

¹ Origen, in Joan. tomus xlii. 57; vol. iv. p. 508.

S. Jerome, in Isaiah lxx. 1; vol. iv. p. 629.

² S. Augustine, in Joan. iv. 46, tract. xvi.; vol. iii. p. 1526.

V. Bede, in Joan. iv. 46; vol. iii. p. 690.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang., cap. xxiv. p. 181.

Maldonatus, in Joan. iv. 46; vol. ii. p. 546.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. iv. 46; vol. viii. p. 935.

³ Origen, in Joan. tomus xlii. 60; vol. iv. p. 520.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. iv. 46; Homil. xxv.

Theophylact, in Joan. iv. 46; vol. i. p. 565.

Euthymius, in Joan. iv. 46; vol. iv. p. 165.

S. Augustine, in Joan. iv. 46, tract. xvi.; vol. iii. p. 1525.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxviii.; vol. ii. p. 1211.

V. Bede, in Joan. iv. 46; vol. iii. p. 689.

in σημεῖον with the most distinctness, as in τέρας with the least. It is involved and declared in the very word that the prime object and end of the miracle is to lead us to something out of and beyond itself; that, so to speak, it is a kind of finger-post of God pointing for us to that; valuable not so much for what it is as for what it indicates of the grace and power of the doer, or of the connection with a higher world in which He stands (Mark xvi. 20; Acts xiv.

3; Heb. ii. 4; Exod. vii. 9, 10; 1 Kings xlii. 3). . . . It is to be regretted that σημεῖον is not always rendered 'sign' in our Version; that in the Gospel of S. John, where it is of very frequent recurrence, 'sign' too often gives place to the vaguer 'miracle,' and sometimes not without serious loss: thus see iii. 2; vii. 31; x. 41; and, above all, vi. 26.—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 324.

healing of the nobleman's son is not to be confounded with the healing of the centurion's servant which S. Matthew (viii. 5) and S. Luke (vii. 1) record. They also draw attention to the several points of difference in the two cases: that in the case of the centurion's servant Jesus had entered into Capernaum, but that here the nobleman comes to Jesus, who is still at Cana; that in the former Jesus expressed great willingness to go to the house, but that the centurion deemed it unnecessary, and himself unworthy of His presence, and that His word was sufficient, but that the nobleman entreats Jesus to go down ere his child die; that in the former case "palsy" is mentioned as the malady, in the latter "fever;" that in the centurion's case the sick might be, and probably was, his servant (παῖς); in the nobleman's case it was his son (υἱός).

Both the centurion and the nobleman lived at Capernaum. The miraculous cure of the nobleman's son by a word from Jesus, who was dwelling at Cana, twenty-five miles off, would be known to every one in Capernaum. This may have produced the vigorous faith in the centurion which drew forth the praise of Jesus Himself, when a short time after this he said, "Speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed."

54. This is again the second miracle that Jesus did, when He was come out of Judæa into Galilee.

Vulg. Hoc iterum secundum signum fecit Iesus, cum.

The Authorized English Version has imparted a degree of obscurity to this verse which does not belong to the Greek. The simple translation is, "This again, a second miracle, did Jesus, when He was come out of Judæa into Galilee." On His first visit to Cana in Galilee, after He had left Judæa, He made the water wine; now on His second visit direct from Judæa He heals the nobleman's son.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES TO CHAPTER V.

The Water Supply, or system by which Jerusalem was furnished with a constant supply of water, was one of the most wonderful things in that wonderful city. The following extracts will tend to throw some light upon it:—

"The cisterns in what is now called the Sanctuary appear to have been connected by a system of channels cut out of the rock; so that when one was full the surplus water ran into the next, and so on until the final overflow was carried off by a channel into the Kedron. One of the cisterns, that known as the Great Sea, would contain two million gallons; and the total number of gallons which could be stored probably exceeded ten millions."—'Recovery of Jerusalem,' p. 17.

"The ancient supply of water appears to have been obtained from springs, wells, the collection of rain in pools and cisterns, and water brought from a distance by aqueducts. The extensive remains of cisterns, pools, and aqueducts show that little dependence was placed on any natural springs existing in or near the city; and indeed, from the formation of the ground, it is doubtful whether any existed besides the Fountain of the Virgin in the Kedron Valley. There may have been a source in the Tyropæon Valley, but it could only have been a small and not very lasting one."—Ibid. p. 19.

"Water was brought into the city by two aqueducts, the 'low level' and the 'high level;' but the course of the former can alone be traced within the walls of the city."—Ibid. p. 23.

"In this investigation the interesting question of the supposed spring inside the walls of Jerusalem and under the Temple Courts has been for the first time followed to the bottom, and the result appears to be that, while there is no actual spring within the walls, the whole mount is so honey-combed with cisterns as to give ample materials for the conjecture of Tacitus, and for the imagery of Scripture."—Ibid. (Introduction), p. xvii.

Pool of Bethesda.—"Immediately to the east of the hill is a small valley, which falls into the Kedron about 100 yards south of S. Stephen's Gate. On its left bank stands the Church of S. Anne, and in its bed has been formed the traditional Pool of Bethesda, called in the most ancient MSS. of the New Testament Bethzatha,¹ a name not unlike that of the fourth hill—Bezatha."—Ibid. p. 11.

"The Pool of Bethesda was made across the valley, and not in the direction of its length."—Ibid. p. 12.

"The Pool of Bethesda (Birket Israil) lies in the valley which runs past S. Anne's Church; but the drainage of this is not sufficient to supply such a large tank, and it must have been fed from some other source. Though partly filled with rubbish, it still has a depth of forty feet; it is out of repair, and does not now hold water."—Ibid. p. 22.

"The Pool itself is 360 feet long, 130 broad, and 75 deep; the bottom being encumbered with deep rubbish. On the east side are two high-arched passages, which run east and west for more than 100 feet, and are choked up with filth and rubbish."—'Our Work in Palestine,' p. 41, ed. 1873.

Siloam.—"The two pools of Siloam are at the bottom of the Tyropæon Valley, and were probably made for the irrigation of the gardens below. They derive their supply partly from the surface drainage and partly from the Fountain of the Virgin, the water of which is brought to them by a subterranean channel."—'Recovery of Jerusalem,' p. 22.

"The present supply of water is almost entirely dependent on the collection of the winter rainfall, which is much less than has generally been supposed, as by a strange mistake the rain-gauge was formerly read four times higher than it should have been. According to Dr. Chaplin's observations, the average rainfall during the years 1860-64 was 19·86 inches, the maximum being 22·975 inches and minimum 15·0 inches."—Ibid. p. 25.

¹ Not quite correct (S. Bethzatha, V. Bethsaida).

CHAPTER V.

[1. Jews on the Sabbath day curst him that was diseased eight and thirty years. 10. The Jews therefore evil, and persecute him for it. 17. He answereth for himself, and reproveth them, shewing by the testimony of His Father, 32. of John, 36. of His words, 39. and of the scriptures, who He is.]

[Vulg. Jesus ad piscinam sanctorum agens qui xxxviii annis langueret, jubet Sabbatho habere gratulationem: et Iudeis ad eum inquitantibus respondit se omnino sui simul cum Patre operari, mortuosque vivificare, ac Iudeum ab illo constitutum esse omnium, cuius factum esset propter opera ac Patre, inquit Magis ipse testimonium perhibet.]

i. After this there was a feast of the Jews;^a and Jesus went up to Jerusalem.

S. was the feast.
Vulg. Post hoc.

A difference of opinion existed among the early writers respecting the nature of this feast as much as among later, some¹ concluding that the festival here meant was the Passover and others² Pentecost. Among modern commentators, some³ hold that the Evangelist is referring to the Feast of Purim, which was instituted in memory of the deliverance of the Jews from the machinations of Haman (Esther ix.).

Amid these conflicting judgments it is impossible to say for certain what feast of the Jews it was that the Evangelist here refers to. It will be sufficient to observe that if the true reading be ἡ ἑορτή, "the feast," of the Jews, which there seems some ground to believe, this would better apply to the Passover than to any other of the Jewish festivals. If this be not the Passover, but Pentecost, it implies that a Passover had been celebrated fifty days before, which the Evangelist had omitted to mention. Whether, then, this be the Passover or Pentecost, it will show that our Saviour's ministry extended over three years, because S. John has elsewhere (ii. 13; vi. 4; xii. 1) expressly mentioned the occurrence of three Passovers besides this.

¹ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, ii. 22 (alias 39), p. 783.

Rupertus, in Joan. v. 1; vol. iii. p. 390.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxxvi. p. 233.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. v. 1; vol. viii. p. 938.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the N. T. sect. xiv. vol. i. p. 221.

Grotius, in Joan. v. 1; Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 1627.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. v. 1; Homil. xxvi.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. v. 1; vol. vi. p. 337. [Theophylact, Theophylact, in Joan. v. 1; vol. i. p. 567.

Euthymius, in Joan. v. 1; vol. iv. p. 169.

Maldonatus, in Joan. v. 1; vol. ii. p. 550.

Bengel, in Joan. v. 1; p. 310.

For a summary of the arguments in favour of Pentecost, see McClellan, New Testament, p. 554.

³ For a summary of the arguments in favour of Purim, see Wieseler, Chronolog. Synopsis, p. 187, &c.

^a Verse 1.—"Tischendorf reads, ἡ ἑορτή τῶν Ἰουδαίων."—SERVANIUS, N. T., 1877.

On the phrase ἑορτή τῶν Ἰουδαίων (Joan. v. 1) turns mainly the question as to the duration of our Lord's public ministry. John notes distinctly three Passovers: John ii. 13; vi. 4; xii. 1. If now this ἑορτή be another Passover, then our Lord's public labours continued during three and a half years; if not, then the time of His ministry must in all probability be reckoned one year less.

"The only reasonable ground of doubt in this case is the absence of the article before ἑορτή. Did the text read ἡ ἑορτή τῶν Ἰουδαίων (as is actually the case in Codd. C, E, L, in several cursive manuscripts, in Ed. Complut. and elsewhere), then, as most admit, it would with sufficient definiteness denote the Passover: compare Matt. xvi. 5; Luke ii. 42; John iv. 45, xi. 56. Lücke and De Wette do indeed attempt to invalidate such a conclusion: but apparently without any good ground. At any rate, even as the text now stands, it may assuredly in itself just as well denote the great Jewish festival as any other. The following considerations seem to show that it does most probably thus stand for a Passover, viz. the second in our Lord's public ministry.

"1. The word ἑορτή without the article is put definitely for the Passover, in the phrase κατὰ ἑορτήν (Matt. xxvii. 15; Mark xv. 6; Luke xxiii. 17. Compare John xviii. 39).

"2. In Hebrew a noun before a genitive is made definite by prefixing the article, not to the noun itself, but to the genitive: see Gesen. Heb. Gr. 109, i.; Nordheim, Heb. Gr. ii. p. 14, γ. This idiom is transferred by the LXX. into Greek: e.g. Deut. xvi. 13, ἑορτὴν τῶν σαρρῶν ποιήσεις σεαυτῷ, Heb. תֵּן הַסֹּבֶת, i.e. the festival of Tabernacles; 2 Kings xviii. 15, ἐν θησαυροῖς οἴκου τοῦ βασιλέως, Heb. בְּאֻצְרוֹת בֵּית הַמֶּלֶךְ. So, too, in the New Testament: Matt. xii. 24, ἐν τῷ ἄρχοντι τῶν δαιμονίων, i.e. the prince of devils; Luke ii. 11, ἐν πόλει Δαυὶδ (the proper name being itself definite), i.e. not a city of David, but the city, as in English—David's city, Heb. עִיר דָּוִד; Acts viii. 5, ἐν πόλει τῆς Σαμαρείας, i.e. the city (metropolis) of Samaria; see v. 14. Hence, in the passage before us, according to the analogous English idiom, we may render the phrase ἑορτή τῶν Ἰουδαίων by the Jewish festival: which marks it definitely as the Passover. Similar and illustrative is the phrase in John vi. 4: ἡν δὲ ἔγγις τὸ πάσχα, ἡ ἑορτὴ τῶν Ἰουδαίων. See Hengstenberg's 'Christol.' ii. p. 565.

"3. It is not probable that John means here to imply that the festival was indefinite or uncertain. Such is not his usual manner.

On the supposition that this feast of the Jews is the Passover, there is an interval of about four months between this chapter and the last. But the other Evangelists enable us to fill in this interval with a fair account of the works which our Saviour wrought during that time. After Jesus had said there were four months to the harvest or Passover, He tarried two days in Sychar, then He goes into Galilee, avoiding His own city Nazareth (John iv. 43). After some delay in Galilee, teaching in their synagogues (Luke iv. 14, &c.), He goes to Nazareth. The inhabitants of Nazareth having endeavoured to take His life, He went to Capernaum, called four disciples, cast out a devil, healed Peter's mother-in-law and others that were diseased, goes and preaches in the synagogues of Galilee (Mark i. 23-39), cleanses and heals a leper in one of those cities (Luke v. 12), returns to Capernaum and recovers a man sick of the palsy, and calls Levi from the receipt of custom (Mark ii.). Such are some of the works which Jesus wrought between His healing of the nobleman's son and the Feast of the Passover, for which He now goes up to Jerusalem.

2. Now there is at Jerusalem^a by the sheep market^b a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue^c Bethesda,^c having five porches.

Margin, gate.
by (S.A. in) the sheep market a pool: S. a sheep pool: S. Bethesda: V. Bethesda.
Vulg. Est autem Ierosolymis probatica piscina quæ cognominatur hebraice Bethesda.

The Jewish festivals were to him the measures of time; and in every other instance they are definitely specified. So the Passover, John ii. 23, xii. 1; even when Jesus does not visit it, vi. 4; and also when it is expressed only by ἡ ἑορτή, iv. 45; xi. 56; xii. 12, 20. So, too, the festival of Tabernacles, ἡ ἑορτὴ τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἀκροπολίᾳ, vii. 2; and of the Dedication, τὰ ἐγκαίνια, x. 22. This is all natural in him: for an indefinite festival could afford no note of time.

"4. The plucking of the ears of grain by the disciples shows that a Passover had just been kept; which tallies accurately with this visit of our Lord to Jerusalem.

"5. This ἑορτή could not have been the festival either of Pentecost or of Tabernacles next following our Lord's first Passover. He returned from Judæa to Galilee not until eight months after that Passover, when both these festivals were already past. That it might by possibility have been the Pentecost after a second Passover not mentioned, and before that in John vi. 4, cannot perhaps be fully disproved; but such a view has in itself no probability, and is apparently entertained by no one. At any rate, it also would give the same duration of three and a half years to our Lord's ministry.

"6. Nor can we well understand here the festival of Purim, which occurred on the fourteenth and fifteenth of the month Adar or March, one month before the Passover: see Esth. ix. 21, &c. Against this the following considerations present themselves: (a) The Jews did not go up to Jerusalem to celebrate the festival of Purim. The observance of it among that people throughout the world consisted solely in reading the Book of Esther in their synagogues on those days, and making them 'days of feasting and joy, and of sending portions (dishes) one to another and gifts to the poor.' (Esth. ix. 22; Joseph. Ant. x. 6, 13; Reland, Antiq. Heb. iv. 9.) But 'the multitude' (John v. 13) seems to imply a concourse of strangers at one of the great festivals. (b) It is very improbable that Jesus would have gone up to Jerusalem at the Purim, to which the Jews did not go up, rather than at the Passover, which occurred only a month later. His being once present at the festival of Dedication (John x. 22) is not a parallel case; since He appears not to have gone up for that purpose, but this festival occurred while He remained in or near Jerusalem after the festival of Tabernacles (John vii. 2, &c.). (c) The infirm man was healed on the Sabbath (John v. 9), which Sabbath belonged to the festival, as the whole context shows (John v. 1, 2, 10-13). But the Purim was never celebrated on a Sabbath; and when it happened to fall on that day, was regularly deferred: see Reland, loc. cit.

"7. The main objection urged against taking this ἑορτή as a Passover is the circumstance that in such case, as our Lord did not go up to the Passover spoken of in John vi. 4, but only at the subsequent festival of Tabernacles in John vii. 2, &c., He would thus have absented Himself from Jerusalem for a year and six months; a neglect, it is alleged, inconsistent with His character and with a due observance of the Jewish law. But a sufficient reason is assigned for this omission, viz. 'because the Jews sought to kill Him' (John vii. 1, comp. v. 18). It obviously had been our Lord's custom to visit the holy city every year at the Passover; and because, for the reason assigned, He once left this occasion pass by, He therefore went up six months afterwards at the festival of Tabernacles. All this presents a view perfectly natural, and covers the whole ground. Nor have we any right to assume, as many do, that our Lord regularly went up to Jerusalem on other occasions besides those specified in the New Testament.

"In this instance, the most ancient view is that which interprets ἑορτή of a Passover. So Irenæus in the third century: 'Et posthac iterum secunda vice ascendit [Jesus] in diem Pasche in Hierusalem, quando paralyticum, qui juxta natatorium jacebat xxxviii annos curavit' (adv. Hæc. ii. 39). The same view is adopted by Eusebius, Theodoret, and others; and in later times has been followed by Luther, Scaliger, Grotius, Lightfoot, Le Clerc, Lampe, Hengstenberg, &c. Cyril and Chrysostom held to a Pentecost, as also the Harmony ascribed to Tatian; and so, in modern times, Erasmus, Calvin, Beza, Bengel, &c. The festival of Purim was first suggested by Keppeler (Eclægæ Chronica, pp. 72, 129, &c.; Francof. 1615); and at the present day this is the only view, aside from the Passover, that finds advocates. Those who hold it, as Hug, Neander, Olshausen, Tholuck, Meyer (Lücke and De Wette leave the question undecided), regard John vi. 4 as having reference to the second Passover during our Lord's ministry, which thus becomes limited to two and a half years. See, generally, Hengstenberg's Christolog. ii. p. 561, &c.; Neander's Leben Jesu, 3te Aufl. p. 434, Anm.; Lücke, Comm. üb. Jahn, in loc. ii. p. 1, &c.—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek,' p. 190, &c.

"Now there is at Jerusalem (ἐστὶ δὲ ἐν τοῖς Ἱεροσολύμοις).—'No exponent of any judgment would admit the possibility that ἐστὶ could be put for ἦν. On the other hand, the use of the present does not necessarily prove that the locality is still as described by the writer.'—WINER'S 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 283.

"In the Hebrew tongue (Ἑβραϊστὶ).—'They mean the Chaldean language, which, from their return out of Babylon, had been their mother tongue; and they call it the language of those beyond Euphrates (although used also in common with the Syrians on this side Euphrates), that with respect to the Jews they might distinguish it from the ancient holy tongue as not being the tongue they used before they went into captivity, but that which they brought along with them from beyond Euphrates.'—LIGHTFOOT on John v. 2; vol. ii. p. 545.

"Bethesda is conceived by some to be derived or compounded of two words which signify the place of effusion, or falling in of waters, either, say some, because the rain-water falling off the temples gathered here; or as others, because the waters used in the Temple fell in through an underground channel thither; or as yet some others, because water ran out of another pool into this: nay, yet

The word "gate" completes the meaning better than the word "market," for the sheep-gate was a well-known gate in Jerusalem. Nehemiah relates that, on their return from captivity, the high-priest rose up with his brethren the priests, and they builded the sheep-gate; they sanctified it and set up the doors of it (Neh. iii. 1). Through this gate the sheep required for the daily service of the Temple would be brought into Jerusalem from the neighbouring country.*

Some¹ have supposed that the Pool of Bethesda was used for washing the animals preparatory to their being offered in sacrifice. Lightfoot,² whose opinion can seldom be safely despised on subjects connected with the Jews or the Temple worship, is strongly opposed to this, on the ground (1) that the practice of washing the animals prior to their being sacrificed is nowhere alluded to in Holy Scripture; and (2) that he has searched the traditional writings in order to discover such a custom, and cannot find a trace of it. It is true that the entrails were washed after the animal was slain, but for this purpose a room was set apart in the Temple itself, called the washing-room. In his opinion, the original purpose of this pool, with its five porticoes or cloisterways covered above and open on one side, was for the washing of men and not of animals, of men who were unclean either from some legal or traditionary defilement. Each class of the unclean might have its own separate portico, according to the nature of the defilement, and through which they entered the water. The cases of purification on account of uncleanness, either legal or traditional, were so numerous, that if all the pools in Jerusalem had been used for this purpose, they would scarcely have been more than sufficient. The Syriac interpreter renders this passage, There was at Jerusalem a certain place of baptism. By this he may have intended the washing of unclean persons and not of animals.

The Evangelist mentions only three kinds of diseased people who came to this pool to be healed, probably as specimens of the rest; these being among the diseases that were the most difficult to cure, and which most impeded their descent into the pool.

3. In these lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, withered,^b waiting for the moving of the water.

S.V. omit great: S.V.A. omit waiting for the moving of the water. Vulg. multitudo magna languentium, cecorum, claudum, avidorum expectantium aque motum.*

4. For an angel went down at a certain season into the pool, and troubled the water: whosoever then first after the troubling of the water stepped in was made whole of whatsoever disease he had.^c

S.V. omit this verse: A. An angel of the Lord washed at a certain season. Vulg. Angelus autem domini descendit secundum tempus in piscinam; et movetur aqua. Et qui prior descendisset in piscinam post motionem aque, sanus habet at a quacunque detinebatur infirmitate.

The absence of the words "waiting for the moving of the water" to the end of verse 4, from many ancient MSS., has ¹ Theophylact, in Joan. v. 2; vol. i. p. 567.

S. Jerome, de Situ et Nominibus Heb.; vol. iii. p. 884.

V. Bede, in Joan. v. 2; vol. iii. p. 691. [Jansenius, some further have dreamed of the blood of the sacrifices running in hither. But certainly (to omit to examine these opinions) the title of the place of effusion is a note but little distinctive of a peculiar pool (and it is apparent enough the Evangelist would put a distinction upon this pool here), since it may be given to any pool near Jerusalem, or near any city whatsoever. The Syriac, therefore, hath more pertinently and properly expressed it as signifying the place of mercy or compassion, in regard of the virtue that it had of healing those that were diseased."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John v.; vol. i. p. 661.

* Gates of Jerusalem.—"The modern city is entirely surrounded by a massive well-built wall, provided with numerous flanking towers, and is protected on the north by a ditch partly cut in the rock. There are five gates now open and five closed. Of the former, the Jaffa Gate is on the west, the Damascus Gate on the north, St. Stephen's on the east, and the Sion and Dung Gates on the south. Of the latter, the Bab az-Zahire is on the north, the Golden Gate on the east, and the Single, Double, and Triple Gates on the south."—"Recovery of Jerusalem," p. 7.

^b Withered (ἐμπρὸν).—"Sinev-shunk, as in 1 Kings. xiii. 4; Matt. xii. 10."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John v.; vol. i. p. 661.

^c Verses 3, 4.—"From the words 'waiting for,' ver. 3, to the end of ver. 4. This passage is expunged by Tischendorf, Tregelles, Alford, Westcott, and Hort; obelized (=) by Griesbach, but retained by Scholz and Lachmann."—SCRIVENER, Introduction, p. 527, ed. 1874.

"The question is whether this passage is genuine or not."

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxxvi. p. 233.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. v. 2; vol. viii. p. 938.

² Lightfoot, on S. John v. 5; vol. ii. p. 545.

"I. Testimony against it:—

1. A, B, C, 157, 314 omit the whole passage.

A*, L, 18 omit the clause ἐκδεχόμενοι . . . κινήσει.

D, 33 omit the whole of verse 4.

S, Π, Δ, and about fourteen cursives, mark verse 4 with either asterisks or obeli.

2. q omits the whole; f, l omit verse 4.

Syr. C omits the whole; H obelizes.

Theb. and Memph. (Schwartz) omit.

Arm. (many of the codices) also omit.

3. No writers but those mentioned below allude to the narrative.

"II. Testimony for it:—

1. (A), C, E, F, G (L), &c. &c., give the passage, but with many variations.

2. All the other Latin codices but those mentioned above, both of the Vet. Lat. and the Vulgate; Syrr. P and J, and Memph. (Wilkins.).

3. Tertullian, Chrysostom, Cyril Alex., Ambrose, Theophylact, and Euthymius recognize the narrative.

"In reviewing this evidence, we find that the further back we go the weaker becomes the support; and the numerous variations with which the passage is given cause still further suspicion. It is a little singular that the earliest evidence in its favour seems to point to Africa as its origin, as if there were perhaps some tradition afloat there which took the form of a marginal gloss, and thence crept into the text. The weight of the earliest evidence is too strongly adverse to warrant our retaining the passage in the text."—HAMMOND, 'Textual Criticism,' p. 162.

given rise to the gravest doubts as to whether they form the first formed part of S. John's Gospel. Many critics maintain that the external evidence against these words is sufficient to exclude them from the text entirely; while others are prepared to admit that the objections against them are exceedingly weighty and perplexing, but not such as to exclude them in the face of the strong internal evidence in their favour.* By way of accounting for their presence in any MSS. of S. John, it has been suggested by some, who would reject them, that they may have been a marginal explanation of the narrative in keeping with the general belief, which afterwards became incorporated with the text. Others, wishing to retain them, and at the same time to account for the omission of these words from so many MSS., suggest that they formed part of the original text of S. John, and were omitted in some manuscripts on account of the supernatural agency recorded in them. Whether these words formed part of the original text of S. John's Gospel or not, they must have been in the text in very early times; for Tertullian¹ quotes them probably without expressing any doubt of their being part of S. John's Gospel, probably a hundred years before any one of our present MSS. was written. Other² early writers also refer to them.

5. And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity thirty and eight years.

S. And there was a certain man which had.
Vulg. Erat autem quidam homo ibi triginta et octo annos habens in infirmitate sua.

6. When Jesus saw him lie, and knew that he had been now a long time in that case, He saith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?^b

S. omits now.
Vulg. quia jam multum tempus habebat.

7. The impotent man answered Him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool: but while I am coming, another steppeth down before me.

A. saith unto Him.
Vulg. Respondit ei languidus.

8. Jesus saith unto him, Rise, take up thy bed,^c and walk.

A. Rise and take up.
Vulg. Surge, tolle grabatum tuum, et ambula.

9. And immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed, and walked: and on the same day was the Sabbath.

S. omits And immediately: S. whole, and rose and took up.
Vulg. erat autem sabbatum in die illo.

Knowing, either by His own power, or by the information of the bystanders, or from the man himself, that he had been now a long time in that case, Jesus saith unto him, "Wilt thou be made whole?" He does this to raise in him a longing for help, and an expectation of this help from Jesus Himself. It would seem that an expectation of help from Jesus was a necessary condition in all the cases in which He exercised His Divine power to heal.

It does not appear whether the angel was ever visible to the spectators, or whether his presence was only indicated by the moving of the water. But they all knew that the healing of the water was superhuman, and was not by any virtue inherent in the water itself. To heal the impotent man close to the pool, yet without any application of the water of the pool, would naturally suggest to a reflecting mind the similarity which there was in the power of Him who healed by His word and the power of Him who healed through the water. He who could heal the impotent man who had been in this state for thirty-and-eight years, whether through the water or by His word, must be more than man. Thus not merely by the miracle, but also by the locality in which the miracle is wrought, does Jesus lead both the man who had been healed and those who had witnessed his healing to draw some such conclusion as this for themselves.

¹ Tertullian, de Baptismo, v. 4; vol. i. p. 1205.

² S. Ambrose, de Mysteriis, 4; vol. iii. p. 393.

—, de Sacramentis, ii. 2; vol. iii. p. 425.

—, de Spiritu Sancto, l. 7; vol. iii. p. 725.

V. Bede, in Joan. v. 4; vol. iii. p. 691. [S. Chrysostom,

* Internal evidence for vers. 3, 4.—"Clearly the words are indissolubly wrought in with the context, and absolutely necessary to explain the presence of the sick in the cloisters in ver. 3, the Lord's question in ver. 6, and the sick man's answer in ver. 7 (cf. also vers. 9, 14). With this overwhelming internal evidence, the passage is rightly retained by Lachmann, Lange, Stier, and perhaps Scrivener. . . . [Cf. the author of the new work, 'Supernatural Religion,' vol. ii. p. 421: 'We must believe that this passage did originally belong to the text, and has from an early period been omitted from MSS. on account of the difficulty it presents. Ver. 7 absolutely implies its existence, &c.']"—McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 711.

^b Wilt thou be made whole?—There is sometimes an ellipsis

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. v. 4; Homil. xxxvi.

S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. v. 7; vol. vi. p. 340.

Theophylact, in Joan. v. 4; vol. i. p. 568.

Euthymius, in Joan. v. 4; vol. iv. p. 171.

of even a sentence. In John v. 6, 7, the answer ἄνθρωπον οὐκ ἔχω, ἵνα . . . βάλλω με, &c., does not seem to correspond directly to the question, θελεῖς βῆναι γενέσθαι; so that a simple yes, certainly, may be supplied. But the sick man did not stop at this simple affirmation, but immediately proceeded to state the obstacle which had hitherto prevented the fulfilment of his wish.—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 621.

^c Thy bed (τὸν κράββατόν σου).—The bed, according to the custom of the country, would be a thick mat, rug, or quilt, as in the following:—"Beds were spread for us in our upper room, consisting of thick quilts underneath, and another quilt of silk in which to wrap ourselves."—ROBINSON, 'Biblical Researches,' vol. iii. p. 33.

On other occasions, when He had wrought a miracle, our Saviour adds some circumstance, either to show them the perfection of His work, or in some way to call their special attention to it. When He had multiplied the bread so as to feed five thousand men with five barley loaves and two fishes, He orders the fragments to be gathered up (Matt. xiv. 20). When He cleansed the leper, He sent him to show himself to the priest (Matt. viii. 4). When He had raised Jairus' daughter from death, He commanded that something should be given her to eat (Mark v. 43). When He had turned the water into wine, He bade them bear it unto the governor of the feast (John ii. 8). To the impotent man whom He had now healed, He said, "Rise, take up thy bed, and walk."

We have reason to believe that in ordering the man to take up his bed and walk Jesus had another object in view besides proving the completeness of the cure, and therefore that He must be more than man. He did this to bring before the Jews His claim to be God in another form.

10. ¶ The Jews therefore said unto him that was cured, It is the Sabbath day: it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed.

S. V. A. and it is not lawful.
Vulg. Sabbatum est, non licet tibi tollere grabatum tuum.

11. He answered them, He that made me whole, the same said unto me, Take up thy bed, and walk.

S. V. A. But he answered: S. told me to take up the bed and walk.
Vulg. Respondit eis: qui me sanum fecit, ille mihi dixit: Tolle grabatum tuum, et ambula.

The reasoning of the man who was cured was unanswerable. He who made me whole was the man who commanded me to take up my bed and walk. He who could make me whole could not command me to do what was not lawful or wrong.

12. Then asked they him, What man is that which said unto thee, Take up thy bed, and walk?

S. V. A. aut Thome told thee to take up thy bed and walk.
Vulg. Interrogavit ergo eum: quis est ille homo qui dixit tibi, Tolle grabatum tuum, et ambula?

13. And he that was healed wist not who it was: for Jesus had conveyed Himself away,^a a multitude being in that place.

Magni, from the multitude that was.
S. being present.
Vulg. Jesus enim declinavit a turba constituta in loco.

There is nothing unreasonable in the man's ignorance of Jesus, even so far as not to know His name: for only about eighteen months had elapsed since Jesus had been baptized by John, soon after which He had commenced His ministry, and only once before during that time is He expressly related to have been in Jerusalem. Great as His fame in Jerusalem might be from His driving out the buyers and sellers from the Temple, it might not be such as to reach the ears of a poor destitute cripple lying in one of the porches near the pool of Bethesda. This was in all probability the first time that he had ever seen Jesus, and that but for a moment or two, for He had at once conveyed Himself away. He had done this to avoid the inconvenient praise and admiration of the impartial multitude, and the malice of the unjust among them, and to leave the man's own testimony more free and less open to suspicion than it would have been by His presence.

14. Afterwards Jesus findeth him in the Temple, and said unto him, Behold, thou art made whole: sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee.

S. findeth him that had been healed in the Temple, and saith.
Vulg. Postea invenit eum Jesus in Templo, et dixit illi.

The gratitude of the man who had been healed was shown by his going to the Temple. As soon as he had carried away his bed he returns to the Temple, no doubt to give thanks to God for his cure. Jesus had healed his body by the Pool of Bethesda, and thus had given him a proof that He was more than a mere man; and in the Temple He reveals to him secrets known only to himself, and thus gives him another proof of His divine power. He calls to his recollection his sin, a sin which had been committed before Jesus was born of the Blessed Virgin. He shows him the heinous nature of his sin in the sight of God, who had punished it with thirty-eight years of suffering, and warns him that a repetition of his sin would be followed by a greater punishment.

God's judgments are sent upon men in this world partly to try their patience and faith in God, as in the case of Job, and partly to check their further career and to punish their sin, as in the case of this man. Apparently his chastisement had been good for him. Everything here related of him is in his favour. He shows a right feeling by his strong belief in the goodness of Him who had so unexpectedly and so miraculously restored him to the use of his limbs. Failing to find Him who had wrought the cure, he returns thanks to God in as public a manner as was possible by going to the Temple. When he found his benefactor, in the fulness of his heart he departed and told the Jews that it was Jesus which had made him whole. He did this doubtless in the overflowing of his gratitude, and that the Jews also might believe

^a Had conveyed Himself away (ἐξέκρυεν).—This word by some expositors is made of a questionable derivation, whether from γενεσις or from ἐκρύβω. The latter is the more undoubted, both as better suited with the sense of the place and having also its parallel in the Old Testament, as 2 Kings xxiii. 16, "And as Jeroboam turned himself, he saw the graves." &c. The Septuagint have it ἐξέκρυεν ἰσθίας καὶ εὐδὲ, &c. So Jesus, when He had done this cure upon the man, turned Himself away and went home." LIGHTFOOT, "Harmony of the Four Evangelists," John v.: verse 1, p. 662.

in Him. Fear lest his punishment should return, or lest a worse thing should come to him, would prevent him from informing the Jews, except from the very best of motives. He would be quite aware that Jesus, who could reveal his secret deeds which had happened thirty-eight years before, could read his heart at the present time.

15. The man departed, and told the Jews that it was Jesus, which had made him whole.

A. And the man; S. departed, and said unto the Jews.
Vulg. Abiit ille homo, et nuntiavit Iudeis.

16. And therefore did the Jews^a persecute Jesus, and sought to slay Him, because He had done^b these things on the Sabbath day.

S.V. omit and sought to slay Him.
Vulg. omits and sought to slay Him.

The reason which the Jews alleged for their persecution of Jesus was because He had broken the Sabbath; the real secret reason was not their zeal for the observance of God's ordinance, but their personal envy and hatred. His teaching laid bare their sins and hypocrisies too unsparingly to escape their bitterest persecution.

By commanding the man to take up his bed and walk on the Sabbath day He had broken the Sabbath, the rest enjoined to be observed on the Sabbath. He justifies the deed, not by saying it was done in the service of humanity, in the cause of suffering human nature, or that it was such an act as was not forbidden by the law; but He justifies His deed by saying that God had always ever since the Creation worked on the Sabbath, and that He therefore worked on the Sabbath because God was His Father.

17. ¶ But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.

S.V. But He answered.
Vulg. Iesus autem respondit eis.

God had commanded the Sabbath or seventh day to be observed as a day of rest, because He had finished the works of creation on that day. It may be that He had ceased to create new kinds of life besides those which had been already enumerated. But God did not cease to work at the end of the sixth day. He worked on the seventh day by preserving and upholding the works which He had already made. He has continued the same preserving care over His works every Sabbath day since hitherto. By restoring the impotent man to the perfect use of his limbs on the Sabbath day Jesus had only exercised the same power which God who was His Father exercised every Sabbath.

18. Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill Him, because He not only had broken the Sabbath, but said also that God was His Father, making Himself equal with God.

S. omits Therefore.
Vulg. Propterea ergo magis querebant eum Iudei interficere.

Jesus calls God His own (ἰδιον) Father. The Jews interpreted this not in the lower subordinate sense in which the expression is sometimes used, and in which it may be used by mere men who call God their Father. They understand it in the highest sense, and understanding it in the highest sense they did not mistake His meaning. They saw Jesus in appearance a mere man like themselves, they believed that He was born in Nazareth of Galilee, and that He was the son of a carpenter, and they heard Him say that God was His own, His natural (ἰδιον) Father, and that He was equal with God; that He, a mere man in appearance, was equal with God the Creator of heaven and earth.

So far from correcting the sense which the Jews had given to His words, Jesus in the following verse confirms it, and asserts His claim to be equal with God in language different from that which He had used before, but not less strong, and which He ushers in with the words "Verily, verily."

19. Then answered Jesus and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do; for what things soever He doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise.

S. Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, I say.
Vulg. Respondit itaque Iesus, et dixit eis.

Several of the Fathers¹ have related that these words were used by the heretics of their day to prove that the Son was

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. v. 19; Homil. xxxviii.
S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lix. 76; vol. ii. p. 329.
S. Gregory Nazian., Oratio Theologica, iv. 11; vol. ii. p. 117.
— iii. 18; vol. ii. p. 97.
— iv. 10; vol. ii. p. 113.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. v. 19; vol. vi. p. 357.
— de Trinitate, vi.; vol. viii. p. 1049.
S. Ambrose, de Fide, iv. 4; vol. iii. p. 624.
S. Augustine, de Trinitate, xv. 14; vol. viii. p. 1076.
— contr. Sermon. Arianorum, 14; vol. viii. p. 693.

^a The Jews (οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι).—"That is, the Sanhedrin or the Rulers, for so it is very common with the Evangelists, especially with this, to mean by that expression, as i. 19, 'The Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem;' vii. 1, 'The Jews sought to kill Him;' ix. 22, 'The Jews had agreed to put out of the synagogue.' &c.; xviii. 12, 'The officers of the Jews took Jesus;' verse 14, 'Now, Caiaphas was he that gave counsel to the Jews,' &c. So that Christ is here convented before the Sanhedrin, although the Evangelist hath not expressed so much totidem verbis, and is put to answer for His life about the violation of the Sabbath, which they laid to His charge, upon what He had done and commanded to the man that He had recovered."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John v.; vol. i. p. 662.

^b Because He had done (ὅτι ταῦτα ἐποίησεν).—"It is admitted by all that an aorist, under certain conditions, may have the sense of a past behind another past; nor, according to some, can this force be altogether denied to the imperfect; but a pluperfect force is given in our Version to these terms where certainly no sort of inferior in dignity and power to the Father. When showing the way in which the heretics endeavoured to wrest the meaning of the words, they have also pointed out the sense in which the Church understood them.

The Son can do nothing of Himself, nothing without the Father, not from deficiency of power, but from their inseparability of nature. The Father and the Son are One; they cannot therefore do different or separate things. Whatever things the Father doeth, the same things, not similar things, the Son also doeth in like manner (ὁμοίως), with a similar power and a similar will. The acts of the Son are not an imitation of the Father, but a co-operation, a participation with the Father, as being One with the Father.

In this conversation with the Jews, Jesus uses the language that men would use to express the closest possible union between a father and a son.

The word "to see," as well as the kindred word "to show," have a special meaning in Holy Scripture. They mean to participate or to share in the nature of another by sight, and to communicate a participation in the nature of another by sight. This is evidently the meaning, at least in a certain degree, in another passage of S. John, "We shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." (1 John iii. 2.) In S. Matthew, too, the word "to see" is used in this sense. "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." (Matt. v. 8.)

Thus "to see" and "to show" are used here to indicate the most intimate union and relation possible between God the Father and God the Son. To express the participation of the Son in the Father's work, the Son is said "to see" the Father; to express the participation of the Son in the Father's power and will, the Father is said "to show" the Son.¹

20. For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth Him all things that Himself doeth: and He will shew Him greater works than these, that ye may marvel.

21. For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom He will.

22. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son;^a

23. That all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son honoureth not the Father which hath sent Him.

The meaning of our Saviour's words may be somewhat expressed in the following paraphrase:—

I am Man as well as God, nevertheless I and the Father are One. The healing of the impotent man on the Sabbath day is My work, and it is the work of My Father, for We are One. But the Father will show Me greater works than these; the Father will work through Me, the Son, God and Man, greater works than healing the sick. He will through Me, God Incarnate, raise the dead, and judge the quick and the dead: and the effect of this upon you hardened Jews will be, not that ye will believe, but that ye will marvel.

The first of these greater works which the Father will show the Son is the resurrection of the dead, and the second the judgment of the quick and dead. The Father will not raise some to life and the Son raise others, for there is a unity of Will between the Father and the Son. When God the Father raises from the dead and quickens, the Son, God Incarnate, shares in that quickening. The Father in Person will judge no man, but he will judge through the Son. God the Son, the Son of Man alone, will be visible as the Judge on the great Day of Judgment, and He will then receive equal honour with God the Father. Even now those who honour not the Son, lowly as He may appear, in so doing detract from the honour due to God the Creator and Preserver of all things, and whose special claim to our honour is that He hath sent His Son.

Jesus calls the attention of the Jews to the importance of what He is about to utter, by the repetition of that forcible exclamation, "Amen, Amen."

24. Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth My word,^b and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not necessity requires it. Thus for the words, 'because He had done these things on the Sabbath' (John v. 16), read, 'because He did (ἐποίησε) these things on the Sabbath.' And again, in the same chapter, read, 'For Jesus conveyed Himself away' (ἐξέλευσεν); that is, so soon as this discussion between the Jews and the healed man arose,—not, 'and conveyed Himself away' previously, as our Version would imply.—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on Authorized Version, p. 98.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Jean. v. 20; vol. viii. p. 944.

^a Hath committed all judgment unto the Son (τὴν κρίσιν πάντων δέδωκε τῷ υἱῷ).—Πάντων is quite appropriately placed immediately before δέδωκε, as it belongs to it. He gave it to Him not in part, but all.—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 379.

^b He that heareth My word, &c. (ὁ τὸν λόγον μου ἀκούων).

—"The continuous action of faith is very strikingly shown in the fifth chapter of S. John, where our Saviour, in the original Greek, almost invariably uses the present active participle when speaking of the relations between Himself and the believer. It is not as in our Version, 'He that believeth in Me;' 'He that eateth My flesh and drinketh My blood;' 'He that cometh unto Me;' but he believing in Me, eating My flesh and drinking My blood, coming unto Me; all indicating that the specific act is continuous, not performed once and then over for ever, but always going on. Believing in Christ, coming to Him, eating His flesh and drinking His blood, is no mere transient act, but a habit. Faith is an active, continuous habit of the soul: it is the constant expression of life, and life is eternal."—MACMILLAN on the 'True Vine,' p. 256.

come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life.

Life and death are words that are constantly used by the sacred writers, and especially by S. John, without any reference to the separation of the soul from the body. They rather refer to the union between the soul and God, which is the fruit of the Incarnation, and which can only be obtained by a belief in the Incarnation. The Evangelist has already said (i. 4) that in Jesus "was life, and the life was the light of men;" and that "as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (i. 12, 13). He who believes, with of course all the obedience which a sincere belief implies, in God the Father and in His Son, whom He hath sent, has passed out of the state of death, out of the condition in which the soul is dead through sin and unbelief, into the life of grace, which will gradually be matured into the life of glory hereafter.

25. Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live.

*S. omits and now is: S^a, and when they hear, they shall live.
Vulg. Amen, amen, dico vobis, quia venit hora, et nunc est, quando mortui audient vocem Filii Dei; et qui audierint vivent.*

Jesus passes on from the resurrection of the soul to the resurrection of the body; at first to that exercise of His power to raise the dead, which He showed during His ministry in the case of Jairus's daughter, the widow's son, and Lazarus, indicated, as some think, by the words "the hour cometh, and now is." Then in verse 28 He refers to the general resurrection preceding the Day of Judgment.

26. For as the Father hath life in Himself; so hath He given to the Son^a to have life in Himself;

27. And hath given Him authority to execute judgment also, because He is the Son of Man.^b

S. A. omits also.

Vulg. Et potestatem dedit ei iudicium facere, quia Filius hominis est.

^a So hath He given to the Son.—If both natures [the Divine and human] do remain with their properties in Christ thus distinct, as hath been showed, we are, for our better understanding which either nature receiveth from other, to note that Christ is by three degrees a receiver: first, in that He is the Son of God; secondly, in that His human nature hath had the honour of union with Deity bestowed upon it; thirdly, in that by means thereof sundry eminent graces have flowed as effects from Deity into that nature which is coupled with it. On Christ, therefore, there is bestowed the gift of eternal generation, the gift of union and the gift of union.

"By the gift of eternal generation Christ hath received of the Father one and in number the selfsame substance (Hilary, de Trinit. v. 37; vol. ii. p. 155, Migne;—Rufinus, in Symb. Apost. cap. 6; p. 346;—Tertullian, adv. Prax. 4; vol. ii. p. 159), which the Father hath of Himself unreceived from any other. For every beginning is a Father (Ephes. iii. 15, Vulgate;—Tertullian, adv. Prax. 8; vol. ii. p. 163) unto that which cometh of it; and every offspring is a Son unto that out of which it groweth. Seeing therefore the Father alone is originally (James i. 17;—Pachym. in Dionys. de coelo, Hierar. i.; ed. Corder, i. p. 10;—August. de Trinit. iv. 29; vol. ii. p. 908, Migne) that Deity which Christ originally (Tertullian, adv. Prax. 9; vol. ii. p. 164) is not—for Christ is God by being of God (Hilary, de Trinit. v. 39; vol. ii. p. 156;—iv. 10; vol. ii. p. 103), light by issuing out of light—it followeth hereupon that whatsoever Christ hath common unto Him with His heavenly Father (Hilary, de Syn. sect. 22; vol. ii. p. 497;—Vincent, Liv. cap. 19), the same of necessity must be given Him, but naturally and eternally given (Hilary, de Trinit. xii. 21; vol. ii. p. 446;—Augustine, de Trinit. v. 15; vol. viii. p. 921), not bestowed by way of benevolence and favour, as the other gifts both are. And therefore where the Fathers give it out as a rule (Athanassius, de Incarnat. contr. Arian. 4; vol. ii. p. 989, Migne;—Greg. Nazian. Oratio ii. de Filio, 9; vol. ii. p. 113), that whatsoever Christ is said in Scripture to have received, the same we ought to apply only to the Manhood of Christ; their assertion is true of all things which Christ hath received by grace, but to that which He hath received of the Father by natural nativity or birth it reacheth not." [He then goes on to treat of the gift of union, and the gift of union.]—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.' v. 54, l. 2; vol. ii. p. 231.

"The Father being here said to have given to the Son to have life in Himself, He is therefore by the ancients called causa, principium, origo, fons, radix, Fili et Deibatis, as Athanasius (Quest. alia, xi.; vol. i. p. 784, inter dubia, Migne); Pater principium, non de principio, Fides principium de principio (Augustine, contr. Maxim. ii. 17, 4; vol. viii. p. 784, Migne;—Basil, contr. Eunom. ii. 12; vol. i. p. 593, Migne;—Cyril Alex. in Joan. i. 1; vol. vi. p. 28, Migne). In the Florentine Council many of these titles were put together (Ses. 25, Hard. Conc. i. p. 379). Yea, and He is called the Head, too, as S. Cyril of Alexandria, Ad Regim. Epist. i. [vol. iv. par. ii. de recta fide, p. 64]: all plainly intimating that the whole Divinity, both of the Son and Spirit, was communicated from the Father: 'Fons ergo et origo totius divinitatis ipse est' (Concil. Tolet. xi.; vol. iii. p. 1020).

"Though the Father be here said to give to the Son to have life in Himself, yet seeing it is here said, He hath life in Himself as well as the Father, hence it is that as the ancients asserted the Son to have received His Divine essence from the Father, so they asserted also that He hath it wholly and perfectly in Himself, and therefore do they call Him Altogether, as Gregory Nyssen (in Catech. Mag. i.; vol. ii. p. 13, Migne);—Basil (adv. Eunom. ii. sect. 25; vol. i. p. 629, Migne) clearly intimating, that though He had His Divine life and nature from the Father, as the fountain of Deity, yet He received it not by participation, but by communication; He did not only participate of it, but it was wholly communicated unto Him." [In proof of this Bishop Beveridge quotes Athanasius (Oratio contr. Gentes, sect. 46; vol. i. p. 94, Migne); Theodoret (contr. Anathem. iv. Cyrill. v. p. 12, Magdeburg); Eusebius (Evangel. demons. iv. 12); Origen (contr. Cels. iii. 41; vol. i. p. 973, Migne); S. Chrysostom, Damascena (de orthod. Fide, i. 8); S. Epiphanius (Heres. lxxvii. 35; vol. ii. p. 693, Migne); Eusebius (Hist. Eccl. x. 4; vol. ii. p. 856); S. Augustine (in Joh. tract. xix. 2; vol. iii. p. 1549;—ad Maxim. Epist. clxx. 5; vol. ii. p. 749, Migne), and Anastasius Sinaita;—BISHOP BEVERIDGE on the 'Thirty-nine Articles,' Art. ii. p. 81.

^b Because He is the Son of Man.—"Some divide this seven-and-twentieth verse, and join the latter part of it, 'because He is the Son of Man,' to the verse following, and read it in this sense and juncture, 'Because He is the Son of Man, marvel not at this'—that is, Marvel not at this that I speak, although ye see Me to be a Man, &c. And thus readeth the Syriac and Chrysostom, and some that follow him. . . . As for the pointing that we follow, Jesus Christ will raise the dead because He is God and One with the Father, who is the source of Life; but He will judge the world not because He is God, but because He is Man. The Head of man will judge man; He who came to save man will also be the Judge of man.

From what He had already said about the resurrection, where some should rise and others not, "when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live,"—from this Jesus passes on to a subject of still greater wonder, to the great Day of Resurrection, where all would rise, both those that had done good and those that had done evil, and He introduces His statement with the words "Marvel not."

28. Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice, joining the clause 'because He is the Son of Man' to the words preceding and not to those that follow, it is plainly cleared and asserted by the very sense and construction of the place itself. And withal it hath this consent and concurrence of antiquity in the words of Beza, 'ut plane appareat Latinam Ecclesiam semper ite legisse. Consentunt veteres omnes Græci codices quos videmus. Cyrillus quoque non aliter distinguit.' To which I may add the Arabic pointeth as we do.—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' S. John v.; vol. i. p. 663.

29. And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life;^a and they that have done evil,^b unto the resurrection of damnation.

^a Unto the resurrection of life.—"The genitive may be called the whence-case. Its import is that of issuing out of, or proceeding from. The genitive, especially in the writings of John and Paul, denotes internal relations still more remote, as John v. 29, ἀνάστασις ζωῆς, κρίσις, resurrection to life, resurrection to condemnation."—WISER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 201.

^b Evil.—"That which is morally evil may be contemplated on two sides and from two points of view; either on the side of its positive malignity, its will and power to work mischief, or else on that of its negative worthlessness and, so to speak, its good-for-nothingness. Πορνεία contemplates evil from the former point of view, and φαῖλος from the latter.

"... There are words in most languages, and φαῖλος is one of them, which contemplate evil under the aspect of its good-for-nothingness, the impossibility of any true gain ever coming from it. Thus 'nequam' (in strictness opposite to 'frugi') and 'nequitia' in Latin, 'vaurien' in French, 'naughty' and 'naughtiness' in English, 'taugenichts, schlecht, schlechtheit' in German. This notion of worthlessness is the central notion of φαῖλος (by some identified with 'foul,' foul), which in Greek runs successively through the following meanings: light, unstable, blown about by every wind, small, slight, mediocre, of no account, worthless, bad; but still bad predominantly in the sense of worthless.

"Φαῖλος, as used in the New Testament, has reached this latest stage of its meaning; and τὰ φαῖλα πράσσοντες, are set over against τὰ ἀγαθὰ ποιῶντες, and condemned as such to the 'resurrection of damnation' (John v. 29).—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 302.

^c I can of Mine own self do nothing.—"I have shown by many and clear testimonies the consent of primitive antiquity with the Fathers of the Council of Nice on these four heads: first, that Christ our Lord in His higher nature existed before His Birth of

Before, when speaking of a resurrection, but not the general resurrection of the Last Day, He says, "The hour is coming and now is;" here, when speaking of the general resurrection, which was future, He says, "The hour is coming," and omits the words "and now is." In many places of Holy Scripture where the general resurrection of the body is mentioned the good only are expressly named as rising. In Dan. xii. 2, it is directly asserted that the bodies of the unjust as well as of the just shall rise again. This passage of S. John and Acts xxiv. 15 are the only places in the New Testament where the resurrection of the unjust is expressly declared. In many passages it is implied with more or less of fullness.

30. I can of Mine own self do nothing:^c as I hear, I judge: and My judgment is just: because I seek not Mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent Me.^d

S.V.A. omit the Father.

S^t. omits and: S.V.A. of Him that hath sent Me.

Jesus had before reasoned that His work of healing the impotent man on the Sabbath day must be right, because the most blessed Virgin Mary, and, further, before the creation of the world, and that through Him all things were made; secondly, that in that very nature He is of one substance with God the Father, that is, that He is not of any created and mutable essence, but of a nature entirely the same with the Father, and consequently very God; thirdly, which is a consequence of this, that He is co-eternal with God the Father, that is, a Divine Person co-existing with the Father from everlasting; lastly, that He Himself is, nevertheless, subordinate to God the Father, as to His Author and Principle.—BISHOP BULL, 'Defence of the Nicene Creed,' vol. ii. p. 655.

"The Catholic doctors, both those who preceded and those who lived after the Council of Nice, with unanimous consent determined that God the Father, even in respect of His Divinity, is greater than the Son; that is to say, not in nature indeed, or in any essential perfection as being in the Father and not in the Son; but in authorship alone, that is to say, in origin; forasmuch as the Son is from the Father, not the Father from the Son.

"In this proposition we assert two things: first, that the ancients laid down that God the Father, even in respect of Godhead, is greater than the Son; secondly, that they taught, nevertheless, that the Father is greater than the Son only as regards origin, but in respect of nature both are equal. . . .

"When the Son is said to be the next and second after the Father and the Minister of the Father, the subordination of the Persons is expressed, so far forth as One has His origin from the Other, not any difference or inequality of nature in the Divine Persons. The Father, as Father, is first in the most Holy Trinity, the Son is second after the Father. In all the Divine operations the Son is the Minister of the Father, in that He works from God the Father (who is the fountain and origin, as of the Divine Essence, so also of all the Divine operations), and God the Father works through Him; not God the Father from Him, or He through the Father."—Ibid. vol. ii. p. 571, &c.

^d As I hear, I judge, &c.—"Our Saviour seemeth in these words to allude to two customs and traditions of the Jews, and to plead with them from their own principles.

"(1) The Talmudic tract Sanhedrin, speaking concerning men's inquiring of the judicatories in matters of difficulty, hath this tradition: 'They ask first of the Sanhedrin in their own city. If they had heard it, they resolve them. If not, they go to a San-

God, who was His own Father, had ever since the Creation continued to work on the Sabbath day. He now teaches the Jews that His judgment, at the Day of Judgment as well as at all other times, must be right, because He will only judge as He hears of the Father. "I can of Mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge." This is so, not from any inability, not from any deficiency of power, but from their inseparability of nature.¹ They are One; God the Father and Jesus His Son, God Incarnate, are One. They cannot therefore give differing or opposite judgments.

A knowledge of the unity between the Persons in the Godhead can only be apprehended by man partially, according to his finite capacity to receive it and the limited power of language to convey it. Man's senses are the limits of his knowledge. It is therefore by words derived from the senses that Jesus chiefly imparts to the Jews a knowledge of the unity between the Persons in the Godhead as being the only way in which they could comprehend it. In every variety of phrase, in this very conversation with the Jews, Jesus has expressed His Equality, His Oneness with the Father. For instance, "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but only what He seeth the Father do: for what things soever He doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise" (verse 19). "The Father loveth the Son, and sheweth Him all things that Himself doeth" (verse 20). "As the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom He will" (verse 21). "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son" (verse 22). "That all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son honoureth not the Father which hath sent Him" (verse 23). "As the Father hath Life in Himself; so hath He given to the Son to have Life in Himself" (verse 26). "I can of Mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: I seek not Mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent Me" (verse 30).

Jesus anticipates the objection which He knew the Jews would make to all that He had just said. He knew that they would urge that His own witness of Himself was not true, not legal, not admissible in evidence. He therefore turns from His own witness and adduces three kinds of evidence, which, even in their eyes, ought to be above all suspicion. God the Father had borne witness to Him when, at His Baptism, a voice came from heaven, saying, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. iii. 17). John the Baptist had borne witness to Him when he cried, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John i. 29). Surely the Baptist was a man whom they could believe. Such had been their admiration for his holiness and zeal in the service of God, that they themselves had sent to inquire of him if he were not the Christ. They had been willing for a season to rejoice in his light, to pride themselves in the holiness of his life and in the purity of his teaching; they were willing to believe that he was the Christ; but when he reproved their sins and bore witness that Jesus of Nazareth, the carpenter's son as they thought, was the Christ, and that he himself was only sent to bear witness of Him, and was unworthy to stoop down and unloose the latchet of His shoe—then they despised him. But Jesus did not require the witness of John. The works that He was daily working in the midst of them were sufficient of themselves to prove that He was God. He produced the evidence of John because they looked upon him as a holy man and worthy of all credence. To remove every possible ground of prejudice against Him, and in order that they may believe in Him and be saved, He recalls to their recollection the testimony that John had given that He was the Christ. John bore witness unto the truth, but if John's witness could be suspected of undue favour towards Him the miracles that He wrought among men could not. They must prove that the Father hath sent Him.

31. If I bear witness of Myself, My witness is not true.

32. ¶ There is another that beareth witness of Me; and I know that the witness which he witnesseth of Me is true.

S. and ye know.
Vulg. et scio.

33. Ye sent unto John, and he bare witness unto the truth.

34. But I receive not testimony from man: but these things I say, that ye might be saved.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. v. 30; vol. vi. p. 385.
Euthymius, in Joan. v. 30; vol. iv. p. 199.

hedrin near their city. If they had heard it, they resolve them. If not, they go to that in the gate of the Mountain of the House. If they had heard it, they resolve them; &c. (Perek 11), where by the words, "If they had heard," they mean if the Sanhedrin had heard by tradition what was to be the determination of such a matter, they judge accordingly; but if they had not heard, then the last recourse was to the great Sanhedrin of seventy-one, which was the very treasury of traditions. Christ being come now before the Sanhedrin, seemeth here to speak to them according to their own rule, "As ye judge according as ye hear and receive by tradition, so I judge as I hear." &c.

"(2) Rambam, in his tract about Messengers and Partners, and the Talmudists occasionally, in the treatises about contracts, espousals, &c., conclude this for a maxim, that a messenger that doeth that upon which he is sent, all his acts are good in law, &c. Upon this very ground Christ's arguing here is clear and pregnant, and cometh home to their own position. "My judging is just, because I being sent of the Father do not Mine own will, but do the errand that He sent Me upon, and do His will."—LIGHTFOOT, "Harmony of the Four Evangelists," S. John v.; vol. i. p. 680.

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. v. 30, tract. xxii.; vol. iii. p. 1581.
S. Chrysostom, in Joan. v. 30; Homil. xxxix.

35. He was a burning and a shining light: and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light.

*S. omits and before ye.
Vulg. Ille erat lucerna ardens, et lucens; vos autem voluistis ad horam exultare in luce ejus.*

36. ¶ But I have greater witness than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given Me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of Me, that the Father hath sent Me.

Jesus appeals to the miracles which He wrought as proving that He was the Messiah, the Son of God. Apart from the witness of the Baptist, and even above this, the miracles which He was working among them were of such a nature as to convince any but the most hardened and unfair that He was God. They were wrought with the purpose of proving this, and they proclaimed, as plainly as a voice from heaven, that He was God. He wrought the very same miracles which the prophet foretold that God, who should come amongst them, would work. Isaiah had said, "Behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompence; He will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing," &c. (Is. xxxv. 4-6). Some of the prophets or holy men of old occasionally wrought miracles, but none ever wrought such miracles as Jesus, or so many in number. When the prophets wrought miracles, they never professed to do so in their own name or by their own power. The miracles which the prophets wrought were their credentials to man that they were God's servants. But the miracles which Jesus wrought were always in His own name and by His own power, and were appealed to by Him as proving that He was God, One with the Father and Equal to the Father. Some of His miracles had a peculiar relation to Himself, as, for instance, His Birth of the Blessed Virgin, the foretelling His Death and Passion, His Resurrection and Ascension, the Descent of the Holy Spirit upon His disciples, &c. We might have supposed that if this or that individual miracle had failed to convince them that Jesus was God, the ever-existing, ever-active power in Him to work miracles would have had its due effect on them. But the fault was in the heart, not in the reason.

37. And the Father Himself, which hath sent Me, hath borne witness of Me. Ye have neither heard His voice at any time, nor seen His shape.^b

*S.V. And the Father, He which hath sent Me.
Vulg. Et qui misit me Pater, ipse testimonium perhibuit de me*

^a He was a burning and a shining light.—More passages than one would gain in perspicuity by a re-arrangement of the words rendered 'light,' 'lamp,' &c., and mainly through the clear distinction between φῶς and λύχνος, which would then be apparent. One of these is John v. 35: 'He was a burning and a shining light.' So our translation; but in the original, ἐκείνος ἦν ὁ λύχνος ὁ καίρουνος καὶ φαῖναι: or, as the Vulgate has it, 'ille erat lucerna ardens et lucens,' not obliterating, as we have done, the whole antithesis between Christ, the φῶς ἀληθινόν (John i. 8), φῶς ἐκ φωτός, that Eternal Light, which, as it was never kindled, so should never be quenched, and the Baptist, a lamp kindled by the hands of Another, in whose brightness men might for a season rejoice, and which was then extinguished again."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on "Synonyms of the New Testament," p. 162.

"Thus rendered, the expression appears as intended simply to glorify John. But this is not the sense which the context requires, and it is only attained by a flagrant disregard of the articles. Commentators have correctly pointed out that John is here called ὁ λύχνος, the lamp; he was not τὸ φῶς, the Light: for Christ Himself, and Christ only, is the Light (i. 9, iii. 19, ix. 5, &c.). Thus the rendering of ὁ λύχνος is vitally wrong, as probably few would deny. But it has not been perceived how much the contrast between the Baptist and the Saviour is strengthened by a proper appreciation of the remaining words, ὁ καίρουνος καὶ φαῖναι. The word καίρειν is to burn, to kindle, to set alight, as in S. Matt. v. 15, οὐδὲ καίρουνος λύχνον. 'Neither do men light a candle: so, too, Luke xii. 35, ὁ λύχνος καίρουνος, Rev. iv. 5, viii. 10.' This it implies that the light is not inherent, but borrowed; and the force of the expression will be, 'He is the lamp that is lighted, and (then) shineth.' Christ Himself is the centre and source of light; the Baptist has no light of his own, but draws all his illumination from this greater One. He is only as the light of a candle, for whose rays, indeed, men are grateful, but which is pale, flickering, transitory, compared with the glories of the Eternal flame from which itself is kindled."—CANON LIGHTFOOT on 'Revelation of the New Testament,' p. 117; ed. 1871.

^b Ye have neither heard His voice at any time, nor seen His shape.—In their view (the primitive doctors), God the Father never was seen, or could be seen of any man, not even through assumed forms. He had not originated from any beginning, nor was He subject to any one; nor can He be said to have been sent by another, any more than to have been begotten of another. On the contrary, the Son of God, in that He is begotten of God the Father, on that ground at least is indebted to the Father for all His authority, and it is no less honourable to Him to be sent by the Father than to be begotten of the Father. He is of the Father; through Him the Father created all things which are in the world; moreover through Him He afterwards revealed Himself to the world. In the most Holy Trinity, although there is no disparity of nature between the Father and the Son, yet is there certainly a kind of order, according to which the Father is the principle and head of the Son; which order would be inverted if the administration of the universe were effected by the Son through the Father, not by the Father through the Son. To come more closely to the objection proposed; the primitive Fathers used to refer those manifestations of God which were made to holy men of old, in all cases, to the economy or dispensation of human salvation; which dispensation they thought that the Son of God had undertaken not then for the first time when He came in the flesh, but from the very fall of the first man, as has been shown above; but that same dispensation they thought altogether alien from God the Father. For on the same ground that, in opposition to the Patripassians, the Catholic Church of Christ ever acknowledged that the Incarnation, which the Son took on Him, became not God the Father; on the same ground those ancients asserted, that the manifestations of which we speak were suited to the Son and not to the Father, inasmuch as they were in reality preludes of the Incarnation. That this was the very meaning of those ancient writers two things prove: first, they all in many other passages allow that the Son, as well as the Father, is in His nature indeed immeasurable and invisible; in the next place, most of them do themselves expressly interpret these statements of themselves of the

38. And ye have not His word abiding in you: for whom He hath sent, Him ye believe not.

39. ¶ Search the Scriptures;^a for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of Me.

Vulg. Scrutaminī scripturas.

The word ἐπευῶνται, rendered "search," may be either in the indicative or in the imperative mood. Most¹ of the early commentators interpret it in the imperative; but² one, and apparently only one, regards it as in the indicative mood, and he contends that the context requires it to be understood in this sense.

40. And ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life.

The difficulty of connecting the train of thought in this passage is shown by the number of interpretations that have been given to it. In the following an attempt has been made to keep as close to the text as possible:—Jesus enumerates the various sources of belief in Him, the different kinds of testimony there were that He was God. First, there was the witness of John the Baptist, and, greater than that, there was the evidence of His own miracles, and there was also the witness of the Father. All these had so far failed to produce in the Jews a belief in Jesus as the Son of God. They

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. v. 39; Homil. xli.

Theophylact, in Joan. v. 39; vol. i. p. 579.

Euthymius, in Joan. v. 39; vol. iv. p. 211.

S. Augustine, in Joan. v. 39, tract. xlviii.; vol. iii. p. 1583.

V. Bede, in Joan. v. 39; vol. iii. p. 702. [Jansenius,

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxxvi. p. 246.

Maldonatus, in Joan. v. 39; vol. ii. p. 580.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. v. 39; vol. viii. p. 951.

² S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. v. 39; vol. vi. p. 420.

economy."—BISHOP BULL, 'Defence of the Nicene Creed,' vol. ii. p. 598.

"It is most manifest that whenever those doctors of the Church who wrote before the rise of the Arian heresy argue that it was not God the Father but the Son who appeared under the Old Testament, and in the fulness of time became incarnate, on the ground that the Father is immeasurable, and is not included in space, and is invisible, so that He can be seen of none, they by no means meant to deny that the Son of God, equally with the Father, is in His own nature immeasurable and invisible; but merely intimated this, that all such appearances of God, and also the incarnation itself, had reference to the economy which the Son of God undertook; which economy is by no means suited to the Father, inasmuch as He had not His origin from any beginning, and is indebted for His authorship to none. And in this point most of the Catholic Fathers who lived after the Council of Nice agreed with them."—Ibid. vol. ii. p. 615.

"We join Petavius in embracing as probable the rule of Alphonsus Tostatus; namely, that some events are recorded in the Scriptures which are either of less importance or relate to some one or a few persons; whereas others are marked and distinguished, or pertain to the use of the whole people: that in the former case mere angels were the ministers, and that Scripture has so described them, as not to give any intimation of the presence of any divine person; but that events of the latter class were transacted by God, and are accordingly so described as to make it appear that not a mere angel intervened, but that through him God did, or spoke, what it pleased Him. And this we hold to be the surest indication of the Divine presence, when He, who appears and speaks openly, professes that He is God, or He that is, or the God of Abraham, &c., or the God of their fathers, and requires worship and the adoration due to God to be given to Him; which, as we know, was done by Him who spoke to Moses out of the bush, and to the children of Israel on Mount Sinai. At the same time we firmly maintain that wherever it is evident that God Himself, and not a mere angel, appeared, there is to be understood not the Father but the Son; herein religiously following the consentient judgment of primitive antiquity."—Ibid. vol. ii. p. 624.

"Nor seen His face (εἶδος αὐτοῦ); εἶδος also in Gen. xxxii. 30, 31, Sept., where translated 'face' A. V., though in John v. 'shape' . . . It would seem as if there are a certain class of words, all expressive of the One Divine Substance, which admit of more appropriate application, either ordinarily or under circumstances, to this or that Divine Person who is also that One Substance. Thus 'Being' is more descriptive of the Father as the πρῆν θεότητος, and He is said to be 'the Being of the Son;' yet the Son is really the One Supreme Being also. On the other hand, the word 'form,' μορφή, and 'face,' εἶδος, are rather descriptive of the Divine Substance in the Person of the Son, and He is called 'the form' and 'the face' of the Father, yet there is but one Form and Face of Divinity, who is at once Each of Three Persons; while 'Spirit' is appropriated to the Third Person, though God is a Spirit. Thus, again, S. Hippolytus says, ἐκ [τοῦ πατρὸς] δύναμις λόγος, yet shortly before, after mentioning the Two Persons, he adds, δύναμις δὲ ὑἱός, contr. Noët. 7 and 11. And thus the word 'Subsistence,' ὑπόστασις, which expresses the One Divine Substance, has been found more appropriate to express that Substance viewed personally. Other words may be used correlatively of either Father or Son; thus the Father is the Life of the Son, the Son the Life of the Father; or, again, the Father is in the Son and the Son in the Father. Others in common, as the Father's Godhead is the Son's, ἡ πατρική υἱὸν θεότης, as indeed the word οὐσία itself. Other words, on the contrary, express the Substance in this or that Person only, as 'Word,' 'Image,' &c."—DR. J. H. NEWMAN on S. Athanasius; 'Library of the Fathers,' vol. viii. p. 424.

"As it is found in John v. 37, εἶδος may be interpreted of the Divine Essence or of Person; the Vulgate translates it 'neque speciem ejus vidistis.'—Idem, 'Theological Tracts,' p. 307.

"Search the Scriptures (ἐπευῶνται τὰς γραφάς).—"I rather construe it in the indicative sense, 'ye search the Scriptures,' upon these reasons. 1. Because of what is said in the verse itself, 'Ye think ye have eternal life in them;' in which words our Saviour intendeth not so much to show what they might have in the Scriptures, for then it had been proper to have said, 'In them ye may have eternal life,' as He meaneth to touch upon the erroneous conceit of the Jews, who thought they obtained eternal life by the study of the law ex opere operato. 2. Because of the context in the verse following, which lieth far fairer in this sense, 'Ye study the Scriptures scrupulously, and they are they that testify of Me, and yet ye will not come unto Me—than taken thus: Search ye the Scriptures, for they testify of Me, and ye will not come to Me.'—LIGHT-FOOT, 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' John v.; vol. i. p. 664.

"Besides, consider—1. That Christ is speaking to the doctors of the Sanhedrin, the most acute, diligent, and curious searchers of the Scripture of all the nation—men that made that their glory and employment; and howsoever it was their arrogance that they thought their skill in Scripture more than indeed it was, yet was their diligence and scrupulousness in it real and constant even to admiration. It was exceedingly in fashion among the nation to be great Scripture men, but especially the great masters of the Sanhedrin were reputed as the very foundations of the law and pillars would not come to Him, that they might have life. But there was one source of belief in Him still left. If they would be saved, if they would inherit eternal life, He bids them search the Scriptures—the writings of the Old Testament. In the Scriptures they think they have eternal life; but they do not suppose, as they will find on a close investigation, that eternal life consists in believing in Jesus as the Son of God. They must not expect any communication from the Father except through the Son. Such had never been the case. No man hath at any time heard His voice or seen His shape. In bidding them search the Scriptures in order to obtain eternal life, our Saviour again bears witness to the general accuracy of the Scriptures as received by the Jews in His time.

The object of Jesus was not to gain honour from man, but this was the great object of the Jews, and it was this that kept them from believing in Him. This same want of love towards God, the same longing for the applause of men, which had influenced them to reject Jesus, though He had come in His Father's name to perform His Father's will and to fulfil the promises made unto them by His Father, would induce them to receive another, though he should come in his own name, led on by his own ambition and to gain his own ends, and not the glory of God.

41. I receive not honour from men.

A. from man.
Vulg. Claritatem ab hominibus non accipio.

42. But I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you.

43. I am come in My Father's name, and ye receive Me not: if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive.

¹ S. Irenæus, contr. Hæres. v. 25, p. 1191.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. v. 43; Homil. xli.

Theophylact, in Joan. v. 43; vol. i. p. 579.

Euthymius, in Joan. v. 43; vol. iv. p. 215.

S. Ambrose, in Psalm xliii. vers. 6; vol. ii. p. 1100.

of instruction, as Maimony styles them in the treatise Maimon, cap. i. And therefore it cannot be so proper to think that Christ in this clause sets them to the study of the Scripture, upon which they spent all their wits and time already, as confessing their studiousness in Scripture, yet sheweth them how unprofitably they did it and to little purpose.

"2. They did exceeding copiously and accurately observe and take up the prophecies in Scripture that were of the Messiah, and though they missed in expounding some particulars concerning

44. How can ye believe, which receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour that cometh from God only?

V. that cometh from the only cometh from God.
Vulg. et gloriam, quæ a solo Deo est, non queritis.

Some¹ of the ancient writers looked upon verse 43 as a prophetic intimation that, in punishment for their rejection of Jesus as a deceiver, the Jews should be seduced by the arch-deceiver, the Antichrist (2 Thess. ii. 8), and by many who would precede him and partake of his spirit.

45. Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust.

V. there is one that accuseth you to the Father.
Vulg. est qui accusat vos Moyses, in quo speratis.

46. For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed Me: for he wrote of Me.

47. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe My words?

V. how believe ye My words?
Vulg. Si autem illius litteris non creditis, quomodo verbis meis creditis?

At the Day of Judgment, the condemnation of the Jews for refusing to believe in Jesus as the Christ will not be because they disbelieved His own teaching, but because they disbelieved the teaching of Moses, in whom they professed to trust. They looked upon Jesus as a deceiver, and therefore it was not to be expected that they would believe His words; but they regarded Moses as a true prophet, as one to whom God had spoken (ix. 29), and yet they did not believe his teaching respecting Jesus, and this would be the ground of their condemnation.

Rufinus, in Symbol. Apostol. p. 371.

V. Beke, in Joan. v. 43; vol. iii. p. 703.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxxvi. p. 248.

Maldonatus, in Joan. v. 43; vol. ii. p. 582.

Cornelius a Lapide, in 2 Epist. ad Thessal. ii. 10; vol. ix. p. 710.

Him, yet did they well enough know that the Scriptures did testify of Him abundantly.

"3. The word that is used, ἐπευᾶρε, which betokeneth a narrow search, seemeth to be intended purposely to answer the word דרש, which they themselves ascribe to themselves in their unfolding of the Scriptures," &c. &c.—Ibid., vol. i. p. 684.

For reasons in favour of ἐπευᾶρε being in the imperative mood, see McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 712.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES TO CHAPTER VI.

The Lake.—"This lake or sea has had four names, Chinnereth, Gennesareth, Galilee, Tiberias.

"The lake is called Chinnereth in the Old Testament, either from Chinnereth, one of the fenced cities, or from the district, or perhaps from the oval harp-like form of its basin. Now that the real shape of the lake can be seen in our map, the word 'oval' does not apply, but the form is more than ever seen to be harp-like. De Sauley says that in Joshua xi. 2, the Hebrew text has 'south of Chinnereth,' and the Chaldaic text has 'south of Gennesar.' It was called Gennesareth from a town or district on the shore. When the lake is called by St. John (vi. 1), 'The sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias' (the sea of Galilee, of Tiberias), it may be to distinguish this lake from that other sea of Galilee, Lake Hoolah. The earlier Evangelists call it the Lake of Gennesareth, for Tiberias was then a new and unimportant town; but St. John, who wrote later, calls the lake by the name of the town, which had by that time become important."—MACGREGOR, 'The Rob Roy on the Jordan,' p. 322.

"The Sea of Galilee itself is a great hollow, and at the bottom it is about 800 feet depressed into the crust of the earth. The surface of the water is so low, that if St. Paul's Cathedral were set upon the shore, and the lofty spire of Salisbury on the top of that, the summit of this pile would still be lower than the Mediterranean Sea."—IBID. p. 405.

"From north to south the lake is twelve and a half miles long. Across the widest part from Magdala is six and three-quarter miles. Soundings show its depth to be less than 200 feet in any part.

"The length of the lake given by Josephus is 140 stadia, or sixteen miles, which is much too large, unless he means the distance by land, which would then be nearly correct. He gives the breadth as forty stadia, or about four miles and a half, which again is much too small, unless he reckons it from opposite Tiberias, where it is only about four miles and three-quarters.

"Abulfeda gives the length as twelve miles, and the breadth six (Buckingham, p. 345). All modern travellers except Robinson have erred in their estimates, and usually make them too large, but Buckingham gives eight miles long and six miles broad, and says the plain above is ten miles square."—IBID. p. 412.

"The Sea of Galilee has a beauty of its own which would always make it remarkable. The hills, except at Khan Minyeh, where there is a small cliff, are recessed from the shore of the lake, or rise gradually from it; they are of no great elevation, and their outline, especially on the eastern side, is not broken by any prominent peak; but everywhere from the southern end the snow-capped peak of Hermon is visible, standing out so sharp and clear in the bright sky that it appears almost within reach, and towards the north the western ridge is cut through by a wild gorge, 'the Valley of Doves,' over which rise the twin peaks or horns of Hattin. The shore-line, for the most part regular, is broken on the north into a series of little bays of exquisite beauty; nowhere more beautiful than at Gennesareth, where the beaches, pearly white with myriads of minute shells, are on one side washed by the limpid waters of the lake, and on the other shut in by a fringe of oleanders, rich in May with their blossoms red and bright.

"The surrounding hills are of a uniform brown colour, and would be monotonous if it were not for the ever-changing lights and the brilliant tints at sunrise and sunset. It is, however, under the pale light of a full moon that the lake is seen to the greatest advantage, for there is then a softness in the outlines, a calm on the water in which the stars are so brightly mirrored, and a perfect quiet in all around, which harmonize well with the feelings that cannot fail to arise on its shores. It is perhaps difficult to realize that the borders of this lake, now so silent and desolate, were once enlivened by the busy hum of towns and villages; and that on its waters hostile navies contended for supremacy. But there is one feature which must strike every visitor: and that is the harmony of the Gospel narrative with the places which it describes; giving us, as M. Renan happily expresses it, 'un cinquième évangile lacéré, mais lisible encore.'

"The lake is pear-shaped, the broad end being towards the north; the greatest width is six and three-quarter miles, from Mejdal, 'Magdala,' to Khersa, 'Gergesa,' about one-third of the way down, and the extreme length is twelve and a quarter miles. The Jordan enters at the north, a swift muddy stream, colouring the lake a good mile from its mouth, and passes out pure and bright at the south. On the north-western shore of the lake is a plain, two and a half miles long and one mile broad, called by the Bedawin El Gluweir, but better known by its familiar Bible name of Gennesareth; and on the north-east, near Jordan's mouth, is a swampy plain, El Batiliah, now much frequented by wild boars, formerly the scene of a skirmish between the Jews and Romans, in which Josephus met with an accident that necessitated his removal to Capernaum. On the west there is a recess in the hills, containing the town of Tiberias; and on the east, at the mouth of Wady Semakh and Fik, are small tracts of level ground. On the south the fine open valley of the Jordan stretches away towards the Dead Sea, and is covered in the neighbourhood of the lake with luxuriant grass. The water of the lake is bright, clear, and sweet to the taste, except in the neighbourhood of the salt springs, and where it is defiled by the drainage of Tiberias. Its level, which varies considerably at different times of the year, is between 600 and 700 feet below that of the Mediterranean—a peculiarity to which the district owes its genial winter climate. In summer the heat is great, but never excessive, as there is usually a morning and evening breeze. Sudden storms, such as those mentioned in the New Testament, are by no means uncommon. . . .

"There does not appear to be anything volcanic in the origin of the lake, which is simply part of the great Jordan depression. The hills on either side are limestone, capped in places with basalt, which has three distinct sources: one at Kurn Hattin, or in its neighbourhood; another near Khan Jubb Ynsuf, north of the lake, and a third in the Jaulan district. Earthquakes are frequent, and sometimes extremely violent; as, for example, that of 1837, which laid Tiberias in ruins and caused the death of 700 persons; and the scarcely less terrible one which occurred in 1759. There are in the basin of the lake a number of warm springs, which are said to have increased both in volume and temperature after the earthquake of 1837."—'Recovery of Jerusalem,' p. 337.

Storm on the Lake.—"Sudden storms, such as those mentioned in the New Testament, are by no means uncommon; and I had a good opportunity of watching one of them from the ruins of Gamala on the eastern hills. The morning was delightful: a gentle easterly breeze, and not a cloud in the sky to give warning of what was coming. Suddenly, about midday, there was a sound of distant thunder, and a small cloud, 'no bigger than a man's hand,' was seen rising over the heights of Lubieh to the west. In a few moments the cloud appeared to spread, and heavy black masses came rolling down the hills towards the lake, completely obscuring Tabor and Hattin. At this moment the breeze died away; there were a few minutes of perfect calm, during which the sun shone out with intense power, and the surface of the lake was smooth and even as a mirror. Tiberias, Majdel, and other buildings stood out in sharp relief from the gloom behind; but they were soon lost sight of as the thunder gust swept past them, and, rapidly advancing across the lake, lifted the placid water into a bright sheet of foam: in another moment it reached the ruins, driving myself and companion to take refuge in a cistern, where for nearly an hour we were confined, listening to the rattling peals of thunder and torrents of rain. The effect of half the lake in perfect rest, whilst the other half was in wild confusion, was extremely grand: it would have fared badly with any light craft caught in mid-lake by the storm; and we could not help thinking of that memorable occasion on which the storm is so graphically described as 'coming down' upon the lake."—Ibid. p. 340.

"I have seen it lashed into fury for thirty consecutive hours by a tempest that would have wrecked a hundred fleets such as that of Josephus, had they been exposed to its violence."—THOMSON'S 'The Land and the Book,' p. 392.

"On the taking of Taricheæ by Titus—Trajan, Vespasian, and Agrippa being also present—a sharp fight took place with the Jews on the plain outside ('Jewish Wars,' iii. 10, 1-6), and a day or two afterwards there was a sea-fight near the same place. Josephus says that 6500 men were killed in the two engagements, the lake was coloured with blood for some distance round, and the air tainted with the number of bodies on the shore. This was probably the last great display of ships upon this lake.

"Nowadays one single Armstrong gun at Gamala would command the whole Sea of Tiberias."—MACGREGOR, 'The Rob Roy on the Jordan,' p. 353.

The following shows the state of the navy of this sea in various years, according to travellers' statements:—

"In A.D. 1738, Pococke found one boat on the Lake of Gennesareth. In A.D. 1806, Setzen saw one boat, but it was useless; 1812, Burckhardt, the only boat had fallen to pieces in 1811; 1817, Richardson, two boats; 1818, Irby and Mangles, 'no boat whatever'; 1822, Berggren, no boat; 1822, Buckingham, 'not a boat or a raft, large or small'; 1829, Prokesch, no boat; 1834, 1835, Smith, one boat; 1838, Robinson, one boat; 1852, Vandevelde, one; 1856, Newbold, one; 1857, Thomson, no boat, once only in his other visits he saw a sail; 1860, Macgregor, six boats besides the Rob Roy."—Ibid. p. 357.

CHAPTER VI.

[1. Christ feedeth five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes. 15. Thereupon the people would have made Him king. 16. But withdrawing Himself, He walked on the sea to His disciples: 26. reproveth the people flocking after Him, and all the fleshly hearers of His word: 32. declareth Himself to be the Bread of Life to believers. 66. Many disciples depart from Him. 68. Peter confesseth Him. 70. Judas is a devil.]

[Vulg. Quinque panibus et duobus piscibus satiat quinque virorum millia: fugit volentes ipsum facere regem: super mare ad discipulos vento agitato ambulat: de pane celesti docet, quodque ipse sit panis vitæ, et caro ejus cibum quem oporteat manducare, sanguisque ejus potus quem oporteat bibere: quidam discipuli offensi ejus sermone deserunt ipsum, apostoli autem cum eo permanent: quorum tamen unum dicit esse diabolum.]

In the last event recorded by S. John, Jesus was at Jerusalem. But as this was nearly twelve months ago, it is impossible to conclude from what point the Evangelist means to say that Jesus started when He went over the sea of Tiberias; whether it was from the west side of the sea to the east, or from the east to the west; or whether he only meant to say that Jesus went over from one part to another on the same side of the sea. As this sea or lake is full of bays and sinuities, it is more than probable that the latter is the meaning of the expression; for the other Evangelists imply that the people followed Him on foot from one city to another, while He went by sea, which they could do much more easily if He crossed over from one city to another on the same side of the lake, than if He crossed over from the west side to the east, or from the east to the west. Josephus¹ used the expression "crossed over" (διεπραιώθη) in a similar sense, and with reference to this very lake, namely of going by sea from one place to another on the same side of the lake.

For verses 1-13 see also S. Matthew, ch. xiv., page 247.

1. After these things Jesus went over the sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias.^a

2. And a great multitude followed Him, because they saw His miracles which He did on them that were diseased.

S.V.A. they saw the miracles.

Vulg. quia videbant signa quæ faciebat super his qui infirmabantur.

¹ Josephus, Life, sect. 59; vol. ii. p. 934.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. liii. p. 452.

Maldonatus, in Joan. vi. 1; vol. ii. p. 585.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. vi. 1; vol. viii. p. 954.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. xiv.-xlvii.; vol. i. pp. 221-235. [Greswell,

3. And Jesus went up into a mountain, and there He sat with His disciples.

S. went into: S*. omits there.

Vulg. Subit ergo in montem Jesus: et ibi sedebat cum discipulis suis.

4. And the Passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh.

The event which S. John is about to relate took place "after these things," but not immediately after, for nearly a whole year elapsed between the events recorded in chap. v. and those in chap. vi.² The healing of the impotent man on the Sabbath day, and our Lord's defence of it to the Jews, took place at the beginning of the second year of His ministry (v. 1); and the feeding of the five thousand about the end of the same year (vi. 4). S. John omits almost all the transactions of the second year. During the second year Jesus chooses His twelve Apostles, He delivers His Sermon on the Mount, and He sends the Twelve to preach the Gospel. S. John records none of these, and probably for the reason that they had been fully related by the other Evangelists. He refers to other miracles that were wrought on them that were diseased (vi. 2), and selects this, though it is related by the other three Evangelists quite as fully as by himself. The reason probably is³ that the feeding of the five thousand with five barley loaves and two fishes gave occasion to Jesus for His discourse on the Bread which gives life to the soul

Greswell, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. xxiii.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. 22-61.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, pp. 29-67.

McTear, New Testament, pp. 554-569.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lviii. p. 455.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. vi. 1; vol. viii. p. 955.

^a The sea of Galilee, &c. (ἡ θάλασσα τῆς Γαλιλαίας, τῆς Τιβεριάδος, &c.) The sea of Galilee, of Tiberias. That sea only once again occurs under that name in John xxi. 1. Probably for the sake of foreign readers, John annexed the more definite to the more general designation. Βεζαία in hoc, takes a different view. Kühnol's conjecture, that the word Τιβεριάδος is a gloss, is rash.

The explanation proposed by Paulus—near Tiberias—if not at variance with classic Greek, is at least opposed to the diction of the New Testament, which, in such circumstances, prefers to the combination by cases alone, more explicit phraseology for the use of prepositions. Τιβεριάδος cannot depend on the ἀπό in ἀπῆλθεν." —WINE'S Grammar of the New Testament, p. 205.

here and life to the soul and body hereafter for ever, which discourse none of the other Evangelists had recorded.

It has been observed¹ that in the following miracle as related by each of the four Evangelists there are several slight verbal differences, but that on every point of importance all the four historians are entirely and absolutely agreed. Until the last week in our Lord's life, the language of S. John is only in a single instance parallel with that of the other Gospels, and that is in the account of the feeding of the five thousand and of the accompanying incidents.

5. ¶ When Jesus then lifted up His eyes, and saw a great company come unto Him, He saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?

6. And this He said to prove him: for He Himself knew what He would do.

for: S. but.
Vulg. Hoc autem dicebat tentans eum: ipse enim sciebat quid esset fac-turus.

7. Philip answered Him, Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little.

S. Then Philip answered: S. omits for them: S.V.A. omits of them.
Vulg. Respondit ei Philippus: Ducentorum denariorum panes non sufficient eis, ut unusquisque.

8. One of His disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto Him,

9. There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many?

Vulg. duos pisces.

Jesus receives the multitudes and heals their sick, and when evening draws on His disciples urge Him to send them away, that they may go and buy themselves food. He bids the disciples supply them with food, and appeals personally to Philip, with the question, "Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat? This He said to prove him: for He Himself knew what He would do." Some² have thought that He thus called Philip's special attention to the miracle as proving that He was God, because Philip had before called Him the son of Joseph (i. 45), and because he was backward in comprehending this truth; or because Philip had been one of those most urgent for Him to send the multitudes away; or because this happened in the desert near Bethsaida, Philip's own city; or it may have been because he was of a frank, open disposition, and would therefore give a ready answer.

The mention of purchasing two hundred pennyworth of bread suggests the probability that these five barley loaves and two fishes were purchased, and that the "lad here" did not belong to the Apostles or to their party.³

10. And Jesus said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand.

S. omits An: S. about three thousand.
Vulg. Dixit ergo Jesus . . . numero quasi quinque millia.

11. And Jesus took the loaves; and when He had given thanks, He distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down; and likewise of the fishes as much as they would.

V.A. Therefore Jesus: S. and gave thanks and gave to them that were set down: V.A. omits to the disciples, and the disciples.
Vulg. Acceptit ergo Jesus panes: et cum gratias egisset, distribuit discipulis.

Nothing that is related in the account of this miracle is too trifling or too minute in its nature to be observed. Much is recorded, not only for its historical value because it really took place, but because it forms a prophetic precedent, so to speak.

Before the five loaves and the two fishes were distributed, they were brought to Jesus, and, looking up to heaven, He returned thanks to the Father, He blessed them and brake them. Then, in all probability, it was that He imparted to them the power to multiply, not a physical power, not according to the ordinary working of nature, but a miraculous, superhuman power. He who at the Creation could give to the seed when placed in the ground the power to multiply itself, could by blessing the bread and distributing it with His own hands impart to it the power to multiply at His will. He distributes the bread thus miraculously multiplied to the multitude through the hands of His twelve Apostles, who had been called in the interval between the healing of the impotent man, the last event recorded by S. John, and this miracle of feeding the five thousand with five barley loaves and two fishes.

Jesus prayed or gave thanks to the Father before performing this miracle.⁴ He did this, not because He had not power of Himself to work the miracle, as is clear from one single reflection. He did not pray or give thanks before all His miracles, but only before some of them. He sometimes

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. vi. 5; Homil. xlii.
² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evangel. ii. 45, 46; vol. iii. p. 1124, &c.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. vi. 5; Homil. xlii.
⁴ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. vi. 5, 6; vol. vi. p. 444.
Theophylact, in Joan. vi. 5; vol. i. p. 582.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lvii. p. 455.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. vi. 5; vol. viii. p. 955.

² Euthymius, in Matt. xiv. 17; vol. ii. p. 587.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lvii. p. 455.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xiv. 17; vol. viii. p. 294.
⁴ For the following paragraph, see
S. Chrysostom, in Matt. Homil. xlix.; vol. ii. p. 45.
S. Thomas Aquinas, Sum. iii. quest. 43, art. 2; vol. iv. p. 390.

prayed before He performed some of those which, humanly speaking, were less difficult, and He did not pray before those which to us appear more difficult. For instance, when He forgave the sins of the man sick of the palsy, when He gave away Paradise to the thief on the cross, when He raised the widow's son, when He calmed the raging of the sea, when He revealed the secret thoughts of men's hearts, when He cured the eyes of the blind, He used no prayer to His Father before performing any of these works. But all these were miracles which none could work but God or one sent by God. The reason why Jesus prayed to His Father before performing His miracles, as He sometimes did, was that it was done for our sakes, to teach us that He was One with the Father, that He was sent by the Father and was working the works of the Father.

By being seated in companies by hundreds and by fifties (Mark vi. 40), the number of the multitude could be more easily ascertained, order would be preserved among them, and the wants of each would thus be better supplied.

12. When they were filled, He said unto His disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost.

13. Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten.

For verses 14-21 see also S. Matthew, ch. xiv., page 250.

14. Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world.

S. the miracle that He did : V. the miracles which He did.
Vulg. Illi ergo homines cum viderent quod Iesus fecerat signum.

The twelve baskets are first mentioned when the fragments are gathered up, but it is probable that Jesus brake the five loaves and two fishes into the baskets, and in breaking multiplied them, and then gave the baskets to the twelve Apostles, one to each, to distribute the bread among the people. The bread would be first distributed from the twelve baskets ; and after the five thousand had eaten, the fragments would be gathered into the same twelve baskets, and thus the miraculous nature of the action would be made to appear more striking.

The multitudes were honest in their conclusion that He who could perform such a miracle must be the Messiah, the Prophet, but their conception of the Messiah was of too gross and earthly a nature. They saw that He could multiply the bread at His will, and they wished to have for their king one who could thus supply the daily wants of their body. They had probably no care for the Messiah, except as one who had unlimited power to relieve their hunger.

15. ¶ When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take Him by force, to make Him a king, He departed again into a mountain Himself alone.

S. and take Him by force and appoint Him king, He fleeth again.
Vulg. Iesus ergo cum cognovisset, quia venturi essent ut raperent eum, et facerent eum regem, fugit iterum in montem ipse solus.

16. And when even was now come, His disciples went down unto the sea,

17. And entered into a ship, and went over the sea toward Capernaum. And it was now dark, and Jesus was not come to them.

S. and come over the sea : S.V. Capernaum : S. And the darkness overtook them, and Jesus was not yet come to them.
Vulg. Et cum ascendissent navim, venerunt trans mare in Capernaum : et tenebræ jam factæ erant : et non venerat ad eos Iesus.

18. And the sea arose by reason of a great wind that blew.

19. So when they had rowed about five and twenty or thirty furlongs, they see Jesus walking on the sea, and drawing nigh unto the ship ; and they were afraid.

20. But He saith unto them, It is I ; be not afraid.

S. And He saith.

21. Then they willingly received Him into the ship : and immediately the ship was at the land whither they went.

S. Then they came to receive Him : S. whither it went.
Vulg. Voluerunt ergo accipere eum in navim : et statim navis fuit ad terram, in quam ibant.

For verses 22-24 see also S. Matthew, ch. xiv., page 252.

22. ¶ The day following, when the people which stood on the other side of the sea saw that there was none other boat there, save that one whereinto His disciples were entered, and that Jesus went not with His disciples into the boat, but that His disciples were gone away alone ;

S. The day following, the people which stood on the other side of the sea saw that there was none other boat there save that whereinto the disciples of Jesus were entered, and that Jesus went not with them into the boat, but His disciples alone : A. omits when : V.A. save one (omit whereinto, &c.).
Vulg. Altera die turba que stabat trans mare, vidit quia navicula alia non erat ibi nisi una, et quia non introisset cum discipulis suis Iesus in navim, sed soli discipuli ejus abiissent.

23. (Howbeit there came other boats from

* It was now dark (σκοτία ἦδη ἐγγράγει).—“An ὀψπω with ἦδη preceding, would, to say the least, be unnecessary. It was already dark, and Jesus had not come.”—WINER'S Grammar of the New Testament, p. 618.

Tiberias nigh unto the place where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks :)

S. When therefore the boats came from Tiberias, which was nigh unto where they did also eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks, and when they saw that, they took shipping and came to Capharnaum: V. omits Howbeit.
Vulg. Aliae vero superaverunt navem a Tiberiade, juxta locum ubi manducaverant panem, gratias agente Domino.

24 When the people therefore saw that Jesus was not there, neither His disciples, they also took shipping, and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus.

V. A. omits also; V. to Capharnaum.
Vulg. ascenderunt in naviculas, et venerunt Capharnaum quærere Jesum.

25. And when they had found Him on the other side of the sea, they said unto Him, Rabbi, when camest Thou hither?

THE SCENE OF THE FEEDING OF THE FIVE THOUSAND, AND THE MIRACLE ON THE LAKE.

The following is a synopsis of the passages which enable us to fix the localities with respect to the feeding of the five thousand, and the miracle on the lake:—

S. MATTHEW xiv.

13 He departed thence by ship into a desert place apart.

S. MARK vi.

32 They departed into a desert place by ship privately.

S. LUKE ix.

10 And He took them, and went aside privately into a desert place belonging to the city called Bethsaida.
S. V. privately into the city called Bethsaida.
S. omits belonging to the city called Bethsaida.
12 For we are here in a desert place.

S. JOHN vi.

1 After these things Jesus went over (πέραν) the sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias.

15 This is a desert place.

35 This is a desert place.

22 And straightway Jesus constrained His disciples to get into a ship, and to go before Him unto 45 And straightway He constrained His disciples to get into a ship, and to go to the other side (εἰς τὸ πέραν).

S. And He constrained the disciples.
V. And straightway He constrained His disciples.
S. into the ship.

the other side before (εἰς τὸ πέραν) unto Bethsaida.
Margin, over against.
S. into a ship.

34 And when they were gone over (καὶ διαπεράσαντες), they came into the land of Gennesaret.
S. V. they came to land unto Gennesaret.

53 And when they had passed over (καὶ διαπεράσαντες), they came into the land of Gennesaret, and drew to the shore.

22 The day following, when the people which stood on the other side of the sea (πέραν τῆς θαλάσσης) saw that there was none other boat there, save that one wherinto His disciples were entered, and that Jesus went not with His disciples into the boat, but that His disciples were gone away alone;

S. The day following, the people which stood on the other side of the sea saw that there was none other boat there save that wherinto the disciples of Jesus were entered, and that Jesus went not with them into the boat, but His disciples alone: A. omits when; V. A. save one (omit wherinto, &c.), and that.

23 (Howbeit there came other boats from Tiberias, nigh unto the place where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks:)

24 When the people therefore saw that Jesus was not there, neither His disciples, they also took shipping, and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus.

S. When therefore the boats came from Tiberias, which was nigh unto

S. MATTHEW xiv.

S. MARK vi.

S. LUKE ix.

S. JOHN vi.

where they did also eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks, and when they saw that, they took shipping and came to Capernaum. 23. V. omits Howbeit: 24. V.A. omit also: V. to Capernaum.

25 And when they had found Him on the other side of the sea (πέραν τῆς θαλάσσης), they said unto Him, Rabbi, when camest Thou hither?

From an inspection of these passages it appears that S. Luke says that the scene of the feeding of the five thousand was in a desert place near the city called Bethsaida. The Vatican MS. says that they entered into the city called Bethsaida, omitting "the desert place," and the Sinaitic has the same, but by a later hand.

S. John says that "other boats came from Tiberias, nigh unto the place where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks." If there could be any doubt as to the exact meaning of these words, whether they meant that boats came from Tiberias to some place near the scene of the feeding of the five thousand, or that the boats came from Tiberias, which was near the scene of the miracle, this doubt is removed by the Sinaitic MS., which expressly says that the boats came from Tiberias, which was nigh unto the place where they did eat bread.

The inference which naturally follows from this is that the place in which Jesus fed the five thousand lay somewhere between Tiberias and Bethsaida, and probably nearer Bethsaida than Tiberias.

Jesus sent away the disciples, while He Himself dismissed the people. We gather from S. John that the disciples set sail from Tiberias, and from S. Mark (vi. 45) that their destination was Bethsaida or the neighbourhood of it. Their purpose apparently was not to go to a distant place, but to hover about near the coast until Jesus had dismissed the multitude: for if the Bethsaida, for which, according to S. Mark, they set out, were a different place from the Bethsaida near which, according to S. Luke, lay the desert place in which Jesus fed the five thousand, we might reasonably expect that some intimation of this would have been given in some way or other. A storm came on, and the disciples were driven out of their course and beyond their destination. After taking up Jesus, they finally land at Capernaum.

As far as it is possible to ascertain the opinion of the early commentators,¹ they held that Bethsaida lay on the west shore of the lake, and the desert place between Bethsaida and Tiberias. With this agree the old local traditions of the country, as is testified by the early travellers, Arculf, Sæwulf, and others.

Arculf, the French bishop who travelled in the Holy Land a little before A.D. 700, says:—

"He further saw, on this side of the sea of Galilee, to the north of the city of Tiberias, the place where our Lord blessed the loaves and fishes, a grassy and level plain, which has never been ploughed since that event, and shows no traces of buildings, except a few columns round the fountain, where, as they say, those persons drank after they had eaten their fill.

"Those who wish to go from Jerusalem to Capernaum take the direct way by Tiberias, and from thence along the sea of Genesareth to the place where the loaves were blessed, from which Capernaum is at no great distance."—Early Travels in Palestine, Bohn's ed., p. 9.

Sæwulf, an Anglo-Saxon pilgrim who travelled in the Holy Land about A.D. 1102, says:—

"The sea of Galilee is about six miles from Mount Tabor to the east and north-east, and is about ten miles long by five in breadth. The city of Tiberias stands on the sea-shore on one side, and on the other side are Corozaim and Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter. About four miles to the north-east of the city of Tiberias is the castle of Genesareth, where the Lord appeared to the disciples when fishing, as we learn from the Gospel. About two miles to the east of Genesareth is the mount on which our Lord Jesus fed five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes. This mount is called by the inhabitants our Lord's Table; and at its foot stands a very beautiful church of St. Peter, but deserted."—Early Travels in Palestine, p. 46.

Pococke, who travelled in the East about the middle of the eighteenth century, says:—

"Twelve miles north-east from Nazareth we came to the Mount of Beatitudes, where our Saviour delivered His remarkable sermon. It is about ten miles north of Mount Tabor. From the plain to the south it appears like a long low hill, with a mount at the east and west end, from which it seems to have the name of Kern-el-Hutin (the horns of Hutin), the village of Hutin being under it. At the first sight the whole hill appears to be rocky and uneven, but the eastern mount is a level surface, covered with fine herbage; and here, they say, it was that those blessings proceeded out of the mouth of the Redeemer of mankind. The mount is ninety paces long and sixty wide. About the middle of this eastern mount are the foundations of a small church, twenty-two feet square, on a ground a little elevated, which probably is the place

¹ Euthymius, in Matt. xiv. 34; vol. ii. p. 603.

V. Bede, in Marc. vi. 45; vol. iii. p. 195.

Maldonatus, in Joan. vi. 22; vol. ii. p. 588.

Franciscus Lucas, in Matt. xiv. 13; vol. i. p. 215.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xiv. 13; vol. viii. p. 293.

where they supposed our Saviour was when He spoke to His disciples. To the west of it there is a cistern underground, which might serve for the use of those who had the care of the church. About two miles to the east, near the brow of high ground which runs to the sea of Tiberias, there are several large black stones; two of these stand together, and are larger than the rest; and it is said Christ blessed the loaves on them when He fed the five thousand, whom He made to sit down on the grass."—POCOCKE'S Travels, vol. ii. p. 67.

Again, he says:—

"On the north side of the hill, over the plain of Gennesareth, there is a fortress cut into the perpendicular rock a considerable height, with a great number of apartments, the ascent to which is very steep; it is said by some to be the work, or at least the improvement, of Feckerdine. The reason of my mentioning this pass so particularly is because south of it in the plain of Hutin, and about two miles west of the sea of Tiberias, are the ruins of a town or large village which is now called Baitsida, and must have been the ancient Bethsaida of Galilee so often mentioned in the Gospel. I cannot find that this has been yet thoroughly settled by any authors; and the writers on ancient geography finding that there was a Bethsaida east of the sea of Tiberias or of Jordan, in Gaulonitis, have very much doubted whether there was another to the west of that sea, and consequently have concluded that our Saviour spoke of that on the east; but, as the town in the east had its name changed to Julius by Philip the Tetrarch before our Saviour frequented those parts, it may easily be concluded that the eastern place was never intended, but always this town, which is in Galilee; and, though it may be two miles distant from the sea or lake, yet it may be said, without any impropriety, to be by the sea of Tiberias."—Ibid. vol. ii. p. 68.

From these extracts it is plain that there was from early times a tradition that the scene of the feeding of the five thousand was on the west side of the lake of Galilee. This continued to be the interpretation generally received until the sixteenth century, when Adrichomius,¹ not perceiving that the word πίσαν and its compounds might mean across from one part of the coast to another on the same side of the lake, conjectured that as the disciples landed on the west side of the lake, they must have crossed over from the east, and therefore that Bethsaida, being confessedly on the west side, the desert place of or belonging to the city of Bethsaida must be on the east side opposite Bethsaida. In this singular interpretation he was followed by the commentator Jansenius.² In the eighteenth century Reland,³ being shrewd enough to see the harshness of the explanation, which made Bethsaida on the west side of the lake and the desert place of Bethsaida on the east side, suggested that there were two places called Bethsaida, one on the west side and the other on the north-east, and that the desert place, the scene of this miracle, belonged to the latter. In support of his opinion he quotes a passage from Josephus,⁴ who says that the site on which Philip the Tetrarch built Julius was once a mere hamlet for fishermen, and called Bethsaida. Slight and unsatisfactory as are the reasons for believing that in the times of the Evangelists there were two places called Bethsaida, one on the west side of the lake, the city of Philip, Andrew, and Peter (John i. 44), and the other on the north-east, and that sometimes one of these places is meant by Bethsaida in the Gospel history and sometimes the other, this interpretation has been acquiesced in by most English commentators and travellers from that time to the present.

During the last few years somewhat of a reaction has arisen against the explanation of this passage by means of two Bethsaiidas.⁵ A late writer⁶ is inclined to place the scene of this miracle on the west side of the lake, very much in the spot which tradition has handed down. He is led to do this partly from the character of the country which he has inspected, and which struck him as remarkably adapted for such a purpose.

The following considerations, as it appears to me, go to support the old tradition, that the Bethsaida here mentioned was on the west side of the lake, and that the scene of this miracle lay somewhere between Bethsaida and Tiberias.

Of the four Evangelists, two, S. Matthew (xiv. 15) and S. Mark (vi. 35), state that Jesus fed the five thousand men with five barley loaves and two fishes in a "desert place" (τόπος ἔρημος). S. Luke (ix. 10) says it was in "a desert place belonging to the city called Bethsaida," and S. John (vi. 23) that it was near Tiberias. A desert place does not imply that this was one of the wilds technically called "the desert," or "the wilderness." Any waste or unoccupied land, large enough, and at a sufficient distance from Bethsaida, might be the scene of this miracle.

At the time of this miracle Julius would be at the height of its glory, for Philip died there A.D. 34, that is about four years after this, and was buried there with great pomp and expense, in a monument which he had prepared for himself.⁷ Is it therefore credible that if by Bethsaida S. Luke had meant this place he would have given it the name by which it had once been called, and when a mere village, and not the name which it then had, and when it was a magnificent city, rich and populous?

The name of Paneas was also changed by this very Philip the Tetrarch into Cæsarea, and where it is mentioned in the New Testament it is called Cæsarea (Matt. xvi. 13; Mark viii. 27), and never Paneas. Neither would it be strictly true, as Reland⁸ has pointed out, that this place was "called Bethsaida," either at the time of the miracle or at the time when S. Luke wrote his Gospel. It was then called Julius, not Bethsaida; nor would it ever have been known that

¹ Adrichomius, Theatrum Terræ Sanctæ, p. 84.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lvii. p. 453.

³ Reland, Palestina, p. 654.

⁴ Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 2, 1; vol. ii. p. 794.

⁵ Whiston's Trans. Antiq. xviii. 2, 1; p. 485.

⁶ Thomson, The Land and the Book, p. 373.

⁷ Recovery of Jerusalem, p. 380.

⁸ Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 5, 6; vol. ii. p. 804.

⁹ Whiston's Trans. Antiq. xviii. 4, 6; p. 491.

¹⁰ Reland, Palestina, p. 655.

Julias had once been called Bethsaida but for the single incidental notice of Josephus; and the probability is that Julias, after the change of its name by Philip, never reverted to its former name of Bethsaida. The district around¹ is still called Jaulán, a traditionary relic of the name of this place.

The word Bethsaida occurs only in one place besides in S. Luke, and that is in the very next chapter (x. 13), where a woe is denounced against it, in company with Chorazin and Capernaum. But it will scarcely be questioned that the cities here meant are all cities of Galilee, and on the west shore of the lake. Nor is it at all probable that S. Luke would use the word Bethsaida in two consecutive chapters, meaning by that name two very different places,—one a village, and the other a magnificent city, rich and populous; one on the west shore of the lake of Tiberias, and the other on the north-east,—and give no intimation of this. If there were two cities called Bethsaida, and if our Saviour wrought part of His miracles in one of these places and part in the other, which did He mean when He said, "Woe unto thee, Bethsaida?" (Luke x. 13.)

There is no difficulty in the expressions used by the Evangelists, and translated "the other side" (Matt. xiv. 22), "gone over" (34), "other side" (Mark vi. 45), "passed over" (53), "over the sea" (John vi. 17), and "the other side of the sea" (25). All these expressions are translations of one and the same Greek word, πέραν and its compounds. But its meaning is amply satisfied by "over the sea to some other part," and not necessarily from one cardinal point of the compass to another. Πέραν would mean to the opposite side, from whatever point and in whatever direction the start was made. If they set sail from the west coast, πέραν and διαπεράσαντες would not of necessity mean that they sailed due east to the opposite shore, but that they crossed over by sea to some other part; it may be, on the same side of the lake. This use of the word is strikingly exemplified by Josephus, and is quoted by a modern traveller, who says, "The words εἰς τὸ πέραν, translated 'to the other side,' need not, perhaps, mean to the opposite side of the lake, east or west of the Jordan. Josephus, departing from Tiberias, says he 'sailed over to Tarichæa' (πλοῖον λαβόμενος, ἐμβὰς εἰς τὰς Ταριχέας διαπεραιώσθην, Life, sect. 59), while Tiberias and Tarichæa were on the same western side of Jordan, and without any deeply-indented bay between them."² This is the more valuable, as being the opinion of one who has carefully examined the coast.

What is meant will readily appear by referring to any ordinary map. There it will be seen that the distance from Tiberias to Capernaum is greater than the distance from Julias in the north-east to Capernaum. The expression "across or over the sea" (πέραν) would therefore be more applicable to the former voyage than to the latter, and more applicable to a voyage from the neighbourhood of Tiberias to Bethsaida than to one from Tiberias to Tarichæa, to which Josephus applies it.

S. Mark says (vi. 45) that their destination was at first Bethsaida. If they were going from the neighbourhood of a Bethsaida in the north-east to a Bethsaida in the west, would not this have been so unusual as to require from the Evangelist some explanation, some distinction between the two places?

This is not a case in which the early writers of the Church held different opinions, and in which some explained this miracle as taking place in a desert place near Bethsaida on the west side of the lake, and others near Bethsaida on the north-east. The explanation of this passage by means of two Bethsайдas was quite unknown to the early Church. There is not a single early writer of the Church who ever speaks of two Bethsайдas on the shore of the lake. Nor is there any evidence to show that they knew that Julias had formerly been called Bethsaida, or that there was any Bethsaida except the city of Philip, Andrew, and Peter. S. Jerome,³ when he mentions that Philip built Julias, does not add that it was formerly called Bethsaida. When they describe the situation of Bethsaida, it is always in such terms as to imply that it was on the west side of the lake, either as being in Galilee or in Gennesaret, or at no great distance from Capernaum.⁴

The fair conclusion from all this is, that the old local tradition is in this case tolerably correct. According to this, the scene of the miracle of the feeding of the five thousand, the place from which the disciples set sail (Tiberias), the place of their destination (Bethsaida), and the place at which they in the end arrived (Capernaum), are all on the west shore of the lake.

26. Jesus answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek Me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled.

27. Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man shall give unto you: for Him hath God the Father sealed.

Margin, work not.
S. but for that which: S. which the Son of Man giveth unto you.
Vulg. Operamini non cibum qui perit, sed qui permanet in vitam æternam, quem Filius hominis dabit vobis. Hunc enim Pater signavit Deus.

To their question "When" (which also implies the other question, "How") "camest Thou here?" Jesus does not reply. But He shows them that their motive in seeking Him was a wrong one. Their object was not to witness His

¹ Robinson, Biblical Researches, vol. iii. p. 308.

² MacGregor, The Rob Roy on the Jordan, p. 376.

³ S. Jerome, in Matt. xvi. 13; vol. vii. p. 114.

⁴ S. Epiphanius, Hæres. li. 15; vol. i. p. 915.

S. Jerome, de Situ et Nominibus, vol. iii. p. 884.

miracles, and from thence to learn the nature of His office, to conclude from His works that He was the Messiah promised to them of old. They sought Him simply and solely for the bread, to have their hunger supplied without labour, without any regard to the miraculous manner in which it was provided for them. He bids them labour, but not for "the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life," which He the Son of Man, God Incarnate, could give them, because God the Father had sealed Him.

When conversing with the woman of Samaria, Jesus had raised her thoughts from the water of the well to the "living water," to life everlasting; so here He leads the Jews on from the food of the body to the food of the soul, from "the meat which perisheth" to "that meat which endureth unto everlasting life." That He could give the former of these, the food of the body, they were themselves witnesses. He here declares His power, as well as the reason of His power, to give the other: "For Him bath God the Father sealed." On Him bath God the Father set the seal of His approval, and hath given Him the Impress of Himself. God the Father sealed the Son of Man, when at His Baptism there came a voice from heaven, saying, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Matt. iii. 17.) The Son of Man is elsewhere (Heb. i. 3) called the Brightness of His Father's glory, and the express Image of His Person or of His substance. When God the Son took unto Him human nature, He gave to it His Impress, the Seal of His Father. When the Word was made flesh, the human nature received the Seal, the Impress of the Divine.¹

Jesus could give them "the meat which endureth unto everlasting life," because Him had God the Father sealed. But Jesus had said that they must work for it. They therefore ask Him what the works were which they must do in order to obtain this meat. He replies that they must believe on Him whom God hath sent, i.e. on Himself. Belief or faith is here, as often in Holy Scripture, put for all the active virtues that spring from belief. Belief is the root from which all these grow naturally as its fruit. It is therefore used alone, but includes them all.

28. Then said they unto Him, What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?

A. They said
Vulg. Disserunt ergo ad eum.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. vi. 27; Homil. xlv.
S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. vi. 27; vol. vi. p. 481.

² The true Light (τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀληθινόν).—"In S. John's Gospel we have τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀληθινόν, the Light, the true Light; ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ἀληθινός, the Bread, the true Bread; ὁ ἀπαρχὸς ὁ ἀληθινός, the Vine, the true Vine, said emphatically of our blessed Lord by Himself, to distinguish Him emphatically from all other lights, bread, and vines. . . . This use of the article to express greater emphasis in the attribute pervades the whole of the New Testament Greek. Three times the voice of God the Father from heaven proclaimed the Christ as ὁ υἱὸς μου ὁ ἀγαπητός—a distinctive title of the Messiah, as we may see in Midrash, and the emphatic

29. Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent.

The Jews then reply that, before they can believe in Him, they must see some works adequate to produce in them this belief. He had only fed them, 5000 of them, with superhuman food for a single day, and yet on the strength of this He required them to believe that He was God, whereas Moses only required their fathers to believe that he was God's servant; and yet to produce in them this belief He fed them, 600,000 of them, continually for forty years with manna.

So gross and carnal are the Jews, that they cling to the miracle of multiplying the bread, and overlook all the other miracles which Jesus had wrought among them; how He had healed the sick, cast out devils, opened the eyes of the blind, none of which Moses had done. Jesus wrought His miracles with the express purpose of proving to them that He was God: Moses wrought his miracles to prove that he was God's servant. On the strength of the miracles which he performed, their fathers had believed Moses that he was what he professed to be, God's servant. But they had not believed Jesus that He was what He claimed to be, God, in consequence of His miracles.

30. They said therefore unto Him, What sign shewest Thou then, that we may see, and believe Thee? what dost Thou work?

S. omits then.
Vulg. Quod ergo tu facis signum ut videamus.

31. Our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat.

In answer to this, Jesus shows that He was greater than Moses, and that the bread which He gave was greater than that which Moses gave.

32. Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but My Father giveth you the true Bread^a from heaven.

S. Hilary Pict. de Trinitate, viii. 44; vol. ii. p. 269.
S. Augustine, in Joan. vi. 27, tract. xxv.; vol. iii. p. 1601.

language of S. Paul, 'He hath accepted us in the Beloved One' (τῷ ἀγαπημένῳ). In Heb. xiii. 20, Christ is emphatically termed the Shepherd, the great Shepherd of the sheep (τὸν ποιμένα τῶν προβάτων τῶν μεσῶν). Again and again the Evangelists speak of God the Father as 'our Father, our heavenly Father.' It is significant that the New Testament writers employ this emphatic form of marking the attribute, mainly in describing the titles, offices, and attributes of God the Father and His blessed Son, and therefore to ignore it is to ignore the expressed intention of the sacred writers."—The 'Church Quarterly Review,' April 1876, p. 128.

33. For the Bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world.

In these words He contrasts the manna with "the true Bread," and points out several important distinctions between them. The manna was given by Moses, who was a mere man; the "true Bread" was given by God the Father. The manna was given to their fathers only, to the Israelites in the desert, but the true Bread is given by God the Father to the world. The manna did not really come from heaven, but only apparently so. It was formed in the air at God's command, like the frost, or snow, or hail, and it is only called the bread of heaven as a type or figure of the true Bread of heaven; but the true Bread of heaven, the Word, came down from the bosom of the Father. The manna nourishes the body only, and that only for a time; the true Bread nourishes both soul and body, and that for ever.

The dulness of these Jews in apprehending our Saviour's meaning of the words "true Bread from heaven," is not unlike that of the Samaritan woman with respect to His use of the expression "living water." After all the explanation which He had given her of the "living water," her thoughts had never risen above the water of the well, and she exclaims, "Sir, give me this water that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw" (iv. 15). In like manner, the highest aim of these Jews was to obtain the food of the body, and without the necessary labour.

34. Then said they unto Him, Lord, evermore give us this bread.

"I am the Bread of Life."—The ancient writers uniformly asserted the efficacy of the Holy Eucharist to depend upon the fact, that it was the means through which our Lord's Humanity was communicated. They maintained it to be the appointed medium through which that re-creation of man's nature, which began in Christ, was extended to His brethren. Thus did they understand S. Paul's words, 'We are members of His Body, of His flesh, and of His bones.' Hence S. Ignatius (ad Ephesios, xx. p. 80, Patres Apost. Hefele) calls the 'one bread' the 'medicine of immortality.' In the same century S. Irenaeus (contr. Hæreses, iv. 18, §. p. 1028, Migne) asks, 'How can they say that the flesh passes into corruption and does not partake of life, since it is fed by the Body of the Lord, and by His Blood?' 'For as a little leaven, as the Apostle says, leavens the whole lump, so that Body, which has been rendered immortal by God, having become present in ours, transforms and changes the whole of it to itself' (S. Gregory Nyssen, Cat. Orat. xxxvii.; vol. ii. p. 93, Migne). S. Augustine (de Pecc. Meritis, i. 24, 34; vol. x. p. 128, Migne) tells us that it was the ancient custom of the African Christians to call the Holy Eucharist by the name of life, by which usage, he says, they referred to our Lord's declaration, 'I am the living Bread which came down from heaven.'

"S. Chrysostom (in Epist. i. ad Cor. x. 17, Homil. xxiv.; vol. i. p. 289, Oxon) in like manner says that our Lord's Humanity has been communicated as 'a consecrating principle for the renewal of all mankind. He gave not simply His own Body; but because the former nature of the flesh, which was framed out of the earth,

Though Jesus had identified Himself with "the meat which endureth unto everlasting life," or with "the true Bread from heaven," yet up to this point He had spoken of Himself in the third person: now He begins to use the first person, and speak of Himself in such a manner that they can scarcely mistake His meaning, at least so far as that He Himself is "the true Bread from heaven."

35. And Jesus said unto them, I am the Bread of Life: he that cometh to Me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on Me shall never thirst.

V. omits And: S. Then Jesus.
Vulg. Dixit autem eis Jesus.

In the expression "the Bread of Life," there is probably some allusion to "the tree of life" (Gen. ii. 9). If our first parents had eaten of the tree of life, it would have prolonged their life, even though their life was one of misery. "The Bread of Life" imparts immortality not to the body only, but to the soul also, and Jesus is the Bread of Life. Those who believe in Him, those who come to Him, shall never lack strength in their contest with Satan; they shall never hunger or thirst any more; they shall never faint for want of supernatural grace.

36. But I said unto you, That ye also have seen Me, and believe not.

S.A. omitt Me.
Vulg. Sed dixi vobis, quia et vidistis me, et non creditis.

Either He had said these very words at some other time, and S. John has not recorded them, or they were the substance of what He had said above.

had first become deadened by sin and destitute of life, He brought in, as one may say, another sort of dough and leaven, His own flesh, by nature indeed the same, but free from sin and full of life; and gave to all to partake thereof, that being nourished by this, and laying aside the old dead material, we might be blended together unto eternal life, by means of this table.' Such was supposed by the primitive Church to be the doctrine revealed in the sixth chapter of S. John's Gospel; and S. Cyril (adv. Nest. iv. 5; vol. ix. p. 197, Migne), after quoting ten of its most important verses (verse 47 to 57), adds this comment:—

"See, then, how He abides in us, and renders us superior to corruption, by introducing Himself, as I said, into our bodies through His own flesh, which is real food; whereas that shadow, which was under the law [i.e. manna], and the service which was connected with it, had no reality. And the principle of this mystery is simple and true, not curiously devised for the service of impiety, but a simple truth. For we believe that the Word, the Son of the Father, having united Himself to the Body born of the Holy Virgin, with a reasonable soul (the union of course being ineffable and mystical), rendered His Body life-giving, being Himself, as God, the principle of life by nature; that by making us partakers of His Body, not only in Spirit, but in body, He might render us superior to corruption; and do away, through Himself, the law of sin, which was in our fleshly members, and thus, as it is written, "condemn sin in the flesh."—R. I. WILBERFORCE, on the Holy Eucharist, p. 102.

37. All that the Father giveth Me shall come to Me; and him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out.

38. For I came down from heaven, not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me.

S. For I came not down from heaven to do.

39. And this is the Father's will which hath sent Me, that of all which He hath given Me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day.

S.V.A. And this is the will of Him which hath.
Vulg. Hæc est autem voluntas ejus qui misit me, Patris.

40. And this is the will of Him that sent Me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day.

S.V.A. For this is: S.V. the will of My Father that.
Vulg. Hæc est autem voluntas Patris mei, qui misit me.

They had seen Jesus, they had seen too the miracles which He wrought before them, they had heard the testimony of John the Baptist, and yet, as a nation, the Jews did not believe in Him. Some of them would believe, and those He would not reject. To believe in Him was the gift of the Father, and was the reward of His Passion. The prophet had long before said, "He shall see of the travail of His Soul, and shall be satisfied." (Isa. liii. 11.) Eternal life, the life of grace in the soul here, to be matured into the life of glory hereafter for ever, is given to those who believe on Jesus the Son of God, who is the Bread of life. He would not cast out those who came to Him, because the Father had given them to Him as the reward of His Passion, and because He came down from heaven, i.e. because He was made flesh, in order to do the will of His Father. So far from permitting them to perish, He would raise them up at the last day. Their coming to Him, their belief in Him and union with Him, would be the very cause of their resurrection.

41. The Jews then murmured at Him, because He said, I am the Bread which came down from heaven.

42. And they said, Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how is it then that He saith, I came down from heaven?

S*. whose father also we know: V. how now saith He.

Vulg. Nonne hic est Jesus filius Joseph, cujus nos novimus patrem et matrem? Quomodo ergo dicit hic: quia de caelo descendi?

43. Jesus therefore answered and said unto them, Murmur not among yourselves.

V. omits therefore: S. answered them and said.
Vulg. Respondit ergo Jesus, et dixit eis.

44. No man can come to Me, except the Father which hath sent Me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day.

A. except he which.
Vulg. nisi Pater qui misit me, traxerit eum.

45. It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God.* Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto Me.

S.V. omit therefore: A. and hath learned the truth of the Father.
Vulg. Omnis qui audivit a Patre, et didicit, venit ad me.

46. Not that any man hath seen the Father, save He which is of God, He hath seen the Father.

S. save He, which is of the Father, He hath seen God.
Vulg. nisi is qui est a Deo, hic vidit Patrem.

Jesus bids the Jews not to murmur at what He had just said to them. The fault, the cause of their murmuring, lay not in His words, for they were true, but in the state of their own hearts, in their own want of Divine light. Their belief, or their want of belief, in Him depended on the previous preparation of their heart. Those who had previously listened to the teaching of the Father would believe in Him. Those who had hitherto faithfully and conscientiously obeyed the laws of God the Father would be led on to believe in His future revelation of His Son.

The conditions under which God effectually draws some men to believe in Him and others not are beyond man's knowledge. Practically all men are free to choose and free to refuse Him. As a rule, we see that men are drawn from one degree of perfection to another. This is strikingly seen with respect to the Incarnation. All those whom God chose as His instruments to bring about the Incarnation, or to whom it should be first revealed, were already eminent for their devout lives under another and less perfect dispensation. This is expressly stated in the case of the Blessed Virgin (Luke i. 28); Joseph (Matt. i. 19); Zacharias and Elisabeth (Luke i. 6); Simeon (Luke ii. 25); and Anna (Luke ii. 37).

Thus, according to the rules which had been already observed and displayed in God's providence, those in that very crowd of Jews who were diligently striving to do the will of the Father, as declared under the Mosaic dispensation, would be convinced by the works which Jesus wrought that He was the Christ. Conviction so as to produce belief in Jesus was not the effect of miracles, unless acting on a teachable, obedient, devout spirit. No amount of miracles would succeed in persuading those whom the Father had not already drawn. But the reward of those who were drawn by the Father to believe in Him would be unlimited; it would be resurrection to eternal life.

* Taught of God (διδάσκει τοῦ Θεοῦ).—That is, taught by God; as in S. Matt. xxv. 34. οἱ ἐδωγημένοι τοῦ Πατρὸς μέναι—'blessed by the Father.'—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 202.

47. Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life.

S.V. omit on Me.

Vulg. Qui credit in me, habet vitam æternam.

48. I am that Bread of life.

49. Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead.

50. This is the Bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die.

51. I am the living Bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this Bread, he shall live for ever: and the Bread that I will give is My flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.

S. eat of My Bread: S. omits and: S. the Bread that I will give for the life of the world is My flesh: V. omits which I will give.

Vulg. si quis manducaverit ex hoc pane, vivet in æternum: et panis, quem ego dabo, caro mea est pro mundi vita.

52. The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, How can this Man give us His flesh to eat?

S. How therefore can this Man.

Vulg. Quomodo potest hic nobis carnem suam dare ad manducandum?

If we review the last twenty-five verses, we shall find that the chief subject of them, and that which connects them all, like a vein running from one end to the other, is that Jesus is the Author of life, of life to the soul here, and of life to the soul and body hereafter. Every variety of expression is used to convey this knowledge to them. He is the Meat which endureth unto everlasting life. He is the true Bread of heaven. He is the Bread of life. He is the living Bread which came down from heaven.

The Jews said that Jesus was a mere man, the son of Joseph, and that His father and mother were living among them. Jesus Himself claimed to be God, as well as Man, and therefore the Author of life to man. If they wished to partake in eternal life, they must believe that He was God, One with the Father, and equal to the Father. In order to partake of life they must believe in Him; they must believe that He, Jesus, whom they supposed to be the son of Joseph, was God, and therefore the source of life, and able to impart life to them. This was the first step in order to obtain life eternal; the next was to eat His Flesh and drink His Blood.

The first objection of the Jews was that He could not be the Author of life because He was only a man like themselves, and descended from men like themselves. Their second objection was that no man could give them his flesh to eat.

In answer to the objection of the Jews, "How can this Man give us His flesh to eat?" Jesus, in the next six verses, declares that this is possible, and, more than that, it is absolutely necessary. He does not explain to the Jews how they can eat His Flesh and drink His Blood, but He repeats, in almost every possible form, that in order to obtain life in the soul here, and life in the soul and body hereafter, they must believe that He, Jesus the Son of Mary, was God, and they must eat His Flesh and drink His Blood.

53. Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink His blood, ye have no life in you.

S. not everlasting life.

Vulg. non habebitis vitam in vobis.

54. Whoso eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day.

55. For My flesh is meat indeed, and My blood is drink indeed.

V. is true meat: V. is true drink.

Vulg. Caro enim mea, vere est cibus: et sanguis meus, vere est potus.

56. He that eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood, dwelleth in Me, and I in him.

57. As the living Father hath sent Me, and I live by the Father: so he that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me.

58. This is that Bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this Bread shall live for ever.

S. The Bread which cometh down from heaven is not: S.V. not as the fathers did eat, and are dead.

Vulg. Hi est panis qui de celo descendit. Non sicut manducaverunt patres vestri manna, et mortui sunt. Qui manducat hunc panem, vivet in æternum.

59. These things said He in the synagogue, as He taught in Capernaum.

S.V. in Capernaum.

Vulg. Hec dixit in synagoga docens, in Capernaum.

In order to obtain eternal life, they must believe that Jesus was God, and they must eat His Flesh and drink His Blood. As He had introduced and enforced the first of these with the solemn declaration, "Verily, verily," so also He does the second. As He had used a variety of expressions in order to convey the knowledge of the first requisite for life, so He does also in the case of the second.

In these verses Jesus once more reiterates the absolute necessity of eating His Flesh and drinking His Blood, in order to obtain eternal life, and to be raised up at the last day. He shows that the effects of His Flesh and His Blood will not be physical, not according to the usual working of nature, but spiritual and supernatural. In the case of common eating, whatever is eaten is assimilated to the body of the person who eats. He who eats the Flesh of Jesus and drinks His Blood, is united to Jesus, to the God-Man personally, to the second Person in the Godhead. But He declares that His Flesh is really flesh, and that His Blood is really blood, not figuratively so only. The union produced by eating the Flesh of Jesus and drinking His Blood is a real, actual union, though supernatural, and not a union through the affections only. He likens the union between Himself and those who eat His Flesh and drink His Blood to the union between the Father and Himself.

The Jews go away with the impression that He meant them to eat His Flesh and drink His Blood in the usual acceptation of the words. He does not explain to them that this was not the case. Either the time for this was not yet come, or the Jews were not in a state of mind to receive further explanation. Jesus does not give this explanation until when, in the Eucharist, He offers His Body or His Flesh and His Blood for the life of the world. Then He shows His Apostles how they were to eat His Flesh and drink His Blood, not only then, but to the end of the world, and not only they, but all faithful earnest believers in Him, as the God Incarnate, the Word made flesh.

He did not give them His Body to eat and His Blood to drink until He had offered them in the Eucharist for the life of the world. The Body which He then gave them to eat, and the Blood which He then gave them to drink, were not different from His Body and from His Blood which He would give to all time; not different from the Flesh and the Blood which He had just told the Jews they must eat and drink, in order to obtain eternal life. His miracle of multiplying the bread just before this discourse had prepared us for this. No limits can be put to His power. The only question for us to consider is, What did He mean?

Jesus delivered this discourse, not to His disciples or to the twelve Apostles, but to the Jews in the most public place in Capernaum, in the synagogue. The synagogue days were the second and fifth days of the week.¹

The Primitive Church interpreted the expressions to eat Christ's Flesh and to drink His Blood, used in this chapter, of His Body and Blood as received in the Eucharist.* But

¹ Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. xlviii.; vol. i. p. 235.

* Chapter VI. refers to the Eucharist.—The following is a summary of the arguments in favour of the Lord's words in S. John, chapter vi., being spoken of the Eucharist.

"The statement of our Lord's mediation, vv. 30-50, the Jews understood, but rejected; they did not complain that it was unintelligible, but asserted it to be unfounded. But when this statement was added [Whoso eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood, hath eternal life, &c.], they could attach to it no meaning. 'This is a hard saying; who can hear it?' It is plain, therefore, by the judgment of the Jews themselves, that this was not the ordinary way of expressing the familiar truth that our Lord would instruct them by His doctrine.

"Neither is there a shadow of evidence for saying that any such meaning could naturally have been deduced from such expressions. To eat wisdom, may be taken as a metaphorical expression for receiving it, but there is no single instance in which to eat any man's flesh is used as equivalent to the receiving his doctrine. Parabolical as was the language of some of the prophets, they never employed such a metaphor as this, nor is a single example of a like kind to be found among the writings of the Apostles. 'I am confident,' says Bishop Cleaver (Sermons, p. 29), 'there is no fact, no custom, no rite, no doctrine, and no expression in Scripture, prior to the institution itself, which will give any explication of this our Saviour's assertion: My Flesh is meat indeed, and My Blood is drink indeed.' In every instance in which to eat a person's flesh is spoken of in Scripture, to injure or destroy the party referred to is the idea conveyed. So it is in Psalm xxvii. 2, 'When the wicked came upon me to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell.' And so does S. James use it: 'The rust of them shall eat your flesh, as it were fire.' No single instance can be produced, either from classical or Oriental sources, in which this phrase is used in any other sense than that of consuming or preying upon the person spoken of. Gesenius gives these as the sole interpretations of the phrase, 'to eat any one's flesh,' which his great acquaintance with the Semitic languages supplied. Nor is this extraordinary; for metaphorical language is the language of nature, and must have a counterpart in those realities of which it is the expression. Now, 'to ruminate upon and digest the instructions of another, is as easy and obvious a language as the subject admits; . . . but to eat the body, and drink the blood of your teacher, as such, bears no conceivable analogy to any benefit to be received from thence, and is in truth a saying, not only hard in point of doctrine, but in point of interpretation also. . . .'

"But it has been affirmed that this interpretation is not so destitute of authority as it is of reason; and Whitby and others have represented it to have had various supporters in the early Church. It is essential to examine the grounds of this assertion. For if it can be shown that the contrary was the fact, there will remain no kind of reason for doubting that our Lord's words had reference to the Holy Eucharist. Now it must be remembered that He speaks of two things in this chapter: first, of the general fact of His Mediation, and that His Humanity was the medium through which Divine graces found their way to mankind; secondly, that the eating His Body and the drinking His Blood was the method in which this gift was to be participated by individuals. It is necessary to bear this distinction in mind when we interpret the statements of the ancient writers. Those who refer merely to the former of these two doctrines, and observe that all graces are derived from our Lord's Mediation, were not bound to make any allusion to the latter, or to decide whether our Lord's statements respecting His Body and Blood had reference to the Holy Eucharist. Now, of the writers who are alleged to have been unconscious that the Holy Eucharist is referred to in this place, not one has given a detailed explanation of it: the most which can be said is, that they have made casual or incidental allusions to some part of our Lord's words, leaving their estimate of the rest uncertain. But the earliest ancient writers who profess to give a detailed exposition of the whole chapter—S. Chrysostom, S. Augustine, and S. Cyril—while they refer the former part, vv. 30-50, to our Lord's Mediation at large, avowedly refer the latter part, 51-58, to that peculiar institution of the Holy Eucharist, by which He communicates Himself to His members."

After having examined in detail passages from S. Ignatius, S. Irenaeus, Tertullian, Clement of Alexandria, S. Cyprian, S. Cyril of Jerusalem, S. Hilary, S. Athanasius, Origen, Eusebius, and S. Basil, our author concludes: "There is no ground at all, then, for Whitby's assertion, that his theory had supporters in the ancient Church. The great mass of authors connect the mention of our Lord's Flesh and Blood with the Holy Eucharist exclusively; and those who occasionally apply them more loosely have been shown not to exclude this primary interpretation. Hence Waterland has introduced another theory, by way of neutralizing testimonies too direct and numerous to be disputed. He maintains that the thing referred to in this chapter is not the Holy Eucharist, but the general benefits which are bestowed by Christ, of which this sacrament is only a particular channel. Now it has been shown that the sixth chapter of S. John consists of two parts:

62. What and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend unto where He was before?

S. sancti and,
Vulg. in corpore videntes Filium hominis ascendentem ubi erat prius.

63. It is the Spirit that quickeneth;^a the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are Spirit, and they are Life.

S. they are Spirit and Life.
Vulg. spiritus estis qui vivificat: caro non prodest quidquam: verba que ego locutus sum vobis, spiritus et vita sunt.

64. But there are some of you that believe not. For Jesus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not, and who should betray Him.

S. For the Saviour knew: S. that believed, and who it was which should betray Him.
Vulg. S. sciebat enim ab initio Iesus qui essent non credentes, et quis traditurus esset eum.

65. And He said, Therefore said I unto you, that no man can come unto Me, except it were given unto him of My Father.

S. omnis unio him: S.V. of the Father.
Vulg. quia nemo potest venire ad me, nisi fuerit ei datum a Patre meo.

The Jews, as we have already seen, murmured and called not troubled, but to believe; &c.—Dr. PUSEY, 'The Real Presence the Doctrine of the English Church,' p. 168, ed. 1837.

"I assume that the sixth chapter of S. John really and primarily relates to the Sacrament of Holy Communion; according to the well-known interpretation of Hooker, which is the interpretation of all antiquity, and lies so obviously on the surface of Scripture, that one can hardly conceive a simple, unlearned reader giving any other turn to the discourse in that chapter, unless he were prepossessed by a theory."—J. KEEBLE, 'Eucharistical Adoration,' p. 59, 3rd ed. 1867.

^a It is the Spirit that quickeneth.—"Now that our Lord's presence is supernatural, is the truth affirmed by Himself in the sixteenth verse of the sixth chapter of S. John, 'It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are Spirit, and they are Life.' He affirms that the instruction which He communicated to His hearers was something borrowed from that principle of spiritual life which in His Manhood had come personally into the world; for 'in Him was life, and the life was the light of men.' The meaning of this verse is not, as some have imagined, that our Lord has really no share in man's sanctification, that great work belonging exclusively to the Third Person in the Blessed Trinity, for the functions of these Blessed Persons are coincident and not successive; so that the one mercifully co-operates, according to the order of His office, in that which is performed by the other. By Spirit, then, in this place is meant our Lord's Divine as opposed to His human nature: He explains to His wondering disciples that those miraculous effects that were to attend the reception of His Flesh and Blood would not arise from their natural influence, but from that supernatural efficacy with which they were endowed by means of their personal oneness with His Godhead. 'The word Spirit in our Lord,' says Bishop Bull ('De Necessitate Credendi,' vol. v. p. 38), 'is uniformly employed in Holy Scripture and in the writers of the first age to express that Divine nature in Himself to which it properly pertained to give life to mortals.' So that the truth here revealed is, that our Lord's Manhood was to be the principle of life by reason of that Godhead with which it was united. This statement was not intended, then, to detract from the reality of those functions which were to be discharged by His Flesh and Blood, but only to explain the principle and cause of their efficacy. And therefore our Lord refers to the exaltation of His glorified Body into heaven as a sign of those new qualities with which it was to be invested. Thus S. Cyril (in Joan. ch. vi. ver. 62; vol. vi. p. 600, Migne) says, 'If you suppose that My Flesh cannot give you life, how can it ascend like a winged thing into heaven? For if it is not able to give life because it has no natural tendency to do so, how can it tread upon the air and ascend into heaven? For this is equally impossible to flesh. But if it ascends, contrary to the law of nature, what is to hinder it from giving life, though it has no tendency to do so by its own nature? For He who has made that heavenly which belongs to the earth can enable it also to give life, though by its own nature it tends to corruption.'"—R. I. WILBERFORCE, 'On the Holy Eucharist,' p. 214.

"The Spirit (πνεῦμα) in Christ, especially when it is opposed to His flesh, as we have shown elsewhere, is used by writers of the first century to signify His Divine nature."—BISHOP BULL, 'Judgment of the Catholic Church,' vol. iii. p. 35; see also p. 89, 'Defence of the Nicene Creed,' vol. i. p. 48.

"S. Athanasius observes (Serap. i. 4-7) that the Holy Ghost is never in Scripture called simply 'Spirit' without the addition of 'God,' or 'of the Father,' or 'from Me,' or of the article, or of 'Holy,' or 'Comforter,' or 'of truth,' or unless He has been spoken of just before. Accordingly this text (2 Cor. iii. 16, 17) is understood of the Third Person in the Holy Trinity by Origen (contr. Cels. vi. 70), Basil (de Sp. S. n. 52), Pseudo-Athanas. (de Comm. Ess. 6). On the other hand, the word πνεῦμα, 'Spirit,' is used more or less distinctly for our Lord's Divine nature, whether in itself or as incarnate, in Rom. i. 4; 1 Cor. xv. 45; 1 Tim. iii. 16; Heb. ix. 14; 1 Pet. iii. 18; John vi. 63, &c."—Dr. J. H. NEWMAN on S. Athanasius; Libr. of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 196.

"I hope to give my reader satisfactory proof, before I conclude this book, that this eating and drinking the Flesh and Blood of Christ was by Him meant of the Eucharist only, and that this was the sentiment of the generality of the ancients; and so taking this at present for granted, I will only consider how they interpreted this verse (63) in conformity to that opinion, and applied it to the Eucharistical Body and Blood; and particularly that by 'Spirit' in this text they understood the Sacramental Body consecrated by the Spirit. Mr. Calvin, upon this verse, takes notice that S. Augustine so takes these words, as that when our Saviour says, 'the flesh profiteth nothing,' the sense is, the flesh alone profiteth nothing without the quickening Spirit, and that by the flesh he understood the Sacramental Flesh will in due time be sufficiently proved (see S. Augustine, in Joan. vi. 63, tract. xxvii. 5; vol. iii. p. 1617, Migne). Cyril of Alexandria expressly says, 'Christ calls His Flesh Spirit' (S. Cyril, in Joan. vi. 64; vol. vi. p. 601, Migne); and that He means this of His Body in the Eucharist will hereafter be proved. And again: 'Common flesh cannot give life; of this our Saviour is a witness, saying, The Flesh profiteth nothing; it is the Spirit that quickeneth: for since it is the World's own Body, on this account it is considered as giving life, and is so' (S. Cyril, Explicatio duodecim, cap. xi.; vol. ix. p. 312, Migne); that he means it of the Eucharist the learned reader may convince himself by turning his eye to the original. S. Ambrose has sufficiently showed that he was of this mind; for he (de Mysteriis, ix.; vol. iii. p. 408, Migne) proves the Eucharist to be 'the Body of Christ, because it is the body of the Divine Spirit.' S. Athanasius has been already cited, applying this text to the Eucharist, and telling us (Epist. iv. ad Serap. sect. 19; vol. ii. p. 665, Migne) that 'by Spirit and life is meant the Body given for the world, and distributed to or in every one,' &c. And yet he speaks more expressly, if possible, to the same purpose when, discoursing of the Eucharist, he says: 'The Flesh of the Lord is a quickening Spirit' (de Incarnatione, et contr. Arianos, sect. 16; vol. ii. p. 1012, Migne). And Ammonius took it so above a hundred years before him in these words, 'What He here calls the Spirit is the Flesh, replenished with the energy of in question His power to give life, and especially through the eating of His Flesh and the drinking of His Blood. The latter they called "a hard saying." But though Jesus knew that they murmured at what He had just said, He did not soften down His statement. He meets it with one equally hard, and said unto them, "Doth this offend you? What and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where He was before?" He calls to their recollection what He had before taught them, that He was God and came down from heaven, and that He should ascend up where He was before.

Several different meanings have been assigned to the words, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." Their meaning depends on the sense which we give to the words "the Spirit" and "the flesh." The most probable opinion is, that by the words "the flesh" Jesus means mere human nature, and by the words "the Spirit" His Divine nature, and that His reasoning is to this effect.

To eat flesh would not profit them in the case of mere human nature, but it would in the case of flesh united with the Spirit, that is, with the Divine nature; it would in the case of the Word made Flesh.¹ The Flesh that would avail them to attain everlasting life would be His Flesh, united as it was with the Spirit or Divine nature, and eaten after a spiritual manner. For even His Flesh eaten, as they thought, would not avail to give them everlasting life. It must be eaten after a spiritual or sacramental manner, which He would afterwards reveal to them.

Jesus does not say, "My flesh profiteth nothing," but "the flesh," mere flesh, mere human nature profiteth nothing, that is, has no power to give life. But His was not mere flesh, mere human nature; He was the Word made Flesh. The Divine nature communicated life-giving power to the human nature which He took of the Blessed Virgin, and He communicates life to men through their eating His Flesh and drinking His Blood.

In all the instances where He teaches that life in the soul here and life in the soul and body hereafter is the fruit of eating the Flesh and drinking the Blood of the Son of Man, He of course implies a corresponding belief that He is God, and a frame of mind in keeping with such a belief.

Jesus shows them that the cause of their unbelief was not because His saying was hard, but because their hearts were hard. They had not been taught of God; they had not been drawn to Him by the desire to learn how to serve God. He knew from their first coming to Him which of them would continue to believe in Him.

By the saying which they called "hard," Jesus was not breaking the bruised reed, nor quenching the smoking flax. This was a test to sever the earnest and sincere among them from the selfish and indifferent; those who followed Him merely for the sake of the bread which they saw He could provide, from those who were really anxious to learn from Him.

66. ¶ From that time many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him.

S. From that time therefore many of the disciples.

Vulg. Ex hoc multo discipulorum ejus abierunt retro: et jam non cum illo ambulabant.

67. Then said Jesus unto the Twelve, Will ye also go away?

68. Then Simon Peter answered Him, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life.

S.V. omit Then.

Vulg. Respondit ergo ei Simon Petrus.

69. And we believe and are sure that Thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God.^a S.V. that Thou art the Holy One of God.

Vulg. Et nos credimus, et cognovimus quia tu es Christus Filius Dei.

From that time, and in consequence of that hard saying, that they must eat His Flesh and drink His Blood in order to have life in them, many of His disciples went back. But neither Judas nor the rest of the Twelve went away. Judging from the difference in their characters, and from their subsequent conduct, we may safely conclude that they remained with Jesus from different motives. Judas, we know, was a thief, and had the bag. That would be sufficient to retain him. The reason why the others did not go away is contained in their own answer: Peter, either as entitled by his age or as influenced by the strength and sincerity of his zeal, speaks in the name of the rest. Some one they must follow. None but He had the words of eternal life. Peter only repeats, with slight variation, our Saviour's own words, "The words that I have spoken unto you are Spirit and are life" (ver. 63). Though they might not fully understand His words, they had unbounded confidence in Him. From the testimony of John Baptist, from His own miracles, from the holiness of His life and teaching, they believed and were sure that He was the Holy One of God. This Peter says,

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. vi. 63; vol. vi. p. 601.

S. Augustine, in Joan. vi. 63, tract. xxvii.; vol. iii. p. 1617.

de Consens. Evang. iv. 10; vol. iii. p. 1225.

de Civitate, x. 24; vol. vii. 301.

S. Augustine, in Psal. cxviii. 5; vol. iv. p. 1264.

Rupertus, in Joan. vi. 63; vol. iii. p. 493.

S. Bernard, Sermo xxx, in Cantic.

the life-giving Spirit" (apud Cat. P. Græc. ed. Corder, p. 89, in Joan. iii. 5, cited in Johnson, Unbl. Sac., vol. i. Ap. p. 9).—J. JOHNSON, 'The Unbloody Sacrifice,' vol. i. p. 287.

^a Verse 69.—"Instead of the Christ, the Son of the living God,' Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles read 'the Holy One of God.'—SCRIVENER, 'New Testament,' 1877. For the reasons in favour of the Textus Receptus, see McClellan, 'New Testament,' p. 716.

not as a single individual, not as his own belief only, but in the name of the twelve Apostles and as their belief, "Thou hast the words of eternal life. And we believe and are sure that Thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God." This, Peter says, is the belief of them all. But Jesus tells him that he is mistaken; for though He had chosen twelve as Apostles, one of them was a devil.

70. Jesus answered them, Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?

S. Jesus answered and said unto them: S. and among you is a devil.
Vulg. Respondit eis Jesus: Nonne ego vos duodecim elegi, et ex vobis unus diabolus est?

71. He spake of Judas Iscariot the son of Simon: for he it was that should betray Him, being one of the twelve.

S. of Judas the son of Simon, who was of Caiotus: S. that should also betray Him.
Vulg. Dicebat autem Iudam Simonis Iscariotem: hic enim erat traditurus eum, cum esset unus ex duodecim.

It is the Evangelist who adds that Judas Iscariot was meant by the expression "Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?" Jesus does not mention his name. He does not discover him to the rest of the Apostles, but He says sufficient to convince Judas himself that his real character was known to Him, and sufficient to put the other Apostles on their guard against trusting too much to their own strength and to the sincerity of their own belief. Jesus calls him "a devil," probably to imply that he was His adversary, a thief and a liar like the devil, and, in short, a mere instrument of the devil.

The way in which the name of Judas the traitor is associated (ver. 71) with this discourse of Jesus, almost seems to imply that his hardness of heart, which eventually led him to betray, to deliver up the Son of God, took its rise, or at least assumed its more positive form, after he had heard it; that this discourse, which might have been the means of imparting to him life eternal, became the occasion of increasing his hardness of heart.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER VII.

The Jews' Feast of Tabernacles.—The following calendar from the beginning of the month Tisri to the Feast of Tabernacles is taken from Lightfoot, who substantiates almost all his statements by references to ancient Jewish writers.

- I. The first day of the month Tisri was the beginning of the year, for stating the years, the intermissions of the seventh year, and the Jubilees. Upon this day was the blowing of Trumpets, Levit. xxiii. 24, and persons were sent out to give notice of the beginning of the year. On this day began the year of the world 3960, in the middle of which year Christ was crucified.
- II. The second day, observed also as holy by the Jews that were in Babylon, that they might be sure not to miss the beginning of the year.
- III. A Fast for the murder of Gedaliah: for so they expound those words, Zech. viii. 19. The fast of the seventh month.
- IV. This day was the High Priest in the apartment called προεβρον or παρεβρον, to which he then betook himself from his own house; that he might inure himself by exercise to the rites of the day of atonement approaching, and be ready and fitted for the service of that day. . . .
- V. All those seven days, after he betook himself from his own house to the blood until the day of atonement, he sprinkles the chandel of the daily sacrifice, offers the incense, snuffs the lamps, and brings the head and legs of the sacrifice to the altar, that he may be the more handy in his office upon the expiation day. . . .
- IX. Whereas for the whole seven days they permitted him to eat according to his usual custom, the evening of this day approaching, they diet him more sparingly, lest a full stomach should occasion sleep. They spend the whole night waking. . . .
- X. The day of Expiation. The solemn Fast. On this day began the year of Jubilee when it came about, Levit. xxv. 9. And indeed this year, which is now under our consideration, was the twenty-eighth Jubilee, reckoning from the seventh year of Joshua, wherein the land was subdued and rested from war, Josh. xi. 23.
- XI. The multitude now gather together toward the Feast of Tabernacles, that they might purify themselves before the Feast, and prepare necessities for it, viz. little tents, citrons, bundles of palms, willows, &c. But if any were defiled by the touch of a dead body, such were obliged to betake themselves to Jerusalem before the Feast of Expiation, that they might undergo seven days' purification before the Feast of Tabernacles.
- XIV. They were generally cut or trimmed on the Vespers of the Feast for the honour of it.
- XV. The first day of the Feast of Tabernacles. A feast day. Thirteen young bullocks offered, &c., Numb. xxix. 13. The preparation of the Chagigah. They lodge that night in Jerusalem.

XVI. The second day of the feast. Twelve young bullocks offered. The appearance of all the males in the Court.

XVII. The third day. Eleven young bullocks.

XVIII. The fourth day. Ten.

XIX. The fifth day. Nine.

XX. The sixth day. Eight.

XXI. The seventh day. Seven.

XXII. The eighth day. One young bullock offered.

“Upon all these days there was a pouring out of water upon the altar with wine (a thing not used at any other time); and for the sake of that, great joy and singing and dancing; such as was not all the year besides.

“At the close of the first day of the Feast they went down into the Court of the Women, and there prepared a great stage, that is, benches on which the women stood above and the men below. Golden candlesticks were there fixed to the walls, over these were golden cups, to which were four ladders set, by which four of the younger priests went up, having bottles in their hands which contained 120 logs, which they emptied into every cup. Of the rags of the garments and girdles of the priests they made wicks to light those lamps; and there was not a street throughout all Jerusalem that did not shine with that light.

“The religious and devout danced before them, having lighted torches in their hands, and sang songs and doxologies. The Levites, with harps and psalteries, cymbals and other instruments of music without number, stood upon those fifteen steps by which they went down from the Court of Israel to the Court of the Women, according to the fifteen Psalms of degrees, and sung. Two priests also stood in the upper gate, which goes down from the Court of Israel to the Court of the Women, with two trumpets in their hands. When the cock crew, or the president gave his signal, the trumpets sounded; when they came to the tenth step, they sounded again; when they came to the Court, they sounded; when they came to the pavement they sounded, and so went on sounding the trumpets till they came to the east gate of the Court; when they came thither, they turned their faces from the east to the west, and said, ‘Our fathers in this place, turning their backs upon the Temple and their faces toward the east, worshipped the sun, but we turn our faces to God.’”—LIGHTFOOT ON S. John vii. 2; vol. ii. p. 554.

CHAPTER VII.

[1. Jesus reproveth the ambition and boldness of His kinsmen : 10, goeth up from Galilee to the Feast of Tabernacles : 14, teacheth in the Temple. 40, Divers opinions of Him among the people. 45, The Pharisees are angry that their officers tax Him not, and chide with Nicodemus for taking His part.]

[Vulg. Ad octogagesimam festum quasi in oratorio ascendens conveniunt de ipsius doctrina Iudeos, quod ipsum ingratum calumniantur de curato lumine tabernaculi circumstantes et de ipsa turba exire loquuntur : ministri qui ad eum prehendendum missi erant, audito ejus predicatone collaudant ipsum : sed et Nicodemus ipsum defendens, male amict a pontificibus et pharisæis]

AFTER His miracle of feeding the five thousand, of walking on the sea of Galilee, and His discourse with the Jews on the Bread of life, there occurs in S. John's narrative an interval of six months.¹ Those events took place about the time of the Passover (vi. 4), and the Passover was observed in the month Nisan from 14th to 21st, or from April 16th to 23rd. The acts related in the following chapter took place about the Feast of Tabernacles, which was observed from the 15th of the month Tisri, or from October 7th, and for eight following days.

After this Feast of Tabernacles Jesus continued His ministry on earth for six months longer. Thus all His sayings and doings which S. John has in this time records, took place in the last six months before His Crucifixion. S. John omits all His acts during the first half of His last year; that is, from April to October. He does not mention that during the first six months of the year Jesus had defended His disciples against the complaint of the Pharisees, because they ate with unwashen hands; that He had cast out a devil from the daughter of a woman of Canaan; and that He had fed four thousand men besides women and children with seven loaves and a few little fishes. S. John omits all these and other works, and most probably for the reason that they had been fully recorded by the other Evangelists.

1. After these things Jesus walked in Galilee : for He would not walk in Jewry, because the Jews sought to kill Him.

2. Now the Jews' Feast of Tabernacles was at hand.

3. His brethren therefore said unto Him, Depart hence, and go into Judæa, that Thy disciples also may see the works that Thou doest.

4. For there is no man that doeth any thing in secret, and he himself seeketh to be known openly.² If Thou do these things, shew Thyself to the world.

5. For neither did His brethren believe in Him.

Soon after Jesus had fed the five thousand by miraculously multiplying the bread, there occurred a Feast of the Passover, and some commentators² have concluded that He would be sure to obey the command of the Law, and go up to Jerusalem to keep the feast. But the more general opinion³ is, that S. John meant to imply that, in order to avoid the machinations of the Jews who were seeking His life, Jesus had not gone up to Jerusalem to keep either the Passover or the Pentecost of this the third year of His ministry. It was not that He feared death, but the time for His Death was not yet come.

No argument has been advanced, either in ancient or in modern times, sufficient to prove that our Saviour's "brethren" were the sons of the Blessed Virgin, or to disprove the old opinion that they were her relations, probably her nephews and sons of her sister. This being the case, it is surely in harmony with God's works, if we select that meaning which

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. vii. 1; vol. viii. p. 977.

Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lvi.; vol. i. p. 242.

Greswell, Harmony of the Four Gospels, pp. 144-195.

Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. 66-80. [Robinson,

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, pp. 73-89.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. ix. p. 4.

³ Maldonatus, in Joan. vii. 1; vol. ii. p. 639.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. vii. 1; vol. viii. p. 978.

² For there is no man, &c. — Sometimes a clause or simple sentence is grammatically resolved into two, which are connected by καί. Thus, in οὐδεὶς τι ἐν κρυπτῷ ποιεῖ καὶ ἵνα αὐτὸς ἐν παρρησίᾳ εἰπῇ, the two unconnected acts are freely combined in parallelism (nobly does both at the same time), as if John had written οὐδεὶς . . . ποιεῖ ἑστὸν αὐτῷ, &c. — WILKIN, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 652.

attributes the least of human passion and the utmost of self-restraint to the persons who were the most nearly interested as instruments in bringing about the Incarnation. Who our Lord's brethren probably were, see S. Matthew, chap. xii. page 223.

In the eyes of His brethren, Galilee was no field for Jesus in which to manifest Himself. They did not believe in Him. But it was not that they did not believe that He had the power to work miracles. When they considered His works only, they might be inclined to believe in His claims to be the Messiah; but when they beheld His poverty, the lowliness of His condition, which was only equal to their own, they did not believe that He could be He whom the prophets had foretold. Jerusalem was the place in which His pretensions could be proved or disproved, and no time could be better than one of the great annual festivals, when multitudes would be gathered from all parts. Though they did not believe that He was the Messiah, they could not deny the truth of His miracles, and they might feel a secret satisfaction in their connection with Him, and a mixture of hope and belief that they would gain by the publicity of His works.

6. Then Jesus said unto them, My time is not yet come: but your time is always ready.

S. omits Then: S. is not come.

Vulg. Dicit ergo eis Iesus: Tempus meum nondum advenit.

7. The world cannot hate you; but Me it hateth, because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil.

S. omits of it.

Vulg. quia ego testimonium perhibeo de illo.

8. Go ye up unto this feast: I go not up yet unto this feast;* for My time is not yet full come.

V. unto the feast: S. I go not up unto this feast.

Vulg. Ego autem non ascendo ad diem festum istum, quia meum tempus nondum impletum est.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. vii. 6; Homil. xlviii. Theophylact, in Joan. vii. 6; vol. i. p. 602. Euthymius, in Joan. vii. 6; vol. iv. p. 265. Maldonat, in Joan. vii. 6; vol. ii. p. 643.

* "I go not up unto this Feast—omitting yet; that is, reading okw, not, instead of Textus Receptus okwa, not yet. So also Grb., Trg., Tdf., Mey., Lng., Str., Alf., Am. Rev., after N D K M al. (the whole chap. wanting in A) Syr., Crt., Ital., Vulg., Memph., Arm., Æth., and with express comments, Porph. ap. Hier., Hier., Chrys., Epiph., Cyr. But okwa, not yet, A. V., as also Ln., Wdw., and (unexpectedly) Millig. W. H., after B L T X Δ, the mass of MSS, Italica, Syr., Est., Goth., Theb. Syr., Hier., Syr. Hcl., Bas. The latter is a transparent alteration to evade the early objection of infidels based on the word not, as mentioned by Jerome: 'Christ said He would not go; and then He did what He had formerly said He would not do. Porphyry boasts: he brings the charge of inconsistency and changing.' (Hier. C. Pelag. ii. 17).—McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 717.

"During a stay at Capernaum, His unbelieving brethren, irritated by His sixteen months' avoidance of Jerusalem, urge the immediate transfer of His head-quarters from Galilee, and His public manifestation in Judæa at the approaching Feast of Taber-

9. When He had said these words unto them, He abode still in Galilee.

S. said these words, He Himself abode.

Vulg. Hæc cum dixisset, ipse mansit in Galilæa.

Some¹ have thought that by the words "My time is not yet come," Jesus meant the time of His Death; others² that the time for Him to go up to Jerusalem was not come. It was usual for the people to assemble at Jerusalem a few days before the feast. But by delaying His journey a few days until the multitude had assembled, and by entering Jerusalem privately, unattended by the usual crowd of honest admirers, He would avoid the hatred of the scribes and chief priests. By His constant exposure of their worldliness He had already incurred their bitterest hatred; and if no caution were used in administering fresh fuel to their hatred, they would anticipate the time appointed by the Father, and would put Him to death before the salvation of man was perfected. His brethren had incurred no such hatred by their conduct, and there was therefore no risk in their going up to Jerusalem any time. Their time was always ready.

10. ¶ But when His brethren were gone up, then went He also up unto the feast, not openly, but as it were in secret.

S. omits as it were.

Vulg. non manifeste, sed quasi in occulto.

Jesus was now in Galilee, and it is not stated by what route He went up to Jerusalem: whether He kept on the west side of the Jordan and passed through Samaria, which was the more usual route; or whether He crossed to the east side, going through Peræa, the region on the farther side of the Jordan, and then recrossed the river not far from Jericho. The latter would be the more private, and, as some³ think, the way by which He now went up to Jerusalem.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxiii. p. 87.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. vii. 6; vol. viii. p. 979.

⁴ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. vii. 10; vol. viii. p. 979.

nacles (vv. 2-5). In answer, with a Divine prescience of the true 'going up' to the Passion, He insinuates, as on so many other occasions to unbelievers, the mystic meaning under the veil of the literal, and replies, 'Go ye up unto the feast: as for Me, I go not up unto this feast, because My time is not yet fulfilled.' There is no shadow of contradiction between this and ver. 10; and the incorrect reading which has foisted in the word 'yet' after 'go not up,' as in A. V., misses and mars the sublimity of the utterance. The Lord's time, i.e. for His Death, was fulfilled at the Passover: His going up for manifestation to Jerusalem was, in His eyes and in its deepest meaning, His journey to His Sacrifice on Calvary; and His assertion of 'going not up' unto this feast was His prediction that His journey to the Feast of Tabernacles would not be His final departure from Galilee for the assumption of His glory."—Ibid. p. 459.

The reading of the Versions is conveniently shown in Malan's 'Translation of S. John according to the Eleven Oldest Versions,' p. 96, ed. 1862.

11. Then the Jews sought Him at the feast, and said, Where is He?

12. And there was much murmuring among the people concerning Him: for some said, He is a good man: others said, Nay; but He deceiveth the people.

13. Howbeit no man spake openly of Him for fear of the Jews.

On the first days of the feast they sought Jesus without success. By the very form of their question they expressed their scorn for Him, saying literally, Where is that . . . ?—deceiver or impostor being, as their manner indicated, the word naturally required to complete the sense.

Here, as elsewhere, the people and the Jews are represented as taking opposite sides. The former implied the common people, the multitude, men who had witnessed His miracles, and who spake of Him as their conviction led them. The latter term referred to the rulers of the people, the chief priests, the scribes, and Pharisees. It has been remarked¹ that, when speaking of the enemies of Jesus, S. John seldom distinguishes them by the name of chief priests, elders, or scribes, but rather shrinks from such terms, and prefers to call them by the general expression "the Jews." Those among the multitude who thought Jesus a good man did not dare to speak openly of Him for fear of the Jews. Those who thought Him a deceiver were under no such fear; they spake openly enough.

14. ¶ Now about the midst of the feast Jesus went up into the Temple, and taught.

These words do not necessarily imply that Jesus was absent from Jerusalem at the commencement of the feast, but that He did not appear in the Temple until the middle of the feast.

Some² have supposed that Jesus left Galilee after the departure of His brethren, and arrived at Jerusalem in the middle of the feast, and went to the Temple the same day; others³ that He left Galilee so as to reach Jerusalem for the beginning of the feast, but did not go up to the Temple until the middle of it. The Feast of Tabernacles was not celebrated in the Temple, but in booths erected in the city of Jerusalem, or in the suburbs, and it lasted eight days. It was the custom, at the beginning of the feast, for each man to construct a booth, and to dwell in it during the time of the feast. Either Jesus may have done this for Himself, or He may have dwelt in the booth of some friend or disciple.

We have here in Jesus an example of prudence in avoiding danger, and also of courage in meeting it. During the first half of the feast He shrinks from irritating the enraged Jews, during the last half He teaches boldly in the Temple.

He teaches with such power that He turns their hatred into wonder. Knowing, as many of them must have done, His bringing up, and that He had passed His days in the workshop of Joseph the carpenter, and not in the acquisition of knowledge, they naturally ask, "How knoweth this Man letters, having never learned?" This should have led on the scribes and chief priests to conclude that He must be supernaturally taught by God; that His teaching, which could not be the fruit of human learning, must be the display of Divine knowledge.

15. And the Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this Man letters, having never learned?^a Margin, learning.

S.V. Therefore the Jews.
Vulg. Et mirabantur Iudei.

16. Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not Mine, but His that sent Me.

S.V. Therefore Jesus.
Vulg. Respondit eis Jesus.

The doctrines which Jesus taught were not invented by Him, nor acquired by His labour and study, but they were the promptings of the Divine nature which He shared with the Father, and in which He was One with the Father, the Father who sent Him.

He gives them two tests by which they might prove whether the doctrines which He then taught them were the inventions of a mere man, which they supposed Him to be, or were the dictates of the Godhead. What He then taught them is in harmony with that which God the Father had formerly taught them under the law of Moses; those who formerly did God the Father's will, who were the most devout worshippers of God the Father under the law of Moses, are the very men who now most eagerly accept His doctrines. This is the first test.

It was not their understanding that was in fault, but their will, their heart. The reason why they did not believe in Him was not the hardness of His sayings or the strangeness of His doctrines, but because of their perverted will. Their understanding could easily have been convinced; but it was not so easy to persuade the heart. If any man did God the Father's will, he would know whether the doctrines which Jesus taught were invented by Himself or were commanded by God the Father. The disposition most favourable to belief in Jesus and the reception of His doctrines was a

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. vii. 13; vol. vi. p. 652.

² S. Augustine, in Joan. vii. 14, tract. xxviii.; vol. iii. p. 1627. Theophylact, in Joan. vii. 14; vol. i. p. 694.

^a Having never learned (μη μεμαθηκός).—"Since He has not yet learned; since we know Him to be such a one as has Euthymius, in Joan. vii. 14; vol. iv. p. 269.

³ S. Augustinus, in Joan. vii. 14; vol. ii. p. 647.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. vii. 14; vol. viii. p. 980.

never learned."—WISER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 505.

devout performance of God the Father's will under the former dispensation.

The next test is, that by the doctrines which He taught them He was not seeking His own glory, but the glory of Him who sent Him, the glory of God the Father.

17. If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of Myself.

18. He that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory: but He that seeketh His glory that sent Him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in Him.

S. and He that seeketh.
Vulg. qui autem.

Jesus then objects to them, that though they made a great boast of Moses and of the law of Moses, yet none of them kept the Law; for if they kept the law of Moses they would not go about to kill Him, for the Law forbade murder. The people, evidently ignorant of the design of their rulers, reply that they had no such intention, and that He, in saying so, spake like one possessed with a devil; for a devil only could have instigated Him to impute to them anything so false.

19. Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill Me?^a 20. The people answered and said, Thou hast a devil: who goeth about to kill Thee?

S.V. omit and said.
Vulg. Respondit turba, et dixit: Daemonium habes: quis te quarit interficere?

Jesus replies that He had done one work, He had healed a man on the Sabbath day, and that their surprise and indignation at such a breach of the Sabbath had led them on to seek His life. In order to lessen their indignation, He goes on to draw an argument in defence of His healing the man on the Sabbath from their own practice with regard to circumcision.

21. Jesus answered and said unto them, I have done one work, and ye all marvel.

22. Moses therefore gave unto you circumcision; (not because it is of Moses, but of the fathers;) and ye on the Sabbath day circumcise a man.

S. omits therefore: S. but because it is of the fathers.
Vulg. Propterea Moyses dedit vobis circumcisionem (non quia ex Moyse est, sed ex patribus).

23. If a man on the Sabbath day receive circumcision, that the law of Moses should not be broken; are ye angry at Me, because I have made a man every whit whole on the Sabbath day?

Margin, without breaking the law.

24. Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment.

The law with respect to the observance of the Sabbath, and the law with respect to circumcision, cannot always be both observed. For instance, a child born on the Sabbath day must, according to the command given unto the fathers, be circumcised on the eighth day after its birth; that is, on the following Sabbath. But if this is done, the command which was given to Moses to do no work on the Sabbath day is broken. It is in this case impossible to observe both these commands. One must give way to the other. If the observance of the law of the Sabbath has to give way to the observance of the law with respect to circumcision, surely the observance of the law with respect to the Sabbath should also give way to the observance of God's universal law of charity to the afflicted. If they on the Sabbath day were allowed to perform an operation which required some labour and preparation, and which inflicted pain and suffering, surely Jesus could be allowed to make a man every whit whole on the Sabbath day, especially when that required no servile work, but was performed by His word only.

He concludes His argument by bidding them form their judgment of any work according to the goodness of it, and not according to the condition in life of the man who performs it.

25. Then said some of them of Jerusalem, Is not this He, whom they seek to kill?

26. But, lo, He speaketh boldly, and they say nothing unto Him. Do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Christ?

S. Do the chief priests know? S.V. is the Christ (omit very).
Vulg. Numquid vere cognoverunt principes quia hic est Christus?

27. Howbeit we know this Man whence He is: but when Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence He is.

S. omits but.
Vulg. Christus autem cum venerit, nemo scit unde sit.

As being the chief city in Judaea, and as being the place in which God had chosen to place His name, and to have the

^a Why go ye about to kill Me? (τί με ζητεῖτε ἀποκτείνειν;) — In such passages as John vii. 19, 20, 'Why go ye about to kill Me?' 'Who goeth about to kill Thee?' Acts xxi. 31, 'As they went about to kill him,' it can hardly occur to the English reader that nothing more is meant than 'seek to kill,' as the same phrase (ζητεῖν ἀποκτείνειν) is translated elsewhere, and even in the very context of the first passage (John vii. 25). In Acts xxiv. 5, 6, again the misunderstanding is rendered almost inevitable by the context: 'A mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world . . . who also hath gone about to profane the Temple;' where the expression represents another verb similar to ζητεῖν in meaning, τὸ ἱερόν ἐπειράσκειν βεβηλοῦσαι. — CANON LIGHTFOOT on 'Revision of the New Testament,' p. 178.

Temple erected for His worship, Jesus frequently taught in Jerusalem and wrought many of His mighty works in its streets. Thus many of its inhabitants were convinced by what they heard and saw that He was the Christ, who dared not openly confess their belief in Him for fear of the rulers. Nicodemus was an instance of this in the higher ranks of society.

One great stumbling-block to many of the Jews, and which prevented their believing in Him, was His supposed Birth in Galilee. This was the case with some of these inhabitants of Jerusalem. They seem to have held, what was a very common opinion among the unlearned, that when the Messiah should appear it would be in Bethlehem, that He would appear to them a full-grown man; but as to the time of His Birth, or who were His parents, none would know. The Jews in general thought the Messiah would be an extraordinary prophet raised up by God, but they had no expectation that He would be God Himself. Certain passages in the Scriptures which related to the Divine nature of the Christ, but which they had understood of His Human nature, had probably given rise to this misapprehension. Such, for instance, were Isaiah's words, "Who shall declare His generation?" (liii. 8); and Micah's words, "Whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting" (v. 2). The Jews in general thought the Messiah would be a great prophet, an extraordinary deliverer raised up by God, but they had no expectation that He would be God Himself.

Because they knew, or thought they knew, whence Jesus was—that is, who His parents were—these inhabitants of Jerusalem concluded that He could not be the Christ, whose parents would be unknown. In the most public place in Jerusalem, in the Temple, and with a loudness of voice to be heard by all who were present, Jesus exposes the fallacy of this argument.

28. Then cried Jesus in the Temple as He taught, saying, Ye both know Me, and ye know whence I am: and I am not come of Myself, but He that sent Me is true, whom ye know not.

29. But I know Him: for I am from Him, and He hath sent Me.

S. I am with Him.

Vulg. Ego scio cum: quia ab ipso sum, et ipse me misit.

^a "Will He do more miracles, &c. (οὐ πλεονα σημεῖα ποιήσει:)" —μὴ (μή) is used when a negative answer is presumed or expected, "Will He do more miracles than these?" (that is not conceivable)."

^b WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 533.

^c Officers.—"ὑπηρέτης is a word drawn originally from military matters: he is the rower (from ὑρέσσω, remige) as distinguished from the soldier on board a war-galley; then the performer of any strong and hard labour: then the subordinate official that waits to accomplish the commands of his superior, as the orderly that attends a commander in war. (Xenophon, Cyr. vi. 2, 13.) In this sense, as a minister to perform certain defined functions for Paul and Barnabas, Mark was their ὑπηρέτης (Acts xiii. 5); and

They said they knew Jesus, whence He was; that is, who His parents were. Even supposing they were correct as to the place of His Birth and the name of His parents, which they were not, they were having regard only to His human nature, and quite overlooked, or were ignorant of, His Divine nature. He was both God and Man. He was from the Father, One with the Father, and He was sent into the world: He was born of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

The miracles which induced the straightforward, honest multitude to conclude that Jesus must be the Christ had no such influence on the Pharisees and the chief priests. The people reason thus: it was not foretold that the Christ would perform more miracles than these which Jesus does; therefore Jesus must be the Christ. For instance, Isaiah prophesied that when the Christ should come, "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert" (xxxv. 5). But all these miracles has Jesus wrought. He must therefore be the Christ here foretold. But the Pharisees and chief priests send officers to take Jesus, and probably on the plea of creating disturbances among the people. But they were powerless against Him until the hour appointed for His Death should have fully come.

30. Then they sought to take Him: but no man laid hands on Him, because His hour was not yet come.

31. And many of the people believed on Him, and said, When Christ cometh, will He do more miracles than these which this Man hath done?^a

S. than those which this Man doeth.

Vulg. numquid plura signa faciet quam quæ hic facit?

32. ¶ The Pharisees heard that the people murmured such things concerning Him; and the Pharisees and the chief priests sent officers^b to take Him.

S. Now the Pharisees.

Vulg. Ambulant Pharisei.

Then, in the hearing of the officers who were sent to apprehend Him, Jesus declares that at present they had no power to take Him; that He should remain with them a little in this official sense of licitor, apparitor, and the like, we find the word constantly, indeed predominantly, used in the New Testament (Matt. v. 25; Luke iv. 20; John vii. 32, xviii. 18; Acts v. 22). The mention of both δοῦλοι and ὑπηρέται together (John xviii. 18) would be alone sufficient to indicate that a difference is there observed between them; and from this difference it will follow that he who struck the Lord on the face (John xviii. 22) could not be, as some have supposed, the same whose ear the Lord had but just healed (Luke xvi. 51), seeing that this last was a δοῦλος, that profane and petulant striker a ὑπηρέτης of the High Priest."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 32.

longer; and that when His Death should come, it would not be against His will, but by a voluntary surrender of Himself He should "go" to the Father.

33. Then said Jesus unto them, Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto Him that sent Me.

S.V. omit unto them.
Vulg. Dixit ergo eis Jesus.

34. Ye shall seek Me, and shall not find Me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come.

Many interpretations have been given of these words, none of which seem entirely satisfactory. It may be that the stress is to be laid on the latter part of them, on the words "Ye shall not find Me." Jesus may have meant no more than that, if they should seek Him, they would not find Him, because He should no longer be with them in bodily presence, at least in the sense in which He had been present with them hitherto.

35. Then said the Jews among themselves, Whither will He go, that we shall not find Him?^a will He go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles,^b and teach the Gentiles?

S. omits among themselves.
Vulg. Diserunt ergo Iudei ad semetipsos.

36. What manner of saying is this that He said, Ye shall seek Me, and shall not find Me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come?

The Jews did not understand the expression used by Jesus,

^a We shall not find Him (ποῦ οὗτος μέλλει πορεύεσθαι (λέγαν), ὅτι ἡμεῖς οὐκ εὕρομεν αὐτόν).—"The future indicative is quite according to rule: 'Whither will He go, that (according to His statement, verse 34) we shall not find Him?' In οὐκ εὕρομεν, the words uttered by Him (verse 34) are repeated in tense and mood of the direct discourse."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 315.

"We find in the New Testament several regularly-framed verbal forms, which are rejected as unclassical by ancient grammarians, on the ground that they do not occur in Greek authors, or only in the later. Among such forms are classed a number of futures active, for which standard writers use future middle; instance, future βέβαια, John vii. 38, for βέβομαι."—Idem, pp. 94 and 101.

^b The dispersed among the Gentiles (ἡ διασπορά τῶν Ἑλλήνων).—"The dispersion (the dispersed) among the Greeks."

"I confess 'Ἑλληνες in the Apostles' writings does very frequently denote the Gentiles; but here I would take Ἑλλήνων in its proper signification for the Greeks. It is doubtful indeed whether ἡ διασπορά Ἑλλήνων ought to be understood 'the dispersed Greeks,' or 'the Jews dispersed among the Greeks.' There was no nation under heaven so dispersed and diffused throughout the world as these, both Greeks and Jews, were."

"Into what countries the Jews were scattered, the writings both sacred and profane do frequently instance. So that if the words are to be taken strictly of the Greeks, they bear this sense with them, 'Is He going here and there, amongst the Greeks, so widely and remotely dispersed in the world?'"

"If of the Jews (which is most generally accounted by ex-

"Him that sent Me," as referring to God the Father; and they ask among themselves whether Jesus will go and teach the Jews who were scattered over the various countries belonging to the Gentiles. The Jews of Jerusalem seemed to have held their brethren who were dispersed among other nations cheap, as being not so highly favoured as themselves with respect to the privilege of worshipping in the Temple and in the land of the patriarchs, and as liable to be infected with the heretical customs or opinions of the different countries in which they dwelt.

These words do not imply that the truth, that the doctrines of Jesus should be preached to the Gentiles, was beginning to dawn on them.

The Feast of Tabernacles lasted eight days, and the last was the principal day of the feast. God had thus commanded Moses, "Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord: on the eighth day shall be a holy convocation unto you; and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord: it is a solemn assembly; and ye shall do no servile work therein" (Levit. xxiii. 36). On the last day of the feast, prior to the departure of the people to their respective homes in the different parts of Palestine and elsewhere, Jesus makes one more appeal to them.

It has been generally held that in the following verses an allusion is made to the practice of carrying a pitcher of water in triumphant procession from the pool of Siloam to the Temple, accompanied with the blowing of trumpets and the singing of the Psalms of Hallel (Ps. cxiii. to cxviii.). This ceremony was observed on the first seven days of the feast, not on the eighth; but it was so prominent a feature in the feast that a reference to it would be sure to arrest the attenpositors), then I would suppose the διασπορά Ἑλλήνων set in distinction to the διασπορά Βαβυλωνίων καὶ Περσῶν. That distinction between the Hebrews and the Hellenists explains the thing. The Jews of the first dispersion—viz. into Babylon, Assyria, and the countries adjacent—are called Hebrews, because they used the Hebrew or Trans-Euphratesian language. How they came to be dispersed into those countries we all know well enough, viz. that they were led away captive by the Babylonians and Persians. But those that were scattered amongst the Greeks used the Greek tongue, and were called Hellenists. It is not easy to tell upon what account or by what accident they came to be dispersed amongst the Greeks or other nations about. Those that lived in Palestine, they were Hebrews indeed as to their language, but they were not of the διασπορά, the dispersion, either to one place or another, because they dwelt in their own proper country. The Babylonish dispersion was esteemed by the Jews the more noble, the more famous, and the more holy of any other. The land of Babylon is in the same degree of purity with the land of Israel. (Rabbi Solom. in Gittin, fol. 26, 1.) The Jewish offspring in Babylon is more valuable than that among the Greeks, even purer than that in Judaea itself. (Kiddush, fol. 69, 2.) Whence for a Palestine Jew to go to the Babylonish dispersion was to go to a people and country equal, if not superior, to his own. But to go to the dispersion among the Greeks, was to go into unclean regions, where the very dust of the land defiled them: it was to go to an inferior race of Jews stained in their blood; it was to go into nations most heathenised."—LIGHTFOOT on John vii. 35; vol. ii. p. 558.

tion of the Jews at any time, and especially on the very day after it had been observed for seven days.

37. In the last day, that great day of the feast,^a Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink.^b

^a Let him come and drink.

^b Vulg. Si quis sitit, veniat ad me, et bibat.

* In the last day, that great day of the feast.—“The Evangelist speaks according to a received opinion of that people; for from Divine institution it does not appear that the last day of the feast had any greater mark set upon it than the first; nay, it might seem of lower consideration than all the rest. For on the first day were offered thirteen young bullocks upon the altar; on the second, twelve; and so fewer and fewer, till on the seventh day it came to seven, and on this eighth and last day of the feast there was but one only; as also for the whole seven days there were offered each day fourteen lambs, but on this eighth day seven only. (Numb. xxix.) So that if the number of the sacrifices add anything to the dignity of the day, this last day will seem the most inconsiderable, and not the μεγάλη, the great day of the feast.

“But what the Jews’ opinion was about the matter, and this day, we may learn from themselves.”

Lightfoot then quotes from several ancient Jewish authorities to show that they believed that the seventy bullocks which were offered during the seven days of this feast were offered in behalf of the nations of the world, and that the single bullock which was offered on the eighth day was offered for the Jewish nation, and concludes:

“Hence, therefore, this last day of the feast grew into such esteem in that nation above the other days: because on the other seven days they thought supplications and sacrifices were offered, not so much for themselves as for the nations of the world; but the solemnities of the eighth day were wholly on their own behalfs. And hence the determination and finishing of the feast when the seven days were over, and the beginning, as it were, of a new one on the eighth day. For

“They did not reckon the eighth day as included within the feast, but a festival day separately and by itself.

“On this day they did not use their booths, nor their branches of palms, nor their pome-granates; but they had their offering of water upon this day as well as the rest.”—LIGHTFOOT on John vii. 37; vol. ii. p. 559.

^b If any man thirst, &c.—“Among the many varieties of solemnity and festivity used at the Feast of Tabernacles, there was the pouring out of water fetched out of the fountain Siloam with the wine of the drink-offering; and at night their most transportant joyfulness, expressed by their singing, dancing, and the like jocund gestures, for that pouring out of water; which by some, in Jerus. Succah, fol. 55, col. 1, is interpreted to signify the pouring out of the Holy Ghost. The consideration of this illustrates ver. 37, 38, where it is said, that on the last and great day of the feast Jesus cried, ‘If any man thirst,’ &c.; ‘He that believeth on Me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water.’ Upon which words many believed on Him, because they had seen already so fair evidence of the gifts of the Spirit in the powerful works of Himself and His disciples. And yet the text says here, ‘The Holy Ghost was not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified,’ a far greater gift of that being yet behind.”—LIGHTFOOT, ‘Harmony of the New Testament,’ sect. lix.; vol. i. p. 243.

“Out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water.”—“To this offering of water perhaps our Saviour’s words may have some respect, for it was only at this feast that it was used, and none other.

“They filled a golden phial containing three logs, out of Siloam. When they came to the Water-gate (a gate of the Temple so called, as many would have it, because that water which was fetched from

38. He that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water.^c ^c Vulg. sicut dicit Scriptura.

39. (But this spake He of the Spirit,^d which they that believe on Him should receive: for Siloam was brought through it), they sounded their trumpets and sung. Then a priest went up by the ascent of the altar, and, turning to the left, there were two silver vessels . . . one with water, the other with wine; he poured some of the water into the wine, and some of the wine into the water, and so performed the service (Succah).

“Whosoever hath not seen the rejoicing that was upon the drawing of this water, hath never seen any rejoicing at all.” (Succah, fol. 51, l.)

“I. They bring for it the authority of the prophet Isaiah, xii. 3. ‘Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation.’

“This rejoicing they called the rejoicing of the Law, or for the Law: for by waters they often understand the Law, as Isaiah lv. 1, and several other places, and from thence the rejoicing for these waters.

“II. But they add, moreover, that this drawing and offering of water signifies the pouring out of the Holy Spirit.

“Drawing of water, therefore, took its rise from the words of Isaiah; they rejoiced over the waters as a symbol and figure of the Law, and they looked for the Holy Spirit upon this joy of theirs.

“And now let us reflect upon this passage of our Saviour, ‘Whosoever believeth in Me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water.’ They agree with what He had said before to the Samaritan woman, chap. iv. 14, and both expressions upon the occasion of drawing water.

“I. Our Saviour calls them to a belief in Him from their own boast and glorying in the Law; and therefore I rather think those words καὶ ὅς ἐστιν ἡ γραφή, ‘as the Scripture hath said,’ should relate to the foregoing clause, ‘Whosoever believeth in Me,’ as the Scripture hath spoken about believing in Isaiah xxviii. 16; Habak. ii. 4; Amos v. 6.

“II. Let these words, then, of our Saviour be set in opposition to this rite and usage in the Feast of Tabernacles, of which we have been speaking. ‘Have you such wonderful rejoicing at drawing a little water from Siloam? He that believes in Me, whole rivers of living waters shall flow out of his own belly.’ Do you think that the waters mentioned in the prophets do signify the Law? They do indeed denote the Holy Spirit which the Messiah will dispense to those that believe in Him; and do you expect the Holy Spirit from the Law, or from your rejoicing in the Law? ‘The Holy Spirit is of faith, and not of the Law.’ (Gal. iii. 2.)”—LIGHTFOOT on John vii. 38; vol. ii. p. 560.

^d Spirit.—“In Scripture the same word ‘Spirit’ is used indiscriminately, and (if I may so speak) used confusedly, both for the Holy Ghost and for His gifts. Even He Himself is called a gift in the Hymn, viz. ‘Altissimi Donum Dei,’ as if He had really no personality; and much more is it common with S. Paul to speak of His gifts and graces as if identical with Himself, as if what is merely His work were really He. Thus we read of Christians ‘walking in the Spirit,’ of ‘the Spirit of adoption,’ of ‘the law of the Spirit of life,’ of ‘giving’ and ‘receiving the Spirit.’ Nor are we without some instances of a parallel usage in Scripture, as regards our Lord’s titles. Thus ‘Christ’ is said to be ‘born in our hearts,’ and ‘the engrafted Word’ is said to ‘save our souls.’ And so, again, our members are said to be ‘members of Christ,’ and our Lord is said to be persecuted in His disciples.”—DR. J. H. NEWMAN, ‘Theological Tracts,’ p. 174.

the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified.)^a

S. omits Holy: V. was not yet given.
Vulg. nondum enim erat Spiritus datus.

If any man has an insatiable longing for the salvation of his soul, a longing only to be described by the intense desire which a man has to supply the thirst of the body, let him go unto Jesus and drink, let him believe in Him and learn His doctrine, and he shall receive the life, the Spirit which He has to impart.

No single place in Scripture can be pointed out in which are found the very words which Jesus here says the Scripture saith. There are several passages which contain a portion of these words, but none so distinctly as to be identified as the passage to which He refers. The most probable opinion appears to be that Jesus did not refer to any particular words of Scripture, but to the sense.¹ As His reference is a general one to "Scripture," and not any particular book or prophet, it will bear this meaning without the least straining of His words. The sense of our Saviour's words is contained in many passages. The following among many others bear some resemblance to His words: "When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the Lord will hear them, I the God of Israel will not forsake them. I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water" (Isa. xli. 17, 18). "For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour out My Spirit upon thy seed, and My blessing upon thy offspring" (xlv. 3). "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price" (lv. 1). "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; from all your filthiness and from all your idols will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh.

And I will put My spirit within you, and cause you to walk in My statutes, and ye shall keep My judgments and do them" (Ezek. xxxvi. 25-27). "A fountain of gardens, a well of living waters, and streams from Lebanon" (Cant. iv. 15).

By the term² "belly," it is thought that He meant the heart; and by the "stream of living water," the many and various gifts of the Holy Spirit. Jesus is Himself the source, the spring, the fountain of the living water: for the heart is to the soul, to the inner man, what the belly is to the body. From the heart of him that believeth in Jesus shall flow no scanty trickling drops, nor even a stream, but streams of living water, abundance and diversities of the gifts of the Spirit (1 Cor. xii. 4).³ The true believer in Jesus will be actuated by the influences of the Holy Spirit through his union with Jesus, the author, the source and fount of life. His life will be a continual exhibition, a daily bringing forth of the fruits of Christian charity. But there must be the same longing, eager desire to gain this living water, these gifts of the Spirit, as there is to obtain water to allay the parching thirst of the body.

The Evangelist states a fact, and adds the reason for it.⁴ The Holy Ghost was not yet given—that is, was not given visibly and in the fulness in which it would be on the day of Pentecost, because Jesus was not yet glorified. The faithful under the old dispensation were partakers of the gifts of the Holy Spirit, but not in the same degree as they were who lived after Christ's Ascension into heaven. The outpouring of the Holy Spirit was thus made the reward of His Passion, the fruit of the travail of His soul (Isa. liii. 11, 12). "When He ascended up on high, He led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men" (Ephes. iv. 8). By the outpouring of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, when devout Jews from every nation under heaven were assembled at Jerusalem, the knowledge of the great mysteries of the Incarnation was dispensed throughout the world. The disciples of Jesus might not be in a state of mind before His Ascension to receive such "gifts." Their views were too low and carnal, and they clung too much to His visible presence among them.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxv. p. 101.

Maldonatus, in Joan. vii. 38; vol. ii. p. 666.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. vii. 38; vol. viii. p. 985.

² S. Gregory Nyssen, in Cantic. v. 14, Homil. xiv.; vol. i. p. 1076.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. vii. 38, Homil. li.

Theophylact, in Joan. vii. 38; vol. i. p. 611.

Euthymius, in Joan. vii. 38; vol. iv. p. 287.

^a Ver. 39.—"Lachmann and Tischendorf omit holy (ἅγιος). Tregelles encloses it within brackets: Lachmann adds given (δεδωμένον).—SCRIVENER, 'New Testament,' 1877.

"Proclivi Scriptiori præstat ardua" the more difficult the reading the more likely it is to be genuine. It would seem more probable that the copyist tried to explain an obscure passage, or to relieve a hard construction, than to make that perplexed which before was easy: thus, in John vii. 39, Lachmann's addition of δεδομένον to οὕτω ἦν πνεῦμα ἅγιον is very improbable, though ³ Origen, in Numb. xxi. 16, Homil. xii.; vol. ii. p. 656.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. vii. 38, Homil. li.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. vii. 38; vol. vi. p. 749.

S. Hilary Pict. in Psal. lxxv. 9; vol. i. p. 421.

S. Jerome, Epist. cxx. (alias 150), ad Hedibian, cap. ix.; vol. i. p. 996.

⁴ S. Leo, Sermo de Pentecoste, ii. 8; vol. i. p. 411.

countenanced by Cod. B and (of course) by several of the chief versions.—Ibid., Introduction, p. 436, ed. 1874.

On the other hand, McClellan thus concludes his examination of the passage: "We contend, therefore, even if we be alone, that the genuine reading is the full one, The Holy Spirit was not yet given."—MCCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 717.

The reading of the principal versions may be seen at a glance in Malan's 'Gospel of S. John translated from the Eleven Oldest Versions,' ch. vii. 39; page 166.

But His Crucifixion, His Resurrection, His instruction during the forty days, and His Ascension into heaven, had prepared their hearts for the reception of the Holy Spirit in its fullness.

40. ¶ Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is the Prophet.^a

S. Some of the people: S. these His sayings: V. these sayings.
Vulg. Ex illarum turba cum audissent hos sermones ejus.

41. Others said, This is the Christ. But some said, Shall Christ come out of Galilee?^b

But some said: S. Others said.
Vulg. Quidam autem dicebant.

42. Hath not the Scripture said, That Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, where David was?

43. So there was a division among the people because of Him.

44. And some of them would have taken Him; but no man laid hands on Him.

S. Some of them said they should take Him.

Jesus had wrought the very same works, and all the works, which the Prophets had foretold that the Christ when He came should work. He had opened the eyes of the blind and the ears of the deaf. He had made the lame man to leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb to sing (Isa. xxxv. 5). The one and only point which appeared to oppose His claim to be Christ was that, as they thought, He was born in Galilee, and the prophet Micah had declared that the Christ should be born in Bethlehem (Micah v. 2). Instead of examining into this apparent contradiction, and learning from Jesus Himself, they rested in ignorance of the real state of the case, and continued their opposition, the people actuated by indifference and their rulers by malice.

It was among the people that a division in favour of Jesus was made. Some accused Him as a deceiver and others took up His defence. There was no division among the rulers. As a body they remained opposed to Him from first to last.

^a This is the Prophet (οὗτος ἐστὶν ἀληθῶς ὁ προφήτης).—"Connected with the title of the Messiah is that of the Prophet, who occupied a large place in the Messianic horizon of the Jews—the Prophet whom Moses had foretold, conceived by some to be the Messiah Himself, by others an attendant in His train. In one passage only (John vii. 40) is ὁ προφήτης so used, rightly given in our Version. In the rest (John i. 21, 25; vi. 14) its force is weakened by the exaggerated rendering, that prophet."—CASSON LIGHTFOOT on 'Revision of the New Testament,' p. 102.

^b Shall Christ come out of Galilee? (μή γὰρ ἐκ τῆς Γαλιλαίας ὁ Χριστὸς ἔρχεται:).—"The essentially inferential force of γὰρ (ἔπειτα) is in many passages perceptible: 'Do you then think that the Messiah is to come out of Galilee? You surely do not (quum recte putatis, Messiam) &c.' The peculiar force of such questions

The officers who were sent by the Pharisees to take Jesus had probably been observing Him for some time, either watching for a convenient opportunity to seize Him, or because their intention to do so had been gradually weakened as they listened to His instruction. They are mentioned as sent to take Him (verse 32).

45. ¶ Then came the officers to the chief priests and Pharisees; and they said unto them, Why have ye not brought Him?

S. and they say.
Vulg. et dixerunt eis illi.

46. The officers answered, Never man spake like this Man.

S. But the officers: S. Never man spake thus as this Man speaketh: V. Never man spake thus.
Vulg. Responderunt ministri: Nunquam sic locutus est homo, sicut hic homo.

47. Then answered them the Pharisees, Are ye also deceived?

S. The Pharisees answered them.
Vulg. Responderunt ergo eis Pharisei.

48. Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on Him?

S. Doth any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believe on Him?
Vulg. Numquid ex principibus aliquis credidit in eum, aut ex Phariseis?

49. But this people who knoweth not the Law^c are cursed.

Though the reason which these officers give is itself a confutation of their employers, that is, of those who sent them, they boldly state that the reason why they had not brought Jesus was their admiration for Him. A conviction may also have been lurking in their minds that they had not the power to apprehend Him, that they were withheld from this by some invisible restraint stronger than the mere force of His gracious words.

Those who did not know the Law believe in Him who gave the Law, and those whose office it was to teach the Law did not believe in Him. When the Pharisees see that they had not convinced the officers either by any reason which their with γὰρ consists in their being prompted by the very words of the other party, or by the circumstances; a right being thus conferred to demand an answer."—WISER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 467.

^c They said unto them (εἶπον αὐτοῖς ἐκεῖνοι).—"Εκεῖνοι relates to the members of the Sanhedrim (ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ φαρισαῖοι), regarded, through the collective force of the article, as one college. In such a combination, οὗτος refers to the more remote subject, and ἐκεῖνος to the nearest."—Ibid., p. 170.

^d This people who knoweth not the Law (ὁ ὄχλος οὗτος, ὁ μὴ γινώσκων τὴν νόμον).—"ὡ γινώσκων conveys a censure, ὁ γινώσκων would be a simple predicate: 'unacquainted with the Law.'"—Ibid., p. 308.

reply might contain, or by the contemptuous tone of it, they attempt to frighten them by quoting the curses of the Law against those who continue not in its precepts. This, like many garbled quotations, misrepresents the sense. The words of Moses are, "Curseth be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them" (Deut. xxvii. 26); or, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the Law to do them" (Gal. iii. 10). But the Pharisees imply that those who forsake the law of Moses in order to believe in Jesus are cursed.

50. Nicodemus saith unto them, (he that came to Jesus by night, being one of them,) Margin, him.

S. But Nicodemus said unto them, being one of them.
Vulg. Dixit Nicodemus ad eos, ille qui venit ad eum nocte, qui unus erat ex ipsis.

51. Doth our law judge any man, before it hear him,^a and know what he doeth?

S. before it hear and know.
Vulg. nisi prius audierit ab ipso, et cognoverit quid faciat?

52. They answered and said unto him, Art thou also of Galilee? Search, and look:^b for out of Galilee ariseth no prophet.

Vulg. Scrutare scripturas, et vide.

These words appear to contain an unusual depth of scorn and contempt, and probably mean, Art thou of those Galileans^c who believe in this Galilean?

Nicodemus does not announce himself a believer in Jesus; but he lays down a general principle sanctioned by the law of Moses and by the law of nature. His cautious answer may have been dictated by a constitutional timidity, or by a hope that if the Pharisees would only have the fairness to examine the doctrine and the claims of Jesus before they condemned Him they would not wish to condemn Him; that, like the officers who were sent to apprehend Him, they, too, would be filled with admiration for Him.

But the Pharisees, who are blinded by envy and spite, see not the want of truth, or the falsehood as well as the irrelevancy, of their answer to Nicodemus. Many prophets had come out of Galilee. But if not, that was no reason why prophets should not still arise in Galilee. Deborah the prophetess was from the country of Galilee. She dwelt between Ramah and Bethel in Mount Ephraim (Judges iv.). Anna the prophetess was from Galilee, of the tribe of Aser (Luke ii. 36). The prophet Jonah was of Gathhepher, a town of Lower Galilee in Zebulun (2 Kings xiv. 25). There is also a general consent among commentators that the prophecies of Hosea were delivered in the kingdom of Israel. It was also anciently believed that Hosea belonged to the tribe of Issachar, which would be included in the more modern district of Galilee. Nahum was born in Elkosh, a small village in Galilee; hence he was called Nahum the Elkoshite (i. 1). The prophet Elijah the Tishbite was born, according to some, at Tishbe in the tribe of Naphtali, in Galilee; according to others, in Gilead, on the east side of ^a "Before it hear him (ἐὰν μὴ ἀκούσῃ), where ὁ νόμος, personified as a judge, is to be repeated."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 545.

^b Search and look (ἐρευνᾶσαν καὶ ἰδε).—"When two imperatives are connected by καὶ, sometimes the first contains the condition (supposition) under which the action indicated by the second will take place, or the second expresses an inevitable result. The expression ἐρευνᾶσαν καὶ ἰδε is more forcible than if it had been καὶ ἰδε. The result of the search is so certain, that the exhortation to search is felt as equivalent to an invitation to look at, behold, what is asserted."—Ibid., p. 327.

^c Galileans.—"There never has been a time in which this beautiful province (Galilee) was not peopled by a mixture of races from the East and the West.

"At the time when our Lord was a child in Nazareth, one of its midland towns—lying on the slope of a hill about four miles from the capital, Sepphoris—Galilee was inhabited by a population of Greeks, Jews, Egyptians, Cypriotes, Italians, Arabs: men speaking separate idioms, following hostile fashions, and kneeling to rival gods.

"Thus the people of Galilee had become a mixed though not a blended community. Most of the reapers and sowers of grain were of Syrian stock: of the Canaanite rather than of the Arab branch. The vine-dressers and husbandmen were mostly Jews; but Jews who were considered by the men of Judah as provincials. Many of the artisans, most of the traders dwelling in towns, were descended from those princes of Tyre and Sidon who had been driven by Alexander and Pompey from the sea. Other artisans and traders had come in the ranks of foreign armies from Antioch, Alexandria, and Rome. In cities which lay along the coast, like Ptolemais and Tyre, and in strong inland forts like Sepphoris and Gadara, lived the more supple and artistic Greeks,—the workers in gold and marble, the rhetoricians and painters, the orators, dancers, amatory poets, the professors of every art, and, as the Jews considered them, the propagators of every vice. From Italy, from Gaul and Spain, a more robust, and perhaps a more licentious rabble had been poured over the country to eat it up; legionaries, lawyers, gladiators, courtesans, charioteers, procurators and police. But the most picturesque figure in this picturesque group has still to be named. Through the midst of these peasants of the soil, these Jews of the hamlet, these Greek and Egyptian strangers of the city, roved the wild and pastoral tribes, the untamed children of Ishmael and Esau, men who still dwelt under their black tents, driving their flocks and herds from valley to valley, coming with the verdure, going with the dearth, and owing no allegiance to either Cæsar or to his tributary kings.

"The only tongue that could pretend to be a common vehicle for all these families was that of Greece. Every man of a higher grade than a hewer of wood and a drawer of water, every man who had to move about the province, who had to deal with the stranger, to appeal in a law court, to consult a physician, to discharge any public function—in fact, the merchant, citizen, priest, and courtier—was compelled to practise Greek. It was the only medium of the court, the college, and the camp. In the time when our Lord was a child at Nazareth, this noble language had that predominance in Galilee which English has acquired in Calcutta, French in Algiers, and Turkish in Stamboul."—DIXON'S 'Holy Land,' vol. i. pp. 187–195.

the Jordan. Elisha was born at Abel-Meholah, in the northern part of the valley of the Jordan. Though neither of these were strictly in the district called Galilee, they were neither of them in the country of Judæa, nor in the kingdom of Judah, but both in the kingdom of Israel.

Nicodemus simply asks that they should hear Him before they condemn Him. The answer of the Pharisees shows that they had already condemned Him, and unheard. It was impossible, they said, that He could be the Christ, because the Christ should come from Bethlehem in Judah, and Jesus was born in Galilee.

53. And every man went unto his own house.

S.V. omit this verse.
 Vulg. Et reversi sunt unusquisque in domum suam.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER VIII.

Chap. vii. 53, and chap. viii. 1-11.—The evidence is as follows.

"I. Against the passage:—

"1. \aleph A, B, C, T, L, \bar{X} , Δ , 33 omit it. (A, C are deficient in this place, but the hiatus is not large enough to have contained the passage. L leaves a small gap; as also does Δ , the scribe of which began to write the first words of chap. viii. 12 consecutively after chap. vii. 52, and then erased them.)

"E, M, A, S, II, &c., have the passage, but with an asterisk or obelus in the margin.

"Several cursives place the passage at the end of the Gospel, and one (69) after S. Luke xxi.

"2. Vet. Lat. a, b², f, l^{*}, q; Syrr. P, H; Theb.; Mempb. (oldest codd.); Goth.; Arm. (oldest codd.) omit the passage.

"3. It is nearly certain, either because they do not allude to the passage where the subject almost demands it, or because their commentaries go on consecutively and yet pass over this section, that Origen, Tertullian, Chrysostom, Cyril Alex., Theodore Mops., Theophylact, and other writers were ignorant of it.

"4. (a) The authorities which give the passage present great variations of reading, which is generally suspicious.

"(b) The style is entirely unlike S. John's. There are numerous words and expressions which do not occur anywhere else in his writings; while, on the other hand, his special peculiarities of style do not appear in this piece of narrative.

"(c) It gratuitously breaks into the middle of a narrative, which runs on continuously but for this interpolation.

"II. On the other hand:—

"1. D has it, but in a somewhat different form. F, G, H, K, U, r, and the mass of cursives have it.

"2. Vet. Lat. b^{*}, c, e, ff², g, l (mg.); Vulgate; \mathcal{A} eth.; Syrr. J., &c., have it.

"3. The earliest writing in which the passage is recognized is the Apostolic Constitutions. S. Jerome testifies that it was found in many Greek and Latin codices; and S. Augustine defends it.

"Here the evidence against the passage is far stronger than in the case of the end of S. Mark's Gospel. Scrivener says (Introduction, p. 531, ed. 1874), 'On all intelligent principles of mere criticism the passage must needs be abandoned.' That is to say, we cannot allow it to be S. John's writing. The style and contents, indeed, in both of which it is utterly different from any of the narratives of the apocryphal gospels, convey an irresistible impression of genuineness; and it is probable that we have a piece of apostolic narrative, upon which the consent of the Universal Church has set the seal of canonicity," &c.—C. E. HAMMOND, 'Textual Criticism,' p. 97.

See also Scrivener's 'Introduction,' p. 531, ed. 1874; Canon Lightfoot, 'Contemporary Review,' Oct. 1875, p. 846.

On the other hand, see McClellan's earnest and elaborate defence (New Test. pp. 719-727) of this passage, which is too long to be inserted here, and which would suffer by condensation. His concluding words only can be given.

"Review of Internal Evidence.—Thus the internal evidence, penetrating deeper than the external, is altogether decisive. Connection, context, and contents unite to establish the passage in its present position as an integral part of the original Gospel of S. John.

"Conclusion.—Taking therefore both the external and internal evidence together, we have a body of proof in favour of the section which is perfectly irresistible. And whereas, on the one hand, the inquiry has revealed that the interpolation of the passage (whether as a 'true history' or an 'apocryphal legend' matters not)—that its interpolation, we say, if spurious, in so many different directions, and into S. John's Gospel, is utterly inexplicable; on the other hand, it has furnished us, not with 'a desperate resource,' such as Alford confesses himself driven to adopt, but with a natural solution which fully explains all the present phenomena. That solution (essentially the same as that of Lange and others, after SS. Ambrose and Augustine, but differing in important details) is this: That from about the middle of the second century, as well from a consideration of the special appropriateness of its consolation and counsel to the case of penitents as from a desire to guard against and restrain any abuse of the Saviour's indulgence, the passage was omitted from public reading, saving the greater part (chap. viii. 3-11) on special occasions as a 'Gospel for Penitents;' that, in consequence of this comparative disuse in the Churches, the passage, whilst (as regards the said part) inserted in most of the Lectionaries, was in a gradually increasing number of newly-made copies of the New Testament removed to the end of S. John's Gospel, chap. vii. 53-viii. 2 generally marking at once the beginning of the common omission and the original connection; that, as asceticism and a severer ecclesiastical discipline developed, the whole passage, at first merely transposed, was in many and perhaps most new MSS. entirely omitted, and in ecclesiastical teaching rarely, if ever, referred to (a warning to be taken to heart by modern Churches); until at length, from about the end of the fourth century, chiefly through the greater faithfulness and courage of the great Latin Fathers, the passage began to re-assert and gradually to regain in different directions its rightful position and authority. This solution, we have said, is natural, and explains all the phenomena. It explains the omission in certain MSS. and Versions, and the partial appearance in Lectionaries. It explains the silence of the early African Fathers and the Greek Commentators, and the hesitation of those who (like Theophylact) were influenced by such silence. Tertullian in particular, having lapsed into Montanism, would not be likely to give his orthodox opponents the advantage of a passage which, from mistaken and unfaithful prudence, they themselves had concealed. Finally, it explains the unusual variety of readings; transcribers, from the nature of the case, having extraordinary temptation (perhaps in some instances a necessity) to reform their copies at discretion, and there being at the same time an extraordinary lack of the usual safeguards."—McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 726.

See also Dean Burgon, 'The Last Twelve Verses of S. Mark's Gospel,' p. 219.

"I am convinced that the first occasion of the omission of those memorable verses was the lectionary practice of the Primitive Church, which, on Whit-Sunday, read from S. John vii. 37 to viii. 12, leaving out the twelve verses in question. Those verses, from the nature of their contents (as Augustine declares), easily came to be viewed with dislike or suspicion. The passage, however, is as old as the second century, for it is found in certain copies of the old Latin. Moreover, Jerome deliberately gave it a place in the Vulgate."—DEAN BURGON on 'The Last Twelve Verses of S. Mark,' p. 219.

CHAPTER VIII.

[1. Christ delivereth the woman taken in adultery. 12. He preacheth Himself the Light of the world, and justifieth His doctrine : 33. answereth the Jews that boasted of Abraham, 59. and conveyeth Himself from their cruelty.]

[Vulg. Mulierem in adulterio deprehensam scribas in terra abscondit ab accusatoribus : dicit se lucem mundi, et phariseos in peccato suo mortuos : qui e'tiam vere sint ejus discipuli, quare scire aut liberi : dicit illos neque ex Ivo neque ex Abraham, sed ex patre diabolo esse, qui veritatem dicenti non crederent : blasphemantibus dicit se dominum non habere, sed Patrem honorificare, et antequam Abraham fieret, se esse ; volentibusque eum lapidare, auferens sui prospectum exit de Templo.]

ON the last day of the Feast of Tabernacles Jesus had been teaching the people in the Temple. At the end of the last chapter it is said, "And every man went unto his own house ;" and in the beginning of this it is said, "Jesus went unto the Mount of Olives." The probability is that, from fear of the Pharisees, none of the Jews dared to invite Him to their house, and that He retired to the Mount of Olives, where, as on other occasions, He spent the night in prayer. Bethany, where Lazarus and his sisters Mary and Martha dwelt, was "at the Mount of Olives" (Mark xi. 1); and unless they supplied Him with food, or unless His disciples had procured it in the city, He would be fasting.

In the introductory note are given reasons for believing that the section containing the account of the adulterous woman (chap. vii. 53 to chap. viii. 1-11) formed part of the original Gospel of S. John, and then that either from its own peculiar nature, or from its forming the close of a Church Lection, it was gradually dropped out of most of the MSS. until it was restored to its place in the fourth century by the great Latin Fathers,¹ S. Ambrose, S. Augustine, and S. Jerome; and that the latter was so convinced that it formed part of S. John's original Gospel, that he both referred to it in controversy with the heretics of his day, and also gave it a place in the Vulgate.

1. Jesus went unto the Mount of Olives.

S.V. omit all these verses (1-11).

Vulg. Jesus autem perrexit in montem Oliveti.

2. And early in the morning He came again

¹ S. Ambrose, de Spiritu Sancto, iii. 3; vol. iii. p. 781.

— Epist. xxv. (alias 58); vol. iii. p. 1041.

— Epist. xxvi. (alias 76); vol. iii. p. 1042.

S. Augustine, in Joan. viii. 1-11, tract. xxxiii.; vol. iii. p. 1648.

^a Let him first cast a stone at her (πρώτως τὸν λίθον ἐπ' αὐτῇ βαλέτω).—^a I regard it as a circumstance rather in favour of the authenticity of these verses that λίθον has the article prefixed.

into the Temple, and all the people came unto Him; and He sat down, and taught them.

Vulg. Et diluculo iterum venit in templum, et omnis populus venit ad eum, et sedens docebat eos.

3. And the scribes and Pharisees brought unto Him a woman taken in adultery; and when they had set her in the midst, Vulg. Adducunt autem scribe et pharisei mulierem in adulterio deprehensam : et statuerunt eam in medio.

4. They say unto Him, Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act.

Vulg. Et dixerunt ei : Magister, hæc mulier modo deprehensa est in adulterio.

5. Now Moses in the law commanded us, that such should be stoned : but what sayest Thou ?

Vulg. In lege autem Moyses mandavit nobis hujusmodi lapidare. Tu ergo quid dicis ?

6. This they said, tempting Him, that they might have to accuse Him. But Jesus stooped down, and with His finger wrote on the ground, as though He heard them not.

Vulg. Hoc autem dicebant tentantes eum, ut possent accusare eum. Iesus autem inclinans se deorsum, digito scribebat in terra.

7. So when they continued asking Him, He lifted up Himself, and said unto them, He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.^a Vulg. Cum ergo perseverarent interrogantes eum, crexit se, et dixit eis : Qui sine peccato est vestrum, primus in illam lapidem mittat.

S. Augustine, Epist. cliii. (alias 54), 4; vol. ii. p. 657.

— de Consens. Evang. iv. 10; vol. iii. p. 1225.

— de Conjug. Adult. ii. 5 and 6; vol. vi. p. 474.

S. Jerome, contr. Pelag. ii. 17; vol. iii. p. 553.

The allusion is to the particular manner of stoning, which required that one of the witnesses (for two at the least were necessary, see Dent. xvii. 6) should throw the stone, which was to serve as a

8. And again He stooped down, and wrote on the ground.^a Vulg. Et iterum se inclinaus scribebat in terra.

9. And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last: and Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst.

Vulg. Audientes autem unus post unum exiibant, incipientes a senioribus: et remansit solus Jesus, et mulier in medio stans.

10. When Jesus had lifted up Himself, and saw none but the woman, He said unto her, Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee?

Vulg. Erigens autem se Jesus, dixit ei: Mulier, ubi sunt qui te accusabant? nemo te condemnavit?

11. She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more.

Vulg. Que dixit: Nemo, Domine. Dixit autem Jesus: Nec ego te condemnabo: vade, et jam amplius non peccare.

The scribes and Pharisees intend to found an accusation against Jesus, however He may decide the case. If He should acquit the woman, they would charge Him with giving sentence contrary to the law of Moses. If He should command her to be stoned, they would accuse Him to the people as a severe, merciless interpreter of the law, and as acting contrary to that spirit of mercy and forgiveness which He had so often inculcated on them. But they were rather expecting from His accustomed gentleness that He would acquit the woman.

Jesus made no claim to be a judge at all, especially of crimes, of breaches of the law, civil or ceremonial, of the sins which one man commits against another. He came to be the Physician, the Saviour of the world. He who was the Judge of the secret thoughts of the heart knew the difference which existed between the scribes and Pharisees and the woman whom they accused. The chief difference between them was that the one was detected and the others not. They had committed sins similar, or as great, or greater, but they were known only to God; her sin was known to man likewise.

Different conjectures have been made as to the words which He wrote on the ground, which, of course, can be nothing beyond conjecture. The purport of it doubtless was to lead the scribes on to discover for themselves their own misdeeds. They press Him to give a definite answer to their question, and they feel more sure, from His hesitation and signal to the bystanders to complete the punishment. There is, therefore, strict propriety in calling this stone τὸν λίθον, in order to distinguish it from other stones. But would an interpolator have been thus exact in his phraseology? or would he have adverted to this apparently trifling circumstance? Probably he would not, especially since the expression of βάλλειν τὸν λίθον is not elsewhere found in the New Testament.—BISHOP MIDDLETON on the Greek Article, p. 251.

* But Jesus stooped down, &c.—The following, though long, is a good explanation of the several actions of our Saviour in this matter:—"I. The matter in hand was judging a woman taken in adultery, and therefore our Saviour in this matter applies Himself conformably to the rule made and provided for the trial of an adulterer by the bitter water. (Numb. v.)

"II. Among the Jews this obtained in the trial of a wife suspected. 'If any man should unlawfully lie with another woman, the bitter water shall not try his wife. . . . For it is said, if the husband be guiltless from iniquity, then shall the woman bear her iniquity.' (Maimon. in Sotah, c. 2.)

"When the woman hath drunk the bitter water, if she be guilty, her looks turn pale, her eyes swell, &c. . . . The same hour that she dies, the adulterer also, upon whose account she drank the water, dies too, wherever he is. But this is done only upon condition that the husband has been guiltless himself. For if he have lien with any unlawfully himself, then this matter will not try his wife.' (Ibid., c. 3.)

"You may see by these passages how directly our Saviour levels at the equity of this sentence, willing to bring these accusers of the woman to a just trial first. You may imagine you hear Him thus speaking to them, 'Ye have brought this adulterous woman to be adjudged by Me; I will therefore govern Myself according to the rule of trying such by the bitter waters. You say, and you believe according to the common opinion of your nation, that the woman upon whom a jealousy is brought, though she be indeed guilty, yet if the husband that accuseth her be faulty that way himself she cannot be affected by those waters, nor contract any hurt or danger by them. If the Divine judgment proceeded in that method, so will I at this time. Are you that accuse this woman wholly guiltless in the like kind of sin? Whosoever is so, let him cast the first stone, &c. But if you yourselves stand chargeable with the same crimes, then your own applauded tradition, the common opinion of your nation, the procedure of Divine judgment in the trial of such, may determine in this case, and acquit Me from all blame if I condemn not this woman when her accusers themselves are to be condemned.'

"III. It was the office of the priest when he tried a suspected wife to stoop down and gather the dust off the floor of the sanctuary, which, when he had infused into the water, he was to give the woman to drink: he was to write also in a book the curses or adjurations that were to be pronounced upon her. (Numb. v. 17, 23.) In like manner our Saviour stoops down, and making the floor itself His book, He writes something in the dust, doubtless against these accusers, whom He was resolved to try, in analogy to those curses and adjurations written in a book by the priest against the woman that was to be tried.

"IV. The priest, after he had writ these curses in a book, blots them out with the bitter water. (Numb. v. 23.) For the matter transacted was doubtful. 'They do not make the suspected wife drink, unless in a doubtful case.' (Bemidbar Rabba, fol. 233, 2.)

"The question is, whether the woman was guilty or not. If guilty, behold the curses writ against her; if not guilty, then behold they are blotted out. But Christ was assured that those whom He was trying were not innocent, so He does not write and blot out, but writes and writes again.

"V. He imitates the gesture of the priest, if it be true what the Jews report concerning it, and it is not unlikely, viz. that he first pronounced the curses, then made the woman drink, and, after she had drunk, pronounced the same curses again. So Christ, first He stoops down and writes, then makes them, as it were, drink, in that searching reflection of His, 'Whosoever of you is without sin,' and then stoops down again, and writes upon the earth."—LIGHT-FOOT on John viii. 8; vol. ii. p. 563.

delay, that He is in a strait, and that they shall catch Him.

He appeals to them as men whose conscience, if they would listen to it, would bear witness that they had committed sins as great as this woman, and thus He would urge them to pass the same judgment on her which they pass on themselves.

In bidding the man who was without sin among them to cast the first stone at this adulteress, or rather, as our Saviour's words mean, who was without this particular sin of adultery, He did not strike at the root of all civil judicature. Judges must pass sentence on the guilty, whether they are conscious that they themselves have been guilty of the same crimes or not. But these men were probably not the authorized judges, or, if they were, they were judging the case in an informal way. They profess to accuse this woman out of the abundance of their zeal for God's laws. But the words of Him who will one day be the righteous Judge of all mankind teach them that, if they are so anxious to eradicate all sin against God, they must begin with themselves.

Jesus again stoops down, in order to give the scribes and Pharisees an opportunity to depart without any interruption. Conscious that they had committed sin as great, nay, even the very same sin as the woman whom they in their pretended zeal for God had denounced, they go out one by one, the elder first, probably as burdened with a greater load of sin. Silently, but effectually, conscience, quickened by the Divine power of Jesus, works its work in them. They might even have some fear that He who, as they saw, could read the thoughts of their hearts, could also lay their secret sins open to the public gaze. With shame and confusion they one by one draw off and retire, and thus confess their guilt before the whole crowd. This transaction is little less than a miracle.

"Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst." Jesus was left alone with His disciples and the multitude, and the woman standing in the midst of them. The term "alone" would seem to exclude only the scribes and Pharisees who had brought the woman to Jesus.

He, the only one who was without sin, does not condemn her. He came to seek and to save, and not to condemn. We know not what signs of repentance He, the Judge of the secrets of men's hearts, could see in her. He bids her "Go, and sin no more." By these words He probably means the same as when He utters the fuller and more usual formula, "Go in peace." Thus, as God, He forgives her sins, and points out to her the life which she must henceforth lead. He did not absolve her from the legal punishment of her sin; neither did He condemn her. He left that to the scribes and Pharisees. But He absolved her from guilt in the eyes of God.

It may be that the expression "Then spake Jesus again," implies some connection with His dismissal of the woman taken in adultery, and that it may connect them somewhat in this way: "Do not wonder that I have delivered this woman from the darkness of sin in which she was living, for I am the Light of the world; I am God." Others, and perhaps more correctly, connect these words with the second verse: "Early in the morning Jesus came again into the Temple, and all the people came unto Him; and He sat down, and taught them." The scribes and Pharisees interrupt His instruction by bringing to Him the woman taken in adultery. After the scribes and Pharisees had gone out of themselves, and Jesus had dismissed the woman, He turns again to the people and resumes His teaching, which they had broken off.

12. ¶ Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the Light of the world: he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.

S. but he hath.

Vulg. qui sequitur me non ambulat in tenebris, sed habebit lumen vite.

It was early morning (ver. 2) when Jesus spake these words, and this may have suggested to Him the form in which to throw the instruction which He now gives to the people. He may have drawn His subject from the rising of the sun, that most glorious of all the works of creation. From the sun in creation to Himself, the Light of the world, the transition was natural and striking. Or it may be, as some think, that when He said, "I am the Light of the world," He alluded to one of the well-known ceremonies in the Feast of Tabernacles, which had just been concluded. In the evening of the seven days of the feast both men and women assembled in the Court of the Women expressly to hold a rejoicing for the drawing of the water of Siloam. At the same time there were set up in the Court two lofty stands, each supporting four great lamps. These were lighted on each night of the festival, and the light of these illuminated the whole of Jerusalem. Many think that Jesus took occasion from this to speak of Himself as the Light of the world.

Jesus was the Word made flesh, God born into the world to lighten the Gentiles and to be the glory of His people Israel. (Luke ii. 32.) The prophets had all a limited sphere: their business was to instruct God's ancient people, either in the kingdom of Judah or Israel. The Christ came to be the Saviour, not of any particular nation, but of the world. In using this term "the world," Jesus had doubtless a reference to the reception of the Gospel by the Gentiles.

* "I am the Light of the world has with great probability been referred to the lighting up the colossal candlestick in the Feast of Tabernacles: the more remarkable in the profound darkness which then as now reigned through the night of an Oriental town."—STANLEY'S 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 428.

He who followeth Jesus shall not walk in darkness. As the Lord went before His people Israel by night in a pillar of fire to give them light (Exod. xiii. 21), so Jesus offers Himself as a Light and a Guide to all who will follow Him. Those who believe in Him shall not lead a life of sin and of blind speculation about the present and the future; they shall lead a life of holiness, of active goodness here, and of rest in the revelation which He has made of the life everlasting hereafter. Nay, this life everlasting shall begin here, for the life of glory will not be a new life, but a continuation, a development, and a more perfect condition of the present life. Through union with Jesus, the life-giving Light, we receive light, and we receive it here; but it will be expanded and perfected into a more glorious state at the resurrection.

The Pharisees object to Him, Jesus, that He bears witness of Himself, and that therefore His witness is not "true," in the sense of not trustworthy, not admissible in evidence. These are probably not the same individuals who only a short time before had left the Temple convicted by their own conscience and by His appeal to it. There might be other Pharisees in the crowd equally anxious to show their opposition to Him at any fitting opportunity.

13. The Pharisees therefore said unto Him, Thou bearest record of Thyself; Thy record is not true.

14. Jesus answered and said unto them, Though I bear record of Myself, yet My record is true: for I know whence I came, and whither I go; but ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go.

S. Jesus said unto them: S. omits but: V. whence I come or whither.
Vulg. Respondit Iesus, et dixit eis: . . . vos autem nescitis unde venio, aut quo vado.

Jesus replies that His testimony is true, true in itself and admissible in evidence. He is the Light of the world, and a light does not require anyone to bear witness of its presence. As a light bears testimony to itself by its own brightness, so does the Light of the world by His own works.

But still He says¹ that His own testimony is confirmed by that of the Father. "I know whence I came and whither I go."—Who sent Me and on what mission; and My work on earth being finished, I shall return to the Father that sent Me. Jesus was God of God, very God of very God. Such is the union between the Father and the Son that He does not leave the Father in coming to us, and He did not desert us in returning to the Father. Jesus does not say, in a direct naked form, that He is God, or the Son of God, probably not to raise the angry opposition of the Jews to anything further which He had to say. He clothes His meaning in such words that it is only gradually unfolded to them, and in proportion to their docility and anxiety to hear the truth. Their power to understand His meaning depends very much on their readiness to receive it; that is, on the state of their own hearts. It is the same sun which shines on the face of the man who has eyes to see and of the man who is blind, but very different is the effect which it has on them. So, too, the effect which the instruction and the works of Jesus, the Light of the world, have on His hearers depends on their power to receive it. He reminds them how radically wrong their judgment concerning Him is. They judge Him after the flesh, that is, after the senses of the flesh. They see Him in appearance a man, they hear the rumour that He is the son of Joseph the carpenter, and they consider not how His teaching and His miracles prove Him to be more than a man; nay, how they substantiate His claim to be God, the express object for which He wrought them.

15. Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man.^a

16. And yet if I judge, My judgment is true: for I am not alone, but I and the Father that sent Me.

S. but I and He who sent Me.
Vulg. sed ego, et qui misit me, Pater.

17. It is also written in your law, that the testimony of two men is true.

18. I am one that bear witness of Myself, and the Father that sent Me beareth witness of Me.

19. Then said they unto Him, Where is Thy Father? Jesus answered, Ye neither know Me, nor My Father: if ye had known Me, ye should have known My Father also.

S. Jesus answered and said: S. the Father also.
Vulg. Respondit Iesus: . . . si me sciretis, forsitan et Patrem meum sciretis.

At verse 13 the question of testimony, its legality or admissibility in evidence, is raised, and it is not concluded until verse 19. When then Jesus says, "I judge no man," it is not easy to see the connection of His words with the context, if we interpret them in the sense of passing sentence. To give testimony, and to weigh the value of testimony, which is the office of the judge, are kindred actions. Some²

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. viii. 14, tract. xxxvi.; vol. iii. p. 1659.
S. Chrysostom, in Joan. viii. 14; Homil. lii.
Theophylact, in Joan. viii. 14; vol. i. p. 616.

^a Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man (ὡς ἐὰν κατὰ τὴν σαρκὰ κρίνῃτε, ἐγὼ οὐ κρινῶ ἀνθρώπου).—The second clause is completed by ἀνθρώπου, and nothing whatever requires to be supplied: Ye judge according to the flesh, but I judge no one; not merely no one according to the flesh, but no one in any manner

² S. Ambrose, Epist. lxxviii. 10; vol. iii. p. 1266.
Maldonatus, in Joan. viii. 15; vol. ii. p. 681.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. viii. 15; vol. iii. p. 995.

whatever. The supplying of κατὰ τὴν σαρκὰ from the foregoing clause, could only be justified by incongruity in the sense without such addition. With Olshausen and Liess, I am unable to perceive that the words in the text are not entirely sufficient.—WISLIE, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 606.

have therefore thought that by these words Jesus meant to imply that in no man's case did He Himself offer testimony, but that if He did offer testimony, it would be admissible in proof, because it would be confirmed by the Father.

The law said, "One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin, in any sin that he sinneth: at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses, shall the matter be established" (Deut. xix. 15). Thus, according to the law, the testimony of two men is sufficient for proof. In the case of Jesus there is the testimony of two, who are not men, but who are infinitely more than men, who are God. There is the testimony of God the Father and the testimony of God the Son, both bearing witness that Jesus the Son of Mary is the Christ, the Word made flesh. It has been generally¹ held that verse 18 proves that Christ was one Person, but in Him were two natures, the Godhead and the Manhood. Christ, as He is God, bears witness of Himself, as He is Man.

The Pharisees ask Jesus where His Father is: not in sincerity and with a desire to learn, but to lead Him on to commit Himself—that they may have, as they think, grounds to accuse Him of blasphemy. He does not answer, as they hoped, so as to give them occasion to take hold of His words. But He replies that they know neither Him nor His Father. They did not know Him because they believed Him to be a mere man, while He was God. They did not know His Father because they believed Joseph to be His father, but Joseph was not even the father of His human nature. They did not know God, who was His Father, otherwise they would serve Him.

20. These words spake Jesus in the treasury, as He taught in the Temple: and no man laid hands on Him; for His hour was not yet come.

S.V. spake He in the: S. omits as He taught in the Temple.
Vulg. Hæc verba locutus est Iesus in gazophylacio, docens in templo.

The treasury was the place in which was kept the chest which contained the offerings of the people for the payment of the sacrifices, for the repair of the fabric and the relief of the poor. This was the most public part of the Temple (2 Kings xii. 9; 2 Chron. xxiv. 8). In these words² it is intimated that the Jews had every opportunity of taking Jesus, for He did not teach in secret, but in the most public part of the most public place in Jerusalem, in the treasury of the Temple. The reason why they did not lay hands on Him is also given.

They were supernaturally withheld by an invisible influence on them, because the time appointed for His Death was not yet come.

21. Then said Jesus again unto them, I go My way, and ye shall seek Me, and shall die in your sins: whither I go, ye cannot come.

S. Then said He unto them.
Vulg. Dixit ergo iterum eis Iesus.

22. Then said the Jews, Will He kill Himself? because He saith, Whither I go, ye cannot come.

The particle "then," or "therefore" (οὖν), in verse 21 has been differently explained. Some have supposed that it was merely the introductory word to a new portion of His teaching; others,³ that it was meant to join this on to the preceding, and to indicate that this was said at the same time and place as the last; others,⁴ that it connected this verse with verse 19; and others,⁵ that it connected this verse with the last, that Jesus knew that the Pharisees were burning with a desire to take Him, but were withheld by a secret power: therefore He said unto them, "I go My way," &c.

He had already said the same words to the officers who were sent by the Pharisees to take Him (vii. 33); and He now repeats them to the Pharisees themselves. Some⁶ have thought that Jesus used the expression "I go My way," because His Death will be voluntary, and a continued proceeding. He will not remain in a state of death, but through death He will go to the Father. They will die in a condition of sin, in consequence of their unbelief in Jesus, the only One who could have delivered them from this. He will go to a state of eternal happiness, they to one of eternal punishment. The Pharisees cannot go to the former, because they have not now the will or the affections for such a state.

When Jesus had said the same words, "Ye shall not find Me," to the officers who were sent by the Pharisees to take Him, they said, "Whither will He go that we shall not find Him? will He go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles, and teach the Gentiles?" But the Pharisees are so blinded by anger and hatred, and are so intent on His Death, that in their eyes the only alternative to their not finding Him and killing Him is His killing Himself. They do not see that death, whether brought on by them or by Himself, cannot be the place He meant, because they will also die. He is

¹ S. Ambrose, de Fide, v. 3; vol. iii. p. 658.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. viii. 18; Homil. lii.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. viii. 18; vol. vi. p. 788.

Theophylact, in Joan. viii. 18; vol. i. p. 617.

² S. Augustine, in Joan. viii. 20, tract. xxxvii.; vol. iii. p. 1673.

V. Bede, in Joan. viii. 20; vol. iii. p. 741.

Theophylact, in Joan. viii. 20; vol. i. p. 618.

Euthymius, in Joan. viii. 20; vol. iv. p. 305.

³ Origen, in Joan. viii. 21, tomus xix. 3; vol. iv. p. 545.

⁴ Maldonatus, in Joan. viii. 21; vol. ii. p. 685.

⁵ Rupertus, in Joan. viii. 21; vol. iii. p. 542.

⁶ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. viii. 21; vol. viii. p. 997.

S. Augustine, in Joan. viii. 21, tract. xxxviii.; vol. iii. p. 1676.

referring¹ to their place or condition after death: He in heaven with the Father, they in hell with the devil.

23. And He said unto them, Ye are from beneath; I am from above; ye are of this world; I am not of this world.

S. He said therefore. S. if ye believe. Mo not that.
Vulg. Et dicitat eis.

24. I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins: for if ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins.

S. omittit therefore. S. if ye believe. Mo not that.
Vulg. Dixi ergo vobis . . . si enim non credideritis quia ego sum.

He states² the reason why they cannot go to the place where He is, and also why they misunderstand His words, and interpret what He had spoken of His return to His Father, of His killing Himself. He says their origin is different and their nature is different, and their final abode will be different. They are from beneath, of this world. The origin of the Pharisees is earthly, and their nature is gross and earthly, and they shall return to a place suitable for such earthly natures. He is from above, from the Father, and will return thither. Not only is their origin earthly, but their natures, their tastes and habits and aims are earthly, bounded by the enjoyments and pleasures of the body and of the present world. None but He could deliver them from their sins and sinful nature; but if they refuse to believe in Him, they will die in their sins.

25. Then said they unto Him, Who art Thou? And Jesus saith unto them, Even the same that I said unto you by the beginning.

S. They said: S. Then Jesus said unto them.
Vulg. Dicebant ergo ei: Tu quis es? Dixit eis Jesus: Principium qui et loquor vobis.

Two widely different interpretations have been given of this confessedly difficult passage, and each has been advocated by men who are looked up to as authorities in the Church. Jansenius³ has stated the difficulties of the passage, and the proposed solutions of them, with great patience and perspicuity. The meaning of our Saviour's answer chiefly depends on the word translated "the beginning" (τὴν ἀρχὴν); whether it is to be taken as a simple substantive or as a substantive used adverbially. It may be said that as a general rule the Latin commentators have treated it as a substantive and the Greek as an adverb. In either case, as the expression is elliptical, a word or two has to be supplied to complete the sense, and this has been done in different ways. Those⁴ who have taken "the beginning" (τὴν ἀρχὴν) as a simple substantive, have so interpreted it as if in reply to the contemptuous question of the Jews, "Who art Thou?" Jesus had said, Ye must believe that I, who am now speaking to you, though a mere man in appearance, am "The Beginning;" that I am God, the Creator of all things. But the Greek commentators⁵ have taken τὴν ἀρχὴν adverbially, and have understood it in the sense of "altogether," "entirely;" they have regarded the passage as exceedingly elliptical, and have rendered it, "Ye are altogether unworthy, that I should tell you who I am." But τὴν ἀρχὴν may be used adverbially, and the sense rendered, "I am what I said unto you at the beginning;" that is, "I am the Light of the world, as I said unto you at the beginning." The passage has also been paraphrased, "Originally I am what also My speech revealeth unto you."⁶

26. I have many things to say and to judge of you: but He that sent Me is true; and I speak to the world those things which I have heard of Him.

S. but the Father that sent Me: S. heard with Him.
Vulg. sed qui me misit, verax est: et ego que audivi ab eo, hæc loquor in mundo.

27. They understood not that He spake to them of the Father.

S. of the Father God.
Vulg. Et non cognoverunt quia Patrem ejus dicebat Deum.

Jesus had just said to the Jews that they should die in their sins, because they did not believe in Him. They then ask Him who He is, and He replies to this effect: "I am He who, from the beginning of the Creation, spake unto you as the Word, and Who now speak unto you the Word made flesh." He then goes on to say that He had many things to

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. viii. 22, tract. xxxviii.; vol. iii. p. 1676.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. viii. 23; Homil. liii. Theophylact, in Joan. viii. 23; vol. i. p. 619. Euthymius, in Joan. viii. 23; vol. iv. p. 309.

³ S. Augustine, in Joan. viii. 23, tract. xxxviii.; vol. iii. p. 1677.

⁴ V. Bede, in Joan. viii. 23; vol. iii. p. 743.

⁵ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxvii. p. 111.

⁶ S. Ambrose, de Fide, iii. 7 and v. 9; vol. iii. pp. 600 and 674.

Hexem. i. 2 and 4; vol. i. pp. 124 and 129.

⁷ S. Augustine, in Joan. viii. 25, tract. xxxviii.; vol. iii. p. 1681.

de Trinitate, v. 13; vol. viii. p. 920.

S. Augustine, Confess. xi. 8; vol. i. p. 813.
de Genes. ad literam, imperf. lib. 3; vol. iii. p. 222.

de Genes. i. 5; vol. iii. p. 250.

S. Fulgentius, ad Thrasimundum, ii. 5; p. 249.

S. Prosper, in Psal. cix. 3; p. 319.

V. Bede, in Joan. viii. 25; vol. iii. p. 744.

Rupertus, in Joan. viii. 25; vol. iii. p. 544.

S. Bernard, lib. v. de Considerat.

⁸ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. viii. 25; Homil. liii.

Theophylact, in Joan. viii. 25; vol. i. p. 620.

Euthymius, in Joan. viii. 25; vol. iv. p. 309.

⁹ McClellan, New Testament, p. 728 (who also gives a summary of the various meanings attributed to these words.)

say and to judge against them, but not now, for this is not the time for judgment. Now He will speak only what will confute their unbelief in Him; namely, that the Father who sent Him is true, and the things which He speaks to them are true, because He hears them of the Father.

Jesus did not say that God is His Father in direct terms. He rather suggests it to their thoughts to dwell upon and become familiar with. Had they clearly understood that this was His meaning, some of them would have believed it, but probably the greater part not. Those who did believe it would have shrunk from taking any part in His Crucifixion. Those who did not believe it would have been for putting Him to death as a blasphemer immediately. The economy by which men's Redemption was to be accomplished by the Death of the God Incarnate would have been interfered with. Those who were drawn by the Father came to believe that Jesus was God gradually, and probably not fully until after His Death.

28. Then said Jesus unto them, When ye have lifted up the Son of Man, then shall ye know that I am He, and that I do nothing of Myself; but as My Father hath taught Me, I speak these things.

S. Then said Jesus again: V. omits unto them: S. as the Father: S. so I speak.

Vulg. Dixit ergo eis Jesus: . . . sed sicut docuit me Pater, hæc loquor.

29. And He that sent Me is with Me: the Father hath not left Me alone;^a for I do always those things that please Him.

S. And He that sent Me hath not left Me alone: He is with Me, for I do.

Vulg. Et qui me misit, mecum est et non reliquit me solum.

He speaks of His Crucifixion as an exaltation. He was lifted up on the Cross, and He was lifted up so as to become an object of worship to all generations. His Crucifixion was intended by the Jews as an act of dishonour and ignominy. He was by it exalted above all things. He foretells that their unbelief would be overcome by His Crucifixion, His Death and Resurrection, by His patience, love and zeal for their salvation, by His miracles and wondrous works. The centurion was but one out of many who were struck with awe and with the belief that this was the Son of God. He asserts that after His Crucifixion they would believe that He had taught with the authority of the Father, and was One with the Father; that the Father who had sent Him into the world had been with Him, and had worked with Him all through His sojourn among men.

30. As He spake these words, many believed on Him.

31. Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on Him, If ye continue in My word, then are ye My disciples indeed;

S. ye are disciples indeed.

Vulg. vere discipuli mei eritis.

32. And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

The many¹ who believed in Him would doubtless be from the simple, honest, unbiassed multitude, and but few from the Pharisees, whose pride and strong prejudices kept them, as a body, aloof from Jesus. These had probably given some outward expression of their belief in Him, which is not mentioned, either by words, or by ranging themselves along with His other disciples. If they continue in their belief in Him and in His teaching, which they had embraced, they should be His disciples in more than name, and they should receive the reward of His disciples. They should know the truth not by mere hearing, but they should realize it by the knowledge of actual experience. For this belief in Him and the doctrine which He taught them should deliver them from the yoke and servitude of sin. Belief in Him will lead them on to repent and forsake their sins, and to lead a life of love to Him. Wilful indulgence in sin cannot exist in the heart along with hatred of sin and love to God.

33. ¶ They answered Him, We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest Thou, Ye shall be made free?

The Jews who make this answer are either not the same who had believed in Him, or they are some who believed, but whose faith in Him was still very imperfect. What they say might be strictly true of the Jews of our Saviour's own time, and some² have thought that they meant this to refer to themselves only; others³ that, in their eagerness to vindicate themselves as a nation from the reflection which, as they imagine, Jesus had cast on them, they have overstepped the bounds of historical accuracy. But Jesus, who had a very different meaning, in His answer takes no notice of what they had said.

34. Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. viii. 32, tract. xli.; vol. iii. p. 1692.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. viii. 32; Homil. lii.

Theophylact, in Joan. viii. 32; vol. i. p. 622.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxvii. p. 114.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. viii. 33; vol. viii. p. 1002.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. viii. 33; Homil. liv.

S. Augustine, in Joan. viii. 33, tract. xli.; vol. iii. p. 1693.

V. Bede, in Joan. viii. 33; vol. iii. p. 748.

^a The Father hath not left Me alone.—“In no part of the New Testament does the artist express what is trout to be done. Οὐκ ἀφῆκε με μόνον ὁ Πατήρ, ‘the Father left Me not alone’ (on the earth); that is, He granted Me, after having sent Me (πέμψας), also (hitherto) His unceasing aid.”—WINEB, ‘Grammar of the New Testament,’ p. 293.

35. And the servant abideth not in the house for ever: but the Son abideth ever.

*S. omits but the Son abideth ever.
Vulg. Filius autem manet in aeternum.*

36. If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.^a

Though Jesus speaks in general terms here, and in the third person, His words have evidently a personal application to the men before Him. They were living in the daily practice, in the habitual commission, of sin; they were therefore the bondmen of sin. He personifies sin and represents it as a master, to give a more lively idea of the hard tyranny of sin, and to represent more forcibly that the devil is the tempter, the person who seduces men to sin, and leads them captive and punishes them for their compliance.

The boast of these Jews was that they were the seed of Abraham. The events of Abraham's own household give an apt illustration of their relation, and of their position with respect to Abraham. He had two kinds of seed, the son of the bondwoman and the son of the free. Ishmael, the son of the bondwoman, was cast out, while Isaac, the son of the free, remained in his father's house and inherited his goods. They, though the seed of Abraham, if they continued the bondmen of sin would be cast out from God's kingdom. The only condition in which they could remain in His house was to receive freedom from sin by belief in Jesus the Son of God, whom Isaac prefigured.

37. I know that ye are Abraham's seed; but ye seek to kill Me, because My word hath no place in you.

Vulg. quia sermo meus non capit in vobis.

38. I speak that which I have seen with My Father: and ye do that which ye have seen with your father.^b

*V. with the Father: S. which ye have seen from your father: V. which ye have heard from your father.
Vulg. Ego quod vidi apud Patrem meum, loquor: et vos quae vidistis apud patrem vestrum, facitis.*

39. They answered and said unto Him, Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham.

*S. Jesus answered them.
Vulg. Dicit eis Jesus.*

40. But now ye seek to kill Me, a Man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God:^c this did not Abraham.

In this conversation with the Jews Jesus makes a distinction between Abraham's seed (σπέρμα) and Abraham's children (τέκνα). He admits that they were Abraham's seed, that is, descended from Abraham according to the flesh; but by their actions they were so degenerated from Abraham that they could not be called his children. If they were Abraham's children, they would do the works of Abraham. But Abraham always sought to save life, and not to kill; but they sought to kill Him, a Man who taught them the truth which God only could teach them. The reason of this degeneracy was because His word, His teaching, had no influence with them.

41. Ye do the deeds of your father. Then said they to Him, We be not born of fornication; we have one Father, even God.

*S.V. They said to Him.
Vulg. Dixerunt itaque ei.*

The conduct of the Jews to Jesus was of a piece with the rest of their actions. They were not by that acting out of ^a If the Son shall make you free, &c.—In Christ, first of all the descendants of Adam, was will exhibited in that complete freedom which was its normal condition and perfect state. By will is meant the power of choice or of refusal. Its existence, therefore, implies freedom from external constraint. But it is compatible with the influence of inward motives, which cannot fail to appeal to it, according to their proper powers of attraction. To suppose, indeed, that motives possess such irresistible power that it is impossible for will to offer resistance, is practically to deny its ability, and thus to exonerate its possessors from responsibility. But though will must be supposed to be so far free that men are accountable for their actions, yet it has never been perfectly free in any of the fallen descendants of Adam. This perfect liberty is gained only in Him, in whom the unlimited presence of God's Spirit supplied the place of that Divine guidance which had been given to our first parent, and counteracted the concupiscence which had been transmitted to his progeny. Thus did the Son of Man allay the inner storm of human passion, saying, 'Peace, be still;' and thus did He set forth in its perfection that state of freedom for which man was originally designed. This is the gift which, by union with Him, He bestows upon His brethren. The liberty sought by worldly men in exemption from external restraints can be realized only by union with that pattern Man who attained the true freedom. The conformity of man's will to the will of Him in whose pattern man was moulded is that normal state of tranquillity and happiness after which unregenerate humanity is vainly yearning; for God's service is perfect freedom, and if the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—R. I. WILDERFORCE on the Incarnation, p. 99.

^b And ye do that which ye have seen with your father (καὶ υἱοὶ οὖν ὃ ἐμακάτε παρὰ τῷ πατρὶ ὑμῶν, ποιεῖτε).—"The οὖν is far from being a mere expletive. It strikingly contrasts the character of Jesus with that of the Jews (you also, therefore), representing both as respectively springing, as it were, from one and the same principle—conformity to paternal direction and example."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 476.

^c The truth, which I have heard of God (τὴν ἀλήθειαν, ἣν ἔκουσα παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ).—"Of verbs of perception ἀκούω is construed with the genitive (to hear from, out of one). Here ἀκούω is construed with the accusative, because the object is the whole connection, and the hearing meant is intellectual; while in the previous case the object is simply certain sounds or words received by the ear."—Ibid. p. 213.

character. It was all through in keeping with the other works of him who was their father, the prompter and author of all their thoughts and works. As Jesus spake and taught what He had heard of His Father, so they did what they heard from their father. When the Jews perceive that He is not speaking so much of natural descent from Abraham, but of spiritual likeness by imitation of faith and life, they reply that they are not born of fornication, but have one Father, even God. Fornication was the word by which the prophets stigmatized idolatry, the forsaking of the One true God for the worship of idols. The Jews reply that they are not the descendants of idolaters, such as the Gentiles, or such as the Samaritans were, but they worship the One true God, and so did their fathers. Abraham was called from the midst of the heathen to worship the true God, and they are his children, and continue to worship the same God as he.

42. Jesus said unto them, If God were your Father, ye would love Me: for I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but He sent Me.

They say that God is their Father, and Jesus brings this to the test. If God were their Father they would love Him, Jesus, for He is God in the most perfect sense of the word by eternal generation from the Father, and by mission from the Father to take upon Him the nature of man. Some¹ have supposed that the expression "I proceeded forth and came from God," refers both to His eternal generation and to His Birth of the Blessed Virgin; others² that it expressly refers to the Incarnation and implies His eternal generation.

He complains that they cannot understand His speech, His meaning, the drift of His words, not from any natural impossibility, but because of the hardness, the aversion of their own hearts.

43. Why do ye not understand My speech? even because ye cannot hear My word.^a

44. Ye are of your father the devil,^b and the lusts of your father ye will do.^c He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it.^d

Words could scarcely express more distinctly the personality of the devil. He implies, that man does not sin because the properties of certain things accidentally fall in with his passions or with the constitution of his nature, but because a being of power and intelligence infinitely superior to his is ever plotting his ruin, always on the alert to originate and suggest some action, or some course of action, to withdraw him from the allegiance which he owes to his Creator.

¹ S. Hilary Pict. de Trinitate, vi. 31; vol. ii. p. 182.

² Augustine, in Joan. viii. 42; tract. xlii.; vol. iii. p. 1702. V. Bede, in Joan. viii. 41; vol. iii. p. 752.

^a Speech . . . word.—"Λαλῶν καὶ λόγος are here set in a certain antithesis to one another, and in the seizing of the point of this must lie the right understanding of the verse. What the Lord intended by varying λαλῶν καὶ λόγος has been very differently understood. Some, as Augustine, though commenting on the passage, have omitted to notice the variation. Others, like Olshausen, have noticed only to deny that it had any significance. Others again, admitting the significance, have failed to draw it rightly out. It is clear that as the inability to understand His 'speech' (λαλῶν) is traced up as a consequence to a refusing to hear His 'word' (λόγος), this last, as the root and ground of the mischief, must be the deeper and anterior thing. To hear His word can be nothing else than to give room to His truth in the heart. They who will not do this must fail to understand His speech, the outward form and utterance which His word assumes. They that are of God hear God's words, His ῥήματα, as elsewhere (John iii. 34; viii. 47), His λαλῶν, as here it is called, which they that are not of God do not and cannot hear."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on the 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 275.

^b Ye are of your father the devil.—"Of Gnostic dualism, as Hilgenfeld with unwearied constancy tries to prove it, the Gospel [of S. John] contains nothing. The dualism it contains is religious and moral—the real contrast of belief and unbelief and the like, traced back to its inmost religious and moral roots in the disposition. But this is the contrast which runs through the whole of the Scriptures, from Cain and Abel, from the Cainites and the Sethites, on down through the history of Israel and its reflection in the prophetic testimony; which then steps forward so keenly, and fulfils itself so tragically in the history of Jesus, and which will come to its highest pitch in the issues of history as the Revelation depicts them. It is here throughout ethically established in the disposition as turned towards or turned away from God; while the dualism of Gnosticism is physically established and is a thing of natural necessity. John's Gospel speaks of that contrast just as the Synoptists do when they oppose the βίολ τῆς βασιλείας ('children of the kingdom') to the βίολ τοῦ πονηροῦ ('children of the wicked one'), Matt. xiii. 38; and when they, following Isa. vi., make Jesus speak of an impossibility of perceiving and believing, Matt. xiii. 13. This representation is not to be traced back to Gnostic dualism, and no more is John's."—LUTHARDT, 'St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 189.

² Janseus, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxvii. p. 118.

Maldonatus, in Joan. viii. 42; vol. ii. p. 700.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. viii. 42; vol. viii. p. 1004.

^c The lusts of your father ye will do (τὰς ἐπιθυμίας τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν θέλετε ποιεῖν).—"The lusts of your father you will (εὐε resolved and inclined to) do (carry into effect), either in general (your hearts impel you to follow the will of Satan), or because ye go about to kill Me (verse 40)."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 489.

^d For he is a liar, and the father of it (ψεύστης ἐστὶ καὶ ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ).—"Αδρός sometimes refers to an abstract deduced from a preceding concrete, or vice versa (ψεύστης ἐστὶ καὶ ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ) (ψεύδους): see Lücke in loc. The other explanation, father of the liar, appears neither grammatically simpler nor substantially preferable. Father of falsehood is a notion more appropriate to John, who had a predilection for abstract terms."—Ibid. p. 158.

Bishop Middleton (on the Greek Article) disagrees with this interpretation, but is unable, with the present reading, to suggest any other that is entirely satisfactory. See his very interesting note, p. 251.

The devil is their father, and they are his children, not by natural descent, but by imitation, because they love to do his lusts. Jesus alludes to two points in particular in which they loved to do the lusts of their father, murder and lies. He does this because they were at that very time devising the means how to accomplish His Death, and because they said that He was a false prophet, a deceiver, and had a devil.

The devil was a murderer from the beginning, even from the beginning of the Creation. It was he who brought about the fall of Adam and Eve, and through them the death of the whole human race. When one man rises against his fellow-man, as Cain against Abel, and commits murder, the devil is the author, the suggester of the murder; and man is merely his instrument in executing it, the doer of his lusts.

The devil, too, is the author of all that is false. Truth may be considered in several aspects as regards the heart, the mouth, and also with respect to action. The devil abode not in the truth, he abode not in the true and right course, in the lawful position in which God had created him, when, through pride, he rebelled against Him. He abode not in the obedience, in the allegiance which he owed to God; he was created an angel of light, and through his own deed he became darkness. The devil abode not in the truth when, through lies and misrepresentations, he deceived Eve, and succeeded in bringing death upon mankind.

When men speak a lie, they are not the author of it; the devil is the author, the inventor of it. They are themselves the victims of "the liar," and are merely his instruments in uttering it. The devil was the author of the first lie, of the whole system or art of lying, and also of every individual lie.

45. And because I tell you the truth, ye believe Me not.

46. Which of you convinceth Me of sin? And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?

S.V. enit And.

Vulg. si veritatem dico vobis, quare non creditis mihi?

47. He that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God.

They loved to do the lusts of the devil because he was their father. They would not believe Jesus, though He spake the truth, because God was not their Father. He challenges them to convict Him of sin in His life, or of falsehood in His teaching, and presses on them the conclusion that the sinfulness of His life and truth of His teaching would have insured the reception of His words if they had been, as they professed, of God. Unable to answer this unanswerable argument, the Jews replied that He was a Samaritan and had a devil.

48. Then answered the Jews, and said unto Him, Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil?

S.V. The Jews answered.

Vulg. Respondimus tibi Iude.

It is nowhere recorded that the Jews were in the habit of calling Jesus a Samaritan, and yet these words would seem to imply as much. The religion of the Samaritans was a corruption of the Jewish, a mixture of Jewish worship with the worship of false gods, the knowledge of which they had brought with them from Assyria. A Samaritan, therefore, was with the Jews a term of reproach for one who was half a Jew and half an idolater, an idolatrous schismatic. By this term they might mean that Jesus kept the law of Moses in part, but mixed up with it much that was new and false.

The characteristic of devils is to arrogate to themselves the honour and glory that belong only to God. The Jews in saying that Jesus had a devil charged Him with taking to Himself, who was a mere man, the honour which belonged to God alone. To this, which is the most serious part of their charge, He replies, but makes no reference to the first part—viz. that of being a Samaritan.

49. Jesus answered, I have not a devil; but I honour My Father, and ye do dishonour Me.

S. Jesus answered and said.

Vulg. Respondit Jesus.

50. And I seek not Mine own glory: there is One that seeketh and judgeth.

51. Verily, verily, I say unto you, If a man keep My saying, he shall never see death.

He denies in express words that He has a devil, or the qualities of a devil: for a devil seeks his own glory, but He seeks the glory of His Father. Jesus honours the Father, but the Jews, in dishonouring Him, dishonour the Father. Jesus seeks not His own glory, but God the Father is seeking His glory, and is even now judging between Him and the Jews. The term judging here has no reference to the Last Judgment. In the Last Judgment it is expressly said that the Son of Man shall be the Judge. It rather refers to the daily visitations and judgments by which God chastises His disobedient people. Here, too, in all probability, Jesus alludes to the sufferings which the Jews are on the very point of enduring at the hands of the Romans, for their rejection and Crucifixion of Him.

In spite of the malignity and the venom of their reproach that He had a devil, Jesus still continues to press on them the offer of eternal life. With the strongest form of asseveration, amounting, as some think, almost to an oath, He declares that if they will keep His saying they shall never die. He does not refer to the death of the body, for that is not really death, any more than the life of the body is really life. If they will keep His word, He will impart to them life, the life of grace in the soul, and they shall never fall into such sin as will quench the life of the soul, which shall be purified and strengthened until it ripens into the life of glory everlasting hereafter.

52. Then said the Jews unto Him, Now we know that Thou hast a devil. Abraham is dead, and the prophets; and Thou sayest, If a man keep My saying, he shall never taste of death.

S.V. The Jews said: V. he shall never see death.

Vulg. Dixerunt ergo Iudaei . . . non gustabit mortem in aeternum.

53. Art Thou greater than our father Abraham, which is dead? and the prophets are dead: whom makest Thou Thyself?

After all His instruction the Jews as yet could only grasp the idea of one kind of life, and of one kind of death, viz. that of the body. They declare that His offer to keep them from tasting death is only another confirmation of their conviction that He had a devil. Nothing in their opinion could account for such language as He used, except the supposition that He was possessed with a devil. Not only was He, a mere man, making Himself greater than Abraham and greater than the prophets, but even greater than God Himself. Abraham kept God's word, and so did the prophets, and yet they all died. God's word conferred on them no such immunity from death as Jesus here declares that the observance of His word will do. They are at a loss to conceive to whom He likens Himself.

The mistake of the Jews, which runs through all this, is in thinking of Abraham and the prophets as dead, and in confining death to the body. Even their bodies, which were dead, Jesus could raise up again at the last day. The souls of the righteous could never die, could never taste death, could never experience eternal separation from God.

54. Jesus answered, If I honour Myself, My honour is nothing: it is My Father that honour-eth Me; of whom ye say, that He is your God:

A. of whom ye say, He is our God.

Vulg. quem vos dicitis quia Deus vester est.

55. Yet ye have not known Him; but I know Him: and if I should say, I know Him not, I shall be a liar like unto you: but I know Him, and keep His saying.

If the honour or glory which is given to Jesus were given to Him by Himself, it would be of no value. But it is given to Him by the Father, whom the Jews claim as their God. Though they say the Father is their God, they do not know Him. They do not show that they have any knowledge of Him, either by sincerely worshipping Him and by living according to His commands; nor do they show that they know anything of His nature, otherwise they would have understood that Jesus the Messiah was the Son of God. They do not know that in the Godhead there are Three Persons, though but One God. The Jews proved themselves to be liars by saying that they knew God, when they worshipped Him not. Jesus is not like them; He knows Him, and therefore He fulfils all His word.

The Jews despised Jesus, but Abraham, whose children they boasted they were, did not; he looked forward with delight to Him as his Saviour. The boast and glory of the Jews was in Abraham, but Abraham's glory was in Jesus.

56. Your father Abraham rejoiced to see My day: and he saw it, and was glad.

57. Then said the Jews unto Him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast Thou seen Abraham?

S. and hath Abraham seen Thee?

Vulg. Quinquaginta annos nondum habes, et Abraham vidisti?

In their use of the term "fifty years" the Jews had probably some reference to the time at which the Levites began to be superannuated with respect to the service of the Temple. Their time of service lasted from thirty to fifty years (Num. iv. 3). And the Jews had an opinion that whoever died before fifty or at least fifty-two, died untimely, and, as it were, by cutting off. Thus their words imply: "Thou art not yet come to the common years of superannuation, and dost Thou talk of having seen Abraham?"

It has been held¹ that by the expression "My day" Jesus may refer to some time or event previous to the Incarnation, when Abraham rejoiced to have the knowledge of God revealed to him; as, for instance, when the Mystery of the Trinity was revealed to him by the three men who appeared to him as the representatives of God (Gen. xviii. 2). But the more general and the more probable opinion is, that by this expression Jesus refers to His Incarnation. Of those who held this, some² have supposed that He might refer to the day of His Death and Passion, by which He purchased the redemption of all mankind; others³ that the expression "My day" is more correctly explained of His Birth when the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us.

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. viii. 56, tract. xliii.; vol. iii. p. 1712. — de Peccato Originali, 27; vol. x. p. 401.

S. Jerome, in Daniel viii. 15; vol. v. p. 538.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xviii.; vol. ii. p. 1152.

V. Bede, in Joan. viii. 56; vol. iii. p. 756.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. viii. 56; Homil. lv.

Theophylact, in Joan. viii. 56; vol. i. p. 630.

Euthymius, in Joan. viii. 56; vol. iv. p. 337.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. esp. lxxvii. p. 122.

Maldonatus, in Joan. viii. 56; vol. ii. p. 710.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. viii. 56; vol. vii. p. 1010.

Abraham is here but the representative of the righteous. He saw it with a faith which realized it as though present. He saw it as revealed to Him by God, at different times and in divers manners, as, for instance, in the ram caught in a thicket by his horns, and which he was to offer up for a burnt-offering in the stead of his son (Gen. xxii. 13).

He may have seen it, too, in another sense. The good tidings which caused so much joy to the angels, and to the shepherds and to the saints on the earth, to Zacharias and Elisabeth, to Simeon and Anna and others, may not have been confined to them; these good tidings may have been conveyed to the righteous who were already removed from the earth, and who were awaiting the fulness of time for their redemption.

58. Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am.^a

59. Then took they up stones to cast at Him: but Jesus hid Himself, and went out of the Temple, going through the midst of them,^b and so passed by.

V. omits but: S.V. omit going through the midst of them, and so passed by.

Jesus here appropriates to Himself the form "I Am," by which God the Father had of old described Himself (Exod. iii. 14): the Eternal, without change, without beginning or ending. In this sense the Jews understood Him, and took up stones to stone Him, as speaking blasphemy.

The Jews had a tradition that the murder of Zacharias in the Temple by their fathers had entailed upon the nation a fearful punishment.¹ Yet so exasperated are they with Jesus, that, undeterred by this story which was commonly believed among them, they attempt His life in the Court of the Temple, taking up the stones which in all probability lay there for the completion or the repair of some portion of the building.

He hid Himself, probably not by secreting Himself in any part of the building, but by rendering Himself invisible to them, and thus went out of the Temple.² The words "going through the midst of them" are not found in some MSS., but they may contain a very good explanation of the way in which He hid Himself.

¹ Lightfoot on Matt. xxiii. 34; vol. ii. p. 237.

² Theophylact, in Joan. viii. 59; vol. i. p. 630.

Euthymius, in Joan. viii. 59; vol. iv. p. 339.

^a Before Abraham was, I am (πρὶν Ἀβραὰμ γενέσθαι, ἐγὼ εἰμι).—"It is important to mark the distinction between εἶναι and γίνεσθαι, where our translators have not observed it. Thus our English rendering of John viii. 58, 'Before Abraham was, I am,' loses half the force of the original, πρὶν Ἀβραὰμ γενέσθαι, ἐγὼ εἰμι, 'Before Abraham was born, I am.' The becoming only can rightly be predicated of the patriarch; the being is reserved for the Eternal Son alone. Similar in kind, though less in degree, is the loss in the rendering of Luke vi. 36, γίνεσθε οἰκτιρῶντες καθὼς [καὶ] ὁ Πατὴρ ὑμῶν οἰκτιρῶν ἐστί, 'Be ye merciful, as your Father also is merciful.' Here also the original expresses the distinction between the imperfect effort and the eternal attribute."—CANON LIGHTFOOT on 'Revision of the New Testament,' p. 75.

^b Sometimes a past tense is included in the present, when, for instance, a verb expresses a state which commenced at an earlier period, but still continues—a state in its whole duration, as John viii. 58, πρὶν Ἀβραὰμ γενέσθαι, ἐγὼ εἰμι.—WINLER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 282.

^c Going through the midst of them, &c.—"The Vatican and Sinaitic MSS. and Codex Bezae are alone among MSS. in omitting the clause διελθὼν διὰ μέσου αὐτῶν καὶ παρήγεν οὕτως. The omission is to be accounted for by the fact that just there the Church lesson for Tuesday in the fifth week after Easter came to an end."—BURGON on 'The Last Twelve Verses of S. Mark,' p. 222.

CHAPTER IX.

[1. The man that was born blind restored to sight. 8. He is brought to the Pharisees. 13. They are offended at it, and excommunicate him: 35. but he is received of Jesus, and confesseth Him. 39. Who they are whom Christ enlighteneth.]

[Vulg. Cœcum a natiuitate subbato illuminat: cuius miraculi gloriam pharisei multis technis laborant Christo detrabere: et quia is qui cœcus fuerat Christum tucior, extra synagagam eicitur: sed a Christo electus credit, et adrat ipsum, qui in iudicium se in mundum renisse ait.]

THE healing of this blind man took place, as we know, on the Sabbath day (ver. 14); and there is a probability, though not a certainty, that it was the same day as that on which Jesus had held His conversation with the scribes and Pharisees, as recorded in the last chapter, and only a short time after He had escaped from the infuriated Jews in the Temple. The opening words of this chapter are looked upon as lending support to this view.¹ Others have held that it occurred later.²

1. And as Jesus passed by, He saw a man which was blind from his birth.

The fact that he was blind from his birth is mentioned to indicate that his blindness was not of a passing temporary nature, but one of long standing and incurable.

2. And His disciples asked Him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents,³ that he was born blind?

This question seems to proceed from a belief that all affliction in this world is the punishment of sin. This was the position which Job's friends vainly endeavoured to maintain against him. Many explanations have been given of the train of thought which led the disciples to put their question to Jesus in this particular form. But none seems entirely satisfactory. It is not easy to understand in what way they thought this man, who had been blind from his birth, could have brought on his blindness by sin. The suggestion has been made that the disciples used the words of their question in a general way, without intending any very accurate or close application of them to the circumstances of the case, as, for instance: Did this man, or since it is out of the question that he could have sinned himself, so as to bring on his present blindness, was it from his parents' sin? But, after all explanation, there still remains a degree of uncertainty as to the exact meaning of the disciples' question.

3. Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the works of God should be made manifest in him.

4. I must work the works of Him that sent Me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work.⁴

S.V. We must work: S. that sent us.
Vulg. Me oportet operari opera ejus qui misit me.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. ix. 1; Homil. lvi. Maldonatus, in Joan. ix. 1; vol. ii. p. 714. Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. ix. 1; vol. viii. p. 1012. McClellan, New Testament, p. 575.

² Who did sin, this man, or his parents?—"It was a received doctrine in the Jewish schools that children, according to some wickedness of their parents, were born lame, or crooked, or maimed, and defective in some of their parts, &c., by which they kept parents in awe lest they should grow remiss and negligent in the performance of some rites which had respect to their being clean, such as washings and purifications. . . ."

"It appears that the ancient opinion of the Jews was that the infant from its first quickening had some stain upon it. . . . Nay, they went a little further, not only that the infant might have some stain of sin in the womb, but that it might in some measure actually sin, and do that which might render it criminal. To which purpose this passage of the disciples seems to have some relation, 'Did this man sin that he was born blind?' that is, did he, when his mother carried him in her womb, do any foul or enormous thing that might deserve this severe stroke upon him that he should bring this blindness with him into the world?"—LIGHTFOOT on John ix. 2; vol. ii. p. 568.

³ Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament, sect. lxi.; vol. i. p. 245.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, p. 202.

"This is to be explained by the Jewish theory of causes, with which, in its national exaggeration, the disciples were fully imbued. Heavy, mysterious bodily afflictions must be punishments which God has annexed to sin. 'Who by sins has provoked Divine justice, so as to cause this person's having been born blind?' The necessary, though not intentional, consequence of ἀμαρτία is meant. See Lücke in loc."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Test.,' p. 480.

⁴ Verse 4.—"Most readers will think with Mr. Burgon, that the reading ἡμᾶς δεῖ ἐργάζεσθαι τὰ ἔργα τοῦ πέμψαντός (whether followed by με or ἡμᾶς) 'carries with it its own sufficient condemnation' ('Last Twelve Verses,' &c., p. 81). The single or double ἡμᾶς ['we must work'], turning the whole clause into a general

5. As long as I am in the world, I am the Light of the world.

Some¹ have thought that by "the day" Jesus means His continuance among men, and by "the night" His departure from them. Day and night are well expressed by the shining and the withdrawal, the departure, of the Light of the world. He must work the works which the Father hath sent Him to work for the salvation of man, while He is present with them on earth, and before His departure from them. This He says as a preparation for the miracle which He is just about to perform on the blind man.

The property of light is to shine and to enlighten. Jesus, the Light of the world, proceeds to open the eyes of the body as well as the eyes of the soul of this man, who was born blind, born without light either of the body or of the soul.

6. When He had thus spoken, He spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and He anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay.^a Margin, spread the clay upon the eyes.

S. and He anointed his eyes with His clay: V. and He put His clay upon his eyes: A. with His clay.

Vulg. et inivit lutum super oculos eius.

Two views, very different and almost opposite, have been taken in ancient and modern times with respect to the object which Jesus had in spreading the clay upon the eyes of the blind man.

Besides calling the attention of the bystanders to the similarity of His works with those of the Creator, who had at first formed man from the dust or clay of the earth, and thus leading them to see the union which there was between God the Father and Jesus, who claimed to be His Son; besides all this, some of the early writers thought that Jesus had a still further object in anointing his eyes with clay, and that He meant to show them that the cure which He then wrought was not brought about in a natural way, but by means that were altogether supernatural: for they would themselves see that the natural effect of the clay was to cause blindness and not to give sight. They thought that He also made clay of His spittle to show them that illumination and salvation was the special property, the natural effect, so to speak, of His humanity.²

An opinion which has found some favour in modern times, is that Jesus anointed the eyes of the blind man with clay as an accommodation to the prejudices or opinions of the people, and perhaps even with the view of increasing the belief of the blind man in His power to cure him. It is maintained that there was, at this very time, a widely spread belief that clay spread over the eyes was in some cases a cure for blindness, and that the spittle of any person who was fasting was commonly looked upon as efficacious in some cases of disease of the eye, or even of blindness. The authorities that are quoted are sufficient to prove that these opinions were at this time, or rather a little later, common among the Romans, and they may even have been known to these Jews. But when the Pharisees tried to disprove the truth or reality of the miracle, they never allude to the possibility of the cure having been wrought by the use of mere human means. Their silence as to the possibility of the clay and the spittle having healed the man's blindness by their natural properties was doubtless not caused by any want of will to pervert them for their own objects. They institute a rigid examination into the case, and all their ingenuity is used to prove that the man had never been blind. When that fails, they silence him; but they never give the slightest hint that either clay or spittle had ever before had any healing power. The reason of their silence is plain enough, because they had never heard of such an opinion.

Jesus, having anointed the eyes of the blind man with clay, sends him to the Pool of Siloam, probably that the multitude may see him as he goes, and with the clay on his eyes, that thus they may more distinctly perceive both the

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. ix. 4; vol. vi. p. 959.

S. Augustine, in Joan. ix. 4, tract. xlv.; vol. iii. p. 1715.

V. Bede, in Joan. ix. 4; vol. iii. p. 758.

² S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. ix. 6; vol. vi. p. 964.

statement applicable to every one, is found in N* B D L, the two Egyptian, Jerusalem Syriac, Erpenius' Arabic, and Roman Ethiopic versions, in the younger Cyril and the versifier Nonnus. Origen and Jerome cite the passage as if the reading were ἐπὶ ἀγέρῃ [work ye the works'], which, by a familiar itacism, is the reading of the first hand of B. The first ἡγῶς is adopted by Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott, and Hort: the second by Tischendorf alone after N* L, the Memphitic, Roman Ethiopic, Erpenius' Arabic, and Cyril. Certainly με of B D, the Thebaic and Jerusalem Syriac, is very harsh.—SCRIVENER, 'Introduction,' p. 476, ed. 1874. See also McClellan, 'New Testament,' p. 728.

^a He spat on the ground, &c.—"It was prohibited amongst them to besmear the eyes with spittle upon the Sabbath day upon any medicinal account, although it was esteemed so very wholesome for them."

Both these statements Lightfoot proves by quotations from Jewish writers.

"So that in this action of our Saviour's we may observe—

1. That He does not heal this sick man with a word, as He did others, but chooseth to do a thing which was against their canonical observation of the Sabbath, designing thereby to make a trial of the man, whether he was so superstitious that he would not admit such things to be done upon him on the Sabbath day. He made an experiment not much unlike this upon the man at Bethesda.

"2. While He mingles spittle with dust, and of that makes a clay to anoint the eyes of the blind man. He thereby avoids the suspicion of using any kind of charm, and gives rather a demonstration of His own Divine power when He heals by a method contrary to nature; for clay laid upon the eyes, we might believe, should rather put out the eyes of one that sees than restore sight to one that had been blind. Yea, and further, He gave demonstration of the Divine authority He Himself had over the Sabbath when He heals upon that day by the use of means which had been peculiarly prohibited to be used in it."—LIGHTFOOT on John ix. 6; vol. ii. p. 570.

blindness, and the inadequacy of the means which had been used to effect a cure.

7. And said unto him, Go, wash in the pool^a of Siloam, (which is by interpretation, Sent.)^b He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing.

A. Go to the pool of Siloam and wash.
Vulg. Vade, lava in natatoria Siloe, (quod interpretatur Missus.)

Jesus was the Sent. He had so often repeated to the Jews the phrase that He was sent, that it could scarcely fail to attract their attention. Siloam also means "Sent." What the Pool of Siloam was to this blind man—viz. the source and fount of light—Jesus was to the world. He may have sent this blind man to wash in the Pool of Siloam, and to receive sight through the instrumentality of its waters, to remind them that He Himself was the Shiloh, "the Messiah," "the Sent" by the Father.¹ That Jesus had in His mind some typical reference when He sent the blind man to the Pool of Siloam has been the almost universal opinion, and is rendered nearly certain by the interpretation of its name being given by the Evangelist. The Evangelist did not give any interpretation of the term Bethesda, which was also a Hebrew word, and probably for the reason that no typical allusion was intended in the latter name.

It had been already foretold that the Messiah or Shiloh, or the Sent, as the Jews understood it, would open the eyes of the blind. (Isa. xxix. 18; xxxv. 5.) He who declared Himself again and again to be the Sent, had just opened the eyes of a man born blind, through the instrumentality of the waters of a pool called Sent. Yet all this awakened in the mind of the Jews no insight into the real character of Jesus.

8. ¶ The neighbours therefore, and they which before had seen him that he was blind, said, Is not this he that sat and begged?

S.V.A. beggar.
Vulg. Nonne hic est qui sedebat et mendicabat?

It has been well remarked that the question of identity would be much more likely to turn on whether he was really the person who had sat and begged. That proved, the whole city would remember that it was a blind beggar who used to sit there.

The greatness of the miracle, and the alteration of the face from that of a blind man to that of one who sees for the first time in his life, of one delighted and amazed by the first sight of creation, must have been immense, enough surely to cause them to doubt whether he were the same man or not.

9. Some said, This is he: others said, He is like him: but he said, I am he.

S.V. others said, No, but he is like him.
Vulg. alii autem: Nequaquam, sed similis est ei.

10. Therefore said they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?

S. How therefore.
Vulg. Quomodo aperti sunt tibi oculi?

11. He answered and said, A Man that is called Jesus made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam, and wash: and I went and washed, and I received sight.

S.V. omit and said: S.V. Go to Siloam: S.V. I went therefore.
Vulg. omits and said . . . et dixit mihi: Vade ad natatoria Siloe, et lava. Et alii, et lavi et video.

Maldonatus, in Joan. ix. 7; vol. ii. p. 720.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. ix. 7; vol. viii. p. 1014.

the other a larger pool, now nearly filled up. This latter I suppose to have been the pool dug by Hezekiah, and to be that going under the name of Siloam in Josephus (Wars, v. 10, 4), and the King's Pool in Nehemiah (iii. 14).² Recovery of Jerusalem, p. 238.

"Passing under the rocky face of Ophel, we came to the Pool of Siloam. We were surprised to find it so entire, exactly resembling the common prints of it. It is in the form of a parallelogram, and the walls all round are of hewn stones. The steps that lead down into it at the eastern end are no doubt the same which have been there for ages. The water covered the bottom to the depth of one or two feet. At the western end, climbing into a cave hewn out of a rock, we descended a few steps into the place from which the water flows into the pool. It is connected by a long subterranean passage, running quite through the neck to the Fountain of the Virgin, or, more properly, the Fountain of Siloam, the entrance to which is a considerable way farther up the Valley of Jehoshaphat. Through this passage the water flows softly from the fountain till it finds its way into the pool, not as generally represented in pictures, by pouring over the mouth of the cave, but secretly from beneath. Wild flowers, and, among other plants, the caper-tree, grow luxuriantly around its border."—"Mission to the Jews from Scotland," p. 154.

¹ S. Ambrose, de Sacramentis, iii. 2; vol. iii. p. 434.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxviii. p. 126.

^a Go, wash in the pool (ἔπαγε νίψαι εἰς τὴν κολυμβήθραν).—"εἰς τὴν κολυμβήθραν" is, in regard to the sense, to be connected with ἔπαγε. Comp. verse 11: "Go into the pool, and wash thyself in it." (Comp. Luke xxi. 37.) See Lücke. Though ἵνα πέλῃς εἰς ἔδαρ is as proper an expression as in ὡρίαν πέλῃς, so Jer. xli. 7, ἔσφαρῃ αὐτοὺς εἰς τὸ φρέαρ, 'he slew (and cast) them into the pit.' Comp. 1 Mace. vii. 19.—WINEY, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 434.

^b Which is by interpretation, Sent (διερμηνεύεται, ἀπεσταλμένος).—"The spring of Siloam discharged itself by a double stream into a twofold pool (2 Kings xviii. 17; Isaiah vii. 3; Nehem. iii. 15): the upper pool, which was called שִׁלּוֹחַ, the pool of Siloah; and the lower, which was called שֶׁלַי, the pool of Shelah. Now, the former plainly and properly signifies ἀπεσταλμένος, but not so the latter. Probably the Evangelist added this parenthesis on purpose to distinguish which of the pools the blind man was sent to wash in, viz. not in the pool Shelah, which signifies κωδιαν, fleeces, but in the pool of Siloah, which signifies ἀπεσταλμένος, sent."—LIGHTFOOT on John ix. 7; vol. ii. p. 571.

"There are two pools of Siloam: a small one, into which the waters from the Virgin's Fount fall after issuing from the tunnel;

12. Then said they unto him, Where is He? He said, I know not.

S.V. And they said: A. They said.
Vulg. Et dixerunt ei: Ubi est ille? Ait, Nescio.

The man himself does not in any way attribute his recovery to the natural effect of the water of Siloam. He speaks of it merely as the instrument in the hand of Jesus for his recovery. He does not yet know that Jesus is God; he knows that His name is Jesus, either by common rumour or by the report of the bystanders. He could not see Him before the miracle, and after it Jesus had withdrawn Himself.

13. ¶ They brought to the Pharisees him that aforetime was blind.

14. And it was the Sabbath day when Jesus made the clay, and opened his eyes.

15. Then again the Pharisees also asked him how he had received his sight. He said unto them, He put clay upon mine eyes, and I washed, and do see.

A. He said also unto them.
Vulg. Ille autem dixit eis.

16. Therefore said some of the Pharisees, This Man is not of God, because He keepeth not the Sabbath day. Others said, How can a man that is a sinner do such miracles? And there was a division among them.

S.V. But others.
Vulg. Alii autem dicebant.

17. They say unto the blind man again, What sayest thou of Him, that He hath opened thine eyes? He said, He is a prophet.

S.V. A. They say therefore: S. unto the formerly blind man.
Vulg. Dicunt ergo ceco iterum.

The neighbours of the blind man are the unwitting instruments of furthering the designs of God. It was probably from no feeling of kindness, but rather of hostility towards Jesus, or from fear of the Pharisees, that they bring him to the Pharisees to be examined by them. But this was the very way to render this miracle the best attested and the most widely known of all His works.

These Pharisees seem invested with legal authority, and were probably a court of the Sanhedrin. They are divided in opinion respecting the matter. The one, and probably the smaller party, and which might include in it Nicodemus, Joseph the Arimatæan, and Gamaliel, Pharisees who sat in the Sanhedrin, and who on other occasions counselled fairness and moderation,—this party wished to form their conclusion solely on the evidence of the case itself. The animus of the other party is shown by the prominence which they give to the fact that the cure was wrought on the Sabbath day. They wish to prejudge the miracle solely on this ground, without any reference to its own merits. This pretended miracle could not be real or true, because it was wrought in violation of God's command to keep the Sabbath day holy. This is their sole argument. Being unable to agree, they appeal to the man's own opinion of Jesus. He, grateful and sincere, and uninfluenced by any inferior motives, frankly and openly declares that Jesus is a prophet—that is, one commissioned by God to fulfil His work. They then turn to examine the evidence for the fact, or rather to see what flaw they can find in the evidence, for that is plainly their object.

18. But the Jews did not believe concerning him, that he had been blind, and received his sight, until they called the parents of him that had received his sight.

19. And they asked them, saying, Is this your son, who ye say was born blind? how then doth he now see?

S. omits saying.
Vulg. Et interrogaverunt eos, dicentes.

20. His parents answered them and said, We know that this is our son, and that he was born blind:

S.V. His parents therefore: A. But his parents.
Vulg. Responderunt eis parentes ejus, et dixerunt.

21. But by what means he now seeth, we know not; or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he is of age; ask him: he shall speak for himself.

V. ask him, he is of age: S. omits ask him.
Vulg. ipsum interrogare: ætatem habet, ipse de se loquatur.

22. These words spake his parents, because they feared the Jews: for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confess that He was Christ,^a he should be put out of the synagogue.

^a Christ.—To us 'Christ' has become a proper name, and as such rejects the definite article. But in the Gospel narratives, if we except the headings or prefaces and the after-comments of the Evangelists themselves (e.g. Matt. i. 1; Mark i. 1; John i. 17), no instance of this usage can be found. In the body of the narratives we read only of ὁ Χριστός, 'the Christ,' 'the Messiah,' whom the Jews had long expected, and who might or might not be identified with the person 'Jesus,' according to the spiritual discernment of the individual. Χριστός is nowhere connected with Ἰησοῦς in the Gospels, with the exception of John xvii. 3, where it occurs in a prophetic declaration of our Lord, ὅτι γινώσκωσιν, τὸν μόνον ἀληθινόν θεόν, καὶ ὃν ἀπεστείλας Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν: nor is it used without the definite article in more than four passages—Mark ix. 41, ἐν ὀνόματι ὑπο Χριστοῦ ἐστέ; Luke ii. 11, αὐτῷ ὡς ἐσται, Χριστὸς Κύριος; xiii. 2, λέγοντα αὐτὸν Χριστόν; John ix. 22, αὐτὸν ὁμολογῶν Χριστόν, where the very exception strengthens the rule. The turning-point is the Resurrection; then, and not till then, we hear of Jesus Christ from the lips of contemporary speakers (Acts ii. 38, iii. 6); and from that time forward 'Christ' begins to be used as a proper name, with or without the article.

23. Therefore said his parents, He is of age ; ask him.

A. and ask him.

Vulg. a tatem habet, ipsum interrogate.

There was no denying that the man then saw. Their object, therefore, was to prove that he had never been blind. His parents, cautious and afraid of the Pharisees, undertake to answer only what was perfectly known to them, not what they had learnt, from the report either of their son or of others.^a Thus their evidence, though unsatisfactory to the Pharisees, becomes a more valuable testimony in favour of the miracle.

24. Then again called they the man that was blind, and said unto him, Give God the praise ; we know that this Man is a sinner.

Vulg. Da gloriam Deo.

25. He answered and said, Whether He be a sinner or no, I know not : one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see.^b

S.V.A. omit and said : S. but one thing.

Vulg. Dixit ergo eis ille . . . unum scio, quia cæcus cum essem, modo video.

26. Then said they to him again, What did He to thee ? how opened He thine eyes ?

V. Therefore they said to him : S. They said to him.

Vulg. Dixunt ergo illi.

27. He answered them, I have told you already, and ye did not hear : wherefore would ye hear it again ? will ye also be His disciples ?

By the expression "Give God the praise," the translators of the Authorized Version have missed the sense of the words.¹ The meaning is not, Give God the praise of this miracle, as their rendering necessitates. The Jews are all the time attempting to disprove the truth of the miracle. The correct translation is, "Give glory to God ;" and these words are a common form of charging anyone to speak the truth, amounting almost to an adjuration. Thus : "Joshua said to Achan, My son, give, I pray thee, glory to the Lord God of Israel, and make confession unto Him ; and tell me now what thou hast done : hide it not from me." (Josh. vii. 19.) The Pharisees conjure this man, by an appeal to God, to confess to them the truth of his blindness and its cure, which they imply he is not doing. Under the pretext of religion, they wish to force him to unsay what he had already said. But he refuses to argue with them on subtleties, which are beyond him, and which do not concern him. One thing he realizes without any possibility of mistake, and on that he is willing to give evidence—on the difference of his present condition from his former. He was born blind ; he now sees. As to how that was brought about, he sees no good use that will be served in repeating it. Such is his gratitude to Jesus that it only knows one limit—viz, that they and all should become His disciples, whatever he may mean by that term.

28. Then they reviled him, and said, Thou art His disciple ; but we are Moses' disciples.

A. omits Then : S.V. And they reviled him.

Vulg. Maledixerunt ergo ei, et dixerunt.

29. We know that God spake unto Moses : as for this fellow, we know not from whence He is.

30. The man answered and said unto them, Why herein is a marvellous thing ; that ye know not from whence He is, and yet He hath opened mine eyes.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxviii. p. 129.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. ix. 24 ; vol. viii. p. 1017.

This fact points to a rule which should be strictly observed in translation. In the Gospel narratives ὁ Χριστός should always be rendered 'the Christ,' and never 'Christ' simply. In some places our translators have observed this (e.g. Matt. xxvi. 63 ; Mark viii. 29), and occasionally they have even overdone the translation, rendering ὁ Χριστός by 'that Christ' (John i. 25 ; vi. 69), or 'the very Christ' (John vii. 26) ; but elsewhere under exactly the same conditions the article is omitted, e.g. Matt. xvi. 16, xxiv. 5 ; Luke xxiii. 35, 39, &c.—CANON LIGHTFOOT on 'Revision of the New Testament,' p. 100.

Bishop Middleton, in an interesting note ('Greek Article,' p. 193), reviews this subject, and gives the arguments for and against, and arrives at a different conclusion from the above. He says, "On the whole it can hardly be doubted that the word Χριστός, even during our Saviour's lifetime, had become a proper name, though its appellative use was very much the more frequent."

^a He should be put out of the synagogue (ἀποσυναγωγῆς γένηται). "So chap. xvi. 2. ἀποσυναγωγῆς ποιήσουσιν ὑμᾶς. Granting that this is spoken of excommunication, the question may be whether it is to be understood of the ordinary excommunication, that is, from this or that synagogue ; or the extraordinary, that is, a cutting off from the whole congregation of Israel.

"Whosoever is excommunicated by the President of the Sanhedrin is cut off from the whole congregation of Israel ; and if so, then much more if it be by the vote of the whole Sanhedrin. And it seems by that speech, ἐξέβαλον αὐτὸν ἔξω, 'they cast out' (ver. 34), that word ἔξω (out) was added for such a signification."—LIGHTFOOT on John ix. 22 ; vol. ii. p. 572.

^b "Whereas I was blind, now I see (τυφλὸς ὦν ἔρτι βλέπω).—ἦν joined to a preterite, or an adverb of time, not unfrequently is the participle imperfect. But τυφλὸς ἦν ἔρτι βλέπω is perhaps being blind (from my infancy). Very probably it is only inasmuch as ἔρτι refers to the past that ἦν can be rendered 'Whereas I was blind.'—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 358.

^c "Why herein is a marvellous thing (ἐν γὰρ τοῦτο θαυμαστὸν ἐστὶ).—"In a cultivated prose style γὰρ (for) is the causal particle most usually employed. Agreeably to its origin (contracted from γὰρ and ἀρα), it commonly expresses a corroboration or admission (γὰρ) of what precedes (ἀρα). 'Sane igitur, certe igitur, sane pro rebus comparatis.' In ἐν γὰρ τοῦτο θαυμαστὸν ἐστὶν the reply specially refers to the statement of the Pharisees in verse 29 (ἀρα), and then subjoins an assertion (γὰρ), 'sane quidem mirum est ; in this at least it is assuredly wonderful.'—Ibid. p. 467.

31. Now we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth His will,^a him He heareth.

S.V. omit Now.
Vulg. Scimus autem.

32. Since the world began was it not heard that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind.

33. If this Man were not of God, He could do nothing.^b

In reply to the assertion of the Pharisees that they know not whence Jesus is—that is, whether He has been sent by God or by the devil—the beggar expresses his utter astonishment that, after Jesus has opened the eyes of one born blind, they who were skilled in the Law, and who were the authorized interpreters of it, should be at a loss to determine whence He is and by whom He has been sent. He then proceeds to prove to them that God must have sent Him.

34. They answered and said unto him, Thou wast altogether born in sins, and dost thou teach us? And they cast him out.

Marg., excommunicated him.
Vulg. In peccatis natus es totus, et tu doces nos?

Jesus Himself said that He was sent by God, and God, as the beggar argues, was not accustomed to allow miracles to be wrought for the confirmation of lies and hypocrisy. From the very beginning of the world it had never been heard that any man, however great, had ever opened the eyes of one born blind. Moses and the prophets wrought many miracles, but it was the special prerogative of Jesus to open the eyes of the blind. Jesus therefore was greater than Moses. The Pharisees prefer to be the disciples of Moses; he prefers to be the disciple of Jesus: for unless He were from God He could do nothing, He could have no power whatever to open the eyes of the blind. That is a supernatural work, and could only be wrought by express permission from God.

Unable to answer his reasoning, the Pharisees accuse him of presumption in attempting to teach them. He was altogether born in sin, as his very blindness showed, and he had learnt nothing but sin ever since his birth. For him to think of teaching them! In their headlong haste the Pharisees do not see that their two charges against this man cannot be both true—the one, that he had never been blind at all, but was an impostor; the other, that his very blindness even from his birth was a proof of his sinfulness. They cast him out from the house or building in which they were then assembled,¹ and probably also from the society of the synagogue.²

The very means which the Pharisees have adopted all through this transaction to disprove the truth of the miracle, bring the truth and perfection of it more plainly to the light, and proclaim to all future ages that the evidence for it was such as could not be overthrown. Here is the case of a man born blind miraculously cured by Jesus, who works this miracle as a proof of His claim to be God. The witnesses respecting it are various, and they are somewhat influenced by the fear of the Pharisees and the consequences of their testimony. They are cautious in their evidence, and show no officious readiness to testify beyond what they actually knew as eye-witnesses. The Pharisees have them all before them, and sift their evidence to detect any possible inaccuracy in it. The neighbours who had known the beggar before testify as to his identity, and to that only, that this is the man who had been accustomed to sit there and beg. The parents of the man in question give evidence, but they scrupulously confine themselves to the knowledge of two facts: he is their son, and he was born blind. The man himself gives evidence as to the Person who had healed him, and as to the means, the instruments, which He had used for that purpose. It was the Man called Jesus who had put clay upon his eyes and bade him go wash in the Pool of Siloam, and he went, and came seeing. He says nothing as to the way in which He had made the clay, because he had not seen it, and knew it only by report. They themselves are witnesses that the man can now see. To all this strictly legal evidence, and accumulated as it is, the Pharisees are unable to offer a single objection. Their only answer is, that it was the Sabbath day on which Jesus had made clay to put upon his eyes, and that this amounted to a profanation of the day which God had commanded to be kept holy. It was therefore impossible, they said, that God could have permitted a miracle to be wrought by a man who had thus profaned the Sabbath.

¹ Maldonatus, in Joan. ix. 34; vol. ii. p. 728.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. ix. 34; Homil. lix.
Theophylact, in Joan. ix. 34; vol. i. p. 641.

* And doeth His will (καὶ τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ ποιῇ).—"As in other passages of the Authorized Version we have a subjunctive instead of an indicative, an actual fact dealt with as though it were only a possible subjunctive conception, so here we have just the converse, an indicative instead of a subjunctive. It is true that in modern English the subjunctive is so rapidly disappearing, that 'If any man doeth His will' might very well pass. Still, it was an error when our translators wrote; and there is, at any rate, an incongruity in allowing the indicative 'doeth' in the second clause of the sentence to follow the subjunctive 'be' in the first, both equally depending upon 'if,' one would gladly therefore see a return to 'do His will,' which stood in Tyndale's Version."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on Authorized Version, p. 24.

^b If this Man were not of God, He could do nothing (εἰ μὴ ἦν οὗτος παρὰ Θεοῦ, οὐκ ἔδυνάτο ποιεῖν οὐδέν).—"In the consequent clause ἦν joined with the imperfect may sometimes be omitted, as when there is imperfect in the condition and imperfect in the conclusion, as in John ix. 33, 'were He not from God, He could do nothing.'"—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 321.

35. Jesus heard that they had cast him out; and when He had found him, He said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God? ^a

S. And Jesus: S.V. omit unto him: S.V. on the Son of Man.
Vulg. Audivit Iesus quia eiecerant eum foras . . . dixit ei: Tu credis in Filium Dei?

36. He answered and said, Who is He, Lord, that I might believe on Him? ^b

V. omits answered and said: A. omits and said: S. Lord, and who is He:
V. And who is He, Lord.
Vulg. Respondit ille, et dixit: Quis est, Domine, ut credam in eum?

37. And Jesus said unto him, Thou hast both seen Him, and it is He that talketh with thee.

S.V. omit And.
Vulg. Et dixit ei Iesus.

38. And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshipped Him.

S*. omits this verse.
Vulg. At ille ait: Credo, Domine. Et proci dens adoravit eum.

When Jesus knew that the Pharisees had cast out the beggar, He sought for him. He had already, when He gave him the bodily blessing of sight, imparted to him some seeds of Divine grace. These he had used aright. They had brought forth in him abundant fruit. As yet no man had ever defended Jesus and confessed himself His disciple more openly and in the face of greater danger than this beggar. Jesus now seeks him out to impart to him some greater blessing. He had opened his eyes solely on his obedience to His command to "Go, wash in the Pool of Siloam." On his cure, the beggar had at once come to the conclusion that Jesus must be a prophet, a prophet even greater than Moses. But he did not yet know that He was the Son of God. Nay, so far was he from having the slightest suspicion of this, that when Jesus found him, and put to him the question, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" he replied, "Who is He, Lord, that I might believe on Him?" When informed that Jesus, who stood before him, and whom, in consequence of his former blindness, he had then seen for the first time, but to whom he owed the gift of sight,—that He was the Son of God, he falls down and worships Him.

It may be that Jesus turned immediately to the people, or it may have been after a lapse of some little time, when recurring to the healing of the blind beggar. The first appears the most probable.

39. ¶ And Jesus said, For judgment I am come into this world, that they which see not might see; and that they which see might be made blind.

S*. omits And Jesus said.
Vulg. Et dixit Iesus.

40. And some of the Pharisees which were with Him heard these words, and said unto Him, Are we blind also?

S.V. omits And: S. heard it, and said.
Vulg. Et audierunt quidam ex pharisæis qui cum ipso erant, et dixerunt ei.

41. Jesus said unto them, If ye were blind, ye should have no sin: but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth.

S.V. omit therefore
Vulg. Nunc vero dicitis videmus. Peccatum vestrum manet.

For judgment Jesus came into the world. The Incarnation was a trial of men's character, such as had never been before. The poor humble souls who, like this beggar, had lived in sin and ignorance from want of better instruction, were brought to the knowledge of salvation through Jesus the Incarnate God. The Pharisees who, in the pride of intellect and of superior knowledge, despised others, also despised the lowly estate of the Son of God. Their blindness was the effect of their pride, followed by its natural punishment in this world, that is, by an increase of blindness. In the world to come it would receive another and a greater punishment. If they were ignorant and blind, but humble and sensible of their blindness, they would ask from Him a remedy for their blindness, and they would obtain it. If their rejection of Jesus was the result of invincible ignorance, of their unavoidable ignorance of Holy Scripture, their sin would be slight in comparison with what it is. Now, through malice and arrogance, they persist in their denial of Jesus, they refuse to acknowledge the truth and the power of the miracles which He works to prove that He is sent by God; there remains therefore no remedy for their ignorance and unbelief. The blind man who does not know that he is blind, will of course refuse the blessing of sight if offered to him. There can be no hope of cure for those who are blind but unconscious of it, whether their blindness be that of the body or that of the soul. So far from seeking for a remedy, they do not admit that they require one. Like these Pharisees, they indignantly repudiate the slightest imputation of blindness.

* Verse 35.—"When the man born blind is asked by the Holy One if he believes ἐπὶ τὸν Υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ [on the Son of God], we are by no means willing to acquiesce in the proposed subterfuge, τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου [on the Son of Man]."—DEAN BURGON, 'Last Twelve Verses of S. Mark,' p. 82.

"The Son of God: so also Griesb., Ln., Trg., Thol., Mey., Lng., Str., Alf., Wldw., Am. Rev., after A L X F Δ I. 33, and mass of MSS., Ital., Vulg., Memph., Syr., Fst., Eth., Goth., Arm., Syr. Hel., Tert., Chrys., Cyr.; as the context plainly demands. But the Son of Man, Tdf., Millig., and W. H. after another glaring blunder of only N B D and Theb. l."—McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 729.

The reading of the Versions may be conveniently seen in Malan's 'Translation of S. John from the Eleven Oldest Versions,' p. 140.

^b "Who is He, Lord, that I might believe on Him? (τίς ἐστι, Κύριε, ἵνα πιστεύω εἰς αὐτόν;)" sc. 'I wish to know, in order that,' &c. Comp. i. 22."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Test.,' p. 642.

CHAPTER X.

[1. Christ is the Door, and the Good Shepherd. 19. Divers opinions of Him. 24. He proveth by His works that He is Christ the Son of God: 29. escapeth the Jews, 30. and went again beyond Jordan, where many believed on Him.]

[Vulg. Christus verum describens pastorem et mercenarium, dicit se ostium ovium et bonum pastorem: qui et alias habuit oves ad idem ovile adducendas: animam suam ponit, ut iterum sumat eam: Iudei i lapidare ipsum volunt, quia se ad opera sua referens, dicebat unum esse cum Patre et Filium Dei: quod tamen ostendit non esse blasphemum.]

THIS chapter¹ is so intimately connected with the preceding one, that some have thought that it would more properly begin at verse 39 of chap. ix. It was the conduct of the Pharisees in the last chapter which gave rise to our Saviour's teaching in this. After Jesus had opened the eyes of the man born blind, he boldly defended Him as one sent by God, and professed himself to be one of His disciples. The Pharisees, unable either to answer his arguments or to resist the force of his testimony in favour of Jesus, expelled him from the society of the synagogue. They did not expel him from being a member of their own or of any other sect within the Church, but they excommunicated him so far as they were able, and cut him off from being any longer a member of the Church of God at all. To cast out the man because he believed in Jesus was as much as to say that Jesus was neither a member of their communion, nor, so far from being the Messiah, was He even a member of the Jewish Church.

On this, Jesus directs His public teaching so as to explain the nature of communion with God through His Church on earth. He delivers two parables, or rather two allegories. In the first of these He shows that He, Jesus, is the Door of the sheepfold, that is, of God's Church on earth, and that all who enter the fold, either as shepherds or as sheep, must enter through Him, by faith in Him. In the second, He shows that He is the Good Shepherd, and that the pastors and rulers of the Church are good in proportion as they resemble Him. These two parables, explained as they are by Himself, must have proved to the people most clearly, and in a manner which they could scarcely mistake, who Jesus was, and what was the character of His adversaries the scribes and Pharisees.

Though these two parables, or allegories, are intended to teach a distinct lesson, they are partly mixed up together in their structure. The parable of the Door is contained in the first ten verses of the chapter, and that of the Good Shepherd in the eight following.

1. Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.

2. But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep.

3. To him the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out.

4. And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice.^a

S. his own (omits sheep): V. all his own (omits sheep).
Vulg. Et cum proprias oves emisisset, ante eas vadit: et oves illum sequuntur, quia sciunt vocem ejus.

5. And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers.

6. This parable spake Jesus unto them: but they understood not what things they were which He spake unto them.

S. and.
Vulg. illi autem.

7. Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily,

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxix. p. 133.

Maldonatus, in Joan. x. 1; vol. ii. p. 732.

* They know his voice.—“A traveller once asserted to a Syrian shepherd that the sheep knew the dress of their master, not his voice. The shepherd, on the other hand, asserted it was the voice they knew. To settle the point, he and the traveller changed dresses, and went among the sheep. The traveller in the shepherd's dress called on the sheep, and tried to lead them; but ‘they knew not his voice,’ and never moved. On the other hand, they ran at once to the call of their owner, though thus disguised.”—“Mission to the Jews from Scotland,” p. 174.

verily, I say unto you, I am the Door of the sheep.

S. omits unto them again.
Vulg. Dixit ergo eis iterum Iesus.

8. All that ever came before Me^a are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them.

S. omits before Me.
Vulg. Omnes quotquot venerunt, fures sunt et latrones.

9. I am the Door: by Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture.

10. The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.

S. might have everlasting life.
Vulg. Ego veni ut vitam habeat, et abundantius habeat.

The pith of the allegory lies in the meaning of the following terms: the fold, the door, the porter, the sheep, and the shepherd. Not only do these words contain the substance of this allegory, but they contain the substance of His whole teaching. If we understand these terms aright, we shall comprehend the main drift of the Gospel, the great object of the Incarnation.

It is seldom possible in a parable to make the two things that are compared correspond accurately in every point. Probably all that is required or intended is a general resemblance, strong in the particular for which the comparison was instituted.

The Sheepfold is the Church of God. Formerly this was co-extensive with the nation of the Jews, and almost limited to it. After the Incarnation, the door was opened and the Gospel preached throughout the world, so that men from every nation under heaven could enter the fold. It was from the synagogue, the local representative of this fold, that the Pharisees cast out the man who was born blind. The sheepfold, the Church, is to the world at large what the Ark was to Noah and his family in the Deluge, the one place of refuge and salvation provided by God from the destruction hanging over the world through sin.

The Door of the fold is Jesus Himself. This is the principal point in the parable. The Pharisees had cast out the man born blind because he believed in Jesus, and by this parable He teaches them that He is the Door of the fold, that the only way in which they can enter the fold of God is through Him, through faith in Him as the Messiah, the Son of God. There is but one door, through which both shepherds and sheep must enter the fold, and Jesus is that Door. When speaking of the shepherds (verses 2, 7, and 8), He says that He is the Door through which they must enter, and that those who do not enter through Him are thieves and robbers, whose object is not the good of the sheep, but to gratify their own love of gain, or their own malice, "to steal, and to kill, and to destroy." When speaking of the sheep (ver. 9), He says that He is the Door through which all who desire to be saved must enter. It has been pointed out¹ that the abundance of grace and of spiritual nourishment provided for those who are in the fold, as well as their security from evil and from fear of evil through Satan and his agents, is beautifully expressed in the words "shall go in and out, and find pasture."

Jesus the Shepherd may be said to enter through the Door, that is, through Himself, because He enters the fold by His own authority.² Other shepherds enter it by the authority which He gives them.

The prophets and other holy men of old were shepherds over God's sheep before the coming of Christ in the flesh, but they, too, entered the fold through Him, the Door. They came in His name and by His authority. They are not those who climb up some other way. Nor is it very easy to see exactly who are meant by these words: for we have no accurate account of false teachers who came before Jesus, and who assumed to themselves either the title of Messiah, or who laid claim to His power, and whose object was their own personal gain, or to kill and destroy the sheep. It has been thought that Jesus has reference here to the devil, of whom He had spoken in the eighth chapter as a murderer from the beginning.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. x. 9; Homil. lix.
S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. x. 9; vol. vi. p. 1028.
Theophylact, in Joan. x. 9; vol. i. p. 646.

² Maldonatus, in Joan. x. 9; vol. iv. p. 371.

³ Euthymius, in Joan. x. 2; vol. ii. p. 734.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. x. 2; vol. iii. p. 1022.

^a Came before Me.—"This passage is very remarkable as furnishing a notable instance of rash tampering with an original reading on doctrinal grounds. The words 'before Me' evidently furnished the Gnostic and Manichean heretics with a text for denying the Divine mission of the ancient Jewish prophets (see Hippol. Hier. vi. 35; Aug. c. Adv. Legis et Proph. ii. 16; Chrys. and Theoph. in loc.). The orthodox accordingly dropped these words, in order to throw the whole emphasis of the declaration on the word 'came,' and thus to establish a strong contrast between the unauthorized advents of false prophets and the authorized appearances of the prophets of the Old Testament, as well as between false Christs and the true. Thus S. Augustine, loc. cit.: 'The adversary asserts that the Lord said, &c. But it is not so written, but thus, All that came are thieves, &c.; and by came the Lord would have us understand those who were not sent, whom Jeremias thus reproves, &c., as in Jer. xiv. 14.' Similarly Theod. Herac. in cat., Cramer's ed. p. 300. Hence the words are omitted in all these, N^o E F G M S U P Δ, and about one hundred cursives, Ital., Vulg., Theb., Syr., Pst., Goth., Syr. Hel., Bas., Chrys., Cyr., Aug.; and expunged by Tdf. But as internal evidence demands (the contrast being not between came and sent, but between the coming of pretended doors and the coming of the true Door; see ver. 10), the words are found in N^o A B D K L X Δ Π i, 33, 69; many others, Memph., Æth., Arm., Clem., Orig., Did., Hier. al.; and rightly retained by Griesb., Ln., Trg., Alf., Wdw., Millig., W. H., and indeed, as far as we know, by all but Tischendorf.³—McClellan, 'New Testament,' p. 729.

In one respect the character of the door into the sheepfold in Palestine is singularly calculated to represent the lowly estate of the Son of Man. As a rule they are made remarkably low.* Thus they are fitting emblems of Him who was God, and who yet became Man. Thus, too, they should remind His followers, the shepherds of the Church, of the lesson which they have to learn of Him, to be meek and lowly in heart.

The Porter is the Holy Spirit. He openeth when by His influence He draws men into the Church of God, or when He reveals to them the meaning of Holy Scripture. Faith to believe in Jesus as the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, is especially the gift of the Holy Spirit.

If the expression "the Porter openeth" is to be applied to Jesus, who is the Shepherd, the Good Shepherd, it must be in a sense different from that in which it is understood of others. It may be that He opened to Jesus, when at His Baptism He descended upon Him, and bore witness that He was the Son of God, and thus openly and before men gave Him a commission to be the Head over the Church, the Good Shepherd of the fold. It may also refer to the public sanction which all through His Ministry the Holy Spirit gave to Jesus, by working cures and miracles and casting out devils at His will and command.

The Sheep are all the disciples of Jesus, all who have ever been in covenant with Him, all who are in the Church. The division into sheep and goats is not made until the Day of Judgment. All in the fold are treated as sheep, they are tended with the same care of the Shepherd, and they feed on the same pasture. Some have thought that by the sheep here is meant only the true sheep, only those who shall be acknowledged as such at the Day of Judgment; others, and it would seem with greater probability, that all who enter the sheepfold are meant. For Jesus is setting forth His relation to the whole fold, to the Church militant on earth; He is the Door through which they must all enter.

The Shepherd is Jesus Himself. He is the Chief Shepherd, others are subordinate to Him. In this parable Jesus lays down several marks or notes of a true shepherd. He enters through the Door. To Him the Porter openeth. The sheep hear and know His voice. He calls His own sheep by name and leadeth them out. He goeth before them, and the sheep follow Him.

The habits of the shepherds in Palestine, and their almost affectionate attention to their flocks, are well suited to represent the tender care and concern which the shepherd of souls should feel in the welfare of his flock. The shepherd of the country goes before his sheep, and they follow him. So the Christian shepherd should lead his sheep on by his example. He should be first in danger, first in all Christian graces, and first in all holy and devout ways. His is not the stinted service of the hireling who feels no personal interest in their well-being, but the love of one who regards them as his own, of one who loves them.

In the last verse of the parable Jesus compares the object of those whom He had before described as thieves and robbers, with His object. They came to steal, and to kill, and to destroy. He came, He the Word was made flesh, in order that they might enter the fold and become His sheep, and that they might have life, and that they might have it abundantly. The great object of the Incarnation was that His brethren in the flesh might be delivered from the bondage of Satan, and might receive grace to enable them to walk in His steps, and afterwards to ascend with Him in glory everlasting.

From the parable of the Door into the sheepfold Jesus passes on to that of the Good Shepherd.

11. I am the Good Shepherd: the Good Shepherd giveth His life for the sheep.

12. But he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth; and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep.

V. omits But: S.V. omit the sheep after scattereth.*

Vulg. Mercenarius autem . . . et lupus rapit, et dispergit oves.

13. The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep.

S.V.A*, omit The hireling fleeth.

Vulg. Mercenarius autem fugit.

14. I am the Good Shepherd, and know My sheep, and am known of Mine.

S.V. and Mine know Me.

Vulg. et cognoscunt me meum.

15. As the Father knoweth Me, even so know I the Father: and I lay down My life for the sheep.

16. And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold:^b them also I must bring, and they shall hear My voice; and there shall be one fold,^b and one Shepherd.

* Sheepfold.—"It now began to rain (on the Lebanon), and at 8.15 we stopped for an hour at a Merāh or goat-house. We had seen several of these along the road. They consisted of a large yard, enclosed by a wall of stone like a house, eight or ten feet high; a portion being covered with a rude flat roof. In the present instance the single doorway was so low that our horses could not enter. We therefore took refuge under the high northern wall."—ROBINSON: 'Later Researches,' p. 39.

^b This fold—one fold (τῆς ἀλλῆς ταύτης—μία ποιῶν).—"Something of precision and beauty is lost at John x. 16, by rendering ἀλλῆ and ποιῶν both by 'fold.' " And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold (ἀλλῆς): them also I must bring, and they shall hear My voice: and there shall be one fold (ποιῶν) and one Shepherd." It is remarkable that in the Vulgate there is the same obliteration of the distinction between the two words, ovile standing for both. Substitute 'flock' for 'fold' on the second

17. Therefore doth My Father love Me, because I lay down My life, that I might take it again.

18. No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of My Father.*

S.V. No man hath taken it.
Vulg. Nemo tollit eam a me.

In the former parable Jesus lays down the qualities or characteristics of a good shepherd, and in this He claims them for Himself. He declares Himself the Good Shepherd. He knows His sheep individually, their excellences and their deficiencies. He knows the requirements of each, and He alone is able to supply them.

Whether the wolf come to scatter the sheep by disseminating heresy, or immorality, or by any other device of Satan, the hireling, whose eye is fixed solely on the rewards of the office, and who has but slight regard for the interests of the sheep, is unable to offer any resistance. He shrinks from the attack, and the reason which is given for this is, that he is only an hireling and not the owner of the sheep, and consequently that their welfare is not the chief thing which he has at heart. The hireling's object is the greatest reward with the least labour.

In the Authorized Version, verse 15 has not been happily rendered. It should not stand as an independent sentence, for it is intimately connected with verse 14, and should not be separated from it.¹ Verse 15 continues the comparison, and indicates the strength and origin of His love for the sheep. It may be paraphrased somewhat in this way, "As the Father knows and loves Me as His own Son, and I know and love Him as My Father, so in like manner I know and love My sheep, and they know and love Me." The standard of love is the love between the Father and the Son. This, too, is the cause as well as the measure of the love between the Son and the sheep. The nearer the human love approaches the Divine, the more pure and perfect it is. The origin and the measure of His love for the sheep is the love between Himself and the Father, and the proof of His love for the sheep is that He lays down His life for them.

The expression "I lay down My life," would almost of itself imply that the act was voluntary and only for a time. But this is not left to rest on the probable meaning of a single word. It is stated in distinct formal propositions as clearly as language can express it. The act of laying down His life was so far from being a sign of compulsion, or of inferiority to the Father, that it was the mark of union and love between them. The way of Humility, His Passion, His Death on the Cross, was the way to bring honour and glory and exaltation to the Godhead.

Jesus here foretells His Death and Resurrection, and He is at some pains to make them comprehend that His Death was voluntary, that He had the power but not the will to avoid it. In His instruction to the Jews He shows that His Death was by His own will, and all through His Passion He gave proofs of this. He who by His secret power could cause the band of soldiers and officers who were sent to take Him to go backward and fall to the ground (xviii. 6); He who by His touch could heal the ear of Malchus (xviii. 10); He who after such hours of exhaustion as human nature had never before experienced, had strength at the last moment before His Death to cry with a loud voice, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My Spirit" (Luke xxiii. 46); He who could do this showed that He had power successfully to resist death.

In this parable, too, we get a glimpse of the nature of the Hypostatic Union. Through His Manhood, through His nature as Man, He laid down His life; through His power as God, He took it again and rose again from the dead. But to lay down His life was not the result of His own single, individual will only, so to speak; it was the joint act of Himself and the Father. His own will is expressed by laying down His life, and His Father's will is expressed by giving the command, and by loving Him because He laid down His life.

But Jesus has other sheep beside those of the Jewish nation for whom He lays down His life. He here intimates that after His Death and Resurrection He would send His Apostles and disciples to preach to the Gentiles and to gather sheep from among them, sheep who would hear His voice. The Jews, though His sheep, as a nation refused to hear His voice. Through the preaching of the Gospel, the Gentiles would be converted to Him and would obey His occasion of its recurring (this was Tyndale's rendering, which we should not have forsaken), and it will be at once felt how much the verse will gain. The Jew and the Gentile are the two 'folds' which Christ, the Good Shepherd, will gather into a single 'flock.'" —ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on Authorized Version, p. 69.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. x. 14; vol. vi. p. 1044.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. lxxix. p. 139.

"Much attention has been directed by recent writers to the synonyms of the New Testament. They have pointed out what is lost to the English reader by such confusions as those of ἀλλή 'fold,' and ποιμνὴ 'flock,' in John x. 16, where in our Version the same word 'fold' stands for both, though the point of our Lord's teaching depends mainly on the distinction between the many Maldonatus, in Joan. x. 15; vol. ii. p. 742.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. x. 15; vol. viii. p. 1026.

folds and the one flock."—CANON LIGHTFOOT on 'Revision of the New Testament,' p. 71.

* This commandment have I received of My Father (ταύτην τὴν ἐντολὴν ἔλαβον παρὰ τοῦ Πατρὸς μου).—"After verbs of receiving, borrowing, &c., ἀπό has merely the general meaning of whence. In the expression λαμβάνειν παρὰ τινος the τις denotes the person actually delivering or tendering: in λαμβάνειν ἀπὸ τινος, it denotes merely the proprietor. Christ says, with strict precision, ταύτην τὴν ἐντολὴν ἔλαβον παρὰ τοῦ Πατρὸς μου."—WINEPE, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 388.

commands. The fold should no longer be confined to the seed of Abraham after the flesh, but it should be enlarged so as to contain all who walked in the steps of Abraham's faith. They should become one flock under Him, the One Shepherd, and in one fold, the Church. Though dispersed among different nations and over different quarters of the world, the Church forms but one fold and but one flock, of which Jesus Christ is the one Shepherd.

19. ¶ There was a division therefore again among the Jews for these sayings.

S.V. omit therefore.
Vulg. Dissensio iterum facta est.

20. And many of them said, He hath a devil, and is mad; why hear ye Him?

S.V. Ther fore many.
Vulg. Dicebant autem multi ex ipsis.

21. Others said, These are not the words of him that hath a devil. Can a devil open the eyes of the blind?

S. But others.
Vulg. Alii dicebant.

The answer of those who defend Jesus plainly connects these two parables with the miraculous healing of the man born blind. That event is still so fresh that they appeal to it as a refutation of the possibility of His being possessed with a devil. "Can a devil open the eyes of the blind?"

It is the custom of devils to arrogate to themselves the honour due to God only. The Jews therefore say that Jesus is possessed with a devil, because He said that God was His Father, and that He was the Son of God. They accused Him of being mad, or raving like a madman, because He said that He lay down His life, and that of His own accord. The first of these appeared contrary to fact, for He was then alive; and the second contrary to the nature of things, because no man willingly laid down his own life. To these accusations Jesus makes no reply. He leaves His defence to those who believe in Him.

22. ¶ And it was at Jerusalem the Feast of the Dedication,^a and it was winter.^b

V. It was then; S.V. omit and before it was winter; et hiems erat.
Vulg. Facta sunt autem encenia in Ierosolymis: et hiems erat.

The Feast of the Dedication would be the anniversary feast of some former dedication of the Temple. Several opinions have been held as to what this was. The most probable appears to be that it was the dedication of the Temple after the profanation of it by Antiochus Epiphanes.¹ This is partly shown by the season of the year in which it was celebrated. There are descriptions of two dedications in Canonical Scripture and one in Apocryphal. There is a very full relation of the dedication of the first Temple, of that built by Solomon (1 Kings viii.), which seems to have been a model for subsequent dedications. This took place in the month Ethanim (ver. 2); that is, part of September and October. Zerubbabel's temple was finished after their return from Babylon in the month Adar; that is, part of February and March (Ezra vi. 15). The account of the dedication which Ezra gives, implies that it was held immediately after (ver. 16). In this temple Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria, set up an idol altar, and otherwise polluted it with every mark of profanation, b.c. 167. After it had remained deserted for three whole years, Judas Maccabæus re-dedicated the Temple and replaced the holy vessels, &c. They celebrated the feast for eight days, and ordained that the days of the

¹ Rupertus, in Joan. x. 22; vol. iii. p. 621.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xciii. p. 211.

^a The Feast of the Dedication.—"The Rabbinis have a tradition: 'From the five-and-twentieth day of the month Chisleu there are eight days of the Encenia or Feast of Dedication, in which time it is not lawful either to weep or fast; for when the Greeks entered into the Temple they defiled all the oil that was there. But when the kingdom of the Asmoneans had conquered them, they sought and could not find but one single vial of oil that had been laid up under the seal of the chief priest. Nor was there enough in it but to light for one day. There was a great miracle; for they lighted up the lamps from that oil for eight days together; so that the year after they instituted the space of eight days for the solemnizing that feast' (Schabb. fol. 21, 2). . . ."

"The feast was instituted in commemoration of their Temple and religion being restored to them: the continuance of the feast for eight days was instituted in commemoration of that miracle; both by the direction of the scribes, when there was not so much as one prophet throughout the whole land."

"The Passover, Pentecost, and Feast of Tabernacles might not be celebrated in any place but Jerusalem, but the Encenia were kept everywhere throughout the whole land."—LIGHTFOOT on John x. 22; vol. ii. p. 577.

"The Festival of Dedication, τὰ ἐγκαίνια, was instituted by Judas Maccabæus to commemorate the purification of the Temple and the renewal of the Temple-worship, after the three years' profanation by Antiochus Epiphanes. It was held during eight days, commencing on the twenty-fifth day of the month Kislev, which began with the new moon of December. See 1 Macc. iv. 52-59; 2 Macc. x. 5-8. Josephus calls it φῶτα, i.e. 'festival of lights or lanterns,' and speaks of it as a season of rejoicing (Antiq. xii. 7, 6, 7). It was celebrated by the Jews, not at Jerusalem alone, like the great festivals of the Law, but at home, throughout the whole country, by the festive illumination of their dwellings. See Lightfoot, Hor. Heb. in John x. 22."—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels,' p. 203.

Maldonatus, in Joan. x. 22; vol. ii. p. 746.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. x. 22; vol. viii. p. 1028.

^b Verses 22.—"For δὲ ἐν ἑτέρῳ Westcott and Hort read τότε with B L 33, the Thebaic, Gothic, Slavonic, and Armenian Versions. No such use of τότε in this order, and without another particle, will be found in the New Testament, or easily elsewhere. The Memphitic and gal. of the Vulgate have δὲ τότε, which is a different thing. Moreover, the sense will not admit so sharp a definition of sameness in time as τότε implies. Three months intervened between the Feast of Tabernacles, in and after which all the events named from chap. vii. downwards took place, and this winter feast of Dedication."—SCRIVENER, 'Introduction,' p. 476, ed. 1874. See also McClellan, 'New Testament,' p. 729.

dedication of the altar should be kept in their season from year to year by the space of eight days, from the five-and-twentieth day of the month Casleu, with mirth and gladness (1 Maccabees iv. 59). The month Casleu, or Chisleu, was made up of parts of November and December. It was most probably the anniversary of this dedication, that is here referred to in verse 22.

23. And Jesus walked in the Temple in Solomon's porch.^a

24. Then came the Jews round about Him, and said unto Him, How long dost Thou make us to doubt? If Thou be the Christ, tell us plainly.

The interval between the Feast of Tabernacles and the Feast of Dedication was about two months; for the former was celebrated at the end of September and the latter early in December. Thus all that is recorded by S. John between chapter vii. 2 and chapter x. 22 must have taken place within these two months. The time which intervened between this Feast of Dedication and the Passover, at which He was crucified, was about three months. All, therefore, that S. John relates from this time to the end of his Gospel, and S. Luke from chapter xv. to the end, happened in the last three months of our Saviour's life on earth.

The Evangelist adds that it was winter, either to indicate the approach of the Passover, at which He would have to suffer, which was in the spring, or, which is far more probable, to account for His walking not in the Court of the Temple which was in the open air, but in the Porch, or arcade, or colonnade, which ran along the side of the Court, and which was roofed above as a protection from the weather.

The Jews were not sincere in saying, "How long dost Thou make us to doubt? If Thou be the Christ, tell us plainly." Their object was not to certify themselves of the truth, but to entrap Jesus and to cause Him to commit Himself, and to say something on which they could found a charge against Him, either of blasphemy against God or of treason against the regal power.

In reply to their words Jesus says that He has already declared who He is, and, more than that, He has confirmed His declaration by such works as no mere man could work: that the Father has testified in His behalf by allowing Him to use supernatural power in confirmation of the truth of what He had said. Since they had believed neither His words nor His works, no further declaration would have any weight with them. He then goes on to assign the reason of their unbelief. He had already done this before in words very similar to those which He now uses. This was not the want of plainness or distinctness in His language, it was not the want of proof of His Divine power, but the want of will in themselves to become His disciples. Their own schemes of ambition and worldly policy would not allow them to believe that the son of a carpenter could possibly be the Messiah, whatever might be the arguments by which He proved His Oneness with the Father, or whatever might be the works by which He showed that He was sent by Him.

25. Jesus answered them, I told you, and ye believed not: the works that I do in My Father's name, they bear witness of Me.

S. omits them.
Vulg. Respondit eis Jesus.

26. But ye believe not, because ye are not of My sheep, as I said unto you.

S.V. omit as I said unto you.
Vulg. omits as I said unto you.

27. My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me:

28. And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of My hand.

29. My Father, which gave them Me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of My Father's hand.^b

S. The Father: S.V. the Father's hand.
Vulg. Pater meus quod dedit mihi, majus omnibus est: et nemo potest rapere de manu Patris mei.

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. x. 22; vol. viii. p. 1028.
Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xliii. p. 210.
Lightfoot, Harmony of the New Testament; vol. i. p. 246.

^a Solomon's porch.—"Along the eastern side of the Temple Court extended Solomon's porch, where Jesus was wont to walk (John x. 23), and where the multitude crowded round Peter and John after they had cured the lame man (Acts iii. 2). This porch, or stoa, consisted of a double range of cloisters, between three rows of columns. It was of great height, and its commanding position on the eastern brow of Moriah, over the deep valley of the Kidron, made it look still more so. There were also ranges of cloisters along the other two sides, but Josephus does not speak specially of them."—Handbook of Palestine, p. 119.

^b My Father—My Father's hand.—"In these and similar places (xix. 13; xxi. 1), while the phraseology is exceedingly simple, the Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. xli. and 99, &c.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels, p. 202.
McClellan, New Testament, p. 575.

variations which the text exhibits are so exceedingly numerous that, when it is discovered that a Church Lesson begins in those places, we may be sure that we have been put in possession of the name of the disturbing force."—BURTON on 'The Last Twelve Verses of S. Mark,' p. 223.

"At times the repetition of a noun (instead of a pronoun) is employed to denote an emphatic antithesis. . . . Accordingly, it will be perceived that the repetition of the noun in the following passage is not without special import: ὁ Πατήρ μου, ὃς δέδωκε μοι, μείζων πάντων ἐστὶ καὶ οὐδεὶς δύναται ἀρπάξαι ἐκ τῆς χειρὸς τοῦ Πατρὸς μου."—WISER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 157.

30. -I and My Father are one.*

He invites them to become His disciples, and promises them eternal life, the life of grace here and the life of glory hereafter. He shows them that if they become His disciples, human and weak as He may appear, no one will be able to draw them from under His protection against their own consent. If they become His disciples and still perish, it will not be because He cannot deliver them, but because they remove themselves from under His hand. No one could take them from God the Father, because He is above all. In like manner no one could take them from Jesus, because He and the Father are One. Two Persons, they are One Substance; the plural verb (ἵσμεν) expressing the plurality of Persons, and the neuter singular adjective (ἓν) the Unity of Substance. Because they are One in Essence, in Godhead, therefore they were One in will and in power.

* S. Athanasius, Oratio i. contr. Arianos, 34; vol. ii. p. 81.

Oratio ii. contr. Arianos, 33; vol. ii. p. 217.

Oratio iii. contr. Arianos, 3-17; vol. ii. pp. 328, 329, 333, 341, 357.

Oratio iv. contr. Arianos, 2-16; vol. ii. pp. 469, 473, 479, 489.

S. Epiphanius, Heres. lix. 67; vol. ii. p. 313.

S. Basil, contr. Eunomium, i. 25, 27; vol. i. pp. 568, 572.

S. Cyril Hierosol. Cateches. xi. 16, p. 709.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. x. 30; vol. viii. p. 21.

Thesaurus, Assertio xii.; vol. iiii. p. 177.

Tertullian, adv. Praxeas, 25; vol. ii. p. 188.

* I and My Father are one.—“We affirm that it was the concordant and uniform view of the Catholic doctors who flourished in the first three centuries, that the Son of God is in the aforesaid sense of one substance with God the Father; that is, that He is not of any created or mutable essence, but of altogether the same Divine and unchangeable nature with His Father; and therefore is true God. The ancient writers indeed teach this doctrine in many different ways: 1. They teach the doctrine ‘of one substance’ so often as they affirm that the Son of God is put forth and begotten not only by the Father, but of Him; for that is a most certain axiom, ὅτι ἐκ Θεοῦ γεννηθείς, Θεός ἐστι. ‘What is begotten of God is God.’ 2. They teach the same so often as they declare that the Son is the true, genuine, proper, and natural Son of God the Father. 3. The very same do they declare by the similes with which they are accustomed, as best they may, to illustrate the generation of the Son. They say that the Son is begotten of the Father, as a tree proceeds out of the root, a stream out of the fountain, a ray out of the sun. But the root and the tree, the fountain and the stream, the light in the disc of the sun and that in the ray, are clearly of the same nature; so are the Father and the Son of altogether the same substance. But you will find no simile in which the Fathers take more delight than in that of light out of light, as when fire is kindled of fire, or the beam put forth out of the sun. Hence the Nicene prelates in their Creed inserted that expression, φῶς ἐκ φωτός, ‘Light of Light,’ in illustration of the article ‘of one substance.’ 4. They most openly confirm the doctrine ‘of one substance’ when (as they all do) they except the Son of God from the number of created beings, and expressly deny that He is a creature; for there is nothing midway between God and a creature. 5. They affirm the same so often as they ascribe to the Son of God attributes which belong to the true God only. 6. Lastly, they teach this very truth so often as they

This passage¹ thus understood was used by the early Church to refute some of the heresies of that day. Arguments were drawn from the use of the plural verb “we are” (ἵσμεν) to disprove the doctrine of Sabellius and his followers, who in the third century denied that there was a plurality of Persons in the Godhead. From the use of the neuter singular adjective “one” (ἓν), arguments were also drawn to refute the opinions of Arius and his followers, who in the fourth century denied that the Father and the Son were of One Essence or Substance. Hence arose the use of the word Homousion, “Consubstantial,” to guard the true faith of the Church, and to denote that the Father and the Son were of the same, not of a like, or different, Essence or Substance.

That this was the sense in which the Jews understood these words, there can be no question. They took up stones to stone Him, because that He, being a Man, made Himself

S. Hilary Pict. de Trinitate, vii. 5, 6, &c.; vol. ii. p. 203.

—viii. 5; vol. ii. p. 240.

S. Ambrose, de Fide, i. 1; vol. iii. p. 531.

—de Spiritu Sancto, iii. 18; vol. iii. p. 809.

S. Augustine, in Joan. x. 30, tract. xlix.; vol. iiii. p. 1744.

—de Trinitate, iv. 9; vol. viii. p. 896.

—v. 3 and 9; vol. viii. pp. 913

and 917.

—vi. 2; vol. viii. p. 924.

—contr. Maximin. Arian. Episcop. ii. 10, 11, 12; vol. viii. p. 764.

—Sermo cxxxix. (alias 51 de verbis Domini); vol. v. p. 769.

explicitly pronounce the Son of God to be not only God, but true God also; God by nature, one God with the Father. In most of the Fathers all these arguments for the consubstantiality may be found, whilst most of them occur in all.—BISHOP BULL, ‘Defence of the Nicene Creed,’ vol. i. p. 84.

“The Second Person in the Holy Trinity is not a quality, or attribute, or relation, but the One Eternal Substance; not a part of the First Person, but whole or entire God; nor does the generation impair the Father’s Substance, which is, antecedently to it, whole and entire God. Thus there are two Persons in each other ineffably, each being wholly one and the same Divine Substance, yet not being merely separate aspects of the same, each being God as absolutely as if there were no other Divine Person but Himself. Such a statement indeed is not only a contradiction in the terms used, but in our ideas, yet not therefore a contradiction in fact; unless indeed anyone will say that human words can express in one formula, or human thought embrace in one idea, the unknown and infinite God (Basil, contr. Eun. i. 10).”—DR. J. H. NEWMAN on S. Athanasius; Library of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 326.

“It has been observed that the mystery of the doctrine of the Holy Trinity is not merely a verbal contradiction, but an incompatibility in the human ideas conveyed by them. We can scarcely make a nearer approach to an exact enunciation of it than that of saying that one thing is two things. The Father is all that is God; He is the One, Eternal, Infinite Being absolutely and wholly. And His nature is most simple and free from parts and passions. Yet this One God is also the Son, and He is the One God as absolutely and wholly as the Father, yet without being the Father. In this world we have often great changes in the same beings, so that he is one thing at one time and another at another; but the Unchangeable God is Three all at once, and that Three Persons.”—Ibid. p. 515.

God. His words would have been blasphemy had they not been true.

31. Then the Jews took up stones again to stone Him.

S.V. omit Then.

Vulg. Sustulerunt ergo lapides Iudaei, ut lapidarent eum.

32. Jesus answered them, Many good works have I shewed you from My Father; for which of those works do ye stone Me? *

S.V. from the Father.

Vulg. ex Patre meo.

33. The Jews answered Him, saying, For a good work we stone Thee not; but for blasphemy; and because that Thou, being a Man, makest Thyself God.

S.V.A. omit saying: S. omits and before because.

Vulg. Responderunt ei Iudaei: De bono opere . . . et quia.

The Jews had themselves requested Him to tell them, without any reservation or indistinctness of language, whether He were the Christ, intimating that if He were they would worship Him as such. Now when He declares that He is God in language which they cannot misunderstand, they take up stones to stone Him, giving as their reason, that He, being a Man, made Himself God. In the very act of hurling the stones at Him they are withheld by some secret power, and Jesus, in order as it would seem, to bring out more strongly than ever His Equality and Oneness with the Father, puts a question to them. He had used words which, as the Jews well saw, could have but one meaning, to make Himself equal with God. When they take up stones to stone Him, He asks them, For which of the many good works it was that they did this? Was it for raising the dead, or healing the sick, or opening the eyes of the blind? They reply it was not for any of His works, but for His words, for the blasphemy of His words, because that He, being a Man, made Himself God.

Jesus acknowledges that they had understood His words aright. But He does not withdraw them, He does not retract in the least. He does not soften down His meaning, but repeats and enforces it in a different form. He shows them that the word "God" is used in Scripture in two senses: (1) In a lower sense it is applied to those who have a power delegated to them by God; and (2) in the highest sense it is the name of the Creator of all things. In the first sense they were gods, they were judges and rulers set over the people by God. In the second sense He was God; He it was who gave them their power and authority.

34. Jesus answered them, Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods?

S. in the law.

Vulg. Nonne scriptum est in lege vestra.

35. If he called them gods, unto whom the word of God came, and the Scripture cannot be broken;

36. Say ye of Him, whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; because I said, I am the Son of God? ^b

* For which of those works do ye stone Me? (διὰ ποίων αὐτῶν ἔργων λιβάζετέ με).—Sometimes the present is employed to denote what is just about to take place—what one is intending to effect, and what he has already made the necessary preparations to do, as in John x. 32: διὰ ποίων αὐτῶν ἔργων λιβάζετέ με; 'they had already taken up stones.'—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 280.

† The Divine Sonship.—"It is a point of doctrine necessary to insist upon, that while our Lord is God He is also the Son of God, or rather, that He is God because He is the Son of God. We are apt at first hearing to say that He is God, though He is the Son of God, marvelling at the mystery. But what to man is a mystery to God is a cause. He is God, not though, but because He is the Son of God. Though we could not presume to reason of ourselves that He that is begotten of God is God, as if it became us to reason at all about such ineffable things, yet, by the light of Scripture, we may thus reason. This is what makes the doctrine of our Lord's eternal Sonship of such supreme importance, viz. that He is God because He is begotten of God; and they who give up the latter truth are in the way to give up, or will be found already to have given up, the former. The great safeguard to the doctrine of our Lord's Divinity is the doctrine of His Sonship: we realize that He is God only when we acknowledge Him to be by nature and in eternity Son.

"Nay, our Lord's Sonship is not only the guarantee to us of His Divinity, but also the condition of His Incarnation. As our Lord was God because He was the Son, so on the other hand because He was the Son therefore is He man—it belonged to the Son to have the Father's perfections; it became the Son to assume a servant's form. We must beware of supposing that the Persons of the ever-blessed Trinity differ from each other only in this, that the Father is not the Son, and the Son is not the Father. They differ in this besides, that the Father is the Father and the Son is the Son. While they are one in substance, each has distinct characteristics which the other has not. Thus we may see a fitness, now that that sacred truth is revealed, in the Son's taking flesh, and may thereby understand better what He says of Himself in the Gospels. The Son of God became the Son a second time, though not a second Son, by becoming man. He was a Son both before His Incarnation and by a second mystery after it. From eternity He had been the Only-begotten in the bosom of the Father; and when He came on earth this essential relation to the Father remained unaltered. Still He was a Son when in the form of a servant, still performing the will of the Father as His Father's word and wisdom, manifesting His Father's glory, and accomplishing His Father's purposes.

"For instance, take the following passages of Scripture:—'I can do nothing of Myself'; 'He that sent Me is with Me'; 'The Father hath not left Me alone'; 'My Father worketh hitherto, and I work'; 'As the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself'; 'Whatsoever I speak, even as the Father said unto Me, so I speak'; 'I am in the Father, and the Father in Me.' Now it is true these passages may allowably be understood of our Lord's human nature; but surely if we confine them to this interpretation, we run the risk of viewing Him as two separate beings, not as one Person; or again of gradually forgetting and explaining away the doctrine of His Divinity altogether. If we speak as if our Lord had a human personality, then if He has another personality as God, He is not one Person, and if He has not another personality

They were called gods by the Psalmist (Ps. lxxxii. 6-8), and He was God, but the difference between them was this, they were called gods because the word of God came to them, and gave them a certain authority; He was God, because the Father sanctified Him, and sent Him into the world, that is, because the fullness of the Godhead dwelt in Him bodily.¹ They knew from the testimony of John the Baptist that the Holy Spirit had descended upon Him, and that a voice from the Father had set His seal upon Him, had given His highest sanction to Him, and declared that Jesus was His beloved Son, in whom He was well pleased. There was, as His words imply, the same difference between Himself and them, mere man though He seemed, as the Psalmist had made between the Most High and those who were His children, between those who should die like men and the God that judgeth the earth.

Jesus then appeals to His works as proving His unity with the Father. If they will not believe His teaching, that He is One with the Father, that the Father is in Him and He in the Father, He calls on them to examine the character of His works. His works are such as no mere man could perform. They must either admit that He wrought them by His power as God, or they must admit that the Father permitted Him to exert supernatural power in confirmation of a claim which is not true,—nay, of a claim which they themselves say is blasphemy, the highest blasphemy, if it be not true. Reduced to this extremity, their exasperation knows no bounds, and they attempt again to take Him, but He escapes out of their hands, probably by giving them another proof of His almighty power as God, by rendering Himself invisible to them.

The expression² “the Father is in Me, and I in Him,” has been generally held to be equivalent to His words “I and My Father are One.”

37. If I do not the works of My Father,^a believe Me not.

38. But if I do, though ye believe not Me, believe the works: that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in Me, and I in Him.

V. that ye may know and understand: S.V. and I in the Father.
Vulg. ut cognoscatis et credatis quia Pater in me est, et ego in Patre.

¹ S. Athanasius, de Incarnatione, i. 2, &c.; vol. ii. p. 986.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. x. 36; Homil. lxi.

Theophylact, in Joan. x. 36; vol. i. p. 652.

S. Hilary Pict. de Trinitate, vii. 24; vol. i. p. 219.

S. Augustine, in Joan. x. 36, tract. xlviii.; vol. iii. p. 1745.

V. Bede, in Joan. x. 36; vol. iii. p. 774.

² S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. x. 37; vol. vii. p. 32.

Euthymius, in Joan. x. 38; vol. iv. p. 393.

S. Augustine, in Joan. x. 38, tract. xlviii.; vol. iii. p. 1745.

V. Bede, in Joan. x. 38; vol. iii. p. 774.

He is not God. Such passages, then, as the foregoing would seem to speak neither of His human nature simply nor of His Divine, but of both together; that is, they speak of Him who, being the Son of God, is also Man. He who spoke was one really existing Person; and He, that one living and almighty Son, both God and Man, was the brightness of God's glory and His Power, and wrought what His Father willed, and was in the Father and the Father in Him, not only in heaven, but on earth. In heaven He was this, and did this, as God; and on earth He was this, and did this, in that Manhood which He assumed; but whether in heaven or on earth, still as the Son. It was therefore true of Him altogether when He spoke that He was not alone, nor spoke or wrought of Himself, but where He was, there was the Father; and who had seen Him, the Son, had seen the Father, whether we think of Him as God or as Man.

Again, we read in Scripture of His being sent by the Father, addressing the Father, interceding with Him for His disciples, and declaring to them that His Father is greater than He. In what sense says and does He all this? Some will be apt to say that He spoke only in His human nature; words which are perplexing to the mind that tries really to contemplate Him as Scripture describes Him, because they seem to imply as if He were speaking only under a representation, and not in His Person. No; it is truer to say that He, that One All-gracious Son of God, who had been with the Father from the beginning, equal in all Divine perfections and one in substance with Him, but second after Him as being the Son—as He had ever been His Word, and wisdom, and counsel, and will, and power in heaven; so after His Incarnation and upon the earth, still spoke and acted, after yet with the Father as before, though in a new nature which He had put on, and in humiliation.

“This, then, is the point of doctrine which I had to mention, that our Lord was not only God, but the Son of God. We know more than that God took on Him our flesh; though all is mysterious, we have a point of knowledge further and more distinct, viz. that it was neither the Father nor the Holy Ghost, but the Son of the Father, God the Son, God from God and Light from Light, who came down upon earth, and who thus, though graciously taking on Him a new nature, remained in Person, as He had been from everlasting, the Son of the Father, and spoke and acted towards the Father as a Son.”—DR. J. H. NEWMAN, ‘Theological Tracts,’ p. 138.

“That title (the Son of Man), besides its direct signification of His true and representative humanity, is itself the product of a self-consciousness for which the being human is not a matter of course, but something secondary and superinduced. In other words, this title implies an original nature to which Christ's humanity was a subsequent accretion, and in which His true and deepest consciousness, if we may dare so to speak, was at home. Thus, often in the Synoptic Gospels He is called simply the Son. He is the true Son of Man, but He is also the true Son of God. In Him Sonship attains its archetypal form; in Him it is seen in its unsullied perfection. Accordingly He never calls the Father our Father, as if He shared His Sonship with His followers. He always speaks of My Father. To this Divine Sonship He received witness from heaven both at His Baptism and at His Transfiguration. In the parable of the vineyard the prophets of the old theocracy are contrasted with the Son, not as His predecessors or rivals, but as His slaves. Thus He lives among men as the One True Son of His Father's home. He is alone free by birthright among a race of born slaves. Yet, instead of guarding His solitary dignity with jealous exclusiveness, He vouchsafes to raise the slaves around Him to an adopted sonship: He will buy them out of bondage by pouring forth His blood; He will lay down His life that He may prove the generosity of His measureless love towards them.”—CANON LIDDELL, ‘Bampton Lectures,’ vol. v. p. 249.

“If I do not the works of My Father (εἰ οὐκ ἐγὼ τὰ ἔργα τοῦ Πατρὸς μου, &c.).”—“If I neglect My Father's works (and thus withhold from you the proofs of My Divine mission, &c.). In the New Testament generally ‘it’ is expressed more frequently by εἰ οὐκ ἢ than by εἰ μὴ, which latter form most commonly signifies ‘except.’”—WINER, ‘Grammar of the New Testament,’ p. 499.

39. Therefore they sought again to take Him : but He escaped out of their hand,

S. omits again.
Vulg. omits again.

40. And went away again beyond Jordan into the place where John at first baptized ; and there He abode.

S. omits into the place : A. He went away therefore again.
Vulg. Et abiit iterum trans Iordanem, in eum locum ubi erat Ioannes baptizans primum : et mansit illic.

41. And many resorted unto Him, and said, John did no miracle : but all things that John spake of this Man were true.

42. And many believed on Him there.

Jesus withdrew to Bethabara, or Bethany, beyond Jordan, where John had baptized Him. He went there probably to recall to the minds of those who accompanied Him the testimony which John had at His Baptism borne to Him, as well as the testimony of the Father. They seem to have held the memory of John in great reverence, and to have treasured up his sayings. They reason like men who were open to conviction, anxious only to learn the truth. "John," as they say, "did no miracles, and yet we believed his words. Jesus has wrought many miracles, and in confirmation of the truth of what He says ; why then should we not believe Him ? Besides, whatever John said respecting Jesus, so far as we are able to judge, was true ; He is, as John said He would be, greater than John in His miracles, in the gracious words that fall from His lips, and in the sanctity of His life. We see that John's words are true so far : why should we not believe that they are true in all that he said respecting Him ? why should we not believe that Jesus is, as John said, the Messiah, the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world ?" This honesty of heart prepared the way for their reception of the truth, and many believed on Jesus. Here Jesus remained till within a short time of the Passover, at which He should suffer, when He returned again to Jerusalem.

CHAPTER XI.

[1. Christ raises Lazarus, four days buried. 45. Many Jews believe. 47. The high priests and Pharisees gather a council against Christ. 49. Caiaphas prophesies. 51. Jesus had Himself. 53. At the Passover they capture after Him, and lay wait for Him.]

[Vulg. Jesus Lazarum quatuor diebus mortuum resuscitat, portatus multo cum discipulis et cum Martha: quapropter dum propter hoc miraculum multi in Christum crediderunt, pontifices et pharisæi, inde consilio statuerunt cum occidere. Caiapha pontifex prophetaute aperire. Isam mori, ne totus populus periret: Jesus autem sedebat in creditatione Ephrem.]

BETWEEN chaps. x. and xi. there occurs an interval of about three months: for S. John passes on from the events of December to those of March, that is, from our Saviour's discourse at the Feast of Dedication to His raising of Lazarus from the dead, probably only a few days before His final journey to Jerusalem for His Crucifixion. The history of our Saviour's ministry during this interval, so far as it is recorded, is given by S. Matthew (xvi. 13-xix.), S. Mark (viii. 27-x.), and S. Luke (ix. 18-xviii. 30). Besides His many discourses, this includes His departure with His disciples into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, His Transfiguration on the Mount, paying of tribute, His final departure from Galilee for Jerusalem, His rejection by the Samaritans, healing of the ten lepers, and His arrival and sojourn at Bethabara. For the reasons for this arrangement, see S. Matthew, chap. xix. p. 310.

1. Now a certain man was sick, named Lazarus, of Bethany, the town of Mary and her sister Martha.

A. his sister.

Vulg. de castello Mariæ et Martiæ sororis ejus.

2. (It was that Mary which anointed the Lord

* It was that Mary which anointed the Lord, &c. (ἡν δὲ Μαρία ἡ ἀλείψασα)—"The participle aorist is never employed instead of the participle future; certainly not in John xi. 2, where the Evangelist alludes to an event long past, which he narrates for the first time in chap. xii."—WINLER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 359.

"The words of xi. 2, 'It was that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped His feet with her hair,' are most generally construed as pointing to that story in the next chapter, xii. 3: 'Then took Mary a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped His feet with her hair,' which seemeth very improper and unconsonant upon these reasons.

"1. To what purpose should John use such an anticipation? It was neither material to the story that he was entering on, chap. xi., to tell that Mary anointed Christ's feet a good while after He had raised her brother; nor was it any other than needless to bring in the mention of it here, since he was to give the full story of it in the next chapter.

with ointment, and wiped His feet with her hair,^a whose brother Lazarus was sick.)

3. Therefore his sisters sent unto Him, saying, Lord, behold, he whom Thou lovest is sick.

This is not the beggar Lazarus whom Jesus described as sitting at the gate of the rich man. This Lazarus, from the entertainment which he gave to Jesus and from the number of guests that were invited, seems to have lived in circumstances of comfort and plenty. He is generally considered to have been a man of rank as well as of wealth. The number of Jews who came to console the sisters on the death of their brother, the tomb of Lazarus himself, and the costly ointment, all go to prove that the family was wealthy.

For the reasons which lead to the belief that there were only two anointings of Jesus—the first recorded by S. Luke (vii. 37), in the Pharisee's house; the second in Bethany, recorded by S. Matthew (xxvi. 6), by S. Mark (xiv. 3), and by S. John (xii. 3)—that these two anointings were by one and the same woman—that Mary Magdalene was the same person as Mary of Bethany, the sister of Lazarus and of Martha—and that Simon the Pharisee was not improbably

^a 2. The word ἀλείψασα is of such a tense as doth properly denote an action past, and is so to be rendered, if it be rendered in its full propriety, 'It was Mary which had anointed.'

"3. Whereas no reason can be given why John should anticipate it here, if he meant it of an anointing that was yet to come, a plain and satisfactory reason may be given why he speaks of it here, as referring to an anointing past; namely, because he would show what acquaintance and interest Mary had with Christ, which did embolden her to send to Him about her sick brother, for she had washed and anointed His feet heretofore. The words of John, therefore, point at an action past, and indeed they point at that story of the woman-sinner washing the feet of Christ with tears and anointing them with ointment, and wiping them with her hair. (Luke vii.) It is true indeed that John, who useth these words that we are upon, had not spoken of any such anointing before, whereunto to refer you in his own Gospel, but the passage was so well and renownedly known and recorded by Luke before, that he relateth it as to a thing of most famous notice and memorial."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. lxvi. vol. i. p. 249.

the same person as Simon the leper—see Commentary on S. Matthew, chap. xxvi. p. 409, &c.

Jesus had lately been living at Bethabara, or Bethany, on the east side of Jordan, but the Bethany where Lazarus dwelt was on the west side, about two miles from Jerusalem, at the Mount of Olives. (Mark xi. 1.)

To explain the connection of Jesus with the family of Lazarus, and the interest which He naturally took in its welfare, the Evangelist adds, "It was that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped His feet with her hair, whose brother Lazarus was sick."

Some¹ think that S. John is here referring to the anointing of Jesus which had already taken place, and which is recorded by S. Luke (vii. 37); others² that he alludes by anticipation to the anointing which he himself describes in the next chapter.

The sisters do not ask Jesus to come and heal their brother. But their message seems almost to imply a prayer. They state that their brother is sick, and remind Jesus of His love for him.

4. When Jesus heard that, He said, This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby.

In language which they could not understand at the time, but which, when afterwards understood, would serve as a further confirmation of their faith, Jesus intimates to His disciples, and probably also to the messenger that was sent to Him, that the sickness of Lazarus will not end in his final removal from the scene of trial, but only for a time. He will be restored to it, and in a way that will increase the honour and glory of God among men: for, beholding his miraculous restoration to life by Jesus, they will be compelled to believe that He is the Messiah, the Son of God.

This was one way in which the sickness of Lazarus would be for the glory of God. It is also probable that in using this expression Jesus had reference to His own Death. He knew that the raising of Lazarus would be the occasion of His own Crucifixion. When He opened the eyes of the man born blind, the fury of the scribes and Pharisees was well-nigh without bounds. The raising of Lazarus from the dead would add fuel to their malice. They would spare no pains to accomplish His Death.

5. Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus.

No reason is given why Jesus loved Martha and her sister and Lazarus. Doubtless it was from what He knew of them. His love was not from the instinctive feeling which a man has to his fellow-creatures. It was from His admiration of their lives, of their deeds, and from His knowledge of their hearts. With the exception of the Evangelist S. John, it is said of only one other, besides this family at Bethany, that Jesus "loved" him, and that other was the young man who had great possessions. (Mark x. 21.) Hence it has been suggested,³ perhaps on too slender grounds, that Lazarus might be this young man. Their age might not be unlike, both young men; their social position would seem to correspond, and they both possessed virtues in an uncommon degree so as to draw forth the love of Jesus.

The sickness of Lazarus would not appear to have been of a lingering nature, but sudden and rapid, as if from one of the fevers of the country, which terminate fatally in a day or two, and sometimes even in the course of a few hours. Hence his death on the very day on which the messenger is despatched to Jesus is no indication of remissness on the part of his sisters, but of the rapid progress of his sickness after his first attack.

In remaining where He was two days after He received the news of Lazarus's sickness, Jesus was consulting for their good, that they might have stronger grounds for believing that He was God. In all probability Lazarus was dead before the messenger from his sisters arrived; ⁴ for when Jesus came to Bethany He found that he had lain in the grave four days already. According to the custom of the country, he would be buried either on the day of his death, or certainly on the following day. Two days Jesus had delayed; one day was taken up with the journey of the messenger, and one whole day or part of another with the journey of Himself and disciples on foot. In allowing Lazarus to be buried, and his body to become decomposed, it would scarcely be possible for the Jews to deny the reality of the miracle. They could not allege that the vital powers had been, as it were, suspended for a time by sickness and then restored by the force of nature. The Jews had endeavoured to evade His miracle of opening the eyes of the man born blind, by declaring that he had never been blind. Here there would be no possibility of escape. Having been buried four days, they must acknowledge that Lazarus had been dead; seeing him alive, they would be compelled to admit that he had been raised from the dead by superhuman power.

6. When He had heard therefore that he was sick, He abode two days still in the same place where He was.

7. Then after that saith He to His disciples, Let us go into Judea again.

A. to His disciples; S. omits again.
Vulg. dixit discipulis suis: Eamus in Iudeam iterum.

8. His disciples say unto Him, Master, the

¹ Maldonatus, in Joan. xi. 2; vol. ii. p. 756.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xi. 2; vol. viii. p. 1034.

³ Jansenius, in Concord Evang. cap. cii. p. 276.

⁴ Smith's Biblical Dictionary, article Lazarus.

⁴ Euthymius, in Joan. xi. 17; vol. iv. p. 403.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xi. 17; vol. ii. p. 761.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xi. 17; vol. viii. p. 1038.

Jews of late sought to stone Thee; and goest Thou thither again?

9. Jesus answered, Are there not twelve hours in the day? If any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth the light of this world.

10. But if a man walk in the night, he stumbleth, because there is no light in him.

It is not usual for Jesus to announce beforehand to His disciples the place to which He is next going or the route which He will take. On this occasion He does so, because the last time they were in Jerusalem the Jews had attempted to stone Him. By way of calming their fear, before going into Judea, He declares to them His intention to do so. They remind Him of the treatment which He had received when last there, and so vivid is their recollection of it, that though it is now two months since, they speak of it as "of late," or "but now" (νῦν).¹ He replies that as the time for man's work and man's rest, the hours of the day and night, are arranged by God, so the life of Him who is the Light of the world, the time for Him to accomplish the salvation of man, is fixed by God, and cannot be shortened or altered by the fickle will of man. Neither have His disciples anything to fear for themselves in accompanying Him into Judea. So long as He remains with them they need have no fear of persecution. The time will come when the Jews will persecute them, but that will be in the night, when He, the Light of the world, shall have been removed from them. Jesus is the Light. Whoever walks without this Light illuminating his soul by His Holy Spirit, and does not direct his life by His example, will wander from the path of duty, and will stumble and fall into sin and error.

11. These things said He: and after that He saith unto them,^a Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep.

12. Then said His disciples, Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well.

S. V. Then said the disciples unto Him: A. Then said they unto Him. Vulg. Dixerunt ergo discipuli ei.

13. Howbeit Jesus spake of his death: but they thought that He had spoken of taking of rest in sleep.

S. of death. Vulg. Dixerat autem Iesus de morte ejus.

14. Then said Jesus^b unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead.^c

15. And I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe;^d nevertheless let us go unto him.

16. Then said Thomas, which is called Didymus, unto his fellow-disciples, Let us also go, that we may die with Him.

Jesus is now in Bethabara, or Bethany, on the east side of Jordan, a day's journey from Bethany near Jerusalem, where Lazarus had lived with his sisters. As a preparation for the exertion of His superhuman power in raising Lazarus from the dead, He shows His disciples that, though absent from Lazarus, He knew in what condition he was. The messenger had stated that he was sick; Jesus says that he is asleep; he is dead. To them he was dead, to Him he was asleep, because He could and would shortly raise him to life again. None of His disciples seem to have understood the expression "he sleepeth;" not even the three who had already heard Him use it in a similar case once before. (Matt. ix. 24.) But neither the words, nor the miracle that had then followed, suggested to their minds His meaning on the present occasion.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xi. 8; vol. viii. p. 1036.

¹ Rupertus, in Joan. xi. 9; vol. iii. p. 634.
Maldonatus, in Joan. xi. 8; vol. ii. p. 758.

^a "These things said He, and after that said unto them (ταῦτα εἶπεν, καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα λέγει αὐτοῖς).—Neither ταῦτα εἶπεν nor μετὰ ταῦτα is redundant. The latter expression indicates a pause."
—WINEY, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 630.

^b Then said Jesus therefore (τότε οὖν εἶπεν).—Canon Lightfoot points out several inadvertencies where the same word is twice rendered in the English Version, or where, conversely, the same English word is made to do duty for two Greek words. Of the latter, examples occur in John xi. 14. "Then (τότε οὖν) said Jesus unto them plainly," where 'then' stands for two words—'then' local, and 'then' argumentative; or Rom. vi. 21, 'What fruit had ye then (τίνα οὖν καρπὸν εἴχετε) in those things whereof ye are now ashamed?' where exactly the same error is committed. Of the converse error—the double rendering of the same word—we have an instance in James v. 16, πολὴν ἰσχύν, δέσιν δικαλὸν ἐνεργουμένην, 'The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much,' where the word 'effectual' is worse than superfluous. This last rendering I am disposed to ascribe to carelessness in correcting the copy for the press. The word would be written down on the copy of the Bishops' Bible, which the revisers used, either as a tentative correction or an accidental gloss; and, not having been erased before the copy was sent to the press, would appear in the text. In the Bishops' Bible, which the translators had before them, the passage runs, 'The fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.'—'Revision of the New Testament,' p. 182.

^c Fountain of the Apostles.—"We were momentarily in expectation of reaching San Saba, when coming to a fountain (welcome object!) I recognized it as the one we had passed the day before, within an hour of leaving Bethany—the 'Fountain of the Apostles,' it is called—and doubtless they often quenched their thirst at it; and He, too, who became Man, and hungered and thirsted for our sake! Why might it not have been there, resting before the ascent to Bethany, that 'Jesus said unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead'?"—LORD LINDSAY'S 'Letters in Holy Land,' ii. 67.

^d To the intent ye may believe (καὶ χάρις δι' ὑμᾶς, ἵνα πιστεύατε).—"ἵνα πιστεύατε is added to δι' ὑμᾶς, by way of illustration: 'I rejoice on your account (that I was not there), that ye may believe,' i.e. now ye cannot but believe."—WINEY, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 480.

The feeling to which Jesus gives utterance is not sorrow for the death of His friend Lazarus, but joy that He was not present. He was glad for their sakes, as well as for the sake of others. The restoration of Lazarus to life would strengthen their faith in Him as God, and it would induce many of the Jews to believe in Him. Had He been present, Lazarus might not have died; had He been present sooner, his body would not have become so decomposed; his resurrection to life would not have appeared a miracle so decisive or so striking in the eyes of men.

Generally it is Peter who is most forward in zeal and devotion to His Master; here it is Thomas, which name is the Hebrew for Didymus, which is the Greek for Twin-born.¹ Some suppose that he was born in some place that was inhabited by Jews and Greeks promiscuously, and that the Jews called him by his Hebrew name, and the Greeks by his Greek name. His devotion to Jesus is such, that he proposes to his fellow-disciples to accompany Him into Judæa again; and if He be put to death, they, like true and faithful disciples, should die with Him. It is not weariness of life or indifference to death that Thomas wishes to express, but devotion to his Master. He does not say, "Let us also go, that we may die with Lazarus," but, "Let us also go, that we may die with Jesus."²

17. Then when Jesus came, He found that he had lain in the grave four days already.

A. came to Bethany.
Vulg. Venit itaque Jesus: et.

18. Now Bethany was nigh unto Jerusalem, about fifteen furlongs off:³

19. And many of the Jews came to Martha and Mary, to comfort them concerning their brother.

20. Then Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met Him: but Mary sat still in the house.

The nearness of Bethany to Jerusalem is mentioned to account for the number of Jews who came to console the sisters on their loss, induced by the ties either of kindred or of friendship.

¹ Euthymius, in Joan. xi. 16; vol. iv. p. 403.
Maldonatus, in Joan. xi. 16; vol. ii. p. 760.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xi. 16; vol. viii. p. 1037.

² Bethany was nigh unto Jerusalem, about fifteen furlongs off (ἦν ἡ Βηθανία ἐγγὺς τῶν Ἱεροσολύμων, ὡς ἀπὸ σταδίων δεκάπεντε; and John xii. 1, "six days before the Passover" (πρὸ ἑξ ἡμερῶν τοῦ πάσχα).—These expressions, it has been thought, should regularly run thus: ὡς σταδίων δεκ. ἀπὸ Ἱερου., and ἑξ ἡμέραις πρὸ τοῦ πάσχα. It would appear, however, that in local specifications Greek phraseology was regulated by a different point of view, ἀπὸ σταδίων δεκ. (properly situated at a distance of fifteen furlongs, as in Latin, Liv. xxiv. 46: 'Fabius cum a quingentis fere passibus castra posuisset'). If it were necessary to Martha, probably as the elder sister, or at least as the active practical manager of the house who is busied with the affairs of everyday life, receives the first intimation of the approach of Jesus, and goes to meet Him. Mary remains at home, wrapt in silent meditation and sorrow, and, in all probability, still ignorant that Jesus is at hand.

21. Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

22. But I know, that even now, whatsoever Thou wilt ask of God, God will give it Thee.

S.V. Even now I know that.
Vulg. Sed et nunc scio.

Martha's first words to Jesus express her belief in His power, and in His love toward her brother—that is, her belief in His power as a mighty prophet, but not in His power as God. Of that she seems as yet scarcely to have entertained a thought. She is also ignorant that His object in coming is to raise her brother from the dead. She very naturally concludes that it is to comfort her sister and herself in their distress. Considering the miracles which Jesus had wrought, and the love which He had shown for Lazarus, the sisters may have indulged a kind of undefined hope that God, at His intercession, would restore their brother to life. Martha does not seem to believe that Jesus, by His own power as God, could raise up her brother, but that God, at His intercession, might. This was the lesson which she had now to be taught; to lead her into a right state of mind, and to prepare her for a fuller and more correct belief in Him, for a belief in Him not as a mighty prophet but as God.

23. Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again.

24. Martha saith unto Him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day.

The doctrine of the Resurrection is evidently not new to Martha. It may be that Jesus, in His conversations with the family at Bethany, had instructed them in it; or it may have been the common belief of the Jews at that time, or at least of a portion or school among them. Perhaps both these suppositions are true. It is plain that in the time of the ² V. Bede, as cited in S. Thomas Aq. Catena, vol. iii. p. 280.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xi. 16; vol. ii. p. 760.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xi. 16; vol. viii. p. 1037.

specify the speaker's point of view, it would be expressed in the genitive. The same applies to temporal specifications. As it is usual to say πρὸ ἑξ ἡμερῶν, the form of expression was retained when it was necessary to indicate the point of time from which the period in question was counted, as πρὸ ἑξ ἡμερῶν τοῦ πάσχα. However the matter may be considered, the fact is that both these forms of expression (the temporal and the local) were of frequent occurrence in later Greek.—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 579.

Maccabees, about B.C. 160, a belief in the Resurrection was widely spread among the Jews (2 Maccab. xii. 43, &c.), and a few years after the Crucifixion the Pharisees are mentioned as prominently holding this belief. (Acts xxiii. 8.)

From the general Resurrection at the last day, Jesus leads the thoughts of Martha on to a special and immediate resurrection, and from a belief in Himself as a prophet to a belief in Him as God. Martha had said, "Even now I know that whatsoever Thou wilt ask of God, God will give it Thee." He teaches her that He Himself is God; that it is He who raises up the dead, and who gives life to the living; that through Him the dead shall rise, and through Him the living live.

Before Jesus exercised His power as God, He seems always to have required, either from those for whose benefit it is exerted or from the friends who make the request, a belief in His power as God, in His ability to work the cure which they ask. Probably it was in cases where the patient was from physical causes unable himself to entertain any belief that Jesus required from his friends this belief in His power. Before He healed the lunatic child, He required the father to believe in His power as God. He intimates, too, that the exercise of His Divine power in healing his son would be in proportion to the father's belief in it. (Mark ix. 23.) He healed the man sick of the palsy when He saw the great faith of those who brought him. (Mark ii. 5.) Lazarus is dead, and Martha makes her request that, by His intercession with God, her brother may be restored to life again. Jesus explains to her that before He can restore her brother to life she must believe that He can do this by His power as God, not by His prayer to God.

25. Jesus said unto her, I am the Resurrection, and the Life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live:

S. Int. Jesus said.
Vulg. Dixit ei Jesus.

26. And whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Believest thou this?

Jesus is the Resurrection and the Life. He alone can raise the dead, and He alone can give life to the living. His words imply that, if Martha can believe this, her brother shall rise again, even before the last day. Jesus is the life of the soul, as well as the life of the body; and when speaking of life He in general means the life of the soul. But the subject to which He now more immediately refers is the resurrection of Lazarus from the grave. He therefore uses the word "life" partly, but not entirely, with respect to the body. Lazarus, who is dead, shall be raised from bodily death through the belief of his sister. Those who are still living and who believe in Jesus shall never die. Their bodies shall rest in the grave for a time, and then shall rise again. Their souls shall be quickened by His grace here, and shall dwell with Him hereafter in glory. Jesus is the source of life, both to the soul and to the body; but those who would partake of this life must believe in Him as such.

27. She saith unto Him, Yea, Lord: I believe that Thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world.

This confession of Martha has been variously interpreted. Some¹ have supposed that by His words "I am the Resurrection and the Life," &c., Jesus had opened her eyes as to His real character, and that she now for the first time saw clearly that Jesus, the Son of Mary and her brother's friend, was in the highest sense the Son of God, the source of life to the dead and to the living. Others,² again, have held that Martha may have used these words without entering much into their meaning.

28. And when she had so said, she went her way, and called Mary her sister secretly, saying, The Master is come, and calleth for thee.

29. As soon as she heard that, she arose quickly, and came unto Him.

S.V. And as soon as.
Vulg. Illa ut audivit, surgit cito, et venit ad eum.

30. Now Jesus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met Him.

S.V. but was still in that place.
Vulg. sed erat adhuc in illo loco ubi occurrerat ei Martha.

31. The Jews then which were with her in the house, and comforted her, when they saw Mary, that she rose up hastily and went out, followed her, saying, She goeth unto the grave to weep there.

S.V. thinking, she goeth.
Vulg. dicentes: quia vadit ad monumentum ut ploret ibi.

The Evangelist does not relate that Jesus asked for Mary, but leaves this to be inferred from Martha's message to her sister. She delivers her message secretly, to avoid the tumult which she feared might take place if the Jews knew that Jesus was there. Thinking that Mary was going to the grave to weep, the Jews accompany her, for such was the custom of the country, and thus they became eye-witnesses of the raising of Lazarus from the grave. Jesus had

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xi. 25; vol. vii. p. 48.

S. Hilary Pict. de Trinitate, vi. 47; vol. ii. p. 195.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xi. 27, tract. xlix.; vol. iii. p. 1754.

V. Bede, in Joan. xi. 27; vol. iii. p. 779.

² Maldonatus, in Joan. xi. 27; vol. ii. p. 766.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xi. 27; Homil. lxii.

Theophylact, in Joan. xi. 27; vol. i. p. 660.

Euthymius, in Joan. xi. 27; vol. iv. p. 405.

probably remained at the entrance to the town, because the grave of Lazarus would be outside.

32. Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw Him, she fell down at His feet, saying unto Him, Lord, if Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

Both the sisters greet Jesus with the same words, though Mary stops short, prevented perhaps by the excess of her grief, and does not say all that her sister had said. But the abundance of her sorrow does not prevent the expression of her reverence for Him. Both declare that the death of their brother would not have taken place had He been present; meaning either that His love for their brother would have saved him from death, or that no such profanation as death could possibly take place in His presence. Mary does not go on to express in words, as Martha had done, either her conviction or her hope that God would, at His intercession, raise up her brother from the grave. Whatever the heart may have felt, the lips refused to utter it.

33. When Jesus therefore saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, He groaned in the spirit, and was troubled.^a Margin, He troubled Himself.

Vulg. Inflexuit spiritus, et turbavit seipsum.

The verb which is rendered "He groaned" (ἐνεβριμήσατο), is used three times in the New Testament, but never in the Septuagint. According to S. Matthew (ix. 30) and S. Mark (i. 43), it is the word which Jesus used after He had opened the eyes of the blind and had cleansed the leper, when he "straitly charged them (ἐνεβριμήσατο αὐτοῖς), that no man should know it." Again, the same word is used by the Jews (Mark xiv. 5) when "they murmured against Mary" (ἐνεβριμῶντο αὐτῇ) for the pretended waste of the ointment which she had poured upon the head of Jesus. Somewhat of the nature of rebuke enters into all these meanings.

As applied¹ to Jesus, and here in connection with the expression "He troubled Himself," it may be that He groaned to give an outward indication of the conflict which was going on internally in His spirit. There may have been the same kind of struggle as afterwards took place more sharply in the Agony in the Garden. The cause assigned for His groaning was the death of Lazarus, and the sorrow of his sisters and their friends. In other words, it was sin, and the sorrow which He saw around Him, and which sin had caused. The two feelings which seemed to animate Him especially at this time were sympathy and indignation; sympathy with the bereaved sisters, and indignation at sin and the author of sin, who had caused their distress. It is probable that Jesus groaned, not to repress His indignation but to give expression to it. Indignation with Him was not an involuntary, overpowering, irregular rising of the anger, as it is in mere man. In Jesus indignation was the holy feeling of anger in all its original purity. The object of His indignation was Satan and sin, and men only so far as they were the willing instruments of Satan. When Jesus saw the havoc of sin, the distress which sin had caused to these sisters—and their sorrow was but a specimen of the sorrow which filled the world—He groaned in the spirit, and troubled Himself.

34. And said, Where have ye laid him? They said unto Him, Lord, come and see.

35. Jesus wept.^b

S. And Jesus.
Vulg. Et lacrymans est Jesus.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xi. 33; vol. vii. p. 52.
S. Augustine, in Joan. xi. 33, tract. xlix.; vol. iii. p. 1754.
V. Bede, in Joan. xi. 33; vol. iii. p. 779.

^a He groaned in the spirit, &c.—"Our Lord's suspense or permission, at His will, of the operations of His Manhood is a great principle in the doctrine of the Incarnation. 'That He might give proof of His human nature,' says Theophylact, on John xi. 34, 'He allowed it to do its own work, and chides it and rebukes it by the power of the Holy Spirit. The flesh, then, not bearing the rebuke, is troubled, and trembles, and gets the better of its grief.' And S. Cyril: 'When grief began to be stirred in Him, and His sacred flesh was on the verge of tears, He suffers it not to be affected freely, as is our custom, but "He was vehement (ἐνεβριμήσατο) in the Spirit," that is, He in some way chides His own flesh in the power of the Holy Ghost; and it, not bearing the movement of the Godhead united to it, trembles, &c. . . . For this, I think, is the meaning of troubled Himself.' (Fragm. in Joan. p. 685.) 'Sensus corporei vigeant sine lege peccati, et veritas affectionum sub moderatione Deitatis et mentis.' (Leont. Ep. 35. 3.) 'Thou art troubled against thy will: Christ is troubled, because He willed it; Jesus sorrowed, yes, but because He willed it; Jesus died, yes, but because He willed it. It was in His power to be affected so or so, or not to be affected.' (Aug. in Joan. tract. xlix. 18.) The Eutychnians perverted this doctrine, as if it implied that Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cii. p. 280.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xi. 33; vol. viii. p. 1042.

our Lord was not subject to the laws of human nature; and that He suffered merely 'by permission of the Word' (Leont. ap. Canis. t. i. p. 563). In like manner Marcion or Manes said that His 'flesh appeared from heaven in resemblance, ὡς ἡέληγεν' (Athan. contr. Apoll. ii. 3).—Dr. J. H. NEWMAN on S. Athanasius; Library of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 477.

^b Jesus wept.—"In the exercise of our Lord's mental sympathy we see in like manner its human origin, and yet that it was checked and controlled by those perfect conditions of will and understanding which belonged to Him as the Son of Man. His acts of mercy, when He was in the flesh, were performed in accordance with that law of human sympathy which He took upon Him as part of the nature in which He became Incarnate. In His hands, so far as His Godhead was concerned, was lodged, even at that season, all power in heaven and earth. All sicknesses which afflicted any of the sons of men might have been healed by Him in a moment. All the pains of humanity might have been assuaged. But He exercised no such universal power of healing. His benefits were confined to those who came before Him in the flesh. These He cured through that Divine power which was present with His Manhood. And why were not others benefited by it? Because He

Except in special instances, and then only with the object of convincing the people of His power as God, Jesus does not exercise either His Divine power or His Divine knowledge in the transactions of daily life, but confines Himself to that which He could do and could know as Man. He therefore asks, "Where have ye laid him?" By this question he arouses their attention; perhaps, too, He might raise in them the expectation of some miraculous work.

The Man of Sorrows sheds His tears at the sorrows of His friends, and weeps with them. The misery of sin, and especially of the sin of unbelief, of which He saw the Jews would soon give an almost incredible proof, may have been one cause of His tears. Lazarus had been now four days in the grave, and to restore him to life again was beyond the power of mortal man. But Jesus foresaw that if He should raise Lazarus from the dead, the Jews would be so far from confessing that He had done this by His power as God, that they would seek to kill both Himself, because He had made this claim, and Lazarus, because his living presence among them was a proof of the truth of His claim. This might be one reason why Jesus wept. The sorrow of the sisters He could heal by raising their brother from the dead; for the unbelief of the Jews, according to the economy of salvation, He had no cure to offer.

Jesus is but three times recorded to have wept: once here at the death of Lazarus; again, when He wept over the rebellious city Jerusalem (Luke xix. 41); and again when His own sufferings were the cause (Heb. v. 7).

allowed it to act according to that law of sympathy which belongs to man's nature, which time, place, presence affect, and which could not, regarded as a mere human feeling, be equally moved by the mere abstract knowledge of the existence of suffering. He gave scope, therefore, to the actings of this human principle, whether it led, as by the grave of Lazarus, to tears, or at the gates of Nain, to pity. These were indications how truly He had adopted that common nature which He shared with His brethren. But then His sympathy was controlled and rendered stable by that guiding light which has been wanting both to the will and the understanding of man ever since the Fall. Without such guidance, sympathy is vague, unmeaning, or even mischievous. So that, missing the designed end of its operation, it falls back not seldom into the opposite extreme of misanthropy. Let it be given to the mere creature of human impulse to stay all sicknesses, or to feed thronging multitudes by miraculous support, and the consequence would be an inversion of the ordinary laws of God's providence, as mischievous for its immediate objects as for those who would rely on its prospective help. What would be the sure consequence but the growth of those still greater moral evils which are, in a measure, kept in control by physical wants? This tendency is seen in such alleged miracles of the Middle Ages as are founded on an exaggerated application of what was permitted to the prophets of the theocracy.

"Now, this unlimited power our Lord possessed; but because it was under the control of that inward light which guided His spirit, it led in Him to no such results. His eye, indeed, saw man's miseries, and pitied them. But His true perception of the real evils of man's nature, His estimate of the effect of guilt, His discernment that pain was an evil so much lighter than sin,—this guided the general course of His sympathy. He gave therefore to His human nature what was its due. He wept when grief overflowed

36. Then said the Jews, Behold how He loved him!

37. And some of them said, Could not this Man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?

Only three months before this Jesus had opened the eyes of a man born blind. Through the examination of that miracle by the Pharisees the public attention had been drawn to it in an extraordinary degree. It had become known throughout all Judæa. When then the Jews saw Jesus standing over the grave of Lazarus and weeping for his death, they were at a loss to understand why the Man, who plainly had the power, had not given a proof of His love for Lazarus by preserving him from death. They were ignorant that the object of Jesus was to do more than prevent Lazarus from dying, that it was to raise him to life again after he had been dead and buried four days. His power they had witnessed. Of His affection for Lazarus they could not entertain a doubt. They beheld how He groaned and troubled Himself when He saw Mary weeping and the Jews weeping with her. On His way to the grave they had seen how He wept. When He arrived at the grave, they were again witnesses of His trouble.

38. Jesus therefore again groaning in Himself cometh to the grave. It was a cave, and a stone lay upon it.^a its banks; He succoured those whom the providence of the Great Disposer of all brought near Him. In His path through this world He scattered round Him His favours, but He allowed them not to interfere with His great mission for the common benefit of the race which He had come to represent."—R. I. WILBERFORCE on the Incarnation, p. 109.

^a Vulg. Jesus ergo rursum fremens in semetipso.

^a Tombs.—The following are some of the different forms of tombs existing in Palestine.

"The numerous sepulchral chambers around Jerusalem are all excavated horizontally in the natural or artificial face of the rock. . . . The entrance is always at the side, and never from above."—ROBINSON'S 'Later Researches,' p. 181.

"There are in Syria and Egypt numbers of these tombs, which the Arabs erect to the memory of any man who they think has led a holy life. Their tombs are generally placed in some conspicuous spot, frequently on the top of a mount. The sepulchre consists of a small apartment with a cupola over it, whitewashed externally."

—LUBY and MANGLES, p. 57.

"Three miles from Mount Tabor there are many sepulchres cut in the rock; some of them are like stone coffins above ground, others are cut into the rock, like graves, some of them having stone covers over them."—POOCCOCKE'S 'Travels,' ii. 65.

See also note on S. Matthew, ch. xxvii. 60, p. 486.

"Every hill and valley round the Holy City is thickly studded with these memorials of man's mortality. The summits of Zion and Bezetha, the slopes of Olivet and Moriah, the rocky plateau on the N.W. and the deep valleys of Hinnom and Jehoshaphat, are all cemeteries. The tombs of Jerusalem are far more numerous than her houses. Many of them are evidently very ancient, and a few are interesting from their historic and sacred associations."—MURRAY'S 'Handbook to Palestine,' p. 137.

Tombs in Palestine are of two kinds: either dug down in the ground like modern graves, to which our Saviour compares the scribes and Pharisees, "for ye are as graves which appear not, and the men that walk over them are not aware of them" (Luke xi. 44); or they are hewn in the rock or mound, and are entered at the side like a room. These are often natural caves, excavated and enlarged at the will of the owner. Along the side of this hollow cave or room, niches are excavated from time to time, as they are required, and in them the dead are deposited. The word (ἐπι) rendered by our translators "upon," might have been translated quite as correctly "against." Its meaning here must depend on the nature of the tomb, whether it was dug in the ground or excavated at the side of a rock. The latter is the traditional opinion, and the word "cave" (σπήλαιον) rather points to this kind of tomb.

Jesus orders the stone to be removed. Thus they would have sensible proofs of the decomposition of the body of Lazarus, proofs both by the sight and the smell. Against this Martha gently remonstrates. Either, as some¹ think, she shrunk from the thought of Jesus seeing her brother in the condition in which he would now be, or, as others,² she doubted whether it were possible for even Him to restore to life again one who had been dead four days. Our Lord's answer to her would rather imply the latter; it rather indicates some want of belief in Martha. She had said, "Even now I know that whatsoever Thou wilt ask of God, God will give it Thee;" but when the trial came, her faith wavered, and she failed to see a ray of hope in His command to remove the stone.

39. Jesus said, Take ye away the stone. Martha, the sister of him that was dead, saith unto Him, Lord, by this time he stinketh: for he hath been dead four days.

40. Jesus saith unto her, Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldst see the glory of God?

It is nowhere recorded that Jesus had said these identical words to Martha. The substance of them He had said, perhaps more than once. To her messenger He had said, "This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God may be glorified thereby" (ver. 4). To herself He had said, "Thy brother shall rise again" (ver. 23); and again, "I am the Resurrection, and the Life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Believeth thou this?" (ver. 25.)

He promises Martha that if she will believe, He will work a work which will convince the people that its author must be God, and as such they will honour Him and worship Him. That work is the miraculous restoration of Lazarus to life. One condition which Jesus requires for this is, that Martha should believe that He is able to do it.

41. Then they took away the stone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jesus lifted up His eyes, and said, Father, I thank Thee that Thou hast heard Me.

^{A.} the stone where he was: S.V. omit from the place where the dead was laid.

^{Vulg.} Tulerunt ergo lapidem: Jesus autem elevatis sursum oculis, dixit.

42. And I knew that Thou hearest Me always: but because of the people which stand by I said it, that they may believe that Thou hast sent Me.

Such is the nature of the Hypostatic Union, that the Father always hears the prayers of the Son. Jesus has not to plead to bend the will of a dissentient Father: for there is a Unity of will between Him and the Father. He gives thanks and offers prayers to the Father for the sake of the people who stand around Him, to prove to them that He is One with the Father and is sent by the Father. In the presence of the Jews Jesus prays to God, the Father of heaven, that as a proof of their Union, Lazarus, who had been dead four days, may rise from the grave. Jesus does not pray for power to perform the miracle, but as a proof to the people of the Unity of will and power which there is between the Father and Himself. For their sakes, too, it is that He declares that He is heard, and that the miracle will take place, and in confirmation of His words.³

43. And when He thus had spoken, He cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth.

44. And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with graveclothes: ^a and his face

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xi. 39; vol. vii. p. 57.

Rupertus, in Joan. xi. 39; vol. iii. p. 641.

² Origen, in Joan. xi. 39, tomus xxviii. 3; vol. iv. p. 684.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xi. 39; Homil. lxiij.

Theophylact, in Joan. xi. 39; vol. i. p. 663.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xi. 39; vol. ii. p. 771.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xi. 42; Homil. lxiiv.

Theophylact, in Joan. xi. 42; vol. i. p. 664.

Euthymius, in Joan. xi. 41; vol. iv. p. 413.

Jaensenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cii. p. 282.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xi. 42; vol. ii. p. 772.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xi. 42; vol. viii. p. 1044.

^a Manner of burial.—On the following morning (Oct. 26th, 1855), very early, I looked from the window, and saw a bier close to the door of a neighbouring house. It was a painted wooden stand, about seven feet by two, raised slightly on four legs, with a low gallery round it, formed of uprights far apart, and two cross bars.

Two strong poles projected at each end from the corners. Above it a canopy was raised, made of freshly-gathered elastic palm-branches. They were bent like half-hoops, and then interlaced and secured lengthways, with straight fronds. I sketched it, and presently I saw the dead body of a man, handsomely dressed, was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, Loose him, and let him go.^a Vulg. Et statim prodit qui fuerat mortuus.

Jesus calls with a loud voice, as a sign of His authority over the dead; perhaps also to indicate that the separation of the soul and body of Lazarus had already taken place, and that the soul was not in the grave with the body, but in some more distant abode. Jesus addresses Lazarus by name and as if living, because the result of His command is the reunion of his soul and body, as will also take place in the Resurrection at the last day (1 Thess. iv. 16).

Jesus had before bid the Jews remove the stone, and by that means to become more than mere eye-witnesses of the condition in which the body of Lazarus then was. Now He commands them to "loose him, and let him go." By making the Jews themselves assist in the circumstantial details, they became, as it were, co-operators with Him in the performance of the miracle. They were thus more able to bear witness to the truth of the miracle, and were more interested in doing so than if they had been mere spectators of it.

It is not improbable that his legs were tied together, and his hands bound to his side to keep them in a straight position, and his face covered with a napkin to prevent the distortion of his features from being seen as he was carried to the tomb.

Many were the lessons which the early writers drew from the resurrection of Lazarus. Some¹ saw in him a proof and an image of the general Resurrection. Others² drew from it arguments to prove the power of intercessory prayer, showing that as the prayer and faith of his sisters prevailed with Jesus for the resurrection of their brother, so the prayer and faith of others in behalf of their friends may still prevail with Him for the resurrection of their souls from sin. Others,³ again, from the resurrection of Lazarus, and from the loosing of him in order that he might depart from the place of his former detention by death, illustrated the resurrection from sin, and showed how the right exercise of the power to bind and to loose, committed by Jesus to His Apostles, might avail for

¹ S. Irenaeus, contr. Hæreses, v. 13, p. 1156.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan xi. 43; vol. vii. p. 64.

Tertullian, de Resurrectione Carnis, 53; vol. ii. p. 873.

S. Ambrose, de Excessu Fratris Satyri, ii. 77; vol. iii. p. 1337.

S. Cyril Hierosol. Catechesis, vol. ix. p. 516.

² S. Irenaeus, contr. Hæreses, v. 13, p. 1156.

brought out and placed upon it. His face was covered with a shawl. Four men lifted the bier from the ground, and, resting the poles on their shoulders, bore it to the mosque. After a little while, it was carried slowly along, passing the Consulate on its way to the Moslem burial-ground, preceded by about forty men solemnly silent, and followed by at least fifty women and children, shrieking wildly, singing and screaming.

"Between the palm-fronds I could plainly see the figure of the dead man; the head was foremost. . . . He had died just before midnight, after a few hours' illness."—ROGERS, 'Domestic Life in Palestine,' p. 145.

^a The raising of Lazarus from the grave.—"Why do the three earlier Evangelists not even mention this most stupendous of Christ's miracles? The following answer has been suggested. They wrote in the lifetime of Martha, Mary, and Lazarus. Well might one about whom there hung the mystery of having passed through death desire privacy. Nay, his own personal safety required it; for we read that the Sanhedrin sought his life, because that by reason of him many of the Jews went away and believed on Jesus!"

"Not therefore till that generation had passed away was the miracle published. The last of the Apostles, writing sixty years or more after the event, far away at Ephesus, records, with all the vividness of an eye-witness, what had sunk deep into the memory of all the Twelve. So, too, and doubtless for like reason, he alone of the Evangelists publishes the name of him who came to Jesus by night, and brought spices to His tomb."—CANON NORRIS, 'Key to the Four Gospels,' p. 62, ed. 1871.

"The argument from the silence of the Synoptists, which is most insisted upon by some critics who have not formed for themselves a clear and accurate conception of what the Synoptic Gospels are, really counts for but little. . . .

"The significance of their silence, too, has been exaggerated by looking at it in the light of modern ideas. To us the raising of the dead stands apart from other miracles in a class by itself, as Origen, in Joan. xi. 43, tomus xxviii. 6; vol. iv. p. 693.

S. Ambrose, de Penitentia, ii. 7; vol. iii. p. 510.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xi. 43, tract. xlix.; vol. iii. p. 1757.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxvi.; vol. ii. p. 1199.

—, Moral. xxii. 15 (alias 9); vol. ii. p. 231.

S. Bernard, Sermo iv. de Assumptione.

Theophylact, in Joan. xi. 43; vol. i. p. 665.

peculiarly unexampled and incredible. But that it was not so regarded at the time when the Gospel was written appears from this very narrative, where the Jews are made to ask whether He who opened the eyes of the blind could not have prevented the death of Lazarus altogether. So, in the Synoptists, the answer that Jesus gives to the disciples of John groups together every class of miracle, the raising of the dead amongst them, without distinction. Similar narratives in the Synoptists, in the Acts, and in the Old Testament, are given without any special relief or emphasis. And if the fourth Evangelist himself does lay more stress upon them, this belongs rather to his own peculiar conceptions than to the circle of popularly current ideas."—SANDAY, 'Historical Character of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 185.

"The decree of the Sanhedrin by no means finds its motive in the raising of Lazarus. They talk rather of the 'many miracles' which Jesus does (xi. 47). Although that fact was the occasion for this last step, it was not the ground; and so the Synoptists have not another story, because they are silent about Lazarus. In them, as in John, it is the enthusiasm of the people for the miracle-worker and Messiah that determines the heads of Israel to the decisive step; and Jesus was the miracle-worker in the eyes of the people, with and without the raising of Lazarus. Hence the Synoptists do not need it. That also takes away the necessity of our explaining why they do not mention it. But ought it to be so hard to see this? They are silent as to Bethany in general, or mention it but hastily, just as they are silent about Cana at the beginning. They arrange their account by the great stations, Galilee, Perea, and Jerusalem. Everything else retires before the stress laid on these three great stations. For this reason they make Jesus enter Jerusalem directly from Jericho. Did Jesus, however, stop first at Bethany, as John tells us, then the festival entry which the Synoptists relate is the more easily explained. They would be prepared for His arrival in Jerusalem."—LUTHARDT, 'St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 212.

the good of others. An early tradition existed that Lazarus lived thirty years after his resurrection.¹

45. Then many of the Jews which came to Mary, and had seen the things which Jesus did, believed on Him.

S. And many: V.A. what He had done.
Vulg. Multi ergo ex Iudeis . . . quæ fecit Iesus.

46. But some of them went their ways to the Pharisees, and told them what things Jesus had done.

From the way in which these two sets of Jews are contrasted, it is plain that the latter went to the Pharisees with no friendly intention towards Jesus. Their object is not to persuade them of the truth of the miracle, or to mollify their hatred towards Jesus, but to assist them in getting up some accusation against Him.

47. ¶ Then gathered the chief priests and the Pharisees a council, and said, What do we?^a for this Man doeth many miracles.

48. If we let Him thus alone, all men will believe on Him: and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation.^b

S. all men believe on Him.
Vulg. omnes credent in eum.

So blinded are these Jews by hatred, that they do not see that their machinations can have no power against Him who can open the eyes of the blind and raise the dead. They are unable to question the reality of His last miracle, the raising of Lazarus from the dead; nay, they admit that Jesus has wrought many miracles. They foresee that all the people will believe in Him. They reason that the people will wish to make Him their king, and that the Romans will use this as a plea to take away their political status, their place among nations, and to reduce their country into greater subjection than it even is now. All this they propose to avert by a course of the most flagrant injustice and iniquity. They have evidently no belief in the principle that righteousness exalteth a nation.

49. And one of them, named Caiaphas, being the high priest that same year, said unto them, Ye know nothing at all,

50. Nor consider that it is expedient for us, that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not.

S. omits for us: V. for you.
Vulg. Nec cogitatis quia expedit vobis.

51. And this spake he not of himself: but being high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation;

52. And not for that nation only, but that also He should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad.

The priesthood was hereditary in the family of Aaron, and the firstborn of the oldest branch of it, if he had no legal blemish, was always the high priest. After their return from the Captivity this rule was frequently violated. Of late years² the Roman governors had deposed one high priest and had put another in his place, very much according to their own pleasure, without any regard to the Law of Moses. It was never limited³ to one year or to two, but by the caprice of the governors some had been allowed to continue high priests for a few months only, others for many years. But there is no reason to suppose that the Evangelist here refers to this malpractice. His words simply mean that Caiaphas was high priest during that year, that year when events of such mighty importance were taking place. Caiaphas, or Joseph Caiaphas, had been appointed high priest by the Procurator Valerius Gratus, and he continued high priest for eleven years, during the whole procuratorship of Pontius Pilate.

Caiaphas did not understand the words which he uttered. It is plain from the Evangelist's explanation that Caiaphas by these words meant one thing, and that the Holy Spirit intended quite another. Caiaphas meant that it was better that one man should die than that many should die, that it was better that Jesus should die than that He should be the occasion of involving the whole nation in ruin. But the words which the Holy Spirit put into his mouth as high priest apparently mean that it is expedient that Jesus should die for the whole nation; that is, in behalf of the whole nation, instead of as a sacrifice or propitiation for the whole nation.

Caiaphas gave his advice as a piece of state policy, with a reckless indifference as to the innocence of Jesus, or the truth of His claims to be God. These he seems never to have

¹ S. Epiphanius, Hæresis, lxi. 34; vol. ii. p. 88.

² Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 2; vol. ii. p. 735.

* What do we? (τί ποιούμεν;)—"The indicative present sometimes occurs also in indirect questions, when, in Latin, the conjunctive would be used, as John xi. 47. τί ποιούμεν; quid facimus? 'what can we do? what is to be done?' The indicative, however, here strictly denotes that something must undoubtedly be done. The question τί ποιούμεν invites deliberation (comp. Acts iv. 16).

Josephus, Whiston's Trans. Antiq. xviii. 2, 2; page 485.

³ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xi. 49; vol. viii. p. 1047.

On the contrary, τί ποιούμεν implies that something is to be done, and inquires what that is."—WINER'S 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 299.

^b "The Romans shall come, &c. (ἐλεύσονται οἱ Ῥωμαῖοι) refers to the approach of the Roman armies."—Ibid. p. 630.

considered. The political status must be preserved. The claims of no one individual, of whatever nature they might be, could be allowed to interfere with that. Such was his mode of reasoning. The consequence of it was not the preservation of its political status, not the prosperity of Judea as a nation, but its utter ruin and desolation.

We have the authority of S. John that, though Caiaphas himself did not attribute any such sense to his words, the meaning conveyed in them by the Holy Spirit was that Jesus should die for the salvation of the Jewish nation, and not of the Jewish nation only, but of all nations; that by His Death He should gather together in one Church all His children, out of every nation under heaven.

53. Then from that day forth they took counsel together for to put Him to death.

54. Jesus therefore walked no more openly among the Jews; but went thence unto a country near to the wilderness, into a city called Ephraim,* and there continued with His disciples.

S.V. with the disciples.

Vulg. et ibi morabatur cum discipulis suis.

Several times during His ministry the people, mistaking what He had said for blasphemy against God, and incited by their rulers, had taken up stones to stone Him. Now it is a deliberative assembly, the great Council of the Jewish nation, led on by Caiaphas the high priest, which resolves to kill Him, and which decides upon this course of action after mature deliberation. Jesus as God knows this their decree, and as Man He takes the same precaution against it which other men would have done. He retires from Jerusalem to Ephraim, a city which is about five miles to the north-east of Bethel, and about twenty miles from Jerusalem, and not very far from the brook Cherith, near the Jordan, where about nine hundred years before the prophet Elijah had hid himself from the anger of Ahab and his wife Jezebel. Here Jesus retires with His disciples, probably to prepare Himself, by prayer and meditation, for the great struggle with the powers of darkness, which He is just about to commence.

55. ¶ And the Jews' Passover was nigh at hand: and many went out of the country up to Jerusalem before the Passover, to purify themselves.

56. Then sought they for Jesus, and spake among themselves, as they stood in the Temple, What think ye, that He will not come to the feast?

57. Now both the chief priests and the Pharisees had given a commandment, that, if any man knew where He were, he should shew it, that they might take Him.

S.V.A. omitt both: S.V. had given commandments.

Vulg. Dederant autem pontifices et pharisei mandatum.

The Passover was near at hand, the Passover at which Jesus was to offer up Himself as the Lamb that taketh away the sin of the world. The people were already flocking from the country into Jerusalem. It was the custom to repair to Jerusalem some days before the commencement of the feast, in order that those who laboured under any legal uncleanness might purify themselves by the requisite sacrifices and prayers, and might thus be duly prepared to keep the Passover. The rulers and Pharisees had already become impatient of delay, and were beginning eagerly to ask each other whether He would come to the feast.

* Ephraim.—“Further still is the dark conical hill of Tayibeh, with its village perched aloft, like those of the Apennines, the probable representative of Ephrah of Benjamin (Josh. xviii. 23; 1 Sam. xiii. 17); in later times ‘the city called Ephraim,’ near to the wilderness to which our Lord retired, after the raising of Lazarus.”—STANLEY’S ‘Sinai and Palestine,’ p. 214.

“This ancient site appears to correspond with the position of Ephrah, a city of Benjamin, to which one band of the Philistine spoilers went from Michmash. It stood, according to Jerome, five miles east from Bethel, which accords exactly with this place. It is also highly probable that the city Ephraim, which Abijah, king of Judah, took from Jeroboam (2 Chron. xiii. 19), was the same as Ophrah—the names are radically identical. With this, too, we may identify the city Ephraim of the New Testament, which was ‘near to the wilderness,’ and to which our Lord withdrew with His disciples after the raising of Lazarus. Josephus mentions Ephraim as one of the towns taken by Vespasian.”—MURRAY’S ‘Handbook to Palestine,’ p. 209.

“The concealment at Ephraim, from the circumstances of the case, could only have been for a few days.”—McGILLAN. ‘New Testament,’ p. 584.

See also Robinson, ‘Biblical Researches,’ vol. ii. p. 121, &c.; ‘Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek,’ p. 203.

CHAPTER XII.

[1. Jesus excuseth Mary anointing His feet. 9. The people flock to see Lazarus. 10. The high priests consult to kill him. 12. Christ riseth into Jerusalem. 20. Greeks desire to see Jesus. 23. He foretelleth His Death. 31. The Jews are generally blinded: 42. yet many chief rulers believe, but do not confess Him: 44. therefore Jesus calleth earnestly for confession of faith.]

[Vulg. Apud Martham et Lazarum receptus, unguento a Maria ungitur, murmurante Iuda: fure: cogitabant autem principes sacerdotum etiam Lazarum occidere: Jesus asello relictus, cum honore Jerusalem ingreditur: et gentilibus cum videre cupientibus, dicit horam sue clarificationis instare, sed granum frumenti prius mortificandum: vox Patris auditur de clarificando nomine suo: princeps hujus mundi foras ejectionis: de exactione Iudaeorum prophetata ab Isaia: in Christo honoratur aut spernitur Pater.]

In the last two verses of the preceding chapter we are told how the chief priests and the Pharisees were eagerly watching for the arrival of Jesus at Jerusalem, and how they "had given a commandment, that, if any man knew where He were, he should shew it, that they might take Him." In the first verse of this chapter it is related how, six days before the Passover, Jesus came not to Jerusalem, but to Bethany. The distance between Bethany and Ephraim, the place last named as the abode of Jesus, would be much the same as between Jerusalem and Ephraim; that is, about twenty miles.

For verse 1 see S. Matthew, chap. xxi., page 336.

1. Then Jesus six days before the Passover came to Bethany, where Lazarus was which had been dead,^a whom He raised from the dead.

S.V. omit which had been dead: S.V.A. whom Jesus raised.
Vulg. ubi Lazarus fuerat mortuus, quem suscitavit Iesus.

Some¹ have thought that the expression "where Lazarus was" does not preclude the possibility that he had accompanied Jesus with His other disciples to Ephraim. This conjecture receives some countenance from the mention incidentally made in the 9th verse, that much people of the Jews came to Bethany that they might see Lazarus, whom Jesus had raised from the dead, as if they had not been able to satisfy their curiosity in the interval since his resurrection, on account of his absence from Bethany.

For verses 2-8 see also S. Matthew, chap. xxvi., page 410.

2. There they made Him a supper; and Martha served: but Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with Him.

For the evening when this supper was made, see S. Matthew, chaps. xxi. and xxvi., pages 335 and 409.

3. Then took Mary a pound of ointment of spikenard,^b very costly, and anointed the feet of ¹ Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 9; vol. ii. p. 780.

^a Where Lazarus was which had been dead (ὅπου ἦν Λάζαρος ὁ τεθνήσκως).—"Markland rightly censures the Latin Versions for rendering 'ubi Lazarus fuit mortuus,' and thus overlooking the article. The sense, as he observes, is 'where Lazarus was, he who had been dead.' His objection does not, and is not, meant to apply to the English Version."—BISHOP MIDDLETON on the Greek Article, p. 257.

^b Ointment of spikenard (μύρον νάρδου πιστικῆς).—"The interpretations that call for notice are three:—(1) That πιστικόν, pisticon, is the Greek form of the Lat. spicatum; the name of one of the two costliest nard unguents of the Romans; the other being foliatum (see Wetstein, in loc.). So Vulg. rendering Mark xiv. 3, nardi spicati, but S. John xii. 3, nardi pistici; so also apparently, beside Wetstein, A.V. rendering spikenard, as Wyc., Gnv., Rhm., Alf. But, against this, spicatum is never elsewhere an epithet of nardus, but only of the unguentum; and its Greek rendering, as frequently in Galen, is simply σπικάντον. (2) That πιστικός is derived from πιστός, piwv, potable, and signifies 'liquid.' So Nuc.; so also Casaubon, Beza, Schleusner, Fritzsche, Lidd. and Scott. But, although the nard oil was indeed potable (Ethen. 689 D, ἐπιπότησις πρὸς πότον νάρδος), nevertheless such a signification of πιστικός is without parallel, is inappropriate to the context, and has nothing whatever here to recommend it. (3) That it is derived from πιστός, piwv, faithful, reliable, true, and signifies genuine, pure, unadulterated. So Mark xiv. 3, Tyn., Crm., Wkf., Am. Rev.; and so John xii. 3, Wyc., true; Tyn., Crm., perfect; Rhm., right. So Bengel, Bretschneider, Grimm, Winer, and Mey., Lug., Wdw. It is surprising that there ever should have been any doubt that this is the true interpretation. First, the existence of the word as a derivative of πιστός, faith, is indubitable. Thus Plut. i. 281, φιλικὸς καὶ πιστικὸς ἔχοντες, 'friendly and faithful.' Artem. ii. 32, γυναῖκα πιστικὴν, 'a faithful wife.' Euseb. Dem. Ev. 684 D, ed. Migne, τοῦ πιστικοῦ τῆς καινῆς διαθήκης κράματος, 'the faithful cup of the new covenant.' Epiphanius, i. 1088 A, ed. Migne, οὐ τι πιστικὸν ἀλλὰ συλλογιστικόν, 'nothing savouring of faith but of argumentation.' And in the very late author Cedrenus frequently, as θεράπων πιστικός, 'a faithful servant.' Next, the nard leaf, especially the best, was often adulterated with the common bastard nard, ψευδονάρδος (Plin.). Hence it was appropriate to specify the fidelity or genuineness of the nard. Further, this is the almost

Jesus, and wiped His feet with her hair; and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment.^a

As a guest at the table Lazarus would prove the reality of his resurrection, and would amply dispose of any rumours to the effect that he had only raised a spectre from the grave, and not the veritable body of Lazarus himself.

The literal translation is "ointment of nard pistie (νάρδου πιστικῆς), very costly." Five or six different meanings have been assigned to the word "pistic";¹ some supposing that it referred to the place from which the nard was obtained, others to the nature or quality of the nard itself.

S. John says that it was Mary who anointed Jesus on this occasion. S. Matthew (xxvi. 7) and S. Mark (xiv. 3) merely say it was a woman. S. John wrote his Gospel last, and at a time when all cause for silence as to her name may have disappeared. S. John says that she anointed the feet of Jesus. S. Matthew and S. Mark say that she poured the ointment on His head, and S. Mark adds that she brake the box and poured it on His head. The probability² is that she brake the box and poured the ointment on His head, and then with the remainder anointed His feet, or the reverse. The wiping His feet with her hair is supposed by many to have preceded the anointing of them.³ There is nothing in the language of the narrative itself which is inconsistent with this view. She would wipe them to remove the dust which the open sandal would have allowed to gather round them, and thus to prepare them for the ointment which was too costly to be wiped off His feet by her hair. Besides, Mary's object was to anoint the feet of Jesus, not her own hair. Mary would deem no office unbecoming her that would prove her love to Him who had shown them, in a manner which they could most thoroughly appreciate, that He was indeed the Resurrection and the Life. Instead of ministering to personal vanity and to sin, her hair would receive honour in being employed to wipe off the dust from the wearied feet of the Son of God.

4. Then saith one of His disciples, Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, which should betray Him,

S.V. But saith: S.V. omit Simon's son.
Vulg. omittit Simon's son.

5. Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor?

6. This he said, not that he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein.^b

S.V. and having the bag, bare what.
Vulg. et loculus habens ea que mittebantur portabat.

S. John says it was Judas who murmured. The other

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 3; vol. viii. p. 1051.

Winer, Grammar of the New Testament, p. 110.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 79; vol. iii. p. 1155.

unanimous interpretation of the ancient expositors. Jerome (on Mt. 26, 7), "nardum pisticum, hoc est, verum et absque dolo, ut fidei Ecclesiæ et gentium demonstraret." S. Chrys. is silent, but Euthym. καταπιστευμένην εἰς καθαρότητα, 'thoroughly reliable for purity'; and Theoph. ἁδον καὶ μετὰ πίστews κατασκευασθῆσαν, 'a sincere and faithful compound.' And S. Augustine, who supposes that the word signifies 'locum unde hoc erat unguentum,' nevertheless sees in it an allusion to πιστις, fides (in Joan. tract. i. 6).—McCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 677.

Dr. Johnson in his Dictionary (ed. 1765) gives the following account of spikenard:—"A plant, and the oil or balsam produced from the plant."

"There are three sorts of spikenard. 1. The Indian spikenard is most famous. It is a congeries of fibrous substances adhering to the upper part of the root, of an agreeable aromatic and bitterish taste. It grows plentifully in Java. It has been known to the medical writers of all ages. 2. Celtic spikenard is an oblong root, of an irregular figure, a fragrant and aromatic but not very pleasant smell. It had its name from Celtic Gaul, and is still found in great abundance on the Alpine and Pyrenean mountains. 3. Mountain spikenard is a moderately large oblong root of a plant of the valerian kind, its smell and qualities resembling those of the Celtic spikenard."

"Alexander now led his army into the Gedrosian desert. The march, at the outset, did not threaten that accumulation of suffering and calamity by which it was subsequently attended. It lay through a part of the province where the heat of the climate favoured the growth of aromatic plants. The myrrh-bearing shrub grew there in profusion, and the herb which produces nard was equally abundant. The latter, trodden under foot by the Grecian host, sent forth into the air 'a stream of rich distilled perfume' which delighted the sense. Following the army for commercial purposes were some Phœnician merchants, who loaded their cattle with a rich burden of nard and myrrh, which, however, they did not long retain."—MITFORD, 'History of Greece,' chap. lix. vol. viii. p. 177.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 7; vol. viii. p. 472.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cix. p. 307.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 3; vol. viii. p. 1052.

^a With the odour of the ointment (ἐκ τῆς ὁσμῆς τοῦ μύρου).—"We must not regard ἐκ τῆς ὁσμῆς as merely equivalent to a genitive, but as denoting especially that whence the filling of the vase was come; it was filled with (from) the odour of the ointment (with fragrance)."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 214.

^b And bare what was put therein (καὶ τὰ βαλλόμενα ἐβάρα(εν)).—"I cannot but think that it was S. John's intention to say not merely that Judas 'bare,' but that he 'bore away,' purloined or pilfered what was put into the common purse. It has the appearance of a tautology to say that he 'had the bag, and bare what was put therein,' unless indeed the latter words are introduced to explain the opportunity which he enjoyed of playing the thief, hardly, as it appears to me, a sufficient explanation. On the other hand, the use of βαρά(εν), not in the sense of portare, but of aufere, is frequent: it is so used by Josephus, Antiq. xiv. 7, 1; and in the New Testament, John xx. 15; and such, I am persuaded, is the use of it here. We note that already in Augustine's time the question had arisen which was the right way to deal with the words; for, commenting on the 'portabat' which he found in his Italic, as it has kept its place in the Vulgate, he asks, 'Portabat an exportabat? Sed ministerio portabat, furto exportabat.' Here he might seem to leave his own view of the passage undecided; not so, however, at Epist. 108, 3: 'Ipsi (Apostoli) de illo scripserunt

Evangelists do not mention Judas by name. S. Matthew (xxvi. 8) says, "When His disciples saw it, they had indignation, saying, To what purpose is this waste?" S. Mark (xiv. 4) says, "There were some that had indignation within themselves." The explanation¹ probably is that it was Judas who began the murmuring, who first gave utterance to this feeling of dissatisfaction, and who, by representing it as a waste, and a waste of what might have been so useful to the poor, induced the others to join in his indignation. From what we elsewhere know of the other disciples, their indignation would be sincere and honest, though misplaced; that of Judas would be only a cloak to hide his disappointment at missing so much from his grasp.

S. Matthew (xxvi. 9) says the ointment might have been sold "for much;" S. John, "for three hundred pence;" and S. Mark (xiv. 5), "for more than three hundred pence." This is another of those apparent discrepancies between the Evangelists, but where there is in reality no contradiction.

Why Jesus should have allowed Judas to carry the bag, when He knew that he could not resist the temptation to which it exposed him, is one of those mysteries which we shall only be able to answer when we understand why God allows any man to be exposed to temptation which He knows he will not be able to resist. It may be² that Judas was first selected for this purpose because he showed an aptitude for making such arrangements as were required for supplying the daily wants of the disciples, and for relieving the poor, and that the opportunity—the possession of the bag—had developed in him the hitherto latent feeling of avarice. His sin consisted in appropriating to his own individual use some of the money which was given to him for the general good of Jesus and the disciples and the poor. That Judas was not an unblushing peculator, that he did not practise his thefts openly, but with the utmost secrecy, and with every outward appearance of upright dealing, is plain from the fact that the disciples do not seem to have suspected his motives on this occasion. They join with Judas in representing that the value of the ointment might have been better spent in distributing to the poor, because they had not the slightest suspicion of his honesty.

The fearful lesson which the conduct of Judas teaches us is the intimate relation which, in the nature of things, exists between appropriating to oneself the goods given to us in charge for Christ and His poor, and the betrayal of Christ Himself, between avarice and treason to Christ. The latter of these is the necessary consequence of the former, not the accidental but the moral consequence, not in Judas only, but in every man. Betrayal of Christ, in some form or other, follows the love of money as regularly and as certainly as night follows day.

7. Then said Jesus, Let her alone: against the day of My burying hath she kept this.³

S.V. Let her alone, that she may keep this against the day of My burying.
Vulg. Sinite illam ut in diem sepulture meae servet illud.

8. For the poor always ye have with you; but Me ye have not always.

Of the three Evangelists who record this murmuring against Mary, S. Mark gives our Saviour's answer the most fully, and S. John the least so. But they all agree in giving the substance of it, the prophetic signification of the act. Mary was led by the Holy Spirit thus to anoint His Body. This anointing is preparatory to His Burial, which would shortly take place. She had done "what she could" (Mark xiv. 8). She had beforehand done what she could not do then, that is, she had paid the reverential honour due to His Body, and which she would wish to pay at His Burial, but which the peculiar circumstances attending His Death would not permit her then to offer to Him.⁴

He says that the wants of the poor have to be relieved, and will have to be relieved for all time to come; but that can form no plea for not paying honour, even costly honour, to His Body. So far from rebuking Mary as wasting the ointment, He says that she had "wrought a good work on" Him, and promises that wherever this Gospel shall be preached in the whole world there shall also this that she hath done be told for a memorial of her. He extols the reverential devotion of Mary, He rebukes the ill-judged censure of Judas and the rest; but He neither divulges the dishonest acts in which Judas is secretly indulging, nor reproaches him with his avarice and hypocrisy.

9. Much people of the Jews therefore knew that He was there: and they came not for Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also, whom He had raised from the dead.

A. whom Jesus had raised.
Vulg. quem suscitavit a mortuis.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 6; vol. viii. p. 1052.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cix. p. 308.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 12; vol. viii. p. 473.

⁴ Against the day of My burying hath she kept this (eis tēn hēmeran tou entaphiasmou tēthēken autē).—"Here tēthēken is to be regarded as strictly a perfect ('she has kept it, and has thus used it now'), as Jesus meant figuratively that this anointing was part of the preparation for His interment."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 289.

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. ii. 79; vol. iii. p. 1155.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cix. p. 307.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 8; vol. viii. p. 472.

quod fur erat, et omnia quæ mittebantur de dominicis localis auferbat." After all is said, there will probably always remain upholders of one translation and upholders of the other; yet, to my mind, the probabilities are much in favour of that Version which I observe that the five clergymen have also adopted."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on Authorized Version, p. 104.

10. ¶ But the chief priests consulted that they might put Lazarus also to death;

11. Because that by reason of him many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jesus.

The rulers of the Jews do not themselves believe that Jesus is the Messiah, or that He is God; but they believe that He has raised Lazarus from the dead, and they see that in consequence of this others are beginning to believe in Him. At the same time such is their infatuation, that they take counsel to put to death both Jesus and Lazarus. They seek to put Jesus to death because He claims to be God; they would put Lazarus to death because he was a living witness of the truth of His claim, an undeniable proof of His power as God.

12. ¶ On the next day much people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem,

13. Took branches of palm-trees,^a and went forth to meet Him, and cried, Hosanna: Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the Name of the Lord.

S.A. and cried, saying: S.V. Blessed is He who cometh in the name of the Lord, and the King of Israel.

Vulg. et clamabant: Hosanna qui venit in nomine Domini, rex Israel.

For verses 14-18 see S. Matthew, chap. xxi., page 339.

14. And Jesus, when He had found a young ass, sat thereon; as it is written,

15. Fear not, daughter of Sion: behold, thy King cometh, sitting on an ass's colt.

A. the King cometh.

Vulg. ecce rex tuus venit.

16. These things understood not His disciples at the first: but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of Him, and that they had done these things unto Him.

17. The people therefore that was with Him when He called Lazarus out of his grave, and raised him from the dead, bare record.

18. For this cause the people also met Him, for that they heard that He had done this miracle.

S. For this cause much people.

Vulg. Propterea et obviam venit ei turba.

^a Took branches of palm-trees (ἐλαβον τὰ βαῖα τῶν φοινίκων). —Dean Alford (Greek Testament) and Canon Lightfoot think that the presence of the two articles here, the branches of the palm-trees, imply that the palm-trees were growing on the spot. "They were the palm-trees with which the Evangelist himself was so familiar, which clothed the eastern slopes of the Mount of Olives." —'Revision of the New Testament,' p. 108.

I.

19. The Pharisees therefore said among themselves, Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? behold, the world is gone after Him.

The Pharisees are conscious that their opposition to Jesus does not prevent the people from believing in Him, and that the number of those who believe in Him is increasing daily; that, in their own expressive language, "the world is gone after Him." But this does not seem to have suggested to them the question whether the world might not be right and themselves in the wrong. They go on hardening themselves in their unbelief.

At the very time that these Pharisees, with the high priest at their head, are taking counsel to kill Jesus, certain devout Gentiles are seeking an interview with Him. With this object they come to Philip. Why they should select Philip is not mentioned. Whether he was known to them, or whether they were induced to address themselves to him from the benignity of his countenance, or from some other reason, is quite uncertain. Before Philip mentions their desire to Jesus he consults with Andrew. Jesus had chosen Andrew as His disciple first of all, and that circumstance may have given him some degree of weight or authority with the other disciples.

20. ¶ And there were certain Greeks among them that came up to worship at the feast:

21. The same came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus.

22. Philip cometh and telleth Andrew: and again Andrew and Philip tell Jesus.

V.A. omit and again: S.V.A. Andrew and Philip come and tell Jesus.

Vulg. Andreas rursus et Philippus dixerunt Iesu.

The reason why the disciples hesitate to convey the request of these Greeks to Jesus is, because, when sending them to preach the Gospel, He had said to them, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles" (Matt. x. 5).

In His answer to them Jesus implies that this command, which He had given them in the beginning of His ministry, was meant to be only for a time, and that the time had now come for it to cease. These Gentiles had come to Him, prompted by a desire to reverence and to worship Him, and their worship must not be rejected. Nay, more; the hour is at hand when He will be worshipped alike by Jew and Gentile, when by His Death He will draw all men unto Him. He is glorified when He is worshipped among men. His

"The Greek word for branches in the Gospel of S. John, xii. 13, 'Took branches of palm-trees, and went forth to meet Him,' is not κλημα, as in chapter xv. 2. &c. but βαῖα, derived from a Coptic root, and applied to the palm-tree exclusively. It does not signify branches properly, for the palm-tree has no branches like the vine, but the huge fibrous leaves which form the crown on the top of the stem." —MACMILLAN on the 'True Vine,' p. 76.

worship will be widely increased only after and through His Death. The hour of His Death, which is at hand, will also be the hour of His glorification.¹

23. ¶ And Jesus answered them, saying, The hour is come, that the Son of Man should be glorified.^a

S.V. answereth.

Vulg. Iesus autem respondit eis.

He goes on to teach them that men's faith in Him and worship of Him can be secured only by His Death, and that this is according to an established natural law; that it must be so according to the very nature of things.

24. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.

25. He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal.

S.V. loseth.

Vulg. perdet.

The same law which is seen in the works of creation, viz. increase by death, and which holds good in the case of the Son of God Himself, applies also in its degree to His disciples. They, too, shall live by death.

He who loves his life, who prefers his life to his faith in God, who saves his life by denying God, shall lose his soul and his life eternally. But he who hates his life in this world, who prefers his faith in God to his life, shall keep it unto eternal life—he shall live for ever with God. Also he who loves his soul, who prefers to gratify the carnal desires of his soul, who prefers to follow his own lusts rather than the commands of God, he shall lose his soul in hell. But he who hates his soul, by resisting and by mortifying those desires of it that are contrary to God's commands, he shall keep it, he shall obtain eternal life hereafter.

26. If any man serve Me, let him follow Me; and where I am, there shall also My servant be: if any man serve Me, him will My Father honour.

A. and if after be.

Vulg. si quis mihi ministraverit, honorificabit eum Pater meus.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xii. 23; Homil. lxvi.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xii. 23; vol. vii. p. 84.

Theodorus Mopsuest. in Joan. xii. 20, &c., p. 768.

Euthymius, in Joan. xii. 23; vol. iv. p. 433.

Theophylact, in Joan. xii. 23; vol. i. p. 674.

[S. Augustine,

Jesus does not say that if any serve Him He will honour him, but that His Father will honour him. This may be either to indicate the unity of will between Himself and the Father, or because their opinion of Him was as yet so imperfect that they would value honour from the Father more than honour from Jesus.

Jesus was perfect God and perfect Man; but such was the nature of the Hypostatic Union, that it did not deliver Him from suffering, or from the dread of suffering. It is probable that the perfection of His human nature increased the intensity both of His suffering and of His dread of it. No man ever exhibited such signs of acute mental suffering as Jesus.

It was not by precept only that He taught His disciples. He showed them an example even by exhibiting the weakness incidental to human nature. They could not retort that it was easy for Him to harangue on the duty of preferring death to sin, because He could not experience what was man's natural love of life, or his dread of death. He has just alluded to His Death, which is so near at hand, when His soul is filled with trouble. The weakness of His human nature seeks some refuge, and flies in prayer to the Father to be saved from this hour. Strength is supplied sufficient to support Him in the hour of need, and He prays the Father to perfect His work in Him, that by His Death He may make satisfaction for sin, and draw all men unto Him. It may even be that He prays the Father to glorify His Name by giving, at that very moment, some proof by which the Jews and Gentiles, who are gathered round Him, may understand that He, Jesus, the Son of Mary, is sent by Him to redeem mankind and to do His will.²

27. Now is My soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save Me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour.

28. Father, glorify Thy Name. Then came there a voice from heaven, saying, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again.

V. glorify My Name.

Vulg. glorifica nomen tuum.

29. The people therefore, that stood by, and heard it, said that it thundered: others said, An angel spake to Him.

V. omits therefore: S. when they heard it.

Vulg. Turba ergo quae stabat et audierat, dicebat tonitruum esse factum.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xii. 23, tract. li.; vol. iii. p. 1766.

V. Bede, in Joan. xii. 23; vol. iii. p. 789.

Rupertus, in Joan. xii. 23; vol. iii. p. 659.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxi. p. 328.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 27; vol. ii. p. 784.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 27; vol. viii. p. 1057.

^a The hour is come, that the Son of Man should be glorified (Ὁ ὥρῃς ἡ ἐκείνη ἡ ὥρα ἡ δόξα αὐτοῦ τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου).—"The time is come in order that; that is, the time appointed. The theory of 'causal' causes is implied in the expression, which is peculiar to John.

'The hour is (by God's decree) come that I should,' &c.: comp. xiii. 1; xvi. 2, 32. Inaccurate expositors suppose that in these passages ὥρα is used for ὥρε or ὥραν.—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' pp. 355 and 481.

30. Jesus answered and said, This voice came not because of Me, but for your sakes.

S. omittit et said.
Vulg. Respondit Jesus, et dixit.

Men describe the same things differently, because they look at them from different sides, but it does not always follow that the two descriptions are inconsistent with each other. Probably the two descriptions which the people gave of the voice which came from heaven, and which S. John is careful to record, contain a full and true account of it. The voice¹ was like thunder, because of its majesty and awfulness, like no mere earthly voice. It was like the voice of an angel because, besides being grand and awful and unearthly, it was articulate and distinct; not a rumbling, continuous sound. It has generally been held that this voice was the voice of an angel representing God the Father, who, in answer to the prayer of Jesus to glorify His Name, replied that He had both glorified it, and would glorify it again. He² had glorified His Name by the miraculous events by which the Incarnation had already been attested; He would glorify it again by those by which it should hereafter be attested. He had glorified it at His Baptism and at the Transfiguration by the voice from heaven, which said, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him" (Matt. iii. 17; xvii. 5). He had glorified it by all the miracles and wonderful works which Jesus had wrought, and by which God the Father gave testimony to the truth of His words. He would glorify it again at His Death, and after His Death, when, by His Resurrection and Ascension and the Descent of the Holy Spirit, all nations should believe in Him, and should worship Him as God.

The voice came not for the sake of Jesus, to give Him strength and support to fulfil His mission, but for the sake of the people, to convince those who disbelieved in Him that He was the Son of God, and to confirm those who believed in Him, but whose faith was weak and wavering.

31. Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out.

Jesus here declares that the deliverance of the world from the power and tyranny of the devil is at hand; so near, that He says, "Now is." His Passion, which is to begin within three days, shall be the judgment;³ that is, the deliverance, the salvation of the world. In these words He refers to the world as in two different conditions, as the oppressed captive and as the willing slave. By His Death, Satan's power over men shall be broken. Satan, as represented by sin and darkness and idolatry, shall be cast out. His worship, or the worship of idols, shall be replaced by the worship of Jesus, the Son of Man. In the great conflict with Satan He will bruise his head, He will diminish the power which hitherto he has had over both the bodies and the souls of men.

The presence of the Gentiles who desired to see Him, may have prompted these words. When He looked around, He saw the Gentile world entirely given up to idolatry and to the power of Satan. A few there were who, by contact with the Jews, gained a knowledge of the true God, and desired to worship Him. His heart yearned over them, and He seemed to long for the time of His Death to be hastened that the Gospel might be preached among all nations.

32. And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw⁴ all men unto Me.

S. all things.
Vulg. omnia traham ad meipsum.

¹ Rupertus, in Joan. xii. 29: vol. iii. p. 665.
Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 29: vol. ii. p. 787.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 29: vol. vii. p. 1057.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xii. 28: Homil. lxvii.
S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. xii. 27: vol. vii. p. 92.
Theophylact, in Joan. xii. 28: vol. i. p. 677.
Euthymius, in Joan. xii. 28: vol. iv. p. 439.

[Jansenius,

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxi. p. 328.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 28: vol. ii. p. 786.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 28: vol. viii. p. 1057.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xxi. p. 329.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 31: vol. ii. p. 787.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 31: vol. viii. p. 1058.

¹ To drag, draw (ἀνέλκω, ἐλκύνω).—These words ἀνέλω and ἐλκύνω differ, and with differences not theologically unimportant. We best represent their differences in English when we render ἀνέλω, 'to drag,' ἐλκύνω, 'to draw.' In ἀνέλω, as in our 'drag,' there lies always the notion of force, as when Plutarch (de Lib. Ed. 8) speaks of the heaving course of a river, πάντα ἀνέλω καὶ πάντα παραφύρει; and it will follow that where persons, and not merely things, are in question, ἀνέλω will involve the notion of violence (Acts xiii. 3; xiv. 19, xvii. 6). But in ἐλκύνω this notion of force or violence does not of necessity lie. It may be there (Acts xvi. 19, xxi. 30; James ii. 6), but not of necessity, any more than in our 'draw,' which we use of a mental and moral attraction, or in the Latin trahō ('trahit sua quæque voluptas').

² Only by keeping in mind the difference which thus exists between ἐλκύνω and ἀνέλω can we vindicate from erroneous interpretation two doctrinally important passages in the Gospel of S. John. The first is xii. 32: 'I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men [πάντας ἐλκύνω] unto Me.' But how does a crucified, and thus an exalted, Saviour draw all men unto Him? Not by force, for the will is incapable of force, but by the Divine attraction of His love. Again (vi. 44), 'No man can come to Me, except the Father which hath sent Me draw him' (ἐλκύνω αὐτόν). Now is hard as feel bound to deny any 'gratia irresistibilis' which turns man into a mere machine, and by which, willing or unwilling, he is dragged to God, must at once allow, must indeed assert, that this ἐλκύνω can mean no more than the potent allurements, the allactive force of love, the attracting of men by the Father to the Son; compare Jer. xxxi. 3: 'With loving kindness have I drawn thee' (ἐλκυσά σε), and Cant. i. 4, 4. Did we not drag you, or either of these explanations (not that I can conceive this possible), the assertors of a 'gratia irresistibilis' might then urge the declarations of our Lord as leaving no room for any other meaning but theirs; but not as they now stand.

³ In agreement with all this, in ἐλκύνω is predominantly the

33. This He said, signifying what death He should die.

S. John explains that this had reference to the manner of His Death. By His Death on the Cross He would withdraw men from the power of the devil to Himself. Jesus is represented as fighting with Satan and spoiling his goods, as carrying off from Satan those souls which he had before taken captive.¹ The force or violence contained in the words "I will draw," ἐλκύω, is used not against the captives, but against him who had taken them captive; that is, against Satan. The power of His Crucifixion is represented as almost irresistible.² Against Satan it would operate by force, and with those whom he had taken captive, through love.

Some have thought that the expression "lifted up" had some reference to the advantage which one raised higher than another has over him in conflict, that the Crucifixion would give Jesus the same advantage in His conflict with Satan that fighting on higher ground does to an ordinary antagonist.

Jesus, lifted up on the Cross as the one Mediator, reconciled heaven and earth, Jews and Gentiles, God and man. Christ crucified is the ransom, the example, the object of love for all. Hitherto men had been drawn to believe in Jesus by God the Father; henceforth He draws men to Himself. Christ crucified is to be the object of faith to all nations.

The Jews at once understood our Saviour's meaning of being "lifted up," and from that they raised an objection against His being the Messiah. From certain passages of the Old Testament, which they call the Law, they had erroneously concluded that the Messiah would remain with His people on earth for ever.

34. The people answered Him, We have heard out of the Law that Christ abideth for ever: and how sayest Thou, The Son of Man must be lifted up? who is this Son of Man?

S.V. Therefore the people.
Vulg. Respondit ei turba.

The passages to which they allude were probably such as the following, but which refer to the continuance of Christ's

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xii. 32; Homil. lxvii.
Theophylact, in Joan. xii. 32; vol. i. p. 678.
Euthymius, in Joan. xii. 32; vol. iv. p. 441.
Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 32; vol. ii. p. 789.

sense of a drawing to a certain point, σέρπει merely of dragging after one. Thus Lucian (de Merc. Cond. 3), likening a man to a fish already hooked and dragged through the water, describes him as σπόμενον καὶ πρὸς ἀνάγκην ἄγόμενον. Not seldom there will lie in σέρπειν the notion of this dragging being on the ground, inasmuch as that will trail upon the ground (cf. σύρμα σύρην, and Isa. iii. 16) which is forcibly dragged along with no will of its own: as, for example, a dead body (Philo, in Flac. 21). We may compare John xxi. 6, 11, with ver. 8 of the same chapter, in proof of what has just been affirmed. At vers. 6 and 11, ἐλκύειν is used:

Kingdom, rather than to the continuance of His presence with them on earth. The prophet Micah had said (v. 2), "But thou, Beth-lehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall He come forth unto Me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." The Psalmist had said (ex. 4), "The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek;" again, "His seed also will I make to endure for ever, and His throne as the days of heaven" (Ps. lxxxix. 29). "His seed shall endure for ever, and His throne as the sun before Me" (ver. 36). But these and many similar passages refer rather to the permanence of Christ's Kingdom than to His continuance with them in bodily presence for ever. They overlook the passages, and many such there are, which foretell the Messiah's Death. Isaiah (liiii.), the Psalmist (xxii. 12, &c.), Daniel (ix. 26), and Jeremiah (xi. 19), all expressly teach of the death of the Christ.

To their argument, that if the Son of Man must be lifted up He cannot be the Messiah, Jesus does not give a direct reply. It may be that He saw they were not in a state of mind either to understand or to profit by such explanation.³

35. Then Jesus said unto them, Yet a little while is the Light with you. Walk while ye have the Light, lest darkness come upon you: for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth.

S.V. among you.
Vulg. Adhuc modicum, lumen in vobis est.

36. While ye have light, believe in the Light, that ye may be the children of Light. These things spake Jesus, and departed, and did hide Himself from them.

Vulg. Dum lucem habetis, credite in lucem, ut filii lucis sitis.

The Jews could not understand how Christ could die, and still remain with His people for ever. Jesus does not explain this to them. But He speaks of Himself, as He had often done before, as the Light of the world. He says that for there a drawing of the net to a certain point is intended; by the disciples to themselves in the ship, by Peter to himself upon the shore. But at ver. 8, ἐλκύειν gives place to σέρπειν, for nothing is there intended but the dragging of the net, which had been fastened to the ship, after it through the water. Our Version has maintained the distinction; so, too, the German of De Wette by aid of ziehen (= ἐλκύειν) and nachschleppen (= σέρπειν); but neither the Vulgate nor Beza, both employing trahere throughout."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 69.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 32; vol. viii. p. 1059.

² S. Leo, de Passione Domini, Sermo viii. 7; vol. i. p. 341.

³ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xii. 35; vol. vii. p. 461.

He will remain with them only for a short time longer, a few days; and He bids them in the meantime believe in Him. Thus they will become sons of Him who is the Light of the world, and shall receive illumination so as to understand this and other like difficulties.¹

Having said this, Jesus removed Himself from them, probably because He judged from the spirit in which they received His words that they would otherwise have taken Him and put Him to death before the time, and in a manner different from that which the salvation of mankind required. He therefore hid Himself from them, not in any miraculous manner, but withdrew, as we have reason to believe, to the Mount of Olives, where He passed the night, or to Bethany.²

37. ¶ But though He had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on Him:

38. That the saying of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled, which he spake, Lord, who hath believed our report? and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?

39. Therefore they could not believe, because that Esaias said again,

40. He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their heart; that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart, and be converted, and I should heal them.

41. These things said Esaias, when he saw His glory, and spake of Him.

S.V.A. because he saw.

Vulg. quando vidit gloriam ejus.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxi. p. 330.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 36; vol. ii. p. 791.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 36; vol. viii. p. 1060.

² Jansenius, Maldonatus, and Cornelius a Lapide, ut supra.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xii. 40; Homil. lxviii.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xii. 40; vol. vii. p. 96.

* Causal particles.—After an examination of the use and meaning of several causal and adversative particles, such as ut, propter, revertamen, sed, Dean Jackson thus concludes: "So then the particle ut, neither in this place of S. John (xii. 37, 38) nor in any other, doth ever import any true causality of execution or obduration on God's part or His prophets; but in this place of S. John, and in every other where it is said that this or that was done that the Scripture might be fulfilled, the same particle doth always import that whatsoever was so done, whether positively or directly by God Himself, or with permission of His just providence, by the positive intentions of Satan or incorrigible stubbornness of men, was always ordered by God to this end and purpose, that posterity might believe and know no such event did follow by chance, or that the prophet did foretell such events only in general, without special reference unto the particular events related by the Evangelist. Seeing every final cause is purposed or projected by some intelligent nature, one and the same particle, that or the like, with reference to several projectures, may sometimes denote a true final cause, sometimes the event or consequent only, in one and the same

Miracles do not necessarily carry conviction along with them. Unless the heart is in a previous state of preparation to receive conviction, no matter what is the number of the miracles, or what is the force of them, they would fail to convince the people. The preparation required for further conviction is the conscientious performance of their duty to God, so far as they have been taught it.

The unbelief of the people was not the effect of Isaiah's prophecy; but Isaiah's words, inspired by God, accurately foretold what turned out to be the true state of the case. Several of the Greek commentators³ have taken great pains to show that the words "that" (ὅτι), "therefore" (διὰ τοῦτο), "because" (ὅτι), in verses 38, 39, 40, are expressive of the future, and not explanatory of the cause.* In one sense their unbelief, the blinding of their eyes and the hardening of their hearts, was produced by God. It is the effect which God attached to sin as its punishment. The more sin they committed, the greater would be their inclination to disbelieve the proofs which Jesus gave that He was the Son of God, the more their eyes would be blinded, and the more their hearts would be hardened, and this as the natural effect which God had attached to sin.

These words Isaiah spake in the person of Jesus Himself. He is there foretelling the very small number of the Jews that would believe in His Gospel as preached by Himself and His Apostles; and to express this in the strongest possible form, He says, "Who, what single man, hath believed our word, our preaching? To whom, to what single individual, hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?" By "the arm of the Lord" He may mean either Himself, the Word made flesh, of the same Substance with the Father, and by whom the Theophylact, in Joan. xii. 40; vol. i. p. 680.

Euthymius, in Joan. xii. 40; vol. iv. p. 451.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxi. p. 332.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 40; vol. ii. p. 793.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 39; vol. viii. p. 1061.

proposition; as in that of our Saviour (Matt. xxiii. 34), 'Some of them ye shall kill and crucify, &c.; that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth.' The final cause projected by Satan was to bring righteous blood upon these Jews; but this was the event or consequent only, no final cause of their projects against God's messengers; but these messengers were sent by God only to this end, that they might recall His people to their allegiance; yet this end or purpose did include this condition, that if they continued or made up the measure of their fathers' stubbornness, they were to suffer more grievous punishment than if they had not been forewarned by the prophets. In like manner the execution and obduration of these later Jews was the mark at which Satan aimed, no true cause (though a necessary consequent) of their continued abuse of that talent which God had given them; but no final cause, no cause at all, why our Saviour did so many miracles amongst them: their execution and perdition was from themselves. — DEAN JACKSON on the Creed, Book vii. chap. 15; vol. vii. p. 106. See also Book x. chap. 27; vol. x. p. 518.

Father made all things, as some¹ have thought; or He may mean the power of God, which displayed itself in the miracles and in the wonderful works which He wrought. He here laments, and foretells while He laments, the very small number, in comparison, of those who would recognize the power of the Godhead in His actions and in His daily life.

The glory which Isaiah saw was a glorious appearance, which was made to him, as far as could be shown to man, to represent the Holy Trinity. (Isa. vi. 1.) S. John here testifies that the glory of Jesus, a glorious representation of Jesus, as One of the Three Persons in the Holy Trinity, was here shown to Isaiah.²

42. ¶ Nevertheless among the chief rulers also many believed on Him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess Him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue:

43. For they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God.

Two among the rulers who believed in Jesus, but who did not confess Him because of the Pharisees, are mentioned by name, Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea. Afterwards they came boldly forward and professed themselves His disciples. Probably even now the love of the praise of men was less strong in them than in others.

When Jesus saw that some believed on Him who did not confess their belief in Him for fear of the Pharisees, He endeavours to strengthen their wavering faith, and to draw from them a confession of it. He uses a loudness of voice not usual with Him, partly, perhaps, to arrest their attention, and to set them an example of boldness; partly, too, because the time pressed, only a few days remaining before His Crucifixion. Some³ think that He uttered these words before He withdrew from them, as related in verse 36, and that they are the continuation of what He then said, and are only separated from them by the explanation of the Evangelist; others,⁴ that Jesus spake these words on some other occasion. There is nothing in the language itself to decide which opinion is the more correct.

44. ¶ Jesus cried and said, He that believeth on Me, believeth not on Me, but on Him that sent Me.

45. And he that seeth Me seeth Him that sent Me.

This is true only because God the Father and Jesus His Son are One in nature or substance, majesty and power, two Persons in the same Godhead.⁵

We make a distinction between believing a person and believing in a person.⁶ We believe a person when we believe his words, his statement. We believe in a person when we make him the object of our faith. We believe the Evangelists, that they relate what is true: we believe in Jesus; we believe that He is God, One with the Father, and equal to the Father.

46. I am come a Light into the world, that whosoever believeth on Me should not abide in darkness.

V. that he who believeth.

Vulg. ut omnis qui credit in me, in tenebris non maneat.

The Light⁷ of the world is the peculiar description of the Word made flesh, and indicates that He is Light of Light, Very God of Very God. Jesus is to the soul what the sun is to the body. The sun is the source of all light and heat, of all life and growth to the body: so Jesus, the Incarnate God, is the source of light and life in the soul, of the life of grace here and of the life of glory hereafter. Take away the sun from the world and all natural life would die, and chaotic darkness would once more return. Take away Jesus as the life and hope of the soul, and the soul becomes dead in sin, without God, and without hope in the world.

47. And if any man hear My words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world.

S.V.A. and keep them not.

Vulg. Et si quis audierit verba mea, et non custodierit.

48. He that rejecteth Me, and receiveth not My words, hath One that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. xii. 38, tract. liii.; vol. iii. p. 1775.

S. Jerome, in Isaiah liii.; vol. iv. p. 505.

V. Bede, in Joan. xii. 38; vol. iii. p. 795.

Rupertus, in Joan. xii. 38; vol. iii. p. 669.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxi. p. 332.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 38; vol. ii. p. 733.

² S. Athanasius, de Incarnatione, contra Arianos, 10; vol. ii. p. 1001.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xii. 41; vol. vii. p. 97.

Nonnus, in Joan. xii. 41, p. 125.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xii. 41, tract. liii.; vol. iii. p. 1779.

S. Hilary Pict. de Trinitate, v. 33; vol. ii. p. 152.
xii. 47; vol. ii. p. 463.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 41; vol. ii. p. 795.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 41; vol. viii. p. 1062.

³ Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 43; vol. ii. p. 795.

⁴ See Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxi. p. 336.

⁵ S. Augustine, in Joan. xii. 45, tract. liv.; vol. iii. p. 1781.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xii. 44; vol. vii. p. 101.

Theophylact, in Joan. xii. 45; vol. i. p. 683.

Euthymius, in Joan. xii. 45; vol. iv. p. 453.

⁶ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xii. 45; Homil. lxi.

Theophylact, in Joan. xii. 45; vol. i. p. 682.

Euthymius, in Joan. xii. 44; vol. iv. p. 453.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 44; vol. viii. p. 1063.

⁷ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xii. 46; vol. vii. p. 101.

49. For I have not spoken of Myself;^a but the Father which sent Me, He gave Me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak.

50. And I know that His commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto Me, so I speak.

He teaches them that this life is the time of mercy, and that the last day will be the time of judgment. At that day Jesus will be the Judge; but it will not be He who will condemn them, it will not be His arbitrary sentence that will condemn them, but their own present unbelief. The words which He now speaks to them will rise up and condemn them. He personifies, as it were, the words, and speaks of them as a living person, who will bring an accusation against them, and will thus be the cause of their condemnation.¹

In the next verse He goes on to give the reason why these words will have the power to condemn them, because they are the Father's words. Though they might not believe that He, the Son of Mary, was God, yet the words that He had spoken to them were from the Father, and proved to be from the Father by the miracles which He wrought among them. The cause of their condemnation in the last day would therefore be that they had rejected the words of the Father, in whom they professed to believe.

It² may be that under the terms "should say" (εἶπω) and "should speak" (λαλήσω) He intends to include all His teaching, whether contained in His more formal instruction or in His familiar addresses to them; that all His words, whether in public or in private, were from the Father, or in agreement, in unity, with the will of the Father.

Thus it is that our Saviour concludes His public teaching on this day. It was Palm Sunday, the day on which He had entered Jerusalem in triumph, and, as if to fix them in their memory for ever, He concludes with these memorable words, "I know that His commandment is life everlasting," &c. His last appeal to them is to invite them to keep God's commandment by the hope of eternal life. This was the only way in which they could obtain eternal life. He does not state what the punishment for neglecting His commandment would be. He leaves them to draw that inference for themselves, and says, "I know that His commandment is life everlasting."

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xii. 48; vol. viii. p. 1064.

² Maldonatus, in Joan. xii. 49; vol. ii. p. 798.

^a I have not spoken of Myself.—"That the Father speaks and the Son hears, or contrariwise, that the Son speaks and the Father hears, are expressions for the sameness of nature and the agreement of Father and Son" (Didym. de Sp. S. 36). "The Father's bidding is not other than His word; so that "I have not spoken of Myself"

He perhaps meant to be equivalent to "I was not born of Myself;" for if the word of the Father speaks, He pronounces Himself, for He is the Father's word, &c. (August. de Trin. i. 26. On this mystery vide Petav. Trin. vi. 4).—DR. J. H. NEWMAN on S. Athanasius; Library of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 324.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES TO CHAPTER XIII.

"Passover Cake is made of the finest wheat flour and water, rolled into a very thin paste, and quickly baked. Many Jews go out in the previous year to watch the growth of the corn until it is reaped and threshed, and stored away in a clean place; it is ground with much care, as, if water should fall on it, fermentation might ensue, and it would then be unclean. . . . Very often a patch of corn is sown separately for the Passover bread, and is then carefully watched. The ovens in which to bake it are hired by the Synagogue authorities some days before, and are thoroughly cleaned out, plastered within anew, and large flag-stones laid down, on which to bake the bread; these are afterwards taken up again, and locked up in some place belonging to the Synagogue till the next year."—BEAUFORT'S 'Travels,' ii. 266.

It would be Passover bread like this that Jesus would use in the Institution of the Eucharist.

"All these minute observances made the Passover bread very expensive, and difficult for the poor to obtain for a whole week's sustenance; the Synagogue gives away a rotl to each person, and the richer Jews also give it away to their poorer brethren; but, at the best, they are always very poor and starving after Passover, having spent every piastre they can beg or borrow to observe the feast with due honour."—Ibid. ii. 267.

"The Jews were celebrating their Passover, and our friends had received a present of some of their unleavened bread. It was spread out into very thin sheets, almost like paper, very white, and also very delicate and palatable."—ROBINSON'S 'Biblical Researches,' i. 329.

Eastern Customs at Meals.—"Before eating, each one of us had water poured on their hands over the marble basin: for the Christian Arabs, as well as the Moslems, 'and all the Jews, except they wash their hands, eat not.' This is particularly necessary, considering they do not use knives and forks, but each one 'dips his hand into the dish' with his neighbour."—ROGERS, 'Domestic Life in Palestine,' p. 133.

"Supper was announced, and we were conducted to another room. Water was poured over our hands as we entered, then we, seven in number, sat on the matted floor round a circular tray, raised about six inches from the ground, and literally crowded with food. A very long narrow towel was placed in front of the guests, and reached all round, resting on our knees, and its fringed ends met and crossed where I was invited to take my seat. There were six round dishes of heaped-up rice, boiled in butter: six dishes of boiled wheat, mixed with minced meat and spices: a few plates of fowls and lamb, and bowls of lebbany, or sour cream, and a good supply of sweet cream, cheese, olives, and salad. A cake of bread was placed before each person. Directly Salihh Agha was seated he began eating silently, and (as it seemed to me) voraciously, quite in Bedouin style, making pellets of the hot rice or wheat in the palm of his hand, and, with a skilful jerk, tossing them into his mouth. He divided the fowls with his fingers, and did me the honour to pass the most delicate morsels to me. At this rate the contents of the dishes soon disappeared, for all the gentlemen followed the example of Salihh Agha; and as, one by one, they were satisfied, they rose and washed their hands."—Ibid. p. 179.

"The meal generally consists of camels', goats', or sheep's milk, boiled wheat and milk, lentil soup, or melted butter, and bread to dip into it: as soon as the meal is ready, the landlord pours out water for all his guests in turn, who therewith wash the right hand. The ablution finished, every one commences: the host retires, not eating with his guests, but welcoming them with frequent exclamations of 'conta, conta,' (eat it all, eat it all). The repast ended, the attentive master again brings the water for washing the hands, and then eats of what remains."—LREY and MANGLES, p. 85.

"The staple of the Arabs' food, however, is leban and bread. The milk was usually presented in a wooden bowl, and the liquid butter in an earthenware dish. The party being seated round, dipped their bread in, endeavouring to make it imbibe as much as possible. The Arabs were very expert at this, pinching the thin cake in such a form as to make a sort of spoon of it. This mode of eating is alluded to in Scripture."—Ibid. p. 149.

CHAPTER XIII.

[1. Jesus washeth the disciples' feet: exhorteth them to humility and charity. 18. He foretelleth, and discovereth to John by a token, that Judas should betray Him: 31. commandeth them to love one another, 36. and forewarneth Peter of his denial.]

[Vulg. Jesus a cenâ linbo procinctus, lavat pedes discipulorum, veniente primum Petro, exhortans ut idem invicem faciant: proditorem eum Iohanni indicat: quo post buccellam egresso, dicit se clarificatum: de novo non tato diectionis: Petro trinum prædicti sui abnegationem.]

S. MATTHEW (xxvi. 17-29), S. Mark (xiv. 12-25), and S. Luke (xxii. 7-39), who give substantially the same account, relate that on the first day of unleavened bread Jesus sent two of His disciples to prepare the Passover; that in the evening, when the hour was come, He sat down with the Twelve in the upper room, and ate the Passover with them; that He then instituted the Holy Eucharist, and foretold His betrayal by Judas. S. John, in this chapter, relates that, "Before the Feast of the Passover" (πρὸ δὲ τῆς ἑορτῆς τοῦ πάσχα), &c., supper being ended, Jesus washed the feet of His disciples, and foretold His betrayal by Judas, &c. S. John says nothing about the Institution of the Eucharist. The question arises, Does S. John here mean the same supper as the three other Evangelists, and which, according to their account, took place in the evening of the first day of unleavened bread?

The opinion most generally received is, that S. John is here describing the Paschal Supper, which Jesus kept with the Twelve on the evening of Thursday, the evening commencing the fifteenth Nisan; that He omits many particulars which the other Evangelists record, and relates some which they omit. There is no difficulty in reconciling the accounts of the three other Evangelists together. Whatever difficulty there is consists in making S. John's account of this supper fairly, and without any straining, fit in with that which the three other Evangelists have related respecting the Passover Supper.

The objections against the supper recorded by S. John being the Paschal Supper recorded by the three other Evangelists, have been considered under S. Matthew, chapter xxvi. page 416.

1. Now before the Feast of the Passover, when Jesus knew that His hour was come that He should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved His own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end.

Some suppose that Jesus drew a distinction between "His own which were in the world" and the angels: others, between them and the patriarchs. But the most probable meaning is, that He refers to the world as to a place full of trouble and misery, and by the words "His own which were in the world" He means His disciples, whom He was shortly to leave in the world exposed to special trial and persecution.¹

Two explanations have been given of the words "He loved them unto the end" (εἰς τέλος). Some² suppose that S. John meant that Jesus loved them even to the end of His life, or that He continued to love them always. In this sense Nonnus,³ the ancient Greek paraphrast of S. John, understood these words and rendered them, "Since Jesus had loved His own from the beginning, so He loved them also unto the end." He makes "from the beginning" equivalent to the words "Now before the Feast of the Passover," thus limiting their application to the first verse, and does not understand them as fixing the time when this supper took place. Several⁴ of the Greek commentators have understood the word τέλος somewhat in the sense of τελείωσις, as if the Evangelist had said, that having loved His own unto the end, at the end He gave them a more perfect, a more signal, proof of His love than He had ever given them before.

2. And supper being ended, the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray Him;

S.V. And during supper: S.V. into his heart that Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, should betray him.

Vulg. Et cenâ facta cum diabolo jam misisset in cor ut traderet eum Judas Simonis Iscariote.

¹ Maldonatus, in Joan. xiii. 1; vol. ii. p. 801.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 1; vol. viii. p. 1067.

² Rupertus, in Joan. xiii. 1; vol. iii. p. 677.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxx. p. 438.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 1; vol. viii. p. 1067.

³ Nonnus, in Joan. xiii. 1, p. 127.

⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xiii. 1; Homil. lxx.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xiii. 1; vol. vii. p. 112.

Theophylact, in Joan. xiii. 1; vol. i. p. 685.

Euthymius, in Joan. xiii. 1; vol. iv. p. 457.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xiii. 1; vol. ii. p. 802.

3. Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into His hands, and that He was come from God, and went to God ;

S.V. omit Jesus.
Vulg. omits Iesus.

4. He riseth from supper, and laid aside His garments ; and took a towel, and girded Himself.

Vulg. Surgit a cena, et ponit vestimenta sua.

5. After that He poureth water into a bason, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith He was girded.

The meaning of the word "Passover" is "passing over;" and it has reference to two events, the angel of death passing over the houses of the children of Israel (Exo¹, xii.), and the children of Israel themselves passing out of Egypt over the Red Sea (Deut. xvi. 1). To the meaning of the word "Passover" Jesus has evidently an allusion when He says, that the time is at hand when He should (μεταβῆναι) depart, pass out of this world; when, by His Death on the Cross, He should pass out of this world unto the Father.

The Passover lamb was a type of Himself. The death from which it delivered the people was a type of the death from which He by His Death would deliver His own, those who believed on Him. Having loved them up to this time before His Death, He gives them proofs of the continuance of His love. These proofs were washing the feet of His twelve disciples, and the Institution of the Eucharist. The latter of these S. John does not relate.

S. John alone relates that Jesus washed the feet of His twelve disciples, which he does with great circumstantiality, noting all the minute details incident to such an event. But before the Evangelist proceeds to this, he mentions two facts—(1) That the devil had already put it into the heart of Judas to betray Him. (2) That Jesus knew that the Father had given all things into His hand, and that He came forth from God, and was going to God. His object evidently is to enhance the love and the humility of Jesus. He who was God, into whose hands the Father had given all things, who came from God and was going to God, He washes the feet of His twelve disciples. He does this though He knows that one of them had already agreed with the chief priests to deliver Him up, and was even then watching for an opportunity.¹

In Eastern countries, where the open sandal is worn, it is common to wash the feet after a journey and before reclining to a meal, and to wash the hands after a meal. To wash the feet during a meal was not in accordance with the custom of the country. Jesus does it here as a symbolic act; He washes the feet, but the meaning, the lesson which He would thereby convey, related entirely to the soul and its affections—viz. to the love which they should mutually bear to each other, and to the purity of life with which they should walk.

It is not stated in what part of the supper the washing of the disciples' feet took place. The rendering of the English Authorized Version, "Supper being ended" (δείπνον γενομένον; Sinaitic, γενομένου; Vatican, γενομένου), is unfortunate. It was during the supper, or when the supper was begun, that Jesus washed the feet of the Twelve. Both Jesus Himself, as well as His disciples, sat down to the table again (vers. 12 and 28), and afterwards, when He dipped the sop, He gave it to Judas Iscariot (ver. 26). Many think that the washing of the feet took place between the Paschal Supper and the Institution of the Eucharist, and that thus a great significance is given to the preparation, to the purity required before partaking of His Body and His Blood.²

The probability³ is that the feeling expressed by Peter in the following verses was felt by all the disciples, with the exception, of course, of Judas, and that they would have given expression to it if Jesus had begun with them instead of with Peter. An opinion⁴ which has found favour with many, and which has much about it to recommend it, is that Jesus first of all washed the feet of Judas, in order that, by showing him the first and greatest attention, He might soften the hardness of his heart, and lead him to repent of his treachery in time, and that Judas allowed this without remonstrance; that Jesus then came to Peter, who expressed the feeling which all the rest shared with him; that they as well as Peter felt too much reverence for Jesus to allow Him to perform for them an office so menial. Others⁵ think that Jesus washed the feet of Judas first and of Peter last.

6. Then cometh He to Simon Peter: and Peter saith unto Him, Lord, dost Thou wash my feet?

S.V. And: V. omits saith unto Him: S. omits Lord.

Vulg. Venit ergo ad Simonem Petrum. Et dicit ei Petrus: Domine, tu mihi lavas pedes?

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xiii. 3; vol. vii. p. 113.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xiii. 3, tract. lv.; vol. iii. p. 1787.

S. Gregory Magnus, Moral. iii. 16 (alias 12); vol. i. p. 615.

V. Bede, in Joan. xiii. 3; vol. iii. p. 802.

² Maldonatus, in Joan. xiii. 2; vol. ii. p. 802.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 2; vol. viii. p. 1067.

³ S. Augustine, in Joan. xiii. 6, tract. lvi.; vol. iii. p. 1787.

V. Bede, in Joan. xiii. 6; vol. iii. p. 802.

Rupertus, in Joan. xiii. 6; vol. iii. p. 680.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxx. p. 440.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xiii. 6; vol. ii. p. 806.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 6; vol. viii. p. 1068.

⁴ Origen, in Joan. xiii. 6, tomos xxiii. sect. 5; vol. iv. p. 757.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xiii. 6; Homil. lxx.

Theophylact, in Joan. xiii. 6; vol. i. p. 686.

Euthymius, in Joan. xiii. 6; vol. iv. p. 461.

⁵ Origen, ut supra.

S. Ambrose, in Sacramentis, iii. 1; vol. iii. p. 432.

7. Jesus answered and said unto him, What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter.

8. Peter saith unto Him, Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him, If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me.

9. Simon Peter saith unto Him, Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head.

V. Peter Simon: S. omits Lord.
Vulg. Theres Simon Petrus: Domine, non tantum pedes meos, sed et manus, et caput.

10. Jesus saith to him, He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet,^a but is clean every whit:^b and ye are clean, but not all.

S. needeth not to wash, but.
Vulg. Qui lotus est, non indiget nisi ut pedes lavet, sed est mundus totus. Et vos mundi estis, sed non omnes.

11. For He knew who should betray Him; therefore said He, Ye are not all clean.

From the language which Jesus uses to Peter, it is plain that this act of washing contained in it at least two distinct meanings; one which refers to the body, and another which has reference to the soul, and to the economy of grace which He was then instituting for the salvation of man. He says that Peter did not then know what He was doing to him, but that he should understand it afterwards. After He had washed their feet, Jesus Himself explains what He had done to them, as far as relates to the body. He says that He meant it as an example to them of love and humility; that as He, their Lord and Master, had done to them, so should they do to each other.

After this act of love and condescension which Jesus showed to them, and especially which He showed to Judas—for He knew that at this very time he was meditating how most conveniently to betray Him—after this act of love and humility, no circumstances in which the disciples could ever be placed would relieve them from the obligation of showing love to each other, and of humbling themselves in the service of others. In no circumstances could they ever experience treachery and ingratitude equal to that of Judas, and never could they show love equal to that of Jesus.

Jesus Himself explains to them what the washing of their feet meant, as far as regards the body, that it was an example to them in showing love and humility. What it meant as it related to the soul and to the economy of grace He did not explain, and Peter probably did not understand it until after the Descent of the Holy Spirit. That he did then understand it we can have no question. Even now he had a dim perception that unless Jesus washed his feet he should forfeit some privilege of fellowship with Him. What that fellowship was he could not then conceive, but lest he should in any way diminish or lose it he withdrew the opposition, which had arisen only from love and reverence for Him.

^a He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet (ὁ λελουμένος οὐ χρεῖαν ἔχει ἢ τοὺς πόδας νίψασθαι).—“There is a certain poverty in English, which has but the one word, ‘to wash,’ with which to render these three Greek words, πλύνω, νίπτω, λούω, seeing that the three have each a propriety of its own, and one which the inspired writers always observe. Thus πλύνω is always to wash inanimate things, as distinguished from living objects or persons, oftenest garments; sometimes nets (Luke v. 2). Νίπτειν and λούειν, on the other hand, express the washing of living persons; although with this difference, that νίπτειν and νίψασθαι almost always express the washing of a part of the body—the hands (Mark vii. 3; Exod. xxx. 19); the feet (John xiii. 5); the face (Matt. vi. 17); the eyes (John ix. 7); while λούειν, which is not so much ‘to wash’ as ‘to bathe,’ and λούσθαι, ‘to bathe oneself,’ imply always not the washing of a part of the body, but of the whole: thus λελουμένος τὸ πᾶμα Heb. x. 22; Acts ix. 37; 2 Peter ii. 22; Rev. i. 5). This limitation of νίπτειν to persons as contradicting from things is always observed in the New Testament.

^b The passage where it is most important to mark the distinction between νίπτειν, ‘to wash a part,’ and λούειν or λούσθαι, ‘to wash the whole’ of the body, and where certainly our English Version loses something in clearness from the absence of words which should note the changes of the original, is John xiii. 10. ‘He that is washed (ὁ λελουμένος) needeth not save to wash (νίψασθαι) his feet, but is clean every whit.’ The foot-washing was a symbolic act. S. Peter had not perceived this at the first, and, not perceiving it, had exclaimed, ‘Thou shalt never wash my feet.’ But so soon as ever the true meaning of what his Lord was doing flashed upon him, he who had before refused to suffer his Lord to wash even his feet, now prayed to be washed altogether. ‘Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head.’ Christ replies that it needed not this: Peter had been already made partaker of the great washing, of that forgiveness which reached to the whole man: he was λελουμένος, and this great absolving act did not need to be repeated, as, indeed, it was not capable of repetition. ‘Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you’ (John xv. 3). But while it was thus with him in respect of the all-inclusive forgiveness, he did need at the same time to wash his feet (νίψασθαι τοὺς πόδας) evermore to cleanse himself, which could only be through suffering his Lord to cleanse him from the defilement which even he, a justified and, in part also, a sanctified man, should gather as he moved through a sinful world. One might almost suppose, as it has been suggested, that there was allusion here to the Levitical ordinance, according to which Aaron and his sons in the priesthood were to be washed once for all from head to foot, at their consecration to their office (Exod. xxvii. 4; xl. 12); but were to wash their hands and their feet in the brazen laver as often as they afterwards ministered before the Lord (Exod. xxx. 19, 21; xl. 31). Yet this would commend itself more if we did not find hands and feet in the same category there, while here they are not merely disjoined, but set over against one another (John xiii. 9, 10). Of this, however, I cannot doubt, that the whole mystery of our justification, which is, once for all, reaching to every need, embracing our whole being, and of our sanctification, which must daily go forward, is wrapped up in the antithesis between the two words. This Augustine has expressed clearly and well (in John xiii. 10).—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on ‘Synonyms of the New Testament,’ p. 156.

^c The bath.—The writers, after describing a Turkish bath in Alexandria, say: “We were then conducted back to the room where we had undressed. . . . The custom of passing from the bath to the dressing-room, during which the feet might easily be soiled, reminded us of the true rendering of the precious words of our Lord: ‘He that hath been in the bath needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit.’”—Scottish Mission of Inquiry to the Jews, 1839.

Two acts are here narrated as referring to the body, but which have a meaning beyond the body, and both of them as necessary and preparatory in order to have a part in Jesus. (1) The washing in the bath by which a man becomes clean every whit; (2) the washing of his feet.

(1.) The interpretation which the Church has in all ages put upon these words must have weight with every man interested in the subject, either as indicating the teaching handed down from the Apostles, who, as we cannot doubt, were taught it by the Holy Spirit, or as indicating the inspiration of the Church by the Holy Spirit, and her preservation in the faith which Jesus promised when He said, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

He that hath been bathed or washed in the bath (ὁ λελουμένος) is clean every whit. What bath? History shows that neither the Church at large, nor any body of men in the Church, has ever held that there was any bath but the bath of baptism, in which, by washing a man's body under certain conditions, his soul was cleansed from sin every whit. Divisions have not seldom arisen in the Church as to the conditions on which they should be washed in this bath, but none as to the efficacy of the bath of baptism itself. The words of the Nicene Creed have expressed the belief of the Church from the earliest times and in all countries, "I acknowledge one baptism for the remission of sins."

The early commentators¹ generally hold that our Saviour's words to Peter, "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit," refer to the sacrament of baptism, and that they express the same teaching which He had already given to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John iii. 5). Out of the many passages in Holy Scripture which contain the same doctrine, the following are selected as expressed by the same Greek verb, or by its corresponding substantive.

"And such were some of you: but ye are washed (ἀπελούσασθε), but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." (1 Cor. vi. 11.)

"Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed (λελουμένοι τὸ σῶμα) with pure water." (Heb. x. 22.)

"Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His mercy He saved us, by the washing (διὰ τοῦ λουτροῦ) of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." (Titus iii. 5.)

S. Paul, speaking of the Church, says:

"That He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing (τῷ λουτρῷ) of water by the word." (Ephes. v. 26.)

(2.) Jesus does not explain to them the meaning of His act of washing their feet, as far as it referred to the soul. He says that by this act of washing their feet He had cleansed them, but not all of them. When they were washed in the bath of baptism, they had all been cleansed every whit; and when He now washes their feet, outwardly as regards the body they were all equally cleansed, but inwardly in the soul one of them was not cleansed, for he was meditating the betrayal of his Lord.

By "the feet" have generally been understood the affections, the passions which influence men to go hither and thither, on this course of action and on that. These, though cleansed in baptism, like feet washed in the bath, coming into contact with earth and earthly things, require washing again before they can have part with Jesus. Different methods have been prescribed in different parts of the Church, but each and all with the same object of cleansing the affections stained by sin. Fasting and prayer, repentance in its manifold forms, confession sometimes to God alone and sometimes to His ministers, are the principal means which have been prescribed for washing the feet, for cleansing the affections before partaking of Jesus. In the bath of baptism a man is washed clean every whit. All disqualification of nature, all sins actually committed, are there washed away. This can take place only once in the lifetime of each person. But his feet, his affections, must be washed repeatedly; the sins daily committed through weakness of nature, through surprise, and from other causes, must be acknowledged and repented of before God, as an act necessary and preparatory in order to have a part with Jesus.²

S. John does not relate, as the other Evangelists do, that during this supper Jesus "took bread, blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat: This is My Body. And He took the cup and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it: for this is My Blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins" (S. Matt. xxvi. 26-28). There is every reason to believe that Jesus referred to the act of eating His Body and drinking His Blood when He spoke of their having a part with Him. This was their last night together.

¹ S. Pacian, Epist. iii. 10, p. 1070.

S. Ambrose, in Prolog. lib. de Spiritu Sancto; vol. iii. p. 707.

— de Mysteriis, 6; vol. iii. p. 398.

— de Sacramentis, iii. 1; vol. iii. p. 431.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xiii. 10, tract. lvi.; vol. iii. p. 1789.

S. Gregory, Epist. lib. xi. 45 (alias ix. 39); vol. iii. p. 1162.

V. Bede, in Joan. xiii. 10; vol. iii. p. 803.

S. Bernard, Sermo de Cena Domini.

Rupertus, in Joan. xiii. 10; vol. iii. p. 681.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cxxx. p. 442.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xiii. 10; vol. ii. p. 809.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 10; vol. viii. p. 1071.

² S. Ambrose, de Sacramentis, iii. 1; vol. iii. p. 433.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xiii. 8, tract. lvii.; vol. iii. p. 1790.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxx. p. 441.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 10; vol. viii. p. 1070.

No other act is recorded as taking place. Washing their feet could not be necessary in order that they might have mental sympathy with Him. This they had already, and this Peter had already expressed when, from love, he had hesitated to allow Him to wash his feet. It was doubtless to this mystery of cleansing their affections by washing their feet, in order that they might communicate in His Body and Blood, to which Jesus refers when He says, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter;" and, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me."

12. So after He had washed their feet, and had taken His garments, and was set down again, He said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you?

S. A. He took His garments and sat down again. He said.
Vulg. Postquam ordo lavit pedes eorum, et accipit vestimenta sua; cum recubissset iterum, dixit eis.

13. Ye call Me Master and Lord :^a and ye say well ; for so I am.

14. If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet ; ye also ought to wash one another's feet.

15. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.

16. Verily, verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord ; neither He that is sent greater than He that sent Him.

As ever, Jesus teaches His disciples as much by His example as by His words. He knew their proneness to dispute which of them should be the greatest, and He here gives them an example which, if followed, would for ever cut off all feeling of this kind.

17. If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.

18. ¶ I speak not of you all : I know whom I have chosen : but that the Scripture may be fulfilled, He that eateth bread with Me hath lifted up his heel against Me.

S. A. for I know.
Vulg. Non de omnibus vobis dico : ego scio quos elegerim : sed ut adimpleatur scriptura : Qui manducat mecum panem, levabit contra me calcaneum suum.

One of them never could be happy or blessed, for he never would do these things, and of him He spake not. He had not chosen Judas as one of the Twelve in ignorance of his character, or of the way in which he would yield to the temptations of Satan, and betray Him. He had elected Judas among the Twelve, bad as he was, in order to make use of him, and to fulfil the Scripture and to accomplish His Passion, and by that the salvation of mankind.

The clause which Jesus here quotes from Psalm xli. 9 is evidently not intended as a quotation from the Septuagint, for it differs from it in several words. Both this and the Septuagint may be regarded as exact translations from the Hebrew, and differ from each other just as much and no more than we might naturally expect in the case of any two accurate and independent translations. Here, as in other places, Jesus applies the words of the Old Testament to Himself ; and without any explanation, as if that were the principal and natural meaning of these passages. In quoting the Scriptures of the Old Testament, and making no exception at least to their general accuracy, we may fairly conclude that He bears a positive testimony to it.

19. Now I tell you before it come, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am He.

His choice of Judas to be one of the Twelve was not the effect of human frailty, of ignorance. He had not been deceived in him. It was a proof of Divine foreknowledge, for He had chosen him for this very purpose, because He knew that he would become a traitor and deliver Him up to the chief priests. His Passion, too, which He now foretold, and which was close at hand, ought not to be to them a cause of distrust and disbelief in Him, as if it had come upon Him unawares, and as if He were unable to avert it. His Passion should rather be a cause of greater belief in Him, as having been foretold by Him, and as having been foretold for this very purpose to increase their belief in Him.

20. Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth Me ; and he that receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me.

The meaning of these words in themselves is plain enough, but it is not easy to see their connection with what Jesus had said before, or what is His intention in giving utterance to them just at this particular time. Some¹ have thought that He uttered them to comfort and encourage His Apostles under the persecutions which they should meet with in preaching the Gospel ; others² that He has reference to the enormity of the sin of Judas in being faithless in such a

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xiii. 20 ; Homil. lxxii.
Theophylact, in Joan. xiii. 20 ; vol. i. p. 691.

² S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xiii. 20 ; vol. vii. p. 133.

^a Ye call Me Master and Lord (ὡς αὐτοὶ φωνεῖτε με, ὁ διδασκαλὸς καὶ ὁ κύριος).—The editions of Erasmus, Colin, and Bogard omit the latter article. No MS., however, warrants the omission. Though both titles are meant to be applied to our trust as that with which he was charged; and others¹ that as Jesus had before commanded the Apostles to wash the feet, and to show acts of love and condescension to His faithful ones, so He now commands the faithful to receive His Apostles with the utmost honour and reverence, as sent by the Father. Others,² again, have thought that by these words He further enforces on the Apostles the duty of receiving and caring for all who came in His name.

Saviour, yet they are not spoken of as being applied at the same time, but distinctly and independently, as if our Saviour had said, 'One of you calls Me ὁ διδασκαλός, another ὁ κύριος.'—BISHOP MIDDLETON on the Greek Article, p. 257.

S. John, in his narrative of the Last Supper, omits to record the Institution of the Eucharist. The question therefore naturally arises, Where in his account should the Institution of the Eucharist come in? The difficulty of answering this question is increased by the fact that S. Matthew and S. Mark relate His disclosure of the treachery of Judas before they relate his Institution of the Eucharist, while S. Luke does not relate his disclosure of the traitor until after the Eucharist. In order to reconcile these different accounts, some³ suppose that Jesus spake to His disciples of His betrayal by Judas more than once during this evening. Though this is not actually stated, it would not be unnatural to suppose that Jesus might mention this more than once, considering the agitation and the sorrow which it caused Him, nor would it be inconsistent with the narrative itself. None of the Evangelists but S. John relate the actual giving of the sop to Judas, so that it would not strain the narrative to suppose that S. Matthew and S. Mark record the words which Jesus used about the traitor before the Institution of the Eucharist, and S. Luke and S. John those which He used after. There seems to be no other way of reconciling the account, unless we suppose that the Evangelists record the events of the evening, but without regard to the exact order in which they occurred; that S. Luke has related the disclosure of the treachery of Judas after he relates the Institution of the Eucharist, though it occurred before; or, as some⁴ think, that S. Matthew and S. Mark anticipate the order, and relate the disclosure of the treachery of Judas before the Institution of the Eucharist, though it really took place after; or that each of the Evangelists relates in one account the words which Jesus spake twice, part before the Institution of the Eucharist and part after.

See also S. Matthew, chap. xxvi., page 420.

On the supposition, either that Jesus spake to His disciples of His betrayal by Judas more than once during the evening, both before and after the Institution of the Eucharist, or that S. Matthew and S. Mark record His words respecting Judas before they relate the Institution of the Eucharist, though part of them at least were spoken after; on either of these suppositions the account of the Institution of the Eucharist would naturally come into S. John's Gospel somewhere about the 20th verse of this chapter, as some⁵ think between the 20th and 21st verses, or, according to others,⁶ after the 22nd verse.*

The following⁷ was probably the order of events during the evening. The Paschal Supper being concluded, and their ordinary supper having begun, Jesus rose from the table and washed the feet of His disciples. Having sat down again, He spake the words which John has related from the 12th to 20th verses. Then, being troubled in spirit, He spake of His betrayal. Jesus then institutes the Eucharist, and commands them to offer it as His Memorial. After this, He again speaks of His betrayal, as related by S. Luke and S. John. Peter beckons to John to ask Him who it was, and Jesus replied, "He it is, to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it." And when He had dipped the sop, He gave it to Judas Iscariot: and after the sop Satan entered into him." Judas having received the sop, immediately went out, and Jesus then delivered the discourse which S. John records.

For verses 21-30 see also S. Matthew, ch. xxvi. page 418.

21. When Jesus had thus said, He was troubled in spirit, and testified, and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray Me.

22. Then the disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom He spake.

V. omits Then.

Vulg. Aspiebant ergo ad invicem discipuli.

23. Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of His disciples, whom Jesus loved.

V. omits Now.

Vulg. Erat ergo recumbens.

24. Simon Peter therefore beckoned to him, that he should ask who it should be of whom He spake.

V. and saith unto him, Say who it is of whom He speaketh: He spake.

S. and saith unto him, Say who it is of whom He speaketh.

Vulg. et dixit ei.

The custom of the country was to recline at meals two or three on one couch. Nearness to Jesus, their Lord and Master, was the post of honour. This was not allotted to

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxx. p. 445.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 20; vol. viii. p. 1073.

³ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 1; vol. iii. p. 1158.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxvi. 29; vol. ii. p. 1025.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 21; vol. viii. p. 1073.

⁴ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxii. p. 467.

⁵ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxi. p. 445.

Stroud's Harmony, p. 263.

⁶ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 21; vol. viii. p. 1074.

⁷ Cornelius a Lapide, ut supra.

* The Institution of the Eucharist.—There is no reason whatever to suppose, with some critics, that the foot-washing is intended to take the place of the Institution of the Eucharist. The random guesses that have been made to account for the omission of the latter are sufficient to refute the theories of which they form a part. The simple explanation is, that the subject was too familiar to need repetition."—SANDAY, 'Historical Character of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 217.

Philip or to Andrew, who were the disciples first called; but to John, the disciple whom Jesus loved. The reason is not assigned why He loved him: it is generally believed to have been on account of his youthful, gentle, chaste character.¹ A proof of his modesty is given in the very way in which he relates this, omitting any mention of his own name.

Besides reclining the nearest to Jesus at supper, S. John in his Gospel enters the most fully into the great Mystery of the Incarnation. He brings before us more fully than the other Evangelists Jesus, the Son of Mary, as the Resurrection and the Life. Though it is not anywhere said that the nature of S. John's Gospel was influenced by the innocence, meekness, and gentleness of his youth, and by his close communion with Jesus in his life, it would not be very unnatural to suppose that this was the case.

As on other occasions, so here too, the zeal of S. Peter makes him one of the most prominent among the Twelve. It was probably not mere curiosity on his part that prompted this inquiry, but a desire to counteract the treachery.² His zeal in the garden afterwards led him to offer resistance to the apprehension of Jesus by the soldiers.

25. He then lying on Jesus' breast^a saith unto Him, Lord, who is it?

S. He then lying.

V. He lying thus.

Vulg. Itaque cum recubasset ille supra pectus Jesu, dicit ei.

26. Jesus answered, He it is, to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it. And when He had dipped the sop, He gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon.

V. Jesus therefore answereth: All MSS. give the sop: V. He taketh and giveth it.

S. Jesus answereth and saith.

Vulg. Respondit Jesus: Ille est cui ego intinctum panem porrexo.

On the sign made to him by S. Peter, S. John withdraws himself a little from Jesus towards Peter, to hear what he had to say. Peter seems to have concluded that John, as the beloved disciple, would know who the traitor was. S. John, who was reclining on Jesus' bosom (ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ), now moved nearer to Him, and leaned back on His breast (ἐπὶ τὸ στῆθος) and asked the question secretly. The answer which Jesus made to S. John was apparently not intended for the ear of the rest, and did not reach them.³ The words "to whom I shall give a sop," &c., were not spoken aloud, but privately to John, who then probably communicated them to Peter.

27. And after the sop Satan entered into him. Then said Jesus unto him, That thou doest, do quickly.^b

28. Now no man at the table knew for what intent He spake this unto him.

V. omite Now.

Vulg. Hoc autem nemo scivit discurbentium at quid dixerit ei.

29. For some of them thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him, Buy those things that we have need of against the feast; or, that he should give something to the poor.

30. He then having received the sop went immediately out: and it was night.

A. And it was night, when he went out, Jesus said, Now, &c.

Vulg. Cum ergo accepisset ille buccellam exivit: continuo: erat autem nox.

It was before stated (ver. 2) that Satan had put it into the heart of Judas to betray Jesus; now it is said that after the sop Satan entered into him. Satan took possession of him, and hurried him on to complete his work. There was no connection between Satan and the sop. This was not the medium of Satan's entering into Judas, but merely the occasion of his doing so. The sop was to S. John the sign who should betray Jesus, but to Judas it was a mark of honour, of good-will and love. Kindly as this was meant towards Judas, his evil conscience no doubt looked upon it only as a sign intended to discover him to the rest; and, conscious of his treacherous designs towards Jesus, he becomes desperate in his resolve to execute his dreadful purpose. Even if the giving of the sop to Judas was in any

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xiii. 23; Homil. lxxii.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xiii. 23; vol. vii. p. 137.

Thophylact, in Joan. xiii. 23; vol. i. p. 693.

Euthymius, in Joan. xiii. 23; vol. iv. p. 471.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxiii. p. 469.

^a He then lying on Jesus' breast (ἐπιπεσὼν δὲ ἐκείνου ἐπὶ τὸ στῆθος τοῦ Ἰησοῦ).—The English Version makes no distinction between the reclining position of the beloved disciple throughout the meal, described by ἀνακειμένος, and the sudden change of posture at this moment introduced by ἀναπεσὼν. This distinction is further enforced in the original by a change in both the prepositions and the nouns, from ἐν to ἐπὶ, and from κόλπος to στῆθος. S. John was reclining on the bosom of his Master, and he suddenly threw back his head upon His breast to ask a question. Again, in a later passage, a reference occurs—not to the reclining position, but to the sudden movement—in xvi. 29, ὅς καὶ ἀπεπνεύει ἐν τῷ δείπνῳ ἐπὶ τὸ στῆθος αὐτοῦ καὶ εἶπεν, whose answer is not in the text.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 24; vol. viii. p. 1074.

³ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxii. p. 468.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 22; vol. i. p. 379.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 25; vol. viii. p. 1074.

by our translators, "which also leaned on His breast and said." This is among the most striking of those vivid descriptive traits which distinguish the narrative of the fourth Gospel generally, and which are especially remarkable in these last scenes of Jesus' life, where the beloved disciple was himself an eye-witness and an actor.—"CANON LISHOOT on the 'Revision of the New Testament,' p. 72.

^b That thou doest, do quickly (ὅ ποιεῖς, ποιῆσον τάχιστα).—"More quickly than you seem disposed to do, hasten the execution. The imperative must not be taken as simply permissive."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 327.

way a sign to the others that Judas was the traitor, still it did not lead either them or S. John, who at least knew the sign, to understand the meaning of the words which Jesus spake to him. Though they might conclude that he it was who should betray Jesus, they did not imagine it would be that very night, that very hour. They supposed that these words had reference to some of the business which Judas usually transacted for the company. No doubt it was then as it is now. The poor are unable to make the necessary provision for the Passover-week without assistance. The disciples probably remembered that Jesus had been accustomed on such occasions to give something to the poor out of their common fund. They little thought that by these words Jesus, though He was not persuading, was permitting and foretelling His own betrayal to death. Nay, so eager is Jesus for the salvation of man, that He is represented as reproving the tardiness of Judas.

The Evangelist is careful to record the time. "It was night." As soon as his new master takes possession of him, he gives him no rest, but forces him to go at once on his horrible undertaking. Night is the most fitting hour in which to accomplish such a work as Judas purposes, most expressive, too, of the nature of his work and of the state of his soul. "It was night."

31. ¶ Therefore, when he was gone out, Jesus said, Now is the Son of Man glorified,^a and God is glorified with Him.

32. If God be glorified in Him, God shall also glorify Him in Himself, and shall straightway glorify Him.

S.V. And God shall glorify Him in Himself (omit If God be glorified in Him).
Vulg. Si Deus clarificatus est in eo, et Deus clarificabit eum in semetipso.

At verse 31 commences the long discourse which Jesus made to His disciples after the departure of Judas, to comfort them, and to prepare them for His Crucifixion. This discourse continues to the end of chapter xvi.

As soon as Judas had gone out Jesus said, "Now is the Son of Man glorified, and God is glorified in Him," intimating that the process of glorification was already begun, that Judas had gone out to betray Him to death, and that His Death would be not for the ignominy but for the highest glorification of the Son of Man. By His Death He would be proved to be not only Man, and the Son of Man, but God, and the Son of God.

That the Godhead tabernacled in the body, that in Jesus there dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, would be shown by the darkening of the sun, by the quaking of the earth, by the rending of the rocks and the opening of the graves, and by the resurrection of the saints who slept. All these things would prove clearly that it was not Man only who suffered, and gave up His life on the Cross, but God.¹

Some² think that a distinction is intended to be made between the glorifying in the 31st verse and that in the 32nd: that the first is spoken of as already begun and nearly completed, as referring to the glorifying of God by Jesus on earth, in His course of obedience as the Son of Man, and which was completed by His Death; that the second is spoken of as future, as referring to the manifestation of Jesus to be the Son of God with power, by His Resurrection and Ascension to the Father, to sit at the right hand of God.

The expression "God shall also glorify Him in Himself," applies to God the Father, and expresses the glory which the Word had with the Father before His condescension to be born of a virgin, and which after His Resurrection and Ascension He would again receive as the "Word made flesh." With His human body Jesus would ascend to the Father, and share with Him the glory which He had before the Incarnation. These words are explained by those which Jesus used a little later, "And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self, with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was" (xvii. 5).

33. Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek Me: and as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so now I say to you.

34. A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

S. as I have loved you, love ye also.

35. By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another.

Using the expression which a mother would use to her new-born offspring, "Little children" (τέκνια), Jesus may intend to express the tenderness of His affection for His disciples, as well as the weakness of their condition, of their faith in Him. In a few short hours He would leave them: for in that time Judas would have betrayed Him to the chief priests.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xiii. 31; Homil. lxxii.
S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xiii. 31; vol. vii. p. 152.
Theophylact, in Joan. xiii. 31; vol. i. p. 694.
Euthymius, in Joan. xiii. 31; vol. iv. p. 477.
Rupertus, in Joan. xiii. 31; vol. iii. p. 690.

[Jansenius,

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang., cap. cxxiii. p. 472.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xiii. 31; vol. ii. p. 813.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiii. 31; vol. viii. p. 1077.

² Origen, Homil. vi. in Exod.; vol. ii. p. 332.

^a Now is the Son of Man glorified (ὡς ἐδοξάσθη ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου).—It is only in appearance that the aorist is used for the future. Jesus says, 'Now is the Son of Man glorified,' the traitor Judas having gone away, and, as it were, completed his treason."—WINER, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 292.

Jesus intimates that His departure was nothing new to them, and that He had already announced it to the Jews. To them He had said, "Whither I go, ye cannot come," because they should die in their sins (viii. 21). The disciples cannot go, because they have a work to do, a commandment to fulfil, and to exhibit the fulfilment of it to the world. He had inaugurated a new dispensation, and love to each other was to be the distinguishing mark of this dispensation. He had united them in One, in Himself the Head. They had just partaken of His Body and of His Blood, the Sacrament of the New Covenant, and they must show forth the fruits of this by keeping the commandment of the New Covenant. They were no longer individuals, so to speak; they were members of one body, and they must henceforth show the love and the sympathy which members of the same body have for each other.

For verses 36-38 see also S. Matthew, ch. xxvi. page 427.

36. ¶ Simon Peter said unto Him, Lord, whither goest Thou? Jesus answered him, Whither I go, thou canst not follow Me now; but thou shalt follow Me afterwards.

*V. omits Him: S.V.A. But thou shalt follow afterwards.
Vulg. Dicit ei Simon Petrus . . . sequeris autem postea.*

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xiii. 36; Homil. lxxiii.
S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xiii. 36; vol. vii. p. 168.
Theophylact, in Joan. xiii. 36; vol. i. p. 696.
Euthymius, in Joan. xiii. 36; vol. iv. p. 483.

37. Peter said unto Him, Lord, why cannot I follow Thee now? I will lay down my life for Thy sake.

*S. omits Lord.
Vulg. omits Lord.*

38. Jesus answered him, Wilt thou lay down thy life for My sake? Verily, verily, I say unto thee, The cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied Me thrice.

*S.V.A. Jesus answereth.
Vulg. Respondit ei Jesus.*

S. Peter's question¹ was probably dictated not by mere curiosity to know whether Jesus is going, but by an earnest feeling of devotion to Him. But he could not follow Him now, either because he had not the strength of resolution so to do, or because there was work on earth for him to accomplish first. When the Holy Spirit should have been given, he should acquire the strength to labour in his Master's cause, and then to follow Him in the mode of His Death by a similar death on the Cross. When Peter, with more zeal than knowledge, persists, Jesus, in order to prove to him his own weakness without the help of the Holy Spirit, foretells and permits his fall.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xiii. 36, tract. lxxi.; vol. iii. p. 1810.
V. Bede, in Joan. xiii. 36; vol. iii. p. 817.
Eupertus, in Joan. xiii. 36; vol. iii. p. 693.

CHAPTER XIV.

[1. Christ comforteth His disciples with the hope of heaven : 6. professeth Himself the Way, the Truth, and the Life, and One with the Father : 13. assureth their prayers in His name to be effectual : 15. requesteth love and obedience, 16. promiseth the Holy Ghost the Comforter, 21. and leaveth His peace with them.]

[Vulg. Consolando discipulos ait multas in domo Patris esse mansiones, seque rursum illos assumpturum ; Thomam dicit se esse viam, veritatem et vitam ; Philippo autem, Patrem in se videri : illosque accepturos quicquid suo munus petierint, et se alium Paracletum a Patre eis missurum ; docet quis ipsum diligere dicendus sit, et qualem pacem relinquit discipulis, qui de ipsius discessu merito gaudere deberent.]

THIS their last Passover had been overclouded with sorrow ; it had ended in sadness. They are still in the upper room. But how different are their feelings now from what they were a few hours ago, when they first entered that room to keep the feast in memory of their deliverance from the angel of death, and from the bondage of Egypt ! They had eaten the usual Passover. Jesus had shown them an unwonted mark of His love. He had washed the feet of His twelve disciples. He had instituted a new Memorial of Himself, and had bound them to Himself and to each other under stronger ties of love than ever before. But with all this He had mingled His instruction with words that filled their hearts with sadness. He had spoken of His immediate departure from them, and that by the treachery of one of their own number, of the denial of Peter, and of the desertion of the rest (Matt. xxvi. 31). Judas had already left them, and sadness had filled the hearts of the rest.

To leave them would be to crush all the hopes which they had ever built upon Him. The more firmly they believed that Jesus was the Messiah, the more disappointment His departure would cause them : for the Apostles, like the rest of the Jewish nation, had indulged in the expectation that the Messiah would restore the temporal kingdom to Israel (Acts i. 6), that He would rescue them from the yoke of the Gentiles (Luke xxiv. 21), and would invest His followers with the ensigns of kingly pomp, triumph, and splendour. Hitherto they had seen nothing but poverty, contempt, reproach, and persecution as the rewards of their attachment to Him : should He leave them, all their hopes of improvement and of earthly grandeur would be destroyed for ever. No wonder their heart was troubled. To comfort them in this their trouble and disappointment Jesus continues the discourse, which had been interrupted by Peter's question, "Whither goest Thou?"

1. Let not your heart be troubled : ye believe in God, believe also in Me.

In the two passages translated "ye believe" and "believe ye," the Greek verb is the same, namely πιστεύετε. This clause might therefore be rendered in four different ways. It might be translated (1) as if both the verbs were in the imperative mood ; (2) as if both were in the indicative mood ; (3) as if the first were in the indicative and the second in the imperative ; (4) as if the first were in the imperative and the second in the indicative mood. Many¹ of the Greek commentators have translated the clause in the first of these ways, and rendered it, "Believe ye in God, and believe in Me." But the third is the way which seems to agree best with the context, and it is that which has been adopted by some² of the Latin commentators and also by the translators of the Authorized Version. Thus the remedy for their trouble was to believe not only that there was One True God, who directed and superintended all the affairs of men, but also that He, Jesus the Son of Man, their Lord and Master, was that One God.

2. In My Father's house are many mansions : if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.^a

S.V.A. For I go to prepare.

Vulg. quia vado parare vobis locum.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xiv. 1 ; Homil. lxxiii.

Nonnus, in Joan. xiv. 1, p. 136.

Theophylact, in Joan. xiv. 1 ; vol. i. p. 697.

Euthymius, in Joan. xiv. 1 ; vol. iv. p. 485.

S. Hilary Pict. de Trinitate, ix. 19 ; vol. ii. p. 295.

² S. Augustine, in Joan. xiv. 1, tract. lxxvii. ; vol. iii. p. 1812.

V. Bede, in Joan. xiv. 1 ; vol. iii. p. 818.

Eupertus, in Joan. xiv. 1 ; vol. iii. p. 694.

^a Verse 2.—^a Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles insert ἔτι, θεὸν, before πορεύομαι, I go.—SCRIVENER, "New Testament," 1877.

For the reading and interpretation of this verse see McClellan, "New Testament," p. 731.

3. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

A. And if I go, I will prepare.

Vulg. Et si abiero, et preparavero vobis locum: iterum venio, et accipiam vos ad meipsum.

4. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know.

S.V. And whither I go, ye know the way.

Vulg. Et quo ego vado scitis, et viam scitis.

He had already promised Peter (xiii. 36) that he should follow Him after a time. He now extends the promise to the rest. But first He must depart from them, and prepare a place for them. That the many mansions in His Father's house implied that there would be different degrees of bliss in heaven for men, according to their different degrees of perfection while on earth, was the common teaching of the early writers.¹

His disciples could not ascend into heaven until Jesus, by His Ascension, had prepared the way. As yet no man had ever ascended into heaven. Until He, the Head of the Church, in His glorified human body, had ascended into heaven, none of His members could ascend thither.

Not only had Jesus to prepare a place for them, by His own Ascension into heaven, He had also to prepare them for the place, by sending down the Holy Spirit to sanctify them, and to fit them to dwell with Him. If they remembered what He had said unto them they would understand this, they would know whither He was going, and also the way. They would know that through His Death on the Cross He would return to the Father, and they would know the way by which they were to follow Him.

5. Thomas saith unto Him, Lord, we know not whither Thou goest; and how can we know the way?

V. omits and: V. how know we the way?

Vulg. nescimus quo vadis: et quomodo possumus viam scire?

6. Jesus saith unto him, I am the Way,^a the Truth, and the Life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me.

7. If ye had known Me, ye should have known My Father also: and from henceforth ye know Him, and have seen Him.

A. omits Me: S. If ye have known Me, ye shall know: V. omits and before from.

Vulg. Si cognovissetis me, et Patrem meum utique cognovissetis: et amodo cognoscetis eum, et vidistis eum.

To the objection made by Thomas, that they did not know whither or to whom He was going, and therefore how could they know the way by which to follow Him, Jesus replies that He is going to the Father, and that the way by which they are to follow is by belief in Him: for He is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, and no man can come to the Father except through Him.

Jesus is the Way, because by His Death and Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension into heaven, He has opened the way for man also to ascend into heaven. He is the Truth, because He is the fulfilment of all the shadows and types and prophetic actions recorded in the Old Testament. He is the Life, because He is the Author of all natural and spiritual life, of the life of grace in the soul here, and of the life of glory hereafter.

With reference to the connection of these three words, it has been suggested that this is a Hebraistic form of expression, and that the term "the Truth" is intended to qualify the two other terms, between which it stands, and implies that Jesus is the sure way, via vera, which leadeth unto the true life, vera vita; that is, unto the life everlasting.²

Jesus by His Passion opens the way to heaven for man. By His doctrine He delivers His followers from the darkness and errors in which others wander. By His Holy Spirit He sanctifies their lives and leads them to prepare for the life to come. By His own perfect life He has given them an example, He has first trod the way and they are to follow in His steps.

But not only is Jesus the Way to the Father, but He is also One with the Father; One with the Father not in a secondary sense, but in the very highest and most perfect sense. This was a subject which as yet the disciples did not comprehend. Though Jesus had been "so long time," three

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xiv. 2; vol. vii. p. 181.

Theodoret, in 1 Cor. xv. 39; p. 251, ed. Oxf. 1852.

Tertullian, Scorpiace, vi.; vol. ii. p. 134.

S. Gregory Magnus, Moral. iv. 36; vol. i. p. 677.

xxxv. 19; vol. ii. p. 778.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Ezek. Homil. lib. ii. 4; vol. ii. p. 977.

Dialog. iv. 35; vol. iii. p. 380.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxiv. p. 486.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xiv. 6; vol. ii. p. 823.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiv. 6; vol. viii. p. 1082.

* The Way.—"It is true of Christianity, as it is true of no other religious system, that the religion is identified with, is absorbed in, the Person of its founder. The Gospel is Christ, and Christ only. This fact finds expression in many ways, but more especially in the application of the same language to the one and to the other. In most cases this identity of terms is equally apparent in the English and in the Greek. But in one instance it is obliterated by a mis-translation of the definite article. Our Lord, in S. John's Gospel, in answer to the disciple's question, 'How can we know the way?' answers, 'I am the Way.' Corresponding to this we ought to find that in no less than four places in the Acts of the Apostles the Gospel is called 'the way' absolutely. ix. 2: 'If he found any that were of the way' (ἐάν τις εἴπῃ τῆς ὁδοῦ ὄντας). xix. 9: 'Divers believed not, but spake evil of the way.' xix. 23: 'There arose no small stir about the way.' xxiv. 22: 'Having more perfect knowledge of the way.' But in all these passages the fact disappears in the English Version, which varies the rendering between 'this way' and 'that way,' but never once translates τῆς ὁδοῦ, 'the way.'—CANON LIGHTFOOT on 'Revision of the New Testament,' p. 193.

years, with them, they had not from their intercourse with Him gathered a sufficiently correct and full idea of the relation between Him and the Father.

8. Philip saith unto Him, Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us.

From the miracles which Jesus had wrought they could not doubt that He was, as He said, the Son of God. Still there was about Him somewhat that contradicted their expectations of what God would be. He was subject to the same human weakness as themselves; He was almost as much in the power of His enemies, so far as they could see, as themselves. Hence arose at times their fears, their misgivings. If once they could only see the Father, they would be satisfied, their fears would all be removed.

They formed their opinion of the union between God the Father and Jesus His Son from what they saw existed on earth between a father and his son. They have a common nature alike in both, they possess equal or similar power, they occupy a similar station or rank in the world, have individual wills and individual characteristics. But in no sense can they be called one. If the relation between God the Father and God the Son were such as exists between a father and his son on earth, they would be two independent Gods,—two, it might be, equal, but two independent Gods. In the following verses Jesus shows that such is not the relation between Himself and the Father.

9. Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip? he that hath seen Me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father?

S.V. omit and before how sayest.

10. Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me? the words that I speak unto you I speak not of Myself: but the Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works.

V. but the Father dwelling in Me, doeth His works.

S. but the Father in Me, doeth His works.

Vulg. non creditis Pater autem in me manens, ipse facit opera.

11. Believe Me that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me:^a or else believe Me for the very works' sake.

A. omits and the Father in Me: S. or else believe the very works.

Vulg. Non creditis quia ego in Patre, et Pater in me est; alioquin propter opera ipse credite.

* Believe Me that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me. —“The Divinity of the Son being assumed, the early writers are earnest in protecting the doctrine of the Unity; protecting it both from the materialism of dividing the Godhead, and the paganism of separating the Son and Spirit from the Father. And to this purpose they made both ‘of God’ and the ‘in God’ subservient, in a manner which shall now be shown.

“First, the ‘in God.’ It is the clear declaration of Scripture, which we must receive without questioning, that the Son and Spirit are in the one God and He in Them. There is that remarkable text in the first chapter of S. John which says that the Son is ‘in the bosom of the Father.’ In another place it is said that ‘the Son is in the Father and the Father in the Son’ (John xiv. 11). And elsewhere the Spirit of God is compared to ‘the spirit of a man which is in him’ (1 Cor. ii. 11). This is, in the language of theology, the doctrine of the coinherence (συνχωρησις or circumincessio), which was used from the earliest times on the authority of Scripture, as a safeguard and witness of the Divine Unity. A passage from Athenagoras to this purpose has just been cited. Clement has the following doxology at the end of his ‘Christian Instructor’: ‘To the One Only Father and Son, Son and Father, Son our guide and teacher, with the Holy Spirit also, to the One in all things, in whom are all things, &c. . . . to Him is the glory, &c.’ And Gregory of Neo-Cæsarea, if the words form part of his creed, ‘In the Trinity there is nothing created, nothing subservient, nothing of foreign nature, as if absent from it once and afterwards added. The Son never failed the Father nor the Spirit the Son, but the Trinity remains evermore unchangeable, unalterable.’ These authorities belong to the early Alexandrian school. The ante-Nicene school of Rome is still more explicit. Dionysius of Rome says: ‘We must neither distribute into three divinities the awful and Divine Unity, nor diminish the dignity and transcendent majesty of our Lord by the name of creature; but we must believe in God the Father Almighty, and in Christ Jesus His Son, and in the Holy Spirit; and believe that the Word is united with the God of the universe: for He says, “I and the Father are One;” and, “I am in the Father, and the Father in Me;” for thus the Divine

Trinity and the holy preaching of the monarchia will be preserved.’

“This doctrine of the coinherence, as protecting the Unity without trenching on the perfections of the Son and Spirit, may even be called the characteristic of Catholic Trinitarianism as opposed to all counterfeits, whether philosophical, Arian, or Oriental. One post-Nicene statement of it shall be added. ‘If anyone truly receive the Son,’ says Basil, ‘he will find that he brings with Him on one hand His Father, on the other the Holy Spirit: for neither can He from the Father be severed, who is of and ever in the Father; nor again from His own Spirit disunited, who in It operates all things. . . . For we must not conceive separation or division in any way, as if either the Son could be supposed without the Father, or the Spirit disunited from the Son. But there is discovered between them some ineffable and incomprehensible, both communion and distinction.’

“Secondly, as the ‘in God’ led the Fathers to the doctrine of coinherence, so did the ‘of God’ lead them to the doctrine of the monarchia; still with the one object of guarding against any resemblance to polytheism in their creed. Even the heathen had shown a disposition, designedly or from a spontaneous feeling, to trace all their deities up to one principle or arche; as is evident from the Theogonies. Much more did it become that true religion, which prominently put forth the Unity of God, jealously to guard its language, lest it should seem to admit the existence of a variety of original principles. It is said to have been the doctrine of the Marcionists and Manichees, that there were three unconnected independent Beings in the Divine nature. Scripture and the Church avoid the appearance of tritheism by tracing back (if we may so say) the infinite perfections of the Son and Spirit to Him whose Son and Spirit they are.”—DR. NEWMAN, ‘Arians of the Fourth Century,’ p. 177.

“It would much impair our idea of the Unity of God in the Adorable Trinity, did we conceive of Two of the Persons as having no relation to one another, except an independent relation to the One Father. The truth of the mutual Inexistence (συνχωρησις) of the Three Blessed Persons, which our Lord reveals to us by the

The union between Jesus and the Father is such, that He who hath known Jesus hath known the Father; He who hath seen Jesus hath seen the Father. Jesus is in the Father, and the Father in Jesus. The words which Jesus speaks He speaks from the Father; The works which Jesus does the Father doeth.

No language could express Oneness, Equality between the Father and Jesus His Son, more strongly than this. Such Union as this is inconceivably beyond the relation that exists between an earthly father and his son, and could never be gathered from it. Nothing but express revelation from God could communicate this knowledge. To put these expressions into other language is to say that God the Father and Jesus His Son are One in essence or Divine nature, but distinct in Person, One God and Two Persons.

That this is the sense in which the early Church understood these words is plain from the use made of them by the Catholic Fathers in their discussions with the Arians,¹ who maintained that the Son was inferior in nature to the Father; and also with the Sabellians,² who confounded the Persons of the Father and the Son.

If they will not believe His words that the Father is in Him, He appeals to His works as proving it. If it is not sufficient to gain their credence that He says the Father is in Him, He appeals to them to believe it because they see the Father working in Him. They cannot see with their bodily eyes the soul, but still they believe that the soul exists in the body, because they can see its works. They see the body performing operations which it could not do of itself unless the soul were in it. In like manner they see Jesus performing miracles, working supernatural works, which He could not do if He were a mere man, which He could not do unless the Father were working with Him and in Him.

12. Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go into My Father.

S.V.A. unto the Father.
Vulg. quia ego ad Patrem vado.

13. And whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son.

14. If ye shall ask any thing in My name, I will do it.

V.A. that will I do.
Vulg. hoc faciam.

Another proof that the Father is in Jesus, and works in Him, is that he who holds this belief has also, by this very faith, power to work similar or even greater miracles than He Himself did while on earth.

Some³ have thought that in the expression "greater works than these shall he do," He had reference to the conversion of the Gentile world by His Apostles. By His own personal preaching and miracles Jesus converted only a small number, a few hundreds at most. His Apostles converted a great part of the world, as then known. The conversion of the world was the effect of His Resurrection and of the Descent of the Holy Spirit. But this did not take place until Jesus had ascended to the Father. This, too, is the reason assigned why they should work greater things than He had done, because He should go to the Father. Having gained the victory, having triumphed over sin and death and hell, he ascends to the Father, and sends down the Holy Spirit to enlighten and sanctify and strengthen the Apostles, so as to convert the world.

Though He should not be present with them in the same sense as formerly, still He promised to grant whatever they asked in His name consistently with the glory of the Father. This promise is repeated in two consecutive verses.

15. ¶ If ye love Me, keep My commandments.

S. omits Me: V. ye shall keep.
Vulg. Si diligitis me, mandata mea servate.

¹ S. Athanasius, de Decretis Nicenae Synodi; vol. i. pp. 445, 449.

in illud Omnia Mihi tradita sunt; vol. i. p. 216.

i. p. 568. Epistola ad Episcopos Ægypti et Libye, 13; vol.

Oratio i. contra Arianos; vol. ii. pp. 29, 81, 85.

217. Oratio ii. contra Arianos; vol. ii. pp. 181, 192,

Oratio contra Gentes, 46; vol. i. p. 93.

S. Basil, de Spiritu Sancto, viii. 21; vol. iv. p. 105.

Homil. contra Sabellianos et Arium, 2, &c.; vol. iii. p. 601.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xiv. 10; Homil. lxxiv. [S. Cyril

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xiv. 9; vol. vii. p. 204.

Theophylact, in Joan. xiv. 10; vol. i. p. 700.

Euthymius, in Joan. xiv. 9; vol. iv. p. 489.

S. Ambrose, de Fide, v. 11; vol. iii. p. 675.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xiv. 10, tract. lxx.; vol. iii. p. 1819.

V. Bede, in Joan. xiv. 10; vol. iii. p. 823.

² Tertullian, adv. Praxeas, 20; vol. ii. p. 179.

S. Athanasius, Expositio Fidei, 2; vol. i. p. 204.

de Sententia Dionysii, 10, 26; vol. i. pp. 494, 520.

S. Basil, Homil. contra Sabellianos et Arium, &c.; vol. iii. p. 605.

³ S. Augustine, in Joan. xiv. 12, tract. lxxii.; vol. iii. p. 1822.

words "I am the Father, and the Father in Me," "The Father Who abideth in Me," facilitates to us the conception of the simple Unity of God in the All-Holy Trinity. The doctrine excludes Arianism on the one side, and Sabellianism on the other: "neither confounding the Persons, nor dividing the Substance." The Fathers had most occasion to dwell upon this against the Arians. In our human mode of existence, the father is external to the son, and the breath from the breather. In God, all is one within Himself, in the absolute unity and simplicity of His Being."—DR. PUSEY, Letter on the clause "And the Son," p. 176. 1876.

16. And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter,* that He may abide with you for ever;

S.V. that He may be.
Vulg. ut maneat vobiscum in eternum.

17. Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him; but ye know Him; for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.

S.V. omit but: V. and is in you.
Vulg. vos autem cognoscetis eum, quia apud vos manebit, et in vobis erit.

He asks for a proof of their love, which should be shown by keeping His commandments, and on this He promises to send another Advocate or Comforter to supply His place after His departure from them, which would be after His Ascension, and this promise He fulfilled at the Day of Pentecost. He expresses His promise to send the Comforter in the form of a prayer to the Father to send Him. It may be that He did this in order to keep in their minds His Oneness with the Father.

This verse was used by the ancient commentators¹ to show that the Holy Spirit was a distinct Person from the Father and the Son, but of the same nature. For He who was sent could not be the same Person as He who sent Him, nor as He who prayed that He might be sent. But besides that the Spirit was a distinct Person from the Father and the Son, these words were also thought to indicate that He was of the same nature, inasmuch as He is described by the same term as Jesus, a Paraclete, Παράκλητος. In the expressive comment of S. Chrysostom, "By one blow He has smitten down two opposite heresies: by saying 'another,' He shows the difference of His Person; by saying 'Paracletus,' the sameness of His Substance" (Homil. lxxv. in John).

The word translated "Comforter" is literally a Paraclete or Advocate. The disciples are in trouble at the thought that Jesus is going to leave them, and at the loss which they shall experience thereby,—a loss which, as they think, cannot possibly be made up to them. What they therefore require is one who shall supply the place of Jesus to them; one who can be their Advocate, the defender of them and their cause against their adversaries; who can intercede with the Father for them, and can be their leader and adviser in all the attacks of their enemies on earth.

1. He will be with the Apostles, and those whom they represent, the Church, for ever.
2. He is the Spirit of Truth, because He will lead them into all the truth and fulness of the Gospel, and will preserve them from the errors of Satan.
3. The world, or the men whose minds are set upon this present world without regard to the future, cannot receive Him. Their thoughts and desires are taken up with the things that concern the body only, and care not for the salvation of the soul, which is the object of the Paraclete.
4. The Apostles, the Church, know Him, because He dwelleth with them and in them. He is not an object for their senses, but for their faith. They cannot feel His presence by the senses of the body, but still they recognize His holy influence over them.

18. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you.

Margin, orphans.
Vulg. Non reliquam vos orphanos.

19. Yet a little while, and the world seeth Me no more; but ye see Me: because I live, ye shall live also.

At the beginning of this discourse to them He called them little children (τέκνα); now He says that He will not make them "orphans" (ὀρφανούς) by His departure. Some²

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. xiv. 16, tract. lxxiv.; vol. iii. p. 1826.
S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xiv. 16; Homil. lxxv.
S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xiv. 16; vol. vii. p. 256.
Theophylact, in Joan. xiv. 16; vol. i. p. 702.
Euthymius, in Joan. xiv. 16; vol. iv. p. 495.

* Another Comforter (ἄλλον Παράκλητον).—"Παράκλητος is five times used in the Scriptures, and that by S. John alone; four times in his Gospel, attributed to the Holy Ghost; once in his first Epistle, spoken of Christ. When it relates to the Holy Ghost, we translate it always Comforter; when to Christ, we render it Advocate; of which diversity there can be no reason, because Christ, who is a Paraclete, said that He would send another Paraclete; and therefore the notion must be the same in both: 'ἄλλον Παράκλητον δώσει υἱόν, τοῦτέστιν, ἄλλον ὡς ἐμέ (S. Chrysost. ad locum). If therefore, in the language of S. John, Παράκλητος be a Comforter, then Christ is the Comforter; if Παράκλητος be an Advocate, the Holy Ghost is the Advocate. The Vulgar Latin keeps the Greek word in the Gospels, Paracletus; but in the Epistle renders it Advocatus. The Syriac keepeth the original altogether ܡܕܝܢܐ, as being of ordinary use in the writers of that and the Chaldee language; and therefore was not well translated Paracletus in the Gospels, and ² S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. xiv. 19; vol. vii. p. 265.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xiv. 19, tract. lxxvi.; vol. iii. p. 1832.
V. Bede, in Joan. xiv. 19; vol. iii. p. 830.
Rupertus, in Joan. xiv. 19; vol. iii. p. 705.
Maldonatus, in Joan. xiv. 19; vol. ii. p. 832.

Advocatus in the Epistle, by Tremellius. That the Latins did use generally the word Paracletus for the Holy Ghost, as it is now in the Vulgar Latin, appeareth by the description of the heresy of Montanus, which Tertullian calls 'novam prophetiam de Paraclete inundantem' (de Resur. Carn. cap. 63). And yet the ancientest Latin translations rendered it Advocatus, even in the Gospels, in reference to the Spirit; as we read it in Tertullian, 'Bene quod et Dominus usus hoc verbo in persona Paracleti, non divisionem significavit, sed dispositionem: Rogabo enim, inquit, Patrem, et alium Advocatum mittet vobis, Spiritum veritatis.' (Adv. Prax., cap. 9, &c. &c.)"—BISHOP PEARSON on the Creed, Art. viii. note, p. 389; vol. ii. p. 273, ed. 1843.

See also McClellan, 'New Testament,' p. 733, who maintains that Παράκλητος, on the ground of its etymology and usage, ought to be translated Advocate, both when applied to Christ and to the Holy Spirit.

understand His words, that after a little time He will see them again, to refer to His Second Coming at the day of Judgment. Others,¹ and with greater probability, think that this promise was fulfilled on the day of Resurrection, when He appeared to them in His glorified Body, and on the day of Pentecost, when He sent down the Holy Spirit upon them.

He then speaks of His Resurrection and of the effects of His Resurrection. Of His own Resurrection He speaks as present; and of theirs, which will not be until the day of Judgment, and which will be the effect of His Resurrection, as future. In a little time—in the space of a few hours—the world should see Him no more, though they should see Him. When risen from the dead, He should not appear to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God (Acts x. 41).

After His Resurrection, when they had been enlightened by the Descent of the Holy Spirit, they should understand doctrines which now it was difficult for them to comprehend, and which, though He had explained to them more than once, they could not fully understand and receive now.

20. At that day ye shall know that I am in My Father, and ye in Me, and I in you.

These three propositions are not to be understood in the same way, but each according to its own relation. Jesus is not in the Father in the same sense as He is in His disciples, and as they are in Him. Jesus is in the Father as being of the same Essence, of the same Divine nature, One with the Father and Equal to the Father. He is in His disciples because He, through the Holy Spirit, dwelt in them. They are in Him because they were engrafted into Him the God-Man. As an illustration, it has been said² that Jesus is in the Father as a ray is in the Sun, of the same nature. They are in Jesus as branches grafted into the vine. He is in them as the vine is in the branches, supplying life and sustenance to them. The former Union points to the Mystery of the Trinity, the latter to the Mystery of the Incarnation.

But the effect of Christ's Resurrection should not be confined to the Apostles. It should be extended to all who loved Him, whether living at the time of His Resurrection or afterwards.

21. He that hath My commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me: and he that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father, and I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him.

The proof of their love to Jesus is to keep His commandments. The effect of their love is that God will love them and will manifest Himself unto them.

22. Judas saith unto Him, not Iscariot, Lord, how is it that Thou wilt manifest Thyself unto us, and not unto the world?

S. Lord, and how is it.
Vulg. Judas, quid factum est quia manifestaturus es nobis teipsum, et non mundo?

To the inquiry of Judas why Jesus would manifest Himself unto them and not unto the world, He, in effect, replies that the manifestation of Himself after His Resurrection will be made to them only, and to a few other witnesses chosen before of God (Acts x. 41), but that He will manifest Himself in another way to all who love Him and keep His words.

23. Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love Me, he will keep My words: and My Father will love Him, and We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him.

God is everywhere, and fills all things, and therefore when He is said to abide in one place and remove to another, such expressions are used with reference to our limited capacities. Jesus uses these terms here to indicate the various operations of the Holy Spirit on men's minds. God comes to a man when He imparts His grace and influences his heart, and the more love he shows by keeping His commandments the longer He abides with him, the more grace He imparts to him.

As love is shown by keeping God's commandments, so not to keep them is a proof of the want of love.

24. He that loveth Me not keepeth not My sayings: and the word which ye hear is not Mine, but the Father's which sent Me.

To keep prominently before their minds His Oneness with the Father, He says that the word which they hear Him speak is not His, but His Father's who sent Him.

25. These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you.

26. But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in My name, He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

Many things Jesus had said unto them, which they could not then understand, either on account of their own incapacity or on account of the deep nature of the things themselves, and there were many things which He had not said unto them for the same reasons. All these, as well as all the other Mysteries of the Incarnation, the Holy Spirit would

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xiv. 19; Homil. lxxx.
Theophylact, in Joan. xiv. 19; vol. i. p. 704.
Euthymius, in Joan. xiv. 20; vol. iv. p. 501.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxix. p. 492.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiv. 19; vol. viii. p. 1089.
² Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiv. 20; vol. viii. p. 1090.

enable them to comprehend. He would instruct them in all things necessary for the foundation and for the future growth of the Church.

He says, "Whom the Father will send in My name," to indicate the Unity between the Three Persons in the Holy Trinity, and the Mission of the Holy Spirit from the Father and the Son, and that His coming to them was the fruits of His Passion, and to supply His place to the Church.

27. Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.

S. not as the world giveth unto you, give I unto you.
 Vulg. non quomodo mundus dat, ego do vobis.

The world, men in general, when departing from each other, say, "Peace be unto you." They wish peace in words, but they cannot by that give peace. It is a mere form of speech expressive of good-will to each other. Jesus, when now departing from them, gives them His peace, peace in the highest sense,—peace with God, and in such a degree that they have no cause for trouble or fear. For a time He will depart from them, but only for a time. At this they ought rather to rejoice, because by His departure He will fulfil the Mystery of the Incarnation. He will take captivity captive, and will receive for them gifts, the reward of His Passion.

28. Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved Me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for My Father is greater than I.

S.V.A. rejoice because I go: V.A. for the Father.
 Vulg. gaudeatis utique, quia vado ad Patrem: quia Pater major me est.

The clause "for My Father is greater than I," was one of the passages on which the Arians chiefly relied to prove that the Son was inferior in Essence or Nature to the Father. But it was shown that there were at least two ways in which these words could be explained, consistently with the Catholic doctrine of the Trinity in Unity, and Unity in Trinity.¹

1. That Jesus most probably uttered these words with reference to His Manhood. This appears more than probable when we consider the reason given why they should rejoice; namely, because He was going to the Father. But He was going to the Father not in that in which He was Equal to Him, that is, in His Divine nature, or as He was God, but in that in which He was inferior to the Father, that is, in His Manhood, or as Man. 2. It was also held that, without implying any inferiority in power, majesty, eternity, &c., Jesus might still be said to be inferior to the Father with respect to their relation as Father and Son. But some² commentators have thought that, in their desire to concede to their opponents all that could safely be yielded, the Catholic Fathers in this second explanation conceded more than they were warranted in doing. The Creed of S. Athanasius well expresses the doctrine of the Church on this subject, "Equal to the Father, as touching His Godhead, and inferior to the Father, as touching His Manhood." In this His inferior part, in His Manhood, He was now about to ascend to the Father, and to receive the reward of His Passion. At this they ought to rejoice. To rejoice at His exaltation, rather than to mourn at His departure, was a proof of their love to Him.

29. And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

Jesus foretold to His disciples His departure from them, His Death, His Resurrection, and return to them, not that they might condole with Him, or that they might take measures for their own conduct, but that they might believe in Him more fully, that they might believe that He foreknew all that came upon Him, and that He laid down His life of His own will and for the salvation of man, and that they might believe that He is the Messiah, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world.

30. Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in Me.

S.V.A. of the world.
 Vulg. venit enim princeps mundi hujus.

31. But that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me com-

¹ S. Athanasius, Oratio i. contra Arianos, 58; vol. ii. p. 133.
 _____, de Incarnatione et contra Arianos, 4; vol. ii. p. 989.
 _____, de Synodis Arimini, &c., sect. 28; vol. ii. p. 741.
 S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lxxix. 53; vol. ii. p. 284.
 S. Basil Magnus, adv. Eunomium, iv. sect. 3; vol. i. p. 693.
 _____, Epist. viii. (alias 141), ad Cæsarienses, 5, 7; vol. iv. pp. 253, 260.
 S. Gregory Nazian., Oratio Theologica, iii. 18; vol. ii. p. 97.
 _____, _____, iv. 7; vol. ii. p. 113.
 S. Gregory Nyssen, adv. Arium et Sabellium, ii.; vol. ii. p. 1296.
 S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xiv. 28; Homil. lxxv.

S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. xiv. 28; vol. vii. p. 309.
 _____, Thesaurus, Assertio xi.; vol. viii. p. 141.
 S. John Damascenus, de Fide, iv. 19.
 S. Hilary Pict. de Trinitate, ix. 53; vol. ii. p. 323.
 S. Ambrose, de Fide, ii. 8; vol. iii. p. 572.
 _____, _____, v. 18; vol. iii. p. 695.
 S. Augustine, de Trinitate, i. 7; vol. viii. p. 828.
 _____, _____, i. 11; vol. viii. p. 836.
 _____, contra Maximium, ii. 24, 25; vol. viii. p. 802.
 _____, de Fide et Symbolo, 9; vol. vi. p. 190.
 V. Bède, in Joan. xiv. 28; vol. iii. p. 833.
² Maldonatus, in Joan. xiv. 28; vol. ii. p. 839.

mandment, even so I do. Arise, let us go hence.^a

"The prince of the world" comes through his agents, by their voluntarily yielding to his temptations. But Satan will find nothing in Jesus. He will have no right over Him; he will find no sin in Him, and therefore not the right which sin gives him over other men. Though He die, it will be because He lays down His life voluntarily that He may save mankind, and not because He is vanquished by Satan. His Death will be another proof to the world of His love to the Father, of His Oneness with the Father, and of His obedience to His commands.

Jesus was free from sin, and obeyed the commands of the Father by reason of the Hypostatic Union of the Word with the flesh. The Divine power directed all the passions and affections of the flesh, so that they were without sin. The weakness incident to the flesh, such as hunger and thirst and fatigue, He underwent. But the weakness of the flesh, as the effect of man's fall, in the irregularity of passion, all these were rectified and sustained by the union of the Word with the flesh.

Though Man, He fulfilled all the commands of the Father, and not by constraint. Necessity or constraint are terms which cannot be applied to the Son of God. The beatific vision, the sight of God which the Saints will enjoy, will assimilate them to Him in their love and in all their affections. They will desire but Him. In a similar way we may describe the obedience which Jesus rendered to the commands of the Father, not as the effect of constraint, but of love, and of such love as mere man knows not.

Some¹ have thought that when Jesus said, "Arise, let us go hence," He and the eleven rose from the table, and set out towards Gethsemane, and that on the way thither He uttered these His farewell words to them, from chapters xv. to xviii.; others,² that Jesus and His disciples arose from the table; that while they still lingered, before they left the upper room in which they had spent the evening, He delivered to them the following discourse, His last words to them before His Death.

¹ McClellan, New Testament, p. 601.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxiv. p. 500.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xiv. 31; vol. ii. p. 840.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xiv. 31; vol. viii. p. 1094.

chapters xv. and xvi., with the prayer of chapter xvii., were still spoken in the upper room, though after the first motion for departure."—SANDAY, 'Historical Character of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 221.

^a Arise, let us go hence.—"This discourse is apparently intended to be conceived of as only momentarily broken at verse 31. Our Lord and His disciples arise from the table as if to go. But we see from xviii. 1 (ἐξῆλθε) that they had not yet left the house, or at least the city. We must therefore suppose that the contents of

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER XV.

The Pattern Man.—"There are two ways in which Christ might be set forth as that Pattern Man in whom our nature attained its perfection. Either He might be the happy example in whom its native qualities found their perfect expression, in whom all that belongs to mere humanity obtained the utmost development of which it was susceptible, or the perfection of His Manhood might be due to the influence of that Divine nature with which it was personally united. The first of these is the system of Rationalism; the second, the system of the Church. And it is the main purpose of the present inquiry [the doctrine of the Incarnation] to show that the latter system is not only sanctioned by the authority of revelation and adapted to the wants of man, but that whatever truth or reason the system of Rationalism may promise could be attained only through that perfect exhibition of man's nature, of which its supernatural adoption by its Divine participator was the cause. The system of Rationalism, indeed, can go along with that of the Church so far as to admit Christ in name, and to recognize in words the necessity of Divine help: for all but positive Atheists allow the advantage of help from that creative Spirit to which they refer the world's parentage. And there is little difficulty in supposing that Christ may be the channel through whom Divine gifts are bestowed, seeing that they were once exhibited with peculiar lustre in Himself. But the characteristic distinction between the one system and the other is that Rationalism makes the individual the starting-point for all improvement, whereas the Church's starting-point is Christ. The first is for dealing with nature as it finds it; it takes man, such as he is, with the powers and faculties which he possesses, and supposes that their cultivation may enable him to shake off the evils and infirmities which all deplore. The man himself, therefore, is the commencement of all renewal; he may use God's grace—indeed, he may invoke the name of Christ—but in himself is the ultimate principle of renovation. For as an individual is he addressed; his conversion must precede that relation to Christ which, according to Christians, is the principle of the new nature. The Church system, on the other hand, attributes the first renewal of man's race to the entrance into its ranks of a higher and supernatural being. His quickening influence is the principle of regeneration to all His fellows. In Him, and not in them, is the original principle of movement. The restoration of the ancient pattern of man is not attained through the natural perfection of individuals, but because in Christ, our Lord, was the personal presence of that Divine Word which was above nature. He came down into our lower race to ennoble it. The change, therefore, in every individual must result from that diffusive influence of the second Adam by which the exertion of individual intellect and will must be preceded. Thus does it continue to extend itself through that sacramental system which binds all men to the head of the race; and the restoration of every man is due to that great gift which was bestowed upon our common nature through the Incarnation."—R. I. WILBERFORCE on the Incarnation, page 12.

CHAPTER XV.

[1. The consolation and mutual love between Christ and His members, under the parable of the Vine. 18. A comfort in the hatred and persecution of the world. 26. The office of the Holy Ghost, and of the Apostles.]

[Vulg. Christus vitis, Pater agricola, discipuli vero palmites: preceptum Christi de mutua dilectione frequenter iteratum: Apostoli amici Christi, quibus ecclesia sua committeretur, et elegit eos ut fructum perpetuum afferrent: quos roborat adversus mundi odium ac persecutiones, dicens: Inebriatos excusationem non habere de peccato suo.]

THE eleven Apostles were now about to be put to their severest trial. Their faith in Jesus as well as their love for Him were both shortly to be brought to the proof. To prepare them for this, He delivers the parable of the Vine and its branches. He shows them the close union between Himself and them, and the bearing which their future conduct would have on this. Their union with Him was the great blessing of their lives, and their future happiness or misery would depend on the way in which they responded to this. The trials to which they were on the point of being exposed had not happened to them by chance; they were sent by the Father, and for the very purpose of causing them to bear fruit corresponding with their condition as members of Him, the God Incarnate.

I. I am the true Vine,^a and My Father is the Husbandman.

The Arians were accustomed to argue that as a vine and the husbandman were of different natures, by calling Himself the true Vine and His Father the Husbandman Jesus meant to imply that He was not of the same nature as the Father. To this the Catholic Fathers were wont to answer that Jesus, the Word made flesh, is called the true Vine, and that it was with special reference to His Manhood that He called Himself the true Vine and His Father the Husbandman, and His disciples the branches.¹

The disciples did not become branches in Him, the Vine, by their natural birth, or after the usual course of nature. Of no other man, and of no other Person in the Holy Trinity but of Jesus, could it be said that He was the Vine and they the branches. They became branches in Him by being grafted into Him. This relation was the effect of a mysterious supernatural working. It was not a relation existing merely in the imagination, a mental process only. It was a union more real in the nature of things than that of a vine and its branches. This is the relation by birth to which the Evangelist had before alluded in these words: "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (i. 12).

Many reasons have been given why Jesus selected the vine to illustrate the union between Himself and His disciples. The most probable² appears to be that He has a reference to the Eucharist, which He had instituted only a short time before, perhaps within the last hour, with the fruit of the vine. (Luke xxii. 18.) He had then instituted and left them a new Memorial of Himself, a new means of renewing their union with Him as well as their belief in that union. It may be that there is something in the very nature and organism of the vine that renders it peculiarly suitable to indicate the closeness of His union with His disciples.

Jesus is the true Vine. Compared with Him all the other vines and their branches are but reflections, shadowy imitations. They are called by the same name, because they have somewhat of the same effect on the body as the true Vine has on the soul, to strengthen and to refresh.

The God-Man is the true Vine, because He alone can give the Holy Spirit to His branches. He is the true Life, because He alone can enlighten the soul of man. He is the true Light, because He alone can quicken the soul dead in sin. He is the true Bread, because He alone can give His own Body to nourish the soul.

Beyond the statement that He is the true Vine, He says nothing respecting the Vine, but goes on to describe the condition of the branches and the nature of their culture by the Father.

¹ S. Athanasius, de Sententia Dionysii, 10; vol. i. p. 493.

S. Basil, adv. Eunomium, iv. sect. 3; vol. i. p. 700.

S. Ambrose, de Fide, v. 12; vol. iii. p. 647.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xv. 1, tract. lxxx.; vol. iii. p. 1839.

² Januarius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxv. p. 592.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xv. 1; vol. viii. p. 1996.

^a I am the true Vine.—See note on John vi. 32.

2. Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit He taketh away: and every branch^a that beareth fruit, He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.^b

Jesus says this primarily with reference to the Apostles, and then to all the faithful. Judas had been chosen as one of the Twelve. He had gone in and out with Jesus for three whole years. He had witnessed His miracles, and had himself shared in His miraculous powers. He had even received the last tender mark of His love; Jesus had washed his feet that very night. But with all this Judas did not bear fruit, and the Father had removed him from the company of the Apostles.

The rest of the Apostles had borne some fruit. They had one and all expressed great faith in Jesus, and great love and zeal for Him. But secretly, unknown perhaps to themselves, their love for Him was mixed up with a stronger love of life and fear of the Jews. After the most earnest protestations of devotion to Him, even to death, in a few hours they would all either deny or desert Him. After the day of Pentecost we see them delivered from this fear. The Father had purged them that they might bring forth more fruit. He had filled them with the Holy Ghost, and the boldness of Peter and John even excited the attention of the High Priest and his friends. (Acts iv. 13.)

3. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.

Vulg. Jam vos mundi estis propter sermonem, quem locutus sum vobis.

The Father has many ways of cleansing His disciples, such as by His word, or by personal affliction in one of its manifold forms. His Apostles, He says, are clean already, by reason of the word which He had spoken unto them. This may refer to the instruction which He had given them during His ministry, and, as some¹ think, it may have special reference to the words which He spake to them at the table after supper. By this word He had freed them from much ignorance and vain confidence. Peter had been taught that He could not follow Him now. Thomas had learnt whither He was going, and the way. Judas (not Iscariot) now knew that he who had seen Jesus had seen the Father. They had all been taught to depend less on His sensible presence with them, and to rely less on the strength of their own resolution in times of temptation. These were some of the human frailties from which He had cleansed them by His conversation with them this night.

4. Abide in Me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in Me.

5. I am the Vine, ye are the branches.^c He

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xv. 3; vol. viii. p. 1098.

^a Branch.—"These words (κλήμα, κλάδος) are related to one another by descent from a common stock, derived as they both are from κλάω, frango; the fragile character of the branch, the ease with which it may be broken off to be planted or grafted anew, constituting the basis and leading conception in both words. At the same time there is a distinction between them, this namely, that κλήμα (= palmus) is especially the branch of the vine (ἀμπέλου κλήμα, Plato, Rep. i. 353, a); while κλάδος (= ramus) is the branch, not the larger arm, of any tree; and this distinction is always observed in the New Testament, where κλήμα only occurs in the allegory of the true Vine (Joan. xv. 2, 4, 5, 6; cf. Numb. xii. 24; Ps. lxxix. 12; Ezek. xvii. 6): while we have mention of the κλάδος of the mustard-tree (Matt. xiii. 32), of the fig-tree (Matt. xxiv. 32), of the olive-tree (Rom. xi. 16), and of trees in general (Matt. xxi. 8)."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCHE in 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 174.

^b Fruitfulness is the consummation of all that God has done in creation, in human history, and in the work of redemption. All sacraments and ordinances, all providences and dispensations of goodness or of severity, are working together, like the seasons of the year and the influences of nature in ripening the natural harvest, in promoting the one great end of general and individual fruitfulness."—MACMILLAN on 'The True Vine,' p. 131.

^c I am the Vine, ye are the branches.—"That which quickeneth us is the Spirit of the Second Adam, and His flesh that wherewith He quickeneth. That which in Him made our nature incorrupt was the union of His Deity with our nature. And in that respect the sentence of death and condemnation which only taketh hold upon sinful flesh could no way possibly extend unto Him. This caused His voluntary death for others to prevail with God, and to have the force of an expiatory sacrifice. The blood of Christ, as the Apostle witnesseth, doth therefore take away sin, because through the Eternal Spirit He offered Himself unto God without spot' (Heb. ix. 14). That which sanctifieth our nature in Christ, that which made it a sacrifice available to take away sin, is the same which quickeneth it, raised it out of the grave after death, and exalted it unto glory. Seeing therefore that Christ is in us as a quickening Spirit, the first degree of communion with Christ must needs consist in the participation of His Spirit, which Cyprian in that respect well termeth germanissimam societatem, the highest and truest society that can be between man and Him which is both God and Man in one.

"These things S. Cyril (in Joan. lib. x. cap. xv. 1; vol. vii. p. 344, Migne) duly considering, reproveth their speeches, which taught that only the Deity of Christ is the Vine whereupon we by faith do depend as branches, and that neither His flesh nor our bodies are comprised in this resemblance; for doth any man doubt but that even from the flesh of Christ our very bodies do receive that life which shall make them glorious at the latter day, and for which they are already accounted parts of His blessed body? Our corruptible bodies could never live the life they shall live were it not that here they are joined with His body, which is incorruptible, and that His is in ours as a cause of immortality, a cause by removing through the death and merit of His own flesh that which hindered the life of ours. Christ is therefore, both as God and as man, that true Vine whereof we both spiritually and corporally are branches. The mixture of His bodily substance with ours is a thing which the ancient Fathers disclaim. Yet the mixture of His flesh with ours they speak of to signify what our very bodies, through mystical conjunction (Irenæus, contr. Hæreses, iv. 18 (alias 34), 5, p. 1027, Migne), receive from that vital efficacy which we know to be in His; and from bodily mixtures they (S. Cyril, in Joan. lib. x. chap. xv. 1; vol. vii. p. 341) borrow divers similitudes rather to declare the truth than the manner of coherence between His sacred and the sanctified bodies of saints."—HOOKER, 'Eccles. Polit.' v. 56, 8; vol. ii. p. 251.

that abide in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without Me ye can do nothing.

The words¹ "without Me ye can do nothing" were used to confute the Pelagians, a sect of Christians who maintained against the Church that man was able of his own free will, and without any supernatural aid from the Redeemer of mankind, to perform works of righteousness and of merit in the sight of God. Their tenets were condemned in the Provincial Council of Milevi, A.D. 416.

6. If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned.^a

S. and men gather it, and cast it.
Vulg. et colligent eum, et in ignem mittent, et ardet.

7. If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.

ye shall ask: V. A. ask.
Vulg. quodcumque volueritis petitis, et fiet vobis.

8. Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be My disciples.

9. As the Father hath loved Me, so have I loved you: continue ye in My love.

10. If ye keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love; even as I have kept My Father's commandments, and abide in His love.

V. the Father's commandments.
Vulg. sicut et ego Patria mei præcepta servavi.

11. These things have I spoken unto you, that My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.

V. A. might be in you.
Vulg. ut gaudium meum in vobis sit.

He exhorts them to abide in Him, and on this He promises to abide in them. He urges them to this by seven kindred reasons or considerations.

1. (ver. 4) Because without Him they can bear no fruit.

2. (ver. 5) If they abide in Him, they will bear much fruit.

3. (ver. 6) If a man abide not in Him, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered.

4. (ver. 7) If they abide in Him, whatever they ask of God they shall obtain.

5. (ver. 8) Herein is the Father glorified, that they bear much fruit.

6. (ver. 9) Because He has loved them, and it is right that they should love Him in return, and continue in His love.

7. (ver. 11) That their joy may be full.

The first and second considerations are drawn from their power to bear fruit, the third from their punishment, the fourth from their reward. The fifth consideration refers to the way in which they will be able to magnify the glory of God by their success in converting the heathen to His worship. The sixth shows that, if they abide in Him, the Vine, the love which will exist between Himself and them will resemble the love which there is between Him and the Father; and that the effect will be similar, namely, that they will keep His commands with an earnestness which will resemble the Unity of will between Himself and the Father. The seventh refers to the joy which their perfect union with Him will cause.

As the branches to the vine,² they must be united to Him, the God-Man, sacramentally, by the sacraments of Baptism and of the Eucharist, and also spiritually or mentally—that is, by the affections of the soul. Where this is the case they will bear much fruit. Where the former exists without the latter, the branches, though in the Vine, become unfruitful, withered and dead here, and in the world to come will be cast out and burnt.

12. This is My commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you.

13. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

14. Ye are My friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.

S. For ye are.
Vulg. Vos amici mei estis.

15. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of My Father I have made known unto you.

16. Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and —, contra duas Epistolas Pelag. ii. 8; vol. x. p. 583.

¹ S. Augustine, de Gratia Christi, 29: vol. x. p. 375.

² S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xv. 1; vol. vii. p. 341.

^a If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth, &c.—"It is only in appearance that the arist is used for the future, ἐὰν μὴ τις μείρῃ ἐν ἐσθί, ἐπαύριον ἔξω αὐτὸ καίμα: in such a case, should such a thing happen, it is cast away, not it will be cast away (its not abiding has the instantaneous consequence: whoever has fallen away from Christ resembles a branch broken off and thrown away). With ἐπαύριον the presents συνδύουσι, &c., are connected."—WINEY, 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 292.

bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in My name, He may give it you.

A. bring forth much fruit: S. omits that before whatsoever: S. He shall give.
vulg. ut eatis, et fructum afferatis; . . . ut quodcumque petieritis Patrem in nomine meo, det vobis.

17. These things I command you, that ye love one another.

The distinguishing mark of the new dispensation was to be the love which they had for each other. Here he calls it "My commandment;" before (xiii. 34), He called it "a new commandment." Their love for each other was to be the characteristic of the brethren. His love to them was to be the standard and model for their love to each other. Those¹ whom He calls "My friends" are not those who love Him, but those whom He loves, and who may not be friends but enemies to Him. Hence there is no opposition between this passage and that (Romans v. 6, &c.) in which S. Paul magnifies the love of Christ, because He laid down His life for His enemies.

He is still specially addressing the Apostles, and He enumerates several proofs of the love which He had shown to them in particular.

He had called them and treated them as His friends, not as servants but friends. The proof of this was the instruction which He had given them. To show them that it was not mere human knowledge, man's wisdom, the fruit of man's natural faculties, He calls it "all things that I have heard of My Father." This was what He had already communicated to them, so far as they were in a condition to receive it, and He would impart it still more to them after the Descent of the Holy Spirit.

Some commentators, chiefly Latin, have supposed that in the words "ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you," &c., Jesus referred to their election to the privileges of the Gospel. But the most general and the probable opinion is, that He referred to His election of them to be His Apostles,² and to carry His message of glad tidings throughout the world.

They had not chosen Him to be their Master. He had chosen them to be His Apostles. He had appointed them to go and convert the world. Whatever they should ask God in furtherance of the salvation of the world, in the name of the Saviour, He would grant it. This promise relates not to their own personal private interest or convenience, but in the fulfilment of their mission as Apostles, for the bearing of the fruit which may remain.³

The Greek verb δέω, here rendered "He may give it," may be either in the first or the third person singular: and the words "that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in My name, He will give it you," may be translated "that whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name, I will give it you." And several⁴ of the Greek commentators, with others, have so translated these words. So far were they from having any doubts about the correctness of this, that they have also founded an argument on them to prove against the Arians that the Son is Equal to the Father, as granting what they pray to the Father for. They regard this as parallel to the other expression, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do" (xiv. 13).

18. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated Me before it hated you.

19. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

20. Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept My saying, they will keep yours also.

21. But all these things will they do unto you for My name's sake, because they know not Him that sent Me.

He forewarns the Apostles of the persecutions they would meet with in their attempt to convert the world. In this, as in all other things, He was their Leader and Example. What had happened to Him must also happen to them, so far as they walked in His steps. The world are the men who are given up to the enjoyment of this world without regard to the future, whether Jews or Gentiles. The world's hatred was a proof of their righteousness, the world's love a proof of their sin. He reminds them of His former saying, to which at the time of its utterance He had called their most earnest attention, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord." (xiii. 16.) The servant cannot refuse to do and suffer what his Lord does and suffers. He is the Lord, they are the servants. The persecution and death which He suffers they must not expect to escape. As they have persecuted Him, so they would His Apostles; as they have believed Him, so they would His Apostles. The reason assigned for this is their

¹ Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xv. 16; vol. viii. p. 1103.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xv. 16; Homil. lxxvii.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xv. 16; vol. v. p. 392.

Theophylact, in Joan. xv. 16; vol. i. p. 714.

Euthymius, in Joan. xv. 16; vol. iv. p. 523.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xv. 16; vol. ii. p. 851.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xv. 16; vol. viii. p. 1105.

³ S. Augustine, in Joan. xv. 16, tract. lxxvi.; vol. iii. p. 1852.

⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xv. 16; Homil. lxxvii.

Theophylact, in Joan. xv. 16; vol. i. p. 714.

Euthymius, in Joan. xv. 16; vol. iv. p. 525.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xv. 16; vol. ii. p. 852.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xv. 16; vol. viii. p. 1105.

disbelief in Him as the Messiah, their disbelief in the proofs which He gave that He was sent by the Father, that He was God.

22. If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloke for their sin.

Margin, excuse.

S. omits but.

Vulg. nunc autem excusationem non habent de peccato suo.

23. He that hateth Me hateth My Father also.

24. If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin: but now have they both seen and hated both Me and My Father.

25. But this cometh to pass, that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their Law, They hated Me without a cause.

In these words He makes two distinct propositions. (1) In hating Him they hated the Father. (2) They were inexcusable in refusing to believe in Him on the proofs that He gave them. So many and so convincing were the proofs that He gave them of His mission from the Father, that in disbelieving them they were guilty of the sin of hatred and unbelief.

The unbelief of the Jews had a moral origin, not an intellectual one. The seat of it was in the heart, not in the head. It was not that they were unable to understand how Jesus could be the Son of God. They refused even to investigate His claims, to hear His words and examine His works. Before the coming of Jesus they were anxiously looking forward for the Messiah. Jesus wrought the same miracles, down to the very letter, which the prophet Isaiah had foretold the Messiah would work. (Isa. xxxv. 5, 6.) The reason why they refused to acknowledge Him, and why they hated Him, was that He broke their traditions; that He set at naught their oral law; that He reproveth their vices, their hypocrisies; that He preached to them a new life and repentance of their past sins; that He laid claim to no earthly kingdom, and declined to deliver them from the yoke of the Romans.

The Psalmist had foreseen and had foretold their hatred of Him, as well as the nature of it, thus: "Let not them that are Mine enemies wrongfully rejoice over Me, neither let them wink with the eye that hate Me without a cause" (Ps. xxxv. 19); and "They that hate Me without a cause are more than the hairs of Mine head: they that would destroy Me, being Mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty" (Ps. lxi. 4). Jesus again applies the words of the Old Testament to Himself as the natural object of them. Again, by His silence, He bears testimony to the general accuracy of their "Law."

26. But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, He shall testify of Me.^a

S. omits But.

Vulg. Cum autem venerit Paraclitus.

* The Procession of the Holy Spirit.—"In this verse the Paraclete is twice stated to be 'from the Father,' i.e. as the context seems to show, to derive His essence from the Father; and this derivation is further expressed by the use of a verb which has in consequence received a recognized place in the terminology of the Universal Church. Through the Latin Version of the Gospels, which before the end of the second century was already current in North Africa, the Western Church learnt to speak of the Processio; whilst the original word has long been used by the teachers of the Greek Church to represent the property which distinguishes the Holy Spirit from the Father and the Son.

"In this dogmatic sense the verb ἐκπορεύομαι, procedo, is used by S. John alone among the writers of the New Testament, and by him only in this one verse of his Gospel, if we except a mystical passage in the Apocalypse of which the meaning is not equally clear.

"But the word was in some degree prepared for its high purpose by the uses to which it had been applied in the Septuagint. The Alexandrian translators of the Old Testament employed it to express the issue of rivers from their sources, of light from fire, of the wind from its quarter, of the offspring from the parent, of speech from the lips, and, in particular, of Divine utterances from the mouth of God. It had served to describe the self-manifestations of Deity, as at the law-giving and in judgment. A word with this history was not inappropriately chosen to signify the eternal 'goings forth' of a Divine Person Whose special symbols are water, wind, and light, Who 'spoke by the Prophets,' and Whose office it is to glorify the Son, and in the Son the Father also.

"The adoption on the part of the Church of this expressive and divinely-chosen term was, however, by no means immediate, or so early and general as we might have expected. No Creed or rule of faith recalls the words of S. John before the middle of the fourth century. The employment of the verb ἐκπορεύομαι, procedo, in reference to the Person of the Holy Spirit, is in ante-Nicene writers, so far as I have been able to observe, exceedingly rare. Of the Generation or Procession of the Son we read much; of the Procession of the Holy Ghost, in express terms, almost nothing. In the first two centuries heresy entered more largely than Catholic Christianity into the question of the Spirit's relation to the Father and the Son. The earliest Church, for the most part, was satisfied with an implicit faith, and an informal and sometimes lax manner of expressing her belief. At length, convinced of the necessity of defending herself against heretical perversions of the truth, and at the same time schooled to greater exactness of thought and language by the growth of culture within her own pale, she sought for a form of speech which should precisely set forth her teaching upon this subject, and found it in the very words of our Lord as they stand recorded in the Fourth Gospel."—H. B. SWETE, 'History of the Doctrine of the Procession of the Holy Spirit,' p. 6.

"When the growth of heresy made it necessary to introduce more rigorous precision of expression, it was observed that the temporal mission of God the Word and of God the Holy Ghost arose out of the principles of their eternal existence; that their nature was fixed by their relations to the Eternal Father and to one another (the only relations which were coeval with themselves); and therefore that the true test by which their operations were to be discriminated must be found in themselves. Hence arose the statement that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Son as well as from the Father; a statement which, though not denied by earlier writers,

27. And ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with Me from the beginning.

The Procession of the Holy Spirit has been defined to be twofold. (1) Eternal, or from eternity. (2) Temporal, or in time. 1. The Eternal Procession of the Holy Spirit has reference to His origin, so to speak, before the creation of the world, that is, to His relation to the Father, or to the Father and the Son. 2. The Temporal Procession of the Holy yet had never received that full and elaborate treatment which led to its insertion as an Article of the Creed till it came into discussion in S. Augustine's great work on the Trinity. It fully accords, indeed, with the language of all earlier writers both in the East and West, for all speak of God the Holy Ghost as sent by the Son, and recognize His actings in the world of time as growing out of His eternal relations; but in this, as in every other particular, there was a lack of that dogmatic precision which was found to be necessary when 'by reason of use' the Church had her senses exercised to discern good and evil. From S. Augustine's time this truth was never disputed by any Western writers, and it was admitted by S. Cyril, the most distinguished divine who succeeded him in the East. It seems to have been put upon its right basis by the Council of Toledo, when it was affirmed to be essential to the full discrimination of those blessed Persons, the law of whose existence must be found within themselves. 'The Holy Ghost is neither the Father nor the Son, because He proceeds from the Father and the Son.' And thus does it confirm that principle which had been laid down at an earlier period, that the names and offices of the Persons in the Blessed Trinity are dependent upon their relations towards one another.—R. I. WILBEFORCE on the Holy Eucharist, p. 317.

"In Spanish ecclesiastical history, the most important event of the sixth century is the Council held at Toledo, in the year 589. On this occasion the Visigoths of Spain, led by their king Recared, renounced Arianism and threw themselves at the feet of the Catholic Church. Whatever were the motives which influenced Recared, he appears to have carried his whole people with him; a nation was born in a day; and the homily which S. Leander delivered at the close of the Council bears witness to the joyful surprise with which the Church welcomed her returning sons. The Archbishop's address contains no doctrinal statement; it would in fact have been superfluous, after the explicit enunciation of Catholic dogma which had been offered by the king and accepted by the Council. In his opening speech Recared had acknowledged the dogmatical decisions of the first four Œcumenical Councils, and had recited the Creeds of Nicæa and Constantinople, and part of the Definition of Chalcedon. His zeal prompted him to add a personal profession of faith, in which the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son occupies a prominent place: 'Spiritus æque Sanctus (he says) confiteendus a nobis et prædicandus est a Patre et a Filio procedere et cum Patre et Filio unus esse substantia.' That the words a Patre et a Filio were not casually introduced appears from their repetition in the anathemas which the Council proceeded to level against the opponents of the Catholic Faith; third among these comes the following: 'Quicumque Spiritum Sanctum non credit aut non creditur a Patre et Filio procedere eumque non dixerit æternum esse Patre et Filio et coæqualem, anathema sit.' So positive an assertion of the Filioque as de fide would be difficult to explain, did we not possess a key to the mystery in the version of the Constantinopolitan Creed which was recited by Recared and the Bishops. It contained the words 'Et in Spiritum Sanctum Dominum et Vivificantem, ex Patre et Filio procedentem.' It is incredible that the addition was made either by the newly-converted king, or by the bishops assembled at Toledo. Neither king nor bishops displayed the slightest consciousness that their Creed varied from the Greek original, or that Spirit, also called the mission of the Holy Spirit, may be visible or invisible. His procession is visible, when, as at the day of Pentecost, His descent upon the Apostles was accompanied by certain sure signs. (Acts ii. 1, &c.) It is invisible when, as S. Paul says, 'God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father.' (Gal. iv. 6.) A Person of the Trinity is said to be sent, when He begins to be in any place in a form in which He was not before. In this sense the Son is sent into the world, their doctrine exceeded the teaching of the Catholic Church. On the contrary, Recared subscribes the Creeds and his own profession in the form, 'Ego Recareadus rex fidem hanc sanctam et veram confessionem quam unam per totum orbem Catholicam confitetur ecclesia . . . subscripsi.' The Bishops add, 'Hæc est vera fides quam omnis ecclesia Dei per totum mundum tenet.' In their second Canon they describe the Latin Creed then in use among them as being 'secundum formam Orientalium ecclesiarum Concilii Constantinopolitani.' In the face of these declarations it is scarcely just, without direct evidence, to charge the Toletan fathers with a wilful corruption of the Catholic symbol. It is more probable that the new words a Filio, as well as the restored Deum ex Deo—another peculiarity of this Spanish version—had crept in during the long years of the Arian persecution. Originating very possibly in a gloss upon the ex Patre, and put forth under circumstances which might seem to require or to justify a local expansion of the Creed, the interpolation had made its way from Church to Church, and before the conversion of the Visigoths had established so firm a footing in the Latin Creed that no suspicion of its genuineness was entertained by Recared, or by his Catholic instructors. Both the king and his bishops believed them to be a true part of the original Faith, just as they believed the Creed itself to have been drawn up by the fathers of Constantinople. In proclaiming the Filioque as de fide, in anathematizing its rejection, in reciting it as part and parcel of the 'Eastern' symbol, Recared and the Council may be assumed to represent the honest conviction of the Spanish Church. It is clear that nothing was further from the thoughts of the newly-converted people than a departure, whether by addition or the contrary, from the teaching of the Catholic Church, or of its Eastern branch.—H. B. SWETE, 'History of the Doctrine of the Procession of the Holy Spirit,' p. 168.

"The West having at this time no other way of confessing the doctrine of the Holy Ghost than this 'Proceeding from the Father and the Son,' whether from the Athanasian Creed, or from the former Council against the Priscillianists, it seems to me morally certain that whoever inserted it supposed that the Filioque had dropped by mistake out of the Latin translation of the Nicene Creed, to which alone they probably had access in Spain at that time. Anyone in the least familiar with the collation of MSS. will be aware of this cause of change in the text of a father, that a scribe, bona fide, inserts what he thinks has been accidentally omitted. Thus when the whole context relates to some contrast between the Father and the Son, a scribe will insert 'a Spiritu Sancto,' to complete the confession of the Trinity; the insertion has sometimes found its way into the printed text. In like way, I doubt not the Filioque came into the translation which was before the Bishops of the Third Council of Toledo, under a misapprehension that it must be there. At the Council of Florence the Latins produced 'a very old MS.' of the Second Council of Nice, which contained in the Creed the words 'and from the Son.' If the words could have crept into a MS. which altogether misled Cardinal Julian, much more might the Bishops of the Council of Toledo, just breathing again from the Arian oppression, be bona fide mistaken. But a 'mistake' is neither an 'irregularity,' nor, if unavoidable, 'a fault.' The Bishops of the Third Council of Toledo acted, in intention, dutifully to the Council of Constantinople: the mistake was not when He was born of a Virgin, when He the Word is made flesh. So the Holy Spirit is sent into the world when by His grace or influence He begins to operate in men in a way in which He did not before.

Some¹ have supposed that in the words "Which proceedeth from the Father," ὁ παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς ἐκπορεύεται, S. John is referring to the Temporal Procession of the Holy Spirit, or to His Mission. But the most general opinion is discovered until two hundred years after."—DR. PUSEY'S Letter on the clause "And the Son," p. 63. 1876.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxv. p. 512.
² S. Hilary Pict., de Trinitate, viii. 19; vol. ii. p. 250.
 S. Augustine, de Trinitate, iv. 20; vol. viii. p. 908.

"The Holy Ghost proceeding from the Father and the Son: which last words (and the Son), as they were inserted into the Constantinopolitan Creed by our ancestors in these Western Churches (which was the occasion of the vast schism betwixt them and the Eastern), so are they here inserted into the articles of our faith, both to show the constancy of our Church in so great a truth, and to keep her children still constant and faithful to it. And though this, the Spirit's procession from the Son, be not expressly delivered in the Scriptures as the procession from the Father is (John xv. 26), yet is the substance and purport of it virtually contained in the Scriptures, and may clearly be deduced from them; for as He is called 'the Spirit of the Father' (Matt. x. 20), so is He called 'the Spirit of the Son' (Gal. iv. 6), and 'the Spirit of Christ' (Rom. viii. 9; 1 Pet. i. 11), and 'the Spirit of Jesus Christ' (Phil. i. 19), &c. &c. . . .

"So that as whatsoever else the Father hath originally in Himself, the Son hath also by communication from the Father, so hath the Son likewise this, the Spirit's proceeding from Him, by communication from the Father, as the Father hath the Spirit proceeding from Him originally in Himself. Neither is our Church singular in this assertion, that the Spirit proceeds from the Son as well as from the Father; for the ancient Fathers of the Church of Christ did generally teach the same; the Latin Fathers expressly avouching it, that the Spirit did in plain terms proceed both from the Father and the Son. And the Greek Fathers, though they do not expressly deliver that He proceeds from the Son (because the Scriptures do not expressly assert it), yet they say that He receiveth from the Son, that He is the Spirit of the Son, the Word of the Son, yea, God of the Son; plainly implying that what He hath is communicated from the Son as well as from the Father, which is the same thing that the others understood by His proceeding from the Father and Son." In proof of this, of the Latin Fathers he quotes, amongst others, S. Augustine, de Trinit. xv. 26 and 27; vol. viii. p. 1095, Migne; S. Leo Magnus, Epist. xv.; vol. i. p. 680, Migne; S. Hilary Pict. de Trinit. ii. 29; vol. ii. p. 69, Migne; V. Bede, Hist. Eccles. iv. 17; vol. vi. p. 199, Migne. Of the Greek he quotes, amongst others, S. Epiphanius, Ancoratus, vi. lxxvii.; vol. iii. pp. 25, 137; S. Athanasius, Epist. i. ad Serap.; vol. ii. p. 560, Migne; S. Basil, contr. Eunom. v.; vol. i. p. 732, Migne.—BISHOP BEVERIDGE on the Thirty-nine Articles, Art. v. p. 174, ed. 1845.

"The first General Council assembled at Nice, A.D. 325, having composed an excellent creed or rule of faith, and having said no more in it concerning the Holy Ghost than καὶ εἰς τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, and (we believe) in the Holy Ghost, there being another General Council about fifty years after held at Constantinople, they thought good, for the better suppressing of the heresy of Macedonius, who denied the Divinity of the Holy Ghost, to confirm the same creed, with this addition, amongst others, to it, καὶ εἰς τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, τὸ κύριον, τὸ ζωοποιόν, τὸ ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς ἐκπορεύμενον; which creed, with this addition, the next General Council at Ephesus, A.D. 431, not only continued, but also denounced an anathema against all such as should make any more additions to it. Yet notwithstanding that by these words he means the Spirit's Eternal Procession. This is the sense in which they were understood by some of the most ancient of the Fathers.² In this sense, too, they were understood and discussed in the Council of Florence, A.D. 1439. According to this interpretation, this verse refers both to the Eternal Procession of the Holy Spirit, and also to His Temporal Procession, or Mission. To the former, in the words "Who proceedeth from the Father:" and to the Theophylact, in Joan. xv. 26; vol. i. p. 717.

 Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xv. 26; vol. viii. p. 1197.

the controversy being started in the Western Churches, whether the Spirit proceed from the Son or no, as well as from the Father, the eighth Council at Toledo in Spain, A.D. 653, debating the question, and carrying it in the affirmative, they, after those words in the Constantinopolitan Creed, ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς, put in καὶ υἱοῦ, and so made it run in Latin, 'Credimus et in Spiritum Sanctum, Dominum, vivificantem, ex Patre Filioque procedentem'; and not only so, but they caused this Creed, so enlarged and altered by them, to be put into their public liturgies, and so sung continually in their churches, the French joining with them, and afterwards the English, too, as we may see in our public liturgy. But in the Council held at Aken, in Germany, the matter was, after debate, referred to Pope Leo the Third; but he was so far from allowing of that addition, that he desired it might by degrees be quite left out of the Creed; for the legates being come from the Council to him, we find, in the Acts of the said Council, one of them saying to him: 'Ergo ut video illud a vestra paternitate decernitur, ut primo illud, de quo questio agitur, de sepe facto symbolo tollatur, et tunc demum a quolibet licite et libere, sine cantando, sine tradendo, discatur et doceatur'; to whom Leo answers: 'Ita proculdubio, a nostra parte decernitur; ita quoque ut a vestra assentiatur, a nobis omnibus modis suadetur' [vol. iv. p. 973]. And that a true copy of the said Creed, without any such addition to it, might be recorded and perpetuated, he caused it to be graven in Greek and Latin upon silver plates, and placed in the Church for every one to read. So Lombard: 'Leo tertius (symboli illius) transcriptum in tabula argentis post altare beati Pauli posita posteris reliquit, pro amore, ut ipse ait, et cautela fidei orthodoxe. In quo quidem symbolo in processione Spiritus Sancti solus commemoratur Pater his verbis, et in Spiritum Sanctum Dominum vivificantem, ex Patre procedentem' (Sentent. i. dist. ix. 2, p. 42, Migne). But afterwards these tables were neglected, and Pope Nicholas the First caused this clause, Filioque, to be added again to the Creed, and so to be read in all the churches under his power. But Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, condemned him for it; and in the Council of Constantinople, A.D. 879, it was declared that the addition should be quite taken away again; and after that Cerularius, Theophylact, and the Grecians generally, inveighed against it; for which the Popes of Rome branded them, and so all the Greek Churches, with heresy. And so the quarrel betwixt the Greek and Latin, or Eastern and Western Churches, began and hath been continued; the Eastern Churches condemning the Western for inserting the clause Filioque into the Creed of a General Council without the consent of the like authority; the Western Churches, on the other hand, condemning the Eastern for keeping it out."—Ibid.

"The Latin monks at Mount Olivet, when disturbed by some Greek monks of the monastery of S. Saba, appealed to its use in the chapel of Charlemagne. They said in their Epistle to Leo III., 'Would you vouchsafe to inform the Emperor Charles your son, that we heard those words in his chapel, "Who proceedeth from the Father and the Son?"' Charlemagne had, at this time, a somewhat indefinite title (accorded to him by the Saracens), 'Protector of the Holy Land.' The Council of Aix sent, as you know, two deputies to Leo III. Leo III. says that he would not latter, in the words "Whom I will send unto you from the Father," ὃν ἐγὼ πέμψω ὑμῖν παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς.

Few verses have been the occasion of greater disagreement in the Church than this. Most, if not all the Latin Fathers, and some of the early¹ Greek Fathers, held that this passage implied that the Spirit proceeds (eternally) from the Father and the Son. On the other hand, many of the later Greek authorities held that, as S. John did not record that Jesus expressly said that the Spirit proceeded from the Father and the Son, this ought not to be declared an article of the Faith. In consequence of disagreement on this subject, and because the Western Church declined to withdraw the words "Filioque," which had been added to the Creed of Nicea, in a somewhat informal way, without the express sanction of a Council, the threatened division between the Eastern and Western Church was finally ratified, A.D. 1054; and in spite of the Council of Florence, which was held with a view to explain this misunderstanding, the division still continues.

This is one of the passages from which we gather what we know respecting the nature of the Holy Spirit.

1. He is the Third Person in the Holy Trinity, distinct from both the Father and the Son. He is said to proceed from the Father, and to be sent from the Father by the Son. But He who proceeds from another, or is sent by another, is distinct from Him from whom He proceeds, or by whom He is sent.
2. He is God, of the same nature as God the Father, because He proceeds from the Father.

3. He is said to proceed from the Father, and to be sent by the Son.

4. He is said to proceed from the Father, not to be begotten by the Father.

It is impossible to express the deductions which necessarily follow from this verse more briefly or more correctly than in the words of the Creed called the Creed of Athanasius.

"The Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God." And again, "The Holy Ghost is of the Father and of the Son: neither made nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding." This is but the legitimate expansion of our Saviour's own words. This is but another form of expressing the same truths which He here taught.

The Holy Spirit will bear witness that Jesus is the Son of God through the Apostles: inwardly, by enlightening their minds, by enabling them to understand and to receive more fully than before the truths of the Gospel; outwardly, by giving them power to work miracles, in proof that Jesus is God. The Holy Spirit will choose the Apostles through whom to bear witness, because they are naturally the most suitable instruments for this purpose. The people will most readily believe them, because they have had the best chance of knowing the truth, they have been the longest with Jesus. In the economy of grace, as in the economy of nature, everything is ordered and carried out with Divine wisdom, with the utmost perfection, and in all its stages. No want of unity in plan is anywhere perceptible.

¹ These are given under chapter xvi. 15.

have inserted the words 'for I would not, I say not, set myself above' the framers of the Creed, 'illuminated both with human and Divine knowledge; but far be it from me even to equal myself to them!' He advised even to remove the words. Yet when the deputies urged, 'If language full of right faith be removed, will not that same language be condemned by all, as though contrary to the faith?' he said, 'Had I been asked, before it was so sung, I would have answered that it should not be inserted;' but, as it was, he suggested that 'the singing of the Creed in the palace should gradually be intermitted, since it is not sung in our Holy Church, in the hope that it might gradually be disused by all.' The love, however, of the Creed, or the dread of injuring the faith, prevailed, and the singing of the Creed continued. No one, I should think, could blame the French bishops for this fear. Leo III., too, saw that the words 'and the Son' could not be left out, without risk to the faith; and finally advised, not the omission of the words, but the disuse of the custom of singing the Creed. And so the Creed continued to be sung in Spain, France, and Germany for the next four hundred years, during which it was not received at Rome; when at last, on the importunity of the Emperor Henry, it was received unwillingly. 'The Romans,' says an eye-witness of its first introduction, 'did not sing the Creed after the Gospel to these times of the Emperor Henry of blessed memory.' 'The Emperor ceased not pressing it, until, with the consent of all, he persuaded the Lord Benedict of the Apostolic see, that they should sing it at the public mass.' 'From the year 1014,' says Cardinal Bona, 'the Creed began to be sung at Rome, by the direction of Benedict VIII., and so neither in the Ordo Romanus, nor in the ancient MSS. Sacramentaries, nor in Alcuin [A.D. 784], Amalarius [A.D. 816], Rabanus [A.D. 847], Remigius Antissiod. [A.D. 880], or others who, before the aforesaid year, explained the service of the Roman Mass, is there any mention of the Creed; whereas it was sung, long before, in Spain, France, and Germany. It is found also in all the Liturgies of the Greeks, Maronites, and other nations in the East.'—DR. PUSEY, Letter on the clause 'And the Son,' p. 65. 1876.

"It is a very difficult question in theology why the Holy Spirit is not called a 'Son,' and His procession 'generation.' This was an objection of the Arians, viz. ad Serap. l. 15-17; and Athanasius only answers it by denying that we may speculate. Other writers apply, as in other cases, the theological language of the Church to a solution of this question. It is carefully discussed in Petav. Dogm. ii. vii. 13, 14.—DR. J. H. NEWMAN on S. Athanasius; Library of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 532.

CHAPTER XVI.

[1. Christ comforteth His disciples against tribulation by the promise of the Holy Ghost, and by His Resurrection and Ascension: 23, assuredly their prayers made in His name to be acceptable to His Father. 33. Peace in Christ, and in the world after Him.]

[Vulg. Discipulis praecepit facere persecutiones, et quod visceribus ut ipse edat, qui veniat Paracletus qui mundum regnat, spiritus sanctus, et Christianum charitas: dedit autem quod dicitur, Misericordiam etiam non videtis Me, deo: addebat similitudinem de muliere pariente: huiusmodi autem Patre peccat spiritus mortuus: producitque spiritum fugam.]

1. These things have I spoken unto you, that ye should not be offended.

Several explanations have been offered as to what Jesus here meant by "these things." Some suppose that He refers to something He had said a little time before, as, for instance, that He should be crucified and they should be scattered (Matt. xxvi. 31). But the most probable opinion¹ appears to be that "these things" refers to the subject on which He had last spoken to them; namely, the persecution which they should suffer, and the Descent of the Holy Spirit upon them. Hence it has been suggested² that the division between the fifteenth and sixteenth chapters just at this place is unfortunate, as separating subjects most intimately connected.

They were not to be offended and fall away because of the persecutions, and for two reasons: because they had not been taken by surprise—He had forewarned them; and because He had given them the Holy Spirit to support them under all these trials, however severe they might be. And severe they would be. For not only would they put them out of the synagogue, which in itself would be a civil death, a renunciation of all social comfort and distinction, but they would actually put them to bodily death, and in so doing they would think that they were doing God service, that they were offering to God an acceptable sacrifice.

2. They shall put you out of the synagogues:³

yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service.

S. For they may: A doeth service to the Lord.
Vulg. Absque synagogis facient vos: . . . arbitretur obsequium se prestare Deo.

3. And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor Me.

S. they may do unto you: V.A. omit unto you.
Vulg. Et haec facient vobis.

The reason which He gives for these persecutions is not of a nature to excuse the persecutors, but rather to increase their condemnation. It is their disbelief in Jesus as the Son of God; their refusal, in spite of the proofs offered to them, to believe that Jesus is sent by the Father.

4. But these things have I told you, that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them. And these things I said unto you at the beginning, because I was with you.

V.A. when their time shall come: S. that I spoke of them.
Vulg. ut cum venient hora eorum, reminiscimini quia ego dixi vobis.

Either Jesus had not before spoken of the persecutions which they should suffer at all, or He had not foretold them to the extent and in the severity and with the minuteness with which He now speaks of them, or He had then spoken

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xvi. 1; vol. vii. p. 421.
Theophylact, in Joan. xvi. 1; vol. i. p. 717.
Euthymius, in Joan. xvi. 1; vol. iv. p. 533.

* The synagogues.—The origin of the synagogue is of uncertain date. Some think they find traces of it in very early times, but little is known for certain until long after their return from the Captivity. Before a synagogue could be erected there must be not less than ten men of leisure and reputation resident in the place. Synagogues were erected in the highest part of the city, and one of their canons forbade a house to be built higher than the synagogue. According to Jewish writers, in the time of our Saviour the land was full of synagogues. In Jerusalem alone it is said there were 460, or, as others say, 480 synagogues. There were three days of meeting in the week: the second day (Monday), the fifth (Thursday), and the seventh (Sabbath). See LIGHTFOOT on S. Matt. iv. 23; vol. ii. p. 132, &c.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xvi. 1; vol. viii. p. 1110.
² Maldonatus, in Joan. xvi. 1; vol. ii. p. 859.

of them when far distant; but now, He speaks of them when close at hand, on the very point of taking place. When before foretelling the persecutions which they should suffer, He had not, as now, promised the remedy for them, the Holy Spirit to enable them to bear them.

While He was with them, whatever hatred the Jews might feel, whatever violence they might be guilty of, would be directed against Him, and not against His disciples. Now that He was going away, both Jews and Gentiles would persecute them. He therefore forewarns them of this, and promises to strengthen them by the gift of the Holy Spirit, in order that they might not faint under them.

Several¹ of the Latin commentators, as also the Vatican and Alexandrian MSS., have interpreted αὐτῶν as if it belonged to ἡ ὥρα and not to μνημονεύετε, and have translated the passage, "that when their time shall come." On the other hand, the Greek commentators,² with some Latin, take αὐτῶν with μνημονεύετε, as does also the Authorized Translation.

5. But now I go My way to Him that sent Me; and none of you asketh Me, Whither goest Thou?

6. But because I have said these things unto you, sorrow hath filled your heart.

A. omits But.
Vulg. Sed quia hæc locutus sum vobis.

Thomas had, it is true, asked Him, "Whither goest Thou?" But beyond that, they had manifested little interest in the matter. They had scarcely understood the answer, and had not followed it up with further inquiry, so as to draw out from Him any information as to the advantages which they would derive from His departure. Advantages they certainly were to receive by His leaving them, but this, in consequence of their present sorrow, they could not understand.

7. Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send Him unto you.

To console them in their sorrow, and to convince their judgment in spite of their sorrow, He condescends to use an unusual mode of speaking, and to add, as it were, asseveration to His simple assertion. "I tell you the truth, It is expedient for you that I go away." The disciples were like children who have to be weaned for their good, but against their own will, in order that they may receive food more suited to their age and condition. So long as Jesus remained with them He would be the object of all persecution, not they. When once He should depart from them, a totally new scene of trial would begin. Their condition would appear more desolate, but it would not in reality be so. The Advocate or Comforter, whom He would send to supply His place, though unseen, would be present with them. Their position in the world would be more prominent than before, but the Holy Spirit would enable them to fill it. Their temptations would be increased tenfold, but the Holy Spirit would increase their power to withstand temptation more than tenfold. All this would be the fruit of His Ascension to the Father. They ought therefore rather to rejoice than to sorrow at this new and fuller dispensation.

In the fourth century, Macedonius, Archbishop of Constantinople, began to teach that the Spirit, as the minister of the Son, was inferior in nature or essence to the Son. Among other arguments used to refute this heresy, one was drawn from this verse, on the ground that He who did the same work as the Son, and who brought the Son's work to completion and perfection, could not be inferior in nature or essence to the Son.³

8. And when He is come, He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment:⁴

Margin. He will convince the world.
Vulg. arguet mundum de peccato.

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. xvi. 4, tract. xciii.; vol. iii. p. 1867.
V. Bede, in Joan. xvi. 4; vol. iii. p. 853.

² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xvi. 4; Homil. lxxvii.
Theophylact, in Joan. xvi. 4; vol. i. p. 717.
Euthymius, in Joan. xvi. 4; vol. iv. p. 533.

* He will reprove the world, &c. (ἐλέγξει τὸν κόσμον).—

"One may rebuke another without bringing the rebuked to a conviction of any fault on his part: and this, either because there was no fault and the rebuke was therefore unneeded or unjust, or else because, though there was such fault, the rebuke was ineffectual to bring the offender to own it: and in this possibility of 'rebuking' for sin without 'convincing' of sin lies the distinction between ἐπιτιμᾶν and ἐλέγχειν. In ἐπιτιμᾶν lies simply the notion of rebuking; which word can, therefore, be used of one unjustly checking or blaming another; in this sense Peter 'began to rebuke' Jesus (ἤρξατο ἐπιτιμᾶν, Matt. xvi. 22; cf. xix. 13; Luke xviii. 39):—or ineffectually, and without any profit to the person rebuked, who is not thereby brought to see his sin; as when the Rupertus, in Joan. xvi. 4; vol. iii. p. 735.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xvi. 7; Homil. lxxviii.
Theophylact, in Joan. xvi. 7; vol. i. p. 718.
Maldonatus, in Joan. xvi. 7; vol. ii. p. 863.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xvi. 7; vol. viii. p. 1113.

penitent thief 'rebuked' (ἐπετίμα) his fellow malefactor (Luke xxiii. 40; cf. Mark ix. 25). But ἐλέγχειν is a much more pregnant word: it is so to rebuke another, with such effectual wielding of the victorious arms of the truth, as to bring him, if not to a confession yet at least to a conviction of his sin, just as in juristic Greek, ἐλέγχειν is not merely to reply to but to refute an opponent.

"When we keep this distinction well in mind, what a light does it throw on a multitude of passages in the New Testament, and how much deeper a meaning does it give them! Thus our Lord could demand, 'Which of you convinceth (ἐλέγχει) Me of sin?' (John viii. 46.) Many rebuked Him: many laid sin to His charge (Matt. ix. 8; John ix. 16), but none brought sin home to His con-

He first states what are the three principal offices of the Holy Spirit with respect to the world, the Jews and Gentiles who refused to believe in Him, and then re-states each particular separately, with an explanation of it.

9. Of sin, because they believe not on Me ;

The Holy Spirit,¹ whom He would send upon them on the day of Pentecost, would convince and convict the unbelieving Jews and Gentiles of the sin which they committed in refusing to believe in Him after the proofs which He offered them that He was the Son of God, after the many works which He wrought among them of every kind and degree of the miraculous. The Holy Spirit would convince the world of this, partly by the preaching and by the miraculous works of the Apostles, and partly by His secret working on their hearts. In refusing to believe on Jesus as the Son of God they refuse to believe on Him who alone could save them, who alone could be a sacrifice for their sins, who alone could sanctify their hearts and enable them to live without sin for the time to come.

10. Of righteousness, because I go to My Father, and ye see Me no more ;

S. to the Father.
Vulg. quia ad Patrem vado.

The Holy Spirit will convince and convict the world—that is, the Jews and Gentiles who believe not in Him—of righteousness, by showing that they are not righteous, and that He alone is righteous and the source of righteousness to all others. And this He will prove by going to the Father. He will prove that the Jew, as tested by the Law of Moses, is not righteous, and that neither is the Gentile, as tried by the law of conscience or the law of nature. He will prove that the words which Jesus spake of Himself as being the Son of God were true. He would prove the truth of this by the very fact of His going to the Father, and by sending His Holy Spirit upon men. The Holy Spirit would also prove it to be true, by the miracles He would enable the Apostles to perform in attestation of it.²

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xvi. 9; Homil. lxxviii.
S. Augustine, in Joan. xvi. 9, tract. xcv. : vol. iii. p. 1870.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xvi. 9; vol. viii. p. 1113.
² S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xvi. 10; Homil. lxxviii.
Theophylact, in Joan. xvi. 10; vol. i. p. 719.
Euthymius, in Joan. xvi. 10; vol. iv. p. 539.
³ S. Justin Martyr, Dialog. ii. p. 303.
S. Irenæus, contra Hæres. ii. 31 (alias 56), p. 824.

science. Other passages also will gain from realizing the fulness of the meaning of ἐλέγχειν, as John iii. 20, viii. 9; 1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25; but, above all, the great passage, John xvi. 8: 'When He (the Comforter) is come, He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment;' for so we have rendered the words, following in our 'reprove' the Latin arguet; although few, I think, that have in any degree sought to sound the depth of our Lord's words, but will admit that 'convince,' which unfortunately our Translators have relegated to the margin, would have

The world would not see Jesus after His Crucifixion. Neither would the Apostles themselves see Him after His Ascension to the Father.

11. Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged.

The Holy Spirit will convince the world—that is, those who refuse to believe that Jesus is God—that they are mistaken in acting thus, and that they have already been judged and condemned for it. When they see Satan, their own prince, vanquished, cast out of his possessions by the power of the Holy Spirit,—when they see the Apostles through the name of Jesus casting out devils, they must be convinced that they are wrong and that their condemnation is certain; nay, that it has already taken place.

Many writers³ in the early centuries mention facts, and appeal to them as patent to the whole world, which were the fulfilment of what Jesus here foretells. They appeal to the casting out of devils as a fact which cannot be denied, and as proving that the prince of this world is vanquished and cast out by the Crucified, that his worship was being neglected and his temples forsaken.

12. I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now.

S. omits now.
Vulg. sed non potestis portare modo.

S. Luke has recorded (Acts i. 3) what was the general subject of our Saviour's conversation with the Apostles during the forty days between His Resurrection and His Ascension. It was on "the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God." On many of these things they would require further instruction, though they might not be able to bear it before His Resurrection. As yet they had heard little about the mysteries of the Faith, little about the foundation and the ruling of the Church which was to be planted in all the world. When the Holy Spirit came, He would lead them into all the truth. But He did not lead them into all the truth at once, but gradually as they were able to receive it.

Origen, contra Celsum, i. 3; vol. i. p. 660.
S. Athanasius, de Incarnatione, 30, &c.; vol. i. p. 148, &c.
Minucius Felix, Octavius, ch. xxvii.: Migne's Patrol., vol. iii. p. 326.
Tertullian, Apolog. 37; vol. i. p. 463.
—ad Scapulam, 2; vol. i. p. 700.
S. Cyprian, ad Demetrianum, 15; p. 555.

been the preferable rendering, giving a depth and fulness of meaning to this work of the Holy Ghost which 'reprove' in some part fails to express. 'He who shall come in My room shall so bring home to the world its own sin; My perfect "righteousness," God's coming "judgment," shall so "convince" it of these, that it shall be obliged itself to acknowledge them; and in this acknowledgment may find, shall be in the right way to find, its own blessedness and salvation.'—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 12.

They were led into it step by step, at different times, as circumstances arose which required further guidance, further instruction. He did not reveal to them until after the day of Pentecost that the Gospel was to be preached to the Gentiles as well as the Jews (Acts x.), and later still that the Gentiles need not be circumcised or keep the Law of Moses (Acts xv.).

13. Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth:^a for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak: and He will shew you things to come.

To express¹ that God the Son and God the Holy Spirit would not teach things contrary to each other, but that what Jesus had already taught would be confirmed by what the Holy Spirit should teach, and at the same time to express the Oneness of the Holy Spirit with the Father and the Son, He says, "He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak."

The Holy Spirit would guide them into all the truth,² into all the truth that concerned them in their office as Apostles and teachers, both in what had reference to the future as much as to the past and present. Whatever was required to enable them to fill the office of Apostle, Evangelist, or even Prophet, the Holy Spirit would supply.

14. He shall glorify Me: for He shall receive of Mine, and shall shew it unto you.

S. said I unto you that He: S.V. that He taketh of Mine and shall show.
Vulg. quia de meo accipiet, et annuntiabit vobis.

15. All things that the Father hath are Mine: therefore said I, that He shall take of Mine, and shall shew it unto you.

S. said I unto you that He: S.V. that He taketh of Mine and shall show.
Vulg. propterea dixi: quia de meo accipiet et annuntiabit vobis.

The Catholic Fathers were wont to cite this verse in proof³ that the Son was One with the Father and Equal to the Father, and also that the Spirit was Equal to the Father and to the Son;⁴ and some⁵ also to show that the Spirit proceedeth from the Father and also from the Son. Among those who quote this verse to prove the Procession of the Spirit from the Father and the Son are found several of the early Greek Fathers. From the examples here given it will be seen that there was a disposition among the early writers, who held that the Spirit proceedeth from the Father and the Son, to speak of the Spirit as proceeding from the Father and receiving from the Son (ἐκ τοῦ Υἱοῦ λαμβάνων), rather than as proceeding from the Son. This doubtless arose from the desire to keep as closely as possible to the very words of Scripture.

The Holy Spirit shall glorify Jesus by convincing men, both outwardly by miracles and inwardly by working on their hearts, that Jesus was the Son of God, the Saviour of the world.

He (the Holy Spirit) shall receive of Mine (the Son's).

All things that the Father hath are Mine.

For this cause said I that He (the Holy Spirit) shall take of Mine.

These three verses are of themselves almost sufficient to furnish adequate grounds for every statement contained in the following:—

The Catholic Faith is this: That we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity;

Neither confounding the Persons: nor dividing the Substance.

For there is one Person of the Father, another of the Son: and another of the Holy Ghost.

But the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost is all one: the Glory equal, the Majesty co-eternal.

Such as the Father is, such is the Son: and such is the Holy Ghost.

16. A little while, and ye shall not see Me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see Me, because I go to the Father.

S.V. no longer see Me: S.V. omit because I go to the Father.
Vulg. Modicum, et jam non videbitis me: . . . quia vado ad Patrem.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xvi. 13; vol. vii. p. 444.

Theophylact, in Joan. xvi. 13; vol. i. p. 720.

Rupertus, in Joan. xvi. 13; vol. iii. p. 740.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xvi. 13; vol. ii. p. 869.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xvi. 13; vol. viii. p. 1114.

³ S. Athanasius, in illud Omnia Mihi tradita sunt; vol. i. p. 213.

Oratio i. contra Arianos, 61; vol. ii. p. 140.

Oratio ii. contra Arianos, 18, 24; vol. ii. pp. 184,

197.

⁴ S. Gregory Nazian. Oratio Theologica, iv. 11; vol. ii. p. 116.

⁵ S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lxi. 52, 56, 58; vol. ii. pp. 281, 292, 295, &c.

^a All the truth (πᾶσαν τὴν ἀλήθειαν).—It is frequently difficult, and even impossible, to ascertain when the article should be used before abstract nouns, yet there is not the same difficulty when such nouns are preceded by πᾶς. The examples adduced

⁵ S. Augustine, in Joan. xvi. 15, tract. xcix.; vol. iii. p. 1889.

S. Cyril Hierosol. Cateches. xvi. 24, p. 952.

S. Epiphanius, in Ancorato, vi., viii., ix., lxvii., lxx., lxxiii.; vol. iii. pp. 25, 29, 32, 137, 148, 153.

S. Chrysostom, Homil. i. and ii., in Symbol. Apostol.

Didymus, de Spiritu Sancto, S. Jerome's transl. sect. 36, 37; vol. ii. p. 134.

S. Cyril Alex. Thesaurus, Assertio xxxiv.; vol. viii. p. 581.

Epist. xvii. (ad Nestorium de Excommuni.); vol. x. p. 117.

On many of these authorities, see Dr. Pusey's letter to Canon Liddon on the clause 'And the Son,' p. 107, &c., 1876.

prove that ἀλήθεια, in this place, is not truth universally, but only in reference to the particular subject. 'He shall lead you into all the truth,' as Campbell has translated it, though without any remark.—BISHOP MIDDLETON on the Greek Article, p. 258.

In these words Jesus foretells His Death and Resurrection. Of His Death, and that as close at hand, He had frequently spoken of late, of His Resurrection but seldom. His Death the disciples were quite prepared to expect. Of His Resurrection in three days they had not the least expectation. The thought of such an event seems never to have occurred to them. A little while, a few hours at most, and He would be seized by the Jews, crucified, dead and buried, and they should not see Him; and again a little while, three days, and He would rise again, and then they should see Him.¹

But the disciples did not understand His words in this way. He had but just said to them that when the Holy Spirit should come He would convince the world of righteousness, "because I go to My Father, and ye see Me no more" (verse 10). They did not understand that what He now said would take place in the interval before He went to the Father.

Others² have explained these words in this way. "A little while, and ye shall not see Me, because I ascend to the Father: again a little while," that is, after the time of this your mortal life is over, "and ye shall see Me," that is, at the Day of Judgment.

17. Then said some of His disciples among themselves, What is this that He saith unto us, A little while, and ye shall not see Me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see Me: and, Because I go to the Father?

18. They said therefore, What is this that He saith, a little while? we cannot tell what He saith.

¹ S. What is this little while? V. What is this little while that He saith? we cannot tell.

Vulg. quid est hoc quod dicit, Modicum? nescimus quid loquitur.

Several reasons have been given why the disciples did not understand this. Because the words themselves are expressed with a certain degree of obscurity; the disciples were too much overwhelmed with grief for His departure to see their meaning. They could not understand them from their ignorance that on the third day after His Burial He would rise again.

Perhaps to give them another proof of His power, another reason why they should trust Him, He shows them that He knows the thoughts of their hearts or the discussions which they had held among themselves.

19. Now Jesus knew that they were desirous to ask Him, and said unto them, Do ye enquire among yourselves of that I said, A little while, and ye shall not see Me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see Me?

² V. omitt Now: S. that they were going to ask Him: A. omitt unto them. Vulg. Cognovit autem Jesus quia volebant eum interrogare, et dixit eis.

20. Verily, verily, I say unto you, That ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice: and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy.

³ V. omitt and after-rejoice. Vulg. vos autem contristabimini.

"A little while, a few hours, and ye shall see Me bound, crucified, dead and buried, then ye shall lament with bitter sorrow; but the world, the unbelieving Jews, shall exult, because they have, as they think, overcome Me: but on the third day I shall rise again, and then your sorrow shall be turned into joy, but their rejoicing shall be turned into vexation and disappointment." Such will be the sense of this passage if we regard verse 16 as referring to the Death and Resurrection of Jesus, as seems most probable.

But if we regard the "little while" in verse 16 as meaning the whole of this present life, then we must interpret verse 20 with reference to the persecution and labour and toil which the Apostles would endure after His Ascension to the Father, and to the joy with which they should be greeted at the Day of Judgment.

21. A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world.

22. And ye now therefore have sorrow: but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you.

⁴ A. shall have sorrow.

Vulg. Et vos gaurum nunc quidem tristitiam habebitis.

In the first of these verses Jesus delivers a parable, He institutes a comparison, and in the second He applies it. He compares His Death and Passion to the travail of a woman when her hour is come, and His Resurrection to her joy after the birth.⁵ At the time of His Passion His Soul was "exceedingly sorrowful" (Matt. xxvi. 38). His disciples, too, shared in some degree that sorrow. After His

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xvi. 16; Homil. lxxv.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xvi. 16; vol. vii. p. 453.

Theophylact, in Joan. xvi. 16; vol. i. p. 722.

Euthymius, in Joan. xvi. 16; vol. iv. p. 347.

Rupertus, in Joan. xvi. 16; vol. iii. p. 742.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xvi. 20; vol. vii. p. 1117.

² S. Augustine, in Joan. xvi. 19, tract. cii; vol. iii. p. 1894.

V. Bala, in Joan. xvi. 19; vol. iii. p. 814.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xvi. 16; vol. ii. p. 872.

Johannes, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxv. p. 522.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xvi. 21; Homil. lxxvi.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xvi. 21; vol. vii. p. 460.

Theophylact, in Joan. xvi. 21; vol. i. p. 723.

Euthymius, in Joan. xvi. 21; vol. iv. p. 549.

Resurrection, when He saw of the travail of His Soul, He was satisfied (Isa. liii. 11).

He likens the sorrows of His Passion to the sorrows of a woman in travail, and the joy of His Resurrection to the joy of a woman at the birth of a child; because by His Death and Resurrection He purchased the life, the resurrection of both the body and soul of man. The joy of the woman is described as the joy of a woman who has given birth to a man-child, as the greatest joy possible, as joy not diminished by any human drawback.

As the woman in travail had sorrow because her hour was come, so the disciples were in sorrow because the hour of His Passion is come; but as the woman rejoices when the child is born, so after His Resurrection He would see them again, and their hearts would rejoice, and this their joy in consequence of His Resurrection should never be removed from them.

¹ S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. xvi. 23; vol. vii. p. 460.
Rupertus, in Joan. xvi. 23; vol. iii. p. 744.

* In that day ye shall ask Me nothing . . . Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father, &c. (ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἐρωτήσετε οὐδὲν . . . ὅσα ἂν αἰτήσῃτε τὸν πατέρα, &c.)—"These words, αἰτεῖν and ἐρωτᾶν, are often rendered by our translators as though they covered one another: nor can we object to their rendering in numerous instances αἰτεῖν and ἐρωτᾶν alike by our English 'to ask.' Yet sometimes they have a little marred the perspicuity of the original by not varying their word, where that has shown them the way. For example, the obliteration at John xvi. 23 of the distinction between αἰτεῖν and ἐρωτᾶν suggests very often a wrong interpretation of the verse—as though its two clauses were in near connection and direct antithesis—being indeed in none. In our Version we read: 'In that day ye shall ask Me nothing (ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἐρωτήσετε οὐδὲν). Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask (ὅσα ἂν αἰτήσῃτε) the Father in My name, He will give it you.' Now every one competent to judge is agreed, that 'ye shall ask' of the first half of the verse has nothing to do with 'ye shall ask' of the second; that in the first Christ is referring back to the ἡβελον αὐτῶν ἐρωτᾶν of ver. 19: to the questions which the disciples would fain have asked of Him, the perplexities which they would gladly have had resolved by Him, if only they dared to set them before Him. In that day He would say, 'In the day of My seeing you again, I will by the Spirit so teach you all things, that ye shall be no longer perplexed, no longer wishing to ask Me questions (cf. John xxi. 12), if only you might venture to do so.' Thus Lampe well: 'Nova est promissio de plenissima cognitionis luce, quæ convenienter economiæ Novi Testamenti collustrandi essent. Nam sicut questio supponit incertiam, ita qui nihil amplius querit abunde se edoctum existimat, et in doctrinâ plene expositâ ac intellectâ acquiescit.' There is in this verse a contrast drawn between asking the Son, which shall cease, and asking the Father, which shall begin: but the first half of the verse closes the declaration of one blessing, namely, that hereafter they shall be so taught by the Spirit as to have nothing further to inquire; the second half of the verse begins the declaration of a new blessing, that whatever they shall seek from the Father in the Son's name He will give it to them. Yet who will affirm that this is the impression which the English text conveys to his mind?

"The distinction between the words is this: αἰτεῖν, the Latin peto, is more submissive and suppliant, indeed the constant word for the seeking of the inferior from the superior (Acts iii. 20): of the beggar from him that should give alms (Acts iii. 2): of the child from the parent (Matt. vii. 9; Luke xi. 11; Lam. iv. 4): of

23. And in that day ye shall ask Me nothing. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name, He will give it you.*

S.V. ask the Father, He will give it you in My name.
Vulg. Si quid petieritis Patrem in nomine meo, dabit vobis.

Jesus knew that they had been greatly perplexed by what He had said to them just before, and had only been prevented by fear from asking Him what He had meant.¹ He here promises that after His Resurrection He, by His own instructions and by the Descent of the Holy Spirit, would so open their understanding that they would have no need to ask Him any question, that they should understand whatever it concerned them to know as the Apostles of His Church. The word here rendered in the English Authorized Version "ask," in the expressions "ye shall ask (ἐρωτήσετε) Me the subject from the ruler (Ezra viii. 22): of man from God (1 Kings iii. 11; Matt. vii. 7; James i. 5; 1 John iii. 22; cf. Plato, Euthyph. 14; εὐχεσθαί (δάρν) αἰτεῖν τοὺς θεούς). Ἐρωτᾶν, on the other hand, is the Latin rogo; or sometimes (as John xvi. 23) interrogo, its only meaning in classical Greek, where it never signifies 'to ask,' but only to 'interrogate' or 'to inquire.' Like rogare, it implies that he who asks stands on a certain equality with him from whom the boon is asked, as king with king (Luke xiv. 32), or, if not equality, on such a footing of familiarity as lends authority to the request.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xvi. 23; vol. ii. p. 875.

"Thus it is very noteworthy, and witnesses for the singular accuracy in the employment of words and in the record of that employment which prevails throughout the New Testament, that our Lord never uses αἰτεῖν or αἰτεῖσθαι of Himself in respect of that which He seeks on behalf of His disciples from God: for His is not the petition of the creature to the Creator, but the request of the Son to the Father. The consciousness of His equal dignity, of His potent and prevailing intercession, speaks out in this, that often as He asks, or declares that He will ask, anything of the Father, it is always ἐρωτᾶν, ἐρωτήσω, 'an asking,' that is, as upon equal terms (John xiv. 16; xvi. 26; xvii. 9, 15, 20), never αἰτεῖν, or αἰτήσω. Martha, on the contrary, plainly reveals her poor unworthy conception of His person, that she recognizes in Him no more than a prophet, when she ascribes that αἰτεῖσθαι to Him which He never ascribes to Himself: ὅσα ἂν αἰτήσῃ τὸν Θεόν, δώσει σοι ὁ Θεός (John xi. 22); on which verses Bengel observes: 'Jesus de se rogante loquens ἐδεήθην dicit (Luke xxii. 32), et ἐρωτήσω, at nunquam αἰτούμαι. Non Græce locuta est Martha, sed tamen Johannes exprimit improprium ejus sermonem, quem Dominus benigne tulit: nam αἰτεῖσθαι videtur verbum esse minus dignum;' compare his note on 1 John v. 16.

"It will follow that the ἐρωτᾶν, being thus proper for Christ, inasmuch as it has authority in it, is not proper for us; and in no single instance is it used in the New Testament to express the prayer of man to God, of the creature to the Creator. The only passage seeming to contradict this assertion is 1 John v. 16. The verse is difficult, but whichever of the various ways of overcoming its difficulty may find favour it will be found to constitute no true exception to the rule, but perhaps, in the substitution of ἐρωτήσῃ for the αἰτήσῃ of the earlier clause of the verse, will rather confirm it."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 140.

nothing" and "Whatsoever ye shall ask (airhōnre) the Father," is in the Greek represented by two different words. The first generally means to ask for information, and the second to ask for a gift or for alms. But some commentators—Greek commentators, too—have thought that both words, as here used, may imply presenting a petition.¹

Jesus is henceforth to be the medium of all prayer to the Father: the medium through whom all prayer will be granted. All grace will henceforth be granted through the economy of the Incarnation, so to speak.

24. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in My name: ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full.

Several explanations have been offered of these words; the most probable² appear to be that, though they had wrought many miracles and had cast out devils in His name, they had never prayed to the Father in His name, and for two reasons. They had not been taught to do so, and while He was present with them they had required nothing which He could not supply. Now that He was about to depart from them He points out the way in which all their wants were to be supplied; namely, by praying to the Father in His name.

25. These things have I spoken unto you in proverbs: but the time cometh, when I shall no more speak unto you in proverbs, but I shall shew you plainly of the Father.

Margin, parables.

Either Jesus had spoken unto them of these things in language that was really dark and enigmatical, and so they had not understood them, or He had spoken in language which appeared so to them, because they had not understood it; as, for instance, when He had spoken to them respecting the "little while" (verse 16), or of the Holy Spirit, or of His own departure from them, or of their rejoicing. Now He promises that after the Resurrection He will so open their hearts to understand the Scriptures that they shall have no difficulty in understanding whatever He reveals to them.

26. At that day ye shall ask in My name:

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xvi. 23; Homil. lxxix. Theophylact, in Joan. xvi. 23; vol. i. p. 723. Euthymius, in Joan. xvi. 23; vol. iv. p. 551. S. Augustine, in Joan. xvi. 23, tract. cli; vol. iii. p. 1894. ² Euthymius, in Joan. xvi. 24; vol. iv. p. 551. Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxv. p. 526. Maldonatus, in Joan. xvi. 24; vol. ii. p. 876.

* At that day ye shall ask in My name, &c.—"We have very high authority for distinguishing airēō, to ask or pray to a superior, from ēparōō, to request an equal; and applying the distinction to S. John xvi. 26, we translate, 'In that day ye will pray in and I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you:—"

S. At that day ask ye.
Vulg. In illo die tu nomine meo petetis.

27. For the Father Himself loveth you, because ye have loved Me, and have believed that I came out from God.

V. from the Father.
Vulg. et ex deo quia ego a Deo exivi.

His object in these words apparently is to show them that the Holy Spirit will supply His place to them; that though He Himself will have departed from them, they will not be left without One who will both pray for them and teach them also how to pray. By His prayer for them to the Father the Holy Spirit will be sent down upon them, and He when He comes will teach them how to pray to the Father in the name of Jesus. The Father also will grant all that they pray for, for He loves them because they have believed that Jesus is His Son.

28. I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father.

These words³ have been thought to intimate to the disciples more than lies on the mere surface, and to teach them that Jesus came forth from the Father by being born in the world of the Virgin Mary; and also more than this, that He came forth from the Father by being the Son of God by Eternal Generation—that He was "God, of the Substance of the Father, begotten before the worlds: and Man, of the Substance of His Mother, born in the world."

29. His disciples said unto Him, Lo, now speakest Thou plainly, and speakest no proverb.

Margin, parables.
S. The disciples: V. omits unto Him.
Vulg. Dicunt ei discipuli ejus.

30. Now are we sure that Thou knowest all things, and needest not that any man should ask Thee: by this we believe that Thou camest forth from God.

The disciples did not understand the words which Jesus

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xvi. 24; vol. viii. p. 1121.

³ S. Athanasius, Expositio Fidei, 2; vol. i. p. 204. S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xvi. 27; vol. vii. p. 466. Euthymius, in Joan. xvi. 28; vol. iv. p. 553. S. Augustine, in Joan. xvi. 28, tract. cli; vol. iii. p. 1899. V. Bede, in Joan. xvi. 28; vol. iii. p. 867. Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xvi. 28; vol. viii. p. 1122.

My name (airhōnre), and I say not unto you that I will make a request to the Father in your behalf' (ēparhōō). Compare ch. xvii. vers. 9 and 10."—The Church Quarterly Review, April 1876, p. 127.

spake to them (verse 16), "A little while," &c. They were anxious to ask Him, but were withheld by a kind of fear and awe. He, by His Divine power, knew their thoughts and their desire to question Him on this point, and in His reply He reveals to them that He knew the cause of their perplexity. This was to them a further proof that He was the Son of God, a great confirmation of their faith in Him.

But how weak this their faith really is, strong as they themselves think it, Jesus shows them in the following words, which some understand affirmatively¹ and others interrogatively.²

31. Jesus answered them, Do ye now believe?

32. Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered, every man to his own, and shall leave Me alone: and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with Me.

Margin, his own home.

S.V.A. omit now: S. yea, the hour is come.

Vulg. Eccce venit hora, et jam venit, ut dispergamiis unusquisque in propria.

It was now night, and before the morning should dawn they would all fly and desert Him whom they profess to believe came forth from God. They would fly, not in a body and with a preconcerted arrangement to assemble together again, but each one for himself, each his own way and to his own place of refuge as fear dictated. But this their desertion of Him was their dishonour, not His loss; for Himself He needed not their protection.

33. These things I have spoken unto you, that in Me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer: I have overcome the world.

S.V.A. In the world ye have.

Vulg. In mundo pressuram habebitis.

By "the world" here He evidently means Satan, the prince of the world, and those whom he influences not to believe that Jesus is the Son of God. Through them the Apostles and their followers would have persecution and tribulation of every kind. In Jesus they would have peace. So long as they remained united to Jesus by faith and love they would have inward peace—peace in the soul—in spite of all bodily persecution and suffering. The world He had already overcome by His holy life and by the exercise of His Divine power, and He would still more overcome it by His Death and Resurrection. He overcame the world for them, not for Himself, that He might set them an example, and that He might gain for them the power and the grace to overcome it. Thus He would also overcome the world through them. They would be the combatants and He the author of the victory.

¹ Maldonatus, in Joan. xvi. 31; vol. ii. p. 881.

² Theophylact, in Joan. xvi. 31; vol. i. p. 725.

Euthymius, in Joan. xvi. 31; vol. iv. p. 555.

Janseus, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxv. p. 528.

CHAPTER XVII.

[1. Christ prayeth to His Father to glorify Him, 6. to preserve His Apostles, 11. in unity, 17. and truth, 20. to glorify them, and all other believers with Him in heaven.
[Vulg. utroque Christi ad Patrem pro utroque clarificatione, pro discipulis et iis qui per illos in ipsum essent credituri, ut scirentur a malo, et omnes sint unum, mandatuque copiosius ipsum fuisse a Patre missum.]

THIS chapter contains the prayer which Jesus offered to the Father before He left the upper room where He and the Twelve had kept the Passover, and where He had washed their feet and had instituted the Eucharist. Judas had left them before He offered this prayer, and had gone to the chief priests to arrange with them the place and manner of His betrayal.

1. These words spake Jesus, and lifted up His eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify Thy Son, that Thy Son also may glorify Thee:

S.V. that the Son may glory Thee: A. omits also.
Vulg. charitatem Filium tuum et Filium tuum charitate te.

In the first five verses (1-5) Jesus prays for Himself, in the next fourteen verses (6-19) He prays for His disciples, and in the remainder of the chapter (20-26) for them and for those who should believe with them.

The Evangelist minutely records both the words and even the attitude which Jesus uses on this occasion.

"Father, the hour is come; glorify Thy Son, that Thy Son also may glorify Thee." Such language as this could not have been used by a mere man, and only by One who was equal to the Father. Jesus prays, because He is inferior to the Father as touching His Manhood; He prays thus, because He is equal to the Father as touching His Godhead.

He prays¹ that at His Death there should be such a manifestation of Him as the Son of God that men may believe in Him. There was the more need for this because He was about to die as a malefactor, as a breaker of the law. This would have the effect of eclipsing His spotless life, of creating false impressions of Him in men's minds, and thus of preventing them from believing that He was the Christ, the Son of God. He therefore, thirsting for the salvation of mankind, prays that His name even at His Death may be rendered so glorious that men may believe on Him and may thus be saved.

His prayer to the Father to glorify His Son was answered in part when the Veil of the Temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, when the earth did quake and the rocks rent, and when all nature was so convulsed that the centurion and those who kept the watch with him cried, "Truly, this was the Son of God" (Matt. xxvii. 51, &c.).

Jesus desired this not for Himself, but that the glory of the Father, that the knowledge of the Father's power and mercy, might be diffused among men, and that thus the salvation of many among all nations might be secured.

2. As Thou hast given Him power over all flesh, that He should give eternal life to as many as Thou hast given Him.

Jesus prays that as the Father had given Him power over all flesh, over all men, so also He would grant Him glory commensurate with His power; that as His power over men was unlimited, so also His glory, the worship paid to Him as the Son of God, might also be unlimited. Before the Incarnation the knowledge and the worship of the One true God was confined to the Jews; Jesus now prays that it may be extended to all nations.

3. And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God,^a and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent.

¹ Maldenatus, in Joan. xvii. 1; vol. ii. p. 883.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xvii. 1; vol. viii. p. 1125.

^a Thee the only true God.—When characteristic attributes and prerogatives are ascribed to God or to the Father, this is done only to the exclusion of creatures or of false gods, not to the exclusion of His Son, who is implied in the mention of Himself. Thus when God is called "Only wise," or "the Father the only God," or God is said to be ingenerate, ἀγένετος, this is not in contrast to the Son, but to all things which are distinct from God (rel. Athan. Orat. iii. 8; Naz. Orat. 30, 13; Cyril, Thesaur. p. 142). The words "one" and "only" ascribed to God in Scripture, says S. Basil, "are not used in contrast to the Son or the Holy Spirit, but with reference to those who are not God, and falsely called so" (Ep. 8, n. 3). On the other hand, when the Father is men-

In these words Jesus gives the reason why He prays to the Father to glorify Him. It is because this His glorification consists in the diffusion of the knowledge of God and of Jesus as His Son, and because this is the only way by which men can obtain eternal life. He prays for glorification in order that men may obtain eternal life by this glorification of the Father and of the Son, by acknowledging that the Father is the true God and that Jesus is His Son, whom He hath sent to be the Redeemer of the world. The only way to eternal life is to believe and confess that the Father is the true God and that Jesus is His Son. This belief, and their union with God in consequence of this belief, causes them to have eternal life, the life of grace here and the life of glory hereafter. The increase and the diffusion of this belief is the glorification of the Father and the Son.

Two explanations have been given of the words "Thee the only true God," &c., by the Catholic Fathers in opposition to the Arians, who maintained that by these words Jesus taught that the Father was the One true God, and that He Himself was inferior to the Father in nature or essence. (1) Some¹ interpreted the passage so as to make the words "the One true God" apply both to "Thee" (the Father) and also to Jesus Christ, "whom Thou hast sent." That this explanation was not devised in order to meet the conclusion of the Arians is plain from the fact that we find it given by a writer² who lived before the time of Arius. (2) Others³ held that in calling the Father "the One true God" Jesus meant to exclude false gods and not the other Persons in the Trinity from being the One true God. This explanation was also held before the time of Arius.⁴ The latter of these two interpretations is considered the better.⁵

Our Saviour's words here show that a belief in the Incarnation is as necessary for eternal life, as a belief in the Father is, or a belief in the Trinity.

"It is necessary to everlasting salvation: that he also believe rightly the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"For the right Faith is, that we believe and confess: that our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is God and Man" (Creed of S. Athanasius).

He makes no mention of the Holy Spirit here. Of late

He had spoken much respecting the Holy Spirit. It may be that now it was necessary to draw their attention exclusively to a belief in Himself as the Son of God: for a belief in the Incarnation is the foundation of all right belief in God and of all acceptable approach to Him.

The practice of using "Christ" as a proper name and joining it with "Jesus" did not begin until after the Resurrection, by which Jesus was more especially proved to be the Christ. This is the only instance in the Gospels where "Jesus" is joined to "Christ," and that occurs in His last address to His disciples the very night in which He was betrayed, and so but a few hours before His Resurrection.

4. I have glorified Thee on the earth: I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do.

S.V.A. on the earth, having finished the work.
Vulg. Ego te clarificavi super terram: opus consummavi.

The work for which He was sent was to redeem mankind and to preach to them the Gospel of Redemption. In the course of a few hours He by His Death and Passion would finish His work of Redemption. The work of preaching He would finish by giving His Apostles a commission to go and teach all nations. He had glorified the Father by offering up Himself the Sacrifice for the sin of the world, and by making Him known to man: for God is glorified when He is preached to men, and when they believe on Him and worship Him.

5. And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was.

In these words⁶ Jesus prays that after His Resurrection He may receive with the Father the same glory as the Word made flesh which He had with Him before as the Word; that He may sit at the right hand of the Father in His glorified human body, with the same undiminished glory which He had with the Father before He condescended to be born of a Virgin.

The glory here mentioned has reference to three different manifestations of it. (1) His glory as God, which He had with the Father before the world was. (2) His glory as

¹ S. Hilary Pict. de Trinitate, ix.; vol. ii. p. 306.

S. Ambrose, de Fide, v. 1; vol. iii. p. 653.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xvii. 3, tract. cv.; vol. iii. p. 1904.

V. Bede, in Joan. xvii. 3; vol. iii. p. 872.

² Novatian, de Trinitate, xvi. (alias xiv.); Migne's Patrol. vol. iii. p. 915.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xvii. 3; Homil. lxxx.

S. Basil, ad Eunomium, iv.; vol. i. p. 755.

S. Gregory Nazian. Oratio Theologica, iv. 13; vol. ii. p. 120.

S. Epiphanius, Hæres. lix. 32; vol. ii. p. 252.

Ancorato, ii.; vol. iii. p. 20.

[S. Cyril

S. Cyril Alex. Thesaurus, Assertio xxvii.; vol. viii. p. 421.

Theophylact, in Joan. xvii. 3; vol. i. p. 727.

Euthymius, in Joan. xvii. 3, vol. iv. p. 563.

⁴ S. Cyprian, Epist. ad Fortunat. de Martyrio, ii. p. 657.

⁵ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxvi. p. 531.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xvii. 3; vol. ii. p. 886.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xvii. 3; vol. viii. p. 1127.

⁶ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxvi. p. 532.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xvii. 5; vol. ii. p. 889.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xvii. 5; vol. viii. p. 1127.

tioned, the other Divine Persons are implied in Him. 'The Blessed and Holy Trinity,' says S. Athanasius, 'is indivisible and one in itself; and when the Father is mentioned, His Word is added, and the Spirit in the Son; and if the Son is named, in the Son is the Father, and the Spirit is not external to the Word' (ad Serap. i. 14).—DR. J. H. NEWMAN on S. Athanasius; Library of the Fathers, vol. viii. p. 33.

Man, that His Manhood may ascend to heaven. But His Manhood could not ascend to the Father unless it were united to the Godhead. This second manifestation, therefore, implies the first. He prays the Father that the glory which He had as God He may after His Resurrection have as God and Man. (3) That His glory may be manifested to His Apostles and other followers. This was fulfilled to the Apostles when they beheld Him ascend to heaven in the presence of angels (Acts i. 9, &c.); when they received from Him the promised gift of the Holy Spirit, with power to work miracles in His name.

Thus the glory which He had as God was made manifest by the Ascension of His human body into heaven; and this glory was made manifest to His Apostles and disciples.

In the next fourteen verses Jesus prays for His disciples.

6. I have manifested Thy name unto the men which Thou gavest Me out of the world: Thine they were, and Thou gavest them Me; and they have kept Thy word.

To manifest the name of the Father to the men whom He had given Him out of the world was the work which the Father had given Jesus to do, and which He says (verse 4) He had finished. It was not the name of God which Jesus was to manifest. This had been known long before among men. It was the name of the Father, the Father of His Son Jesus Christ, which He was to manifest among men; that is, to make known to them the Mystery of the Incarnation.

The disciples of Jesus, the men who had believed in Him, the Father had selected out of the world, and had given them to Him by drawing them to Him and influencing them to believe on Him. Jesus is now about to leave the world, and He prays the Father still to preserve and protect them. The argument, so to speak, by which He enforces His petition is that before they believed in Him they were the Father's. They had righteously observed the Law of Moses, they had walked in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, and thus they had been led on to believe in Him as the Messiah, the Son of God. They were the Father's in every sense. They had faithfully observed the law of God before the preaching of John the Baptist, and then they had believed in His Son Jesus Christ and had kept His word.

7. Now they have known that all things whatsoever Thou hast given Me are of Thee.

S. Now I have known.
Vulg. Nunc cognoverunt.

8. For I have given unto them the words which Thou gavest Me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from Thee, and they have believed that Thou didst send Me.

The plea which Jesus here urges in behalf of His disciples is, that they have believed that He is God Incarnate; that He, the Son of Mary, is the Son of God.

9. I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which Thou hast given Me; for they are Thine.

10. And all Mine are Thine, and Thine are Mine; and I am glorified in them.^a

S. And thou hast given them to Me, instead of all Mine are Thine, &c.
Vulg. Et mea omnia tua sunt, et tua mea sunt.

Jesus does not mean that He never prays for "the world," but at this particular time, in this His farewell address, He is praying for His Apostles and for those who should believe through their preaching. On His Cross He prayed for "the world," for them who believed not in Him but who crucified Him. Jesus had before said that His disciples were the Father's; now He repeats it and proves it by saying, "All things that are Mine are Thine, and Thine are Mine." By their belief in Him as the Messiah, by their union with Him as the Head, they glorified Him, and they would glorify Him yet more when they preached His Gospel throughout the world.

11. And now I am no more in the world, but

^a I am glorified in them (δοξάζομαι ἐν αὐτοῖς).—Here ἐν αὐτοῖς undoubtedly signifies something more than δι' αὐτῶν. He would have been glorified through them, if they had merely carried into effect, objectively, something conducive to the glory of Christ: He would have been glorified in them only in as far as they had in their own persons, in themselves, subjectively contributed to Christ's glory. In the same way the phrase 'living or being in God' appears to indicate with greater force and precision than could be done by διὰ, 'one's taking root,' as it were, 'in the strength of God.'

"When ἐν and διὰ are joined together in one and the same sentence, διὰ expresses the external means, while ἐν points to what has been done in or on somebody, and what, as it were, remains in or on him: Ephes. i. 7, ἐν φῶ (Χριστῷ) ἔχομεν τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ. Even when things and not persons are in question, the distinction between ἐν (referring to mental states or powers) and διὰ (of the means) is preserved, as 1 Peter i. 5, τοὺς ἐν δυνάμει θεοῦ φρουρούμενους διὰ πίστεως: i. 22, ἡγνίζοντες ἐν τῇ ὑπακοῇ τῆς ἀληθείας διὰ πνεύματος, and Heb. x. 10. Lastly, passages in which ἐν and διὰ, in reference to things and not persons, are interchanged, merely show that both prepositions are there employed to express the same meaning but with different degrees of precision, or under different aspects, Col. i. 16; 2 Cor. vi. 4, 8; 1 Cor. xiv. 19. Even in Matt. iv. 4, ἐν παντί ῥήματι does not appear to be exactly equivalent to ἐπὶ ἐν ἐπὶ ὅτῳ μόνῳ. The latter (ἐπὶ) denotes the ground, foundation; ἐν the spiritual element of life. At all events, it would be incorrect to render ἐν here by through."—WINER'S "Grammar of the New Testament," p. 407.

these are in the world, and I come to Thee. Holy Father, keep through Thine own name those whom Thou hast given Me, that they may be one, as We are.*

S.V. but they are in the world: S.V.A. keep them through Thine own name wherein Thou hast given them to Me: V. as We are also.

The word "merciful" is more often applied to the Father by those who pray to Him, than the word "holy" is. Jesus uses the term "holy" here because He is asking the Father to keep His disciples holy, separate, uncontaminated by the sins of the world, the unbelievers among whom they will have to dwell after His departure from them.

The principal subject of His prayer is that His disciples may be one as He and the Father are One. He had just united them in one in Himself. By giving them His own Body and His own Blood He had made them one in a sense in which they had never been one before, and some¹ suppose that Jesus alludes to this. Their oneness before, so far as it existed, was the effect of agreement in intellect, because they held the same opinion. Their oneness now arose from their union with Jesus the God Incarnate. Now they were one because they had been made one bread, one body, for they had all partaken of that one Bread (1 Cor. x. 17). Amidst the unbelief of those around them, Jesus prays the Father to keep them one, one in heart and will and love, as He and the Father were One in nature, in essence, as we speak.

12. While I was with them in the world, I kept them in Thy name: those that Thou gavest Me I have kept, and none of them is lost,

¹ S. Hilary Pict., de Trinitate, viii. 13; vol. ii. p. 246.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xvi. 11; vol. vii. p. 516.

² S. Augustine, in Psal. lxxviii. 27; vol. iv. p. 861.

* Verse 11. — Τήνων αὐτῶν ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι σου, οὓς δέδωκας μοι. 'Keep through Thine own name those whom Thou hast given Me.' A.V.; 'Keep them in Thy name which Thou hast given Me.' R.V. — rejecting οὓς introduced by Stephen.

'The Revisers (the Five Clergymen, 1857) have read δ, 'the name which,' with some MSS., the Syr., Arab., Vulg., A. Sax., Memph., Sahid., and Armen. versions. The Goth., Pers., Georg., and Slav., read οὓς. S. Chrysostom does not explain this clause, probably because he thought it one with οὓς δέδωκας μοι in the next verse, on which he dwells. Theophylact reads οὓς δέδωκας μοι; but Euthymius understood it to refer to ὄνομα, &c.' — S. C. MALAN on S. John's Gospel, p. 122, notes.

"After weighing over again Mr. Malan's corrected exhibition of the Egyptian and Syriac versions, which entirely alters the aspect of the question of the reading, we have now no doubt whatever that the accusative neuter δ, referring to the body of believers, is the true reading, and that the dative φ, referring to the name of God, is, as Stier, 'a grammatical alteration which misunderstood the meaning,' and the masc. οὓς, whom, as A. V., a correct explanation, and possibly, for general readers, the best rendering. First the neuter δ, that which, in apposition with the remote masc.

but the son of perdition; that the Scripture might be fulfilled.

S.V. omit in the world: V. in Thy name, wherein Thou gavest them to Me, and guarded them: S. in Thy name and guarded them. Vulg. Cum esset cum eis, ego servavi eos in nomine tuo. Quos didisti mihi, custodivi.

Jesus had kept all those whom the Father had given Him in the true belief and in the sincere worship of Him as God except Judas. He, yielding to the temptation of avarice, had betrayed Him to the Jews, as though He were a mere man, unable to resist. He is the son of perdition, as having brought perdition upon himself by his own deeds, as having incurred the penalty of perdition.

It is plain that in His prayer to the Father that His disciples may be kept from the evil of the world, and that they may be one, Jesus does not include Judas. When Judas left the upper room, he had cut himself off from communion with Jesus and His disciples.

The expression "that the Scripture might be fulfilled" does not imply that there was a necessity, that there was a line of action fixed which led to perdition, and that Judas was not a free agent and had not the power to avoid this. The phrase is used here and elsewhere to express in the strongest possible form God's foreknowledge of the events here related. Some² writers have been careful to set forth that Judas might have been saved if he had had the will, even after he had betrayed the Son of God. S. Peter quotes the prophecies in which the end of Judas was foretold, "Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein" (Ps. lxxix. 25): "and his bishoprick let another take" (Ps. cix. 8; Acts i. 20).

13. And now come I to Thee; and these

S. Leo Magnus, de Passione, Sermo i. 5; vol. i. p. 316.

Sermo iii. 3; vol. i. p. 320.

αὐτοῦς, them, most easily accounts for the variations, as attempts to remove the difficulty of construction. The evidence for οὓς, especially as regards the versions, is just so much additional evidence for δ. Next, the corporate unity implied in the apposition is one of the leading thoughts in the prayer, as already seen in ver. 2, and repeated hereafter in ver. 24, where there is a similar variety of reading. Third, the facts of the gift of the disciples themselves to Christ by the Father, and their separation from the world, are evidently the strong grounds on which this portion of the prayer relies in its appeal for their preservation. Lastly (not to speak of rhythm), it is almost, if not altogether, impossible to assign any satisfactory sense to the statement of the other reading, of the gift of the Father's own name to Christ, although S. Cyril attempts it. Now with the reading δ, how affecting does the intercession rise in fervour and power! How tenderly it pleads! How earnestly it wrestles! Yes, much more so even than with the whom of A. V., which yet happily retained the correct personal application: 'Holy Father, preserve them in Thy name—them, that gift of Thine to Me—that body, that little flock, which Thou hast given Me—that they may be as we are.' A similar correction must be made in ver. 12."—MCCLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 736.

things I speak in the world, that they might have My joy fulfilled in themselves.

Jesus is on the point of returning to the Father through His Death and Resurrection, and He prays this prayer alone, that His disciples may know that He has prayed thus for them, for their peace and safety in the world, and may rejoice as feeling sure that His prayer will be accomplished in them.

14. I have given them Thy word; and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

15. I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil.

16. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

Jesus uses the expression that His disciples "are not of the world" twice in these three verses: once as a reason why the world hated them, and again as a reason why the Father should keep them from the evil. His disciples had relinquished the unbelief and the sinful pursuits of those around them, and had given themselves up to the service of Jesus as the Son of God. This He urges as a reason why the Father should keep them from the evil, from sin and its punishment, as well as from him who is the tempter to all sin, the devil.

17. Sanctify them through Thy truth: Thy word is truth.

S V. A. through the truth: V. Thy word is the truth.
Vulg. Sanctificas in veritate. Sermo tuus veritas est.

The sanctification of which Jesus here speaks was not an initiative act. He had already said, after He had washed their feet, that with the exception of Judas, who had now left them, they were clean (xiii. 10), since that they had partaken of His own Body and Blood, whereby there would be a further sanctification of them body and soul. Here, therefore, he probably refers to the more complete sanctification of them by the Descent of the Holy Spirit at the day of Pentecost.

The sanctification of which heathen philosophers treat is obtained by following the dictates of reason, by performing some acts and abstaining from others. But high and noble as this often was, it failed to reach the depraved nature of man, it offered no remedy for a corrupt source of action.

The sanctification aimed at by the law of Moses was partial and prophetic. It removed all disqualification to an acceptable approach to God, but it did not cleanse the heart. It concerned the body rather than the soul, and foreshadowed that sanctification by the Holy Spirit which alone could cleanse the heart.

The sanctification of which Jesus here speaks is a supernatural work. It is derived to His disciples as the fruits of their union with Him, the Word made flesh, and through the operation of the Holy Spirit, the Third Person in the Trinity. This alone is true sanctification.

The revelation which Jesus had delivered them, as distinguished from the false teaching of the heathen, and from the imperfect teaching of the law of Moses, alone taught them the truth. The Incarnation with its consequences, God made Man and man made God, the Word made flesh and man united to Him, was the truth, the full and true teaching of Jesus to His disciples.

18. As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them^a into the world.

This is an additional reason why the Father should keep them and sanctify them. As the Father had sent His Son into the world to redeem and to sanctify the world, lost as it was in sin, so the Son had likewise sent His Apostles into all nations to teach and to sanctify them. The Apostles had need of a sanctification continually renewed for their work, lest in their intercourse with the world they should be infected by its sins or overcome by its temptations.

19. And for their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth.

Margin, truly sanctified.

In a few hours Jesus would sanctify Himself,¹ He would offer Himself on the Cross the Sacrifice for the whole world. By His Death He would make Himself the Victim, the Oblation, and would thus make atonement for the sins of the world. The effect of this His sanctification on His Apostles would be that they also in their degree would be sanctified, and would devote themselves and their lives as victims in the service of the world, in preaching to them the truth, the Gospel of Jesus.

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xvii. 19; Homil. lxxxii.
S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xvii. 19; vol. vii. p. 544.
Rupertus, in Joan. xvii. 19; vol. iii. p. 759.

^a Even so have I also sent them (καὶ ὡς ἀπέστειλα αὐτοὺς).—
"Ἀπέστειλα is = 'I sent them forth' (referring to the election of Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxvi. p. 536.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xvii. 19; vol. ii. p. 899.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xvii. 19; vol. viii. p. 1132.

the Apostles)."—WINER'S 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 292.

Hitherto Jesus has been praying for His disciples, for the Apostles and those who had been converted by His own teaching. In the rest of the chapter He prays also for those who should be converted by the preaching of His Apostles; that is, for the whole Church, for all in all ages who should believe in Him.

20. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on Me through their word;

S.V.A. which believe on Me.

Vulg. sed et pro eis, qui credituri sunt per verbum eorum in me.

21. That they all may be one: as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me.

As before, when Jesus prays for the Church the substance of His prayer is that they may be one; that His disciples may be one in faith, one in love, as He and the Father are One in nature or essence. Their union with Jesus is the root of their union, of their oneness with each other. Their love to Jesus is the root of their love to each other. Their oneness with each other is but the natural effect of their union with Jesus. Their love to each other is but the necessary fruit of their love to Jesus. Whatever in them is earthly and selfish is absorbed by their love to Jesus. Like fire, the love of Jesus is the source of life and zeal; like light, it refreshes and invigorates everything within its reach.

A union through agreement in opinion would not convince the unbeliever in Jesus. It must be a union through love, and the centre of that union and of that love must be Jesus.

22. And the glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them; that they may be one, even as We are One:

V. even as We are one: S. even as We.

Vulg. ut sit unum, sicut et nos unum sumus.

23. I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that Thou hast sent Me, and hast loved them, as Thou hast loved Me.

and that the world: S. omits that: V. omits and.

Vulg. et cognoscat mundus, quia tu me misisti.

The glory¹ of which Jesus here speaks has been explained in two ways. Some have thought that it means the glory of Sonship with the Father. This Jesus, as God, had naturally, so to speak; as Man, by the Hypostatic Union with the Divine nature. This glory He had given to them: "To as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God" (i. 12), not by nature, but by adoption; not by natural birth, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

Others² have explained this glory with reference to the communication of Christ's Divine and human nature to man in the Eucharist. This is the highest glory that can be conferred on man while on earth. By this mystical union with Him the many members of His Body are united in one. It may be that Jesus here prays that as His disciples, those who believe on Him, have already been united in one by the communication to them of His Divine and human nature in the Eucharist, this oneness may be ratified and continued and increased by the descent upon them of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost.

Thus they see both the privileges which belong to them here as His disciples and the reward which awaits them hereafter. The privileges are a share in the glory, a portion of the love which is shown by the Father to the Son, so far as this can be communicated to man. The reward is that they may dwell with Him hereafter and enjoy the beatific vision; that they may behold His glory, with all the transforming effects of that vision.

24. Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given Me, be with Me where I am; that they may behold My glory, which Thou hast given Me: for Thou lovedst Me before the foundation of the world.

25. O righteous Father, the world hath not known Thee: but I have known Thee, and these have known that Thou hast sent Me.

26. And I have declared unto them Thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith Thou hast loved Me may be in them, and I in them.

S. wherewith Thou hast loved them.

Vulg. ut dilectio, qua dilexisti me, in ipsis sit, et ego in ipsis.

Before (ver. 11) Jesus addressed the Father as Holy Father, here as Righteous Father. Then He had reference to their sanctification by the Holy Spirit: here He refers to the justice which the Father shows in giving them His glory, the beatific vision, as a reward for believing in Jesus His Son, and for believing in Him in spite of the unbelief of men generally.

During His own ministry on earth He had made known to them the name of the Father, not merely the knowledge of Him as God, but as God the Father. As they were able to bear it, He had revealed to them the knowledge of the Holy Trinity and of the Incarnation; and He here promises to do

¹ S. Ambrose, de Fide, v. 7; vol. iii. p. 667.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxvi. p. 537.

² S. Hilary Piet. de Trinitate, viii. 13; vol. ii. p. 246.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xvii. 22; vol. vii. p. 564.

that still more by the Holy Spirit, whom He will send to them on the day of Pentecost. The effect of the mission of the Holy Spirit upon earth will be the continuance of their union with Him and the increase of their love to Him and to each other.

With these words Jesus closed His prayer for His Church—which He had offered to the Father in the hearing of His eleven Apostles.

In delivering His instructions to His Apostles and in offering up His prayer to the Father for them He had occupied a considerable portion of time. But in this He was only acting in accordance with the custom of the Jews at the Passover Supper.* On that evening it was their custom to draw out their discourse to an unusual length, and to recount one by one some of God's merciful dealings with His people of old.

* Passover Supper.—"At their Passover Suppers they used large discourses seasonable and agreeable to the occasion; and especially in commemorating what God had done for that people."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Harmony of the New Testament,' sect. xxxv., vol. i. p. 262.

CHAPTER XVIII.

[1. Judas betrayeth Jesus. 6. The officers fall to the ground. 10. Peter smiteth off Malchus' ear. 12. Jesus is taken, and led unto Annas and Caiaphas. 15. Peter's denial. 19. Jesus examined before Caiaphas. 28. His arraignment before Pilate. 36. His kingdom. 40. The Jews ask Barabbas to be let loose.]
[Vulg. Jesus a Iudæis capitur, illis primum ad ipsius verbum in terram cadentibus; ad Annam et Caiapham ducitur: respondens interroganti pontifici, lapida caditur: ter a Petro negatur: ductus in Prætorium, dicit Pilato suum regnum non esse de hoc mundo: Iudæi Iesum mori cupiunt, soluto Barabba.]

AFTER Jesus had ended His prayer to the Father, He and His disciples left the upper room and went over the brook Cedron. Some¹ suppose that the strife among His disciples as to which of them should be the greatest (Luke xxii. 24) occurred after Jesus delivered His address to them; others,² and with greater probability, that it had occurred before. Whether they had sung the hymn before this discourse or after it is uncertain. Some have concluded that S. Matthew (xxvi. 30) meant to imply that the singing of the hymn took place after the discourse of Jesus and immediately before they left the room. But it would seem to have occurred more naturally after the eating of the Passover. The Hallel, or service of praise sung at the Passover, consisted of the series of Psalms from cxiii. to cxviii. The first portion, comprising Psalms cxiii. and cxiv., was sung in the early part of the meal, and the second part after the fourth or last cup of wine. This is supposed to have been the "hymn" sung by Jesus and His disciples as mentioned by S. Matthew (xxvi. 30) and S. Mark (xiv. 26). S. John omits all mention of "the hymn," probably because he omits all expression mention both of the Paschal Supper and of the Institution of the Eucharist.

The following may have been the order in which the events of this evening thus far occurred. They ate the Passover, singing the Psalms of Hallel in the proper place. Jesus then, having washed the feet of His twelve disciples, instituted the Eucharist. After that He indicated to S. John, by the giving of a sop to Judas, who should be the traitor. Judas now left the room, and Jesus began His discourse to His disciples, and, last of all, He offered His prayer to the Father. This being ended, Jesus and His eleven disciples leave the upper room and cross over the brook Cedron, or Kidron, to the Garden of Gethsemane.

For verse 1 see also S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 428.

1. When Jesus had spoken these words, He went forth with His disciples over the brook Cedron,^a where was a garden, into the which He entered, and His disciples.

¹ S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 3; vol. iii. p. 1163.
² Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xviii. 1; vol. viii. p. 1137.

^a Over the brook Cedron (πέραν τοῦ χειμαρρῶνος τῶν Κέδρων. S. τοῦ Κέδρον).—"The bed of the Kidron, although it lies at the bottom of a deep ravine, which is spoken of as a valley by Josephus, is in Scripture almost uniformly designated not as the valley, but as the brook; a distinction of usage which it is important to observe. The Kidron itself is no more than a winter torrent; and such is the strict meaning of the Greek word which is applied to it in the New Testament (χειμαρρῶς, John xviii. 1). Even in winter but little water is to be found in it except during the heavy rains, and only at intervals are any traces of a continuous watercourse discernible. The meaning of the name Kidron, denoting dark or blackish (or, according to Gesenius, turbid) is illustrated by a passage in the Book of Job, in which the corresponding Hebrew participle is employed. The Kidron is one of those brooks which are blackish by reason of the ice, and wherein the snow is hid: what time they were warm, they vanish: when it is hot, they are consumed out of their place" (Job vi. 16, 17).—"THURDY, Ancient Jerusalem," p. 211.

"The word 'Wady' is usually translated by us 'valley,' instead of 'Fiumara' or 'Nallah.' Nothing, in fact, is less like our English valley than a Syrian Wady: the former word would be more fitly Tischendorf, Synopsis Evangelica, pp. xlvii. and 141.

Robinson, Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, p. 140.

Arabized by Sahlah or Watâ. The Wady almost all the year round is a winding, broken line of bleached and glaring white, of lamp-black or of brown-gray rock faced with slime-crusted and water-worn pebbles, and scattered over with large angular stones. It becomes a storm-brook or rain-torrent; a raging, foaming, muddy débâcle, which for a few days or hours dashes the boulders together, hurries down tree-trunks, and is certain death to man or beast that would cross it.

"The Wady is in Hebrew nahal (נַחַל), and in Greek χειμαρρῶς, 'storm-brook' or 'rain-torrent.' It is opposed to the Hebrew Ge (גֵּי; for instance, 'Geben Hinnom') and the Arabic Fijj, 'a ravine,' præruptum coque neglectum. About a score of years ago, when I ventured to translate Wady by Fiumara, objections were raised to naturalizing the latter term: it was local, incorrect, unintelligible. But let the traveller in Southern Italy and in Sicily declare whether the mountains are not streaked with true Wadys, and whether the latter are not called Fiumare. The incongruity of such expressions as the 'Brook Kedron' and the 'Brook Cherith' (Wady el Kalt)—bone-dry lines of rock—must be palpable to all who see nature as it is."—BURTON, 'Unexplored Syria,' vol. i. p. 62.

(= Kidron

For verses 2-9 see also S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 434.

2. And Judas also, which betrayed Him, knew the place: for Jesus oftentimes resorted thither with His disciples.

3. Judas then, having received a band^a of men and officers from the chief priests and Pharisees,^b cometh thither with lanterns and torches^c and weapons.

^a S. and from the Pharisees: S. omits thither.

Vulg. Judas ergo cum accepisset cohortem, et a pontificibus et phariseis ministros, venit illuc, &c.

4. Jesus therefore, knowing all things that should come upon Him, went forth, and said unto them, Whom seek ye?

^a S. But Jesus knowing. V. and saith.

Vulg. Jesus itaque sciens omnia que ventura erant super eum, processit, et dixit eis.

"Kidron was so called from blackness; the waters being blackened by the mud and dirt that ran into it, it being, indeed, rather the sink or common sewer of the city than a brook."—LIGHTFOOT on John xviii. 1; vol. ii. p. 607.

"An objection has been drawn from the reading τῶν κέδρων, which, as in so many other instances, turns out upon examination to be favourable to the view against which it is directed. Arguing from the plural article which has the authority of a majority of the MSS., it has been inferred that the Evangelist was ignorant of the true derivation of the name Cedron or Kidron, which does not stand for 'cedars,' but is a Hebrew word meaning 'black' or 'dark.' But the Codex Sinaiticus reads τοῦ κέδρου, and a respectable minority of MSS. read τοῦ κέδρων, which may be restored to the text with little hesitation. If the original reading was τοῦ κέδρου, it is easy to understand how each of the two corruptions came to be substituted for it by copyists knowing only Greek. But on the other hand it is difficult to see how either τοῦ κέδρου could be corrupted into τῶν κέδρων, or vice versa, or how either of them could sink into such a monstrosity to a Greek eye and ear as τοῦ κέδρων. To suppose that this last was a correction on critical grounds would be a mistaken modernism. Even upon the supposition that τοῦ κέδρου or τῶν κέδρων was the right reading, it would still be credible that a person who was thoroughly acquainted with Hebrew might yet be struck by the similarity in form (he might think also in meaning) of the Greek word, and so be led to use it as a translation. I suspect that the history of geographical nomenclature would furnish analogies to such a case.

"It ought, however, to be noticed that a majority of the best professed critics (Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott) retain τῶν κέδρων; and the niceties of text-criticism are such that a positive opinion ought not to be expressed except by those who are thoroughly conversant with them. The genuineness of the Gospel, however, is not affected whichever way the decision may go."—SANDAY, 'Historical Character of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 240.

^a The band (τὴν σπεῖραν).—"This is spoken of definitely as being the particular cohort which, by order of the Procurator, attended on the Sanhedrin at the great festivals and preserved tranquillity."—MIDDLETON on the Greek Article, p. 261.

^b Then Judas having received a band, &c.—"Our English Version gives little idea of the exactness of the description in the verse which follows: 'Ο οὖν ἰουδας λαβὼν τὴν σπεῖραν, καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἀρχιερέων καὶ [ἐκ] τῶν φαρισαίων ὑπηρέτας, ἔρχεται, &c. Σπεῖρα is a Roman cohort, ἢ σπεῖρα that which garrisoned the citadel of Antiochia. It is probable that part only was present; but it is called ἢ σπεῖρα from its being under the command of the chief officer, or Chiliarch, of the cohort, who is mentioned in verse 12. The ὑπηρέ-

5. They answered Him, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am He. And Judas also, which betrayed Him, stood with them.

V. He saith unto them, I am Jesus.

Vulg. Dicit eis Jesus: Ego sum. Stabat autem et Judas qui tradebat eum, cum ipsis.

6. As soon then as He had said unto them, I am He, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

^a S. omits then: S. omits unto them.

Vulg. Ut ergo dixit eis.

7. Then asked He them again, Whom seek ye? And they said, Jesus of Nazareth.

Vulg. Iterum ergo interrogavit eos.

8. Jesus answered, I have told you that I am ταῖ are the servants or apparitors of the Sanhedrim. Dr. Scholten raises another objection which only recoils upon his own theory, founded on the introduction of the Roman soldiers. He thinks they were unnecessary, and that their presence is improbable. But it is obviously accounted for by the fear of the chief priests that the arrest of Jesus would cause an uproar among the people. At a time when 3,000,000 people were assembled in and round a city which usually held about 50,000, it must have been easy to collect a crowd anywhere; and Josephus testifies to the excitable condition of mind and frequent disturbances and bloodshed among the pilgrims attending the Passover. A little spark might easily set so much inflammable material into a blaze, especially if it arose from the Messianic expectations. Thus we read that 3000 men were slain in a sedition at the time of the Passover on the accession of Archelaus in B.C. 4. A little later there is an outbreak against Sabinus at the Feast of Pentecost, in putting down which Varus crucified 3000 men. Under the oppressions of Pilate the Jews were constantly upon the verge of insurrection, and the great centres of sedition were the religious feasts. The presence of the Chiliarch and his soldiers was therefore a natural and necessary precaution."—SANDAY, 'Historical Character of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 241.

^c With lanterns and torches (μετὰ φανῶν καὶ λαμπάδων).—"In rendering λύχνος and λαμπάς our translators have scarcely done the best in their power with the words which they had at their disposal. Had they rendered λαμπάς by 'torch,' not once only (John xviii. 3) but always, this would have left 'lamp,' now wrongly appropriated by λαμπάς, 'disengaged.' Altogether dismissing 'candle,' they might then have rendered λύχνος by 'lamp' wherever it occurs. At present there are] so many occasions where 'candle' would manifestly be inappropriate, and where therefore they are obliged to fall back on 'light,' that the distinction between φῶς and λύχνος nearly, if not quite, disappears in our Version.

"Λύχνος is not a 'candle' (candle, from candle, the white wax light, and then any kind of taper), but a hand-lamp fed with oil. Neither is λαμπάς a 'lamp,' but a 'torch,' and this not only in the Attic, but in the later Hellenistic Greek as well, and so, I believe, always in the New Testament. It may be urged that in the parable of the Ten Virgins the λαμπάδες are nourished with oil, and must needs therefore be lamps. But it is not so. Elphinstone ('History of India,' vol. i. p. 333) shows that in the East the torch as well as the lamp is fed in this manner. These are his words: 'The true Hindu way of lighting up is by torches held by men, who feed the flame with oil from a sort of bottle (the ἀγγεῖον of Matt. xxv. 4) constructed for the purpose.'—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 161.

He: if therefore ye seek Me, let these go their way:

9. That the saying might be fulfilled, which He spake, Of them which Thou gavest Me have I lost none.

For verses 10 and 11 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 436.

10. Then Simon Peter having a sword drew it, and smote the high priest's servant, and cut off his right ear. The servant's name was Malchus.

11. Then said Jesus unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the sheath: the cup which My Father hath given Me, shall I not drink it?

S.V.A. Put up the sword.
Vulg. Mitte gladium tuum in vaginam.

For verses 12-16 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 439.

12. Then the band and the captain and officers of the Jews took Jesus, and bound Him,

13. And led Him away to Annas first; for he was father in law to Caiaphas, which was the high priest that same year.

S.V. And led Him to Annas first.
Vulg. Et adduxerunt eum ad Annam primum.

14. Now Caiaphas was he, which gave counsel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man should die for the people.

Vulg. Erat autem Caiaphas, qui consilium dederat Iudeis.

Caiaphas, or Joseph Caiaphas, was high priest during the whole three years of our Saviour's ministry on earth. He was son-in-law to Annas, who had himself been high priest and who had acquired a great and unusual influence in affairs at Jerusalem. The influence of Annas was either the result of a sort of recognized official, or quasi-official, authority, which he possessed as ex-high priest, or as Sagan, that is, deputy; or it was the effect of his personal character as the head of a very powerful Jewish party, and as the father-in-law of Caiaphas.

It has been supposed¹ that it was with Annas that Judas had negotiated when he agreed to deliver up Jesus for thirty pieces of silver, and that this was the reason why Jesus was first carried to Annas, in order that Judas on producing his prisoner might receive his thirty pieces.

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xviii. 13; vol. vii. p. 593.
Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xviii. 13; vol. viii. p. 1139.

² S. Augustine, de Consens. Evang. iii. 6; vol. iii. p. 1170.
V. Bede, in Joan. xviii. 24; vol. iii. p. 900.

Euthymius, in Matt. xxvi. 57; vol. ii. p. 1063.

³ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xviii. 13; vol. vii. p. 593. [Janseusius,

⁴ The other disciple.—“The matter, as is well known, stands thus: While the Evangelist else always calls the disciples of Jesus by name when he brings them in as speaking or acting, one occurs who is never called by name, but only hinted at as ‘one of the dis-

More than one Evangelist relate that Jesus was examined by Caiaphas; by Caiaphas at first probably alone, or with only a few of the scribes and Pharisees, and then by Caiaphas at the head of the whole Jewish Council or Sanhedrin, and afterwards by Pilate. The point on which commentators are not agreed is whether Annas made any examination of Jesus; and if so, whether that examination is recorded by any of the Evangelists.

Some² of the ancient commentators held that in verses 19-23, S. John is recording the examination of Jesus made by Annas; others,³ and apparently with a greater degree of probability, that S. John is there relating the examination made by Caiaphas, a portion of the same examination as is recorded by S. Matthew xxvi. 57, &c., and S. Mark xiv. 53, &c. After verse 13, one early commentator⁴ supplies the words “But they send him bound to Caiaphas the high priest,” which he evidently looks upon either as part of S. John's text, or as necessary to complete his meaning. By rendering ἀπέστειλεν αὐτὸν ὁ Ἄννας, “Now Annas had sent Him” (ver. 24), our translators show that they understood these words to be not the relation in historical order of what was then taking place, but the narration or recapitulation of what had taken place some time before, but which had been omitted in its proper place. To the same effect the Syriac and Arabic translators have also rendered the passage.

If S. John is recording an examination held by Annas, it will follow that Peter's first denial took place in the house of Annas, and his other two in that of Caiaphas, though all the circumstances seem to indicate that all the three denials took place within one and the same court. To meet this difficulty, it was long ago suggested that Annas and Caiaphas may have dwelt within the same range of buildings, or in houses communicating with each other by the same courtyard.⁵ But this supposition has not been confirmed by any historical or collateral evidence. On the other hand, there is no necessity for any such conjecture, on the supposition that S. John merely alludes to the cursory visit that was made to Annas, the father-in-law of Caiaphas, and then passes on to record the examination made before the high priest, by which name Caiaphas is always meant in the examination of Jesus.

15. ¶ And Simon Peter followed Jesus, and so did another disciple: that disciple was known Janseusius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxxviii. p. 554.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvi. 57; vol. i. p. 427.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xxvi. 57; vol. viii. p. 503.

⁴ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xviii. 13; vol. vii. p. 593.

⁵ Euthymius, in Matt. xxvi. 58; vol. ii. p. 1065.

ciples’ (xiii. 23), or as ‘another,’ or ‘the other disciple’ (xviii. 15; xx. 2, 3, 4, 8), or ‘the disciple whom Jesus loved’ (xiii. 23; xix. 26; xx. 2; xxi. 7, 20). It may be taken as agreed that he is identical with the one who, as one of the first, with Andrew followed unto the high priest, and went in with Jesus into the palace of the high priest.

16. But Peter stood at the door without. Then went out that other disciple, which was known unto the high priest, and spake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

For verses 17 and 18 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 445.

17. Then saith the damsel that kept the door unto Peter, Art not thou also one of this Man's disciples? He saith, I am not.

18. And the servants and officers stood there, who had made a fire of coals; for it was cold; and they warmed themselves: and Peter stood with them, and warmed himself.

S. also stood there: S.V. and Peter also stood.
Vulg. erat autem cum eis et Petrus stans et calefaciens se.

For verses 19-23 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvi., page 441.

19. ¶ The high priest then asked Jesus of His disciples, and of His doctrine.

20. Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the Temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing.

S. And Jesus: S.V. A. whither all the Jews resort.
Vulg. Respondit ei Jesus . . . quo omnes Iudæi conveniunt.

21. Why askest thou Me? ask them which heard Me, what I have said unto them: behold, they know what I said.

22. And when He had thus spoken, one of the officers which stood by struck Jesus with the palm of his hand, saying, Answerest Thou the high priest so?

Margin, with a red.

23. Jesus answered him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but if well, why smitest thou Me?

S. But Jesus said unto him.
Vulg. Respondit ei Jesus.

24. Now Annas had sent Him bound^b unto Caiaphas the high priest.

For verses 25-27 see S. Matthew, chap. xxvi., page 445.

25. And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself. They said therefore unto him, Art not thou also one of His disciples? He denied it, and said, I am not.

A. He denied it and saith.
Vulg. Negavit ille, et dixit: Non sum.

26. One of the servants of the high priest, being his kinsman whose ear Peter cut off, saith, Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?

27. Peter then denied again: and immediately the cock crew.

For verse 28 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 451.

28. ¶ Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas

Jesus (i. 40). The fourth Gospel knows the Twelve as well as the first three Gospels do (vi. 13, 70; xx. 24). Of them it names Andrew four times, Simon Peter thirty-three times, Philip twice, Nathanael five times, Thomas five times, Judas Thaddæus once, and Judas Iscariot eight times. Of the five missing ones two only, James and John, the sons of Zebedee, can come into consideration. They belong to the most intimate circle of the disciples, to the three who stood nearest to Jesus. And yet these very two are not named. But the nameless one of the Gospel must have been one of the nearest. His whole attitude toward Jesus and his designation show this. Peter is named; and James died too early for him to be thought of. Only John is left. That just he should not be named must appear striking. The very absence of his name makes him remarkable. He steps forward with weight in the story at its most important points; at the beginning, at the last supper, at the hearing, at the cross, at the grave, and then at the Sea of Genesareth. But he does not name himself, because he does not wish to name himself, seeing that he is the relater. And as he does not name himself, no more does he name James, because he is his brother; and no more does he name Salome, because she is his mother. After the Lord's Supper he always appears in company with Peter, just as Peter and John are joined in Acts. It can be no other than John. . . .

"To what precedes another thing may now be added. The persons named in the Gospel are, as a rule, exactly designated by additions. Andrew is more closely marked as the brother of Simon Peter, Simon by the addition of Peter, Thomas by Didymus, one Judas by Thaddæus, and the other by Iscariot and by the words 'who betrayed Him.' On the contrary, the Baptist John is, as a rule, called only John. It does not seem necessary to the Evangelist to distinguish him from the Apostle John, because he, the writer himself, is this Apostle John. He does not name himself, but shows clearly enough who he is."—LUTHARDT, 'St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 182.

* For it was cold.—"I was surprised at the severity of the cold in Jerusalem. Twice I saw the city shrouded with snow, but the sun soon melted it away, leaving only white fleecy wreaths on the northern sides of the domes and cupolas."—ROGERS, 'Domestic Life in Palestine,' p. 390.

^b Now Annas had sent Him bound (ἀπέστειλεν αὐτὸν ὁ Ἄννας δεδεμένον).—"It has been supposed by some that this examination was held before Annas (John xviii. 13). But Peter's denials all took place in the house of Caiaphas (Matt. xxvi. 57; John xviii. 24, &c.), and Caiaphas alone was high priest. Hence the aorist ἀπέστειλεν, in John xviii. 24, is to be rendered by the pluperfect, 'Annas had sent.' Such a use of the aorist is not unfrequent where an earlier circumstance is inserted afterwards (Matt. xiv. 34; xvi. 48; comp. Mark xiv. 44; Luke xxii. 24; or also in relative clauses, Luke xix. 15; xxiv. 1; John xi. 30; Acts i. 2. See Winer's Grammar, 41, 5; Buttmann, 137, n. 1; Kühner, Ausf. Gramm., 444).—ROBINSON, 'Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek,' p. 226.

unto the hall of judgment: and it was early; and they themselves went not into the judgment hall, lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the Passover.^a Margin, Pilate's house.

To enter the house of a Gentile, and consequently of an idolater, would cause defilement to a Jew for the rest of the day, and would disabie him from partaking in the rites of his religion for the whole of that day. The Jewish officers, with probably a part of the Council, bring Jesus up to the gates of Pilate's house, the Prætorium, but decline to enter it "lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the Passover" (ἵνα φάγωσι τὸ πάσχα). This was early on the morning of Friday, the 15th Nisan, and the Evangelist expressly relates that Jesus and His disciples had already eaten the Paschal lamb on the evening before; that is, on Thursday evening, which was the commencement of the same 15th Nisan.

Several explanations of this have been offered. One is that the Jewish high priest and Council had been so intent on their one object, the death of Jesus, that they had neglected to kill and eat the Paschal lamb at the proper time, the evening before; that their time had been spent in arranging how to apprehend Jesus, and then, by a lengthened and elaborate examination of Him, to discover some ground on which to prefer a civil charge against Him before Pilate, — a charge of endangering the peace of the country and the safety of the Roman Government.

Great as was the hypocritical scrupulosity of the Jews, it is difficult to believe that they could carry it so far as to change the day for eating the Paschal lamb, the very sin of Jeroboam, for such a reason, and then scruple to enter Pilate's house lest they should be defiled, and so prevented from eating it on a day on which it was not appointed to be eaten.

Another explanation¹ is that the Jews had put off the day for eating the Paschal lamb in accordance with their traditions, which allowed them when two festivals on which no work, not even burying the dead, could be performed fell on two consecutive days, as the Passover day and the Sabbath on this occasion, to hold the former festival a day later.

But the most probable explanation² is that the words "that they might eat the Passover" do not refer to the Paschal lamb, which the Jews had already eaten at the same time that Jesus and His disciples had eaten their Paschal supper in the upper room; that they mean, either that they might go on keeping the Passover, or that they might partake of the extra sacrifices which were offered during the seven days of unleavened bread, as, for instance, the Chagigah or festival sacrifices, which were usual at all festivals, and especially at the Passover.

See also Commentary on S. Matthew xxvi. 20, page 415.

29. Pilate then went out unto them, and said, What accusation bring ye against this Man?

S.V. and saith.

Vulg. Dixit ergo Pilatus ad eos foras, et dixit.

30. They answered and said unto him, If He were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered Him up unto thee.

31. Then said Pilate unto them; Take ye Him, and judge Him according to your law. The Jews therefore said unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death:

A. But Pilate said: S. and judge according.

Vulg. Dixit ergo eis Pilatus: Accipite eum vos, et secundum legem vestram iudicate eum.

¹ Rupertus, in Matt. xvi. 2.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxxviii. p. 426.

^a But that they might eat the Passover (ἵνα φάγωσι τὸ πάσχα). — I. We have already shown, p. 353, that the eating of the Paschal lamb was never upon any occasion whatever transferred from the evening of the fourteenth day drawing to the close of it: no, not by reason of the Sabbath, or any uncleanness that had happened to the congregations, so that there needs little argument to assure us that the Jews ate the lamb at the same time wherein Christ did. Only let me add this: Suppose they had entered Pilate's house, and had defiled themselves by entering the house of a heathen, yet might not that defilement come under the predicament of טביל טביל? If so, then they might wash themselves in the evening and be clean enough to eat the Paschal lamb, if it had been to have been eaten on that evening, but they had eaten it the evening before.

II. Τὸ Πάσχα, the Passover, therefore, here doth not signify the Paschal lamb, but the Paschal Chagigah, of which we will remark these two or three things.

1. Deut. xvi. 2, 'Thou shalt sacrifice the Passover unto the Lord thy God, of the flock and the herd.' Where R. Solomon, 'The flocks are meant of the lambs and the kids; the herd of the Chagigah.' And R. Bechai in loc., 'The flocks are for the due of the Passover; the herd for the sacrifice of the Chagigah.' So also R.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xvi. 2; vol. i. p. 362.

² Cornelius a Lapide, in Matt. xvi. 2; vol. viii. p. 476.

Nachman, 'The herd for the celebration of the Chagigah; the flock for the Passover; the oxen for the Chagigah.'

2. The Chagigah was for joy and mirth, according to that in Deut. xvi. 14: 'And thou shalt rejoice in the feast,' &c. Hence the sacrifices that were prepared for that use are called sacrifices of peace, or Eucharistic offerings, sacrifices of joy and mirth.

3. The proper time of bringing the Chagigah was the fifteenth day of the month. They ate and drank and rejoiced, and were bound to bring their sacrifices of Chagigah on the fifteenth day, that is, the first day of the feast. . . .

III. It was the fifteenth day of the month when the Fathers of the Council refused to enter into the Prætorium lest they should be defiled; for they would eat the Passover, that is, the Chagigah.

1. The Evangelist expresseth it after the common way of speaking when he calls it the Passover.

2. The Elders of the Sanhedrin prepare and oblige themselves to eat the Chagigah [the Passover] on that day, because the next day was the Sabbath; and the Chagigah must not make void the Sabbath.

3. The Chagigah was not to be brought upon the Sabbath day, as also not in case of uncleanness. — LIGHTFOOT on S. John xviii. 28; vol. ii. p. 610.

32. That the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled, which He spake, signifying what death He should die.

S. omittit which He spake.

Vulg. Ut sermo Iesu impleretur, quem dixit.

The Jews deliver Jesus up to Pilate. When he requires to know the charge which they bring against Him, they reply in general terms that He is a malefactor, a breaker of the laws of the country, and as such they request Pilate to proceed against Him according to law. Pilate, who as yet did not understand that they intended the death of Jesus and not wishing to be merely the executioner of their decrees, offers them the choice of judging and punishing Jesus according to their own laws. This the Jews decline on the ground that death was the punishment which Jesus had deserved, and that it was not lawful for them to put any man to death. Some¹ have thought that they meant that it was not lawful for them to put any man to death at such a high festival as the Passover. But the most probable interpretation is² that, as a conquered nation, the Romans had withdrawn from them the right of capital punishment, and had reserved it for the Roman Governor alone.

Evidently the Jews had their reasons for declining to take Jesus and judge Him according to their own laws, even if they might inflict on Him the punishment of death, of which according to their laws, as they said, He was guilty. Perhaps they might wish to avoid the odium which the death of Jesus might bring on them from the people, who were at all times fickle, and who had often shown considerable favour towards Jesus, and who might look upon His death, if inflicted by the Jewish high priest, &c., as the result of their private envy and malice. They might especially wish to avoid the appearance of severity at such a festival of mercy as the Passover. If Pilate put Jesus to death, it would be on a more public charge and by a more ignominious death. If they accepted Pilate's offer and judged Him according to their own law, the charge against Him must be one of blasphemy, and His death would be by stoning (Levit. xxiv. 16), and the act would be that of the Jewish Sanhedrin alone. But if Pilate put Jesus to death, it must be on the ground of being a breaker of the law, a disturber of the peace of the country, a common criminal. His death would be by crucifixion, and the deed would be sanctioned by the authority of the whole Roman empire.

S. John has nowhere recorded that Jesus exactly said that He should be crucified, which S. Matthew does (xx. 18); but he has spoken of Him as using an equivalent expression with reference to His Death (xii. 32, 33).

33. Then Pilate entered into the judgment hall again, and called Jesus, and said unto Him, Art Thou the King of the Jews?

Pilate had come to the gate of the palace to the chief priests and his party to receive their charge against Jesus. This charge had no relation whatever to blasphemy, of which alone they professed after their examination to have found Him guilty. They were quite aware that Pilate would pay no attention to such a charge. They therefore say, "We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Caesar, saying, that He Himself is Christ a King." (S. Luke xxiii. 2.) 1. He was perverting the nation; 2. He was forbidding to give tribute to Caesar; 3. He was setting Himself up as King of the Jews. Here were three distinct charges, in every one of which Pilate, as the Governor of Judæa, had a direct interest. A new pretender to the throne of Judæa! This was of itself sufficient to arouse the prejudice of Pilate. Having heard this accusation, he returns to his prisoner in the palace, and said unto Him, "Art Thou the King of the Jews?"

34. Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of Me?

V.A. omittit him: S. hast thou said this thing?

Vulg. Respondit Iesus: a tenetis hoc dicis, an alii dixerunt tibi de me?

As Governor of Judæa, and therefore as the representative of Caesar its king, it was part of Pilate's duty to keep a ready ear to any claims that might be made to the sovereignty and to put them down at once. Probably the object that Jesus had in this question was to force on Pilate's mind that He had made no such claim, at least in the sense in which the Jews represented it.

35. Pilate answered, Am I a Jew? Thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered Thee unto me: what hast Thou done?

S. and the chief priest.

Vulg. Gens tuas et pontifices tradiderunt tui.

36. Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world: if My kingdom were of this world, then would My servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is My kingdom not from hence.

S. then would also My.

37. Pilate therefore said unto Him, Art Thou a King then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a King. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. xviii. 31. tract. xiv.; vol. iii. p. 1937.

² S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xviii. 31; vol. vii. p. 616.

³ Rupertus, in Joan. xviii. 31; vol. iii. p. 776.

S. Thomas Aquinas, in Joan. xviii. 31, Catena; vol. iii. p. 368.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. xli. p. 565.

Maldonatus, in Matt. xxvii. 2; vol. i. p. 439.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xviii. 31; vol. viii. p. 1140.

should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth My voice.

A. To this end also.
Vulg. Ego in hoc natus sum.

Having drawn his attention to the fact that Pilate had himself no ground for believing that He laid claim to Caesar's kingdom, but that this was a mere calumny of the Jews, Jesus answers his question, and admits that He is a King, and then points out the nature of the kingdom of which He is King—not one to interfere with the claims of Caesar. He takes no notice of the surprise and scorn which Pilate had thrown into his question, "Art Thou a King then?" Thou a King! (οὐκ οὖν βασιλεὺς εἶ σύ;)

Of the four Evangelists S. John alone relates the full answer of Jesus to Pilate's question, "Art Thou the King of the Jews?" The other three content themselves with giving only the latter part of His answer, "Thou sayest;" that is, "I am, as thou sayest, the King of the Jews." Jesus meant that He was the King of the Jews inasmuch as He was the Messiah, but He laid no claim to be king in the sense in which Caesar or Herod was king. But the latter was the sense in which the Jews invidiously represented His claim to Pilate.

The truth to which Jesus came to bear witness was (1) The knowledge of the One true God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, as opposed to the false gods of the heathen; (2) It was the Incarnation, that Jesus, the Son of God, the Word, was made flesh, was born of a Virgin in order to redeem man; (3) That true happiness consists not in the possession of the riches and pleasures of the body, but in an ever-increasing likeness to God; and that perfect happiness consists in the beatific vision, or in the vision of God which will transform man into His own likeness.

To be of the truth here means much the same as to be of God. Jesus had probably a double object in saying, "Every one that is of the truth heareth My voice," partly to show the iniquity of the Jewish rulers and partly to induce Pilate to act uprightly in his office as Judge. The Jewish high priest, scribes, and Pharisees were not of the truth. Their object was not the honour or the worship of God, but the gratification of their own selfish desires. Wealth, bodily pleasures, honour, or position in the world, was what they sought; how could they believe in Him who came to bear witness unto the truth?

38. Pilate saith unto Him, What is truth? And when he had said this, he went out again unto the Jews, and saith unto them, I find in Him no fault at all.

For verses 39 and 40 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 457.

39. But ye have a custom, that I should release unto you one at the Passover: will ye therefore that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

40. Then cried they all again, saying, Not this Man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber.^a S.V. omit all.

Vulg. Clamaverunt ergo rursus omnes.

* A robber.—"These two words, κλέπτης and λῃστής, occur together (John x. 1, 8), but do not constitute there or elsewhere a tautology, or mere rhetorical amplification. Both appropriate what is not theirs, but the κλέπτης by fraud and in secret (Matt. xxiv. 43; John xii. 6); the λῃστής by violence and openly (2 Cor. xi. 26): the one is the thief and steals; the other is the robber and plunders, as his name from λῆς or λεία (as our own robber from Raub, 'booty') sufficiently declares. They are severally the fur and the latro of the Latin: 'fures insidiantur et occulta fureda decipiunt = latrones audacter aliena diripiunt' (Jerome, in Osee, vol. vii. p. 1).

"Our translators have always rendered κλέπτης by 'thief,' they ought, with a like consistency, to have rendered λῃστής by 'robber,' but it also they have oftener rendered 'thief,' effacing thus the distinction between the two. We cannot charge them with that carelessness here, of which those would be guilty who now should do the same. Passages out of number in our Elizabethan literature attest that in their day 'thief' and 'robber' had not those distinct meanings which since they have acquired. Thus Falstaff and his company, who with open violence rob the king's treasure on the king's highway, are 'thieves' throughout Shakespeare's Henry IV. Still one must regret that in several places in our Version we do not find 'robbers' rather than 'thieves.' Thus at Matt. xxi. 13, we read: 'My house shall be called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves;' but it is 'robbers' and not 'thieves' that have dens or caves; and it is rightly 'den of robbers' at Jer. vii. 11, whence this quotation is drawn. Again (Matt. xxvi. 55), 'Are ye come out as against a thief with swords and staves for to take Me?' but it would be against some bold and violent robber that a party armed with swords and clubs would issue forth, not against a lurking thief. The poor traveller in the parable (Luke x. 30) fell not among 'thieves' but among 'robbers,' bloody and violent men, as their treatment of him plainly declared.

"No passage has suffered so seriously from this confounding of 'thief' and 'robber' as Luke xxiii. 39–43. The whole anterior moral condition of him whom we call the penitent thief is probably much obscured for us by the associations which naturally cling to this name. The two malefactors crucified with Jesus, the one obdurate, the other penitent, in all likelihood had belonged both to the band of Barabbas, who for murder and insurrection had been cast with his fellow-insurgents into prison (Mark xv. 7). He too was himself a λῃστής (John xviii. 40), and yet no common malefactor, on the contrary 'a notable prisoner,' δεσμιὸς ἐπίσημος (Matt. xxvii. 16). Now, considering the wild enthusiasm of the Jewish populace on his behalf, and combining this with the fact that he was in prison for an unsuccessful insurrection—keeping in mind, too, the condition of the Jews at this period, with false Christs, false deliverers every day starting up—we can hardly doubt that Barabbas was one of those fierce and stormy zealots who were evermore raising anew the standard of resistance against the Roman domination; flattering and feeding the insane hopes of their countrymen that they should yet break the Roman yoke from off their necks. These men, when hard pressed, would betake themselves to the mountains, and thence would levy petty war against their oppressors, living by plunder—if possible, by that of their enemies; if not, by that of any within their reach.

[^a And

Pilate was quite indifferent to the truth. He asked the question, "What is truth?" but he had no interest in it. He cared not to learn how it was that Jesus should claim to be a king, but that His kingdom was not of this world.

S. John omits many of the circumstances connected with the trial of Jesus before Pilate which the other Evangelists relate, such as the repeated accusations of Jesus by the chief priests and elders, to which He gave no answer, which are recorded by S. Matthew xxvii. 12-14; such as the sending to Herod and second proclamation of His innocence by Pilate, which is recorded by S. Luke xxiii. 5-16. S. John omits all this, and goes on to relate—and that in a condensed form—in the 39th and 40th verses, Pilate's attempt to release Jesus, and the opposition made to it by the rulers and by the crowd that had by this time collected at the gates of Pilate's palace.

"And yet of stamp and character how different would many of these men, these maintainers of a last protest against a foreign domination, probably be from the mean and cowardly paragon whom we call the 'thief!' The bands of these ῥαπταί, numbering in their ranks some of the worst, would probably include also some that were originally of the noblest spirits of the nation—even though they had miserably mistaken the task which their time demanded, and had sought to work out by the wrath of man the righteousness of God. Such a one we may well imagine this penitent ῥαπταί to have been. Should there be any truth in this view of his former condition—and certainly it would go far to explain his sudden conversion—it is altogether obscured by the name 'thief' which we have given him; nor can it under any circumstances be doubtful that he would be more accurately called 'the penitent robber.'"—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 153.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE TO CHAPTER XIX.

THOSE who love to linger on our Saviour's Passion and on the several instruments of His Passion will not think the following extracts too long.

The Crown of Thorns.—"We encamped about a mile to the south of Jericho, and stayed there all that day: there was a small wood to the east of us, where I saw the Zoccum tree; the bark of it is like that of the holly, and has very strong thorns, and the leaf is something like that of the barberry tree: it bears a green nut: the skin or flesh over it is thin, and the nut is ribbed and has a thick shell and a very small kernel: they grind the whole, and press an oil out of it, as they do out of olives, and call it a balsam. But I take it to be the Myrobalanum mentioned by Josephus (De bell. Jud. iv. 8), as growing about Jericho: especially as it answers very well to this fruit described by Pliny as the produce of that part of Arabia which was between Judæa and Egypt. Some think that Christ was crowned with this thorn."—POCOCKE, 'Travels,' ii. 32.

"Of all growths the most remarkable was the thorn, called in different parts of the country Billán, Tabbán, Atát, and Kibkáb, which forms large green prickly beds, shaped like giant mushrooms, pincushions, and pillows, with a contrast of small tender-coloured and delicately-shaped flowers profusely scattered over its spiny surface. This growth is nowhere more monstrous than over the upper slopes of the Hermon; and in places it stands up as if raised by a stem from the ground."—BURTON, 'Unexplored Syria,' vol. i. p. 87.

"Of other plants growing in the vale of Jericho we noticed the Nebk, the most abundant thorn in the Holy Land, and which it is commonly thought was that of which the crown of thorns of our Saviour was made. Hasselquist ('Voyage and Travels,' Eng. trans. p. 288) says, 'In all probability this is the tree which afforded the crown of thorns put on the Head of Christ: it grows very common in the East.' This plant was very fit for the purpose, for it has many small and sharp spines, which are well adapted to give pain. The crown might be easily made of these soft, round, and plant branches: and what in my opinion seems to be the greatest proof is that the leaves much resemble those of ivy, as they are of a very deep green. Perhaps the enemies of Christ would have a plant somewhat resembling that with which emperors and generals were used to be crowned, that there might be calumny even in the punishment."—WILSON, 'Lands of the Bible,' ii. 11.

"The thorn-bushes which during the summer and autumn had been so dark and bare were clothed with delicate green sprays of finely-serrated leaves, which almost hid the sharp, cruel-looking thorns. They were sprinkled with little round buds; when they opened, they threw out silky tufts of crimson, crowned with golden-coloured powder. The seed-vessel is round and divided into four quarters; at first it is almost white, but gradually becomes pink. At the apex there is a little green tuft in the shape of a Greek cross. When the seed is quite ripe, it is about half an inch in diameter and of a deep shining red colour. I have been told it was of this thorn that the wreath was made which once crowned the Head of Christ. It may be so: I have never seen a plant of which so beautiful and at the same time so cruel a crown could be composed. This thorn is the Poterium spinosum."

"About Easter it is seen in all its beauty, the leaves glossy and full-grown, the fruit or seed-vessels brilliantly red, like drops of blood, and the thorns sharper and stronger than at any other time. No plant or bush is so common on the hills of Judæa, Galilee, and Carmel as this."—ROGERS, 'Domestic Life in Palestine,' p. 171.

"An Arab brought us some dhom apples, the fruit of the nûbk, or Spina Christi. They were much withered, and presented the appearance of a small dried crab-apple. It had a stone like the cherry; but the stone was larger, and there was less fruit on it in proportion to its size. It was sub-acid, and to us quite palatable."—LYNCH, 'Expedition to the Dead Sea,' p. 286.

"The nûbk or lotus tree, the Spina Christi of Hasselquist, called by the Arabs the dhom tree, has small dark-green, oval-shaped, ivy-like leaves. Clustering thick and irregularly upon the crooked branches are sharp thorns, half an inch in length. The smaller branches are very pliant, which in common with the ivy-like appearance of the leaves sustains the legend that of them was made the mock crown of the Redeemer. Its fruit, resembling a withered crab-apple, is sub-acid, and of a pleasant flavour."—Ibid. p. 290.

CHAPTER XIX.

[1. Christ is scourged, crowned with thorns, and beaten. 4. Pilate is desirous to release Him, but being overcome with the outrage of the Jews, he delivered Him to be crucified. 23. They cast lots for His garments. 26. He commendeth His mother to John. 28. He doth. 31. His side is pierced. 38. He is buried by Joseph and Nicodemus.]

[Vulg. A Pilato flagellatus, variisque modis afflicto, et spinis coronatus, ad mortem depositus: rursusque a Pilato examinatus, ostentat illum desperatum latere in ipsius potestate: Pilatus motus alius. Iesum, quem regem dicit Iudeorum, morti adjuvare: Iesus baptizans sibi cruce, inter latrones crucifigitur: posito a Pilato super cruce titulo, deversique a multis testamentis, et sortis de tunica missa: Iesus multo latronum, matricumque latroni commendat: et sitiens aceto potatur, consummatusque omnibus tradit spiritum: fractis latronum crucibus, ex aperto Christi latere sanguis et aqua profluit: ejusque corpus myrrha et aloë conditum sepelitur.]

For verses 1-16 see also S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 460.

1. Then Pilate therefore took Jesus, and scourged Him.

2. And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns,^a and put it on His head, and they put on Him a purple robe,^b

3. And said, Hail, King of the Jews! and they smote Him with their hands.

S.V. And came to Him and said.

Vulg. Et veniunt ad eum, et dicunt.

4. Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith unto them, Behold, I bring Him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in Him.

S. Pilate went forth: V.A. And Pilate went forth: S. omits in Him.

Vulg. Exiit ergo iterum Pilatus foras: . . . quia nullam invenio in eo causam.

^a A crown of thorns (στέφανον ἐξ ἀκανθῶν).—After showing that δαδῆμα is the word always used for a kingly or imperial crown, and στέφανος for a conqueror's, Archbishop Trenchard goes on to say: "The only occasion on which στέφανος might seem to be used of a kingly crown is Matt. xxvii. 29, with its parallels in the other Gospels, where the wearing of a crown of thorns (στέφανος ἀκανθίνος) and placing it on the Saviour's head is evidently a part of that blasphemous caricature of royalty which the Roman soldiers would fain compel Him to enact. But woven of such materials as it was, probably of the Juncus maritimus, or of the Lycium spinosum, it is evident that δαδῆμα could not be applied to it; and the word therefore which was fittest in respect of the material whereof it was composed takes the place of that which would have been the fittest in respect of the purpose for which it was intended."—"Synonyms of the New Testament," p. 78.

^b A purple robe (ἱμάτιον πορφυρεῖον).—"The purple robe with which our Lord was arrayed in scorn by the mockers in Pilate's judgment-hall is called by S. Matthew (xxvii. 28, 31) χλαμύς, and we should not fail to observe the fitness of the word. Χλαμύς so constantly signifies a garment of dignity and office that χλαμύδα περιβλεῖν was a proverbial phrase for assuming a magistracy. This might be a chief magistracy; but χλαμύς, like palatamentum (which, and not regium, is its nearest Latin equivalent),

5. Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the Man!

Vulg. et dicit eis: Ecce homo!

6. When the chief priests therefore and officers saw Him, they cried out, saying, Crucify Him, crucify Him. Pilate saith unto them, Take ye Him, and crucify Him: for I find no fault in Him.^c

S. omits saying: S.A. Crucify, crucify Him: S. And Pilate.

Vulg. dicentes: Crucifige, crucifige eum. Dicit eis Pilatus.

7. The Jews answered him, We have a law, and by our law He ought to die, because He made Himself the Son of God.

S. omits him: S.V. and by the law.

Vulg. Responderunt ei Iudei: Nos legem habemus, et secundum legem debet mori.

far more commonly expresses the robe with which military officers, captains, commanders, or imperators, would be clothed (2 Macc. xii. 35); and the employment of χλαμύς in the record of the Passion leaves little doubt that these profane mockers obtained, as it would have been so easy for them in the Prætorium to obtain, the cast-off cloak of some high Roman officer, and with this arrayed the sacred Person of the Lord. We recognize a certain confirmation of this supposition in the epithet κόκκινος which S. Matthew gives it. It was 'scarlet,' the colour worn by Roman officers of rank. That the other Evangelists describe it as 'purple' (Mark xv. 17; John xix. 2) does not affect this statement; for the purple of antiquity was a colour almost or altogether indefinite."—Ibid., p. 177.

^c Crucifixion was in use among the Egyptians (Gen. xl. 19), the Carthaginians, the Persians (Esth. vii. 10), the Assyrians, Scythians, Indians, Germans, and from the earliest times among the Greeks and Romans. Whether this mode of execution was known to the ancient Jews is a matter of dispute. Probably the Jews borrowed it from the Romans. It was unanimously considered the most horrible form of death. Among the Romans also the degradation was a part of the infliction, and the punishment if applied to freemen was only used in the case of the vilest criminals."—Smyth's Bible Dictionary.

8. ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid;

9. And went again into the judgment hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art Thou? But Jesus gave him no answer.

S. omits again.

Vulg. Et ingressus est pretorium iterum.

10. Then saith Pilate unto Him, Speakest Thou not unto me?^a knowest Thou not that I have power to crucify Thee, and have power to release Thee?

S. A. omitt. Then. S.V.A. that I have power to release Thee, and have power to crucify Thee.

Vulg. Dicit ergo ei Pilatus: Mihi non loqueris? nescis quia potestatem habeo crucifigere te, et potestatem habeo dimittere te?

11. Jesus answered, Thou couldest have no power at all against Me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered Me unto thee hath the greater sin.

S.V. answered him: S.A. Thou hast no power.

Vulg. Respondit Iesus: Non haberes potestatem adversum me ullam.

12. And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release Him: but the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this Man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar.

S. but the Jews said.

Vulg. Iudæi autem clamabant, dicentes.

13. ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth, and sat down in the judgment seat in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha.^b

S.V.A. these sayings: S.A. omitt. but.

Vulg. Pilatus autem cum audisset hos sermones.

14. And it was the preparation^c of the Passover, and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King!

S.V.A. omitt. and before about.

Vulg. Erat autem pasceve pasche, hora quasi sexta, et dicit Iudæis.

15. But they cried out, Away with Him, away with Him, crucify Him. Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, We have no king but Cæsar.

S. But they said: V. Therefore they cried out.

Vulg. Illi autem clamabant.

16. Then delivered he Him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jesus, and led Him away.

For verse 17 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 463.

17. And He bearing His cross went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha:

S.V. And He bearing the cross by Himself.

Vulg. Et bajulans sibi crucem.

For verses 18–24 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 466.

18. Where they crucified Him, and two other with Him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst.

^a Speakest Thou not unto me? (ἐμὸν οὐ λαλεῖς;)—"The position of the personal pronoun here gives its prominence and emphasis as the word on which the whole stress of the question is made to turn. Pilate says unto Him, 'Is it to me that Thou speakest not? knowest Thou not that I have power?'"—The 'Church Quarterly Review,' April 1876, p. 137.

^b The Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha (ἀβδαρτων, Ἐβραϊστὶ δὲ Γαββαθᾶ).—"The specification of the place where Pilate gave judgment as the (tessellated) 'Pavement,' called in the Hebrew (from its being upon the rising ground) 'Gabbatha' (and therefore, we may add, from its having a Hebrew name, a fixed spot, and not the portable mosaic work which the Roman generals sometimes carried about with them), has been urged in favour of the view that Pilate's residence was not in Herod's palace, but in the tower of Antonia; because Josephus tells us that the whole of the Temple hill, on part of which the tower of Antonia stood, was covered with this tessellated pavement. There seems, however, to be direct evidence for the statement that the procurators of Judæa occupied the palace of Herod when in Jerusalem; and it would hardly be likely that, supposing the whole of the hill to be covered with mosaic, a particular portion of it should be singled out to bear the name. The space in front of Herod's palace may have been laid down with mosaic; or it is possible, as Dr. Wieseler supposes, that there may have been a permanent and not portable suggestion (= 'Gabbatha') so decorated. In any case we cannot but notice the accuracy of St. John's description."—SANDAY'S 'Historical Character of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 249. See also S. Matthew, chap. xxvii. p. 454.

^c The preparation.—"You will ask, whether any day going before the Sabbath was called Parasceve, the preparation. Among the Hebrews indeed it is commonly said, 'The eve of the Sabbath.' But whence is it called 'the preparation?' Either that they prepared themselves for the Sabbath, or rather that they prepared provisions to be eaten on the Sabbath."

After many quotations from Maimonides and other Jewish writers, Lightfoot concludes: "The preparation, or the preparation of the Passover, denotes not either the preparation of the Paschal lamb, nor the preparation of the people to eat the lamb; but the preparation of meats to be eaten in the Passover week. Nor in this place, if it be applied to the Sabbath, doth it denote any other thing than the preparation of food for the Sabbath now approaching. So that that day wherein Christ was crucified was a double preparation in the double sense alleged,—namely, the whole day, but especially from the third hour, was the preparation of the Passover, or of the whole week following; and the evening of the day was the preparation of the Sabbath following on the morrow."—LIGHTFOOT on S. Mark xv. 42; vol. ii. p. 358.

"παρασκευή τοῦ σάββατος does not mean the day of preparation for the Passover, but the preparation day (Friday) of the Passover week."—WINER'S 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 202. See also S. Matthew, chap. xxvi. p. 417.

19. ¶ And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross. And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS.

20. This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin.

S.V. in Hebrew and Latin and Greek.

Vulg. et erat scriptum hebraice, graece, et latine.

21. Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that He said, I am King of the Jews.

22. Pilate answered, What I have written I have written.

23. ¶ Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took His garments, and made four parts, to every soldier a part; and also His coat: now the coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout.

Margin, wrought.

S. which had crucified Jesus: S. omits and also His coat.

Vulg. Milites ergo cum crucifixissent eum . . . et tunica.

24. They said therefore among themselves, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: that the Scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, They parted My raiment among them, and for My vesture^a they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did.

S.V. omit which saith.

Vulg. ut scriptura impleteretur dicens.

For verses 25-27 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 471.

25. ¶ Now there stood by the cross of Jesus His mother, and His mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas,^b and Mary Magdalene.

Margin, Cleophas.

Vulg. Maria Cleophas.

26. When Jesus therefore saw His mother, and the disciple standing by, whom He loved,

He saith unto His mother, Woman, behold thy son!

S. Now, when Jesus saw.

27. Then saith He to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home.

For verses 28-30 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 474.

28. ¶ After this, Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the Scripture might be fulfilled,^c saith, I thirst.

29. Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to His mouth.

V.A. omit Now: S. therefore they put a sponge full of vinegar upon hyssop.

Vulg. Vas ergo erat positum aceto plenum. Illi autem spongiam plenam aceto, hyssopo circumponentes, obtulerunt ori ejus.

30. When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, He said, It is finished: and He bowed His head, and gave up the ghost.

For verses 31-37 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 478.

31. The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the Sabbath day, (for that Sabbath day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

32. Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with Him.

33. But when they came to Jesus, and saw that He was dead already, they brake not His legs:

S. But when they came to Jesus, they found that He was dead already, and brake not.

Vulg. Ad Iesum autem cum venissent, ut viderent eum jam mortuum, non frangerunt ejus crura.

34. But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced His side, and forthwith came there out blood and water.

^a My vesture. — "ἵματιός, a word of comparatively late introduction into the Greek language, is seldom if ever used except of garments more or less splendid, stately, costly. It is the 'vesture'—this word expressing it well (cf. Gen. xli. 42; Ps. cii. 26; Rev. xix. 13, English Version)—of kings, thus of Solomon in all his glory (1 Kings x. 5): is associated with gold and silver as part of a precious spoil (Exod. iii. 22; xii. 35): is found linked with such epithets as ἐνδοξος (Luke vii. 25), ποικίλος (Ezek. xvi. 18), διάγλαυρος (Ps. xlv. 10), πολυτελής (1 Tim. ii. 9): is applied to our Lord's χιτὼν (Matt. xxvii. 35; John xiii. 24), which was ἁγίος, and had that of cost and beauty about it which made even the rude soldiers unwilling to rend, and so to destroy it."—ARCHBISHOP TILGHEN on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 176.

^b His mother's sister, and Mary the wife of Cleophas.—"John xix. 25 is commonly taken as referring to three women: but the Peshito puts an 'and' in, and hence Wieseler, and after him Lücke, Ewald, and Meyer, count four. In this case the sister of the mother of Jesus is understood to be the mother of the Evangelist, Salome, so that John would have been the first cousin of Jesus."—LUTHARDT, 'St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel,' p. 2.

^c That the Scripture might be fulfilled (ἵνα τελεσθῇ ἡ γραφή). —"ἵνα here means in order that, whether with Luther we join ἵνα τελεσθῇ to πάντα ἡδὲ τελέσται (so also Meyer), or with Lücke and De Wette to λέγει following. In the latter case ἵνα denotes a purpose attributed by John to Jesus."—WILKER'S 'Grammar of the New Testament,' p. 480.

35. And he that saw it bare record, and his record is true; and he knoweth that he saith true, that ye might believe.

S.A. that ye also might believe.

Vulg. Et qui vidit, testimonium perhibuit . . . ut et vos credatis.

36. For these things were done, that the Scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of Him shall not be broken.

Vulg. Os non comminuetis ex eo.

37. And again another Scripture saith, They shall look on Him whom they pierced.

For verses 38-40 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 483.

38. ¶ And after this Joseph of Arimathæa,^a being a disciple of Jesus, but secretly for fear of the Jews, besought Pilate that he might take away the Body of Jesus: and Pilate gave him leave. He came therefore, and took the Body of Jesus.

S. They came therefore and took Him: V. took His Body.

Vulg. Venit ergo, et tulit corpus Iesu.

39. And there came also Nicodemus, which at the first came to Jesus by night, and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an hundred pound weight.

V. A. which at the first came to Him by night.

Vulg. qui venerat ad Iesum nocte primum.

40. Then took they the Body of Jesus, and wound it in linen clothes with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury.

A. the Body of God: S. was to bury.

Vulg. Acciperunt ergo corpus Iesu . . . sicut mos est Iudeis sepelire.

For verses 41 and 42 see S. Matthew, ch. xxvii., page 485.

41. Now in the place where He was crucified there was a garden; and in the garden a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid.

42. There laid they Jesus therefore because of the Jews' preparation day, for the sepulchre was high at hand.

* Arimathæa.—"A tradition as early as the sixth century makes Neby Samwil the Ramah, or Ramathaim-Zophim, of the Old Testament, the birthplace, residence, and burial-place of Samuel. But a comparison of the statements made in Scripture with the topography of the country shows this tradition to be incorrect. When Saul was in search of his father's asses, he visited Samuel at Ramah. On his departure for Gibeah, his native city, the prophet anointed him king, and described his way home as leading 'by Rachel's sepulchre on the border of Benjamin' (1 Sam. x. 2). Gibeah was situated on Tuleil el Fûl, only two and a half miles east from this spot; and Rachel's sepulchre is well known to be nearly seven miles south. Hence every step Saul would have taken from Neby Samwil towards Rachel's sepulchre would have led him farther away from Gibeah."—MURRAY'S 'Handbook on Palestine,' p. 217.

"Within the last few centuries a monkish tradition has identified Ramleh with Ramathaim-Zophim, or Ramah of Samuel, and with the Arimathæa of the New Testament. For this, however, there is no evidence. The two names have no analogy—Ramleh signifying 'sandy' and Ramah a 'hill.' . . . In history there is no mention of Ramleh earlier than the ninth century, and Abulfeda states that it was founded in the earlier part of the eighth century by the Kalif Suleimân, after he had destroyed Ludd. The same fact is recorded by William of Tyre and others."—Ibid. p. 263.

Discussing the site of Arimathæa, Robinson sums up thus: "All this serves to show first that Arimathæa was not Renthieh, which lies directly on the road between Antipatris and Lydda; and secondly, that it probably did lie somewhere between Lydda and Nobe, now Beit Nûba, a mile north-east of Yâlo. Perhaps it is not too much to hope that the ancient site of Arimathæa may hereafter be discovered somewhere in that region, which as yet has not been fully explored."—ROBINSON'S 'Later Researches,' p. 142.

Dean Stanley says the position of Ramah "is the most complicated and disputed problem of sacred topography. It is almost the only instance in which the text of the Scriptural narrative (1 Sam. ix. 1; x. 10) seems to be at variance with the existing localities."

He enumerates eight different places, all of which have been thought to be the ancient Arimathæa, and specifies the nature of their respective claims. (See 'Sinai and Palestine,' p. 224.)

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

Sepulchres.—"There were more common and more noble sepulchres. The common were in public burying-places, as it is with us; but they were without the city. And through that place was no current of water to be made, through it was no public way to be; cattle were not to feed there, nor was wood to be gathered from thence.

"The more noble sepulchres were hewn out in some rock, in their own ground, with no little charge and art. You have the form of them described in these words:

"He that selleth his neighbour a place of burial, and he that takes of his neighbour a place of burial, let him make the inner parts of the cave four cubits and six cubits: and let him open within it eight sepulchres.' They were not wont, say the glosses, to bury men of the same family here and there, scatteringly, and by themselves, but altogether in one cave: whence if anyone sells his neighbour a place of burial, he sells him room for two caves, or hollows on both sides, and a floor in the middle.

"The tradition goes on. 'Three sepulchres are on this side and three on that, and two near them. And those sepulchres are four cubits long, seven high, and six broad.'

"To those that entered into the sepulchral cave and carried the bier, there was first a floor where they stood and set down the bier, in order to their letting it down into the sepulchre: on this and the other side there was a cave or a hollowed place, deeper than the floor by four cubits, into which they let down the corpse, divers coffins being there prepared for divers corpses. R. Simeon saith, 'The hollow of the cave consists of six cubits and eight cubits, and it opens thirteen sepulchres within it, four on this side and four on that, and three before them, and one on the right hand of the door and another on the left. And the floor within the entrance into the cave consists of a square, according to the dimensions of the bier and of them that bear it, and from it open two caves, one on this side, another on that.' R. Simeon saith, 'Four at the four sides of it'

Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel saith, 'The whole is made according to the condition of the ground.'

"From these things now spoken you may more plainly understand many matters which are related of the sepulchre of our Saviour.

"Mark xvi. 5: The women 'entering into the sepulchre saw a young man sitting on the right side:' in the very floor immediately after the entrance into the sepulchre.

"Luke xxiv. 3: 'Going in they found not His Body,' &c. Verse 5: 'While they bowed down their faces to the earth.' Verse 12: 'Peter ran to the sepulchre; and when he had stooped down, he saw the linen clothes.' That is, the women and Peter after them, standing in the floor, bow down their faces and look downward into the place where the sepulchres themselves were, which, as we said before, was four cubits deeper than the floor.

"John xx. 5: 'The disciple whom Jesus loved came first to the sepulchre; and when he had stooped down (standing on the floor, that he might look into the burying-place) saw the linen clothes lie: yet went he not in. But Peter went in,' &c.; that is, from the floor he went down into the cave itself, where the rows of the graves were (in which, nevertheless, no corpses had been as yet laid besides the Body of Jesus): thither also after Peter John goes down.

"And verse 11: 'But Mary weeping stood at the sepulchre without: and while she wept, she stooped down to the sepulchre, and saw two angels in white sitting, one at the head and another at the feet, where the Body of Christ had lain.'

"She stood at the sepulchre without; that is, within the cave on the floor, but without that deeper cave where the very graves were, or the places for the bodies: bowing herself to look down thither, she saw two angels at the head and foot of that coffin wherein the Body of Christ had been laid."—LIGHTFOOT, 'Chorograph. Cent. of the Land of Israel,' vol. ii. p. 89.

CHAPTER XX.

[1. Mary cometh to the sepulchre: 3. so do Peter and John, ignorant of the Resurrection. 11. Jesus appeareth to Mary Magdalene, 19. and to His disciples. 24. The incredulity, and confession of Thomas. 30. The Scripture is sufficient to salvation.]

[Vulg. Maria Magdalene prima venit ad monumentum, deinde Petrus et Ioannes: illa plorans ad monumentum videt angelos, tandemque Iesum agnoscit: qui apparens apostolis, pacem illis optat: et ostensis manibus ac latere, dat eis Spiritum sanctum, ut peccata remittant ac retineant: rursumque non credenti Thomæ apparens cum reliquis discipulis, corpus præbet palpandum; beatos dicens qui in ipso non viso crediderunt: nulla Christi signa non sunt in hoc libro scripta.]

For verse 1 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 490.

1. The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene^a early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre.

S. from the door of the sepulchre.
Vulg. et vidit lapidem sublatum a monumento.

For verses 2-10 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 493.

2. Then she runneth, and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple,^b whom Jesus loved, and saith unto them, They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid Him.

Either the women did not understand the angel's words that Jesus was risen, or they did not believe them. For Mary repeats to the disciples their first impression, "They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid Him." S. John names only Mary as going to the sepulchre, but her words show that others were with her. The expression "we know not" shows that she is speaking for herself and her companions; in fact as the leader of the party.

3. Peter therefore went forth, and that other disciple, and came to the sepulchre.

S. omits and came to the sepulchre.
Vulg. et venerunt ad monumentum.

4. So they ran both together: and the other

* Mejdél, Magdala.—"One hour's ride along the shore brings us to this wretched hamlet, now the only inhabited spot in the plain of Gennesareth. In riding along, the wonderful richness of the soil strikes us. Nowhere else have we encountered such thistles, such grass, and such weeds—and such grain on the few spots cultivated. Josephus described Gennesareth eighteen centuries ago as an earthly Paradise, where the choicest fruits grew luxuriantly and eternal spring reigned. His words were not much exaggerated; for now, though more a wilderness than a paradise, none can fail to remark its fertility. The shore is lined with a wide border of oleander; behind this come tangled thickets of the lote-tree; and here and there are little groups of dwarf palm. The voice of the turtle is heard on every side, and quails spring up from our feet at almost every step.

"Mejdél contains about twenty huts and the ruins of a tower of modern date. Between the village and the shore are foundations and heaps of rubbish. Yet the name of this hamlet has been incorporated into every language of Christendom. It was the birthplace of Mary Magdalene, out of whom Jesus 'had cast seven devils,' and to whom He appeared immediately after His Resurrection. The name and sight of the village will call up that solemn scene related in John xx. 11-18."—MURRAY'S 'Handbook to Palestine', p. 408.

"But the most sacred region of the lake—shall we not say of the world?—is the little plain of Gennesareth, which has been already mentioned, on the western shore." Few scenes have undergone a greater change. Of all the numerous towns and villages in what must have been the most thickly-peopled district of Palestine one only remains. A collection of a few hovels stands at the south-eastern corner of the plain—its name hardly altered from the ancient Magdala, or Migdol—so called, probably, from a watch-tower, of which ruins appear to remain, that guarded the entrance of the plain. Through its connection with her whom the long opinion of the Church identified with the penitent sinner, the name of that ancient tower has now been incorporated into all the languages of Europe. A large solitary thorn-tree stands beside it. Its situation, otherwise unmarked, is dignified by the high limestone rock which overhangs it on the south-west, perforated with caves recalling by a curious, though doubtless unintentional, coincidence the scene of Correggio's celebrated picture."—STANLEY'S 'Sinai and Palestine', p. 382.

^b And cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple (ἐρχεται πρὸς Σίμωνα Πέτρον, καὶ πρὸς τὸν ἄλλον μαθητὴν).—"When two or more substantives, governed by one and the same preposition and directly joined together by a copula, follow each other, the preposition is most naturally repeated if the substantives in question denote things conceived to be distinct and independent. Bengel's conclusion from the repetition of the preposition here is that the two disciples were not in the same place, 'non una fuisse utrumque discipulum.'"—WINER'S 'Grammar of the New Testament', p. 439.

disciple did outrun Peter, and came first to the sepulchre.

S. And they ran both together, but the other did outrun Peter: A. but the other.
Vulg. Currebant autem duo simul, et ille alius discipulus prececurrit citius Petro.

5. And he stooping down, and looking in, saw the linen clothes lying; yet went he not in.

6. Then cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the sepulchre, and seeth the linen clothes lie,

S.V. Then cometh also Simon Peter.
Vulg. Venit ergo Simon Petrus.

7. And the napkin, that was about His head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself.

8. Then went in also that other disciple, which came first to the sepulchre, and he saw, and believed.

9. For as yet they knew not the Scripture, that He must rise again from the dead.

S. For as yet he knew not.
Vulg. Nondum enim sciebant scripturam.

10. Then the disciples went away again unto their own home.

For verses 11-17 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 495.

11. ¶ But Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping; and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the sepulchre,

S. But Mary stood in the sepulchre: A. omits without.
Vulg. Maria autem stabat ad monumentum foris plorans.

12. And seeth two angels in white sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the Body of Jesus had lain.

S. omits two.
Vulg. Et vidit duos angelos in albis.

13. And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him.

S. omits And before they say: V. And she saith.
Vulg. Dicunt ei illi: Mulier, quid ploras? Dicit eis.

14. And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus.

S.V. A. omits And.
Vulg. Hæc cum dixisset.

* The gardener (ὁ κηπουρός).—"When Mary Magdalene was addressed by our Lord after His Resurrection, she, without looking up, supposed Him to be the gardener, which gives one the idea of one who cultivated the garden; but the word, in the original,

I.

15. Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou? She, supposing Him to be the gardener,^a saith unto Him, Sir, if Thou have borne Him hence, tell me where Thou hast laid Him, and I will take Him away.

S. Now she supposing.
Vulg. Illa existimans quia hortulanus esset.

16. Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself, and saith unto Him, Rabboni; which is to say, Master.

S. But she turned herself: S.V. and saith unto Him in Hebrew.
Vulg. Conversa illa, dicit ei: Rabbuni.

17. Jesus saith unto her, Touch Me not; for I am not yet ascended to My Father: but go to My brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto My Father, and your Father; and to My God, and your God.

S.V. to the Father: S. but (A. omits) go to the brethren: S. Behold, I ascend.

Vulg. Dicit ei Jesus: Noli me tangere, nondum enim ascendi ad Patrem meum: vade autem ad fratres meos et dic eis: Ascendat Pater meus, et Pater vestrum; Deum meum, et Deum vestrum.

For verse 18 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 497.

18. Mary Magdalene came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord, and that He had spoken these things unto her.

For verses 19-23 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 499.

19. ¶ Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

S.V. A. omits assembled: S. omits unto them.
Vulg. ubi erant discipuli congregati . . . et dixit eis.

20. And when He had so said, He shewed unto them His hands and His side. Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord.

21. Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you.

S. Then said He: even so will I send you.
Vulg. Sicut misit me Pater, et ego mitto vos.

22. And when He had said this, He breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost:

23. Whose soever sins ye remit, they are signified the person who had the watch and ward of the garden, viz. for preventing injury to the sepulchre."—LEWIN, "Sage of Jerusalem," p. 399.

See also Robinson, "Lexicon on the New Testament," vol. x.

G N

remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.

S. It shall be remitted unto them.
Vulg. Quorum remisistis peccata, remittuntur eis: et quorum retinueritis, retenta sunt.

For verses 24–29 see S. Matthew, ch. xxviii., page 503.

24. ¶ But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

S. was not with them. When therefore Jesus came, the other disciples said unto him.

Vulg. non erat cum eis quando venit Iesus.

25. The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe.

S. and put my finger into His hand: A. and put my finger into the place of the nails.

Vulg. Nisi videro in manibus ejus fixuram clavorum, et mittam digitum meum in locum clavorum, et mittam manum meam in latus ejus, non credam.

26. ¶ And after eight days again His disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you.

S. the disciples.

Vulg. Et post dies octo, iterum erant discipuli ejus intus.

27. Then saith He to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold My hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into My side: and be not faithless, but believing.

28. And Thomas answered and said unto Him, My Lord and my God.

S.V. omit And.

Vulg. Respondit Thomas, et dixit ei: Dominus meus et Deus meus.

29. Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen Me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

S. But Jesus said: S.V.A. omit Thomas: S. thou hast also believed: S. that have not seen Me: A. omits and before yet.

Vulg. Dixit ei Iesus: Quia vidisti me Thomas, credidisti: beati qui non viderunt et crediderunt.

30. ¶ And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of His disciples, which are not written in this book:

V.A. of the disciples.

Vulg. in conspectu discipulorum suorum.

31. But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His name.

S. omits and: S. everlasting life.

Vulg. et ut credentes vitam habeatis in nomine ejus.

Either S. John here means to say that he has omitted many signs which Jesus did all through His ministry, and therefore before the unbelieving multitude as well as before His disciples, in order to prove to them that He was God, or he refers only to signs which Jesus wrought after His Resurrection and during His forty days' intercourse with His disciples, and therefore in the presence of those only who believed on Him, in order to prove to them the truth of His Resurrection.

The Evangelist here declares the object with which he wrote his Gospel, which he expresses in much the same terms as he had at the beginning, namely, the salvation of man, that they might believe in Jesus: that He is the Saviour of the world; that He is the Christ, the Messiah spoken of by the prophets; that He is God; and that to all who believe on Him and obey His commands He bestows life, the life of grace here and the life of glory hereafter.

CHAPTER XXI.^a

[1. Christ appearing again to His disciples was known of them by the great draught of fishes. 12. He dineth with them: 15. earnestly commandeth Peter to feed His lambs and sheep: 18. foretelleth him of his death: 22. rebuketh his curiosity touching John. 25. The conclusion.]

[Vulg. Piscantibus discipulis comprehendere facit Jesus copiosam piscium multitudinem: quo signo Petrus per Iohannem Iohannem agnoscens, mittit se in mare: et facto prandio, de amore in Christum ter interrogatus, ter accipit pascendas ipsius oves: et de futura passione sua admonetur, frustra de Iohannis morte curiose scrutatus: non omnia Christi facta scripta sunt.]

It did not escape the notice of the early commentators on S. John that the ending of chap. xx. is of such a nature that, if no other chapter had been added, it would have served as a sufficiently formal ending of the Gospel. The reason of this they¹ supposed to lie in the difference between the miracles recorded in the first twenty chapters and that in chapter xxi. The former, as the Evangelist tells us, was written to produce faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God; and the latter was intended to foreshadow the future success of the Apostles in the publication of this faith. This seems to have been the generally received explanation of the double ending of S. John's Gospel, so to speak, up to the sixteenth century.

In the sixteenth century arose what has been called the Appendix-theory, or the theory that chapter xxi. was either not written by S. John at all, or, if by him, not when he wrote the first twenty chapters, but at some later time. We find Jansenius,² the bishop of Ghent, in his 'Concordia Evan-

¹ S. Augustine, in Joan. xx. 30, tract. cxii.; vol. iii. p. 1959.

V. Bede, in Joan. xx. 30; vol. iii. p. 921.

^a Chapter XXI.—On the evidence of the authorship of the twenty-first chapter, it is to be observed that all the MSS. have it without any distinction or separation of it from the body of the Gospel; that it is also received as an integral part of the Gospel in the Ancient Versions and Expositions of it; and that the internal evidence is very strong in favour of its genuineness. For example, this chapter contains many expressions which are characteristic of, and peculiar to, S. John. . . .

"This chapter must have been written in S. John's lifetime; for if it had been written after his death, it is clear that the observation on our Lord's prophecy in ver. 23 would have been illustrated by an addition to the effect that S. John had died; and that therefore the prophecy could not have meant that he would not die. And it is not probable that any other person would have ventured, during S. John's lifetime, or have been permitted by him, to add to his Gospel.

"Besides, the writer of this chapter distinctly claims to be S. John. See ver. 24 compared with the preceding verses 20-23.

"And, lastly, this chapter has been received by the Universal Church of Christ as an integral part of S. John's Gospel.

"There does not seem, therefore, to be any ground for doubting that this chapter was written by S. John.

"But may it not have been written and published by S. John himself after he had written and published the preceding part of the Gospel? May it not (as some suppose) have been annexed as an Appendix to his Gospel by himself?

"In reply to this question, let it be observed that S. John's Gospel was written in order to be read publicly in the churches of Christendom. Copies were made of it for this purpose as soon as it was written. And if two editions had been published of it, it is probable that some MSS. of the Gospel would now be extant, representing the original edition. But none of the MSS. of this Gospel omit the twenty-first chapter. No Version or Exposition affords Mallionatus, in Joan. xx. 30; vol. ii. p. 921.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xx. 30; vol. viii. p. 1166.

² Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlviii. p. 644.

any sign of the existence of two editions of the Gospel; nor does any ancient writer appear to have received any record, or even the least intimation of their existence.

"It has been alleged that S. John wrote the twenty-first chapter to correct the erroneous notion that he himself would not die (see ver. 23). But suppose this to have been so, S. John's Gospel was not written till fifty years after our Lord's prophecy concerning him was delivered. And he relates that the saying that he should not die went forth in consequence of that prophecy (ver. 23). If therefore that erroneous notion was the occasion of his writing the twenty-first chapter, it would have operated as strongly when he first published the Gospel as at any subsequent time after its publication."—BISHOP OF LINCOLN on John xxi.; 'Greek Testament,' ed. 1863.

"In whichever form it is presented, this strange Appendix-theory is utterly untenable; for, first, the chapter is undoubtedly genuine. Externally, there is not a single ancient MS., Version, or expositor against it; all are in favour of it. Internally, its ideas, style, and language are unmistakably S. John's. The critic who honestly denies this knows little of the features of S. John. 'The style of the whole of the twenty-first chapter,' says Michaelis, 'is essentially S. John's.' Even as to vv. 24, 25 (cf. chap. xix. 35), he well adds: 'The testimony of "we know," if made by unknown persons, could add no authority to S. John's Gospel.' And Lücke, one of the chief assailants of the chapter, himself maintains that these verses cannot be separated from the preceding. Secondly, the chapter is an integral part of the original Gospel. Unless there be any sound internal argument to the contrary, this is manifested by the external evidence, which, as we have seen, supports it in like manner with the rest of the Gospel. Nor is there any sound internal argument to the contrary," &c. &c.—McLELLAN, 'New Testament,' p. 746.

gelica,' published A.D. 1572, suggesting, as the explanation of the double ending, that S. John at first ended his Gospel at chapter xx., and that afterwards on further recollection he added chapter xxi. About the same time, or a little later, we have Maldonatus¹ writing with considerable warmth against certain shallow men, "levibus quibusdam hominibus," who had taken up with the opinion either that S. John did not write chapter xxi., or that if he did he wrote it some time after he had completed his Gospel, and as a supplement to it, the result of further recollection. Besides other reasons for rejecting this, Maldonatus alleges its inconsistency with the custom and approbation of the Church, and with the decree of the Council of Trent on the Canonical books of Scripture. In the seventeenth century the Appendix-theory acquired greater prominence by the favour with which it was regarded by the commentator Grotius,² who further suggested that chapter xxi. was written by the Church of Ephesus after the death of S. John. Though there has been no new evidence, nor any change in the character of the evidence, to give countenance to the belief that chapter xxi. was not written by S. John himself, or if so, that it was written at a later time than the first twenty chapters, this opinion seems to have gained ground in modern times. But it cannot be too strongly repeated that this receives no support from any MS., version, ancient tradition or interpretation; that it is comparatively a modern opinion, and is suggested solely by the difficulty of reconciling the ending at chapter xx. 30, with the more formal ending of the Gospel at chapter xxi. 24, 25; and that chapter xxi. is found in all MSS. and versions, and in many of the most ancient commentators.³

1. After these things Jesus shewed Himself again to the disciples at the sea of Tiberias; and on this wise shewed He Himself.

¹ Maldonatus, in Joan. xx. 30; vol. ii. p. 923.

² Grotius, in S. Joan. xx. 30: Critici Sacri, vol. vi. p. 1850.

³ See Nonnus, Metaphrasis Evangel. Joan. p. 191.

S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xxi.; Homil. lxxxvii.

S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xxi.; vol. vii. p. 740.

Theophylact, in Joan. xxi.; vol. i. p. 766.

Euthymius, in Joan. xxi.; vol. iv. p. 649.

[S. Augustine,

This manifestation of Himself Jesus made in Galilee, where the angel had announced through the women to His disciples that He would meet them (Matt. xxviii. 7). To Thomas this was the second time that He manifested Himself, to the other disciples it was the third. After His Resurrection His Body was not subject to the same conditions as before. Before His Resurrection He was visible at all times, except when He specially willed it otherwise; after His Resurrection He was not visible, unless He specially willed it. It has been pointed out⁴ that the term which the Evangelist uses, "He shewed Himself," ἐφανερώσεν ἑαυτόν, is intended to express the altered condition.

2. There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and Nathanael of Cana in Galilee, and the sons of Zebedee, and two other of His disciples.

S. and the sons of.

3. Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing. They say unto him, We also go with thee. They went forth, and entered into a ship immediately; and that night they caught nothing.^a

S. Therefore they went forth: A. And they went forth: S.V. omit immediately.

Vulg. Et exierunt, et ascenderunt in navim.

As the Apostles were poor and their trade of fishing an unobjectionable calling, they naturally return to it to procure for themselves the necessities of life. There was not the same objection to the fishermen returning to their fishing that there would have been to Matthew's returning to the "receipt of custom." But this was before the Descent of the Holy Spirit, after which they were called upon to give themselves entirely up to the preaching of the Gospel. After that

S. Augustine, in Joan. tract. cxxii.; vol. iii. p. 1959.

V. Bede, in Joan. xxi.; vol. iii. p. 922.

Rupertus, in Joan. xxi.; vol. iii. p. 815.

⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xxi. 1; Homil. lxxxvii.

Theophylact, in Joan. xxi. 1; vol. i. p. 767.

Euthymius, in Joan. xxi. 1; vol. iv. p. 649.

* Fish in the Lake.—"The Sea of Galilee now, as in the days of our Saviour, is well stocked with various species of fish, some of excellent flavour. One species often appears in dense masses which blacken the surface of the water, the individual fish being packed so closely together that on one occasion a single shot from a revolver killed three. These shoals were most frequently seen near the shore of Gennesareth; perhaps not far from that place where the disciples let down their net into the sea, and inclosed a great multitude of fishes; and their net brake."—'Recovery of Jerusalem,' p. 341.

"The place soon asserted its right to the name Bethsaida by the exceeding abundance of the fish we saw tumbling in the water. The hot springs flowing in here over these rocks, and a little farther on in larger volume over a clean brown sand, warm all the ambient shallows for a hundred feet from shore; and as much vegetable matter is brought down by the springs, and probably also insects which have fallen in, all these dainties are half cooked when they enter the lake. Evidently the fish agree to dine on these hot joints, and therefore, in a large semicircle, they crowd the water by myriads round the warm river mouth. Their backs are above the surface as they bask or tumble and jostle crowded in the water. They gambol and splash, and the calm sea, fringed by a reeking crowd of vapour, has beyond this belt of living fish a long row of cormorants feeding on the half-boiled fish, as the fish have fed on insects underdone. White gulls poise in flocks behind the grebes or cormorants, and beyond these again ducks bustle about on the water or whirl in the air. The whole is a most curious scene, and probably it has been thus from day to day for many thousand years. I paddled along the curved line of fishes' backs and flashing tails. Some leaped into the air, others struck my boat or my paddle. Dense shoals moved in brigades as if by concert or command."—MACGREGOR, 'Rob Roy on the Jordan,' p. 345.

it is never again said that the Apostles returned to their fishing.

4. But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore: but the disciples knew not that it was Jesus.

S. omits now.

Vulg. Mane autem facto.

5. Then Jesus saith unto them, Children, have ye any meat? They answered Him, No.

Margm. Sirs.

Vulg. Pueri nunquid pulmentarium habetis?

6. And He said unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find. They cast therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes.

S. omits And: S. And they cast, and were no longer able.

Vulg. Dicit eis . . . miserunt ergo; et jam non valabant.

Jesus did not reveal Himself to them by His form, but by the miracle which He works, which miracle is probably intended to shadow out to them an outline of their future occupation; of their fishing for men, of their failure when relying on human skill and on industry alone, of their success when acting in dependence on the commands and on the power of Jesus.¹ Many mystical reasons have been given why Jesus bade them throw the net on the right side of the ship.²

From the use of the word παῖδια, here translated "children," but which also expresses the relation which a servant bears to his employer, as well as from the use of the word προσφάγιον, here rendered "food," it has been thought that when Jesus asked the question, "Have ye any fish?" that

He did so in the manner of one who asked to purchase from them.³ But He asked the question not to buy, but with a view to draw from them the confession of their own want of success.

7. Therefore that disciple whom Jesus loved saith unto Peter, It is the Lord. Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fisher's coat unto him, (for he was naked,) and did cast himself into the sea.

8. And the other disciples came in a little ship; (for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits,) dragging the net with fishes.

As at the sepulchre, it was not S. Peter who was the first to perceive the mysteries of the Incarnation, but S. John, so it was here. It was S. John who said unto Peter, "It is the Lord." Probably there was something in the nature of the loving S. John, something more assimilated to Jesus Himself, that peculiarly fitted him to understand the revelation which He made of Himself. Some⁴ have attributed this to his virginity. Peter, with his eager, ardent nature, was busied about the fish they had taken, and knew not that it was Jesus who addressed them. But when once he knew that it was Jesus, he could not wait till the boat reached the shore, near as it was, but threw on his upper tunic and rushed through the sea to go to Him. Peter was toiling not absolutely naked, but bare to his inner vest.⁵ Out of reverence to Jesus he put on his upper or over tunic (τὸν ἐπενδύτην διεζώσαστο). If we reckon the cubit at eighteen inches, two hundred cubits would give one hundred yards for the distance of the boat from the shore when Peter cast himself into the sea.

¹ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cap. cxlviii. p. 635.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xxi. 3; vol. ii. p. 927.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xxi. 3; vol. viii. p. 1168.

² S. Augustine, in Joan. xxi. 5, tract. cxlii.; vol. iii. p. 1962.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxiv.; vol. ii. p. 1185.

V. Bede, in Joan. xxi. 5; vol. iii. p. 924.

Rupertus, in Joan. xxi. 5; vol. iii. p. 817.

³ He girt his fisher's coat unto him, for he was naked (τὸν ἐπενδύτην διεζώσαστο ἢ γὰρ γυμνός).—"Ἰδιόνιον in its more restricted sense is used of the large upper garment, so large that a man would sometimes sleep in it. Exod. xxii. 26: the cloak as distinguished from χιτῶν, or 'close-fitting inner vest'; and thus περιβάλλειν ἱδιόνιον, but ἐνδύειν χιτῶνα. Ἰδιόνιον and χιτῶν, as the 'upper and the under garment,' occur constantly together (Acts ix. 39; Matt. v. 40; Luke vi. 29; John xix. 23). Thus at Luke vi. 29, our Lord instructs His disciples, 'If any man will see thee at the law, and take away thy coat (χιτῶνα), let him have thy cloak (ἱδιόνιον) also.' Here the spoiler is presumed to begin with the less costly, the under garment, from which he proceeds to the more costly, or upper; and the process of spoliation being a legal one, there is nothing unnatural in such a sequence; but at Luke vi. 29, the order is reversed: 'Him that taketh away thy cloak (ἱδιόνιον) forbid not to take away thy coat (χιτῶνα), also.' As the whole

⁴ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xxi. 5; Homil. lxxxvii.

Theophylact, in Joan. xxi. 5; vol. i. p. 767.

Euthymius, in Joan. xxi. 5; vol. iv. p. 651.

⁵ S. Jerome, lib. contra Joan. Hierosol. 35; vol. ii. p. 388.

Euthymius, in Joan. xxi. 7; vol. ii. p. 653.

Theophylact, in Joan. xxi. 8; vol. i. p. 767.

Euthymius, in Joan. xxi. 7; vol. iv. p. 653.

context plainly shows, the Lord is here contemplating an act of violent outrage; and therefore the cloak or upper garment, as that which would be the first seized, is also the first named. One was said to be γυμνός, who had laid aside his ἱδιόνιον, and was only in his χιτῶν; not 'naked' as our translators have it (John xxi. 7), which suggests an unseemliness that certainly did not exist, but stripped for toil. It is naturally his ἱδιόνιον which Joseph leaves in the hands of his temptress (Gen. xxxix. 12); while at Luke 23 χιτῶν has its fitness.—ARCHBISHOP TRENCHE on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 175.

"All (five fishermen) were the same kind of dress, a cloak or scarf (the 'fisher's coat'), and below it a short kilt. When a man had only this latter garment on, he was said to be 'naked.' This explains the expression used when Peter went into the sea to go to Christ—he girt his short loose dress about him with his 7 mmar (girdle)."—MACGREGOR, 'Rob Roy on the Jordan,' p. 359.

9. As soon then as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread.

10. Jesus saith unto them, Bring of the fish which ye have now caught.

11. Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land full of great fishes, an hundred and fifty and three: and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken.

S.V. Therefore Simon Peter.
Vulg. Ascendit Simon Petrus.

In this narration there are three separate events, all of a miraculous nature—the draught of fishes; the preserving the nets from breaking, which, as S. John implies, in the natural course of things would have taken place; and the fire of coals with the fish laid thereon. The Evangelist does not say in so many words that Jesus created this fire of coals and the fish laid thereon for the occasion, but it has been very generally believed that his narrative leads us to that conclusion.¹

It is probable that Jesus bade them bring of the fish which they had caught partly that they might see the number which they had caught, and might thus recognize the greatness of the miracle, and partly that there might be sufficient to serve as a meal for them all. Most of the early commentators have concluded from the careful way in which S. John records the exact number of the fish that were taken, a hundred and fifty and three, that some symbolical meaning was conveyed by this number. Whether they have succeeded in discovering that symbolic meaning may be open to question. Many² of the Greek commentators think that by the one hundred is indicated the large number that will be saved among the Gentiles, that by the fifty the lesser number saved among the Jews, and that by the number three a reference is made to the Trinity, as it was by faith in the Trinity that both Jews and Gentiles were saved. The explanation proposed by some of the later commentators is more simple, namely, that some will be saved from all nations and from all classes of men; but that the number saved in one nation or in one class of men, will differ as much from those saved in the others, as one hundred, fifty, and three differ from each other.³

12. Jesus saith unto them, Come and dine.⁴ And none of the disciples durst ask Him, Who art Thou? knowing that it was the Lord.

13. Jesus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them,⁵ and fish likewise.

S.V. omitt. then.
Vulg. Et venit Iesus.

14. This is now the third time that Jesus shewed Himself to His disciples, after that He was risen from the dead.

S. And this is now: S.V.A. to the disciples.
Vulg. Hoc jam tertio manifestatus est Iesus discipulis suis.

They had been fishing all night without success. After they had taken the great draught of fishes, Jesus invites them to come and take their morning meal (ἀριστήσατε). The ἀριστον was the morning meal, breakfast.

Jesus taketh “the bread and the fish” (τὸν ἄρτον καὶ τὸ ὀψάριον), that is the bread and the fish which they had seen lying on the coals of fire, or as some⁴ think, the term “fish” may apply both to the fish which had been already prepared and to the fish which they had just caught. He Himself probably partook of the fish which they had caught, in order to give them another proof of the truth and reality of His Resurrection Body. This is the second time that the Evangelists relate that Jesus did eat before them, the third time that He appeared to the Apostles assembled together (which S. John here means), and the seventh time that He appeared at all after His Resurrection.

15. ¶ So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me⁶ more than these? He saith unto Him, Yea,

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xxi. 9; Momil. lxxxvii.

Theophylact, in Joan. xxi. 11; vol. i. p. 768.

Euthymius, in Joan. xxi. 9; vol. iv. p. 653.

Jansenius, in Concord. Evangel. cap. cxlviii. p. 636.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xxi. 9; vol. ii. p. 932.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xxi. 9; vol. viii. p. 1169.

² S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xxi. 11; vol. vii. p. 745.

³ “Come and dine.”—“Throughout all Greece the natives seldom take any food before eleven o’clock, at which hour they have ἀριστον, which we translate ‘dinner’; then about eight or nine in the evening they have δελτιον, or supper, which is the chief meal. This explains the invitation of our Lord to the disciples on the Lake of Galilee: Jesus saith unto them, ‘Come and dine’ (Δεῖτε, ἀριστήσατε), that is, come and partake of the morning meal.”—“Mission to the Jews from Scotland,” p. 342.

⁴ “Jesus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them.”—“Every separate act of the wonderful occurrence is designedly

Theophylact, in Joan. xxi. 11; vol. i. p. 768.

Euthymius, in Joan. xxi. 11; vol. iv. p. 655.

⁵ Rupertus, in Joan. xxi. 11; vol. iii. p. 819.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xxi. 11; vol. ii. p. 934.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xxi. 11; vol. viii. p. 1170.

⁴ S. Augustine, in Joan. xxi. 12, tract. cxliii.; vol. iii. p. 1966.

specified, and, as it were, placed before the eyes.”—WINER, ‘Grammar of the New Testament,’ p. 629.

⁶ “Lovest thou Me?”—“We have not, I believe, in any case attempted to discriminate between these two words, ἀγαπάω and φιλέω, in our English Version. It would not have been easy, perhaps not possible, to do it; and yet there is often a difference between them, one very well worthy to have been noted, if this had lain within the compass of our language; and which makes the two words to stand very much in the same relation to one another as asidiplo and amo in Latin. . . . Ernesti has successfully Lord; Thou knowest that I love Thee. He saith unto him, Feed My lambs.

V. son of John: S. omits son of Jonas.
Vulg. Simon Ioannis, diligit me plus his?

16. He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me? He saith unto Him, Yea, Lord; Thou knowest that I love Thee. He saith unto him, Feed My sheep.

S. omits the second time: S.V. son of John: S. omits Yea.
Vulg. Dixit ei iterum: Simon Ioannis, diligit me? Aut illi: Etiam Domine.

17. He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me? Peter was grieved because He said unto him the third time, Lovest thou Me? And he said unto Him, Lord, Thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love Thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed My sheep.^a

S.V. son of John: S. Now Peter was grieved: S. And lovest thou Me? And he saith unto Him: A. he omits And saith unto Him: V. omits unto him: S. that I love Thee. And He saith.
Vulg. Dixit tertio: Simon Ioannis, amas me? contristatus est Petrus, quia dixit ei tertio: Amas me? et dixit ei: Domine, tu omnia nosti: tu scis quia amo te. Dixit ei: Pascere oves meas.

I. Jesus saith to Simon Peter,
Simon, son of Jonas,
lovest thou (ἀγαπᾷς) Me more than these?

He saith unto Him, Yea, Lord;
Thou knowest that I love (φιλῶ) Thee.

He saith unto him,
Feed (βόσκει, My lambs (τὰ ἀρνία μου).

II. He saith to him again the second time,
Simon, son of Jonas,
lovest thou (ἀγαπᾷς) Me?

He saith unto Him, Yea, Lord;
Thou knowest that I love (φιλῶ) Thee.

He saith unto him,
Feed (ποιμαίνε) My sheep (τὰ πρόβατά μου).

III. He saith unto him
the third time,
Simon, son of Jonas,
lovest thou (φιλεῖς) Me?

Peter was grieved because He said unto him
the third time,

Jesus saith unto him,
Feed (βόσκει) My sheep (τὰ πρόβατά μου).

Lovest thou (φιλεῖς) Me?
And he said unto Him,
Lord, Thou knowest all things;
Thou knowest that I love (φιλῶ) Thee.

seized the law of their several uses, when he says: 'Diligere magis ad iudicium, amare vero ad intimum animi sensum pertinet.' So that in fact Cicero in the following passage (Ep. Jam. xiii. 47), 'Ut scires illum a me non diligi solum, verum etiam amari,' is saying, 'I do not esteem the man merely, but I love him'—there is something of the passionate warmth of affection in the feeling with which I regard him.

"But from this it will follow, that while a friend may desire rather amari than diligi by his friend, yet there are aspects in which the diligi is a higher thing than the amari, the ἀγαπᾶσθαι than the φιλεῖσθαι. The first expresses a more reasoning attachment, of choice and selection (diligere = deligere), from seeing in the object upon whom it is bestowed that which is worthy of regard, or else from a sense that such was fit and due toward the person so regarded, as being a benefactor or the like; while the second, without being necessarily an unreasoning attachment, does yet oftentimes give less account of itself to itself—is more instinctive, is more of the feelings, implies more passion.

"Out of this which has been said it may be explained that while men are continually bidden ἀγαπᾶν τὸν Θεόν (Matt. xxii. 37; Luke x. 27; 1 Cor. viii. 3), and good men are declared to do so (Rom. viii. 28; 1 Pet. i. 8; 1 John iv. 21), the φιλεῖν τὸν Θεόν is commanded to them never. The Father, indeed, both ἀγαπᾷ τὸν Υἱόν (John iii. 35), and also φιλεῖ τὸν Υἱόν (John v. 20).

"In almost all these passages of the New Testament the Vulgate, by the help of diligo and amo, has preserved and marked the distinction, which in each case we have been compelled to let go. It is especially to be regretted that at John xxi. 15-17, we have not been able to retain it, for the alternations there are singularly instructive, and, if we would draw the whole meaning of the passage forth, must not escape us unnoticed. On occasion of that threefold 'Lovest thou Me?' which the risen Lord addresses to Peter, He asks him first ἀγαπᾷς με; at this moment, when all the pulses in the heart of the now penitent Apostle are beating with an earnest affection towards his Lord, this word on that Lord's lips sounds too cold; not sufficiently expressing the warmth of his personal affection towards Him. Besides the question itself, which grieves and hurts Peter (ver. 17), there is an additional pang in the form which the question takes, sounding as though it were intended to put him at a comparative distance from his Lord, and to keep him there; or at least as not permitting him to approach so near to him as he fain would. He therefore in his answer substitutes for it the word of a more personal love, φιλῶ σε (ver. 15). When Christ repeats the question in exactly the same words, Peter in his reply again substitutes his φιλῶ for the ἀγαπᾷς of his Lord (ver. 16). And now at length he has conquered; for when the third time his Master puts the question to him, He does it—not any more with ἀγαπᾷς but φιλεῖς—with the word which Peter feels will express, even as it alone will express, all that is in his heart. The question, grievous anyhow, as seeming to imply a doubt in his love, is not any longer made more grievous still by the peculiar shape which it assumes. All this subtle and delicate play of feeling disappears perforce where the variation in the words used is incapable of being reproduced."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 39.

^a Feed My sheep.—"While βόσκειν and ποιμαίνειν are both often employed in a figurative and spiritual sense in the Old Testament (1 Chron. xi. 2; Ezek. xxxiv. 3; Ps. lxxviii. 72; Jer. xxiii. 2), and ποιμαίνειν in the New, the only occasions in the latter on which βόσκειν is so used are John xxi. 15, 17. There our Lord, giving to St. Peter that thrice-repeated commission to feed His 'lambs' (ver. 15), His 'sheep' (ver. 16), and again His 'sheep' (ver. 17), uses first βόσκει, then, secondly, ποιμαίνε, returning to βόσκει at the last. This return on the third and last repetition of the charge to the word employed on the first has been a strong argument with some for an absolute identity in the meaning of the words. They have urged, with some show of reason, that Christ could not have had progressive aspects of the pastoral work in His

From a careful examination and comparison of our Saviour's three questions and of S. Peter's answer to each of these questions, and of our Saviour's three separate charges to Peter, we shall be able to ascertain what are the different shades of meaning in the words which they use, and thus to see what is the force implied in each question and in each answer and in each charge.

Jesus asks His first two questions, "Lovest thou Me?" by ἀγαπᾷς; Peter expresses his answer to both these, "Thou knowest that I love Thee," by φιλῶ. Jesus then takes up Peter's word, and asks His third question, "Lovest thou Me?" by φιλεῖς. To which Peter again replies as before, "Thou knowest that I love thee," by φιλῶ.

It has been supposed that the word which Peter chose to express his answer to the question "Lovest thou Me?" implied a stronger degree of personal affection than was contained in the word which Jesus had Himself used to convey His question the first and second time; and that when Peter continued to use the stronger form of expressing his love, that Jesus Himself asked His question the third time with the stronger word, and that Peter then replied as before.

In His first charge to Peter, "Feed My lambs," and in His last charge, "Feed My sheep," Jesus uses the word βόσκειν; and in His second charge, "Feed or keep My sheep," He uses the word ποιμαίνειν. The difference between these two words is that the first implies to feed, in the sense of supplying with food, with spiritual nourishment, and the second to tend or keep, to guard and guide and protect, it may be, by a human system of discipline.

intention here, else He would not have come back in the end to the βόσκειν, with which He began. Yet I cannot ascribe to accident the variation of the words, any more than the changes in the same verses from ἀγαπᾷν to φιλεῖν, from ἀπρία to πρόβατα. It is true that our Version, rendering βόσκειν and ποιμαίνειν alike by 'feed,' as the Vulgate by 'Pascere,' has not attempted to follow the changes of the original text, nor do I perceive any resources of languages by which either our own Version or the Latin could have helped themselves here. The German, by aid of weiden (= βόσκειν) and hüten (= ποιμαίνειν), might have done it. De Wette, however, has weiden throughout.

"The distinction, notwithstanding, is very far from fanciful. βόσκειν, the Latin pascere, is simply 'to feed'; but ποιμαίνειν involves much more: the whole office of the shepherd, the guiding, guarding, folding of the flock, as well as the finding of nourishment for it. Thus Lampe: "Hoc symbolum totum regimen ecclesiasticum comprehendit;" and Bengel, "βόσκειν est pars τοῦ ποιμαίνειν." The wider reach and larger meaning of ποιμαίνειν makes itself felt at Rev. ii. 27, xix. 15, where at once we are conscious how impossible it would be to substitute βόσκειν.

"There is a fitness in the shepherd's work for the setting forth of the highest ministries of men for the weal of their fellows, out of which the name 'shepherds of their people' has been continually transferred to those who are, or should be, the faithful guides and guardians of others committed to their charge. Thus kings in Homer are ποιμένες λαῶν: nay more, in Scripture God Himself is a Shepherd (Is. xl. 11; Ezek. xxxiv. 11-31; Ps. xxiii.), and God manifest in the flesh avouches Himself as ὁ ποιμὴν ὁ καλός (John x. 11): He is ἀρχιποιμὴν (1 Peter v. 4): ὁ μέγας ποιμὴν τῶν πρ-βάτων (Heb. xiii. 20): a such fulfilling the prophecy of Micah. v. 14

In His first charge Jesus says to Peter, "Feed My lambs" (τὰ ἀπρία μου), and in the second and third, "Keep and feed My sheep" (τὰ πρόβατά μου). In the first charge He bids Peter feed His "lambs," the newly-born, the tender in the faith, little children in Christ; in the second and third He bids him feed His "sheep," the more advanced in the faith, the young men, the fathers in Christ.

Jesus had changed Simon's name into Cephas or Peter (John i. 42), as a mark of honour, as the name by which he was to be known among the Apostles. But after He had Himself changed his name, He twice calls Him Simon Bar-jona, or Simon, son of Jonas: once on this occasion, probably to remind him of the natural weakness of his flesh and blood without the sustaining power of God; and once before, when He tells him that flesh and blood had not revealed to him that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God (Matt. xvi. 17).

Before His Crucifixion Peter had said unto Jesus, "Though all men shall be offended because of Thee, yet will I never be offended" (Matt. xxvi. 33). But now he was humbled at the recollection of his repeated denial of Him; and when He said unto him, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me more than these?" taught by past experience, Peter is cautious and modest. He answers for himself and for his own love to Jesus in the strongest form that language afforded him, but he says nothing of his love for Him as compared with that of the other disciples.

Peter was grieved because Jesus said unto him the third time, "Lovest thou Me?" Perhaps it was that he thought

"But it may very naturally be asked, if ποιμαίνειν be thus so much the more significant and comprehensive word, and if on this account the ποιμαίνειν was added to the βόσκειν in the Lord's latest instruction to His Apostle, how account for His going back to βόσκειν again, and concluding thus, not as we should expect with the stronger, but with the weaker admonition? In Dean Stanley's 'Sermons and Essays on the Apostolical Age,' p. 138, the answer is given. The lesson, in fact, which we learn from this is a most important one, and one which the Church, and all that bear rule in the Church, have needed diligently to lay to heart: this namely, that whatever else of discipline and rule may be superadded thereto, still the feeding of the flock, the finding for them of spiritual nourishment, is the first and the last: nothing else will supply the room of this, nor may be allowed to put this out of that foremost place which by right it should occupy. How often, in a false ecclesiastical system, the preaching of the Word loses its pre-eminence! the βόσκειν falls into the background, is swallowed up in the ποιμαίνειν, which presently becomes no true ποιμαίνειν, because it is not a βόσκειν as well, but such a shepherding rather as God's Word by the prophet Ezekiel has denounced (xxix. 2, &c.; cf. Zech. xi. 15-17; Matt. xxiii.)."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH on 'Synonyms of the New Testament,' p. 81.

It may not be out of place to observe that of the four Greek commentators, S. Chrysostom, S. Cyril, Theophylact, and Euthymius, who have commented at considerable length on vers. 15-17, no one of them has drawn attention to the distinction between φιλεῖς and ἀγαπᾷς, and between βόσκειν τὰ ἀπρία, ποιμαίνει τὰ πρόβατα, &c., set forth in these notes. Their silence may arise either from the fact that they were not cognizant of such distinctions, or that they were so well known to their hearers and readers as not to require being pointed out.

that He even yet feared for his constancy, or that he feared for it himself. His own weakness was an event never to be forgotten. A tradition, consistent enough with the probabilities of the case, records that the cock crowing, or the time of the cock crowing, always brought his denial of Jesus to his recollection.

Jesus does not put these questions or give these charges to the other Apostles, but only to S. Peter. Was it that He did this to Peter because he alone had denied Him, and that He thus wished to reinstate him in his former position among the Apostles, and for each separate denial of Him to give Peter an opportunity of declaring the depth of his affection, and of receiving from Him the personal assurance of his entire forgiveness, or at least an equivalent for this? It has been thought that this is the meaning of our Saviour's words to him.¹

Others² have pointed out that while Jesus assured Peter of His pardon for his past denial, He also acknowledged in him a degree of eminence or primacy among the Apostles. Others³ have even held that He hereby invested Peter with a degree of supremacy over the rest of his brethren; that He constituted Peter, and in Peter his successors, the centre and source of all ecclesiastical authority. But this is one of those doctrines or opinions which, as history shows, have flourished most at the greatest distance from the time of the persons to whom they relate. In writers of the ages immediately succeeding the Apostolic, traces of the primacy of S. Peter may certainly be found, but none of the supremacy. This doctrine, unknown in the earliest ages, was gradually developed as it was required to support the authority of those who claimed to be the successors of S. Peter.

At the same time it is impossible to avoid the impression that this chapter is little more than a record of the sayings and doings, either of Peter himself, or of Jesus to Peter. It is Peter who first proposed to go a fishing; Peter to whom John communicates his belief that it is the Lord; Peter who, in his eagerness to reach the Lord, casts himself into the sea; Peter who drew the net to land; Peter to whom Jesus three times addressed the question "Lovest thou Me?" and to whom He as often committed the office of feeding His lambs or His sheep; it is Peter whose death by crucifixion Jesus foretells, and it is Peter who inquires of Jesus what would be the lot of S. John.

18. Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not.

S. thy hand, and others shall gird thee . . . and do to thee what thou wilt not.

Vulg. extendes manus tuas, et alius te cinget, et ducet quo tu non vis.

19. This spake He, signifying by what death he should glorify God. And when He had spoken this, He saith unto him, Follow Me.

Some⁴ have gathered from our Saviour's words that at this time Peter was not young, nor yet old, but rather in the prime of life, and that his crucifixion would take place many years hence, when he was old. When he was old, another should gird him and carry him whither he would not, that is, to crucifixion, from which, however much in spirit he might wish to glorify God by martyrdom, there would still be a natural shrinking through the weakness of the flesh.

It is generally agreed that S. Peter was put to death by crucifixion in the reign of Nero, who reigned from A.D. 55 to 69—much about the same time that S. Paul also suffered. An early tradition⁵ says that at his own request he was crucified with his head downward, as being unworthy of such an honour as crucifixion in the same way in which his Lord and Master was crucified.

Some suppose that when He said to Peter, "Follow thou Me," Jesus had reference to His former words, "Thou canst not follow Me now; but thou shalt follow Me afterwards" (xiii. 36), and that he now urged him to follow Him in his life by a zealous discharge of the pastoral office, and in his death by a willing martyrdom. Others think that, in addition to this, Jesus rose up and that Peter followed, and thus expressed by his act what Jesus had commanded in words. The latter explanation seems in harmony with the following verse.

20. Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple whom Jesus loved following; which also leaned on His breast at supper, and said, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee?

V. A. omit Then: S. omits following: S. and saith unto him. Vulg. Conversus Petrus vidit illum discipulum, quem dignebat Jesus, s. quem, qui et recubuit in camera super pectus ejus, et dixit.

21. Peter seeing him saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do?

22. Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he

¹ S. Cyril Alex. in Joan. xxi. 15-17; vol. vii. p. 749.

² S. Augustine, in Joan. xxi. 15-17, tract cxliii.; vol. iii. p. 1967.

³ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xxi. 15-17; Homil. lxxviii. Theophylact, in Joan. xxi. 15-17; vol. i. p. 769. Euthymius, in Joan. xxi. 15; vol. iv. p. 607.

⁴ Jansenius, in Concord. Evang. cxlviii. p. 638.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xxi. 15-17; vol. ii. p. 939.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xxi. 15; vol. viii. p. 1172.

⁵ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xxi. 18, 19; Homil. lxxviii.

Theophylact, in Joan. xxi. 18; vol. i. p. 770.

Cornelius a Lapide, in Joan. xxi. 18; vol. viii. p. 1174.

tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou Me.

Vulg. Dicit ei Jesus: Sic eum volo manere donec veniam, quid ad te? tu me sequare.

23. Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die: yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come,^a what is that to thee?

S. omits what is that to thee?

Vulg. Sic eum volo manere donec veniam, quid ad te?

¹ S. Jerome, adv. Jovinian, i. 26; vol. ii. p. 246.

^a Till I come.—The following long extract from Lightfoot contains a full explanation of this and similar expressions in this sense:—

“‘Till I come,’ that is, till I come to destroy the city and nation of the Jews. As to this kind of phrase take a few instances.

“Our Saviour saith (Matt. xvi. 28), ‘There be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in His kingdom.’ Which must not be understood of His coming to the last judgment; for there was not one standing there that could live till that time: nor ought it to be understood of the Resurrection, as some would have it, for probably not only some, but in a manner all that stood there, lived till that time. His coming, therefore, in this place, must be understood of His coming to take vengeance against those enemies of His which would not have Him to rule over them. (Luke xix. 12, 27.)

“He then goes on to show: 1. That the destruction of Jerusalem and the whole Jewish state is described as if the whole frame of this world were to be dissolved; 2. That the times immediately preceding this ruin are called the last days and the last times; 3. That the times and state of things immediately following the destruction of Jerusalem are called a new creation, new heavens, and a new earth; 4. That the day, the time, and the manner of the execution of this vengeance upon this people are called ‘the day of the Lord,’ ‘the day of Christ,’ His coming in the clouds ‘in His glory,’ ‘in His kingdom.’

“1. The destruction of Jerusalem and the whole Jewish state is described as if the whole frame of this world were to be dissolved. Nor is this strange, when God destroyed His habitation and city, places once so dear to Him, with so direful and sad an overthrow; His own people, whom He accounted of as much or more than the whole world beside, by so dreadful and amazing plagues. Matt. xxiv. 29, 30: ‘The sun shall be darkened,’ &c. ‘Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man,’ &c., which yet are said to fall out within that generation, ver. 34. 2 Pet. iii. 10: ‘The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat,’ &c. Compare with this, Deut. xxxii. 22; Heb. xii. 26; and observe that by elements are understood the Mosaic elements; Gal. iv. 9, Coloss. ii. 20, and you will not doubt that S. Peter speaks only of the confagration of Jerusalem, the destruction of the nation, and the abolishing the dispensation of Moses.

“Rev. vi. 12, 14: ‘The sun became black as sackcloth of hair,’ &c., and the heavens departed as a scroll when it is rolled together,’ &c. Where, if we take notice of the foregoing plagues, by which, according to the most frequent threatenings, He destroyed that people—viz. the sword, ver. 4; famine, ver. 5, 6; and the plague, ver. 8—withal comparing those words, ‘They say to the mountains, Fall on us and cover us,’ with Luke xxiii. 30, it will sufficiently appear that by those phrases is understood the dreadful judgment and overthrow of that nation and city. With these also agrees that of Jer. iv., from ver. 22 to 28, and clearly enough explains this phrase. To this apartment those and other such expressions as we meet with: 1 Cor. x. 11, ‘On us the ends of the world are come;’ and 1 Pet. iv. 7, ‘The end of all things is at hand.’

It would seem that when Jesus said to Peter “Follow thou Me,” He rose up and that Peter followed, and that John and the other disciples began to follow at a little distance, and that then Peter, seeing John, asked the question “And what shall this man do?”

The obscurity of our Saviour's meaning here has been increased by the existence of no less than three different readings of His words. 1. Most of the ancient MSS. and versions read εἰς αὐτὸν θέλω μένειν, “If I will that he remain.” 2. Another early reading, as quoted by S. Jerome,¹ was “Si eum volo sic esse”—“If I will that he thus remain.”

“2. With reference to this and under this notion, the times immediately preceding this ruin are called the last days and the last times; that is, the last times of the Jewish city, nation, and economy. This manner of speaking frequently occurs, which let our S. John himself interpret. 1 John ii. 13: ‘There are many Antichrists, whereby we know it is the last time;’ and that this nation is upon the very verge of destruction, whereas it hath already arrived at the utmost pitch of infidelity, apostasy, and wickedness.

“3. With the same reference it is that the times and state of things immediately following the destruction of Jerusalem are called a new creation, new heavens, and a new earth. Isaiah lxxv. 17: ‘Behold I create a new heaven, and a new earth.’ When should that be? Read the whole chapter and you will find the Jews rejected and cut off, and from that time is that new creation of the Evangelical world among the Gentiles.

“Compare 2 Cor. v. 17, and Rev. xxi. 1, 2, where, the old Jerusalem being cut off and destroyed, a new one succeeds, and new heavens and a new earth are created.

“2 Peter iii. 13: ‘We, according to His promise, look for new heavens and a new earth.’ The heavens and the earth of the Jewish Church and Commonwealth must be all on fire, and the Mosaic elements burnt up: but we, according to the promise made to us by Isaiah the prophet, when all these are consumed, look for the new creation of the Evangelical state.

“4. The day, the time, and the manner of the execution of this vengeance upon this people are called ‘the day of the Lord,’ ‘the day of Christ,’ His coming in the clouds ‘in His glory,’ ‘in His kingdom.’ Nor is this without reason, for from hence took this form and mode of speaking take its rise.

“Christ had not as yet appeared but in a state of humility, contemned, blasphemed, and at length murdered by the Jews: His Gospel rejected, laughed at, and trampled under foot: His followers pursued with extreme hatred, persecution, and death itself. At length, therefore, He displays Himself in His glory, His kingdom, and power, and calls for those cruel enemies of His, that they may be slain before Him.

“Acts ii. 20: ‘Before that great and notable day of the Lord come.’ Let us take notice how S. Peter applies that prophecy of Joel to these very times, and it will be clear enough, without any commentary, what that ‘day of the Lord is.’

“2 Thess. ii. 2: ‘As if the day of Christ was at hand,’ &c. To this also do these passages belong. Heb. x. 37: ‘Yet a little while, and He that shall come, will come.’ James v. 9: ‘Behold the Judge is at the door.’ Rev. i. 7: ‘He cometh in the clouds;’ and xiii. 12: ‘Behold, I come quickly;’ with many other passages of that nature, all which must be understood of Christ's coming in judgment and vengeance against that wicked nation. And in this very sense must the words now before us be taken and no otherwise, ‘I will that he tarry till I come.’ For thy part, Peter, thou shalt suffer death by thy countrymen the Jews: but as for him, I will that he shall tarry till I come and avenge Myself upon this generation: and if I will so, what is that to thee? The story that is told of both these Apostles confirms this exposition:

3. Another reading, followed by several of the commentators on S. John,¹ chiefly Latin, is "Sic cum volo manere,"—"I will that he thus remain." The first is the reading most generally adopted.

It has been conjectured that our Saviour's object in these words was not so much to give information to Peter as to repress his feeling of curiosity with respect to John; and that the meaning of His words is, "Follow thou Me by a death of martyrdom; but if I will that John remain till I come and remove him, not by a death of violence but by death in the usual course of nature, what is that to thee? Follow thou Me." This explanation has been held by many commentators of note.²

The Evangelist does not explain what Jesus meant by the words "till I come." His object was to give a true statement of the words which Jesus used on this occasion, which had been incorrectly reported among the brethren, and which had thus given rise to a belief that S. John would never die. There is no reason to suppose that he agreed with the current rumour respecting himself.

Another interpretation has also been given of our Saviour's words "till I come." Some³ think that He means till He came to punish the Jewish nation for their rejection of Him, the Messiah, by the destruction of Jerusalem, by the overthrow of their Temple, their worship, and of their very existence as a nation. But whatever may be the meaning of these words "till I come," we know that as a matter of fact S. John did survive the destruction of Jerusalem, the dispersion of the Jewish nation, and the cessation of the Jewish worship, and that S. Peter did not. That S. John died a natural death is asserted by many of the early writers.⁴ Several dates have been fixed on for his death. One of the earliest of these is about A.D. 101. This would be in the ninety-third year of his age, and in the sixty-eighth from the Crucifixion of Jesus. It is generally believed that S. John was the youngest of the Apostles, and that he was the only survivor among them at the overthrow of Jerusalem by Vespasian, A.D. 70.

24. This is the disciple which testifieth of these things,^a and wrote these things: and we know that his testimony is true.

V. which also testifieth.
Vulg. qui testimonium perhibet de his.

25. And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written. Amen.^b

S*. omits this verse: V.A. omits Amen.
Vulg. omits Amen.

¹ S. Ambrose, in Psalm xlv. 4; vol. i. p. 1138.

— in Luc. ix. 27; vol. ii. p. 1700.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xxi. 22, tract. cxiv.; vol. iii. p. 1969.

— Sermo ccliii. (alias de Tempore 149) 3; vol. v.

p. 1181.

V. Bede, in Joan. xxi. 22; vol. iii. p. 935.

Rupertus, in Joan. xxi. 22; vol. iii. p. 824.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Catena in Joan. xxi. 22; vol. iii. p. 398.

² S. Augustine, Sermo ccliii. (alias de Tempore 149) 4; vol. v.

p. 1181.

S. Thomas Aquinas, Catena in Joan. xxi. 22; vol. iii. p. 399.

Rupertus, in Joan. xxi. 22; vol. iii. p. 824.

Maldonatus, in Joan. xxi. 22; vol. iii. p. 949.

for it is taken for granted by all that S. Peter had his crown of martyrdom before Jerusalem fell, and S. John survived the ruins of it."—LIGHTFOOT on Joan. xxi. 22; vol. ii. p. 625.

^a This is the disciple which testifieth of these things.—"The unbelief of our day is naturally anxious to evade the startling fact that the most intimate of the companions of Jesus is also the most strenuous asserter of His Godhead. There is a proverb to the effect that no man's life should be written by his private servant. That proverb expresses the general conviction of mankind that, as a rule, like some mountain scenery or ruined castle, moral greatness in men is more picturesque when it is viewed from a distance.

The proverb bids you not to scrutinize even a good man too narrowly, lest perchance you should discover flaws in his character which will somewhat rudely shake your conviction of his goodness. It is hinted that some unobtrusive weaknesses which escape public observation will be obvious to a man's every-day companion, and will be fatal to the higher estimate which, but for such close scrutiny, might have been formed respecting him. But in the case of Jesus Christ the moral of this cynical proverb is altogether at fault. Jesus Christ chooses one disciple to be the privileged sharer of a nearer intimacy than any other. The son of ³ Theophylact, in Joan. xxi. 22; vol. i. p. 772.

⁴ Eusebius Pamphilus, Hist. Ecclesiast. iii. 31; vol. ii. p. 280.

S. Chrysostom, Epist. ad Ephes., Homil. i.; p. 104.

Theophylact, in Joan. xxi. 22; vol. i. p. 772.

Tertullian, de Anima, i.; vol. ii. p. 735.

S. Jerome, in Matt. xx. 23; vol. vii. p. 143.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xxi. 22, tract. cxiv.; vol. iii. p. 1970.

— Sermo ccliii. (alias de Tempore 149) 4; vol. v.

p. 1181.

S. Gregory Magnus, in Evang. Homil. xxxv. 7; vol. ii. p. 1263.

V. Bede, in Joan. xxi. 22; vol. iii. p. 931.

Rupertus, in Joan. xxi. 22; vol. iii. p. 824.

Zebedee lies upon His bosom at supper; he is 'the disciple whom Jesus loved.' Along with S. Peter and S. James, this disciple is taken to the holy mount, that he may witness the glory of his Transfigured Lord. He enters the empty tomb on the morning of the Resurrection. He is in the upper chamber when the risen Jesus blesses the ten and the eleven. He is on the mount of the Ascension when the Conqueror moves up visibly into heaven. But he also is summoned to the garden where Jesus kneels in agony beneath the olive-trees; and alone of the Twelve he faces the fierce multitude on the road to Calvary, and stands with Mary beneath the cross, and sees Jesus die. He sees more of the Divine Master than any other; more of His glory; more, too, of His humiliation. His witness is proportioned to his nearer and closer observation. Whether he is writing Epistles of encouragement and warning, or narrating heavenly visions touching the future of the Church, or recording the experiences of those years when he enjoyed that intimate, unmatched companionship, S. John, beyond any other of the sacred writers, is the persistent herald and teacher of our Lord's Divinity."—CANON LIDDON, 'Bampton Lectures,' v. p. 271.

^b And there are also many other things, &c.—"No extant

S. John closes his Gospel with a distinct and formal declaration of the truth of what he had written, as the testimony of an eye- and ear-witness. On the truth of these things he stakes his character for honesty and capacity. In the expression "we know that his testimony is true," he implies that there are others associated with him whose belief in their truth is as strong as his own. Either they were a few who remained of those who lived during our Saviour's ministry, or they had gained this conviction from S. John.

To express the small number that he had recorded, but a very small number of the acts and miracles of Jesus in comparison with the immense number which He wrought, the Evangelist uses an expression which seems almost to amount to exaggeration. What he means to say is that no language can express the number and the greatness of the works which Jesus wrought while upon earth.¹

¹ S. Chrysostom, in Joan. xxi. 25; Homil. lxxxviii.

S. Cyril Alex., in Joan. xxi. 25; vol. vii. p. 756.

Theophylact, in Joan. xxi. 25; vol. i. p. 773.

Euthymius, in Joan. xxi. 25; vol. iv. p. 667.

S. Augustine, in Joan. xxi. 25, tract. cccxiv.; vol. iii. p. 1976.

V. Bede, in Joan. xxi. 25; vol. iii. p. 937.

manuscript favours the omission of ver. 25, although the hyperbole it contains caused it to be suspected by some, as we learn from the Scholia to Codd. 36, 237, and others. But it is quoted without the least misgiving by a long array of patristic writers, from Origen (who alleges it five times over) and Pamphilus downwards; and it is exactly in S. John's simple manner to assert broadly that which cannot be true to the letter, leaving its necessary limitation to the common sense of the reader."—SCRIVENER'S 'Introduction to Collation of Sinaitic MS.,' lix. ed. 1867.

CORRIGENDA.

Page 355, verse 21, for "under Caesar" read "unto Caesar."

Page 415, note, 2nd col., line 9, for "the same called Charoseth" read "the sauce called Charoseth."

Page 470, 1st col., line 18, for "centurion's servant" read "nobleman's son."

AFTER the publication of Part XIV. of this Commentary, a learned prelate of our Church, in a letter of friendly criticism, inquired whether in my comment on ἐξ ὕδατος καὶ πνεύματος, John iii. 5, I had any reason for following the rendering of the A.V. "of water and of the Spirit," rather than "of water and the Spirit," which is the translation of many modern scholars,¹ and notably so of the Five Clergymen in their Revised Translation of S. John, 1857. The reason which has led me to hesitate in adopting the rendering "of water and the Spirit" is contained in Malan's note on the passage; and as this may interest some who have not access to his book, a part of his note is here subjoined:—

"As both A. V. and R. V. [by the Five Clergymen] understand πνεῦμα of 'the Spirit,' i.e. the Holy Ghost, A. V. is right in inserting of before 'the Spirit,' according to the rule which requires that 'of,' as mark of the gen., should be repeated before every word in the sentence to which it belongs. It is not always necessary in Greek, because the Greek has distinctive endings for every case, so that in Greek two words may be governed by one preposition, without any ambiguity. Not so, however, in English. But the R. V. 'of water and the Spirit' implies that 'water and Spirit' are one thing or compound, since 'water' alone is in the gen.; whereas they are distinct, and should both be put in the gen. by prefixing 'of' to each, as in Anglo-Saxon . . . &c. &c."—MALAN, 'Gospel according to S. John, translated from the eleven oldest Versions, with Notes,' p. 42, ed. 1862.

Also the "of" or its equivalent is the reading of some of the old Versions.

"Ethiopic.—The Syriac has men ek, only before 'water;' but the Ethiopic repeats it before 'water' and before 'Spirit.' So does the Abyssinian of A. Rumi.

"Armenian.—ek is here repeated before 'water' and before 'Spirit.'—Ibid., p. 28.

John iv. 23, ἐν πνεύματι καὶ ἀληθείᾳ may be cited as another instance of a similar construction, and which is rendered "in spirit and in truth," A. V.; "in spirit and truth," R. V.

¹ Amongst others, see Prof. Blunt, 'Duties of the Parish Priest,' p. 55, 5th ed.; Sermon on John iii. 5, by Prof. Evans, Durham Cathedral, Oct. 21, 1877. But these writers appear to have been influenced as much by the theological bearing of the translation as by its grammatical correctness.

INDEX TO THE INTRODUCTION AND NOTES.

A.	E.	N.
Ambrose, S., 15 Apocryphal Gospels, mentioned by S. Jerome, 13; not quoted by S. Cyprian, 23; Origen on the, 25, 26; Tertullian on the, 28; S. Serapion on the, 28; S. Clemens Alex. on the, 30. Athanasius, S., 18 Augustine, S., 11	Ebionites, who they were, 14 Epiphanius, S., 16 Epistle of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons, 35, 36 Eusebius, Bishop of Cesarea, 19	Novatus, 22 O. Old Latin, or Italic, Version, 41, 42 Origen, 24
B.	G.	P.
Barnabas, S., 54 Basil, S., 16 Basilides, 48	Gregory, S., Bishop of Nyssa, 15 Gregory, S., Nazianzen, 16	Papias, 48 Peshito, or Old Syriac, Version, 41, 42 Polycarp, S., 49, 50; his martyrdom, 51 Presbyters, certain, disciples of the Apostles, 35
C.	H.	R.
Celsus, 36 Chrysostom, S. John, 10 Claudius Apollinarius, 37, 38 Clemens Alexandrinus, S., 29 Clement, S., Bishop of Rome, 54, 55 Clementine Homilies, 41 Cyprian, S., 23 Cyril, S., Bishop of Jerusalem, 17	Heretics, who were, 9 Hippolytus, S., 24	Ruinus, 12
D.	I.	S.
Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth, 39, 40	Ignatius, S., 51, 52 Irenæus, S., 21 Italic, or Old Latin, Version, 41, 42	Serapion, S., 28, 29
	J.	T.
	Jerome, S., 13 Justin Martyr, S., 42, 43	Tatian, 38 Tertullian, 26 Theodore, Bishop of Mopsuestia, 15 Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, 30
	M.	V.
	Marcion, 47, 48 Melito, 36 Methodius, S., 22 Muratorian Fragment, 40	Valentinus, 46, 47 Victorinus, S., 22

INDEX TO THE COMMENTARY AND NOTES.

A.

Abiathar, in the days of, peculiar force of, 210, 521
 Abijah, the course of, 572
 Abomination of desolation, how to be understood, 382
 Abraham, son of, by faith, Luke xix. 9, a sense never given by the Jews, 672; Abraham's bosom, meaning of, 661; saw My day, John viii. 56, how understood, 817
 Adultery, woman taken in, John viii. 1-11, probable reasons for its omission, 804, &c.; Jewish customs with respect to the trial of a woman suspected of adultery, 807
 Advent, the, preparation of the world for, 708
 Aëon, its site not known, 743
 Affliction, bodily, supposed by the Jews to be the punishment of former sin, 819
 Africanus, Julius, on the genealogies of our Lord, 604
 Again, ἀναθεν, John iii. 3, how understood, 738
 Alms, the practice of the Jews with respect to, 133; Give alms, Luke xi. 41, how explained, 639
 Altar, a gift brought to the, understood of the Christian Altar in the Eucharist, 123
 Amen, Amen, a peculiar use of, among the Jews, 725; why doubled by S. John, 737
 Among us, ἐν ἡμῖν, John i. 14, how to be understood, 710 ἀνάμνησις, Memorial, how used in O. T., 425
 Angels, ministry of, 107; guardian, 301, 302
 Anger, its various stages and punishment, 123
 Anna, her testimony and her character, 595
 Annas and Caiaphas, high priests, Luke iii. 2, in what sense to be understood, 600; at Annas' house Judas bargained for and received the thirty pieces, 440, 900; cause of Annas' influence; examination of Jesus before him referred to, but not related in detail, 900
 Anointing of Jesus, only two: first in Pharisee's house, Luke vii. 37; second at Bethany, Matt. xvi. 6, Mark xiv. 3, John

xii. 3; both by Mary Magdalene, who was the same as Mary of Bethany, 409, 835
 Antichrist, supposed to be foretold in John v. 44, 773
 Aorist, non-indicative, force of, 328; only in appearance used for the Future, 877
 Apostles, meaning of the term, 184; little known of the personal history of the twelve, 185
 Apostolic succession, the Church's warrant for, 502
 Appearance of Christ after His Resurrection, see Resurrection
 Arians, refuted by Matt. viii. 3, 155; their abuse of John i. 3, 707; of John i. 15, 713; of John v. 19, 767; refuted by John xiv. 11, 869; their abuse of John xiv. 20, 871; of John xv. 1, 875; refuted by John xv. 16, 878; their abuse of John xvii. 3, 892
 Arimathea, situation of, not yet ascertained, 910
 Article, the, force of, in the prayer, the fast, &c., 345; the use of, in S. John's Gospel, for emphasis, 783
 Ascension, the, admiration of angels at, 508; impossible for man until Jesus had ascended, 698
 Ascription at the end of the Lord's Prayer, how accounted for by scholars generally, and how by Lightfoot, 138
 Ask, to, ἐρωτάω and αἰτέω, how distinguished, 888
 Ass and her foal, Christ rides upon both, 338

B.

Band, ἡ σκεῖρα, John xviii. 3, meaning of, 899
 Baptism, Christ's, date of, 602; place of, 719; John iii. 3, understood of Baptism, 738; Christ's Baptism different from John's, John's baptism not an outward rite conveying grace to the soul, but merely the badge of penitents who were looking forward to the Christ, 718; different also in other respects, 743; Christ's Baptism before His Ascension not different from His Baptism after, 743
 Baptist's ministry, date of, 708; date of his imprisonment, 744; the Baptist compared with Jesus, 713, 771; with Elijah, 717; his testimonies, 719

 Barachias, son of, who meant by, 361
 Baskets, different kinds of, how distinguished, 264, 270
 Bathsheba, why mentioned by S. Matthew, 65
 Beatitudes, Mount of, its situation, 114
 Beds in Palestine, what they were, 764
 Beelzebub, meaning of, 216
 Begat, ἐγέννησε, used forty times by S. Matthew, denotes natural lineage, not legal, 605
 Beginning, John i. 1, sometimes understood of the Origin, the Father, 705; in John viii. 25, how explained, 811
 Believe, to, one, and to believe in one, distinguished, 854
 Belly, John vii. 38, used for the heart, 800
 Bethabara, John i. 28, where, and how altered from Bethany, 718
 Bethany, supper at, when, 335, 409
 Bethesda, pool of, 760; not used for washing animals before sacrifice, 762
 Bethlehem, description of, 79; meaning of, 81
 Bethphage, 337
 Bethesda, on the west side of the lake, not two places, 782
 Birth, Christ's, day of, 589
 Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, 217; why Christ was accused of speaking blasphemy, 444
 Blind man, Jesus opens his eyes gradually, 541
 Body of Jesus, before His Resurrection and after, how different, 475, 501, 916
 Branches, how strawed in the way, 346; καλήμα and κλάδος distinguished, 876
 Brazen serpent, how a type of Christ crucified, 741
 Bread of Life, in the Holy Eucharist, the means of communicating our Lord's humanity, 784
 Breaking, the, of the bread, Luke xxiv. 30, the Eucharist, 694
 Brethren of our Lord, who they were, 223
 Brook, the, Cedron, see Cedron
 Burial, manner of, in Palestine, 842; how Mary anointed Jesus beforehand for His burial, 848

By, did, the formula always observed in speaking of the prophets, 337; by, did, John i. 3, not a mere instrumental cause, 707
By and by, an archaism not retained with advantage, 231

C.

Cæsarea Philippi, 271, 272
Caiaphas, Joseph, continued high priest eleven years, 845; the examination of Jesus before him, and how recorded, 900
Cainan, how occurring in Luke iii. 36, 603
Came before Me, John x. 8, altered by some of the early writers on doctrinal grounds, 826
Camel, parable respecting, 319
Cana, its situation disputed, 726
Canaan, a woman of, 254
Capernaum, why called His own city, 109; meaning of the term, 730
Carcase, used of the Body of Christ, 385
Causal particles, force of, 853, 894, 909
Cedron, the brook, the true reading, description of, 898
Celibacy, how encouraged in the Primitive Church, 308
Centurion, S. Matthew's and S. Mark's account of him reconciled, 157
Chagigah, what they were, and when offered, 455
Chief priests, who they were, 77
Childhood no bar to the reception of grace, 298
Christ, the year, month, and day when born, 75, 589; when Christ became a proper name, without the article, 821, 892
Church, the, likened to a ship, 164; the office of, 304
Chuzu, 623
Circumcised, why Jesus was, 593
City, a, set on a hill, supposed to be Safed, 120; three cities called His own, 169
Cleopas and his companion, Luke xxiv. 18, who supposed to be, 692
Clothes, rending of, 444
Coat, χιτών and ἱμάτιον, how distinguished, 917
Cocks forbidden to be kept in Jerusalem; time of cock-crowing, 428
Cold, the, of Jerusalem, 901
Come, till I, John xii. 23, how understood, 922
Comforter, the, Παράκλητος, ought always to be rendered Advocate, 870
Communion under one kind, Christ's breaking of the bread, Luke xxiv. 30, not an instance of it; not the rule of the Western Church until Council of Constance in 15th cent., 695
Compelled to come in, Luke xiv. 23, meaning of, 654
Conception, Blessed Virgin's, 580
Coniah, see Jeconias
Corban, its meaning, 257
Corruption of man's nature, in what it consists, 295
Crier, a, went before those condemned to death, to proclaim their sentence and crimes, 464

Crossed over, πέραν and its compounds, meaning of, 776, &c.
Crown of thorns, corona Christi, how composed, 906; διάδημα and στεφανος, how distinguished, 907
Crucifixion, time of, S. John (xix. 14) and S. Mark (xv. 25) reconciled, 469; the moral effect of, 852; a common punishment among Egyptians, Carthaginians, Persians, &c., 907
Cups, what, were given to Jesus at His Crucifixion, 465, 476
Customs at meals, Eastern, 856

D.

Daily bread in the Lord's Prayer, how understood by early writers, 136
Daily Eucharist, the, what was the rule and practice of the Primitive Church, 130
Damnation, eternal, the interpretation of the early Church, 394
Darkness at the Crucifixion, 475
David, son of, used by the Talmud for the Messiah, 63
Day, the continuance of Jesus among men, 819; My day, John viii. 53, how understood, 816
Deaf, Jesus heals a man that was, 538
Death, it is not lawful for us to put any man to, John xviii. 31, why, 903
Decapolis, what cities are meant, 113
December 25, the day of Christ's Birth, 589
Dedication, Feast of, what it was, and when kept, 829
Defilement, two kinds, actual and judicial, 260; from entering the house of a heathen lasted only until the evening of the same day, 902
Desolation, abomination of, how to be understood, 382
Devil, distinguished from dæmon, 167; how blind and dumb, 215; vices called devils by the Jews, 623; personality of the devil asserted, 814
Digging through houses, 139
Dionysian Era, why so called, &c., 76
Discourse and prayer of Jesus, after Passover Supper, &c., John xv. xvi., xvii., uttered in the upper room, 873
Dispersed among the Gentiles, how understood, 798
Divorce for what cause allowed by Christ, viz. in the case of adultery, but marriage after not permitted either to the innocent or to the guilty party, 125; S. Matthew on this subject reconciled with S. Mark and S. Luke, 126, 311
Door into the sheepfold, low, 826
Doves, selling, 342; how the Holy Spirit descended like a, 720
Downward course of man, 708
Drag, draw, to, σύρειν, ἐλκύειν, John xii. 32; how distinguished, 851
Dualism of Scripture, John viii. 44, ethical not physical, 814
Dust, custom of shaking off, 190

E.

Eagles used for the saints, 385

Ear, meaning of the words hearing in the, 193
Elias, 288
Elijah, in what sense John Baptist was, 201, 717
Elisabeth, how a cousin of B. V., 580
Emmaus, whether it was Nicopolis, according to Eusebius and S. Jerome, or Kubeibeh, 693
Ephraim, John xi. 54, where situated; Jesus continued there only a short time, 845 ἐπιούσιος, how translated by S. Jerome in the Vulgate, 137
Espoused, meaning of the word as applied to the V. Mary, 72
Eternal, how used, 400
Eucharist, the, when celebrated by the Primitive Church, 130; Judas permitted to partake of, 418; Institution of, 420; how a Sacrament, 422; how a Sacrifice, 424; what was the Commission given to the Apostles, 425; Memorial in, ἀνάμνησις, 425; cup of the Hallel used by Jesus for consecration in Eucharist, 426; S. John ch. vi. refers to, 787
Euthalius, Bishop of Sulca in Egypt, in the 5th cent., first prefixed a prologue or preface to the Scriptures, 63
Evil, that doeth, John iii. 20, how to be understood, 742, 769
Examination of Jesus, where held, 439; how recorded by the Evangelists, 441, 444, 451, 900
Eye, Jesus draws His illustrations from, 638

F.

Farthing, 194
Fast-days, Wednesday and Friday early appointed to be, 412
Fasting, 139; in the Early Church, 175; in the Jewish Church, 208, 291, 669; necessary for those who dispense spiritual gifts, 291
Father, the, greater than the Son, not in nature, but in Authorship, or Origin, 769
Favoured, highly, κεχαριτωμένη, Luke i. 28, better rendered full of grace, 579
Feast-days, the, 733; Feast of the Jews, John v. 1, what Feast referred to, 761
Feed, to, βοσκειν and ποιμαίνειν, John xii. 15-17, distinguished, 919
Feet, the, John xii. 10, understood of the passions, 860
Fig-trees, various kinds of, what kind it was that Jesus cursed, and when, 333, 345; the fig-tree that cumbered the ground, 648; shade of, 724
Filioque, its first use uncertain; used by king Reccardus, on his conversion, in the belief that it formed part of the Creed of Constantinople, 880
Fire, salted with, Mark ix. 49, 300; I am come to send, Luke xii. 49, means the Holy Spirit, 645
Firstlings, Gate of, 593
Fish in the lake of Gennesaret; Apostles return to their fishing after the Resurrection, but not after the descent of the Holy Spirit, 916
Flesh and blood, 273

Fold in A. V. improperly stands for two words, ἀλλή and παύση, John x. 16, 827
 For, ἀντί, John i. 16, how to be understood, 713
 Fountain of the Apostles, 837
 Fox, that, Luke xiii. 32, applies not to Herod, 651
 Freedom of will, its true nature, 813
 Fulfilled, that the Scripture may be, the strongest form of expressing God's foreknowledge, 894

G.

Gadara, 151
 Galileans whose blood Pilate mingled, &c., Luke xiii. 1, not recorded by any ancient author besides S. Luke, 647, 802
 Galilee of the Gentiles, 109; prophets born in, 802
 Gardner, the, δ κηπουρός, John xix. 15; what, 913
 Gardens not allowed in Jerusalem, 428
 Garments, Jewish, 183
 Gate (of the Temple), of Nicanor, of Firstlings, 593
 Gates of Jerusalem, 763
 Genealogies of the Jews, Josephus on, 64
 Genealogies of our Lord, S. Matthew's way of arranging them very artificial, 65; why S. Matthew omits the names of Abaziah, Joash, Amaziah, and Azariah in his genealogy, 65; different ways of dividing the three tesseradecades, 65; whether the Salathiel and Zorobabel mentioned by S. Matthew be the same as the S. and Z. mentioned by S. Luke, 68; both genealogies Mary's, that by S. Matthew showing her maternal descent, that by S. Luke her paternal, 70, 606; genealogies by S. Matthew and S. Luke compared, 603
 Gennesaret, description of, 253, 912
 Gergesa, 151
 Gethsemane, 429; Agony in, 430
 Gifts from God the Father to God the Son; gift of generation, gift of union, gift of unction, 768
 Give God the praise, John ix. 24, better rendered, Give glory to God; its meaning, 823
 Glorified, how God is, 864, 849, 891, 895
 Gnostics, antichrists rather than heretics, 704
 Go about, ᾠρεῖς, John vii. 19, better rendered ye seek, 796
 Good Shepherd, parable of, John x., the occasion of it, 825
 Good-will among men, Luke ii. 14, evidence for, 591
 Gospels, the, headings of, when inserted, 63, 704
 Grace and truth, John i. 17, 714
 Groaned in spirit, Jesus, John xi. 33, meaning of, 840

H.

Hallel, psalms of the, when sung at the Passover, 426; cup of the, used by Jesus for consecration in the Eucharist, 426

Head of the corner, 351
 Headings of the Gospels, when inserted, 63, 704
 Hebrew language, what language meant, 467, 762
 Hell-fire, 122
 Herod the Great, died about seven days before the Passover of 750 A.U.C., 80; his massacre of the children, 84; died at Jericho, 86
 Herod Archelaus reigned nine years, banished to Vienne in Gaul, 87
 Herod Antipas, 241, 242; reigned forty-three years, banished to Lyons, 600
 Herod, Philip, 245
 Herodians, Sadducees the, 354
 Herodias, the grand-daughter of Herod the Great, 245
 High priests held their office at the caprice of the Roman Governors, 844
 Hosanna, 340
 Hours, S. John did not reckon them from midnight to mid-day, and from mid-day to midnight, but from sunrise, 469; tenth hour, John i. 39, what and how calculated, 721; sixth hour, John iv. 6, 751; seventh hour, John iv. 52, 758
 House-top, preaching on, meaning of, 193
 Houses in Palestine, specimen of, 721
 Humanity, His, the medium through which Jesus dispensed His blessings, 178
 Hypocrites, 259
 Hypostatic union, 828, 850, 873

I.

Illustrations, use of them with respect to the Trinity, 712
 Imperative Mood, force of, 166
 Incarnation, the, meant by "the holy," Matt. vii. 6, 145; how misunderstood by the early heretics, 710; how understood by the Catholic Fathers, 771; a belief in as necessary as a belief in the Trinity, implied in John xvii. 3, 892
 Instantly, how used, 231
 Interpolation, ancient, after Matt. xx. 28, 329; often caused by Ecclesiastical lessons, 720, 723
 Iscariot, meaning of the word, 186
 Ituræa, 599

J.

Jacob's well, description of, 747
 James the son of Zebedee, James the less, who so designated, 185; which James it was to whom Jesus appeared after His Resurrection, 507
 Jechonias, two ways of explaining the word "childless," as applied to him, 69
 Jericho, description of, 322; a principal station for priests; neighbourhood of, unsafe in S. Jerome's time, 634
 Jerusalem, sieges of, by Sestius, Titus, Hadrian, &c., 375; how many perished, 383; false Christs in, 384; a tradition that the disciples remained twelve years in, after the Ascension, 697; description of, besieged twenty-seven times, 702; its water supply, 760; gates of, 763

 Jesus, how sometimes interpolated, 157, 249, 251, 326; is beside Himself, Mark iii. 21, who said this, 523; increases in wisdom, how, 596; appropriates to Himself the title I am, John vii. 58, 817; groaned in spirit, John xi. 33; sympathy of Jesus, 840; washes the feet of Judas first, then of Peter, 858
 Jesus Christ, evidence for and against the occurrence of this expression in the N. T., 71
 Jews, the, often used for the Sanhedrin, 716, 766
 John Baptist, why he sent to inquire whether Jesus were the Christ, 198; his death, 243; date of his ministry, 708; date of his imprisonment, 744
 John the Evangelist did not reckon the hours from midnight to mid-day and from mid-day to midnight, but from sunrise, 469; cousin to Jesus, unmarried, lived sixty-eight years after Crucifixion, into Trajan's reign, 699; omits to record the Institution of the Eucharist, why, 862; why beloved of Jesus, 863; more easily recognized the mysteries of the Incarnation than Peter, said to have died a natural death, 917; was "the other disciple," 900
 John's, S., Gospel, date of it, 699; external and internal evidence testify to its authorship, 700; ending of ch. xx. and xxi., how explained by early writers; ch. xxi., genuine; appendix-theory explanation sprung up in the 16th cent., 915
 Jona, Simon Bar-, 273; a name common among the Jews, 722
 Jordan, derivation of the word, description of the river, 734
 Joseph, husband of the B. V., in what material he worked, 240; supposed to be dead at the Crucifixion, 473
 Joseph of Arimathea, 484
 Josephus on the genealogies of the Jews, 64
 Jot and tittle, their meaning, 122
 Journey to Jerusalem, notices of the last, reconciled, 332
 Judah, the same word as Jehudah, 65; Judah, Judas, Jude, &c., 239; hill country of, 581
 Judas Iscariot, 186; his indignation at the waste of the ointment, 335, 409, 412; permitted to partake of the Eucharist, 418; his conduct at Gethsemane, 435; repents, 452; his purchase of the potter's field, Acts i. 18, reconciled with the purchase by the chief priests, Matt. xxvii. 6-8, 453; not an open thief; bare, abstulit, what was put in the bag, John xii. 6, 847; allowed his feet to be washed by Jesus, 858; not chosen one of the Twelve in ignorance of his character, 861
 Judgment, Son of Man coming to, 282; Judgment Hall, 454; judgment of the world, John xii. 31, its salvation, 851
 Julian attempts to rebuild the Temple, 373
 Julius, formerly called Bethsaida, but not in our Saviour's or in the Evangelist's time, 781

K.

Keys of the kingdom of heaven, 266, 277
Kingdom of God is within you, Luke xvii. 21; meaning of, 695
Kiss, betrayest thou the Son of Man with a, Luke xxii. 48, better rendered, 685

L.

Lake of Gennesaret, description of a storm on, 163, 775; fish in the, 916
Lazarus and the rich man, partly a history, partly a parable, 662
Lazarus of Bethany, raising of John xi., why not recorded by the other Evangelists, 843; removed with Jesus from Bethany to Ephraim, 846; said to have lived thirty years after he had been raised from the dead, 844
Lebbæus, 186
Lepor, healing of, how related by S. Matthew, S. Mark, and S. Luke, 153
Levi, who he was, and when he made a feast for Jesus and His disciples, 172
Levirate marriages, not necessary to reconcile the genealogies, 605
Life, in what sense used, 194, 281; how belonging to God the Father, and how to God the Son, 707; life everlasting, how a man hath, John iii. 36, 746
Lilies of the field, 141
Linen cloth or garment, who was the young man clothed in, Mark xiv. 51, 438
Little flock, Luke xii. 32, meaning of, 643
Lord's Prayer, the, as given by S. Matthew and S. Luke, different, and may have been delivered at different times, 135; ascription at the end, how accounted for by scholars generally, and how by Lightfoot, 138; how divided and explained by ancient writers, 136
Love, to ἀγαπᾶν and φιλεῖν, John xxi. 15-17, distinguished, 918
Luke, S., traditions respecting, 571; his historical accuracy, 595
Lysanias, S. Luke iii. 1, refers to a younger, 600

M.

Macedonians, their abuse of John i. 3, 707
Macedonius, his abuse of John xvi. 7, 884
Macharus, the place of John Baptist's confinement, description of, 198, 246
Magdala, 264, 912
Magi, or wise men, who they were, and when they came to Bethlehem, 80, 87
Malchus, 436
Manicheans, how refuted by Matt. viii. 3, 155
Manuscripts of the Gospels, uncial and cursive, why so called, the number of them, &c., 7
Mark, S., the Evangelist, characteristics of his Gospel, 239; defence of last twelve verses of, 567; companion and interpreter of Peter; his Gospel, 511
Mark, John, 511

I.

Martha and Mary, their choice; types of religious life in the Church, 635
Mary, Mother of Jesus, ever a Virgin, 74; low estate of, 561; Mother of God, her dignity, invocation of, 582
Mary of Bethany, probably same person as the woman who was a sinner, Luke vii. 36, &c., or Mary Magdalen, 411; anoints Jesus twice, 409, 835
Mary Magdalen, the same as Mary of Bethany, 482; why so called, 623
Matthew, S., traditions respecting his diet, the manner of his death, 59; when he wrote his Gospel, 59; in what language, 60; a publican, 172; characteristics of his style, 298
Measures, 234
Messiah, the, passages in the prophets respecting His Divine nature understood by the Jews of His human, 797
Mightier, the, 514
Mill, women grinding at, 392
Millstone, 300
Miracle, what is a, 730; Scripture and Ecclesiastical miracles, difference between, 570; belief in miracles depending on the heart as much as on the intellect, 785
Mistranslation of words in A. V., 191, 367
Mites, two, the smallest offering received in the Treasury, 555
Money-changers, 342
Moses' seat, 364
Mount Quarantania, 104
Mountain, meaning of, in Matt. xvii. 20, xxi. 21, 291, 344
Mustard-seed, 233

N.

Nain, 618
Name of God, equivalent to God Himself, 709
Nathanael, the same as Bartholomew, 723; an Israelite indeed, 724; his confession, 725
Nazareth, 724
Net, 112
Nicanor Gate, its maker, legend respecting, 593
Nicodemus, mentioned by S. John alone, 485; why he came to Jesus, 736; perhaps an old man at the time of his conversation with Jesus, 738; the teacher of Israel, John iii. 10, how understood, 720
Night, John ix. 4, the departure of Jesus, 819
Nobleman, John iv. 46, probably one of Herod's officers, 758
Numbers, mystical meaning of, 917

O.

Offend, to, offences, 299
Ointment of spikenard, meaning of, 846
Old garment, old skins, the disciples compared to, 175
Only-begotten of the Father, 711, 714; Only-begotten distinguished from First-born, 712
Other disciple, the, who he was, 440, 900
Oven, 142

P.

Palace of the high priest, 440

Palestine, description of, 701
Palm-trees, branches from, John xii. 13, growing on Mount Olivet, 849
Papal infallibility, 275; supremacy, 276
Parables, our Lord's, nature of, 224, 236, 397; of the Good Shepherd, of the Door into the Sheepfold, the occasion of their delivery, 825
Paradise, 472
Passover, in Egypt, how different from succeeding Passovers, 402; time of killing the, Paschal societies, 403; how killed, 405; manner of eating the, 405; first day in Passover week, second day, 406; how kept by Jesus and His disciples the same night as by the Jews, 413; the Synoptists' and S. John's account reconciled, 416; four during Christ's ministry, 730; how the last Passover week was spent, 480; Passover cake, 856; Passover supper, a long discourse after, usual among the Jews, 897; Passover, the, that they might eat, John xviii. 28, understood not of the Passover lamb, but of the Chagigah, 406, 417, 902
Pattern Man, how Jesus is the, in the system of Nationalism, and how in the system of the Church, 874
Pavement, the, John xix. 13, what it was, 908
Pearls, Matt. vi. 6, the Mysteries of the Incarnation, 145
Penitential discipline of the Early Church, 278
Peter, tradition respecting his wife, 159; why always first among the names of the Twelve, 187; why joined with Jesus in paying the tribute, 294; denies Jesus three several times, 446; prayer of Jesus that his faith fail not, &c., Luke xxii. 32, explained differently by the early and by later commentators, 684; meaning of the word, 723; refusing to allow Jesus to wash his feet, expresses the feeling of all but Judas, 858; how the charge of Jesus to him to feed His sheep, &c., John xxi. 15-17, is understood, 920; his crucifixion, 921
Pharisees, the, their character and doctrines, 268, 270; often means the Sanhedrin, 717
Philip, tradition respecting, 162
Photinus refuted by Matt. viii. 3, 155
Phylacteries, what they were, 364
Pilate, Pontius, his attempts to release Jesus, his wife supposed to be Claudia, 2 Tim. iv. 20, 459; governor ten years, when recalled, 600
Pinnacle, the, of the Temple, 101
Plural number, the, sometimes refers to individuals, 171
Polygam, S. Paul (1 Tim. iii. 2; Titus i. 6) is referring to successive not to simultaneous, 308
Porch, Solomon's, 830
Pore in the parable, Luke xix. 13, meaning of, 674
Prayers, length of Jewish, 366; why Jesus prayed to the Father, 778
Preparation day, the, variously expressed, its meaning, 417, 468, 908 Presence, manner of Christ's, 306, 501
Prevailed, voices, Luke xxii. 22, better rendered kept growing stronger and stronger, 688

Princes, the, and their courses, 572
 Prince of this world, how judged, John xvi. 11; how overcome, John xvi. 33, 890
 Print of the nails, &c., whether the disciples did put their fingers into it, not, 696
 Procession of the Holy Spirit twofold, Eternal and Temporal; history of the doctrine, 879; how John xvi. 15 is understood of, 886
 Publicans, the, who they were, 129, 172; chief among the, 672; parable of the publican and the Pharisee, 669
 Purging, Mark vii. 19, the true reading and its meaning, 537
 Purple robe, John xix. 2, what, 907

Q.

Quarantania, Mount, 104
 Quirinus or Cyrenius, how governor of Syria, Luke ii. 2, 588

R.

Rabbi, when first used, 365, 721
 Race, 122
 Rahab, why mentioned by S. Matthew, 65
 Rain, the, floods and winds, Matt. vii. 27, various trials and temptations, 149
 Reeds, 200
 Regeneration, the, Matt. xix. 28, 320; Titus iii. 5, its nature, 737
 Reprove, το, ἐπιτιμᾶν and ἐλέγχειν distinguished, 884
 Resurrection, the general, doctrine of the Sadducees refuted, 357
 Resurrection of Jesus, a belief in the literal Resurrection of Jesus necessary, 219; how the bodies of saints rose at His Resurrection, 480; appeared first after His Resurrection to Mary Magdalene, meaning of His words to her, "Touch Me not," 495; appears five times on the day of His Resurrection, 498; nature of His Body before and after His Resurrection, 501; His commission to the Apostles after His Resurrection, 502, 505; confession of Thomas, 504; summary of Christ's appearances after His Resurrection, and how recorded, 509; the proofs of, given to the disciples, sufficient, 697
 Retaliation for an injury, how allowed and limited by the Law of Moses, 127
 Right hand, meaning of Christ sitting on the, Mark xvi. 19, 508
 Robber, κλέπτης and ληστής, how distinguished; the two thieves who were crucified with Jesus better rendered robbers, 904
 Rock, the, Jesus the Son of Mary, 149; the Rock on which Christ should build His Church, Matt. xvi. 18, not Peter but the faith which he had expressed, 274
 Roof, the, they uncovered, Mark ii. 4, better rendered unroofed, other instances of the cognate construction, 519
 Ruler of the synagogue, 176
 Ruth, why mentioned by S. Matthew, 65

S.

Sabbath, second-first, δευτεροπρώτη, 205; Jewish customs respecting, 513
 Sabellians, the, refuted by John xiv. 11, 870
 Sadducees, few in number, chiefly the rich and powerful; their belief, 268, 270
 Salome, daughter of Herodias, 241
 Salome, mother of S. John, sister of B. V., 909
 Salt which has lost its savour, Matt. v. 13, 120, 655; room of salt, 543
 Samaria, through, the usual route from Galilee to Jerusalem, 749
 Samaritans, why they would not receive Jesus, Luke ix. 53, 630; now about two hundred in the whole world, 752
 Sanctification of the heathen, of the Law, different from that introduced by the Incarnation, 895
 Sanhedrin, or Council, of what it consisted, 408; who was president of, at our Saviour's trial, 440; room where they sat, the judges, 449; their punishments, the presidents, 450
 Sayings of Christ on the Cross, 477
 Scarlet robe, in which they clothed Jesus, Matt. xxvii. 27; what it was, 462
 Scourging in the synagogue, Matt. x. 17, 190; of Jesus, how recorded by the Evangelists, 460; a Roman custom, 461
 Scribes, who they were, 77; how their teaching differed from that of Christ, 150
 Scrip, 189
 Sealed, how God the Father hath sealed the Son, 783
 Season, for a, Luke iv. 13, better rendered until a, 608
 See, to, John iii. 3, means to partake in, 738; Scripture use of, John v. 19, 767
 Septuagint, used by the Apostles and by the Fathers, 73
 Sepulchre, the, form of, 911; stone rolled before the door of, 486; two groups of women at, the Evangelists' account of their visit reconciled, 489
 Sepulchres, whitened, 367
 Sermon on the Mount, as given by S. Matthew, the same as that by S. Luke, 115, 116; S. Luke gives the right order, 115; delivered after the second Passover, probably about the middle of May, 116, 184; summary of, 149
 Serpents and scorpions, spiritual powers for the ruin of men, 632
 Servants, in the parable of the wedding feast, 352
 Seventy disciples, mission of, when, 631
 Shape, His, εἶδος, John v. 37, may be interpreted of the Divine Essence or Person, 772
 Shoulders, on his, Luke xv. 5, better rendered on his own, 656
 Show, to, Scripture use of, 767
 Signs and wonders, how they differed, 757
 Siloam, pool of, 760, 820
 Silver, woman having ten pieces of, 656
 Simeon, Luke ii. 25, supposed to be son of Hillel, father of Gamaliel, and president of the Sanhedrin, 594
 Simon the Canaanite, 186

Simon the leper, Matt. xxvi. 6, meaning of; probably the same person as Simon the Pharisee, Luke vii. 36, 411
 Simon Peter, why first named among the Apostles, 187
 Sinner, how applied by the Pharisees, 173
 Sister of B. V., Salome, John xix. 25, 909
 Sitting, a common posture, 172; Christ sitting at the right hand, meaning of, 508
 Solomon's Porch, 830
 Son of Man, 161, 272; coming to judgment, or in His glory, 282, 350; sign of, 388; the Son's ignorance of the Day of Judgment, 389; Son of God and Son of Man understood by the Jews as convertible terms, 443; how used by the Centurion, 480; the Son of God a Son before the Incarnation, and by a second mystery after it, 832
 Sons, similitude of the two, Matt. xxi. 28; reading of, 347
 Sounding a trumpet, Matt. vi. 2, how to be understood, 133
 Sparrow, 194
 Speech, word, distinguished, 814
 Spikenard, ointment of, 846
 Spirit, the, John vi. 53, used of our Lord's Divine nature, 789; sometimes of the Holy Ghost, and also of His gifts, 799
 Spirits, evil, their knowledge superior to that of men, inferior to that of good spirits, 516
 Spittle used by Jesus with the clay, John ix. 6, to teach that illumination was the natural property of His humanity, 819
 Stairs from the roof, 381
 Standing to pray, the Primitive Church stood in their prayers on all Sundays, and on all days from Easter to Whitsunday, in memory of the Resurrection, 134
 Strife among the Apostles, recorded in a different order by S. Luke from that by S. Matthew and S. Mark, 683
 Succession, Apostolic, the Church's warrant for, 502
 Supper recorded by S. John xiii. the same as the Passover Supper recorded by the other Evangelists, 416, 857
 Swearing, how limited by Christ, 126
 Sweat, bloody, 433
 Sword, piercing through the soul of B. V., Luke ii. 35, meaning of, 595; let him sell his garment and buy one, Luke xxii. 36, 684
 Sychar, John iv. 5, some think Shechem, others not, 750
 Sympathy of Jesus, 840
 Synagogue, a, Luke vii. 5, better rendered our synagogue, 618: origin of synagogues uncertain; 460 or 480 in Jerusalem in our Saviour's time; days of meeting three, the Sabbath, the second and fifth days of the week, 833
 Syro-phœnician woman, 254, 262

T.

Tabernacles, Feast of, ceremonies belonging to, 792 Tabot, Mount, description of, whether the

- Mount of the Transfiguration or not, 283, 284
- Talmud, the, meaning of; Jerusalem Talmud, Babylonian Talmud, when written, 61
- Tares, 224, 242
- Taxing of all the world, Luke ii. 1, 588
- Temple, the, the pinnacle of, 101; market in, 342, 731; not accurately translated, 369, 731; description of Herod's, 371; years of the building of Herod's, 731; Julian's attempt to rebuild, 373
- Temptation, the, recorded in a different order by S. Matthew and S. Luke; that by the latter supposed to be the right one, 102, 104, 105
- Text, the, of Scripture, not altered with a motive, 290
- Thaddæus, 186
- Thamar, why mentioned by S. Matthew, 65
- θεωδωρικὴ ἐνέργεια*, instances of, 155
- Thieves, two, better rendered robbers; Matt. xxvii. 44 and Luke xxiii. 30 reconciled, 467
- Thomas, the Apostle, his confession, 504; why called Didymus, 838
- Thorns, abundance of, in Palestine, 228
- Three days and three nights, 220; in three days, meaning of, 732
- Tiberius Caesar, fifteenth year of, how reckoned, 599
- Tithes, what were paid according to the Law, 367
- Titles, when and by whom prefixed to the Gospels, 63, 704
- Tombs, different kinds of, 841
- Torches, John xviii. 3. λαμπάς and λύχνος distinguished, 899
- Towns, καὶ πόλεις, Mark i. 38, towns where there was a synagogue, Church-towns, 517
- Trachonitis, 599
- Tradition, how blamed, 258
- Transfiguration, the, Mount of, 285, 286
- Translation of the same Greek word in the same clause by different English words defended, 307
- Treasure, hid, 236
- Treasury, the, the most public part of the Temple, 810
- Trail, the, of Jesus, where held, 439; and how recorded by the Evangelists, 441, 444, 451
- Tribute, the, paid by Jesus, 292, 293; the question of paying to Caesar, 355
- Trinity, the Holy, plainly revealed to man at our Saviour's Baptism, 98, and after His Resurrection, 506; in what sense Three Persons were understood by the early Church, 98; certain words more expressive of the Divine Substance in the Person of the Father, and others in the Person of the Son, 772; illustrations, such as the sun and its radiance, are not intended to explain how the Holy Trinity is possible, but to show that the words we use respecting it are not self-contradictory, 712; our Lord called the Son of God, not only in respect of His human nature, but of His pre-existent state also, 711; the Father greater than the Son, not in nature but in Authorship or Origin, 769; how God the Father hath sealed the Son, 783; Only-begotten and First-born thus distinguished—the Son is Only-begotten with the Father, and First-born toward us, 712; S. Athanasius attributes a threefold Nativity to the Son, 714; God the Father hath given to God the Son the gift of eternal generation, the gift of union, and the gift of unction, 768; the Trinity in Unity proved by John x. 30, nature of, 831; the Son of God a Son before the Incarnation, and by a second mystery after it, 832; shown in a vision to Isaiah, 854; the doctrine of the coinherence, and also of the monarchia, as held by the Fathers, explained, 868; John xiv. 20 points in the first part of it to the Mystery of the Trinity, and the latter to the Mystery of the Incarnation, 871; John xvi. 28 understood of the Eternal Generation of the Son, and also of the Incarnation, 889; John xvii. 3 explained in a Catholic sense, 891
- True, in what sense God is, John iii. 33, 745
- Truth, John i. 17, its meaning, 714; all the, John xvi. 13, how to be understood, 886
- Twelve Apostles, the, their election and mission, 115, 184; order in which their names are recorded, 187; disputes among, 297, 683, 698
- Tyre and Sidon, coasts of, 261

U.

- Uncleanness, laws respecting, 168
- Unjust steward, parable of, Luke xvi.; why called unjust, 660
- Unleavened bread, first day of, how altered, 413, 414
- Unprofitable servants, meaning of, 663
- Upper room, who was the owner of, 415

V.

- Veil of the Temple rent, 479; there were thirteen veils in the Temple, 479
- Verily, verily, see Amen
- Veronica, tradition respecting, 177
- Verses that have been differently divided, John i. 3, 706; John v. 27, 768
- Vesture, ἱματισμός, John xix. 24, what, 909
- Vine, the True, how Jesus is, and how His Father is the Husbandman, John xv. 1,

875, 876; why Jesus selected the vine to illustrate His union with His disciples, 875; how the branches bear much fruit, 877

- Vipers, generation of, 368
- Virgins, ten, how to be understood, 397
- Voice, a, how applied to John Baptist, 716; sheep know the voice of the shepherd, not his dress, 825; voice, John xii. 29, how like thunder, and the voice of an angel, 851
- Voluntary poverty, a counsel of perfection, 643
- Vulgate, the, as left by S. Jerome, contained the text of the middle of the second century, 63

W.

- Wash, to, πλύνω, νίπτω, and λούω, how distinguished, 859
- Washing in the bath, John xiii. 40, refers to Baptism, 859
- Watches of the night, 251, 644
- Way, the, how Jesus is; ἡ ὁδός often wrongly translated in A. V., 867; the broad, 147
- Wednesday and Friday, Fast of the Early Church, and why, 412
- Weeping and gnashing of teeth, 158
- Whomsoever, Mark xv. 6, better rendered the very one whom, 564
- Wilderness, the, of Judæa, 717
- Wind, the, John iii. 8, how understood, 739
- Wise men, the, their coming to Bethlehem between the Circumcision and Presentation of Jesus in the Temple, 594
- With, πρός, John i. 1, force of, 706
- Woe unto them, Mark xiii. 17, better rendered Alas! 558
- Woman, Samaritan, why the disciples marvelled because Jesus talked with a John iv. 27, 754
- Women at the Sepulchre, two groups of, the Evangelists' account of their visits to the Sepulchre reconciled, 489
- Word, the, ἐνδιαιθέτος and προφορικῶς, internal and external, used by the Talmudists, 705
- World, all the, Luke ii. 1, the Roman Empire, 587; the world, meaning of, 709

Z.

- Zabulon and Nephthalim, 109
- Zacchæus, not a Gentile but a Jew; said to have become Bishop of Cæsarea, 673
- Zacharias, son of Barachias, 361; tradition respecting the punishment of his death, 817
- Zechariah, not high priest, 572, 576

LONDON:
PRINTED BY WILLIAM CLOWES AND SONS,
STAMFORD-STREET AND CHURCH LANE.

DATE DUE

GAYLORD

PRINTED IN U.S.A.

BS2555 .D928

The four Gospels : as interpreted by the

Princeton Theological Seminary-Speer Library

1 1012 00048 5922

